CORRECTION OF LASER RANGE TRACKING DATA FOR ATMOSPHERIC REFRACTION AT ELEVATIONS ABOVE 10 DEGREES

J. W. Marini
C. W. Murray, Jr.

ABSTRACT

A formula for correcting laser measurements of satellite range for the effect of atmospheric refraction is given. The corrections apply above 10° elevation to satellites whose heights exceed 70 km. The meteorological measurements required are the temperature, pressure, and relative humidity of the air at the laser site at the time of satellite pass.

The accuracy of the formula was tested by comparison with corrections obtained by ray-tracing radiosonde profiles. The standard deviation of the difference between the refractive retardation given by the formula and that calculated by ray-tracing was less than about 0.04% of the retardation or about 0.5 cm at 10° elevation, decreasing to 0.04 cm near zenith.

@Globe_Ripper @Hunt4Truth33 @AamenHammer Going straight up though the atmosphere is vastly different to skimming the surface of a lake. You can do the math. You can also correct for the minuscule error from atmospheric refraction in the moon measurements.

https://twitter.com/_/status/977024285939195905

@Globe_Ripper @Hunt4Truth33 @AamenHammer And it's not like detecting the curvature of a lake is this difficult task. You can just look across it and see stuff obscure on the other side. Take a pic with a zoom lens. It's like the laser test times a million. One for each pixel.

@Hunt4Truth33 @AamenHammer @Globe_Ripper It depends on A) how high the laser is, and B) refection (and occasionally reflection). Laser tests are not very useful as it's just one light path. It's barking up the wrong tree.

@naomirwolf And marine cloud brightening is happening anyways regardless of the experiments. Ship tracks have been observed for a century. Current MCB experiments do add an immeasurably small amount to this, but provide useful science.

@weed_removal @johnvenuebooker @newbelfast @StephenNolan The sweet spot for contrails is around 60-70% RHw. See the levels for yesterday morning. Ireland was just on the edge of this, hence the blue skies, and contrails. As the day progressed humidity increased, so more clouds.

@weed_removal @johnvenuebooker @newbelfast @StephenNolan It's the weather. The upper-air humidity is just high enough for contrails to form (jet engines add water to the air), but not quite high enough for natural clouds to form. So you get this unusually stark contrast.

If you are worried about aluminum then look at A) natural atmospheric loading (dust), and B) releases from industry and agriculture. https://www.atsdr.cdc.gov/toxprofiles/tp22-c6.pdf @naomirwolf Alumina is the byproduct of rocket motors burning aluminum. CARE released 66kg of it. Industry makes 115 million tonnes a year. Aluminum is the most abundant metallic element in the Earth's crust. It's everywhere.

2018-03-19T17:54:00+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/975792516824948737

@naomirwolf The full amount of the releases is limited by the sizes of the rockets, which carry about a pound, and the number of launches. So we are talking a about a few pounds a year. Compare with hundred of tons of metals from meteorites, and thousands from industrial pollution.

30 years ago, in 1988, I predicted the most common question I would ask Amazon's Alexa. It was part of a contest to predict the future. Only difference was I called her "Alice". Pretty close!

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/DYqDI2vVAAAIN6L.jpg

A HOUSE LIKE ALICE

A House Like Alice

Bob Mortan looks at the very latest developments in the integrated house.

My house is called Alice. It seems a bit strange to give a house a name, but Alice is no ordinary four walls and a roof, Alice has a mind of her own. Built by Faberman Developments, Alice is part of a luxury development aimed at the top end of the house buying market. It is the house that has everything.

Actually Alice is not my house, I was invited to spend the weekend in it by a nice man from Faberman who claimed he was the press officer. It seemed like too good an opportunity to miss, so on friday I collected the keys and went to see Alice.

From the outside Alice looks like any other luxury house, large and expensive. The first difference you notice is when you try to get in. As soon as I put my key in the lock a smooth female voice said "Welcome home Bob".

"Hello", I replied, struggling to turn the key, "Can I come in?"

"Of course Bob, I just had to check your voice prints, come in."

With that the lock gave a click and the door swung open. The man from Faberman thought it was a good idea that I should review the house with no prior knowledge, but he could have told me that the lock was an electronic one disguised as a normal one, with a microchip embedded in the imitation key.

I picked up my case and cautiously entered the house. The lights had come on as soon as the door opened. To my surprise the house looked like any other luxury house from the inside as well as outside. But you could feel the difference, you could feel the gently gaze of Alice's watchful eye as she followed your every move, you could feel the tension of her constant anticipation of your next command.

Right, I thought, let's try her out.

"Alice?", I said.

"Yes Bob", she replied after the slightest of pauses.

"What time is it?", I asked, starting with something simple.

"The time is nineteen thirty three"

Well, that seemed to work well enough, I wandered into the lounge and sat down on the leather couch. A large blank video screen covered much of the the wall in front of me.

"Turn the TV on", I said.

The screen lit up, it was some nature program on BBC1.

"Turn over".

"What channel would you prefer?" Alice asked, "or would you like a film?"

"What films do you have?"

The screen flicked and a long list of film titles appeared.

"I have seventy films on store, What would you like"

"Black Oak", my favourite ninetys classic.

The screen flicked again and the opening scene of the film came up and the music drifted through the hidden speakers. I watched the first five minutes of the film then got bored with it and told Alice to turn it off. Then I went to explore the rest of the house.

The Kitchen looked like any other kitchen, with the addition of a square door set in one wall. this turned out to be the dumb waiter. I asked Alice for some fish and chips and five minutes later the door slid back to reveal a plate of perfectly done battered cod and fries. Alice has a large automated freezer in the basement that is fully stocked with pre-cooked meals. A robotic arm selects the meal that you want and puts it in a high powered microwave oven to heat it up. Then the arm puts the meal in the lift and sends it up. Your meal is ready in a matter of minutes.

The bathroom is very high tech. Everything is done by voice. You tell Alice to turn on the taps and what temperature you want the water to be at. The bathroom scales give a voice output of your weight, this is stored by Alice if you are on a diet so that she can keep track of your progress and monitor your meals to check that your calorific input is correct. Even the toilet flushes automatically when you have finished. Any nasty smells are quickly wisked away by Alice through her air conditioning.

In the bedroom Alice is not so evident, but she is still there. I told her to wake me up at eight in the morning. She turned out the lights and drew all the curtains for me. At eight she woke me up and then obliged my request for ten minutes more. I got up and went to the bathroom. On returning to get dressed I found a small cleaning robot attacking my socks which I had carelessly dropped on the carpet. I tapped the bot and it scuttled off.

I wandered into the games room. A giant screen dominated one wall of the room with a console in the centre of the room. I sat down and put on the 3D specs. I selected 'Grourauxians' from the menu and was immediately flung into a different world. The seat lurched under me and explosions reverberated around me as I shot down aliens which zoomed towards me in perfect colour 3D. These games were as good as any you would find in the best video arcades.

I went back into the lounge and read the morning paper on the main screen. Then I dictated a letter to Alice to send by email.I lost a few games of chess to her, but beat her at poker. When the time came at last to leave the house, I felt that Alice had become my friend and I was sorry to have to leave her, never to meet again. Alice is the perfect computerised integrated house. Everything you could want from the house is there. Unfortunately all this technology does not come cheap. Alice will cost £200,000. However this is just the first of a range of integrated houses from Faberman, and you can expect this sort of integration of computers into your homes to become the standard by 2020. But for now it is just a rich man's toy.-

Contrail in a rippled sky. 1987. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/DYoM4_3VQAklm50.jpg

▲ 12.5 (Beamsville, 7/12/87, 16:15 PM)

12.5 Sometimes contrails partake visibly of other motions in the air. They have been seen to take up the shape of a mountain wave. In this case the trail was formed in or very close to a layer of cirrus in which billows were developing. One part appears to be wound up in the billow vortices, but the winding did not go further than is seen in the picture.

@naomirwolf Kelvin Helmholtz clouds are not a new type of cloud, they are just getting a new latin name: "Fluctus". They used to be just called "billow clouds". Cloud names have been progressively refined over the years. Not new types, just new ways of classifying them.

@naomirwolf Clouds move at the speed of the wind at that altitude, regardless of what they are made of. However sometime they are constantly reforming in the exact same spot, like lenticular clouds. Try taking a time-lapse to see exactly what is happening.

@naomirwolf Those are sounding rockets in the lower reaches of space, not in the atmosphere where weather happens. They are only a "cloud" in the loosest sense. Vastly less barium and strontium is released than in a typical fireworks display. This has been openly done since the 1960s http://pbs.twimg.com/media/DYoCleRU8AETaaJ.jpg

Seven Rockets Fired From Wallops Island

WALLOPS ISLAND, Va. (AP) —Seven Nike-Apache sounding rockets sped out from this space agency testing base last night and early today — four laying pink and red clouds, three carrying experimental capsules.

The sodium vapor cloud shots were part of the National Aeronautics and Space Agency's continuing program of gathering data on wind directions and speeds at various atltitudes.

The experimental capsules were flown for the University of Illinois to measure changes in the ionosphere occurring in the change over from night time to daytime conditions.

@naomirwolf They are essentially minor tweaks to the classification system. There are no new Genera (the 10 main divisions) None of them are especially new. The newest would probably be the contrail, which has been around since 1918. Here they are in context.

@naomirwolf @cmnit @PanTransHuman @PersonAwake @DKeithClimate That cloud seeding looks very different to contrails. Contrails are huge ice clouds, usually from large jets, at high altitudes, often in blue skies, with a gap. Cloud seeding is a flare and a bit of smoke, small plane, in a cloud, no gap. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/DYoAEyxUMAAqNUF.jpg explanation is still just as reasonable without the radar data.

@thewoody Take the Chilean UFO example. If we didn't have the radar tracks for the planes in the area, then lots of people would say that's unexplained, even though the "it's a plane"

@thewoody My experience has been that most of the "verified unexplained" events eventually have a reasonable explanation. So if there's one that does not, it's probably because some information is lacking.

https://scholar.google.com/scholar?oi=gsb40&q=radiative%20forcing%20contrails&lookup=0&hl=en

Note "radiative forcing" is the difference between the Earth's incoming heat from the Sun, and the outgoing heat. Many factors are involved, and it's greatly complicated by different wavelengths.

@naomirwolf Contrail induced radiative forcing has been though to be a component for many year. It's certainly not THE cause though, but it's part of the problem. It's not really a "clean" problem, the contrails are made of water. The best solution would be to route air traffic differently.

@TheOutThere2016 @hoaxeye It'ss a similar effect to this:
https://www.metabunk.org/explained-why-clouds-appear-behind-the-sun-and-moon.t7084/

Basically it's the tip of the sun, and it's very bright, so it looks behind the more solid things like tree trunks and houses, and in front of the less solid things, like branches and twigs.

@TheOutThere2016 @hoaxeye It's not that complicated. It's just glare. Where the trees are thin enough they appear fully transparent. Notice the tree right after zooming in.

Presented with four different images of trails behind aircraft (a)–(d), experts uniformly responded that a secret, large-scale atmospheric spraying program (SLAP) was not the most parsimonious explanation for the depicted phenomena (pie charts). actually "contrails," the formation of water/ice condensation occasionally created by high-altitude aircraft [47].

Let me add the words of a humble naturalist and scientist practiced in observation. I have lived in the same house since 1977 and viewed the same area of the sky nearly every day. After the morning marine layer burns off, the sky in San Diego, California, USA, is often cloudless; rain is infrequent here. Over the years, I have seen on the average less than a single contrail a year, and always at great distance. Recently, though, sometimes for several days in a row, the sky is filled with chemtrails. Figures 1.7, 1.8, and 1.9, August 24, 2014 photographs of the area of sky I regularly observe, show chemtrails, not contrails

@CIMSS_Satellite @webbery @yulsman @DiscoverMag There's an interesting discussion on the formation mechanisms and ideal conditions for ship trails here, from "Spacious Skies", 1989.

Old satellite photos from '83 and '84. Perhaps outdated, but still fascinating.

SHIP TRAILS

Ship trails are a rather rare phenomenon which was discovered by satellite. As far as we know they occur mostly in the eastern North Pacific and in the north and east of the North Atlantic Ocean. A survey of the North Atlantic for six years showed that they occur not very regularly and on the average about once every six weeks.

The trails occur only in a particular type of cloud. This is shallow, capped by a stable layer, with rather weak cellular convection, which appears to be caused in the same way as in ordinary layers of cloud except that the cloud is dull and full of small holes; and because the holes may be smaller than a pixel, the cloud's appearance is a mixture of the cloud and the surface beneath. This is not the full explanation, because even where the layer is complete it is still not as bright white as usual. It therefore seems that it is composed of a smaller number of droplets of larger than normal size, and this gives it a reduced albedo (the degree of whiteness). This implies that the air in which the cloud is formed has a deficiency of condensation nuclei and the cloud water has condensed on fewer but larger droplets.

The effluent from a ship's chimney contains a vast number of nuclei, probably many more than 20,000 in every cubic centimetre of exhaust. These nuclei are diffused (by the cellular motion already referred to) throughout the cells into which they are introduced by the ship, after the buoyancy of the hot gas has carried them up to the cloud top. The result is that the number of droplets is greatly increased and the cloud becomes bright white, like ordinary cloud, where it has been polluted.

We do not see trails in ordinary cloud because they already have a plenitude of condensation nuclei. We have not seen ship trails in air which has recently been over a continent: thus there have not been any in the Mediterranean or off the east coast of North America.

Where does the very clean air deficient in nuclei come from?

In the Pacific there are 'Ocean Deserts' in the middle of almost permanent anticyclones where there is no life in the surface water because of lack of nutrients. In these places such nuclei as may originally have been in the air have fallen out, and have not been replaced either by nuclei of biological origin or by particles of salt spray because the ocean is so persistently calm.

There are no such areas in the Atlantic and it appears most likely that the clean air comes from the frozen Arctic, mostly via the Davis Strait, but occasionally from the Greenland Sea, between Greenland and Spitzbergen. Two of the very rare occurences of trails in the North Sea were supplied that way. The Arctic air must travel slowly, for otherwise salt spray is produced; and it must be subsiding for otherwise the gusty winds of showers in such cold air would do the same.

While no measurements have yet been made in the clouds in which ship trails appear, the consistency of 'the story so far' gives confidence that future discoveries will not contradict it. Even so, we are sure there is much more to be discovered about the trails. The persistence of the trails, their narrowness many hours after formation, and their great length, tell us that the dispersion of pollution is sometimes – perhaps often – much slower than had previously been thought.

A most interesting feature of ship trails is that they persist for many hours and widen and disperse very slowly by comparison with air pollution over land. In some cases they have remained for as long as thirty hours. This carries an important message for those studying the transport of pollution across the sea: it means that the incineration of chemical waste at sea may produce quite high concentrations of obnoxious fumes which may reach the coast or pollute a passing ship. Pollution trapped beneath an inversion over land may travel, with very little dilution across a sea, and arrive at the other side almost in the same condition as when it first arrived over the sea at the opposite coast.

▲ 12.19 (17/8/83, 16:24 PM, 2)

12.19 Ship trails in the North Atlantic, at 60 deg N 32 deg W seen here are well to the north of the main shipping routes. This picture illustrates the typical cellular cloud which is made much whiter by the provision of a large number of condensation nuclei by passing ships.

The cloud cellular structure of droplets (not the amount of liquid water) is greatly increased. The width of this picture represents 500km (311 miles).

◄ 12.20 (8/2/84, 15:54 PM, 2)

12.20 Here we see copious ship trails on the much frequented lanes off the west coast of Portugal. The cellular structure of the cloud causes the trail to have a zig-zag appearance. Several trails can be seen in the making. The width of the picture is 750km (466 miles).

CLOUD FORMATION BY SUPERCHARGED PLANE.[1]

[Reprinted from U. S. Air Service, July, 1921, p. 13.]

An altitude flight was made in the morning at McCook Field [Dayton, Ohio] recently, by Lieut. J. A. Macready in a La Pere with supercharged Liberty. When the airplane reached a height of 26,000–27,000 feet at 11:50 a. m., a long feathery white streamer was observed forming behind a rapidly moving dark speck. The cloud was of the cirrus variety, well defined at its edges and apparently 10 to 15 times the width of the plane. The sky behind the first portion was clear blue with no other clouds in the near neighborhood. The first streamer seemed perhaps 2 miles long. Then a gap of one-quarter mile. The second streamer formed with a background of light cirrus cloud and after 2 or 3 miles the plane seemed to go into the cirrus background, for the streamer formation ceased while an apparent path of blue continued beyond for a way in the cirrus cloud. The whole streamer may have been 3 miles long. After 20 minutes the streamer had drifted and spread until it merged indistinguishably with the other cirrus clouds visible. The weather conditions at the time were generally very clear, warm, with perhaps 0.1 of the sky in cirrus clouds.

Finally! That angle cut column with lots of slag that truthers have used as evidence of thermite demolition has been found and identified. It was cut six weeks after demolition, after being dug out from 80 feet of rubble. The truthers were wrong again.

@wesleyray123 The jet fuel has to push against the rocket in order to move away from it. Like the expanding gases have to push against the shotgun to push out the shot. It's that push that moves the gun, or the rocket. Air is a different thing. Need not be there.

@niteliteone @Oswald1160 @bobathon @TheBlkWatchman @ian_lundgren It's also what this 1989 book on clouds ("Spacious Skies") says they are. So why EXACTLY do you think they are not?
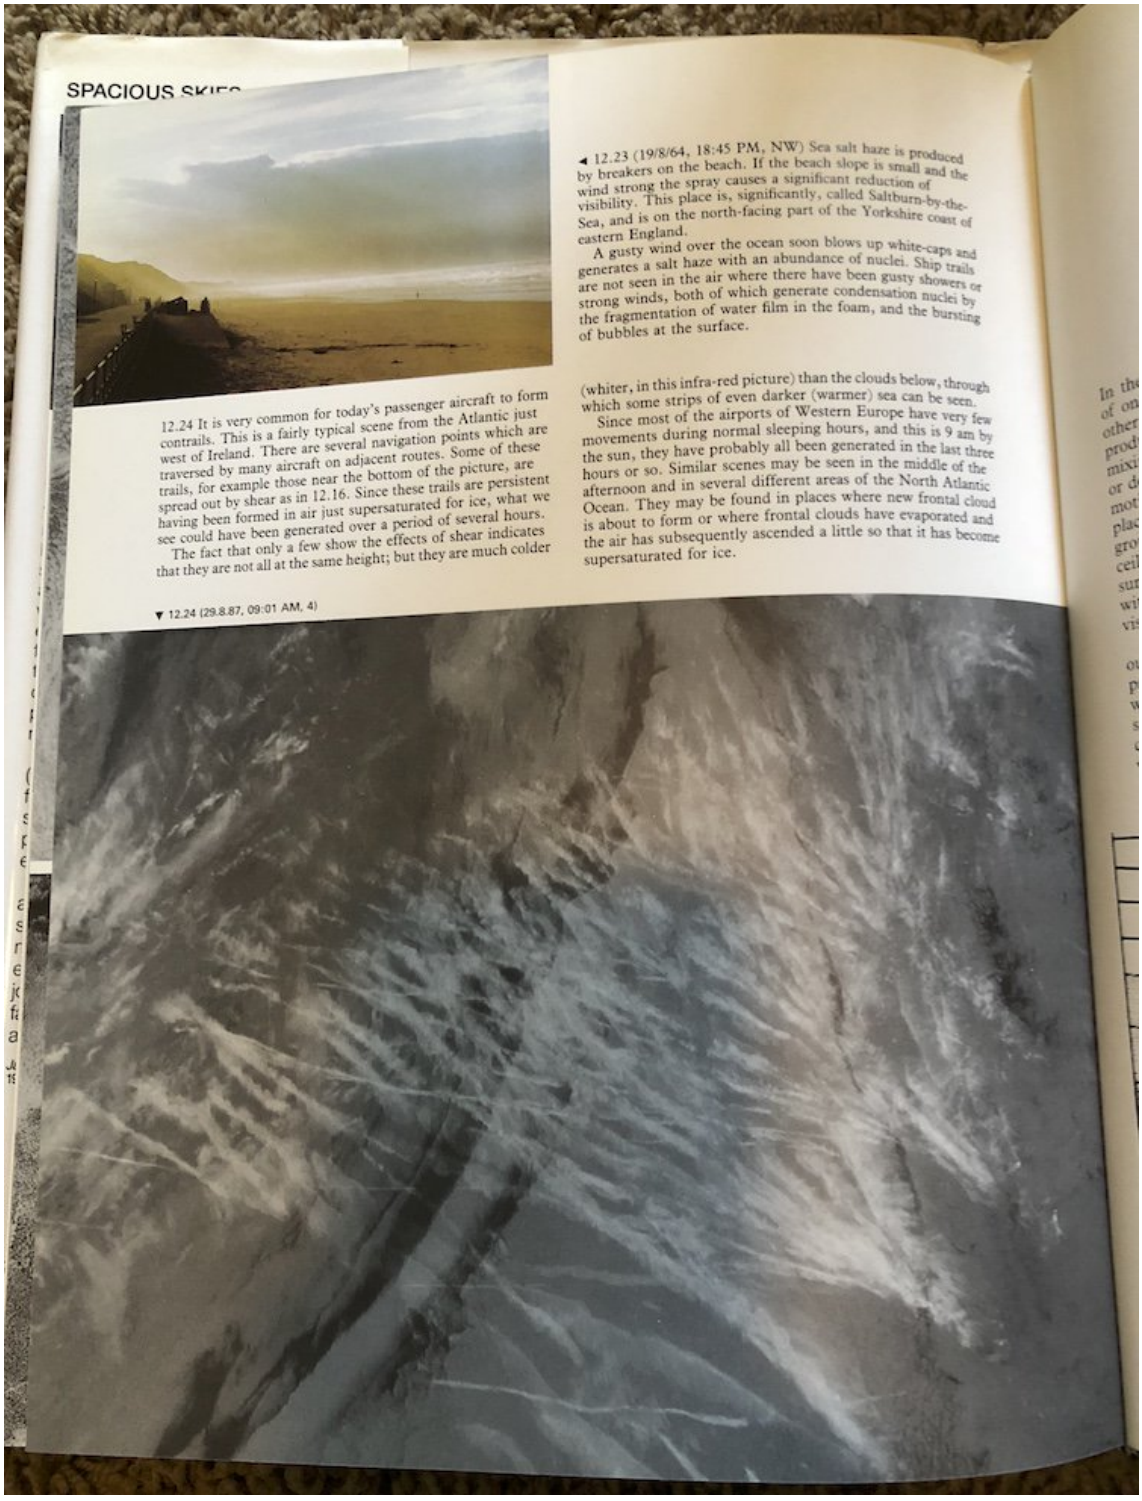
http://pbs.twimg.com/media/DSP_3HtUEAEF1NE.jpg



SPACIOUS SKIES

◂ 12.23 (19/8/64, 18:45 PM, NW) Sea salt haze is produced by breakers on the beach. If the beach slope is small and the wind strong the spray causes a significant reduction of visibility. This place is, significantly, called Saltburn-by-the-Sea, and is on the north-facing part of the Yorkshire coast of eastern England.

A gusty wind over the ocean soon blows up white-caps and generates a salt haze with an abundance of nuclei. Ship trails are not seen in the air where there have been gusty showers or strong winds, both of which generate condensation nuclei by the fragmentation of water film in the foam, and the bursting of bubbles at the surface.

12.24 It is very common for today's passenger aircraft to form contrails. This is a fairly typical scene from the Atlantic just west of Ireland. There are several navigation points which are traversed by many aircraft on adjacent routes. Some of these trails, for example those near the bottom of the picture, are spread out by shear as in 12.16. Since these trails are persistent having been formed in air just supersaturated for ice, what we see could have been generated over a period of several hours.

The fact that only a few show the effects of shear indicates that they are not all at the same height; but they are much colder (whiter, in this infra-red picture) than the clouds below, through which some strips of even darker (warmer) sea can be seen.

Since most of the airports of Western Europe have very few movements during normal sleeping hours, and this is 9 am by the sun, they have probably all been generated in the last three hours or so. Similar scenes may be seen in the middle of the afternoon and in several different areas of the North Atlantic Ocean. They may be found in places where new frontal cloud is about to form or where frontal clouds have evaporated and the air has subsequently ascended a little so that it has become supersaturated for ice.

@niteliteone @Oswald1160 @bobathon @TheBlkWatchman @ian_lundgren Newr turbofans actually make more contrails than older ones, due to the colder exhaust from the more efficient energy extraction (turing the fan). Remember contrail are simply EXHAUST MIXING WITH AIR. It does not matter (much) if the mixing is with bypass air.

Thin clouds have additive transparency, which makes it very hard to tell which layer is where, and often impossible to tell if a contrail is above or below a thin cloud layer, or another contrail.

The same analysis applies to the "Tic Tac" footage. The video is NAR (1.5Â°) 2x (so 0.75Â°). A bit smaller blob, so consistent with fighter at 10 to 20 miles or airliner at 100 to 200 miles. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/DRwV_3eUEAARcK5.jpg

https://twitter.com/_/status/944647312856383488

How big the object is depends on how far away it is, and vice versa. The range is between 12 miles for a fighter jet sized object 50 foot, slight glare), and 120 miles for a large jet like an A340 (500 feet with glare being bigger).

The age old question: small, or far away?

https://twitter.com/_/status/944641889382252544

Ballparking the range of distances of the GIMBAL UFO. Based on the field of view it's probably between 12 and 120 miles away.

https://www.metabunk.org/nyt-gimbal-video-of-u-s-navy-jet-encounter-with-unknown-object.t9333/ http://pbs.twimg.com/media/DRwKir-VAAA_EWh.jpg

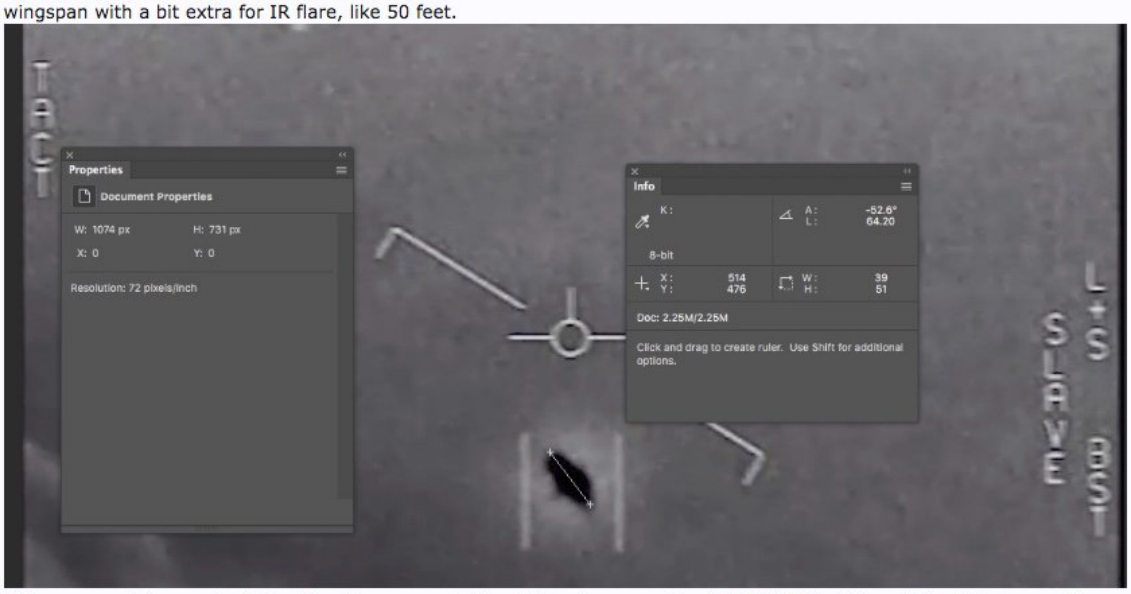
The indicator in the top left of the display "NAR / Z 2.0" indicates maximum magnification. NAR (Narrow) is a FOV of 1.5°, so with Z 2.0 (Zoom 2.0x) (probably digital zoom) that's an effective FOV of 0.75. (By comparison the 2000mm P900 mega zoom has a FOV of about 1.0°)

We can get some ballpark figures for distance from this. Let's say the target is about the size of an F/A-18 Hornet, 44 ft wingspan with a bit extra for IR flare, like 50 feet.



If the apparent long axis of the object is representative of the wingspan, then it's 64/1074 of the width of the image. i.e. 0.75°*64/1074 = 0.0447° (note: linear to angular conversion are fine for small angles)

So converting that to distance, tan(angle) = object size/object distance 50/tan(0.0447 degrees) = 64089 feet. (12 miles away).

Alternatively if it's actually a distant airliner with a 200 foot wingspan, and the "saucer" shape is actually flare, then the effective length on the long visual axis there would be more like 500 feet. Hence 120 miles away.

2017-12-21T00:58:10+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/943646744247648256

@z9bill @DoubtfulNews It's only "easily understood" after it's well explained. It's probably something that does not cause much of a problem, as most of the time ATFLIR is used for much closer objects where the physical shape can be seen. A distant commercial plane is not the typical use case.

@L_H_Ryuga_L @MolotoVNKA The highlight can be rotated without the view rotating. In fact it has to work that way as the outer gimbal axes can't do straight and level tracking alone. The outer glass has to rotate. Then the outer glass creates the flare. In theory.

@KyleMizokami Pilots DO make mistakes. They don't need to be PRONE to mistakes for mistakes to happen. All pilots in total fly many millions of hours. What are the odds that those hours will be error free?

@KyleMizokami Well what would you call this? Maybe an oversimplification? "Given the level of skill necessary to fly from a U.S. Navy carrier it seems extremely unlikely these pilots were prone to fantasy or misidentifying the sun as a white, tic-tac-shaped UFO hovering close to the water."

@nsaillant @MolotoVNKA By HUGE I mean in its implications. A specimen from a UFO would be significant.

Of course, it's not. It's just a bit of metal they found somewhere.

@nsaillant @JeremyCorbell @kevineckelkamp I stand by what I said. The reasons that @kylemizokami gives for being discomfited by the mundane explanation are a specious appeal to authority. Obviously the pilots are not PRONE to misidentifying things - they only did it once!

@MolotoVNKA @nsaillant Agreed. A physical specimen would be HUGE. The fact that it's apparent just sitting in Bigelow's warehouse somewhere is evidence that this is nothing. Where exactly do you get bits of any alien spaceship from? Or bits of a craft seen only through a FLIR darkly.

> Not only were the towers designed to survive crashes of large jet aircraft, but they were designed to potentially survive multiple plane crashes. This assertion is supported by Frank A. Demartini, the on-site construction manager for the World Trade Center, who said on January 25, 2001:
> > "The building was designed to have a fully loaded 707 crash into it. That was the largest plane at the time. I believe that the building probably could sustain multiple impacts of jetliners because this structure is like the mosquito netting on your screen door—this intense grid—and the jet plane is just a pencil puncturing that screen netting. It really does nothing to the screen netting."

@williamkay62 @ufoofinterest @lionsground It's interesting. I think the shape of it is likely some kind of lens flare (the protrusions). It's remarkably well tracked, almost as if it's stuck to the lens. Really need comparisons with similar videos to get more ideas. Odd roll. The angles might tell us something. Later.

@ManneringJohn @miketmbt You don't really need the calculation as all the clouds are essentially the same distance from the sun. But just consider how they are lit, and how you can see the regions that are lit. It how the light goes from sun to cloud then cloud to camera.

@ManneringJohn @miketmbt In both cases the sun is on the other side of the clouds. looking down though you can only get the effect with the sun a shallow angle.

2017-12-05T16:14:57+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/938079254725607424

@ManneringJohn @miketmbt The brightness of something lit by a light depends on what is between the light and the object. Why, for example, are some clouds dark in this image?

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/DQS5_0qVwAAqaVG.jpg

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/DQS5_0qVwAAqaVG.jpg

https://twitter.com/_/status/938077619211272192

@ManneringJohn @miketmbt The brightness of a cloud is based on a number of factors. You seem to be just considering one (angular distance from sun) which only really applies (as a sole factor) with a homogeneous thin layer of cloud.

2017-12-05T16:04:57+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/938076736603832321

@ManneringJohn @miketmbt Misleading? Well not to me. It shows clouds lit from below. It is perhaps unintuitive.

2017-12-05T16:02:16+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/938076060196802560

@ManneringJohn @miketmbt By "closest" do you mean physically closest, or closest in the image?

2017-12-05T15:57:34+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/938074880125181953

@ManneringJohn @miketmbt so if the far clouds are 20 miles away then the near clouds will be (93000000^2)/(93000020^2) = 0.99999957 times as bright. i.e. basically the same.

2017-12-05T15:54:45+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/938074170344202240

@ManneringJohn @miketmbt Because the sun is really far away it lights up everything nearly equally. Once could do the math for inverse square falloff (distance to sun squared) / (distance to sun plus distance to far clouds squared).

2017-12-05T15:20:41+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/938065597878886400

@ManneringJohn @miketmbt But it's illuminating the underneath of the cloud layer, because it's at or below the horizon.

2017-12-05T15:00:50+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/938060602332692481

@ManneringJohn @miketmbt It's 93,000,000 miles away, not 930,000. It's just setting or rising, so at the horizon in the pics. There's a clear line from the bottom of the clouds to the horizon. But the plane's line of sight is obscured by the clouds.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/DJ3_8U7VoAAafxD.jpg

Here's Mick West's reply in its entirety:-

> "It's a good question, because it shows that you are aware that contrails actually CAN persist and spread.
> Contrails need a relative humidity over with respect to ice of over 100% to persist and spread. This is nothing to do with the presence r absence of nuclei, as they need nuclei to form regardless.
> 100% RHI is about 60% RHW (the more common RH value, and the one given in the soundings, with respect to water).
> Soundings unfortunately are a terrible way of getting local humidity at high altitudes in cold air. Firstly they are spaced apart, in time by 12 hours, and in space by around 200 miles. Humidity can vary vastly in a few hundred feet, which is why we sometime get individual clouds instead of huge sheets.
> An equal problem is that the reading for humidity basically stop working below -40°, and are quite inaccurate at lower altitudest.
> See Figure 2 here:
> http://radiometrics.com/data/uploads/2012/11/Refsonde-GRL.pdf"

@OpChemtrails Here's an extract for that paper that shows that solar geoengineering is not happening yet. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/DJDCvfrUQAEx2ta.jpg

1 Introduction

Solar geoengineering has been proposed as a way to counter the effects of global warming induced by anthropogenic greenhouse gas emissions (e.g., Crutzen, 2006; Robock et al., 2009). By reducing incoming solar radiation, solar geoengineering would bring the climate with elevated concentrations of CO_2 into radiative balance. It would compensate for a change in surface temperature from the increased CO_2 trapping of outgoing longwave radiation with a reduction in incoming shortwave radiation. Solar geoengineering is a controversial proposal, but should it come into favor due to continued greenhouse gas emissions, it is critical that the climate effects be understood before deployment (NRC, 2015).

These coronas are very frequent. In Holland, M. Muschenbroeck says, 50 may be seen in the day-time, almost every year; but they are difficult to be observed, except the eye be so situated, that not the body of the sun, but only the neighbouring parts of the heavens, can be seen. Mr Middleton says, that this phenomenon is very frequent in North America; for that there is generally one or two about the sun every week, and as many about the moon every month. Halos round the sun are very frequent in Russia. M. Æpinus says, that from the 23d of April 1758, to the 20th of September, he himself had observed no less than 26, and that he has sometimes seen twice as many in the same sp ce of time.

THOSE FLYING SAUCERS: ARE OR AREN'T THEY?

Everybody, Including the President, Is Puzzled and Many Guesses Are Made

By JOSEPH NOLAN

The mystery of the "flying saucers" was accorded renewed attention last week, this time even by President Truman himself. The President said he was just as puzzled as the next fellow by the latest flurry of reports about weird and wonderful sights in the sky.

A police chief in Illinois swore he saw a "strange disk-like object, reddish in the center, with blue lights on the outer edges." Residents of an Ohio city reported "two bright lights in the sky," each trailing a streak of orange flame. Other "saucer" stories popped up in such widely scattered points as Turkey, Argentina, Germany, China and Chile.

The reports were reminiscent of was advanced recently by True Magazine. It has a counterpart in stories making the rounds on the West Coast to the effect that one of the disks crashed and that a body was thrown free of the wreckage, the body of a monkey-like creature about three feet tall. The Air Force insists that its investigations "lend no support to the view that the 'saucers' may come from another planet."

Despite the frequency with which the flying disks have turned up, most people have trouble discussing them with a straight face. Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko, in a rare moment of whimsy, suggested that perhaps

'Flying Saucers' Were Big Balloons It Used for Research, Navy Reveals

The Office of Naval Research disclosed in Washington yesterday that all reliable reports of "flying saucers" made in the last three and one half years were attributable to sightings of a huge new plastic balloon used by the Navy in cosmic ray studies at upper altitudes.

This explanation for the persistence of flying saucer reports despite official denials by the Armed Forces and the President, among others, that this nation was being invaded from Mars or elsewhere by two-foot "men" in strange machines, was made by Dr. Urner Liddel. Dr. Liddel, who was reached by telephone, is chief of the nuclear physics branch of the research office.

rays and other phenomena of the atmosphere. Thereafter, according to Dr. Liddel, reports of "saucers" coincided roughly with the number of such balloons sent up by the Navy, disregarding, of course, those reports obviously the doings of crackpots or hoaxers.

The Navy balloons, Dr. Liddel declared, sometimes rose to a height of 100,000 feet (about nineteen miles) and there were swept along by winds of 200 miles an hour or more. The balloons, called skyhooks by the Navy researchers, were released at many points in the country and were free to travel to unlimited distances. At dusk on a summer evening would be the best time to see such a "saucer," Dr. Liddel said, and a

U.F.O.'s

TO THE EDITOR:

I READ with considerable interest the review by Willy Ley of John W. Macvey's "Alone in the Universe?" (Dec. 8). I thought the review was good with one exception. Ley remarks: "Macvey should be forgiven for displaying too much credulity in dealing with U.F.O.'s because a Scotsman may not be aware of how tall American tall tales can be." The implication of this is that we have here a purely American phenomenon. This is simply not so. For example, J. Allen Hynek, who has for the past 15 years been the head Air Force consultant on U.F.O. (he is also head of an observatory, a university department of astronomy and an officer of the American Astronomical Assoc.) says in an article published last April in the Yale Scientific Magazine, that England has had the highest concentration of U.F.O. sightings. Further that they have been seen all over the world, and continue to be seen in large numbers. Dr. Hynek has access to official data on the subject and should know of what he speaks . . .

The lack of critical ability of Darrach and Ginna is shown by their ready acceptance of the report that Kenneth Arnold presented in 1947—a report in which he maintained that he saw a chain of "saucerlike things" approaching Mount Rainier at a speed of 1,200 miles an hour. No doubt Arnold saw something—in fact, he is the man who launched the flying saucer saga—but no human eye can tell what is flashing past at 1,200 miles an hour at a range of twenty-five miles. It always arouses suspicion when observers, even honest observers like Arnold, are able to give the exact height, size and distance of an unfamiliar object in the sky.

A <$100K budget for NASA to investigate UAP is a strong indication of the level of data so far.

If they actually thought there was advanced technology up there, that would be epochal, warranting BILLIONS of dollars in research money.

Nope. Just some interesting puzzles.

wich Observatory, discovered that a Russian satellite launched on the 26th of August, 1994, had ejected its nose cone and this is what had been seen on the Wednesday night. I also heard from various sources in Zimbabwe that pieces had fallen in Karoi, northwest of Harare, and in, or near, the Chokwe river in Mozambique.

Within minutes of my hearing the explosion at 21:04 on Wednesday, my phone had started to ring and reports began flooding in from all over Zimbabwe and South Africa but more especially from the Lake Kariba area, Bulawayo and Harare.

Bernard Ncube of Bulawayo saw a very large bright light followed by numerous (13-15) smaller lights and a flaming tail.

A. Mlamban, also of Bulawayo, saw something similar, except that he observed many colours to the lights, such as blue, bright red, orange and green.

One report said, 'The sky was completely lit with what appeared to be a long sausage-shape of brilliant light with numerous flashing lights around and moving across the sky in a southerly direction. It seemed to be skimming the roofs of the houses in the distance.'

The reports were from farm labourers to pilots, the medical doctor of a large mining company, technologists and many fishermen on the lake. Most admitted that they had never seen anything like this before, whereas the more knowledgeable felt it might be a meteorite or similar.

The reported height of the object varied. Some mentioned 2-3,000 ft., others spoke of it being at treetop height. All objects were seen below the cloud level, which was scattered in a reasonably clear sky.

Two pilots, from Mabelreign in Harare, reported they had seen what appeared to be a ball of fire with a tail main light. It was moving at the speed of a Boeing jet. They heard an explosion (entry into Earth's atmosphere). They could see a dark centre to the object, and it appeared to be following the arc of the Earth. The time was 21:00.

African fishermen on Lake Kariba saw a very bright light with two sidelights, travelling slowly, with two tails trailing at the end. The light was an orangish colour. There was no sound.

At 20:50, a man at Kariba Bream farm took a video of the object. I saw two different videos, but it appeared to me to be a blob of light travelling erratically.

I had many reports involving over 100 witnesses, and I have no doubt that these were all of the nose cone on its way to landing on Earth.

But there were other reports which puzzled me, not necessarily for their contents, but because of certain factors pertaining to what the witnesses described.

Grant N. of Bulawayo thought it was a plane in trouble. 'There was no sound, and it was flying very slowly.'

Two unrelated people said that they were able to walk along with the object's movement. 'It seemed to be on fire,' they said.

Cecil A. of Harare, who had worked in civil aviation for five years, saw the lights at 20:45. He viewed them for about 5 minutes and thought it was a Boeing 747, with two engines on each wing; the left emitting a continuous flame, while on the other side, wing sparks were spitting out. He thought the aircraft was in trouble and decanting fuel. Altitude was slightly above treetop level.

A personal friend of mine, Jo Hensman, said, 'I saw the s at 20:50. I thought it was a small plane coming towards @NASA Pouring cold water on UFOlogy today.

Yes, unidentified flying objects are real and deserve study. But they represent a variety of things, and there's no evidence any of those things are aliens, or even antigravity-level technology.

It's a puzzle. Let's apply science. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/FU1lyCaVEAEC779.jpg

The limited number of observations of UAPs currently makes it difficult to draw scientific conclusions about the nature of such events. Unidentified phenomena in the atmosphere are of interest for both national security and air safety. Establishing which events are natural provides a key first step to identifying or mitigating such phenomena, which aligns with one of NASA's goals to ensure the safety of aircraft. There is no evidence UAPs are extra-terrestrial in origin.

"NASA believes that the tools of scientific discovery are powerful and apply here also," said Thomas Zurbuchen, the

https://www.metabunk.org/manchester-contrail-pentagram-explained.t3868/
http://pbs.twimg.com/media/DAsKerFXkAA-XUK.jpg

The earliest blue contrail was formed about five minutes before the green and yellow contrails and ten minutes before the orange and red ones. I've moved it in the SE direction by about 13 km parallel to its flight route (purple line), which corresponds to a modest wind speed of 80 km/h or 50 mph. The green and yellow contrails have also been moved by a half of this distance in the same direction. Note that from above the resulting star looks very asymmetric, but from the ground it looks more proportional due to the perspective:

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/DAsKbNjXsAE_DQw.jpg

The order of appearances and headings of these planes are fully consistent with the photos. The contrails from the flights EZY49EY, VIR302G, DHL5CK, RYR39CF and H2B (1, 2, 3, 5 and 6) probably have made the star. Taking the wind factor into account, I have modelled these contrails on Google Earth, using the Flightradar24 data on flight routes and altitudes:

https://twitter.com/_/status/865807752878096384

@brucebanner5280 @grenadeoftruth @jeranism That IS my position. The atmosphere, because of standard decrease in pressure with altitude, has standard refraction. How could it not?

2017-05-20T05:38:34+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/865803917245820929

@w_masterson The plane has to fly level (constant altitude), otherwise it would fly off into space. Level has a slight curve. Plane flies along it.

2017-05-15T18:43:32+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/864189520232800261

@T1D1W1 Say you are on a mountain 10,000 feet high. There's another mountain 10,000 feet high, 160 miles away. Math:

https://www.metabunk.org/curve/?d=160&h=10000&r=3959&u=i&a=a&fd=60&fp=3264

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/C_43onFUAAA4YLG.jpg

Distance d = 160 Miles (844800 Feet)
Radius of Earth r = 3959 Miles (20903520 Feet)
Distance to horizon, a = sqrt((r+h)*(r+h) - r*r), a = 122.47 Miles (646660.96 Feet)
Amount obscured x = sqrt(a*a - 2*a*d + d*d + r*r)-r, x = 939.03 Feet (11268.4 Inches)

The following is the amount obscured calculated using slightly more complex trig
And assuming the 'distance' is the distance across the surface of the earth
This is more accurate for large distances and heights
But essentially the same for distances under 100 miles
True hidden = r/cos(d/r - asin(sqrt(h*(2*r+h)) / (r+h))) - r = 941.04 Feet (11292.54 Inches)

'Bulge' b = r-sqrt(4*r*r - d*d)/2, b = 4268.18 Feet (51218.16 Inches)
Bulge is the amount of rise of the earth's curve from a straight line connecting two points on the surface

Drop is the amount the curve of the earth drops away from level, it can be calculated in various ways which are all about the same for under 100 miles distance Drop as r-sqrt(r^2-d^2); drop = 3.23 Miles (17077.95 Feet) (perpendicular to level line)
Drop calculated as 8 inches per mile squared = 8 * d*d / 12; = 3.23 Miles (17066.67 Feet)
Drop calculated with trig = r/cos(d/r) - r; = 3.24 Miles (17082.6 Feet) (perpendicular to target surface)

Tilt is angle between vertical at the two locatons
The amount a distant object is leaning away from you It's the distance divided by the radius (in radians)
d/r = 844800.00/20903520 = 0.04041425 radians, *180/PI = 2.31556573 degrees Horizon Dip is the angle that the horizon is below level as seen from the viewer height
It's arcsin(a/(r+h)), or arcsin(646660.96/(20903520.00+10000.00)) = 0.03092564 radians, *180/PI = 1.77190882 degrees

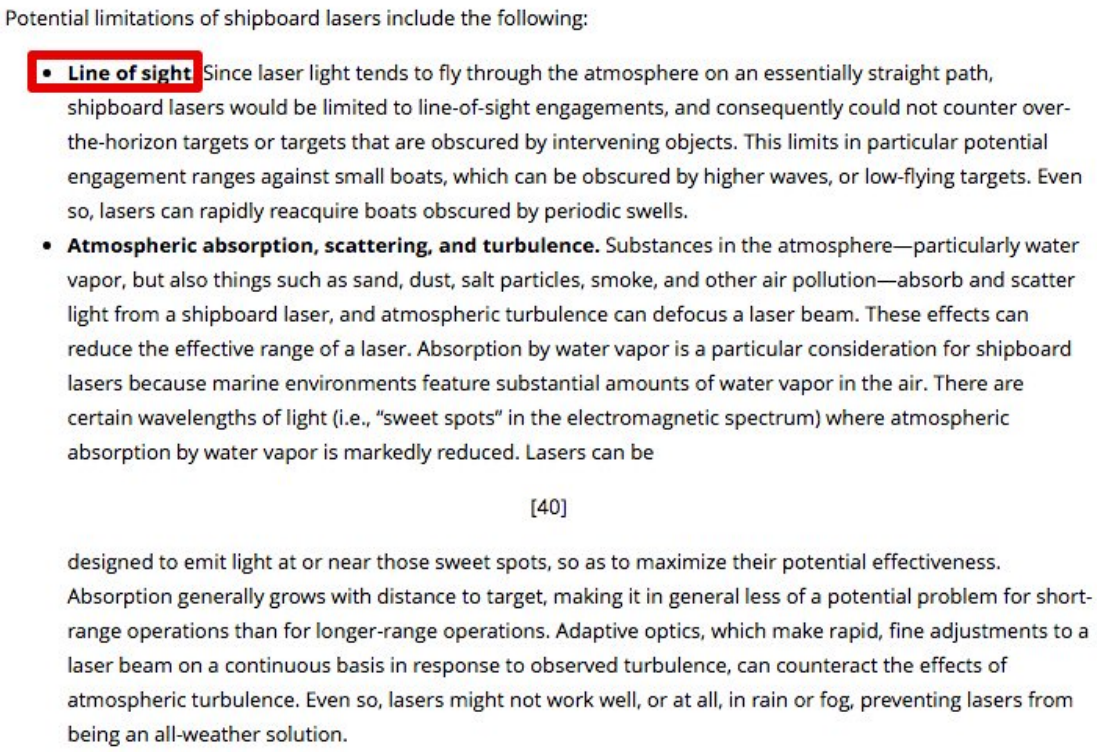
http://pbs.twimg.com/media/C_uP7qNUQAA8WY-.jpg



Potential limitations of shipboard lasers include the following:

- Line of sight. Since laser light tends to fly through the atmosphere on an essentially straight path, shipboard lasers would be limited to line-of-sight engagements, and consequently could not counter over-the-horizon targets or targets that are obscured by intervening objects. This limits in particular potential engagement ranges against small boats, which can be obscured by higher waves, or low-flying targets. Even so, lasers can rapidly reacquire boats obscured by periodic swells.
- Atmospheric absorption, scattering, and turbulence. Substances in the atmosphere—particularly water vapor, but also things such as sand, dust, salt particles, smoke, and other air pollution—absorb and scatter light from a shipboard laser, and atmospheric turbulence can defocus a laser beam. These effects can reduce the effective range of a laser. Absorption by water vapor is a particular consideration for shipboard lasers because marine environments feature substantial amounts of water vapor in the air. There are certain wavelengths of light (i.e., "sweet spots" in the electromagnetic spectrum) where atmospheric absorption by water vapor is markedly reduced. Lasers can be designed to emit light at or near those sweet spots, so as to maximize their potential effectiveness. Absorption generally grows with distance to target, making it in general less of a potential problem for short-range operations than for longer-range operations. Adaptive optics, which make rapid, fine adjustments to a laser beam on a continuous basis in response to observed turbulence, can counteract the effects of atmospheric turbulence. Even so, lasers might not work well, or at all, in rain or fog, preventing lasers from being an all-weather solution.

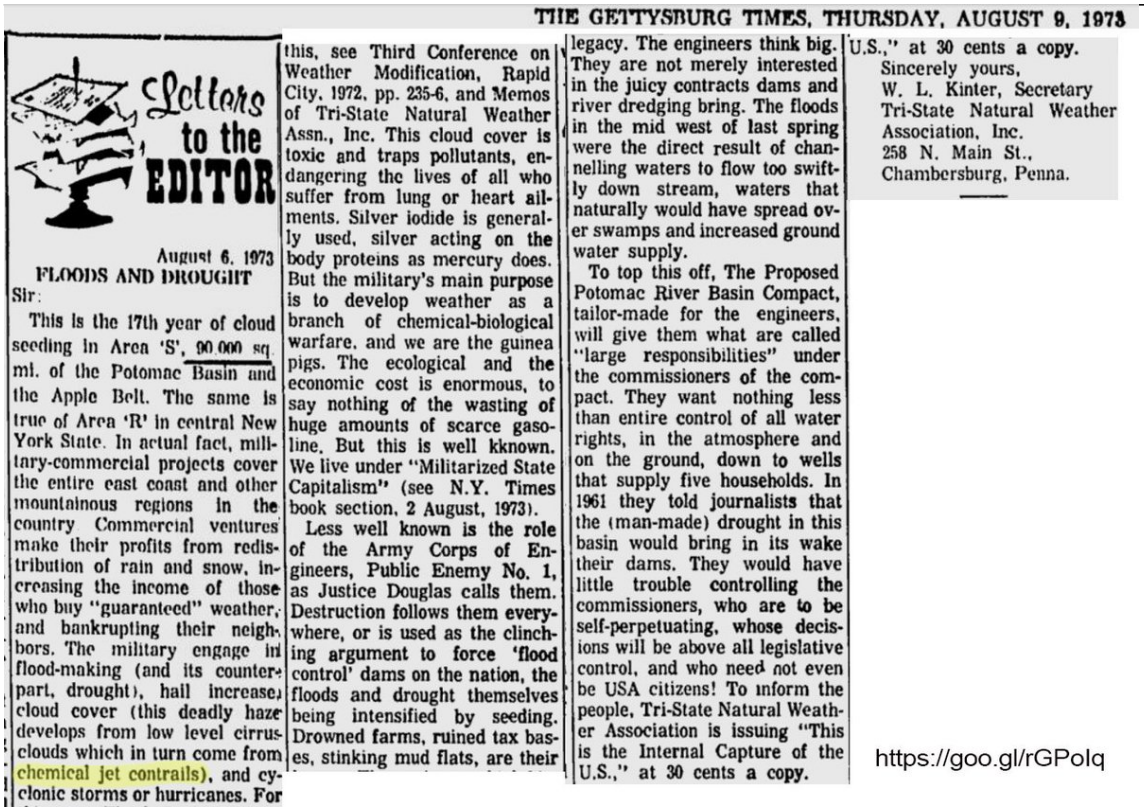
@NedSparks @carenharkins But the conspiracy theory was there in an early form. Here's another story about it from 1973 (44 years ago)

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/C7xhnWFVQAEtNk-.jpg



THE GETTYSBURG TIMES, THURSDAY, AUGUST 9, 1973

Letters to the EDITOR

FLOODS AND DROUGHT

Sir:

This is the 17th year of cloud seeding in Area 'S', 90,000 sq. mi. of the Potomac Basin and the Apple Belt. The same is true of Area 'R' in central New York State. In actual fact, military-commercial projects cover the entire east coast and other mountainous regions in the country. Commercial ventures make their profits from redistribution of rain and snow, increasing the income of those who buy "guaranteed" weather, and bankrupting their neighbors. The military engage in flood-making (and its counterpart, drought), hail increase, cloud cover (this deadly haze develops from low level cirrus-clouds which in turn come from chemical jet contrails), and cyclonic storms or hurricanes. For this, see Third Conference on Weather Modification, Rapid City, 1972, pp. 235-6, and Memos of Tri-State Natural Weather Assn., Inc. This cloud cover is toxic and traps pollutants, endangering the lives of all who suffer from lung or heart ailments. Silver iodide is generally used, silver acting on the body proteins as mercury does. But the military's main purpose is to develop weather as a branch of chemical-biological warfare, and we are the guinea pigs. The ecological and the economic cost is enormous, to say nothing of the wasting of huge amounts of scarce gasoline. But this is well kknown. We live under "Militarized State Capitalism" (see N.Y. Times book section, 2 August, 1973).

Less well known is the role of the Army Corps of Engineers, Public Enemy No. 1, as Justice Douglas calls them. Destruction follows them everywhere, or is used as the clinching argument to force 'flood control' dams on the nation, the floods and drought themselves being intensified by seeding. Drowned farms, ruined tax bases, stinking mud flats, are their legacy. The engineers think big. They are not merely interested in the juicy contracts dams and river dredging bring. The floods in the mid west of last spring were the direct result of channelling waters to flow too swiftly down stream, waters that naturally would have spread over swamps and increased ground water supply.

To top this off, The Proposed Potomac River Basin Compact, tailor-made for the engineers, will give them what are called "large responsibilities" under the commissioners of the compact. They want nothing less than entire control of all water rights, in the atmosphere and on the ground, down to wells that supply five households. In 1961 they told journalists that the (man-made) drought in this basin would bring in its wake their dams. They would have little trouble controlling the commissioners, who are to be self-perpetuating, whose decisions will be above all legislative control, and who need not even be USA citizens! To inform the people, Tri-State Natural Weather Association is issuing "This is the Internal Capture of the U.S.," at 30 cents a copy.

U.S.," at 30 cents a copy.

Sincerely yours,
W. L. Kinter, Secretary
Tri-State Natural Weather Association, Inc.

THE GETTYSBURG TIMES, MONDAY, AUGUST 7, 1978

Dear Sir:

Several months ago Mr. Kent Shelhamer, The Secretary of Agriculture in Pennsylvania, promised a group from a farm organization in South Central Pennsylvania that he was "going to get to the bottom" of the persistent reports of cloud seeding in Adams, Franklin and Fulton Counties. The latter half of July would have given him text book evidence. Irving Langmuir (Cloud Nucleation, 1962) tells us what to look for, and the evidence was, and is, above our heads daily. We are part of Area 'S' for seeding purposes ('S' is 90,000 sq. mi. of the Potomac Basin). Northwest of us, violent storms, one even a tornado; south east of us, torrential rains, over Area 'S' the drizzle and heavy air inversion characteristic of heavy seeding.

According to the U. S. Weather Bureau's description of climate for this region, the normal is to have 35 to 40 thunderstorm days each summer. From 1957 to 1965 the Blue Ridge Weather Modification Association was hired by orchardists to suppress hail. Because of the cloud seeding the active thunderstorm days dropped to 5 to 8 or fewer during the summer months. By 1968 military-commercial "experiments" were well under way in this region, bringing floods to some, drought to others, and toxic pollution of air, land and water to all.

The Blue Ridge Seeders disbanded in 1965, but the evidence of seeding has intensified. Now small craft are aided by military jets, whose criss-cross chemical contrails develop into domes of haze which trap pollutants, heat, and humidity for days. Heavy precipitation is induced in winter and spring by light seeding; and drought in the summer is induced by massive seeding which dissipates the precipitation potential.

Here, no one younger than 25 years can recall the awesome majesty of the massive cumulonimbus clouds that signals the build up of great thunderstorms over the western mountains, bringing their essential gifts of nature — nitrogen (from lightning), rain, and the washed clean air. Since 1957, all convective thunder storms are extinguished by the seeders. The few broken storms that sneak through generally do so late at night when the seeders have retired.

Since Secretary Shelhamer promised "to get to the bottom of the cloud seeding" he admits that there is something to get to the bottom of. Why has he not called a meeting of the Pennsylvania Weather Modification Board? Why is he dragging his feet?

The Probable Maximum Flood for Oroville Dam

The probable maximum flood (PMF) is based on the probable maximum precipitation (PMP), considering both rain and snow, and is used for spillway design purposes. USACE estimated the PMF in 1970 to have a peak flow of 720,000 cfs and a 3-day runoff volume of 2,510 taf and results from a 72-hour storm depositing 21.1 inches of precipitation.

The PMF study was updated by USACE in 1980. It showed that the PMF has a peak inflow of 960,000 cfs and an 8-day run-off volume of 5,217 taf.

@flowinguphill @wazeciteman @eric_maclaurin Does not sound right. The main spillway alone is rated for that. Emergency is 500K. Link?

@BayleeB79 @BlueAJ41 @lltwins @dum_phuk @LexadLisa Contrails can spread into a haze that lasts all day. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/C33D17mUYAEDO5E.jpg

The spreading of jet contrails into extensive cirrus sheets is a familiar sight. Often, when persistent contrails exist from 25,000 to 40,000 ft, several long contrails increase in number and gradually merge into an almost solid interlaced sheet.
[....]
Contrail development and spreading begins in the morning hours with the start of heavy jet traffic and may extend from horizon to horizon as the air traffic peaks. Fig. 1 is a typical example of midmorning contrails that occured on 17 December 1969 northwest of Boulder. By midafternoon, sky conditions had developed into those shown in Fig. 2 an almost solid contrail sheet reported to average 500 m in depth.

@STXparanormal Ballast barrels are used in test planes for weight and balance distribution tests. Not spraying. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/C1aZCMvUkAEZ8Kl.jpg

Water tanks provided ballast to simulate passenger and cargo loads for flight testing. Not only could the tanks simulate various amounts of weight, they could also shift the weight fore and aft in flight through connecting pipes to test different center-of-gravity configurations. Boeing

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/C1aZCMvUkAEZ8Kl.jpg

During flight tests in 1994, the cabin interior of the prototype 777 was filled with what at first glance looked like aluminum beer kegs. In fact, these 55-gallon barrels contained water. The contents of two dozen barrels in the forward cabin and a like number of barrels in the aft section were pumped back and forth to simulate shifts in center of gravity that would result from passengers moving about. The top photo shows the cabin as it is when the 777 is delivered.

@Kal1_Furies @rezn8d @Oswald1160 Just not a very big one. You could say everything is an issue. Small issues are unimportant.

10 CLOUDS AND WEATHER PHENOMENA

A word may be added about the clouds formed, usually at great heights, by aeroplanes, now known by the name of condensation trails (Fig. 42). These are truly cloud formations and not like the smoke trails that were once used for sky-writing advertisements.

When warm damp air is mixed with cold damp air some of the moisture will condense, and if the air is sufficiently damp and the difference of temperature sufficiently great the condensation will be sufficient to form visible cloud. The exhaust from an aeroplane engine contains a good deal of moisture, and if the air into which it is streaming is sufficiently cold and damp a condensation trail will be formed. Sometimes the trails are very slight and short lived, sometimes they are very persistent. Naturally the latter is the case when the cold air is already practically saturated with moisture, as it is when there are traces of natural cloud at the level at which the condensation trails are formed. Clouds & Weather Phenomena , C. @Kronos382 http://pbs.twimg.com/media/C0VBibDUcAAnbXk.jpg

Stadis® 450

Description

Appearance – yellow to dark amber liquid. Addition of Stadis® 450 increases the electrical conductivity of distillate fuels to minimize the risk of electrostatic discharge and ignition during the handling, mixing, pumping and filtration of fuels.

Composition

A mixture of polymeric organic nitrogen and sulphur compounds dissolved in aromatic solvent.

Stadis® 450 contains no metals.

@rezn8d How do they get the carbon black up there?

http://www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/pii/S0269749113003266

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CzAV1EgUsAESfUK.jpg

As discussed in a previous paper (Watson and Valberg, 2001), the terms carbon black and soot have often been used interchangeably despite the fact that soot by definition is an undesired byproduct of incomplete combustion of fossil fuels and biomass. Watson and Valberg (2001) demonstrated that CB and soot are physically and chemically distinct substances. CB is simply a quasi-graphitic form of nearly pure EC that is distinguished by its very low quantities of extractable organic compounds and total inorganics (generally <1% of each; IARC, 2010, McCunney et al., 2012, OECD, 2005, Wang et al., 2003 and Watson and Valberg, 2001). In addition, CB has a characteristic particle morphology that consists of aciniform (grape-like) aggregates of highly fused spherical primary particles, with the aggregates clustered into larger-sized agglomerates. In stark contrast, combustion soot is a highly heterogeneous substance that generally includes a major organic carbon fraction (oftentimes >50% of total mass) and significantly higher ash and extractable organic matter contents than carbon black. Its chemical and physical properties are highly variable depending on its source. As described previously by Watson and Valberg (2001), some soot forms such as diesel exhaust particulate (DEP) can have morphologies resembling the aciniform aggregates of carbon black, while other soots can exhibit significant variations in morphology.

Moreover, $\eta = 0$ at flight, if the engine is idle with zero thrust for finite fuel consumption (such as during descent). Therefore contrails are expected to disappear at higher altitude during descent than they occur during ascent, and an aircraft may avoid contrail formation, at least near threshold conditions, by flying with reduced power.

They can't. A finger is not faster than a car. But one is small and the other is far away http://contrailscience.com/persisting-and-spreading-contrails/

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CxbMtYrUsAAY3x6.jpg

The spreading of jet contrails into extensive cirrus sheets is a familiar sight. Often, when persistent contrails exist from 25,000 to 40,000 ft, several long contrails increase in number and gradually merge into an almost solid interlaced sheet.

Contrail development and spreading begins in the morning hours with the start of heavy jet traffic and may extend from horizon to horizon as the air traffic peaks. Fig. 1 is a typical example of midmorning contrails that occured on 17 December 1969 northwest of Boulder. By midafternoon, sky conditions had developed into those shown in Fig. 2 an almost solid contrail sheet reported to average 500 m in depth.

Do contrails sometimes persist and spread out?

Yes, see the Encyclopædia Britannica article on vapour trails (contrails):

> Contrail, streamer of cloud sometimes observed behind an airplane flying in clear, cold, humid air. It forms upon condensation of the water vapour produced by the combustion of fuel in the airplane engines. When the ambient relative humidity is high, the resulting ice-crystal plume may last for several hours. The trail may be distorted by the winds, and sometimes it spreads outwards to form a layer of cirrus cloud.
> vapour trail. (2007). In Encyclopædia Britannica.Retrieved May 4, 2007,from Encyclopædia Britannica Online: http://www.britannica.com/eb/article-9074829

(The above quote is from the current EB. However, a Google books search dates the inclusion on the EB back to 1983)

Also see "A Field Guide to the Atmosphere", by Schaefer and Day, 1981:

> "Sometimes [contrails] are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus" (Page 137)

@jelo1317 @courtskinz @martinhume in 1823 the Encyclopedia said they were "very frequent"

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CxRF_roUsAAZJM3.jpg

the outermost circle was a bright red. In 1728, one was seen of a pale red outwardly, then followed yellow, and then green, terminated by a white. Corona.

HALOS

Besides rainbows there are other coloured rings that are of a different nature; these are called halos and are seen round the sun or moon. The halo most commonly seen is a ring 22 degrees from the sun or moon; it is usually whitish, but sometimes colours are visible; in this case red is on the inside of the circle, followed by yellow and green; when seen round the moon the colours are hardly visible. A halo is an optical phenomenon caused by the sun or moon shining through clouds composed of minute ice crystals, but sometimes these clouds are so thin that the only indication of their presence is the fact that a halo is visible; it is on these occasions that the colours are best developed. An outer halo 46 degrees from the sun or moon is sometimes seen. There is sometimes a white circle going right round the sky through the sun and parallel with the horizon; it is sometimes called the mock sun ring, for on it are situated the mock suns, or parhelia; the two most generally seen occur close to the points where the mock sun ring cuts the 22-degree halo; they are just outside the halo, and the higher the sun in the sky the farther off are they from the halo; they are sometimes white, but generally show prismatic colours with the red nearest to the sun; they are more or less drawn out on the side away from the sun; they may be seen on many occasions when no halo is visible; sailors call them sun dogs, and they are popularly supposed to be a sign of bad weather, but this is by no means always true.

Aircraft condensation trails

Everyone has noticed the long, thin, white trails left by highflying aircraft. They sometimes disappear quickly, but on other occasions they persist for a long time, spread out and become a cirrus or altocumulus type of cloud. These condensation trails ('contrails') result from the condensation of water vapour contained in the exhaust gases of the aircraft engines. Their persistence depends on the temperature and humidity of the atmosphere at the flight level. Thus, when a warm front is approaching and the cirrus clouds are beginning to form, an aircraft trail will usually tend to persist and even grow, because the air at that level is already moist. Wind shear (the change of wind speed from one height and distance to another) will cause the trails to spread out and give a spectacular display (88).

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CxQs3bPVQAABFmU.jpg

A word may be added about the clouds formed, usually at great heights, by aeroplanes, now known by the name of condensation trails (Fig. 42). These are truly cloud formations and not like the smoke trails that were once used for sky-writing advertisements.

When warm damp air is mixed with cold damp air some of the moisture will condense, and if the air is sufficiently damp and the difference of temperature sufficiently great the condensation will be sufficient to form visible cloud. The exhaust from an aeroplane engine contains a good deal of moisture, and if the air into which it is streaming is sufficiently cold and damp a condensation trail will be formed. Sometimes the trails are very slight and short lived, sometimes they are very persistent. Naturally the latter is the case when the cold air is already practically saturated with moisture, as it is when there are traces of natural cloud at the level at which the condensation trails are formed.

https://www.metabunk.org/sk/1957Cloudstudyapictorialguide OCR.pdf

A small wind shear can draw out a contrail into an almost horizontal sheet of cloud [no. 70]. In this picture, the right hand trail is a few minutes older than the other and has been extended more. Sometimes several trails drawn out in this way cover most of the sky with cirrus. If the trails are very persistent the clear air must be saturated for ice.

Brightly coloured parts of complex haloes are occasionally seen in persistent contrails. Parts of coronae have been seen from accompanying aircraft in the first few metres of the trails, but they disappear as the droplets freeze and grow into crystals.

There is one other form of ice crystal cloud. The artificial one caused by aircraft, and there are two varieties. One is produced by the condensation and freezing of exhaust vapour, which on issuing expands to a large extent forming a line of cloud which drifts in the sky for some time, spreading outward, and becoming less dense. The other type, is produced by the wing tip vortices, and is only temporary, and seldom visible from the ground. Figs. 78 and 79 show the first type of trail in company with true cirrus.

Using these criteria, we identified 220 contrail experts and 255 atmospheric deposition experts. A survey invitation was sent out: 49 contrail experts and 65 atmospheric deposition experts could not be reached with our contact information or explicitly disqualified themselves as experts on the survey topic. This left a total sample population of 171 for contrails and 190 for atmospheric deposition. Of these, 49 experts completed the contrail survey and 28 completed the atmospheric deposition survey —a response rate of 29% and 15%, respectively. The lower response rate for deposition may have in part been due to the wider breadth of knowledge covered in the survey leading more people to disqualify themselves as experts. All invited experts were informed that the survey would be confidential: participant names are listed, but responses are not attributed to specific experts. Contrail experts had an average of 26 years professional experience in their field (with a median of 26 years), and deposition experts 22 years (with a median of 20 years).

Do contrails sometimes persist and spread out?

Yes, see the Encyclopædia Britannica article on vapour trails (contrails):

> Contrail, streamer of cloud sometimes observed behind an airplane flying in clear, cold, humid air. It forms upon condensation of the water vapour produced by the combustion of fuel in the airplane engines. When the ambient relative humidity is high, the resulting ice-crystal plume may last for several hours. The trail may be distorted by the winds, and sometimes it spreads outwards to form a layer of cirrus cloud.
> vapour trail. (2007). In Encyclopædia Britannica.Retrieved May 4, 2007,from Encyclopædia Britannica Online:
> http://www.britannica.com/eb/article-9074829

(The above quote is from the current EB. However, a Google books search dates the inclusion on the EB back to 1983)

Also see "A Field Guide to the Atmosphere", by Schaefer and Day, 1981:

> "Sometimes [contrails] are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus" (Page 137)

@Masschemtrails Not uncommon in 1960s either.
http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CxFLvXJUcAAP_pj.jpg

The spreading of jet contrails into extensive cirrus sheets is a familiar sight. Often, when persistent contrails exist from 25,000 to 40,000 ft, several long contrails increase in number and gradually merge into an almost solid interlaced sheet.
[....]
Contrail development and spreading begins in the morning hours with the start of heavy jet traffic and may extend from horizon to horizon as the air traffic peaks. Fig. 1 is a typical example of midmorning contrails that occured on 17 December 1969 northwest of Boulder. By midafternoon, sky conditions had developed into those shown in Fig. 2 an almost solid contrail sheet reported to average 500 m in depth.

10 CLOUDS AND WEATHER PHENOMENA

A word may be added about the clouds formed, usually at great heights, by aeroplanes, now known by the name of condensation trails (Fig. 42). These are truly cloud formations and not like the smoke trails that were once used for sky-writing advertisements.

When warm damp air is mixed with cold damp air some of the moisture will condense, and if the air is sufficiently damp and the difference of temperature sufficiently great the condensation will be sufficient to form visible cloud. The exhaust from an aeroplane engine contains a good deal of moisture, and if the air into which it is streaming is sufficiently cold and damp a condensation trail will be formed. Sometimes the trails are very slight and short lived, sometimes they are very persistent. Naturally the latter is the case when the cold air is already practically saturated with moisture, as it is when there are traces of natural cloud at the level at which the condensation trails are formed.

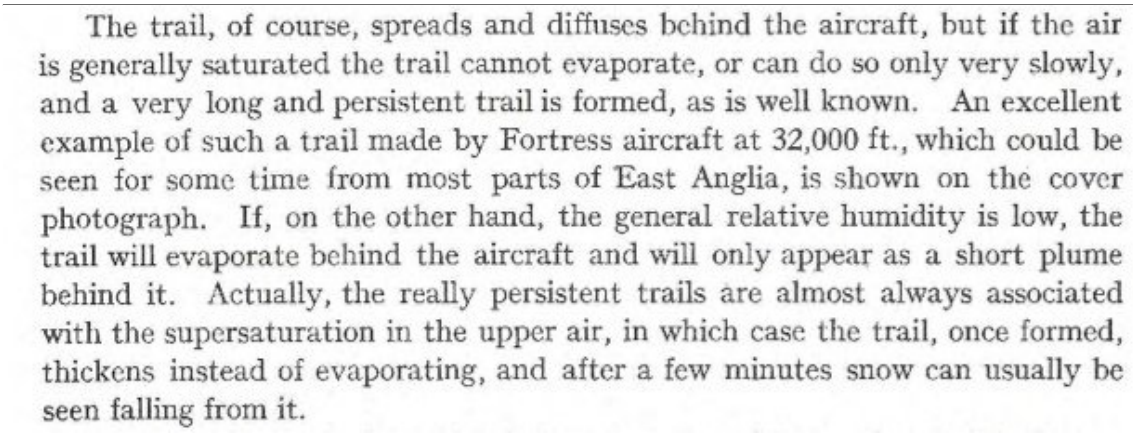
http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CwMdlKTVUAEbL7W.jpg



The trail, of course, spreads and diffuses behind the aircraft, but if the air is generally saturated the trail cannot evaporate, or can do so only very slowly, and a very long and persistent trail is formed, as is well known. An excellent example of such a trail made by Fortress aircraft at 32,000 ft., which could be seen for some time from most parts of East Anglia, is shown on the cover photograph. If, on the other hand, the general relative humidity is low, the trail will evaporate behind the aircraft and will only appear as a short plume behind it. Actually, the really persistent trails are almost always associated with the supersaturation in the upper air, in which case the trail, once formed, thickens instead of evaporating, and after a few minutes snow can usually be seen falling from it.

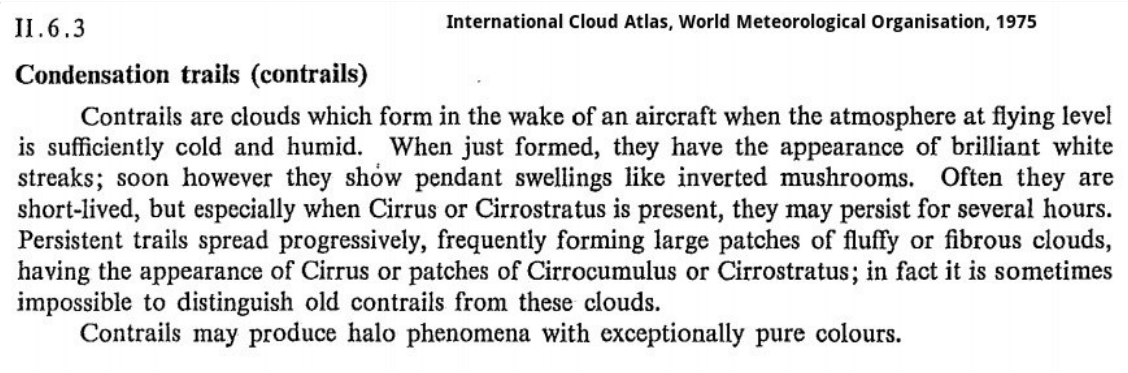
@Fiveeyezagent Here's one from 1975, says about the same thing.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CwMdRBxUMAAuaBB.jpg



II.6.3 International Cloud Atlas, World Meteorological Organisation, 1975

Condensation trails (contrails)

Contrails are clouds which form in the wake of an aircraft when the atmosphere at flying level is sufficiently cold and humid. When just formed, they have the appearance of brilliant white streaks; soon however they show pendant swellings like inverted mushrooms. Often they are short-lived, but especially when Cirrus or Cirrostratus is present, they may persist for several hours. Persistent trails spread progressively, frequently forming large patches of fluffy or fibrous clouds, having the appearance of Cirrus or patches of Cirrocumulus or Cirrostratus; in fact it is sometimes impossible to distinguish old contrails from these clouds.

Contrails may produce halo phenomena with exceptionally pure colours.

https://twitter.com/_/status/793510090783404032

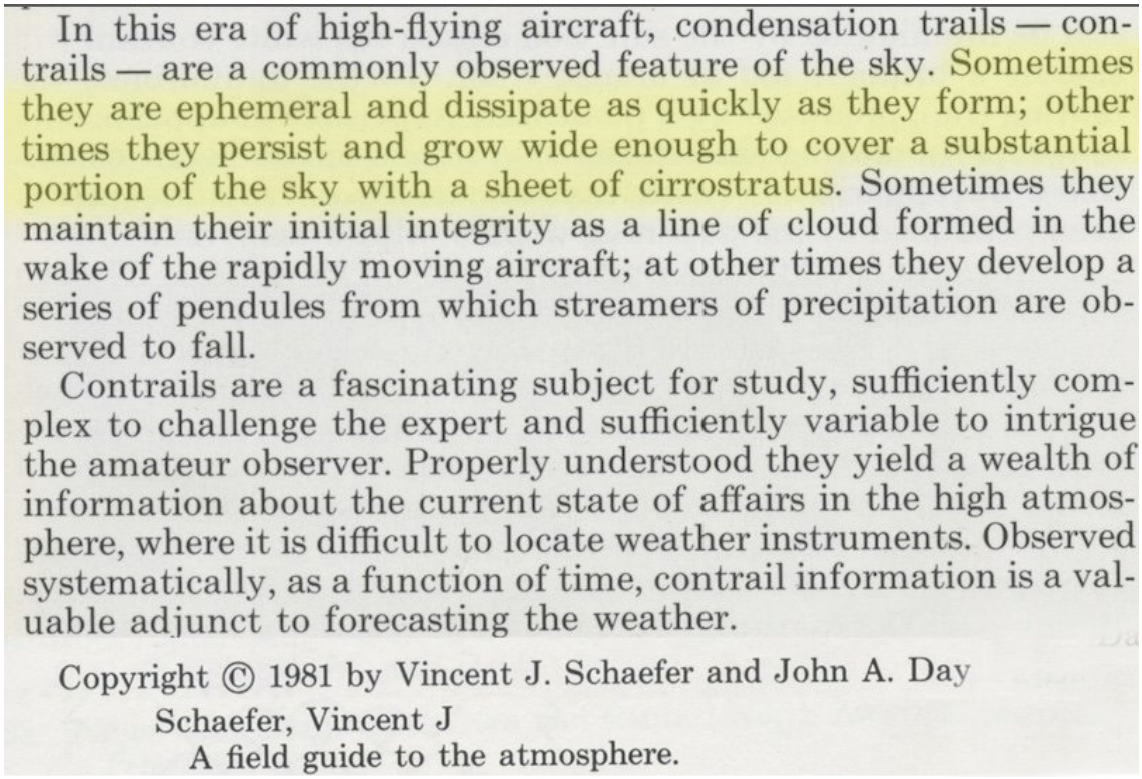
@Fiveeyezagent So you think all the science books from the 1980s were wrong. Why didn't anyone notice? Surely that would be a huge story.

2016-11-01T17:47:05+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/793509680475545600

@Fiveeyezagent Well, would you agree this was from a 1981 book:

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CwMc1j6VMAAHLpi.jpg



In this era of high-flying aircraft, condensation trails — contrails — are a commonly observed feature of the sky. Sometimes they are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus. Sometimes they maintain their initial integrity as a line of cloud formed in the wake of the rapidly moving aircraft; at other times they develop a series of pendules from which streamers of precipitation are observed to fall.

The spreading of jet contrails into extensive cirrus sheets is a familiar sight. Often, when persistent contrails exist from 25,000 to 40,000 ft, several long contrails increase in number and gradually merge into an almost solid interlaced sheet.
Contrail development and spreading begins in the morning hours with the start of heavy jet traffic and may extend from horizon to horizon as the air traffic peaks. Fig. 1 is a typical example of midmorning contrails that occured on 17 December 1969 northwest of Boulder. By midafternoon, sky conditions had developed into those shown in Fig. 2 an almost solid contrail sheet reported to average 500 m in depth.

Addressed directly to the question of the radiative effects of conventional and supersonic transport exhaust products, our research is aimed at determining, experimentally and by applied Mie absorption and scattering theory, the effects of contrails and contrail sheets on the atmospheric IR and solar thermal radiation budget and at reconciling calculations and observations. The investigations, currently conducted to 42,000 ft, will be extended to 65,000 ft within the year.

The research plan specifies the following objectives:

1) Observation of the IR transmissivity and scattering in the 10.0–12.0 μ spectral interval from flights over and under contrail sheets.

2) Observation of the upward, downard and reflected hemispheric solar radiant power from the aircraft platform.

3) Calculation by Mie theory of the IR transmissivity and scattering for monodispersed equivalent spherical ice particles of assumed 50 μ radii. This method is a modification of the one used by Zdunkowski et al. (1965), the main variable being the particle concentration.

4) Comparison of calculations of transmissivity and scattering with observations by iterating the radiative transfer solution on the particle concentration, the

▲ 8.2 (23/1/83, 10:16 AM, CZ5)
8.2 Mountain wave reflection. A shallow layer of cool air containing thin stratus is penetrating into the plain of Hungary and northern Yugoslavia, and quite ordinary lee waves are apparent. But in southern Yugoslavia where the airstream meets higher mountains we see reflected waves which appear to be circular and travelling outwards and northwards. Ordinary lee waves are steady standing waves and relatively easy to deal with theoretically, but these are travelling over the ground and the mechanism of their production is not in the least obvious. For example, there is no analogous phenomenon in a flowing river except surface tension (capillary) waves, but they have quite different dispersion properties.

Nevertheless many examples of travelling waves have been recorded on anemograms and in time-lapse video pictures from stationary satellites. Because they are quickly dispersed they are seldom observed for more than a few minutes.

Ordinary lee waves are steady standing waves and relatively easy to deal with theoretically, but these are travelling over the ground and the mechanism of their production is not in the least obvious. For example, there is no analogous phenomenon in a flowing river except surface tension (capillary) waves, but they have quite different dispersion properties.

Nevertheless many examples of travelling waves have been recorded on anemograms and in time-lapse video pictures from stationary satellites. Because they are quickly dispersed they are seldom observed for more than a few minutes.

3.1c The ice is at about its maximum extent, for it only very rarely reaches beyond Jan Mayen, and it can be seen how the wind drags fragments of ice off the edge to be melted over the open sea.

3.1 (b) and (c) are three days apart and so the speed of the ice movement can be determined by the displacement of identifiable pieces of ice. Displacements from almost nothing to 50km (31 miles) per day can be seen.

Across the bottom of this picture lines of cirrus originating over the high mountains of SE Greenland are being carried from the northwest.

▲ 7.10 (26/4/82, 15:10/13:29, 4)

7.10 This superb anticyclone has jetstreams all round it, the most intense being from the Azores to Iceland round the western side. This continues down Britain's east coast and is then renewed in strength from Central Europe into a low near Leningrad, which feeds cool northern air into Europe.

Iceland sparks off a brief trail of cirrus from its volcanic peaks; Norway sets up lee waves with a tiny streak of cirrus, and protects Denmark and part of Sweden from the cloud by its mountains. The moister air of the North Sea contains typical stratus or fog, while western Britain and Ireland have dry air in the middle of the high.

It is called a warm high because the high pressure is not due to cold air near the surface, but cold air in the stratosphere. The jetstream circulates anticyclonically around it, and this does not happen with a cold high.

A feeble Mediterranean low is over Sardinia, but the collection of convective storms over Morocco is producing a more convincing example. An old front residue circles round from south Portugal and further north its moist high level air supports condensation trails of the traffic from Europe.

This high lingered in this neighbourhood from 8 April to beyond the end of the month, shunting lows around its northern border.

In its centre are some beautiful feathery patches of cirrus. The land is black because it is warmer than the sea in this infra-red picture.

EARTHWATCHING

EYES IN THE SKY

The bloodstream of the biosphere is exquisitely evident when viewed from space. In our generation it has become possible to see the Earth from outside. We can watch our local bit of sky every day, but our imagination yearns to go beyond. Art and literature show that wishful thoughts of riding upon the clouds have been common throughout the ages. The sky is where heaven used to be, but now we can reach even higher; transport aircraft take us into the stratosphere, and with satellites we have eyes in orbit.

In Chapter 7 we give a brief description of how we obtain satellite pictures, and what they mean. Here, a few scenes demonstrate the widened view to which we now have access. We are not interested merely in illustrating things we knew about before satellites broadened our perspective; we are looking for new patterns which had not been imagined before the advent of satellite photography.

All life is in the air, the soil, or the ocean; ours is in the air. We now look at the atmosphere, which is one of the three realms of the biosphere and was moulded by life from the lifeless geology of the young Earth into the semi-transparent mixture of pure nitrogen, pure oxygen, pure water vapour, and pure carbon dioxide which now makes our planet the jewel of the solar system.

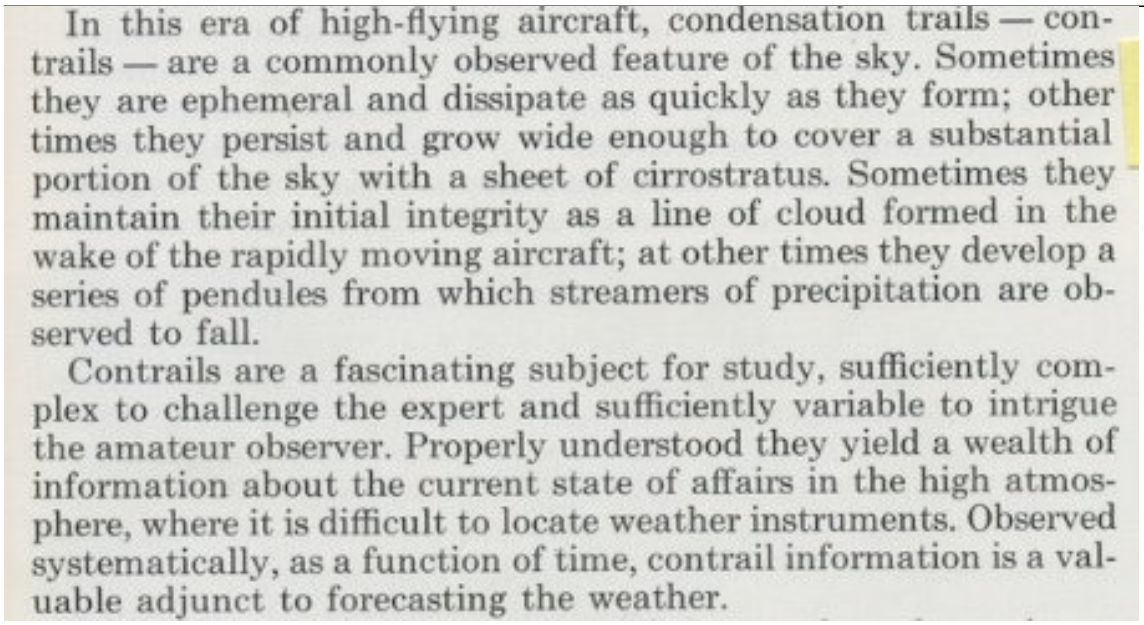
@tonsmorecowbell Contrails and cirrus. The cirrus sheet was probably in part contrail induced. See this old book on the weather: http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CtdP7wPVIAAeSy-.jpg



In this era of high-flying aircraft, condensation trails — contrails — are a commonly observed feature of the sky. Sometimes they are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus. Sometimes they maintain their initial integrity as a line of cloud formed in the wake of the rapidly moving aircraft; at other times they develop a series of pendules from which streamers of precipitation are observed to fall.

@Kal1_Furies Obviously if you asked broad questions like "is geoengineering happening", then the answer could be yes. CCS is considered GE.

@Kal1_Furies The point of the paper was about SLAPs, I don't get the focus on non-SLAP forms of geoengineering.

Professors Beasley, Bluestein, Carr, Chilson, Droegemeier, Fedorovich, Fiedler, Leslie, Moore, Morrissey, Palmer, Parsons, Richman, Shapiro, Straka, Xue, Zhang; Emeritus Professors Crawford, Duchon, Friday, Kimpel, Lilly, Sasaki; Associate Professors Basara, Biggerstaff, Klein, Postawko, Wang; Assistant Professors Cavallo, Homeyer, Martin; Adjunct Professors Brooks, Brown, Burgess, Doswell, Doviak, Jorgenson, Kanak, Karoly, Kogan, Lakshmanan, MacGorman, Rust, Ryzhkov, Schaefer, Schultz, Stensrud, Trafalis, Turner, Wicker, Xu, Zrnic; Adjunct Associate Professors Basara, Brewster, Brotzge, Elmore, Gao, Gourley, Hong, Kain, Kong, Laufersweiler, Mavriplis, McPherson, Schuur, Yu, Zhang; Adjunct Assistant Professors Heinselman, Jung, McGovern

Degrees Offered

- Bachelor of Science in Meteorology
- Master of Science in Meteorology
- Doctor of Philosophy

General Information

Meteorology, or atmospheric science, is the study of the atmosphere and its interaction with Earth's surface, oceans, and biological systems. Meteorologists seek to describe, understand, and predict weather phenomena that occur on space scales ranging from millimeters to thousands of kilometers, and on time scales from microseconds to thousands of years or longer. These phenomena range from localized thunderstorms and tornadoes, to regional frontal systems and hurricanes, to global climate change.

There are two major scientific areas of research in meteorology today. One is in the study and prediction of severe and hazardous weather events that strongly affect life and property. These include, but are not limited to, lightning, tornadoes, floods, hail, blizzards, dense fog and hurricanes. The second is the understanding of the Earth's climate system. Research activities here include study of past climates, regional (mesoscale) climate, surface and boundary layer processes, climate change and seasonal forecasting. The School of Meteorology is actively engaged in research on all the above-mentioned topics.

The University of Oklahoma is the only university in the state that offers undergraduate and graduate programs in meteorology. The School of Meteorology maintains an enrollment of approximately 300 undergraduate students and 100 graduate students. Led by 24 internationally recognized faculty members, and assisted by adjunct faculty members @Dan_E_V @HealthRanger @Pbzon Either. Here's a middle-aged book.

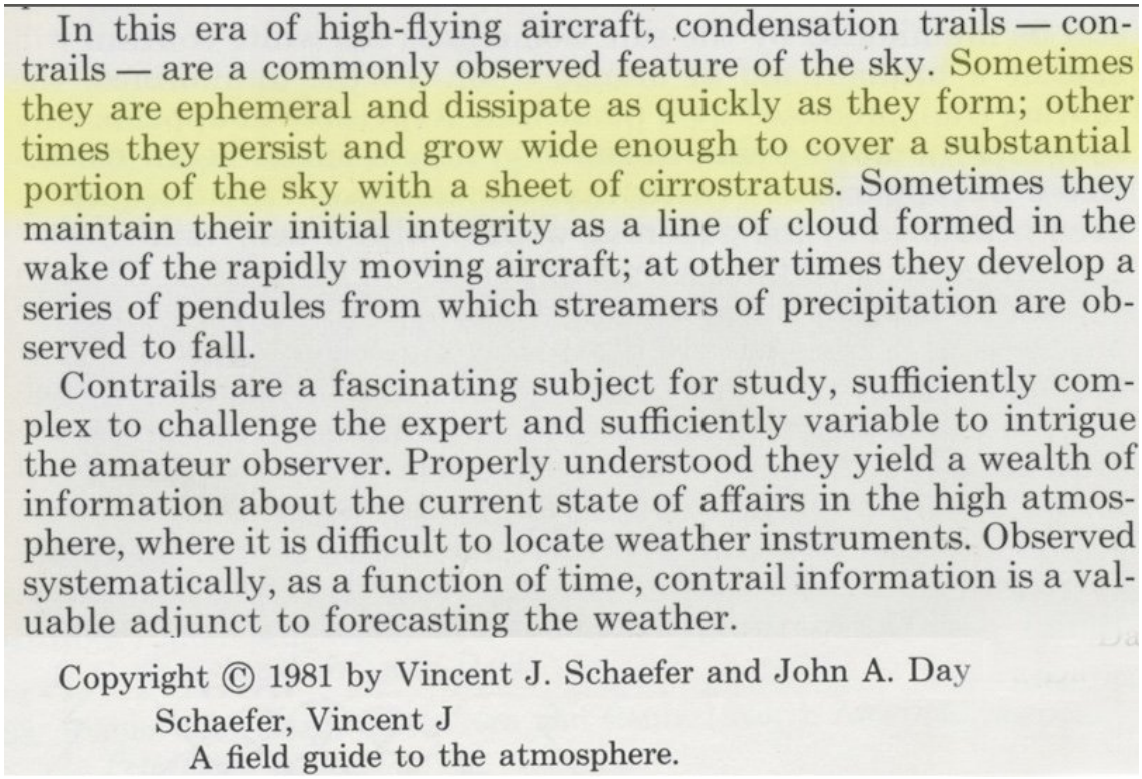
https://www.metabunk.org/sk/1981_Peterson_Field_Guide_to_Clouds._Contrails.pdf
http://pbs.twimg.com/media/Cp7O-6NUMAAD8rK.jpg



In this era of high-flying aircraft, condensation trails — contrails — are a commonly observed feature of the sky. Sometimes they are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus. Sometimes they maintain their initial integrity as a line of cloud formed in the wake of the rapidly moving aircraft; at other times they develop a series of pendules from which streamers of precipitation are observed to fall.

For scientific discussion, see, for example, all these articles on contrails. In particular the one from 1970 titled “”

Airborne Observations of Contrail Effects on the Thermal Radiation Budget

> The spreading of jet contrails into extensive cirrus sheets is a familiar sight. Often, when persistent contrails exist from 25,000 to 40,000 ft, several long contrails increase in number and gradually merge into an almost solid interlaced sheet.
>
>
> Contrail development and spreading begins in the morning hours with the start of heavy jet traffic and may extend from horizon to horizon as the air traffic peaks. Fig. 1 is a typical example of midmorning contrails that occured on 17 December 1969 northwest of Boulder. By midafternoon, sky conditions had developed into those shown in Fig. 2 an almost solid contrail sheet reported to average 500 m in depth.

Atmospheric science experts agree 'chemtrails' is a fantasy

Aug. 12, 2016

Believers of one conspiracy theory claim that the persistent condensation trails left behind aircraft in the sky—so-called "chemtrails"—are evidence of a covert large-scale spraying operation with sinister intent. A new study aims to debunk that idea by surveying atmospheric chemists who specialize in condensation trails and geochemists working on atmospheric deposition of dust and pollution. Nearly all of them—76 out of 77—said they had not encountered any evidence of secret atmospheric spraying, reports Phys.org. The @OpChemtrails That's a circumhorizontal arc, understood 100 years ago.

https://books.google.com/books?id=jyhFAQAAMAAJ&dq=%22Circumhorizontal%20arc%22&pg=PA638#v=onepage&q=%22Circumhorizontal%20arc%22&f=false

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/Co9TN70UMAE7pI3.jpg

Circumhorizontal Arc.—A colored arc, red on the upper side, of perhaps 90° in extent, is occasionally seen parallel to the horizon and about 46°, or a little more, below the sun. This arc is produced by light entering snow crystals through vertical sides and passing out through horizontal bases, and, therefore, the theory of its formation is identical with that of the circumzenithal arc. On merely substituting "zenith distance" for "elevation" all the numerical values of the one become those of the other. Hence, the circumzenithal arc cannot appear when the zenith distance of the sun is greater than 32° 12′. Similarly, when this distance is 22° 8′, corresponding to minimum refraction, the solar distance of the circumhorizontal arc is 45° 44′, the radius of the halo of 46°. Further, for all values of the zenith distance of the sun from 16° to 27° the circumhorizontal arc is within 1° of tangency to the halo of 46°. Hence, it is also, though incorrectly, called the lower tangent arc of the halo of 46°.

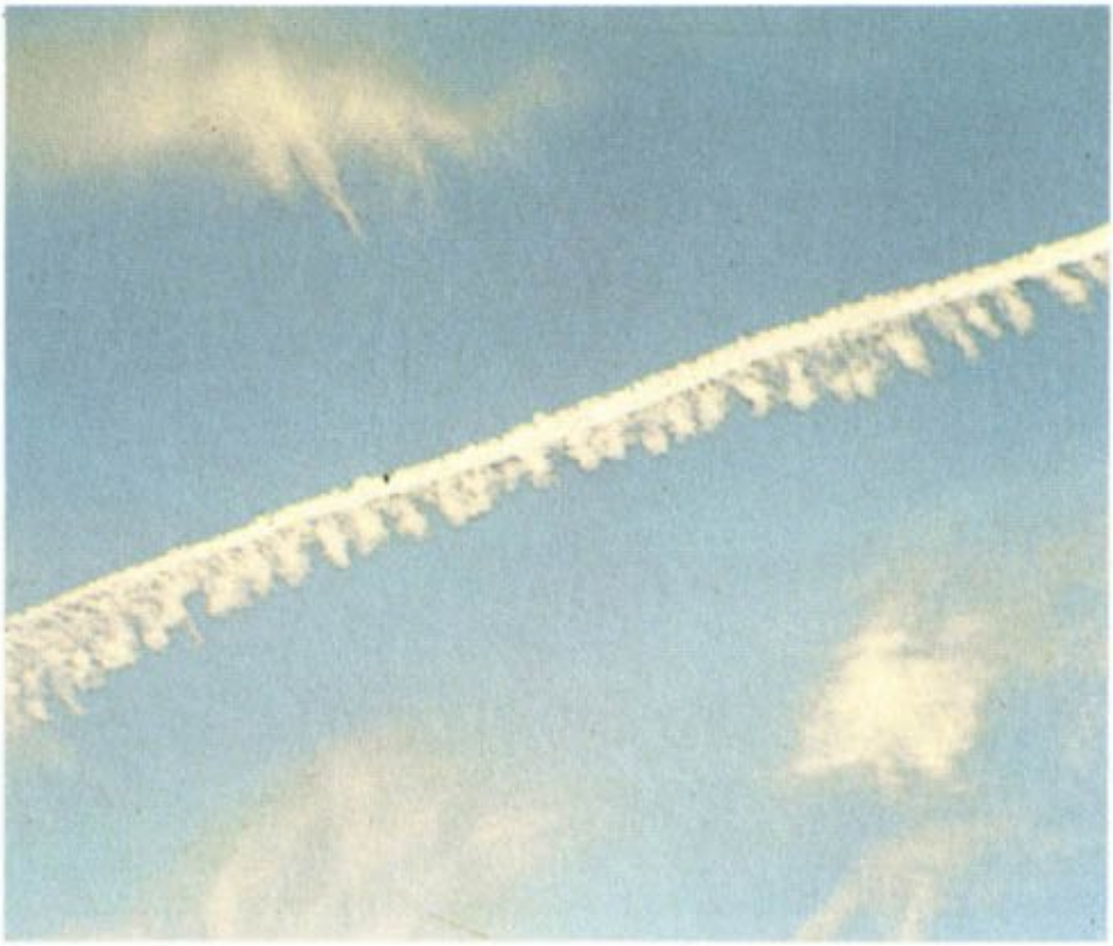
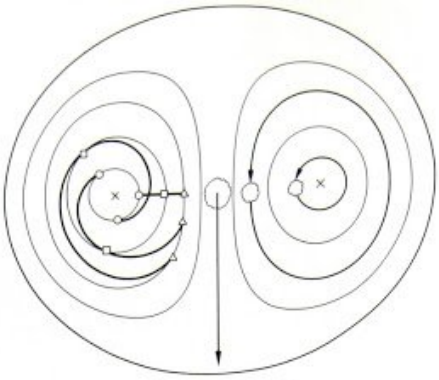
@jefbt Why dod you think it looks odd? The pendules?

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/Co5OYoAUkAA-Uq1.jpg



This contrail developed pendules, or elements of sinking air akin to mammato-cumulus (see p. 41).

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/Co5OYoAUkAA-Uq1.jpg



11.2.i

11.2.i The two crosses represent the axes of the vortices trailing from the wingtips of an aircraft. In this vertical section the closed curves represent tracks of the air circulating round the vortices. The outside curve encloses the "accompanying fluid", which is the name given to the air which travels downwards, with the vortices, through the surrounding air. Since the exhaust is emitted between the wingtips it is inside the accompanying fluid. In the right half of the diagram the heavy lines show how exhaust trails would circulate around the vortex. Exhaust emitted along the centre line would travel directly downwards, and would then be divided when it reached the bottom of the accompanying fluid. The motion becomes very much modified before such a division would occur.

In the left half we see three points on a horizontal line marked by a circle, square, and triangle. The circle travels round the vortex more rapidly so that three successive positions of the originally horizontal line of particles are shown. In particular, as viewed from a distance, the inner exhaust trail shown on the right would appear to travel round the outer one (the square moves to a position beneath the circle, and the triangle likewise but more slowly).

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/Co5OQdhVMAAToh1.jpg

11.2.ii The motion shown in 11.2.i does not persist because of the buoyancy acquired by the accompanying fluid as it descends through a stably stratified environment. As the air moves from the lower stagnation point L the juxtaposition of buoyant air, inside the boundary of the accompanying fluid (heavy line), with the air outside produces vorticity in the direction shown by the small pairs of arrows. This vorticity, which is in the opposite direction to the principal vortices, has the effect of moving the upper stagnation point from its original position S down to S_2 so that all the air between the streamline (left half of diag.) to S_2 and the outer boundary starting at L is "detrained". It is left behind so that the accompanying fluid becomes smaller. This has to happen because the buoyancy force acting on the accompanying fluid decreases the downward momentum of the system, and the only way this can happen is for the accompanying fluid to decrease in volume: this has the effect of bringing the two vortices closer together and since their circulations are not decreased their downward velocity is actually increased. This is more than offset by the decrease in volume so that the momentum still decreases.

The vortex sheet which is generated on the outer boundary of the accompanying fluid is unstable, and so a mixing zone will appear, which is represented by the shaded area which gradually widens upwards. To begin with the stagnation point S_1 is below this region and so all the mixed fluid is left behind; this is shown in the right half. But after a minute or so, in the case of typical values for airliners at about 11,000 metres, the stagnation point rises nearer to the original position. The consequences of this are illustrated in the left half of the diagram, with some of the mixed fluid travelling down the middle of the accompanying fluid. As soon as this penetrates beyond about the middle of the system the main vortices become unstable because the buoyancy of this mixed fluid will cause the generation of circulation, opposite to the principal vortices, inside the accompanying fluid in circuits surrounding the vortices. Mixing then very quickly penetrates into the cores of the vortices. The consequences of this sequence of events is illustrated in the next diagram and the pictures following.

11.2.iii This perspective view from an angle above of a vortex pair illustrates how irregularities are magnified because the buoyancy causes an increase in descent velocity which itself increases the buoyancy. The cloud carried down between the vortices descends in a series of blobs. The descent ends when the mixing penetrates into the vortex cores and the two loose ends of the vortices tend to join across the system to form a series of loops. The lowest parts of the vortices are closest together.

If cloud is present in the vortex cores it will remain until mixing reaches it, when it will rapidly disappear because of the mixing and the rapid rise in pressure as the rotation ceases.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/Co5ON8EUAAA3JS3.jpg

11.2.4 The contrail is formed about one wingspan behind the aircraft when the exhaust has mixed with sufficient air of the environment to produce saturation. The edges of the trails are ragged to begin with but further mixing evaporates these and the trail becomes smooth: this indicates that the condensation persists only in the low pressure region of the vortex cores.

Close to the aircraft it is seen that the two trails from the inner engines descend further than the outer ones, those on the right being separately visible but the outer left one being behind the inner left one. Often one complete rotation of the inner round the outer one can be seen.

In the second picture the trails appear hollow. This is because the exhaust did not enter the middle of the vortex core. The particles are too small for centrifuging to be significant.

The irregularities are intensified, and at the right end the mixing penetrates in a few places into the vortex cores and dissipates the cloud. The spacing of the loops must be determined by the distance apart of the vortices: irregularities of all wavelengths are unstable, but two loops very close together merge into one, while new loops can appear between those that are rather far apart. The interval between the first and last pictures is 90 sec.

Motion identical with that shown here has been observed in smoke trails emitted at the wing tips of a Comet aircraft at 3,000 metres which is far below the normal altitude for contrails.

These pictures were taken looking vertically upwards over a period of about three minutes, and because the aircraft was on a turn the downwash was inclined outwards. The effect is to give a view rather like the side view of a straight trail (see 11.2.3, 11.2.8). Where the vortices are closest together they have penetrated farthest, and the blobs correspond to the places where the mixing has penetrated into the vortex cores. In the lowest picture the linear clouds are composed of the detrained accompanying fluid.

Snow samples from Mount Shasta are contaminated with aluminum. Pure white snow at 8,000-foot elevation on Mount Shasta had 61,100 parts per billion (ppb) of aluminum, over 4 times more than the mud beneath the snow and tens of thousands of times the expected maximum level in a snow sample. The samples also contained 83 ppb of barium and 383 ppb of strontium. The only route for these heavy metals to enter the precipitation system is from the aerosolized clouds. A rainwater test conducted in 2013 on Mount Shasta contained 13,100 ppb of aluminum, 130 ppb of barium and 138 ppb of strontium. These amounts are undrinkable by state standards, at 13 times the allowable limit. Lab reports of aluminum in precipitation range from ppb13,100 ppb correlated to Aircraft exhaust may lead to cirrus clouds where no clouds would have formed otherwise. Ice-supersaturated air is often free of visible clouds because the supersaturation is too small for ice particle nucleation to occur (Heymsfield et al. 1998b; Gierens et al. 1999b). Persistent contrails may last for hours and grow into a spreading cirrus cloud. Although aircraft flying through ice-supersaturated air masses trigger contrail formation by the increase of humidity within their exhaust trails, the ice formed in long-lasting contrails originates almost completely from ambient water vapor (Knollenberg 1972).

The threshold temperature for contrail formation in the Schmidt-Appleman criterion depends on ambient pressure, p, and ambient RH and on the parameters that determine the steepness, $de/dT = \mathrm{EI}_{H_2O}\, c_p\, p/[0.622\, Q_{eff}]$, of the mixing line (fig. 11.1) of excess partial water pressure, e, versus excess temperature, T, in the plume (Schumann 1996a). The parameters include the emission index (EI) of water mass per burnt fuel mass ($\mathrm{EI}_{H_2O} \cong 1.25$ for typical jet fuels with 13.8% hydrogen mass fraction), the specific heat capacity of air, $c_p \cong 1004\,\mathrm{J/kg\,K^{-1}}$, and the effective amount of heat, Q_{eff}, released into the exhaust per unit fuel mass, where $Q_{eff} = (1 - \eta)\, Q$ depends on the specific heat of combustion of the fuel in the engine ($Q \cong 43\,\mathrm{MJ/kg}$) and the overall efficiency, η, of the aircraft propulsion system. The dependence on engine efficiency was noted by Schmidt (1941). The efficiency can be computed from $\eta = (F\,V)/(m_F\,Q)$ for given engine thrust, F, aircraft speed, V, engine fuel consumption rate, m_F, and Q (Schumann 1996a). Propulsion engineers call m_F/F the specific fuel consumption. Typical values of η are in the range 0.2–0.4, its value grew from older low-bypass to modern high-bypass engines. Some authors use "contrail factors" $\mathrm{EI}_{H_2O}/Q_{eff}$ explicitly depending on the by-pass ratio of engines (Coleman 1996; Ferris 1996; Mazin 1996; Schrader 1997).

For a direct test, a formation flight of two different large jet air- craft was arranged, wing by wing, during an ascent and a descent of the aircraft. Contrail formation and ambient conditions were observed simultaneously from a research aircraft. The two contrail forming aircraft were 1) a Boeing B707-307C built in 1968 and equipped with four jet engines of type PW JT3D-3B with bypass ratio of 1.4 and 2) an Airbus A340-300 built in 1998 with four jet engines of type CFM56-5C4 with bypass ratio of 6.8.
A contrail was observed to form during ascent first behind the A340 at 7:28:40, at flight level 33,300ft. The B707 continued to ascend nearby without a contrail (Fig. 2). About 50 s later, at altitude of about 33,700 ft, a contrail formed also behind the B707 at 7:29:30. The contrails were observed to be forming very suddenly and persisted thereafter. During descent from flight level 35,000ft, the contrails disappeared first behind the B707 and disappeared shortly thereafter behind the A340.
As documented in several photographs, an altitude range exists in which the A340 causes contrails while the B707 causes none. Figure 2 shows this fact during ascent and Fig. 3 during descent. The photographs show the contrails best during descent due to the more favorable sun and Falcon positions relative to the two other aircraft. We clearly see the four contrails forming from the four engines of the A340 while the B707 is seen flying without contrails.

Discussion

Pittsburgh is one of the major industrial cities in the United States, especially for the steel

In 1972-4, K.C. Chan et. al. tested rainwater and air particulates in Pittsburgh, PA and a rural area 80 miles southeast for various metals. and found these results.

http://journals.co-action.net/index.php/tellusa/article/viewFile/10190/11817

As you can see, aluminum levels in Pennsylvania rain 40 years ago were about 600 micrograms (0.62 ppm) and were associated with higher levels of Silicon (Si) with a Si/Al ratio about 2 which indicates crustal aluminosilicate mineral dust as the main source.

Table 1. Elemental contents in air particulates and rainwater samples

K is the centroid of the distribution as shown in Fig. 2. All values for rainwater are in ppm. Values for air particulates are in relative weight with arbitrary normalization. ΔK is the ratio of the second maximum concentration to second minimum concentration @Blurred_Trees So is thermite fireproof?

https://twitter.com/_/status/750097285443309568

@Blurred_Trees I'm addressing specific points (and you posted it 42 minutes ago :))

@Blurred_Trees Why DIDN'T the impact, explosions, and huge fires set off the thermite? Was there no thermite here? http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CmjhUYjUEAAeQdd.jpg @Blurred_Trees Of course not. I'm just pointing out the known problems with the thermite theory.

https://twitter.com/_/status/750095112512737280

@Blurred_Trees Why did the fires not set off the thermite?

2016-07-04T22:32:40+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750095007713939456

@Blurred_Trees Thermite? You mean a secret nano-thermite that is painted on and explodes violently, yet silently, with no fuse?

2016-07-04T22:31:47+00:00

@Blurred_Trees Very true.

https://twitter.com/_/status/750091975886381057

@Blurred_Trees Sorry, but you'd need to be a bit more specific. I've written thousands of posts on 9/11, so pick a claim of evidence.

https://twitter.com/_/status/750091591545528321

@Blurred_Trees No problem, and no offense, but you'd probably have more useful and constructive discussions if you were a bit more polite

https://twitter.com/_/status/750091179446841344

@Blurred_Trees So what did I get wrong about jet fuel? It can weaken steel beams can't it? Fire could conceivably intimate a collapse.

2016-07-04T22:13:10+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750090101087088640

@Blurred_Trees Can you give an example of something I got factually wrong?

2016-07-04T22:12:17+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750089879632039936

@Blurred_Trees So what about contrails lasting more than a minute. Was that information helpful to you?

2016-07-04T22:10:46+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750089497908432896

@Blurred_Trees No? So you'd refuse to engage with people who disagree with you? Or just punch them?

2016-07-04T22:09:53+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750089274691768320

2016-07-04T22:07:43+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750088727964164096

@Blurred_Trees Yes, but it's a discussion with engineers from AE911. Tony Szamboti is their main engineering guy.

https://twitter.com/_/status/750088232902094848

@Blurred_Trees I DO look into it. For example, here's a very detailed discussion I had with AE911 folk 3 years ago.

@Blurred_Trees No, I'll watch any SPECIFIC claims of evidence, not a two hour video. Do the individual points not stand up to scrutiny?

2016-07-04T22:03:11+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750087588497666048

@Blurred_Trees If an explosion can throw a 20 ton girder 500 feet, how far would it throw a 5 pound steel plate? Why didn't it?

2016-07-04T22:02:22+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750087380992823297

@Blurred_Trees Why would only huge chunks fly into other buildings? Why were there no small chunks found miles away? Physically impossible?

2016-07-04T22:01:37+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750087194686074880

@Blurred_Trees Okay, if it DID collapse, then what would that look like? I take it you are familiar with the wide span construction?

2016-07-04T21:59:37+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750086688093802496

@Blurred_Trees The building is collapsing, the floors are being smashed together just before the exterior walls fully fail.

2016-07-04T21:35:48+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750080694475378689

@Blurred_Trees and fire CAN make steel beams fail. And falling buildings make a lot of dust. So what more do you need?

2016-07-04T21:35:13+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750080548773568512

https://twitter.com/_/status/750079900485230592

@Blurred_Trees How does fire make things hot? How much "lava" did you see? There's no evidence of molten steel, probably just aluminum.

2016-07-04T21:31:42+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750079664446541824

https://twitter.com/_/status/750079398196289536

@Blurred_Trees Look at the debris pile. Most of the girders were undamaged, failed only at the connections. Why would that be?

2016-07-04T21:30:03+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750079248715558912

@Blurred_Trees When ANY building collapses there's going to be a lot of dust, regardless of how it happens. The steel was mostly undamaged.

2016-07-04T21:29:00+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750078985392926720

2016-07-04T21:26:03+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750078242996957184

@Blurred_Trees Obviously you'd agree that fire can make steel beams fail. So why can't a big fire make a building collapse?

2016-07-04T21:25:26+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/750078085458907136

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/Cmi9fkUUEAAImUj.jpg

11.4 Glaciation and Distortion

Except for trails in wingtip vortex cores most contrails are formed at temperatures below −40°C (see 11.2.iv) and therefore the particles freeze almost immediately. Mock suns are often very bright in contrails, and parts of circumzenithal arcs have been observed in them.

Once glaciated the trails may last for many hours, and may be spread out by wind shear into almost horizontal sheets. The most extensive sheets are formed from trails which originally produced an extensive vertical curtain of cloud or very elongated blobs.

The trails persist in air that is saturated for ice and not for water, and such air is often found ahead of warm fronts. Often contrails can extend the forward edge of warm front cirrus by many tens of miles.

11.4.1 These contrails are of various ages and are seen almost vertically overhead about three hours after sunrise in July at Wimbledon. The newest trail is the one from the top left corner: the oldest is the horizontal one, which has a delicate structure for which there is no obvious explanation.

11.4.2 This trail was seen above the sunset over Bognor Regis in July. The blobs were extended over about a mile horizontally and in the shear layer billows can be seen.

Vapour trail

AEROLOGY

WRITTEN BY:
The Editors of Encyclopædia Britannica

Alternate Titles: condensation trail, contrail

Vapour trail, also called Condensation Trail, or Contrail, streamer of cloud sometimes observed behind an airplane flying in clear, cold, humid air. It forms upon condensation of the water vapour produced by the combustion of fuel in the airplane engines. When the ambient relative humidity is high, the resulting ice-crystal plume may last for several hours. The trail may be distorted by the winds, and sometimes it spreads outwards to form a layer of cirrus cloud. On rare occasions, when the air is nearly saturated with water vapour, air circulation at the wing tips of an airplane may cause sufficient pressure and temperature reductions to cause cloud streamers to form.

froze. When the ambient relative humidity is high, the resulting ice-crystal plume may last for several hours. The trail may be distorted by the winds, and sometimes the ice-crystal cloud spreads outwards to form a layer of cirrus. On rare occasions, when the air is nearly saturated with water vapour, air circulation at the wing tips of an airplane may cause sufficient pressure and temperature reductions to cause cloud streamers to form.

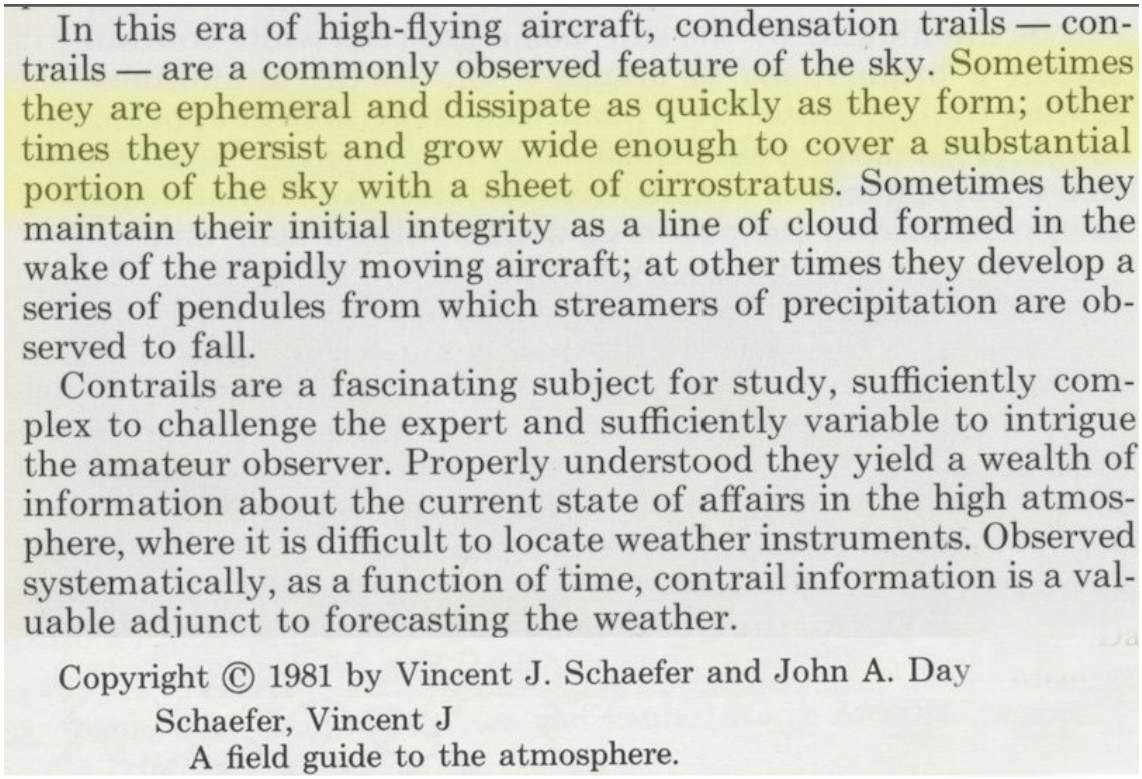
@Blurred_Trees @WTFRLY For example:

https://www.metabunk.org/sk/1981_Peterson_Field_Guide_to_Clouds._Contrails.pdf

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/Cmi1EpSUEAAoOGu.jpg



In this era of high-flying aircraft, condensation trails — contrails — are a commonly observed feature of the sky. Sometimes they are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus. Sometimes they maintain their initial integrity as a line of cloud formed in the wake of the rapidly moving aircraft; at other times they develop a series of pendules from which streamers of precipitation are observed to fall.

@McDegenGrill Not based on the videos no. And even the eyewitness accounts from Fravor, Day, Dietrich, etc, are not admitted by the government as proving some hyper-g craft.
Nor do they admit they have sensor data that proves this.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1532089065574567936
@McDegenGrill Not ones that "do extraordinary things", no.

They have said few sightings APPEAR to be unusual, but they might be observer misperception, sensor errors, or spoofing. More study needed.

@HRFaulkner @TheUfoJoe @sSamsquantch @JeremyCorbell @esaagar Using that logic then anything could be anything else.

2022-06-01T19:49:52+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1532087053097308163
@gfodor I'm referring specifically to the propaganda technique of repeating an extraordinary claim often enough that it becomes, for some, accepted fact. Is there a better term?

2022-06-01T19:45:41+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1532085999219552256
@TheUfoJoe @sSamsquantch @JeremyCorbell @esaagar I was referring to the triangle shape being bokeh. That's 100% proven to be true. The extra stars in the longer video confirm it. We don't know if it's a plane or a drone behind it, but that's irrelevant.

The point is @JeremyCorbell is still saying they were flying pyramids.

2022-06-01T19:43:42+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1532085500571332609
Now, most people who repeat this are not actually lying, because they think it's true, because they have been told that it is true. So for many, it's a big misunderstanding, but they are still essentially repeating a falsehood that corrupts the conversation.

2022-06-01T19:41:49+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1532085024710721537
The "Big Lie" of UFOlogy is the claim that the government has admitted there are unknown craft flying around out airspace that do extraordinary things.

I can't tell, is this dry sarcasm? Even in what you wrote he just says "As the person who lobbied..."

lobbied != actions by Congress

Mick West @MickWest · Sep 23, 2021

Congress didn't "take action" any more than they "take action" on any little earmark that finds its way into a bill. This one didn't even have any funding associated with it. Just "make a report".

@Athancolorado They are just contrails. Probably around 30,000 feet. One is at an altitude where there was a more humid region of the atmosphere (like a cloud, but invisible)

When contrails are partially transparent, it's nearly impossible to tell if one is above or below

@Ed_2da_Werd It's a puzzle. A slide claims there are optical interference fringes in a frame of the Gimbal video.

But are there? I'm just wondering how obvious it is to other people.

@EmpireStoic There is none. The object enters the frame from the right side, not from in the water.

Nobody noticed it, and you'd think a hypersonic craft flying out of the water between swimmers would be the type of thing people noticed.

Notice the fly looks like a black blob with a varying white blob (the wings)

UFO close up. This resembles something we often see - an insect, maybe just a common housefly.

SYMONS'S RAINFALL CIRCULAR.

SNOW ROLLERS.

In last month's circular a description of these singular formations was promised, and in fulfilment thereof, the following statement has been drawn up from several communications forwarded by the observer (Rev. C. Clouston), who first drew attention to them in 1847, by a note in the Philosophical Magazine. They have hitherto only been observed in the vicinity of Sandwick Manse, and even there only on four occasions, viz.—Feb. 11, 1847, March 5, 1862, Feb. 18, and (a few) March 26, 1865,—a combination of the following conditions being necessary: (1) a recent fall of loose snow-flakes in calm weather; (2) temperature near 32° to give adhesion to the snow without thawing it; (3) a good brisk wind rising after the fall. Under these conditions, the snow ripples up, as it were, and the ripples breaking into sections, the wind rolls each in its own path, until, just like a schoolboy's snow-ball, they rapidly increase in size, and have been found 3½ feet long, and 7 feet in circumference; while others are not as many inches. "On examination, they are all found to be cylindrical, like hollow-fluted rollers, or ladies' swandown muffs, of which the smaller ones much remind me, from their lightness and purity. The centre is not quite hollow, but in all there is a deep conical cavity at each end, and in many there is a small opening through which one can see." Their density seems to be about one-ninth that of water, as one 3 feet long, and 6½ feet in circumference weighed 64lbs. Their number is variable; in 1847, 133 were counted in one acre, and nearly 400 acres were covered with them. It may be well to add that the manse stands near the top of a very gentle slope, rising from the sea, whence it is distant about two miles; the coast which is generally fringed with cliffs of considerable height, drops to, and even below the level of the sea, west of the manse, and allows the sea to form an arm, running nearly up to the manse grounds. There is no high ground in the neighbourhood, but gentle undulations in all directions. I cannot help thinking that the briny breeze which thwarts all attempts at growth on the part of trees in the open country, produces these beautiful snow rollers, though the relative influence of the wind and the salt remains to be investigated.

hand, thus indicating but slight packing of the snow in the wind rollers (Fig. 4).

From the conditions observed in this instance, it would appear that the flakes of a light fluffy layer of surface snow are made adhesive by a sudden rise in air temperature, while the under snow still remains cold and dry, and the particles of damp surface snow are enabled to adhere to each other, but not to the dry under snow. A strong wind may then push over little prominences or projections of the surface snow, and start them rolling, when of course they will continue to travel and grow until the resistances overcome the propelling power of the wind.

Miss Ione A. Jillson subsequently reported having once witnessed the formation of snow rollers, and at the suggestion of the writer contributes the following account. As its author appears to be habitually careful and painstaking in both observation and statement, the description is thought to be of value:—

"During the winter of 1895 I watched the formation and progress of so-called snow rollers. The temperature was probably a trifle above the freezing point, following a snow-storm characterised by very large light flakes. For the most part the wind seemed to sweep downward and get under a slightly projecting mass of snow, and set it in motion. As the roll grew in size the speed, at first very rapid, slackened, until the mass became too compact and heavy to be moved farther. Sometimes a triangular-shaped "card" of snow, often 3 or 4 ins. across the base, would rise and fall several times before the wind gained sufficient purchase to turn the point over and start the roller. This card looked very much like the corner of a piece of paper as it rises and falls with the wind

where the temperatures range from −30°C to −65°C (−22°F to −85°F). This is the region of the high troposphere or the low stratosphere. It takes very little water at these temperatures to produce a condition of saturation or supersaturation. Between these extremes lie all the possibilities for the many variations in pattern that occur. Moisture at high elevations often advances through the sky in tongues or uneven patterns, both large and small. Thus contrails may be seen in uneven segments of growth and dissipation.

Sometimes the multiple contrails that persist will break into a series of swirled loops, with the loops joining into ovals. When these loops and connected vortices develop, they ordinarily do not last more than a minute or so. When trails last for longer periods, they may break into a series of pendules or fingers. The pendule is a form of ring vortex, indicating the presence of locally stable moist air. Sometimes pendules are pulled away into long streamers by a zone of faster moving air. The resulting shear motion may result in such an extensive cloud sheet that the sky becomes completely overcast.

Contrails are spectacular in early morning and evening, and even in the light of the full moon. When the air to the west is clear and the sun has set, a jet aircraft at 12 km (about 40,000 ft.) will still be illuminated by the sun. Sometimes the white contrail will assume a brilliant red or orange color. To the uninformed, the moving trail, produced by a plane that is invisible or appears only as a rapidly moving spot in the sky, may seem to be an out-of-this-world apparition — more than one such case has subsequently been headlined in the papers as a UFO with a fiery tail.

Under most conditions a contrail is made of ice crystals. Though it initially consists of liquid water droplets in the warm exhaust air, these soon change to ice particles in the frigid temperatures of the high atmosphere. The presence of ice is best illustrated when the contrail is located between the observer and the sun. Bright areas called parhelia (see Color Plate 11) are visible at an angle of 22° on either side of the sun. This angle can easily be checked with a built-in device possessed by every human. With arm and fingers outstretched, let the thumb obscure the sun. The little finger, stretched to the maximum, then subtends an angle of about 22°. The bright spots observed are a portion of the well-known 22° halo (see p. 158).

The jet aircraft disturbs its environment in 2 important ways. First, a jet engine consumes large quantities of fuel, and substantial amounts of water vapor, a major by-product of combustion, leave the engine as one component of the exhaust gases. Second, the rapid movement of the air over the wings and body of the aircraft generates vortices that persist for a time until their internal energy is dissipated.

The particular contrail pattern will be determined by several

interacting factors. These are: (1) the moisture content of the air, (2) the temperature of the air, (3) the moisture introduced into the air by the engines, (4) the vertical stability of the air below, at, and above the aircraft, (5) the cloud condensation and ice nuclei count when the air is warmer than −40°C (−40°F), and (6) the mixing that takes place between the environmental air and the exhaust.

At one extreme, the air through which the jet is flying might be gently sinking over a large area, and thus have a very low relative humidity. In this case, the addition of moisture might be insufficient to produce anything but a very short-lived contrail, quickly destroyed by mixing with the dry surrounding air. When a jet passes and leaves no contrails in the sky, or contrails that quickly disappear, this is a good prognosticator of fair weather.

At the other extreme, the jet flies through air that is gradually rising and becoming cool, and so may be nearly saturated. The addition of moisture from the jet exhaust may then be enough to produce saturation and consequent water drops or ice crystals. A persistent trail is an indicator of moist air, which may be the first sign of an extensive storm area moving into the region. This is particularly true when cirrus clouds are also present.

flight, or as one of the hardy souls who lives in these latitudes.

There are of course many other forms of unusual clouds. Giant convective clouds such as thunderstorms, hailstorms, tornado clouds, hurricanes, and many other organized systems, present an endless series of challenging opportunities to see, describe, or better yet photograph atmospheric phenomena. Generally the observer must be on the periphery of such clouds to have the light and the proper perspective to see them. In time, for those who become interested, experience will show that it is unwise ever to be far away from a camera!

In addition to the unusual clouds that appear in the "natural" atmosphere there are others that occur because of some sort of cataclysmic or unnatural mechanism. Examples are the clouds formed by the heat above smokestacks condensing the atmospheric moisture on a cold morning, and the clouds that form above electric generator cooling towers wherein the moisture comes from the aeration of hot water.

Nature also produces some very unusual clouds in sporadic instances. These include mixtures of water droplets, gaseous vapors, and ashy residues blown out of the earth by volcanoes, and the spectacular water droplet clouds that are emitted by geysers in places like Yellowstone Park.

In this era of high-flying aircraft, condensation trails — contrails — are a commonly observed feature of the sky. Sometimes they are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus. Sometimes they maintain their initial integrity as a line of cloud formed in the wake of the rapidly moving aircraft; at other times they develop a series of pendules from which streamers of precipitation are observed to fall.

Chapter 2 explained that a cloud forms when the moisture content of the air at a particular temperature exceeds a critical amount and that this condition can be attained in 2 ways: (1) adding water vapor to the air from an external source, or (2) cooling the air, thus reducing the amount of moisture it can hold. A second important fact that was discussed (and is illustrated in Appendix 16) is that at a given temperature, slightly more water vapor can be held over a water surface than over an ice surface.

It is easiest to consider the contrails laid down by commercial jets that commonly fly from 10 km to 13 km (32,800–42,600 ft.)

@chucksteakpt Focus on the sections that are in bold. Like this:

In this era of high-flying aircraft, condensation trails —contrails— are a commonly observed feature of the sky. Sometimes they are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus. Sometimes they maintain their initial integrity as a line of cloud formed in the wake of the rapidly moving aircraft: at other times they develop a series of pendules from which streamers of precipitation are observed to fall.

@chucksteakpt Well according to science, history, and lots of other people with different memories, it did.

@chucksteakpt But they key point here is that THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF EXTRA ALUMINUM. None. Just finding normal variations.

https://twitter.com/_/status/732631328219267073

@chucksteakpt And since aluminum is so common (billions of tons), a 0.01% increase isn't going to do anything.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/Ciq7XH6VAAEs_5d.jpg

Rev. Gilbert White, whose "Natural History of Selborne" has been so long and deservedly popular, describes such an incident as occurring in England on September 21st, 1741. At daybreak he found the stubble and clover grounds matted all over with a thick coat of cobwebs, in the meshes of which a heavy dew hung so plentifully that the whole face of the country seemed covered with two or three fishing set-nets drawn one over another. The dogs were so blinded by this deposit that they could not hunt, but lay down and scraped the encumbrances from their faces with their fore feet. "As the morning advanced," writes the author, "the sun became bright and warm, and the day turned out one of those most lovely ones which no season but autumn produces, cloudless, calm, serene, and worthy of the south of France itself. About nine, an appearance very unusual began to demand our attention—a shower of cobwebs falling from very elevated regions, and continuing without any interruption, till the close of the day. These webs were not single filmy threads, floating in the air in all directions, but perfect flakes or rags; some near an inch broad, and five or six long, which fell with a degree of velocity that showed they were considerably heavier than the atmosphere.

Material of the Shower.

DID THE CHEMTRAIL FLU KILL PRINCE AND MERLE HAGGARD?

Was Prince killed by the chemtrails he and Haggard spoke out against?

Kit Daniels - APRIL 21, 2016 2496 Comments

28.9K

The artist known as Prince has died suddenly of a mysterious illness, just like Merle Haggard, and both men previously spoke out against chemtrails many have suggested are responsible for a surge in respiratory illnesses.

Jet trails change weather

By Philip J. Hilts
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Jet trails are changing the weather of the Midwest — and possibly much of the rest of the country — creating more clouds, cooler days and warmer nights, according to weather researchers at the University of Illinois.

Cloudiness over the Midwest has been slowly increasing since the turn of the century, but beginning in the 1950s with the introduction of commercial jetliners, cloudiness and its temperature effects have increased sharply, the Illinois researchers said.

Today the Midwest has 30 fewer clear days a year than it did in 1900: 90 now compared with 120 then. This increase in cloudiness has also caused a steady narrowing of daily temperatures, so that the high and low temperature readings for a day are steadily coming closer together. The Illinois team now is working to calculate how much more rain and snow, if any, is caused by the increased cloudiness.

"The bottom line on this research is economics," said Richard Semonin, one of the leaders of the research team. "At the end of the study, we hope to calculate the economic benefit or disbenefit from reducing temperature stresses (warming the coldest nights and cooling the hottest days), and from additional rainfall. This may be having a significant impact on energy use and on agricultural production."

The effects of the cloudiness seem so far to be positive, Semonin said, but no final statement on the subject can be made until the study, financed by the National Science Foundation, is finished, which will require several years.

Cloudiness generally has two important effects. In the daytime, clouds block the sun and hold temperatures down, an important fact when air conditioners are running in the summertime. In the winter, the heat generated during the day remains longer at night because clouds prevent warm air from escaping up into the atmosphere. So less heating may be necessary at night.

In addition, many plants are damaged by temperature extremes in the summer and winter. Reduction of these extremes should benefit farmers considerably, Semonin said.

He said that his study only covered Midwestern skies, but he believes similar weather effects are

Resolution No. 5
Proposed by the Commission 12 (Radiation and Structure of the Solar Atmosphere)
Proposée par la Commission 12 (Radiation et Structure de l'Atmosphère Solaire)

On solar eclipses

During total eclipses of the Sun, important scientific observations made from the ground by professional astronomers may be hampered, or even ruined, by the vapour trails from aircraft flying in the zone of totality.

The International Astronomical Union accordingly requests the competent authorities in the countries concerned to regulate flights at the times and locations of total solar eclipses in such a way that their interference with scientific programmes be avoided.

The necessary information for each eclipse, will be provided sufficiently in advance by the relevant Working Group of IAU Commission 12 and communicated to those concerned by the General Secretary.

@TerminatorBarbi The clouds are almost entirely water. There's a minuscule amount of non-water emissions, typically as the nucleus.

https://twitter.com/_/status/714508232543174656

@Reddword @TerminatorBarbi Contrails are not cloud seeding.

https://twitter.com/_/status/714508056751517696

@Reddword @TerminatorBarbi So when you combine hydrocarbons with oxygen, what are the end products? Where does the hydrogen and oxygen go?

2016-03-27T18:28:58+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/714157277859610624

@TerminatorBarbi But it's unrelated to contrails. Exactly the same exhaust when there are no contrails. Different weather.

2016-03-27T18:28:22+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/714157128018108416

@TerminatorBarbi No, it's similar to car/truck exhaust. It contains toxins. Nobody has ever denied or ignored this.

2016-03-27T18:16:37+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/714154172640137216

@TerminatorBarbi And it's still almost entirely carbon dioxide and water. The water is what makes the contrail.

2016-03-27T18:16:01+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/714154019967488001

@TerminatorBarbi But it's unrelated to contrails. The exhaust is exactly the same regardless of if it leaves a contrail or not.

2016-03-27T18:15:30+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/714153890824921089

@TerminatorBarbi It's pretty similar to the exhaust from trucks. Cleaner burning though.

JET CONDENSATION TRAIL SHADOWS

DONALD H. LOKKE

4756 Staples Ave., Fort Worth, Tex.

Jet condensation trails are a common occurrence over most of the United States. During the years of 1955 and 1956, shadows of jet condensation trails were observed and photographed on two occasions in northeastern Kansas. The shadows were noted at noon on November 1, 1955, at Lawrence, Kans., and again prior to sunset on June 14, 1956, west of Lecompton, Kans.

The accompanying photographs record the observations of November 1, 1955, when numerous contrails were left as jet planes swept across the sky. The point of observation was located at the western edge of the University of Kansas campus in Lawrence, Kans., at approximately 38°57′30″ N., 95°15′ W. Both photographs were taken with a Leica camera with 50-mm. Elmar lens; f/9 at 1/60 sec., 35-mm. Kodachrome film.

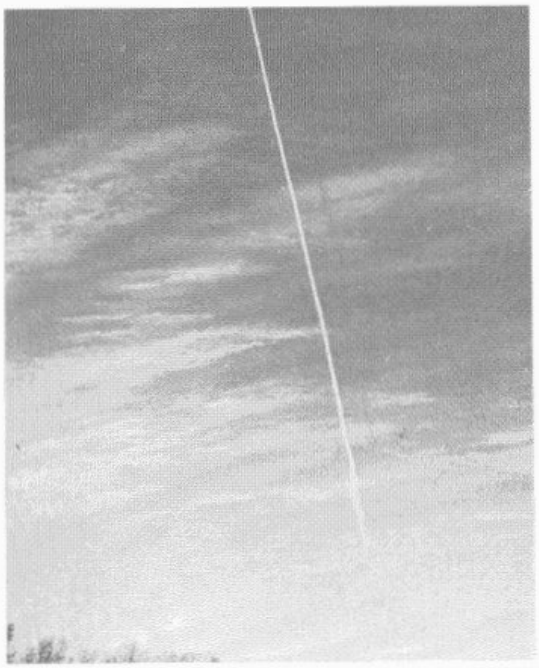

FIGURE 1.—Looking in a westerly direction from the University of Kansas campus in Lawrence, Kans., at 11:58 a.m. (estimated) CST, on November 1, 1955. Shadow is located to the right of jet condensation trail.

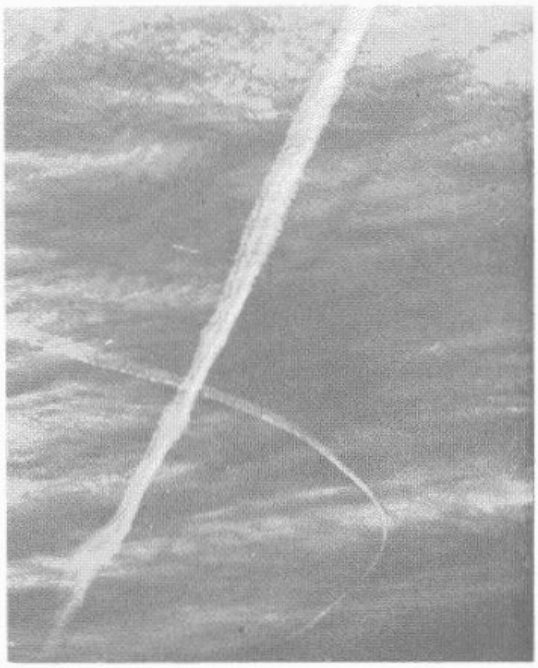

FIGURE 2.—Looking in a west-northwesterly direction from the University of Kansas campus in Lawrence, Kans., at 12:02 p.m. (estimated) CST, on November 1, 1955. Shadow is to the right of the condensation trail.

meteorological conditions and precipitate this strange cloud formation. * * * Never before had I seen a plane writing in white upon the blue slate of the sky.

Capt. W. H. Nead, One hundred and sixty-eighth Infantry, described the phenomenon [3] thus:

The Rainbow Division, on the morning of October 10, 1918, was lying in what had at one time been a wood just back of Montfaucon. The sky was clear except for a few fleecy clouds to the northwest. Three airmen came from the northwest and passed almost over our regiment, continuing on to the southeast.

Behind each machine was a trail of white, which at first sight appeared to be smoke resulting from poor engine combustion, but which upon more careful observation proved too wide to have been caused by smoke. Perhaps the strangest thing of all was the fact that when the planes reached a certain point in the sky the rainbow (sundog) colors became distinctly visible.

The explanation is not difficult. The air was almost saturated with moisture at the temperature which prevailed at that altitude. With

Airborne Observations of Contrail Effects on the Thermal Radiation Budget

> The spreading of jet contrails into extensive cirrus sheets is a familiar sight. Often, when persistent contrails exist from 25,000 to 40,000 ft, several long contrails increase in number and gradually merge into an almost solid interlaced sheet.

> Contrail development and spreading begins in the morning hours with the start of heavy jet traffic and may extend from horizon to horizon as the air traffic peaks. Fig. 1 is a typical example of midmorning contrails that occured on 17 December 1969 northwest of Boulder. By midafternoon, sky conditions had developed into those shown in Fig. 2 an almost solid contrail sheet reported to average 500 m in depth.

Photos of contrails casting shadows from 1955. Notes contrails are "a common occurrence"

http://journals.ametsoc.org/doi/abs/10.1175/1520-0493%281960%29088%3C0181%3AWNJCTS%3E2.0.CO%3B2 http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CbbdbYyUEAAz697.jpg

Jet condensation trails are a common occurrence over most of the United States. During the years of 1955 and 1956, shadows of jet condensation trails were observed and photographed on two occasions in northeastern Kansas. The shadows were noted at noon on November 1, 1955, at Lawrence, Kans., and again prior to sunset on June 14, 1956, west of Lecompton, Kans.

The accompanying photographs record the observations of November 1, 1955, when numerous contrails were left as jet planes swept across the sky. The point of observation was located at the western edge of the University of Kansas campus in Lawrence, Kans., at approximately 38°57′30″ N., 95°15′ W. Both photographs were taken with a Leica camera with 50-mm. Elmar lens; f/9 at 1/60 sec., 35-mm. Kodachrome film.

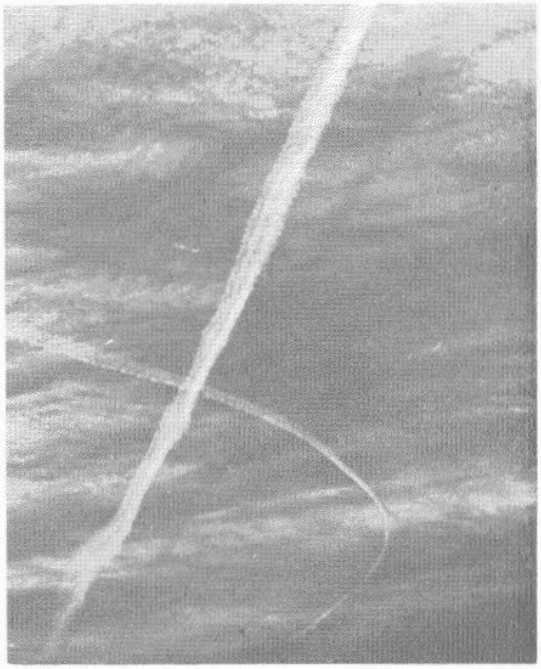

FIGURE 2.—Looking in a west-northwesterly direction from the University of Kansas campus in Lawrence, Kans., at 12:02 p.m. (estimated) CST, on November 1, 1955. Shadow is to the right of the condensation trail.

@wanderinganimal @RationalBee @Kal1_Furies But contrails can be miles long, and spread out to cover the sky. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CbHF_dYUYAAbGvX.jpg

A small wind shear can draw out a contrail into an almost horizontal sheet of cloud [no. 70]. In this picture, the right hand trail is a few minutes older than the other and has been extended more. Sometimes several trails drawn out in this way cover most of the sky with cirrus. If the trails are very persistent the clear air must be saturated for ice.

Brightly coloured parts of complex haloes are occasionally seen in persistent contrails. Parts of coronae have been seen from accompanying aircraft in the first few metres of the trails, but they disappear as the droplets freeze and grow into crystals.

70 R. S. Scorer

71 W. Tribble

Sometimes ice crystals appear along the path of an aircraft which flies through a cloud of supercooled droplets. If the crystals grow and eventually fall out of the cloud layer, they may leave a fall-streak hole [see no. 28 and p. 45] in the form of a long clear lane. In the present example [no. 71], however, the crystal trail lies below a clear lane which is probably an ordinary distrail; it was produced in a very thin wave cloud.

Millions of lives will be unnecessarily lost to soaring rates of respiratory disease and lung cancer unless the Chinese government takes determined action against rampant air pollution, according to one of the country's foremost lung experts.

Bai Chunxue, the head of respiratory medicine at Shanghai's Zhongshan Hospital, said that while smoking was still the main culprit for skyrocketing rates of lung cancer and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), the dangerously high level of air pollution was taking an increasingly devastating toll on Chinese lungs.

"If air pollution is not reduced we will have more and more respiratory disease, including lung cancer, COPD, asthma and even pneumonia and also heart disease, coronary heart disease," warned Dr Bai, who is also chairman of the Chinese Alliance against Lung Cancer and the director and founder of the Shanghai Respiratory Research Institute.

@JunkScience @eachus I think you missed the Abstract.

http://circ.ahajournals.org/content/103/23/2805.full

Methods and Results—In the Determinants of Myocardial Infarction Onset Study, we interviewed 3882 patients (1258 women) with acute myocardial infarction an average of 4 days after infarction onset. We used the case–crossover study design to compare the reported use of marijuana in the hour preceding symptoms of myocardial infarction onset to its expected frequency using self–matched control data. Of the 3882 patients, 124 (3.2%) reported smoking marijuana in the prior year, 37 within 24 hours and 9 within 1 hour of myocardial infarction symptoms. Compared with nonusers, marijuana users were more likely to be men (94% versus 67%, $P<0.001$), current cigarette smokers (68% versus 32%, $P<0.001$), and obese (43% versus 32%, $P=0.008$). They were less likely to have a history of angina (12% versus 25%, $P<0.001$) or hypertension (30% versus 44%, $P=0.002$). The risk of myocardial infarction onset was elevated 4.8 times over baseline (95% confidence interval, 2.4 to 9.5) in the 60 minutes after marijuana use. The elevated risk rapidly decreased thereafter.

Conclusions—Smoking marijuana is a rare trigger of acute myocardial infarction. Understanding the mechanism through which marijuana causes infarction may provide insight into the triggering of myocardial infarction by this and other, more common stressors.

People with heart disease face an increased risk of a serious heart attack during poor air quality days, according to a major new study presented today at the American Heart Association Scientific Session in Orlando.

The study of more than 16,000 patients by researchers at the Intermountain Medical Center Heart Institute in Salt Lake City examined patients who had suffered three types of heart attacks -- STEMI, non-STEMI, and unstable angina -- to identify which type of heart attack was more likely on days when the air was especially polluted.

For the study, researchers compared air quality measurements to the number of patients treated for heart attacks at Intermountain Healthcare hospitals in the urban areas in and around Salt Lake City between September 1993 and May 2014.

The Intermountain Medical Center Heart Institute research team identified a strong association between bad air quality days -- those with a threshold above 25 micrograms of fine particulate matter per cubic meter of air -- with a greater risk of STEMIs, the most dangerous type of heart attack.

@MikaelThalen There was rather an excessive focus on "chemtrails" in their zine though. Repeating the entire list of chemtrail claims.

5.5 The 22° halo

The 22° halo is probably the most common halo of all, occurring whole or in part many times a year every place on earth (Figure 5.5A). It appears as a thin pearly ring centered on the sun (or moon) at a distance of 22°. It has a fairly sharp reddish inner edge and a diffuse bluish outer region. Sometimes the color is hard to see and even at its best it does not rival the colors of a rainbow. The 22° halo is a few degrees wide but slightly different for each display.

This enhanced infrared image from NASA's Terra satellite shows a widespread outbreak of contrails over the southeastern United States during the morning of January 29, 2004. Satellite data are critical for studying the effects of contrails. The crisscrossing white lines are contrails that form from planes flying in different directions at different altitudes. Each contrail spreads and moves with the wind. Contrails often form over large areas during winter and spring. CREDIT: NASA

5 January 2015 - The latest provisional statistics from the Met Office confirm December has broken records both for rainfall and temperature

The month was not only the wettest December on record, but also the wettest calendar month overall since records* began in 1910, while 2015 is the sixth wettest year on record (dating back to 1910).

The UK mean temperature for 2015 is 9.2 °C, notably warm but not exceptional. The warmest year on record was set in 2014 at 9.9 °C. The UK mean temperature for December is record breaking at 7.9 °C, which is 4.1 °C above the long-term average. The previous record was 6.9 °C in 1934.

@mghent32 I'm just wondering why YOU are certain they were chemtrails, if they look and act like persistent contrails @mghent32 Right, but I'm interested how you are sure. Was there something that distinguished it from a contrail?

https://twitter.com/_/status/683399033600147458

@mghent32 It just seemed like you thought they were "Chemtrails" because they lasted a long time. But contrails can also last a long time.

@mghent32 It says that contrails can stay for hours, and spread out. So how do you know the trails you see are not those contrails.

@repo4sale The number of search results is not really indicative of the violence of immigrants. More so the spin and propaganda.

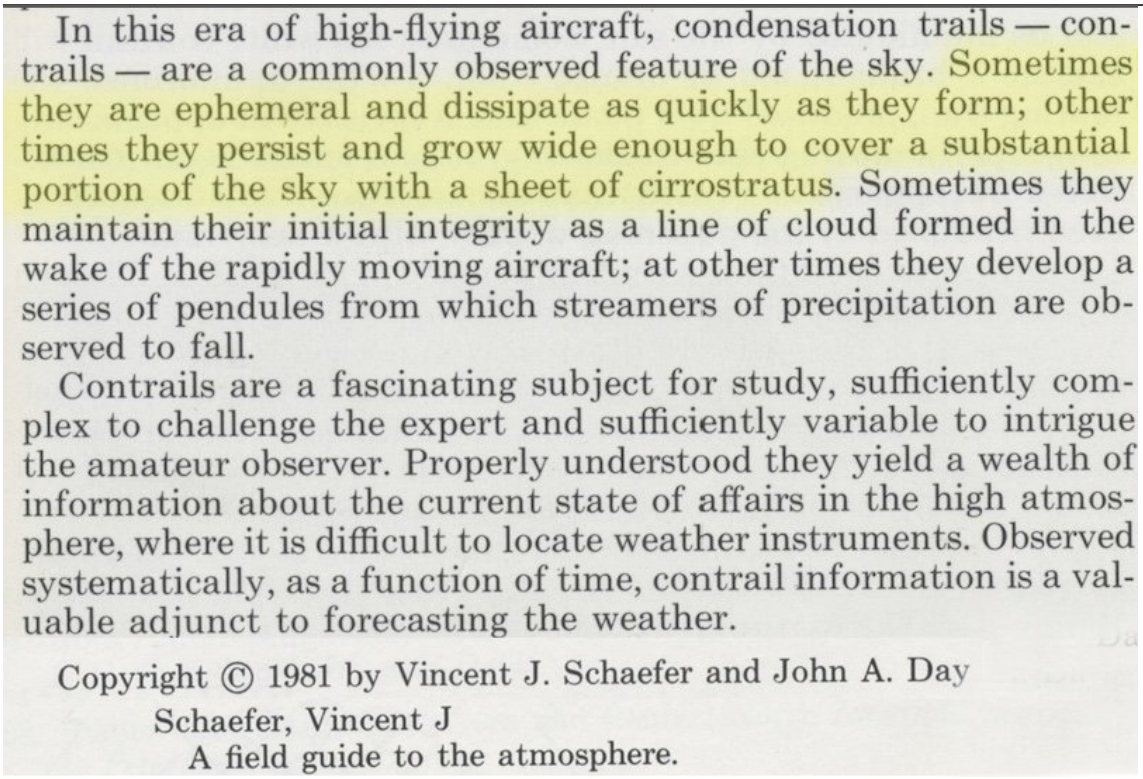
@mghent32 That's not what all the books on clouds say though. For example:
http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CXvAkyPUMAAMjOz.jpg



In this era of high-flying aircraft, condensation trails — contrails — are a commonly observed feature of the sky. Sometimes they are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus. Sometimes they maintain their initial integrity as a line of cloud formed in the wake of the rapidly moving aircraft; at other times they develop a series of pendules from which streamers of precipitation are observed to fall.

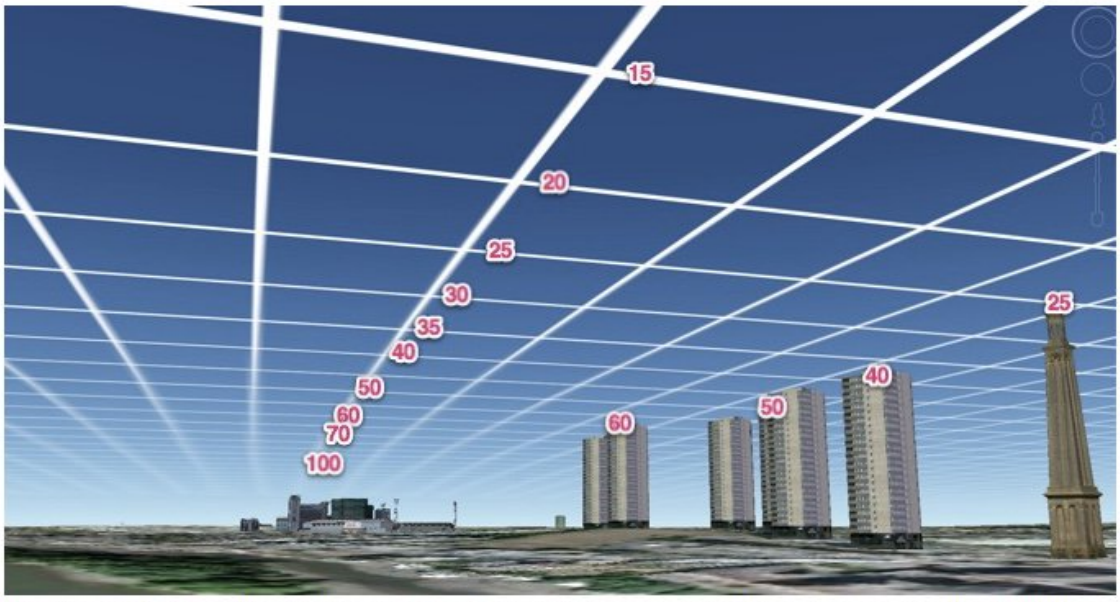
Most contrails are actually not directly overhead, more like 20+ miles away.
http://contrailscience.com/how-far-away-is-that-contrail/ @mghent32
http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CXu2cLTVAAEKSRx.jpg

Contrails, looking west from Kew Bridge over the Thames, to the West of London. It looks like the contrails are "over the city" but really they are much further away



Drawing a grid at six miles up shows just how far away. The closest would be ten miles away, the furthest over 100 miles. The number at the top of the buildings don't show the distance to the building (actually less than a mile), but show the distance to something six miles up in the sky if it appeared directly behind the top of the building.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CXbUIwcUAAEPt-8.jpg

Following the talk between the world leaders, Russian news agency ITAR-TASS reported that Russian Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev would be visiting China from December 14 to 17. The announcement does not mention terrorism cooperation, instead noting that Medvedev will discuss with Chinese officials "a wide range of issues of trade-economic, scientific-technical, investment and industrial cooperation, as well as bilateral humanitarian and cultural exchanges."

China and Russia are also set to be working on a media project, according to Russian propaganda outlet Russia Today. Yuri Shuvalov, identified as the head of the State Duma Committee for Mass Media, said the media project would launch in 2016 as part of "the year of the Russian and Chinese mass media."

Russia and China have taken significantly different approaches to the turmoil currently engulfing Syria and Iraq. Russia has taken an active military role in Syria to defend its ally Assad, claiming to be targeting the Islamic State with airstrikes, but in reality spending most of its efforts in regions of the country largely devoid of ISIS activity. While pro-Russian Pravda claimed in September that China had strengthened its presence in the Mediterranean Sea, little came of the report and there is no indication of active Chinese military operations in the region.

In this era of high-flying aircraft, condensation trails — contrails — are a commonly observed feature of the sky. Sometimes they are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus. Sometimes they maintain their initial integrity as a line of cloud formed in the wake of the rapidly moving aircraft; at other times they develop a series of pendules from which streamers of precipitation are observed to fall.

@Annthomas369Ann It looks like a pretty normal hybrid contrail to me. Like in this 1972 book http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CXBK1jMUEAASo2K.jpg

---

11.2.4 The contrail is formed about one wingspan behind the aircraft when the exhaust has mixed with sufficient air of the environment to produce saturation. The edges of the trails are ragged to begin with but further mixing evaporates these and the trail becomes smooth: this indicates that the condensation persists only in the low pressure region of the vortex cores.

Close to the aircraft it is seen that the two trails from the inner engines descend further than the outer ones, those on the right being separately visible but the outer left one being behind the inner left one. Often one complete rotation of the inner round the outer one can be seen.

In the second picture the trails appear hollow. This is because the exhaust did not enter the middle of the vortex core. The particles are too small for centrifuging to be significant.

The irregularities are intensified, and at the right end the mixing penetrates in a few places into the vortex cores and dissipates the cloud. The spacing of the loops must be determined by the distance apart of the vortices: irregularities of all wavelengths are unstable, but two loops very close together merge into one, while new loops can appear between those that are rather far apart. The interval between the first and last pictures is 90 sec.

Motion identical with that shown here has been observed in smoke trails emitted at the wing tips of a Comet aircraft at 3,000 metres which is far below the normal altitude for contrails.

11.2.5 The condensation outside the vortex cores persisted in the trail of the first aircraft to pass, but not in the trail of the second. It seems probable, therefore, that the first trail was frozen as a result of being at an environmental temperature near to or below −40°C. (See 11.4.)

These pictures were taken looking vertically upwards over a period of about three minutes, and because the aircraft was on a turn the downwash was inclined outwards. The effect is to give a view rather like the side view of a straight trail (see 11.2.3, 11.2.8). Where the vortices are closest together they have penetrated farthest, and the blobs correspond to the places where the mixing has penetrated into the vortex cores. In the lowest picture the linear clouds are composed of the detrained accompanying fluid.

@randomlydelibe1 The A10 stays in the exact same position on the screen.

Put your finger on it. Does it move?

Now, the CAMERA is moving, which is why the frame moves around. But the A10 is fixed. So the bird moves like that relative to the A10

This type of "enhancement" is total bullshit.

You've got basically one grey pixel there. You can't draw out detail from a pixel. You can't AI upscale a pixel. You can't make a perfect circle around a square pixel and say it matches anything. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/FTyP3KlUcAEZtPW.jpg

This variation also causes the formation of contrails to vary, as they rely on the humidity at altitude.

When UFO video is "released" by media outlets and youtube channels, they often add a logo or watermark, and re-encode it. This gradually degraded the quality and hinders independent analysis.

So why do it? Why not just release the original file?

data are given in Figs. 8 and 9. The upper passes in these cross sections were within 100 m of the top of the contrail core and the estimated IWC isopleths should be reasonably good. The lower levels are less certain.

The size distributions in regions of high IWC are similar in appearance to those in low IWC, the change in IWC following the change in concentration very closely and not strongly influenced by crystal size (see Figs. 8 and 9). Many of the distributions in these passes were nearly closed, indicating that large numbers of smaller crystals were not present. Other distributions are characterized by exponentially increasing concentration with decreasing size and presumably significant that there is a limited supply of ice crystals, and as growth proceeds the larger crystals fall out leaving smaller crystals to grow until the entire supply is exhausted. Both cross sections show the highest IWC in the region of the lowest passes which is probably the result of continued growth during fallout. The final pass in the same region as the upper pass in cross section A, but 12 min later (1247) revealed only a few crystals remaining at this level. The entire region rapidly decayed and completely disappeared by 1300.

Since the contrail core was a fairly continuous segment, computations of total ice per meter of flight path should be suitable for comparison with the exhausted water from the aircraft. Only the region between the passes was integrated. The values computed were 4.12×10^4 gm m^{-1} and 2.07×10^4 gm m^{-1} for cross sections A and B. There are at least four orders of magnitude more ice present in the contrail core than the Sabreliner originally exhausted! Furthermore, these values are underestimates for the following reasons:

1) The IWC above and below the pass levels wasn't added to the total ice m^{-1}.
2) The IWC in satellite patches such as that in Fig. 6 obviously arose from the contrail and once added would increase the ice m^{-1}.
3) During the course of the experiment (45 min) a continuous flux of crystals was falling out to lower levels and evaporating.
4) The spectrometer measured no IWC from crystals smaller than 75 μ.

1), 2) and 4) above are probably insufficient to raise the ice m^{-1} more than a factor of 2. However, 3) may be of considerable importance. The average terminal velocity computed for the largest crystals observed in the @JustinMikulka 99.9% of the water vapor in spreading contrails comes from the ambient air. It's not really the tiny amount of additional water vapor that's a problem, it's the contrails clouds that are triggered by the momentary local rise in humidity.

So I'd say "contrails are a big deal"

In this era of high-flying aircraft, condensation trails — contrails — are a commonly observed feature of the sky. Sometimes they are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus. Sometimes they maintain their initial integrity as a line of cloud formed in the wake of the rapidly moving aircraft; at other times they develop a series of pendules from which streamers of precipitation are observed to fall.

@SteerMark Normal, not entirely. However they do look like contrails. Is there a page on GEW that explains the difference?

@SkyWatchrs @SteerMark Isn't it? They are just contrails, and people have been seeing them for decades. So why not include them in books?

@Guitz59 @OlivierRimmel Possible slight increase in noctilucent clouds. Perhaps that is what you refer to? Normal iridescence is common.

A group tours the A380's upper deck. Unlike on a Boeing 747, the A380's upper deck runs the length of the plane although it's not as wide as the main deck. Still, it's spacious enough that "you would never know there are passengers down below," said tour guide Wolfgang Absmeier, an Airbus test pilot. APRIL 1950 129

Can We

320,000,000,000 gallons of rain followed one test of cloud-seeding—but maybe it would have rained anyway.

By Martin Mann

Photos by W. W. Morris and General Electric Co.

CAN we make it rain?

"Yes," says Dr. Irving Langmuir, Nobel-prize-winning consultant to the General Electric Research Laboratory and the Army-Navy Project Cirrus, "—provided conditions are right."

"Maybe," says Dr. F. W. Reichelderfer, chief of the U. S. Weather Bureau. "No tests so far prove to our satisfaction that rainfall has really been created by man. It might have rained anyway."

But despite this sometimes acrimonious debate over whether "seeding" a cloud with a few hunks of dry ice makes it rain, dozens of people all over the world are going ahead and doing just that.

canyon. The walls are closing in which means the power structure will utilize all available options they have to distract populations from the bigger picture (like the toxic spraying going on above their heads) and to galvanize public support for increased government control. The "terrorist attack" card was to be expected and now we have it in France. The power structure chess pieces are being put into place. As we brace for impact on many fronts, we should all continue to sound the alarm to the best of our ability given our individual circumstances. If we combine our efforts, we could still change the flavor of what we face. We may still be able to salvage what is left of the Earth's live support systems, but only if we all pull together by being active, committed, and effective in the fight for the greater good. Below is the latest installment of Global Alert News.

The ballooning habit of spiders gives a complete explanation of a natural phenomenon which has attracted the attention of men from an early period, and which has been variously alluded to in prose and poetical writings, viz., Showers of Gossamer.

FIG. 280. A flocculent thread of gossamer, with small flies entangled.

Gossamer Showers.

One who walks the open fields in the latter part of September or in the soft bright days of October, which is the most delightful period of our American year, will notice great quantities of spider silk trailing and floating from the stalks of weeds and grasses, and indeed from all elevated objects. In the early morning, when the dew deposited upon these filaments betrays their presence, one will be surprised at the vast amount visible. Further on in the day he will observe quantities of this threaded spinningwork sailing through the air. (Fig. 280.) A great excess of these floating tufts and filaments constitutes what is commonly known as a gossamer shower. Doubtless Pliny alluded to such a phenomenon in the statement which he makes[2] that "in the year that L. Paulus and C. Marcellus were consuls it rained wool about the castle Carissa, near to which, a year after, T. Annius Milo was slain."

During flight tests in 1994, the cabin interior of the prototype 777 was filled with what at first glance looked like aluminum beer kegs. In fact, these 55-gallon barrels contained water. The contents of two dozen barrels in the forward cabin and a like number of barrels in the aft section were pumped back and forth to simulate shifts in center of gravity that would result from passengers moving about. The top photo shows the cabin as it is when the 777 is delivered.

The Blame-America's-Ex-President-First Crowd

Six months after 9/11, the Gallup Poll of Islamic Countries found that an overwhelming majority of those surveyed believed the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon had not been the work of Arabs. Well-educated Egyptians and Saudis believed that the Israelis were behind the murder of three thousand innocents on 9/11, in large part because of articles in their countries' official state newspapers. One of the widely disseminated stories was that no Jews died in the collapse of the Trade Towers because they had received calls telling them not to go to work that day.

To tell you the truth, I got the Jew call. I had an office in the Trade Center where I used to do most of my writing. The call came from former New York mayor Ed Koch. "Al," he told me, "don't go to work on the twenty-third day of Elul."

Actually, I watched the events of that awful day from Minneapolis, where I was visiting my mom. Mom's in a nursing home, so I was staying at a hotel. That morning, as I grabbed some coffee, I noticed people huddled around a TV. A plane had hit the World Trade Center. Must have been a commuter plane. Maybe the pilot had a heart attack or something. Then the second plane hit. It was sickening. Then came the Pentagon. We were under attack.

Somehow, I got through to my wife in Manhattan. She was fine, at home on the Upper West Side, about five miles north of the Trade Center. My son was at school on the Upper East Side. My daughter was away at college. As I watched the first tower collapse, I was stunned. But I still couldn't register the magnitude of what was happening, even as the second one went down.

I spent the rest of the day at the nursing home watching TV

@Bingchemtrails How long can you stand on one leg? There's no "max" time there either, but you can give a reasonable range. Seconds to hours @Bingchemtrails I'm not talking about geoengineering. I'm talking about contrails. You said they don't persist. I'm explaining that they do.

@Bingchemtrails But explain how they physically differ after formation. How is a contrail different to a cirrus cloud?

2015-10-18T20:57:34+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/655850228482838528
@Bingchemtrails There are different type of clouds. They do not all appear at the same time.

@Bingchemtrails No, I'm saying there is no hard limit to how long they last, just a general range from minutes to hours.

@Bingchemtrails Contrails are clouds. So in almost any question you can just substitute the word "cloud" for "contrail, then google that.

2015-10-18T20:54:47+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/655849530366164992

@Bingchemtrails No more than a cloud can. What's the "max time" a cloud can last. It's a silly question.

aircraft can fly at a wide range of altitudes, it is not possible to identify the cloud height from visual clues alone. Contrails occur quite commonly, but they are often hidden by lower clouds.

Season: All year.

Range: All locations.

Variations: A newly formed contrail (33) is generally thinner and smaller than an older one (34). If the air is very dry, the contrail may be exceptionally thin. When the air at the aircraft's level is near saturation, a contrail may last a long time (34). When they start to become diffuse, contrails can spread to form a major cloud cover (34).

If a contrail vanishes rapidly, the air is dry and fair weather is likely to continue. Contrails can last for hours, however, and may even trigger the formation of more extensive natural cirrus clouds.

A small wind shear can draw out a contrail into an almost horizontal sheet of cloud [no. 70]. In this picture, the right hand trail is a few minutes older than the other and has been extended more. Sometimes several trails drawn out in this way cover most of the sky with cirrus. If the trails are very persistent the clear air must be saturated for ice.

Brightly coloured parts of complex haloes are occasionally seen in persistent contrails. Parts of coronae have been seen from accompanying aircraft in the first few metres of the trails, but they disappear as the droplets freeze and grow into crystals.

@Bingchemtrails For example, this book disagrees with you. So what are you basing your belief on? http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CRntPRfUEAAjTHi.jpg

A word may be added about the clouds formed, usually at great heights, by aeroplanes, now known by the name of condensation trails (Fig. 42). These are truly cloud formations and not like the smoke trails that were once used for sky-writing advertisements.

When warm damp air is mixed with cold damp air some of the moisture will condense, and if the air is sufficiently damp and the difference of temperature sufficiently great the condensation will be sufficient to form visible cloud. The exhaust from an aeroplane engine contains a good deal of moisture, and if the air into which it is streaming is sufficiently cold and damp a condensation trail will be formed. Sometimes the trails are very slight and short lived, sometimes they are very persistent. Naturally the latter is the case when the cold air is already practically saturated with moisture, as it is when there are traces of natural cloud at the level at which the condensation trails are formed.

Cold Due To 'Weather Tampering': Gregory

Social activist Dick Gregory has suggested that someone is tampering with the weather.

In a letter to President Carter, Gregory said, "I cannot help but to consider the possibilities of weather modification when I observe the highly unusual and disastrous weather conditions this country is now experiencing. The drought in California, the freezing temperatures in Florida, and the sub-zero weather throughout the Midwest has already had an effect on the quality, quantity, and cost of fresh fruits and vegetables.

pass in the same region as the upper pass in cross section A, but 12 min later (1247) revealed only a few crystals remaining at this level. The entire region rapidly decayed and completely disappeared by 1300.

Since the contrail core was a fairly continuous segment, computations of total ice per meter of flight path should be suitable for comparison with the exhausted water from the aircraft. Only the region between the passes was integrated. The values computed were 4.12×10^4 gm m^{-1} and 2.07×10^4 gm m^{-1} for cross sections A and B. There are at least four orders of magnitude more ice present in the contrail core than the Sabreliner originally exhausted! Furthermore, these values are underestimates for the following reasons:

1) The IWC above and below the pass levels wasn't added to the total ice m^{-1}.
2) The IWC in satellite patches such as that in Fig. 6 obviously arose from the contrail and once added would increase the ice m^{-1}.
3) During the course of the experiment (45 min) a continuous flux of crystals was falling out to lower levels and evaporating.
4) The spectrometer measured no IWC from crystals smaller than 75 [illegible]

An "atmospheric brown cloud" of manmade aerosols produced by agricultural (marked in red) and other fires may reduce monsoon-related rainfall and crop yields in central India. Credit: Jesse Allen, Earth Observatory

On the Indian subcontinent, the widespread burning of firewood, coal, agricultural waste, and biomass for energy disperses black carbon particulates into the atmosphere. These manmade aerosols not only pollute the air, but also form an "atmospheric brown cloud" that's disrupting the local climate.

A case in point is the South Asian summer monsoon, a complex system of winds that typically bring rain from the tropical Indian Ocean to most of the region, especially in the southwest and northeast. The aerosols, which block solar radiation and cool the ground before they get swept away by rain, have altered the monsoon considerably.

In previous investigations of the local climate impact of aerosols present in the atmosphere during the onset of the summer monsoon, MIT researchers found that rainfall increased in the month prior to the monsoon (June) and decreased during the monsoon season (July and August). Now, in a study published in the Journal of Climate, they have determined how aerosols emitted both before and during the monsoon are changing precipitation patterns.

"Aerosols can influence the supply of moisture, and a small perturbation can play a big role," says study co-author Chien Wang, a senior research scientist at MIT's Center for Global Change Science and in the Department of Earth, Atmospheric and Planetary Sciences. "Pre-monsoonal aerosols push rainfall to the northwest, drying out central India. Aerosols emitted during the monsoon season send the moisture supply in a different direction, and dry out most of the subcontinent."

The most dramatic consequences are enhanced flooding in the pre-monsoon season in the normally dry northwest regions of India and in Pakistan, and reduced agricultural output in central India, which now gets far less rainfall than usual during the monsoon season.

The study produced its findings by running a global climate model to simulate the impacts of aerosols emitted before and during the monsoon season in all but the northeast region of India, which is not well-represented in the model. The effects of pre-monsoonal aerosols—increased rainfall in the northwest and decreased rainfall elsewhere, particularly in central India—persist during the monsoon, further reducing soil moisture in central India. Aerosols emitted during the monsoon lower rainfall totals not only in central India, but across the country. When aerosol emissions are simulated throughout both periods, impacts during the monsoonal period are similar to those resulting from monsoonal aerosols only.

Vapor Trails Get Many Excited

Vapor trails formed by condensation of aircraft engines in cold or freezing temperatures put Peninsula residents in a tizzy late yesterday afternoon.

Ordinarily white, the vapor trails were scarlet and gold from the setting sun.

Police departments from San Jose to South San Francisco were flooded with calls between 5:15 and 5:25 with reports ranging from "a burning plane" and "meteors" to "flying saucers." However, it was only a B-50 bomber flying at 35,000.

II.6.3 International Cloud Atlas, World Meteorological Organisation, 1975

Condensation trails (contrails)

Contrails are clouds which form in the wake of an aircraft when the atmosphere at flying level is sufficiently cold and humid. When just formed, they have the appearance of brilliant white streaks; soon however they show pendant swellings like inverted mushrooms. Often they are short-lived, but especially when Cirrus or Cirrostratus is present, they may persist for several hours. Persistent trails spread progressively, frequently forming large patches of fluffy or fibrous clouds, having the appearance of Cirrus or patches of Cirrocumulus or Cirrostratus; in fact it is sometimes impossible to distinguish old contrails from these clouds.

Contrails may produce halo phenomena with exceptionally pure colours.

where the temperatures range from −30°C to −65°C (−22°F to −85°F). This is the region of the high troposphere or the low stratosphere. It takes very little water at these temperatures to produce a condition of saturation or supersaturation. Between these extremes lie all the possibilities for the many variations in pattern that occur. Moisture at high elevations often advances through the sky in tongues or uneven patterns, both large and small. Thus contrails may be seen in uneven segments of growth and dissipation.

Sometimes the multiple contrails that persist will break into a series of swirled loops, with the loops joining into ovals. When these loops and connected vortices develop, they ordinarily do not last more than a minute or so. When trails last for longer periods, they may break into a series of pendules or fingers. The pendule is a form of ring vortex, indicating the presence of locally stable moist air. Sometimes pendules are pulled away into long streamers by a zone of faster moving air. The resulting shear motion may result in such an extensive cloud sheet that the sky becomes completely overcast.

Contrails are spectacular in early morning and evening, and even in the light of the full moon. When the air to the west is clear and the sun has set, a jet aircraft at 12 km (about 40,000 ft.) will still be illuminated by the sun. Sometimes the white contrail will assume a brilliant red or orange color. To the uninformed, the moving trail, produced by a plane that is invisible or appears only as a rapidly moving spot in the sky, may seem to be an out-of-this-world apparition — more than one such case has subsequently been headlined in the papers as a UFO with a fiery tail.

Under most conditions a contrail is made of ice crystals. Though it initially consists of liquid water droplets in the warm exhaust air, these soon change to ice particles in the frigid temperatures of the high atmosphere. The presence of ice is best illustrated when the contrail is located between the observer and the sun. Bright areas called parhelia (see Color Plate 11) are visible at an angle of 22° on either side of the sun. This angle can easily be checked with a built-in device possessed by every human. With arm and fingers outstretched, let the thumb obscure the sun. The little finger, stretched to the maximum, then subtends an angle of about 22°. The bright spots observed are a portion of the well-known 22° halo (see p. 158).

The jet aircraft disturbs its environment in 2 important ways. First, a jet engine consumes large quantities of fuel, and substantial amounts of water vapor, a major by-product of combustion, leave the engine as one component of the exhaust gases. Second, the rapid movement of the air over the wings and body of the aircraft generates vortices that persist for a time until their internal energy is dissipated.

The particular contrail pattern will be determined by several

interacting factors. These are: (1) the moisture content of the air, (2) the temperature of the air, (3) the moisture introduced into the air by the engines, (4) the vertical stability of the air below, at, and above the aircraft, (5) the cloud condensation and ice nuclei count when the air is warmer than −40°C (−40°F), and (6) the mixing that takes place between the environmental air and the exhaust.

At one extreme, the air through which the jet is flying might be gently sinking over a large area, and thus have a very low relative humidity. In this case, the addition of moisture might be insufficient to produce anything but a very short-lived contrail, quickly destroyed by mixing with the dry surrounding air. When a jet passes and leaves no contrails in the sky, or contrails that quickly disappear, this is a good prognosticator of fair weather.

At the other extreme, the jet flies through air that is gradually rising and becoming cool, and so may be nearly saturated. The addition of moisture from the jet exhaust may then be enough to produce saturation and consequent water drops or ice crystals. A persistent trail is an indicator of moist air, which may be the first sign of an extensive storm area moving into the region. This is particularly true when cirrus clouds are also present.

Pl.151 IV$_H$ Classic example of jet stream cirrus covering whole sky. Strong jet stream winds in upper portion of photograph leave behind nearly horizontal streams of falling ice crystals.

John Constable, London from Hampstead, with a double rainbow, a watercolour

Hampstead, London, England
AD 1831

A view from the artist's home

Constable and his wife Maria first moved to Hampstead in 1819, hoping the fresher air would ease her tuberculosis. In the summer of 1827, they moved to a house on Well Walk, Hampstead, that offered a splendid view over London. 'It is to my wife's heart's content', he wrote, '...our little drawing room commands a view unequalled in Europe... the dome of St Paul's in the air, realizes Michael Angelo's idea on seeing that on the Pantheon — "I will build such a thing in the sky"'.

This watercolour shows that view, with the dome of St Paul's Cathedral at the lower left, beyond the greenery of Hampstead Heath. The brooding purple sky, split by a shaft of light and a double rainbow, shows Constable's careful and specific observation of the weather. The drawing is precisely dated on the reverse 'between 6. & 7. oclock / Evening June 1831'.

Maria died in 1828. Constable, whose ideas about symbolism in nature were constantly changing, occasionally considered a rainbow to be a symbol of resurrection, a thought that may have been comforting as he contemplated his late wife's favourite view.

When just formed, they have the appearance of brilliant white streaks; soon however they show pendant swellings like inverted mushrooms. Often they are short-lived, but especially when Cirrus or Cirrostratus is present, they may persist for several hours. Persistent trails spread progressively, frequently forming large patches of fluffy or fibrous clouds, having the appearance of Cirrus or patches of Cirrocumulus or Cirrostratus; in fact it is sometimes impossible to distinguish old contrails from these clouds.

Contrails may produce halo phenomena with exceptionally pure colours.

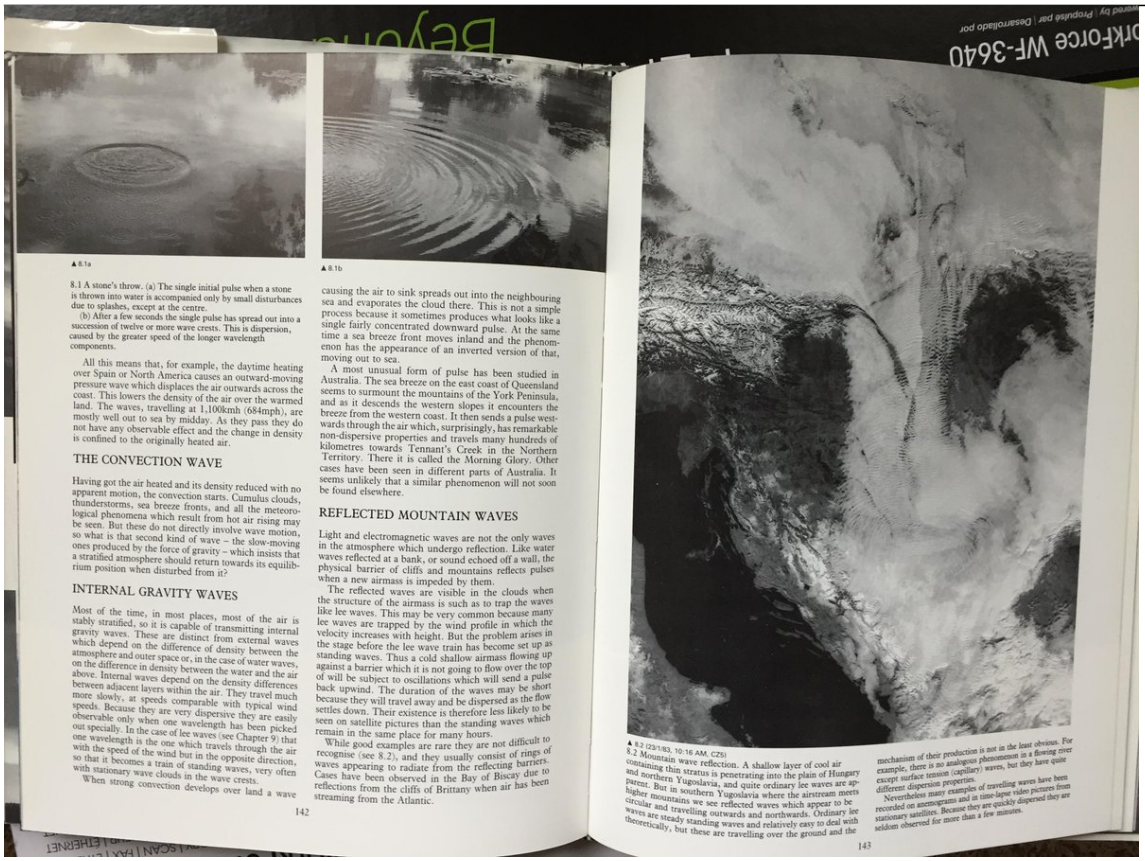
@SteerMark Heres some from 32 years ago. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CPr2UjdUwAAq5lL.jpg



8.1 A stone's throw. (a) The single initial pulse when a stone is thrown into water is accompanied only by small disturbances due to splashes, except at the centre.
(b) After a few seconds the single pulse has spread out into a succession of twelve or more wave crests. This is dispersion, caused by the greater speed of the longer wavelength components.

All this means that, for example, the daytime heating over Spain or North America causes an outward-moving pressure wave which displaces the air outwards across the coast. This lowers the density of the air over the warmed land. The waves, travelling at 1,100kmh (684mph), are mostly well out to sea by midday. As they pass they do not have any observable effect and the change in density is confined to the originally heated air.

THE CONVECTION WAVE

Having got the air heated and its density reduced with no apparent motion, the convection starts. Cumulus clouds, thunderstorms, sea breeze fronts, and all the meteorological phenomena which result from hot air rising may be seen. But these do not directly involve wave motion, so what is that second kind of wave – the slow-moving ones produced by the force of gravity – which insists that a stratified atmosphere should return towards its equilibrium position when disturbed from it?

INTERNAL GRAVITY WAVES

Most of the time, in most places, most of the air is stably stratified, so it is capable of transmitting internal gravity waves. These are distinct from external waves which depend on the difference of density between the atmosphere and outer space or, in the case of water waves, on the difference in density between the water and the air above. Internal waves depend on the density differences between adjacent layers within the air. They travel much more slowly, at speeds comparable with typical wind speeds. Because they are very dispersive they are easily observable only when one wavelength has been picked out specially. In the case of lee waves (see Chapter 9) that one wavelength is the one which travels through the air with the speed of the wind but in the opposite direction, so that it becomes a train of standing waves, very often with stationary wave clouds in the wave crests.
When strong convection develops over land a wave causing the air to sink spreads out into the neighbouring sea and evaporates the cloud there. This is not a simple process because it sometimes produces what looks like a single fairly concentrated downward pulse. At the same time a sea breeze front moves inland and the phenomenon has the appearance of an inverted version of that, moving out to sea.
A most unusual form of pulse has been studied in Australia. The sea breeze on the east coast of Queensland seems to surmount the mountains of the York Peninsula, and as it descends the western slopes it encounters the breeze from the western coast. It then sends a pulse westwards through the air which, surprisingly, has remarkable non-dispersive properties and travels many hundreds of kilometres towards Tennant's Creek in the Northern Territory. There it is called the Morning Glory. Other cases have been seen in different parts of Australia. It seems unlikely that a similar phenomenon will not soon be found elsewhere.

REFLECTED MOUNTAIN WAVES

Light and electromagnetic waves are not the only waves in the atmosphere which undergo reflection. Like water waves reflected at a bank, or sound echoed off a wall, the physical barrier of cliffs and mountains reflects pulses when a new airmass is impeded by them.
The reflected waves are visible in the clouds when the structure of the airmass is such as to trap the waves like lee waves. This may be very common because many lee waves are trapped by the wind profile in which the velocity increases with height. But the problem arises in the stage before the lee wave train has become set up as standing waves. Thus a cold shallow airmass flowing up against a barrier which it is not going to flow over the top of will be subject to oscillations which will send a pulse back upwind. The duration of the waves may be short because they will travel away and be dispersed as the flow settles down. Their existence is therefore less likely to be seen on satellite pictures than the standing waves which remain in the same place for many hours.
While good examples are rare they are not difficult to recognise (see 8.2), and they usually consist of rings of waves appearing to radiate from the reflecting barriers. Cases have been observed in the Bay of Biscay due to reflections from the cliffs of Brittany when air has been streaming from the Atlantic.

▲ 8.2 (23/1/83, 10:16 AM, CZ5)
8.2 Mountain wave reflection. A shallow layer of cool air containing thin stratus is penetrating into the plain of Hungary and northern Yugoslavia, and quite ordinary lee waves are apparent. But in southern Yugoslavia where the airstream meets higher mountains we see reflected waves which appear to be circular and travelling outwards and northwards. Ordinary lee waves are steady standing waves and relatively easy to deal with theoretically, but these are travelling over the ground and the mechanism of their production is not in the least obvious. For example, there is no analogous phenomenon in a flowing river except surface tension (capillary) waves, but they have quite different dispersion properties.

@Lnnie I think what you are seeing are just contrails, as described in this 1981 book: http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CPIAcSOU8AAZM-j.jpg

In this era of high-flying aircraft, condensation trails — contrails — are a commonly observed feature of the sky. Sometimes they are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus. Sometimes they maintain their initial integrity as a line of cloud formed in the wake of the rapidly moving aircraft; at other times they develop a series of pendules from which streamers of precipitation are observed to fall.

Barometric and thermometric measurements cannot lead to any result; for we neither know the laws of the decrease of temperature at a great height, nor the nature of the aërial particles, subjected at the same time to a feeble pressure and a very great degree of cold. All, therefore, that has been said respecting the height of the atmospheres is still subject to doubt; but we may affirm that, at between fifteen and twenty kilometres above the surface of the earth, the density of the atmosphere is almost nothing (vide Note G).

CREPUSCULAR RAYS.—When a cloud intercepts the light of a part of the atmosphere, it projects a shade that obscures a part of the sky. In the fine days of summer, if a few cumuli are floating in the sky, we may follow the shade they cast to a great distance. The converse phenomenon is much more common. Indeed, when a great portion of the sky is covered with clouds, especially by cumulo-stratus, interrupted by light spots, then the sun shines through, and the air, the vesicular vapour, dust, and other bodies, floating in the atmosphere, seem rays with various degrees of luminosity. If the sun is not very high above the horizon, these rays come from the sun; if, on the contrary, it is about to set, they rise in the atmosphere under the form of arcs of great circles, which would cut each other in a point situated below the horizon, and on the right line, that joins the centre of the sun and the eye of the observer. These rays are parallel to each other; and their apparent curvature, as well as their divergence in the neighbourhood of the zenith, are merely a consequence of the effects of perspective; the more distant they are from us, the less does their deviation seem, because the visual angle becomes less: it is a similar illusion to that which we experience in an avenue bordered by two parallel rows of trees, which yet seem to approach at the farther end.*

It is commonly said that crepuscular rays announce rain, an opinion which is not devoid of reason. This phenomenon occurs for the most part when the sun is near the horizon; but, on fine days, the clouds have there disap-

* Readers, who are interested in this subject, will find, in the Annales de Chimie et de Physique, t. lxx. p. 122, a memoir by T. NECKER DE SAUSSURE, in which this philosopher treats in detail the phenomena of crepuscular rays, and of the second rose colouring of the snowy peaks of Switzerland. His explanation of crepuscular rays is the same as that of M. KAEMTZ; but .@global_skywatch Those are both contrails. Sometimes they are long, sometimes short.

In this era of high-flying aircraft, condensation trails — contrails — are a commonly observed feature of the sky. Sometimes they are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus. Sometimes they maintain their initial integrity as a line of cloud formed in the wake of the rapidly moving aircraft; at other times they develop a series of pendules from which streamers of precipitation are observed to fall.

https://twitter.com/_/status/643080144240771072

@TerminatorBarbi @rockermom53 @Airahairick and if it's such a vast secret then WHY would they patent it?

Aircraft condensation trails

Everyone has noticed the long, thin, white trails left by highflying aircraft. They sometimes disappear quickly, but on other occasions they persist for a long time, spread out and become a cirrus or altocumulus type of cloud. These condensation trails ('contrails') result from the condensation of water vapour contained in the exhaust gases of the aircraft engines. Their persistence depends on the temperature and humidity of the atmosphere at the flight level. Thus, when a warm front is approaching and the cirrus clouds are beginning to form, an aircraft trail will usually tend to persist and even grow, because the air at that level is already moist. Wind shear (the change of wind speed from one height and distance to another) will cause the trails to spread out and give a spectacular display (88).

A small wind shear can draw out a contrail into an almost horizontal sheet of cloud [no. 70]. In this picture, the right hand trail is a few minutes older than the other and has been extended more. Sometimes several trails drawn out in this way cover most of the sky with cirrus. If the trails are very persistent the clear air must be saturated for ice.

Brightly coloured parts of complex haloes are occasionally seen in persistent contrails. Parts of coronae have been seen from accompanying aircraft in the first few metres of the trails, but they disappear as the droplets freeze and grow into crystals.

1988: Exploring the Sky By Day, Page 49
https://www.flickr.com/photos/metabunk/sets/72157643850292503/

If a contrail vanishes rapidly, the air is dry and fair weather is likely to continue. Contrails can last for hours, however, and may even trigger the formation of more extensive natural cirrus clouds.

http://www.flickr.com/photos/metabunk/sets/72157641675780313/

1972: Clouds of the World, page 130
https://www.flickr.com/photos/metabunk/sets/72157641669574294/

11.4 Glaciation and Distortion

Except for trails in wingtip vortex cores most contrails are formed at temperatures below −40°C (see 11.2.iv) and therefore the particles freeze almost immediately. Mock suns are often very bright in contrails, and parts of circumzenithal arcs have been observed in them.

Once glaciated the trails may last for many hours, and may be spread out by wind shear into almost horizontal sheets. The most extensive sheets are formed from trails which originally produced an extensive vertical curtain of cloud or very elongated blobs.

The trails persist in air that is saturated for ice and not for water, and such air is often found ahead of warm fronts. Often contrails can extend the forward edge of warm front cirrus by many tens of miles.

1969: Clouds and Weather. Page 28
https://www.flickr.com/photos/metabunk/sets/72157641629656855/

Aircraft condensation trails

Everyone has noticed the long, thin, white trails left by highflying aircraft. They sometimes disappear quickly, but on other occasions they persist for a long time, spread out and become a cirrus or altocumulus type of cloud. These condensation trails ('contrails') result from the condensation of water vapour contained in the exhaust gases of the aircraft engines. Their persistence depends on the temperature and humidity of the atmosphere at the flight level. Thus, when a warm front is approaching and the cirrus clouds are beginning to form, an aircraft trail will usually tend to persist and even grow, because the air at that level is already moist. Wind shear (the change of wind speed from one height and distance to another) will cause the trails to spread out and give a spectacular display (88).

@akareyon @AE911Truth A 747 losing a wing would certainly be something that requires investigation.

The broader engineering community understands why full collapse was inevitable?

In your theory, why do you think they did not make it more "realistic", why leave it so obvious (to you)?

https://twitter.com/_/status/1528788924818001921
@akareyon @AE911Truth It's like if a 747 loses a wing. You don't really need to model the aerodynamics to know it's going to crash.

By far the biggest priority is to figure out why the wing fell off.

So here, it's collapse initiation that's the focus.

@EdwardKissinge1 I think something fairly mundane happened in the context of local UFO sightings a few days earlier promoting imagination, then with story-telling and group interrogations by Hind and Mack, it grew into false memories which seem like real memories.

- (U) Most of the UAP reported probably do represent physical objects given that a majority of UAP registered across multiple sensors, to include radar, infrared, electro-optical, weapon seekers, and visual observation.

. § 3024(i) In a limited number of incidents, UAP reportedly appeared to exhibit unusual flight characteristics, including several in which the 1.4(a)(e)(g) involving 1.4(a)(e)(g) These observations could be the result of sensor errors, spoofing, or observer misperception and require additional rigorous analysis.

(U) There are probably multiple types of UAP requiring different explanations based on the range of appearances and behaviors described in the available reporting. Our analysis of the data supports the construct that if and when individual UAP incidents are resolved they will fall into one of five potential explanatory categories: airborne clutter, natural atmospheric phenomena, USG or U.S. industry developmental programs, foreign adversary systems, and a catchall "other" bin.

Compassion is wonderful, an essential part of being human. But it's a confounding factor in scientific investigations. Witnesses often have a deeply emotional reaction to their experiences, and this creates a moral dilemma for investigators who question what they saw.

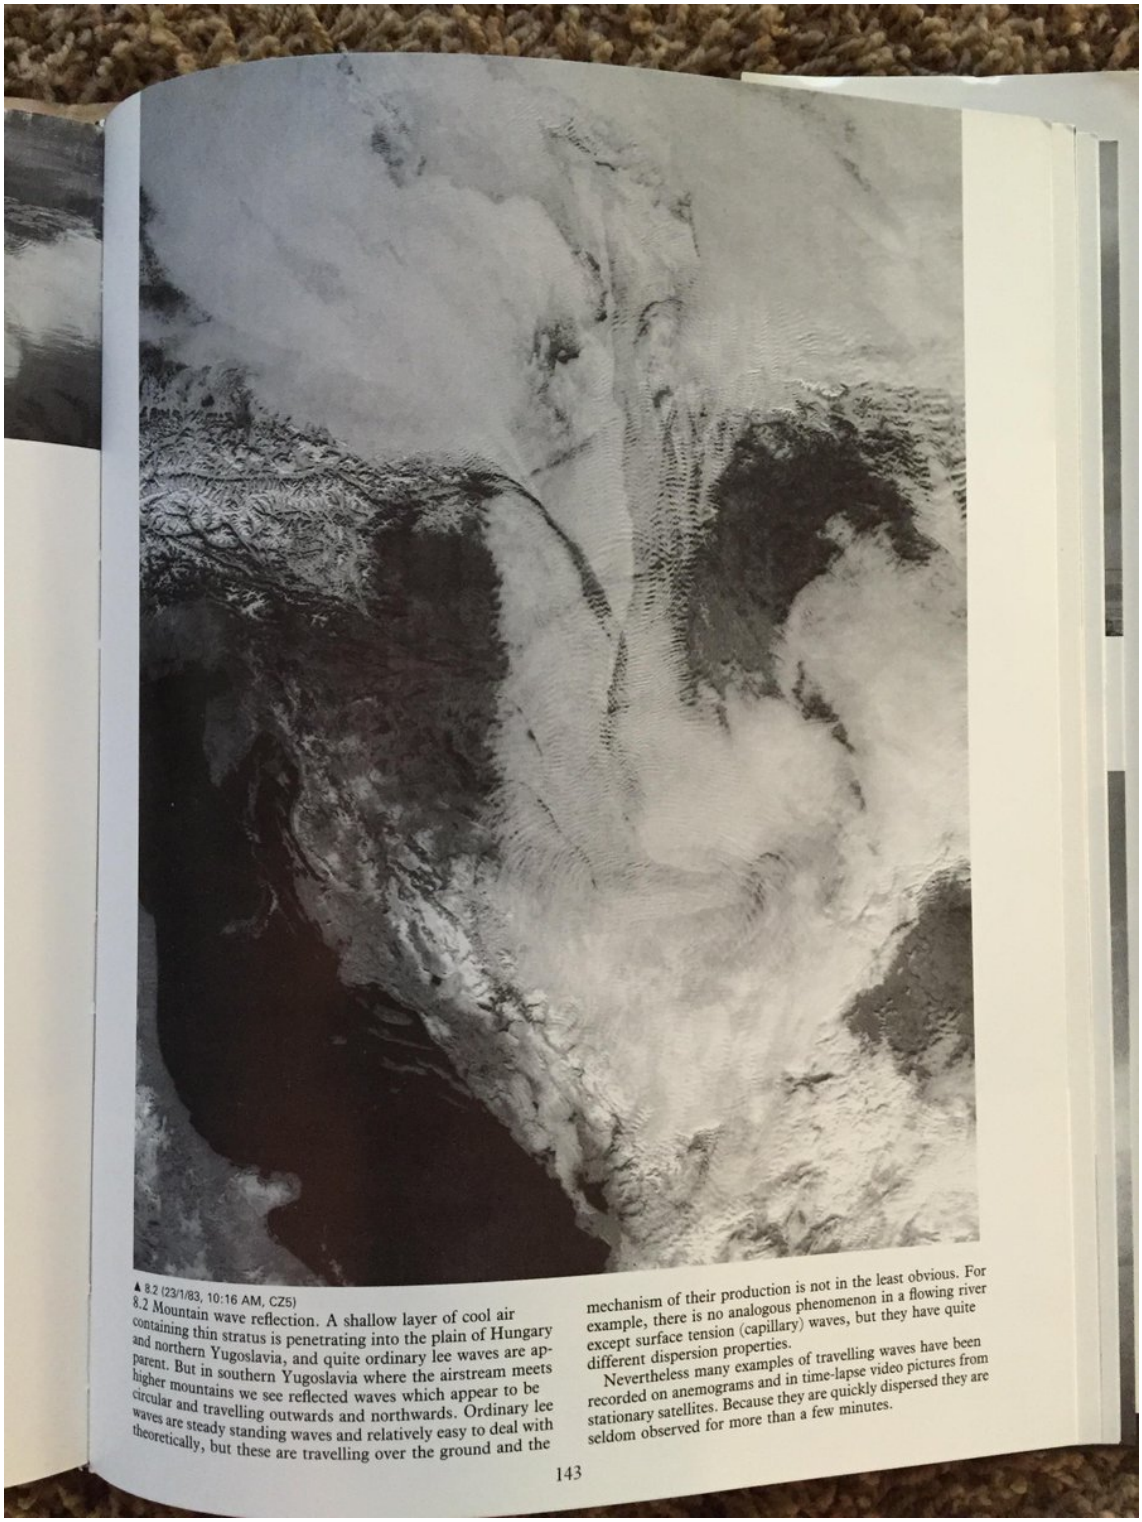
.@karentalford66 @SHINER3LIMA Here's a 1983 satellite photo of mountain waves reflecting and intersecting. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CK2FrBZWsAANB7t.jpg



▲ 8.2 (23/1/83, 10:16 AM, CZ5)
8.2 Mountain wave reflection. A shallow layer of cool air containing thin stratus is penetrating into the plain of Hungary and northern Yugoslavia, and quite ordinary lee waves are apparent. But in southern Yugoslavia where the airstream meets higher mountains we see reflected waves which appear to be circular and travelling outwards and northwards. Ordinary lee waves are steady standing waves and relatively easy to deal with theoretically, but these are travelling over the ground and the mechanism of their production is not in the least obvious. For example, there is no analogous phenomenon in a flowing river except surface tension (capillary) waves, but they have quite different dispersion properties.

Clarification regarding the "any day now" story being repeated in the media

Metabunk x

Mick West Mr Brocher, As you know, major media outlets are pushing 10:13 AM (1 hour ago)

Brocher, Thomas 10:24 AM (1 hour ago)

Mr. West:

You are correct in thinking that my comments were misrepresented.

The USGS asked the Bay City News to print a clarification which I have pasted at the end of this response. There was a misunderstanding between the words "could" and "will". The Hayward fault is capable of producing a major earthquake at any time, but there is currently no scientific basis for making a prediction for when that earthquake will occur. The Uniform California Earthquake Rupture Forecast (UCERF3) model gives a 31% probability of a magnitude 6.7 or larger event in the next 30 years on the Hayward-Rodgers Creek fault system.

As the attached fact sheet about the Hayward fault states, geologic studies at Tule Pond (in Fremont) on the southern end of the Hayward fault have shown that the average interval between the past 5 surface-rupturing earthquakes has been 140 plus or minus 50 years. The average interval of the past 11 earthquakes on this segment of the fault is 170 plus or minus 80 years.

The last surface rupturing earthquake on the Hayward fault was October 21, 1868: it had an estimated magnitude of 6.8.

I hope that this information is helpful to you.

Tom

8.2 Mountain wave reflection. A shallow layer of cool air containing thin stratus is penetrating into the plain of Hungary and northern Yugoslavia, and quite ordinary lee waves are apparent. But in southern Yugoslavia where the airstream meets higher mountains we see reflected waves which appear to be circular and travelling outwards and northwards. Ordinary lee waves are steady standing waves and relatively easy to deal with theoretically, but these are travelling over the ground and the mechanism of their production is not in the least obvious. For example, there is no analogous phenomenon in a flowing river except surface tension (capillary) waves, but they have quite different dispersion properties.

Nevertheless many examples of travelling waves have been recorded on anemograms and in time-lapse video pictures from stationary satellites. Because they are quickly dispersed they are seldom observed for more than a few minutes.

@Valkyrie_77 @SirMustard @GreggiWeggi So why did they write about them in books on clouds 30 years ago? http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CJP_RUsWoAAdBgC.jpg

In this era of high-flying aircraft, condensation trails — contrails — are a commonly observed feature of the sky. Sometimes they are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus. Sometimes they maintain their initial integrity as a line of cloud formed in the wake of the rapidly moving aircraft; at other times they develop a series of pendules from which streamers of precipitation are observed to fall.

CLOUD FORMATION BY SUPERCHARGED PLANE.[1]

[Reprinted from U. S. Air Service, July, 1921, p. 13.]

An altitude flight was made in the morning at McCook Field [Dayton, Ohio] recently, by Lieut. J. A. Macready in a La Pere with supercharged Liberty. When the airplane reached a height of 26,000–27,000 feet at 11:50 a. m., a long feathery white streamer was observed forming behind a rapidly moving dark speck. The cloud was of the cirrus variety, well defined at its edges and apparently 10 to 15 times the width of the plane. The sky behind the first portion was clear blue with no other clouds in the near neighborhood. The first streamer seemed perhaps 2 miles long. Then a gap of one-quarter mile. The second streamer formed with a background of light cirrus cloud and after 2 or 3 miles the plane seemed to go into the cirrus background, for the streamer formation ceased while an apparent path of blue continued beyond for a way in the cirrus cloud. The whole streamer may have been 3 miles long. After 20 minutes the streamer had drifted and spread until it merged indistinguishably with the other cirrus clouds visible. The weather conditions at the time were generally very clear, warm, with perhaps 0.1 of the sky in cirrus clouds.

@junksciencejudo How can you tell? The deformation would not be visible at that scale. It's just physics.

https://twitter.com/_/status/612852766390640640

@davebrooker33 Why do you think there are no persistent contrails? Why do you think persistent trails are automatically "chemtrails"?

2015-06-22T05:20:17+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612852585419046917

@davebrooker33 You are just labeling persistent contrails as "chemtrails", and then saying, "look, only the chemtrails persist".

2015-06-22T05:19:40+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612852430238150656

@davebrooker33 You keep saying you've not seen a contrail persist. But that's circular reasoning.

2015-06-22T05:16:00+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612851508548218880

@davebrooker33 Only water based clouds can persist for hours. Hence the persistent trails must be water.

2015-06-22T05:15:26+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612851363907657728

@davebrooker33 A "chemtrail" could not persist unless it accumulated water. Otherwise it's just like smoke. Smoke does not persist.

https://twitter.com/_/status/612801179601375232

@davebrooker33 It's a risk analysis. Nothing to do with the physics of contrails.

2015-06-22T01:35:38+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612796052467396608

@davebrooker33 What does that have to do with your claim that contrails don't persist?

2015-06-22T01:33:39+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612795553512992769

@davebrooker33 Well then for you that would prove they are not contrails. So why don't you just justify your "non-persistent" claim?

2015-06-22T01:32:34+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612795279629156352

@davebrooker33 @Kal1_Furies @PythonJones Okay, but shouldn't we start with "contrails can't persist"? Do you now accept that contrails can?

2015-06-22T01:31:47+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612795084245852160

@davebrooker33 @Kal1_Furies @PythonJones So why would you say that, when all the books on clouds say water? (with some nuclei for exhaust)?

2015-06-22T01:31:04+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612794903483908096

@davebrooker33 @Kal1_Furies @PythonJones I'm not sure what you are arguing. But contrails are certainly clouds, made by planes.

2015-06-22T01:28:01+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612794132839297024

@davebrooker33 @Kal1_Furies @PythonJones Contrails are a type of cirrus, hence latin name would be "cirrus (something)"

2015-06-22T01:27:16+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612793945832058880

@davebrooker33 @Kal1_Furies @PythonJones Why? Check out any book on clouds, even 100 year old. You'll see the same clouds as now.

2015-06-21T23:23:38+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612762833558765568

@Kal1_Furies @davebrooker33 @PythonJones Essentially. Or giving a name to a nameless oddity. Cloud names have evolved over time.

2015-06-21T15:17:24+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612640466153017344

@davebrooker33 @PythonJones What you see in a persistent contrail is mostly water from the atmosphere deposited as ice.

2015-06-21T15:16:45+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612640303904747520

@davebrooker33 @PythonJones Contrails are formed from the water in the exhaust temporarily raising the humidity of the air.

https://twitter.com/_/status/612497770121854976

@davebrooker33 @PythonJones The exhaust is the same. It's just a different way of using the energy of combustion of the fuel. Still burns it

---

2015-06-21T05:49:32+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612497558917615616

@davebrooker33 @PythonJones It's the exhaust gas that makes a contrail. They still have to burn hydrocarbons to turn the fan.

2015-06-21T05:21:54+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/612490605785026560

@davebrooker33 @PythonJones This is from 1981. All the books on clouds say basically this. Do you disagree with them? http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CIAAzbSXAAANsdn.jpg

In this era of high-flying aircraft, condensation trails — contrails — are a commonly observed feature of the sky. Sometimes they are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus. Sometimes they maintain their initial integrity as a line of cloud formed in the wake of the rapidly moving aircraft; at other times they develop a series of pendules from which streamers of precipitation are observed to fall.

Vapour trail

Aerology

Alternate titles: condensation trail; contrail

Vapour trail, also called Condensation Trail, or Contrail, streamer of cloud sometimes observed behind an airplane flying in clear, cold, humid air. It forms upon condensation of the water vapour produced by the combustion of fuel in the airplane engines. When the ambient relative humidity is high, the resulting ice-crystal plume may last for several hours. The trail may be distorted by the winds, and sometimes it spreads outwards to form a layer of cirrus cloud. On rare occasions, when the air is nearly saturated with water vapour, air circulation at the wing tips of an airplane may cause sufficient pressure and temperature reductions to cause cloud streamers to form.

https://twitter.com/_/status/606859956550307840

@DarfusMctrendy So, falling mass starts at 0 mph, hits a floor, floor fails, slows mass a bit, but now ABOVE 0 mph, and HEAVIER. Repeat.

https://twitter.com/_/status/606858308893474816

@DarfusMctrendy The vast majority of beams were undamaged, came apart at the seams. But, what is the temp? And which beam?

2015-06-05T16:20:17+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/606858089128710145

@DarfusMctrendy So how could it support 10x its weight hitting it after falling 12 feet?

2015-06-05T16:19:48+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/606857964931137536

@DarfusMctrendy How could they. A FLOOR could only support about 5x it's weight, and that's if the weight was gently placed on top of it.

2015-06-05T16:18:57+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/606857751097176064

@DarfusMctrendy Personal incredulity is not an argument. How many 1300 foot building collapses have you examined?

2015-06-05T16:18:23+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/606857607672958977

@DarfusMctrendy Did you see the collapses? Basically everything had a boulder dropped on it from 1000 feet up. What remains from that?

2015-06-05T16:17:00+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/606857261923889153

@DarfusMctrendy Now imagine above that ceiling, there's 20,000 tons of steel and concrete. That falls to the floor.

https://twitter.com/_/status/606856841340010496

@DarfusMctrendy The FLOORS do not support anything. The COLUMNS support the building. So drop a lot of weight on a floor, it's stripped away

https://twitter.com/_/status/606856184008724481

@DarfusMctrendy No, it doesn't. It's not as simple as that. Floors were stripped away, out wall peeled, unsupported columns collapsed.

We did not find evidence that these mechanisms have led to widespread, systemic impacts on drinking water resources in the United States. Of the potential mechanisms identified in this report, we found specific instances where one or more of these mechanisms led to impacts on drinking water resources, including contamination of drinking water wells. The cases occurred during both routine activities and accidents and have resulted in impacts to surface or ground water. Spills of hydraulic fracturing fluid and produced water in certain cases have reached drinking water resources, both surface and ground water. Discharge of treated hydraulic fracturing wastewater has increased contaminant concentrations in receiving surface waters. Below ground movement of fluids, including gas, most likely via the production well, have contaminated drinking water resources. In some cases, hydraulic fracturing fluids have also been directly injected into drinking water resources, as defined in this assessment, to produce oil or gas that co-exists in those formations.

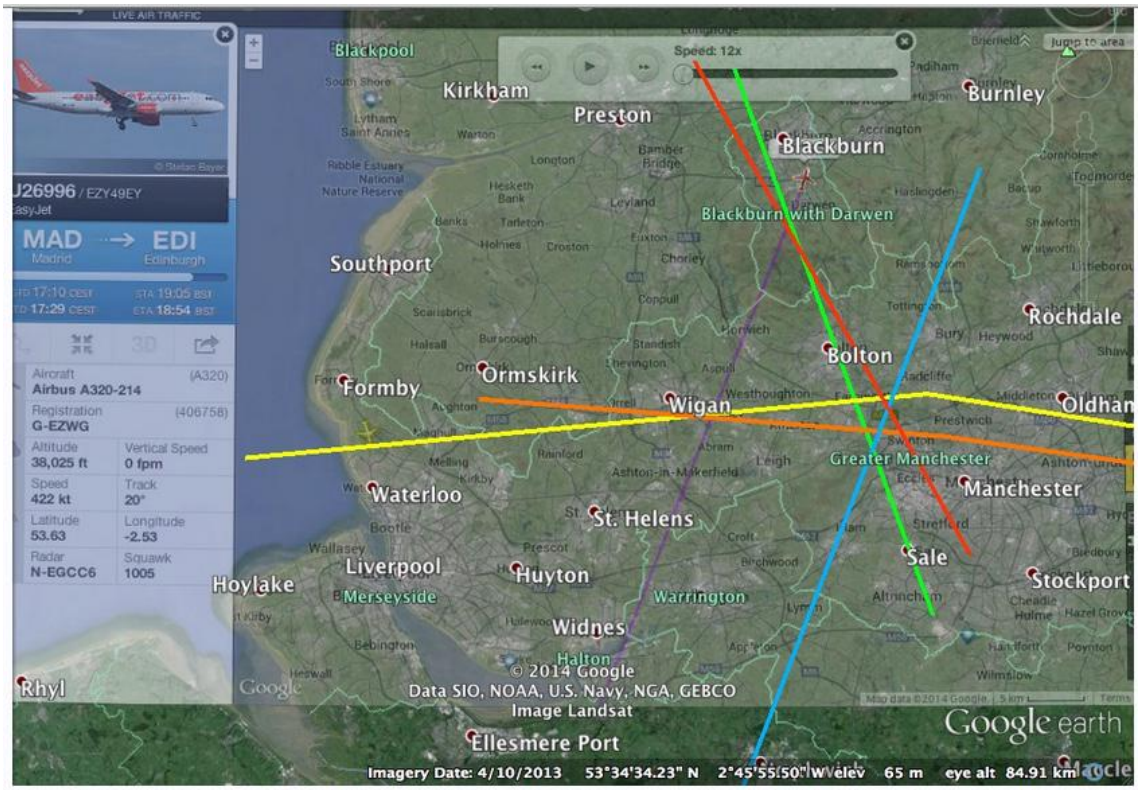
http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CGbXMBgU8AA-waG.jpg



The earliest blue contrail was formed about five minutes before the green and yellow contrails and ten minutes before the orange and red ones. I've moved it in the SE direction by about 13 km parallel to its flight route (purple line), which corresponds to a modest wind speed of 80 km/h or 50 mph. The green and yellow contrails have also been moved by a half of this distance in the same direction. Note that from above the resulting star looks very asymmetric, but from the ground it looks more proportional due to the perspective:

(U) UAP PROBABLY LACK A SINGLE EXPLANATION

(U) The UAP documented in this limited dataset demonstrate an array of aerial behaviors, reinforcing the possibility there are multiple types of UAP requiring different explanations. Our analysis of the data supports the construct that if and when individual UAP incidents are resolved they will fall into one of five potential explanatory categories: airborne clutter, natural atmospheric phenomena, USG or industry developmental programs, foreign adversary systems, and a catchall "other" bin. With the exception of the one instance where we determined with high confidence that the reported UAP was airborne clutter, specifically a deflating balloon, we currently lack sufficient information in our dataset to attribute incidents to particular explanations.

These are books that have been in stores, libraries, homes, universities, and schools for decades - since the 1940s.

They agree, and the science agrees - contrails are CLOUDS, so they do what clouds do.

@uncertainvector said that EVERY TIME he went to look at one of these radar targets he was unable to see it.

Which is consistent with a small balloon.

Vapor Trails Bane To Pilots, Former News-Post Photog Says

Vapor trails similar to the one which a high-flying airplane left over this city early in February are a bane to pilots since they are a "dead give-away for fighter aircraft and anti-aircraft gunners," Tech. Sergt. Robert L. Yinger, former News - Post photographer, writes from Muroc, Calif., where he is stationed with the 536th Bomber Squadron.

Sergt. Yinger said he read with interest the account of the long vapor trails left by the unidentified aircraft which passed over this city and which were viewed by many residents. The trails have appeared as a narrow ribbon of dense white smoke unwinding from the plane until it disappeared below the horizon.

He said the vapor trails are termed "contrail," a contraction for condensation trail, and "are not so much a rarity here in the west, possibly due to the dryness of the atmosphere."

"It is quite common to see several large trails every day, produced by high altitude bombers. The maneuvering of the aircraft results frequently in interesting patterns. Contrails are a headache to combat pilots and are very difficult to control. Apparently they result only when the atmosphere is at a certain temperature and humidity."

Sergt. Yinger then makes this interesting observation: "Contrails frequently have a tendency to cause a complete overcast and cause rain. In Idaho I have seen contrails formed in a perfectly clear sky and four hours later a complete overcast resulted.

"But one of the oddest effects I have even seen and which has never been satisfactorily explained to me is that when an aircraft producing a vapor trail enters a cloud formation, the vapor trail stops and a perfectly clear tunnel is bored through to the other side. As soon as the ship emerges, the trail begins again. This may be caused by precipitation of the water vapor in the cloud. While most trails persist for several hours, some are only of short duration, giving the appearance of the wake of a ship in water.

"The complete elimination or control of contrails would be a great advancement for aerial warfare, since they are a dead give-away for fighter aircraft and anti-aircraft gunners.

"Notwithstanding the seriousness of contrails to high altitude flying, I saw one pilot over Los Angeles who was making good use of it. He was sky-writing with his P-39, to the amazement of onlookers."

Darn Sky Riders

Jet Trails Dim Sun, Palm Springs Gripes

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6. (UPI)—The air force is long since resigned to the fuss about noise from its jets. Now comes Palm Springs, Calif., with a new complaint—that jet trails overhead are so thick they are beginning to blot out the sun.

Jimmy Cooper, manager of the Palm Springs Chamber of Commerce, outlined this "most serious and urgent problem" in a telegram to Representative D. S. (Judge) Saund (D-Calif.), who has asked the air force what can be done.

"As you know," Cooper wired Saund, "our entire economy is dependent upon the tourist trade, which is predicated on our bright sunshine and warm climate. Recently our sky has resembled a mob of exuberant sky riders performing an aerial circus.

"The 'contrails' are not disappearing but are breaking down into a haze and creating a cloud-like appearance in the sky.

"With the unlimited expanse of barren, uninhabited land in the west, does such activity have to be centered over a resort area, which is offering the visitor cloudless skies and unlimited sunshine?"

The air force, so far, is flabbergasted. No doubt in time it will recover its aplomb sufficiently to give Saund the usual answer to all congressional inquiries—that the matter will be investigated.

The air force figures its jets couldn't blot out the sun short of a wing-to-wing mass flight like the European bombing raids of World war II. If anything like that is going on out of March air force base at Riverside, Calif., the nearest jet base to Palm Springs, air force officials here want to know all about it.

Shill Ousted by Minister

TOPEKA, Kan., Dec. 6. (AP)—Maurice D. Tulloch, who gave up the life of a Baptist minister to become a shill in a Las Vegas gambling casino, was stripped of his ministerial standing yesterday.

The action was taken by the executive committee of the Kansas Baptist convention.

Tulloch, a graying, spectacled man with crew-cut hair who looks closer to 40 than his 50 years, was pastor of the First Baptist church of Sabetha, Kan. Last September 29, he walked out of a meeting of Baptist pastors in Hutchinson, Kan., and disappeared.

On November 26 he was located in Las Vegas, working as a shill—a gambling casino employee who poses as a customer to drum up trade.

Footage of hypersonic metallic UFO shown by Pentagon officials at historic hearing

By Ben Turner published 4 days ago

UFO sightings are "frequent and continuing," Pentagon officials said.

Pentagon officials speaking at the first public hearing on UFOs since the 1960s have shown previously classified footage of an unidentified aerial phenomenon (UAP), a split-second video of a metallic sphere zooming across the flight path of a military jet at hypersonic speeds.

The object, captured through the cockpit window of an FA-18 fighter jet in 2021, was also seen by the Navy pilot flying the jet and picked up by the plane's sensors. But what exactly it could be remains a mystery.

Deputy Director of Naval Intelligence Scott Bray presented the video to representatives during a public hearing held by a House Intelligence subcommittee that saw lawmakers grill him and one other intelligence and defense expert on multiple reports by military pilots of mysterious unidentified aerial phenomena. The focus of the hearing was a June 2021 Pentagon report that revealed U.S. Navy pilots had reported 144 sightings of UAPs since 2004, most of which the department concluded "probably do represent physical objects."

Northwestern University

The study performed by Northwestern University (Bazant 2002) was a simplified approximate analysis of the overall collapse of the WTC towers which addressed the question of why a total collapse occurred. The analysis addressed the results of prolonged heating which would have caused the columns of a single floor to lose their load carrying capacity and initiated the collapse of the building. The analysis assumed loss of thermal insulation during impact, uniform temperatures of 800 °C for a uniform column size and load across a single floor, and creep buckling and loss of load carrying capacity in over half of the columns. The analysis included evaluation of the dynamic amplification of the loads and the ability of the columns in the lower floors to dissipate the kinetic energy of the falling upper building mass through formation of plastic hinge mechanisms. The analysis found that the ratio of the kinetic energy of the upper building section dropping one floor to the deformation energy of plastic hinge rotation in the lower building columns was approximately a factor of eight.

The study by Northwestern did not address the details of impact damage, fire dynamics, or structural response of the towers. Rather, a generalized condition was assumed of heated columns, and the question of why there was total collapse was addressed. NIST agrees with the assessment of the tower's required structural capacity to absorb the released energy of the upper building section as it began to fall as an approximate lower bound. The likelihood of the falling building section aligning vertically with the columns below was small, given the observed tilting, so that the required capacity would be greater if interaction with the floors was also considered, as pointed out in the study.

In one of the longest-running misunderstandings in @AE911Truth's misunderstanding-laden history, they again claim that Bazant's 9/11 paper is "foundational to the official 9/11 story". It's not, as a read of the official report will tell you.

ASCE journal rejects censored 9/11 paper AGAIN

The full story with Ted Walter

This week on 9/11 Free Fall, AE911Truth's director of strategy, Ted Walter, joins host Andy Steele to discuss the latest setback — and the path forward — in the decade-long effort to publish a hugely important paper on the Twin Towers' destruction in the ASCE's Journal of Engineering Mechanics.

WRONG

After agreeing to review co-authors Tony Szamboti and Richard Johns' censored critique of Zdeněk Bažant's 2011 paper, which is foundational to the official 9/11 story, the journal's editor has rejected their paper supposedly "on scientific grounds," but he does not explain what those grounds are.

Szamboti and Johns are not taking this latest mistreatment by the Journal of Engineering Mechanics lying down. Tune in to this week's episode of 9/11

Northwestern University

The study performed by Northwestern University (Bazant 2002) was a simplified approximate analysis of the overall collapse of the WTC towers which addressed the question of why a total collapse occurred. The analysis addressed the results of prolonged heating which would have caused the columns of a single floor to lose their load carrying capacity and initiated the collapse of the building. The analysis assumed loss of thermal insulation during impact, uniform temperatures of 800 °C for a uniform column size and load across a single floor, and creep buckling and loss of load carrying capacity in over half of the columns. The analysis included evaluation of the dynamic amplification of the loads and the ability of the columns in the lower floors to dissipate the kinetic energy of the falling upper building mass through formation of plastic hinge mechanisms. The analysis found that the ratio of the kinetic energy of the upper building section dropping one floor to the deformation energy of plastic hinge rotation in the lower building columns was approximately a factor of eight.

The study by Northwestern did not address the details of impact damage, fire dynamics, or structural response of the towers. Rather, a generalized condition was assumed of heated columns, and the question of why there was total collapse was addressed. NIST agrees with the assessment of the tower's required structural capacity to absorb the released energy of the upper building section as it began to fall as an approximate lower bound. The likelihood of the falling building section aligning vertically with the columns below was small, given the observed tilting, so that the required capacity would be greater if interaction with the floors was also considered, as pointed out in the study.

Or would that be a national security issue that they would be forced to not comment on?

Every 24 hours, 400 flights fly over Las Vegas at contrail altitude. Some make contrails

2015-05-24T01:23:42+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/602283801528635392
@flores_hm @2AFight I think the loophole is that private sellers can sell lots of guns without BG checks, and they end up on black market.

2015-05-24T01:22:29+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602283495646453760
@Connectionary @DemonTwoSix @2AFight I'd be happy to reduce the number of laws, but that's not really the issue.

2015-05-24T01:21:04+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602283138648297472
@DemonTwoSix @2AFight No, it's a plain fact. If they can't buy from an FFL due to BG checks, then they can't buy private with BG checks.

2015-05-24T01:19:59+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602282866890903554
@Connectionary @DemonTwoSix @2AFight But don't you also think that background checks at FFLs are an infringement?

2015-05-24T01:19:22+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602282710988693505
@Connectionary @DemonTwoSix @2AFight Where is the line drawn between private seller and dealer?

2015-05-24T01:18:43+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602282545221410816
@Connectionary @DemonTwoSix @2AFight Surely a private seller might only sell a handful of guns a year tops. Otherwise are you not a dealer?

2015-05-24T01:15:54+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602281837529079810
@Connectionary @DemonTwoSix @2AFight Should they not be regulated as dealers? If they effectively ARE dealers?

2015-05-24T01:15:33+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602281750652448769
@Connectionary @DemonTwoSix @2AFight Okay, but there's private sellers who sell lots of guns, so are essentially dealers.

2015-05-24T01:14:50+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602281568506372099
@DemonTwoSix @2AFight we've covered that, it's a matter of opinion. What would you call it? "Private multi-gun dealers in gun shows"?

2015-05-24T01:13:58+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602281351501520896
@2AFight @DemonTwoSix Yes, it would stop sales to black market dealers who can't buy at FFLs.

2015-05-24T01:13:01+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/602281109729243136
@DemonTwoSix @2AFight So makes it harder for criminals to get guns.

2015-05-24T01:12:42+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602281033803943936
@DemonTwoSix @2AFight So if dealers cannot source guns at gun shows, it reduces supply, drives up black market prices.

2015-05-24T01:12:01+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602280858809151488
@DemonTwoSix @2AFight How so? The idea in closing the loophole to to prevent guns from entering the black market.

2015-05-24T01:10:29+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602280475021946880
@DemonTwoSix @2AFight ID is not a background check. And local regs vary by state. Issue is federal regs.

2015-05-24T01:09:45+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602280290808143872
@2AFight @DemonTwoSix Not my claim, I was saying criminal dealers would not be able to buy at gun shows. Cut 20-40% of their source.

2015-05-24T01:08:45+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602280038793400321
@2AFight @DemonTwoSix Then criminals eventually get those guns. So yes, you'd only cut off 1% of direct, but much more indirect.

2015-05-24T01:08:12+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602279899659907072
@2AFight @DemonTwoSix Not at all. 1% of guns used in crimes are direct from gun shows. But a huge % of illegal gun trade STARTS at gun shows

---

2015-05-24T01:04:31+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602278974027272192
@2AFight @DemonTwoSix You agree that black market dealers get many guns at gun show. So is it not a good idea to stop that?

2015-05-24T01:04:00+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602278844372942849
@2AFight @DemonTwoSix Black market dealers can't buy at gun shops, so they buy at gun shows. Make show rules same as shop rules.

2015-05-24T00:59:58+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602277827812134912
@DemonTwoSix @2AFight A background check would stop that.

2015-05-24T00:59:25+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/602277689744035842 @DemonTwoSix @2AFight How does it differ? If an black market deal buys at a gun show, it's still legal, as he's a private party.

@KossowSteven @2AFight The loophole is that private sellers are not required, and some private sellers sell a lot, are effectively dealers.

Vapour trail

Aerology

Alternate titles: condensation trail; contrail

Vapour trail, also called Condensation Trail, or Contrail, streamer of cloud sometimes observed behind an airplane flying in clear, cold, humid air. It forms upon condensation of the water vapour produced by the combustion of fuel in the airplane engines. When the ambient relative humidity is high, the resulting ice-crystal plume may last for several hours. The trail may be distorted by the winds, and sometimes it spreads outwards to form a layer of cirrus cloud. On rare occasions, when the air is nearly saturated with water vapour, air circulation at the wing tips of an airplane may cause sufficient pressure and temperature reductions to cause cloud streamers to form.

So what does this mean for d? If we are only traveling for 0.57 of x, then we need to calculate d for a value of x that's 1/0.57 the length, or about 1.75x as far. so for 600 feet, we would need x = 1052 feet, which we can't actually get with my math, as it requires h>d, so what about the 400 feet that Darfus was asking about? That would be 400*1.75 = 700 to account for the efficiency, so x = 142 feet.

So a girder dropped from 1000 feet above the impact point would have to drop 142 feet before the bounce to end up at that point 400 feet away.

But what is the actual maximum? Well if my math is correct, then the maximum is equal to the drop height, and the fall distance is exactly half that drop height. So if something were to drop (at freefall) from the very top of the tower, and impact something just right after dropping half the distance, then it could end up traveling sideways the full height of the tower. (again, assuming my math is correct)

Accounting for efficiency, this means that to have travelled a distance d feet, it would have to start at least 1.75*d feet above that point

Inspired by a Twitter discussion, I decided to do a bit more experiment with some actual numbers:

> — Mick West (@MickWest) May 22, 2015

The basic parameters were a drop from 52" above the ground (h), falling a distance of 19" to impact (x) and traveling sideways a distance d.

Now the first thing that I discovered was that the maximum distance in this experiment was not from a simple bounce to horizontal, it also had a slight vertical component, which complicates the math a little. But that aside for now, given h and x, what value of d would we expect as a maximum? My math from post #6 says:

x = 0.5*(h - sqrt(h^2 - d^2))

Solving for d

d = 2 * sqrt(x) * sqrt (h-x)

so with h= 52, x = 19, we get d = 49"

The actual longest distance was 28", which would give a very simple measure of efficiency (e) of 28/49, or 57%

@DarfusMctrendy I'm assuming it collided with the top of a column, or a girder attached to a column. i.e. the uncollapsed building structure @DarfusMctrendy Okay, so what value should I use for bouncing efficiency?

https://twitter.com/_/status/601779362006966272

@DarfusMctrendy But quite a bit of the building was ejected sideways, as there was less resistance in that direction.

https://twitter.com/_/status/601778902776815616

@DarfusMctrendy Where has the math been done? I did it, and a 100 foot drop to 1000 feet results in 600 feet lateral.

2015-05-22T15:56:43+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/601778726137896961

https://twitter.com/_/status/601778678343819264

@DarfusMctrendy It's the very resistance that is actually "ejecting" things. If there was no resistance, there would be no ejections.

https://twitter.com/_/status/601778030311276544

@DarfusMctrendy Yes, if it still had 1000 feet to fall, it does not need a vast sideways impulse. Do the math.

https://twitter.com/_/status/601777812601724932

@DarfusMctrendy But you understand the principal though, obviously. You are just quibbling about he numbers? So let's do the math.

https://twitter.com/_/status/601777612365680640

2015-05-22T15:44:39+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/601775689390563328

@DarfusMctrendy I did the math here: https://www.metabunk.org/debunked-wtc-multi-ton-steel-sections-ejected-laterally.t1739/#post

-48490 http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CFnvqUNWMAAtyih.jpg

h = initial height of the girder e = efficiency of the collision x = how many feet would a girder need to fall before gaining enough energy to 'bounce' itself to the outer limits of a 1,200 foot debris field (600 feet)
g = acceleration due to gravity = 32 f/s/s d = distance travelled sideways = 600

Intermediate variables

v = velocity after falling x feet

So in our (initially ideal) scenario, the girder falls x feet, and ends up with a velocity at bounce point of v

1: v^2 = 2 * g * x
2: v = sqrt (2 * 32 * x)
3: v = sqrt(64 * x)
or 4: x = (v^2)/(2*g)
5: x = (v^2)/64

The girder bounces sideways at horizontal velocity v, and vertical velocity is back to zero. It falls an additional (h-x) feet, and when it lands it is 600 feet (d) away.

So if it travels d feet at speed v, then it takes t = 600/v seconds to do it.
so 6: v = d/t

t is also the time required to fall (h-x) feet.

7: (h-x) = 0.5*32*t*t
8: t = sqrt((h-x)/16)
so 9: v = d/sqrt((h-x)/16)

combine 3 and 9

sqrt(64*x) = d/sqrt((h-x)/16) solve for x
http://www.wolframalpha.com/input/?i=solve+sqrt(64*x)+=+d/sqrt((h-x)/16)+for+x

x = 0.5*(h - sqrt(h^2 - d^2))

for the extreme case of something at the top of the tower ending up 600 feet away, h=1368, d=600

a more sensible case, something falling from 1000 feet, and ending up 600 feet away:

x = 100 feet.

i.e. it falls 100 feet, bounces to horizontal, falls another 900 feet and ends up 600 feet away.

@DarfusMctrendy Relatively weak? Relative to what? Do you see how strong the columns have to be just to withstand the STATIC load?

2015-05-22T15:41:08+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/601774805092835329

@DarfusMctrendy Yes, which is why it's so easy for beams to end up travelling partly horizontally

@LKpaint_n_decor @OpChemtrails From the same 1921 article. Note the 22Â° halo proof of ice in persistent contrails. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CE5VLyDWgAAas6d.jpg

The author gives other examples: On a day with a temperature of −40° C., a cloud 3 km. in length was seen in Greenland, stretching away from a chimney. During three airplane flights over Munich at a height of 9 km. a cloud 50 km. in length was formed. That it was composed of ice crystals was proved by the fact that the 22° halo was observed. This cloud the author attributes to the nuclei furnished by the motor exhaust.[2] A horse, warm from running over the ice, on a cold day in Greenland, was accompanied by a cloud 50 meters in height formed from its breath. Von Hann gives a similar case regarding a herd of reindeer. The human breath also has been seen to transform itself into small clouds of ice needles. These are also attributed to nuclei discharged into the air.[3] brought about in this particular case are of interest. It could scarcely be the result of a reduction in temperature due to the stirring, per se, of the air by the propeller. An increase in the moisture content of the air is probably involved. Of the two following suggestions as to the origin of the cloud the first, and probably the correct one, was made by Prof. Humphreys:

The end products of complete combustion of gasoline are water vapor and carbon dioxide, and it is found that if the water vapor were condensed, there would result a little more than 1 gallon of water per gallon of gasoline consumed. It was found by Wells and Thuras, in studying the fogs off the Newfoundland coast (see U. S. Coast Guard, Bull. 5, 1916) that there were 1,200 water droplets of diameter 0.01 mm. in a cubic centimeter of air in a dense fog. If we assume that an airplane travels 3 miles on a gallon of gasoline (approximately the figure given by the Aerial Mail Service) it is possible to show that if only a small part—a fourth or fifth—of the water vapor were condensed, there would be abundant cloud to produce the effect observed at the Argonne Battle. It should be stated, however, that this water vapor would have to be discharged into air which was very cold and nearly saturated. This seems to be the correct explanation, and is substantiated by scientists at the Bureau of Standards, who say that they have actually observed this cloud behind airplanes and automobiles. The Bureau of Standards is working on a device for condensing and using this water aboard dirigibles as ballast.

http://contrailscience.com/pre-wwii-contrails/
http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CE5Ryw-WAAAMoU8.jpg

The earliest report of both a persistent spreading contrail, with gaps, and a distrail comes very shortly after, in 1921, in the US. Air Service Newsletter.

> An altitude flight was made in the morning at McCook Field recently by Lieut. J. A. Macready in a La Pere with supercharged Liberty [engine]. When the airplane reached a height of 26,000-27,000 feet at 11:50 a.m., a long feathery white streamer was observed forming behind a rapidly moving dark speck. The cloud was of the cirrus variety, well defined at the edges and apparently 10 to 15 times the width of the plane. The sky behind the first portion was clear blue with no clouds in the near neighborhood. The first streamer seemed perhaps 2 miles long. Then a gap of one-quarter mile. The second streamer formed with a background of light cirrus cloud and after 2 or 3 miles the plane seemed to go into the cirrus background, for the streamer formation ceased while an apparent path of blue continued beyond for a way in the cirrus cloud. The whole streamer may have been 3 miles long. After 20 minutes the streamer had drifted and spread until it merged indistinguishably with the other cirrus clouds visible.

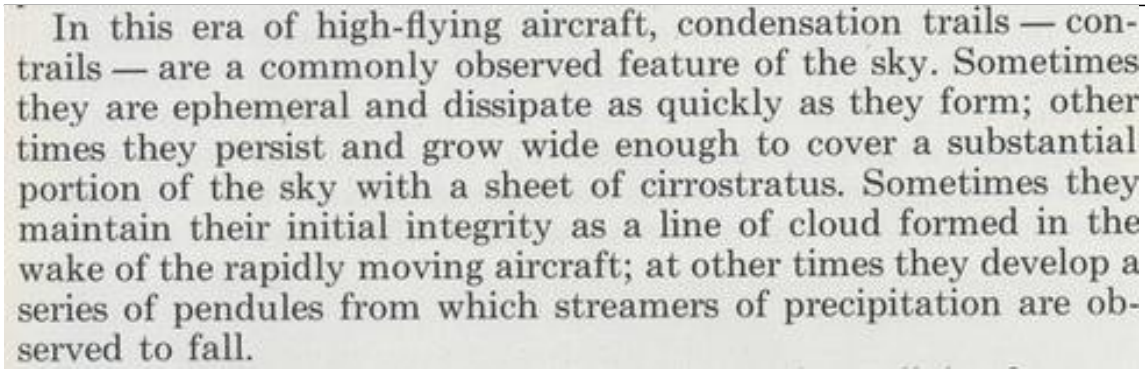
@LKpaint_n_decor @OpChemtrails For example:

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CE5IfynWEAAMLaN.jpg



In this era of high-flying aircraft, condensation trails — contrails — are a commonly observed feature of the sky. Sometimes they are ephemeral and dissipate as quickly as they form; other times they persist and grow wide enough to cover a substantial portion of the sky with a sheet of cirrostratus. Sometimes they maintain their initial integrity as a line of cloud formed in the wake of the rapidly moving aircraft; at other times they develop a series of pendules from which streamers of precipitation are observed to fall.

@LawfulRebelli0n Correct. It's an aged contrail and a solar 22Â° halo. Both made of ice crystals.

@rezn8d @MockWest_ @OpChemtrails Water plus aerosol. Can be ambient aerosols. https://books.google.com/books?id=Ss5TAgAAQBAJ&lpg=PA21&ots=nCbzr36ZJd&dq=atmospheric%20homogeneous%20nucleation%20in%20contrails&pg=PA21#v=onepage&q&f=false http://pbs.twimg.com/media/CCuuRS5UsAADmca.jpg Discrepancies have been found between observed and computed threshold conditions for contrail formation (Busen and Schumann, 1995), indicating that the details of the formation mechanisms are not fully understood. The main question is which nucleation mechanism is activated. Since the saturation ratio of water vapor is not large enough to induce homogeneous nucleation of water vapor, heterogeneous nucleation on existing particles must take place. Several pathways of contrail formation have been considered, including heterogeneous nucleation of water vapor on frozen H_2SO_4/H_2O aerosols, on soot, and on soot coated with H_2SO_4. This last case can occur either by adsorption of H_2SO_4 from the gas phase or by coagulation of soot particles and supercooled H_2SO_4-H_2O aerosols. In addition, observations from the SUCCESS campaign indicate that ambient aerosols, including mineral particles, may play an important role in contrail formation (Twohy and Gandrud, 1998; Jensen et al., 1998). Studies by Busen et al. (1998) indicate that fuel sulfur content (FSC) has little effect on the formation of visible contrails or on the threshold conditions for contrail formation. Further studies of contrail formation mechanisms would be worthwhile, as this uncertainty limits our ability to assess contrail chemical and radiative impacts.

NOTICE OF INTENTION TO MODIFY NATURAL PRECIPITATION BY ARTIFICIAL MEANS

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

Notice is hereby given that it is the intent of the Water Resources Development Corporation of 460 South Broadway, Denver 9, Colorado, which holds License No. 54 of the State of Oregon, to engage in operations to modify natural precipitation by artificial means, for and on behalf of MORROW COUNTY WEATHER RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, located at Echo. Oregon. The object of the above program will be to increase natural rainfall.

1. The area to be affected is described as lying within Morrow County and Northwestern Umatilla County, State of Oregon.
2. The Operation will be conducted through the use of ground-based silver iodide generators and located within the Counties of Grant, Wheeler, Wasco, Gilliam, Morrow, Umatilla and Sherplane.

2015-04-15T00:37:55+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/588139153545625601

@davebrooker33 @Kal1_Furies @ayajet128 Because it's the only one at a particular altitude. Holding pattern.

@davebrooker33 @Kal1_Furies @ayajet128 So why are those not just photos of clouds and contrails? They look like photos in old books.

@Kal1_Furies @davebrooker33 @ayajet128 Can you show an example "legit" pic, and explain how you can tell?

2015-04-14T05:52:52+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/587856023471333376

@MockWest_ No, I enjoy science.

2015-04-14T05:50:14+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/587855360687378432

@MockWest_ Exactly. There are certainly a lot MORE contrails now. But they don't persist any longer than contrails persisted in the past.

2015-04-14T04:05:24+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/587828978808852480

@MockWest_ not really. There are more contrails, but there is no evidence they are more persistent.

2015-04-14T03:19:11+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/587817347303415808

@MockWest_ what increase in persistence?

2015-04-14T01:50:11+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/587794949015351297

@MockWest_ no they would be largely invisible.

2015-04-14T01:05:39+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/587783744414617601

@MockWest_ No they are not. SRM proposals in stratosphere are for reflective particles. Not clouds (which would warm).

https://twitter.com/_/status/587783584599031808

2015-04-14T00:09:59+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/587769735497920512

@MockWest_ Persistence is a function of atmospheric humidity. Some once the trail has formed, that's all it depends on.

2015-04-13T23:57:19+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/587766547906592768

1957: Cloud Study: A pictorial Guide, page 79
https://www.metabunk.org/sk/1957Cloudstudyapictorialguide OCR.pdf

A small wind shear can draw out a contrail into an almost horizontal sheet of cloud [no. 70]. In this picture, the right hand trail is a few minutes older than the other and has been extended more. Sometimes several trails drawn out in this way cover most of the sky with cirrus. If the trails are very persistent the clear air must be saturated for ice.

Brightly coloured parts of complex haloes are occasionally seen in persistent contrails. Parts of coronae have been seen from accompanying aircraft in the first few metres of the trails, but they disappear as the droplets freeze and grow into crystals.

@davebrooker33 @ReddingRosamond It's not an excuse for anything. Just noting one source of those chemicals.

@ReddingRosamond @davebrooker33 Science: "nanoparticles (NPs, PM with AED < 50 nm), emitted from sparklers, are mainly metallic in nature"

The fumes that come off a sparker contain those metals. What's more they will be in the form of metallic nanoparticles:

http://www.aaqr.org/Doi.php?id=29_AAQR-12-08-OA-0208

Content from external source

Sparklers mainly consist of a metal rod, or thin tube coated with an explosive mixture to burn, producing a shower of colorful sparks. Sparklers may be designed to be non-handheld or handheld (i.e., fixed to a support) (Russell, 2000). Their chemical composition can be described by four main components (McManus, 1975; Helmenstine, 2012): (1) A metallic component (e.g., aluminum, iron, titanium, zinc, magnesium powder or flakes), which is responsible for producing sparks; (2) An oxidizing component (e.g., potassium, barium or strontium nitrates, potassium chlorate, ammonium perchlorate); (3) A combustible binder, which holds the mixture together (e.g., dextrin, nitrocellulose, shellac, gum Arabic, or other sugars and resins); and (4) A fuel component (e.g., charcoal). Fine particulate matter, or PM2.5 (PM with AED < 2.5 μm), UFPs, and nanoparticles (NPs, PM with AED < 50 nm), emitted from sparklers, are mainly metallic in nature (Kulshrestha et al., 2004) and pose a threat to human health due to the abilities of UFP and NPs to deposit in all regions of the respiratory tract.

And there's quite a lot. America burns 30,000 tons of fireworks per year. 20,000 of that will be burned today, on the 4th of July.

@davebrooker33 What's wrong with the statement? Fireworks contain that. tens of thousands of tons of fireworks are burnt in the air.

In a 20-hour flight at high altitude Fairchild B-36 crews normally see trails some time during the flight.

Con trails seen lately over the Inland Empire have been classed as "moderately persistent." Persistent con trails are those that stay a while. An extremely persistent con trail might stay in the sky all day.

Weather briefings for fliers usually include the altitudes at which the weatherman thinks con trails will occur.
