Incident No7 -- between North Georgia and Newfoundland -- 20 Jul, 1947

This incident and the, which occurred longer apart visibility, just three days apart, do not fit into the usual description pattern. In both cases, information is poor, and in both cases the meteoric hypothesis cannot be completely ruled out, but the objects could have been rockets or even from auroral streamers or crash discharge from ionized dust clouds. In any event, it seems likely, although it is not impossible, that the objects seen in this incident were meteors. The seven sighting of the flashes argues strongly against the meteoric hypothesis.
