@uelbus Yeah it seem like "white rabbit" is the more common AIW reference. French Morpheus says "choisi la pilule rouge, tu restes au pays des merveilles et on descend avec le lapin blanc au fond du gouffre."

Does "I went down a rabbit hole" (in the sense of getting drawn into a fascinating new world) translate into any other languages without loss of meaning?

Non-English people, how would you say "I went down a rabbit hole" in your native language, and keep the referential meaning?

windows, doors, or lights visible. The object was opaque with a solid, definable edge. The object did not appear to emit any noticeable light or radiation from its surface nor did it have any noticeable exhaust trail. The object traveled from left to right over the disturbed water at an altitude of approximately 1000 to 3000 feet. The object appeared to travel at a speed of approximately 300 to 500 knots in a straight line. Source was unaware of the origin of the object or its destination but believed the disturbed water below could have been related in some way to the object. Source immediately became alarmed and initially thought that perhaps this was an unannounced, classified missile test by a U.S. Navy submarine. As such, they were concerned that the object could pose a threat, especially given the fact both F-18s were unarmed.

(V/STOL) via thrust vectoring.) According to CDR Fravor, the object's shape was like an elongated egg or a 'Tic Tac' and had a discernable midline horizontal axis. However, the object was uniformly white across the entire body. It was approximately 46 feet in length. LT [redacted] described it as "solid white, smooth, with no edges. It was uniformly colored with no nacelles, pylons, or wings." When asked to describe the appearance, if it glowed or reflected sunlight he said, "neither, it looked like it had a white candy-coated shell, almost like a white board." His report differs from CDR Fravor in that he reported the object traveling level at approximately 500-1000 feet at approximately 500 knots.

The object was pointed in a north/south orientation and was moving both north & south and east & west, while maintaining a consistent altitude. These displacements, according to CDR Fravor, were minor. CDR Fravor stated he then began a descent with the intention to take a close aboard pass with the object in an attempt to visually identify it. They began the decent as they rolled in from about 10,000ft and approximately 350 knots to take the object close aboard. CDR Fravor pulled nose on and then pulled trail (aft) of the object. As they were maneuvering, the object appeared, according to CDR Fravor: "to recognize us." He assessed this from the fact the object "pointed" (realigned it's axis) in the direction of their aircraft. At this time, according to CDR Fravor, the disturbance on the water ceased.

We know parallax illusions exists. We know pilots sometimes get spatially disoriented.

So what can we reliably determine from these accounts?

"Architects and Engineers for 9/11 Truth" have abandoned any pretense of being experts and instead revealed they just think it's OBVIOUS the twin towers were blown up and ANYONE can see it.

Thus showing they don't actually understand the physics here.

The top has disintegrated. Explosions are running down each face. Massive steel beams are being hurled outward. Thousands of tons of concrete are being pulverized... And there's actually a "debate" about how these buildings came down? https://AE911Truth.org http://pbs.twimg.com/media/Eh97UXQVkAEllJ5.jpg

Both F-18s assumed combat formation enroute to the new location. “Source” and OK-1’s aircraft was approximately .3 NM behind OK-2 and OK-3’s aircraft and both F-18s proceeded East [Fravor: "we’re still heading West"] at an altitude of approximately 10,000 to 20,000 feet towards San Clemente Island.

Approximately two seconds after noticing the unusual water disturbance, “Source” described witnessing a small, unidentified aerial system (UAS) cross over the turbulent area of water. The unidentified object was elongated, approximately 30 to 40 feet in length, white in color, and described resembling a ‘tic-tac candy mint. [Fravor:"Just forward of the wing line is this little white thing, which looks like a tic-tac, which is why we call it the tic-tac, "]The object had no distinguishable control surfaces, was uniformly smooth, with no windows. doors, or lights visible. The object was opaque with a solid, definable edge. The object did not appear to emit any noticeable light or radiation from its surface nor did it have any noticeable exhaust trail. The object traveled from left to right over the disturbed water at an altitude of approximately 1000 to 3000 feet. The object appeared to travel at a speed of approximately 300 to 500 knots in a straight line. ... [Fravor:"and it’s moving around erratically."

OK-2 [Fravor] conducted an aggressive banking maneuver and dropped his aircraft while turning at the same time in order to catch up with the object [Fravor: "I started an easy descent"]. As OK-2 conducted the maneuver, “Source” noticed the object immediately respond to OK-2’s change of direction [Fravor: "it’s just kind of randomly moving around this vehicle. And it’s basically forward of the right wing by the cockpit and then it goes back and it’s kind of moving around like it was checking it out. "]. (“Source” Comment – the UFO turned on [Fravor] and _____ as if it knew or somehow anticipated what they were going to do and even pointed towards them! I was worried for them because whatever this was. [Fravor] and _____ didn’t stand a chance against it! There is no way any aircraft or missile that I know of could conduct maneuvers like what we saw that day.) “Source” indicated that the object began to make deliberate changes in its altitude and angle in response to OK-2’s aircraft in a manner that seemed to defy the laws of flight physics. [Fravor: " It kind of recognizes that we’re there and it starts to mirror us."] The object instantaneously but in a controlled, intelligent manner ‘tumbled” into nonsensical angles, that made any engagement by the F-18 impossible [Fravor: "So I’m still coming down nice and easy and I’m watching this thing. Because it’s just kind of watching us and following."]. OK-2 and OK-3 were approximately 1000 to 3000 feet from the object when the object turned and “pointed at them”. OK-2 conducted one or two evasive turns in their F-18 [Fravor: "He’s at the 3 o’clock position and I go, “well the only way I might get this is to do an aggressive out-of-play maneuver”. So I dump the nose and I go from the 9 o’clock through the vertical down, to go across to the 3 o’clock. "] but the object appeared to maintain positive and dominant control of the airspace [Fravor: It starts to accelerate. It has an incredible rate of acceleration. And it takes off and it goes south. And it takes off like nothing I’ve ever seen. It literally is one minute it’s there and the next minute it’s like, poof, and it’s gone."].

At no time during the incident did either F-18 have radar contact with the object; however, OK-6 and the female air controller confirmed radar contact. After approximately 8 to 10 seconds, both “Source” and OK-2 lost visual contact with the object. When “Source” looked back at the area where the ocean was disturbed, the water was again smooth and calm with no signs of anything submerging. (Field Comment – “Source” used a pen to describe how the object behaved when OK-2 and OK-3 approached it. “Source” also drew a picture of the incident, see attachment.)

What did the researchers find?

Simply put, a gas that shouldn't be there, and on Earth is considered a conclusive biosignature: phosphine, a very stinky gas. As far as scientists know, there are only two ways to produce it, either artificially in a lab, or by certain kinds of microbes that live in oxygen-free environments. Since it is rather unlikely there any alien labs on Venus, that leaves microbes.

The researchers made the detection using the James Clerk Maxwell Telescope (JCMT) in Hawaii, and the Atacama Large Millimeter Array (ALMA) observatory in Chile.

Researchers from MIT had previously published studies showing that if phosphine was to ever be found on another rocky planet, it would be a @aka__V @pjrbarnett @steven_dor @Oswald1160 @CrewCutYoutube @gammaraybeam @uelbus @AFSUnidentified @JeremyCorbell I'm not even sure if it was two objects, it could have been two false radar returns just on the edge of being filtered out, or one complex (refracted/reflected) return of indeterminate altitude. Plus, new software!

@GavinSchelske I'm not sure what you mean about the rotation. Why would the camera rotate if the target rotated? It's tracking angular position, not orientation.

And this is the GIMBAL object. We've no idea if any other plane saw this.

Contrails are formed by jet exhaust. High bypass engines burn the same fuel as low-bypass. So they create the same exhaust (CO2 and H2O). That exhaust is actually slightly cooler in high bypass engines, so they make MORE contrails.

@Jim94334698 @Oswald1160 @leeonerdo 20 minutes. The problem is there are lots of visual cues when something is on a table. If you can see the table top then it's obvious. So the camera is below, meaning I had to raise up the back wheel.

If they are in mid air, all these problems vanish. But that's more work.

I don't think there are any valid ways of determining the distance from this particular photo
http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EhuEix5VgAM8K-7.jpg

1. Left one is farther... more shadow on it says it's closer to fence.
2. Right is closest. They appear to be attached to the underside of an upturned trolley. The shadow on the lefthand wheel shows that the inner part is hollowed out, in the opposite orientation to the righthand wheel on which you can see a bulge outwards.
3. The one on the right is closer, as I thing I can see a bigger image of the photo taker
4. The one on the right is closer. You can tell by comparing the two reflections
5. Left bigger. Not at all confident because I'm seeing this on Twitter. Irl I'd be surprised if it wasn't
6. Right one is closer
7. One on the left is further away, and therefore bigger.
8. Left is bigger, right is closer. Confident? Not really but I have poor depth perception so maybe I have a leg up
9. Left
10. I say left bigger... 80.4% sure!
11. Right?
12. The one on the right looks closer...cause it seems closer to the spoke relative to the one on the left...but I'm stupid.

Inevitably the historic fires are going to lead to historic spreading of outlandish conspiracy theories, largely based on misunderstandings about fire.

Here I explain how houses can burn when adjacent trees do not.

@pstanley123 @edwardcurrent @ToeBiden "the weakest to start process" = the lower columns bucking because of the impact damage and lack of lateral support.

But really you have to understand what went on in the inside before the outside. The NIST simulations cover the broad strokes.

@pstanley123 @edwardcurrent @ToeBiden Actually yes. If you exclude the corner damage, then the building will crumple from the top corners first due to stronger lower column structure. With the lower damage the building first buckled near the bottom after interior collapse, the top came down more-or-less in one piece.

@gammaraybeam @Oswald1160 @pjrbarnett @uelbus @AFSUnidentified @JeremyCorbell Sure. But if we put aside the videos, then all we've got a bunch of (compelling/well credentialed/somewhat consistent) 15-year-old stories.
Videos are hard data that can be examined - something that most UFO events really lack.

They are also being used as evidence.

A common bit of fire conspiracy theory "evidence" is trees burning from the inside.

I looks weird, but it's just a hollow tree. Heart rot will make a tree almost into a rocket stove.

Dead dry wood in the middle, and a path for air to rise through.

The problem is that this is already getting repeated as a headline by clickbait channels. There's 82,000 people in Medford, it's the biggest city for 200 miles, lots of people will freak out, thinking their friends and relatives might be dead.

@truthbearer20 @OculusQ @BrianRoemmele @IWANTTOKNOW2020 @Z00KY @PredatoryPanic Well, if it IS a balloon it's that simple. If it's NOT a ballon, then that's far more interesting.

You can certainly speculate about what it might be, if not a balloon - but really that should be founded upon a base of evidence showing that it's not a balloon.

@OculusQ @BrianRoemmele @IWANTTOKNOW2020 @Z00KY @truthbearer20 @PredatoryPanic Well, it's probably just a helium ballon with some lightweight stuff stuck to it to resemble Sputnik-1. I don't think aerodynamics were part of the design.

@Z00KY @BrianRoemmele @Flyingh43892139 @IWANTTOKNOW2020 @truthbearer20 @PredatoryPanic Hmm, so a giant silver sphere "the size of two city busses" was flying around San Diego for several days, hovering for many minutes in single locations over the city, diving in the water, and shooting in the sky.

@katfisch21 @JeremyRys2 @Alien_Scientist The key point that most people miss is that it did not require much energy to separate a floor panel from the columns. So most of the mass ends up falling through the floors, increasing in mass as it goes.
It's not super complicated, but also not obvious.

2020-09-06T15:24:42+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1302628799666741248

@JeremyRys2 @katfisch21 @Alien_Scientist Yeah, there could have been some explosives which were not needed, worked perfectly in the middle of plane crash, explosion and fireball, and left no evidence.

But why would you suspect such a thing?

2020-09-06T15:20:29+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1302627740781178880

@pyrescene 2/2 It was known at the time that there were extensive investigations into leaks. There were many stories about this in the press back then. Gellman's initial assessment was more or less correct, and Corbett just focuses on a supposed "scoop" that changes very little.

2020-09-06T15:15:38+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1302626519433400320

@pyrescene 1/2 The "useful idiot" theory. I don't think anyone can be without bias. And I think Corbett's is showing here. He really mischaracterizes the situation, framing it in his own belief that 9/11 was gov organized, to the extent of including controlled demolition.

2020-09-06T14:51:58+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1302620564868136967

@JeremyRys2 @katfisch21 @Alien_Scientist The buildings mostly destroyed themselves - using the stored potential energy (i.e. gravity and height), the fire and impact damage is what started it.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1302352565665894400

@bonedaddy03 That's a gross misrepresentation of my analyses. Only the GOFAST video is likely a balloon. FLIR1 is probably a distant jet, and GIMBAL is probably the glare of a distant jet, rotating because the camera is rotating.

Very little of this contradicts the eyewitness accounts.

@tlathtoani @RayJack62496046 @LtTimMcMillan Investigating and pushing the limits of technology also sounds like a perfect reasonably thing to do.

Could some UAPs be experimental craft? Sure - lots of examples. Anti gravity? Unlikely, but possible.

Cool stuff, but what does it have to do with these 3 video?

2020-09-03T17:58:15+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1301580281552363520

@tlathtoani @RayJack62496046 @LtTimMcMillan 7/7 So I'd say resources are well spent in studying such things. Of course there's some odd pro-alien lobbying going on. TTSA's Mellon wrote the language for Rubio. But the military was doing this anyway, and they have to work with the sometimes silly civilians, so here we are.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1301578862178914304

@tlathtoani @RayJack62496046 @LtTimMcMillan 6/? FLIR1 (Nimitz) shows something the pilot did not identify. It's also part of a larger set of events involving incursions that were initially reported (by some observers) as UAP. So these events are worth studying, regardless of what they actually were.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1301578207276146688

@tlathtoani @RayJack62496046 @LtTimMcMillan 5/? GOFAST, likewise, seems to show that the pilots misinterpreted what they were seeing in the case of slow moving cool object being thought of as a fast moving object. Again, a great example video for training. A great "initial report" example for the UAP task force to study.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1301577579338412032

@tlathtoani @RayJack62496046 @LtTimMcMillan 4/? GIMBAL, for example, shows the pilots, at that time, could not identify what looks like a camera artifact. The video would be a great thing to train pilots with now, so if it happens again they will recognize what they are seeing. However this all is classified.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1301576912246980608

@tlathtoani @RayJack62496046 @LtTimMcMillan 3/? The videos certainly represent good examples of problem A. The pilot observers were unable to immediately identify what they were observing. This might be because they were amazing objects, or it might be a simple failure of training. They can study them and learn from them

@tlathtoani @RayJack62496046 @LtTimMcMillan 2/? Both of these issues are serious. We don't want unauthorized incursions, and we want pilots (and the system in general) to identify things as quickly as possible.

Neither of these issues is 100% solvable.

@tlathtoani @RayJack62496046 @LtTimMcMillan 1/? There being two areas of concern for any UAP task force:

B) incursions by unauthorized aircraft into designated ranges or restricted airspace

8)Has the Navy, or any other component, come to the conclusion that some of the unidentified sightings reported is due to an aerial phenomena with technological features not currently known to mankind?

A8) The Navy has not publicly released characterizations or descriptions, nor released any hypothesis or conclusions in reference to any reported sightings/observations. As the investigation of UAP sightings is ongoing, we will not discuss individual sighting reports/observations. However, all possible sources of information pertaining to any individual sighting reports/observations are considered in the respective investigations. The information obtained from each individual report of any suspected training range incursion will continue to be investigated in its own right. The information obtained in these reports will be catalogued and analyzed for the purpose ofidentifying any hazard to our aviators. This process could involve multiple Department of Defense and Intelligence Community organizations. Any report generated as a result of these investigations will, by necessity, include classified information on military operations. Therefore, no release of information to the general public is expected.

@Personanother1 @NIH_LLAMAS Ground effect does the opposite to what you describe. It's a plane, not a racecar. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EgtDeenUYAA77RQ.jpg

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia. For fixed-wing aircraft, ground effect is the increased lift and decreased aerodynamic drag that an aircraft's wings generate when they are close to a fixed surface. When landing, ground effect can give the pilot the feeling that the aircraft is "floating".

M: What contributes to the glare and the shape of the glare
K: In my experience, it's mostly, and I'm no optical expert, I'm not even an engineer that's designing this stuff, I just worked on them, so I get experience with them. In my experience, I see this same thing, on the flight line... So, I know what the cause is, the cause is the pilots and the crew chiefs wiping off that front glass with their sleeve [laughs]

M: Hmm
K: Now, you made that video today, kind of clarifying the difference between a few things, like glare, and I'm not sure that I have the terminology completely correct. But when I've seen it before [the glass was wiped], I guess you'd still have glare, but much more uniform, like in your flashlight video today. Just a round shape. But then say like with the Gimbal video, when it's got those "wings", the thing that actually turns. "Wings" is tricky to use, because we are talking UFOs here, but you know what I mean.

[06:00]

M: Yeah, like the saucer shape. A long axis and a short axis.
K: Right, saucer shape. That, in my experience, is usually scratches in the, ironic, anti-glare coating that's on the glass of the forward section. Scratches from dust, from crew chiefs and pilots wiping off the dust. In my experience.

M: I was just thinking, I did that video on the different types of glare. Would that anti-glare coating on the front of the pod, that's really to prevent reflection showing up outside the pod? So, like, glinting and things like that [K: Yeah] it would really affect anything inside of the pod - it's not to stop glare getting through, it's to stop reflections on the outside.
K: So "glinting" is a good word. And again I'm no optical expert. All I know is when I clean the forward section glass properly, those "wings", whatever you want to call them, go away @conorowens94 @Oswald1160 @GrahamWhatley @Personanother1 @UfoJoe11 @RodrigoLVieira1 @LueElizondo I suspect that a longer (180Â°) gimbal roll is more likely to cause loss of tracking than multiple smaller rolls with fine adjustment in between.

The bottom line for the algorithm is to keep the target centered. The 180Â° in FLIR1 did a worse job than the multiple rolls in GIMBAL @conorowens94 @Oswald1160 @GrahamWhatley @Personanother1 @UfoJoe11 @RodrigoLVieira1 @LueElizondo Sure it could. But again, that's not ideal. It's not like it's a little PTZ webcam. It has those internal gimbaled mirrors for that reason.

Especially when it's doing autotrack in NAR. Jitter is an issue.

@conorowens94 @Oswald1160 @GrahamWhatley @Personanother1 @UfoJoe11 @RodrigoLVieira1 @LueElizondo Rolling the pod is not desirable, because it's a coarse, heavy, mechanical movement, which will interfere with fine tracking. It's rotating a 20lb pod, vs some 0.1oz mirrors. So they use the mirrors as much as possible, then azimuth (ball) rotation. Roll is last resort.

@GrahamWhatley @Personanother1 @UfoJoe11 @RodrigoLVieira1 @LueElizondo But people are claiming things ABOUT THE VIDEO. i.e., people are claiming that the video shows a craft that rotates.

I'm demonstrating it's a glare, and the rotation is from the camera.

That's just regarding claims ABOUT THE VIDEO. Nothing else.

@GUFONRadio So what about my point regarding the rotation of the "Gimbal" object, that it seems to be a rotating glare on a jet engine. Is that not a valid point?

@SimpleComplex8 Oh I don't know, the four color map theorem was quite relevant before it was proven true in 1976. Models and theorems can be useful even if we don't know the absolute truth about them.

@knightsabers01 Mostly misidentifications, has been my experience.

However, like any good skeptic/debunker/scientist, I would be easily swayed by some good quality evidence.

2020-08-27T19:03:38+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1299060017849495552

@SJR78354712 Not really. Skeptics basic thing is they (we) ask for good evidence before accepting claims.

There's plenty of self-described skeptics who do what I would call "debunking." They prefer terms like "investigating".

I expound upon this here:
https://skepticalinquirer.org/exclusive/in-defense-of-debunkers/

2020-08-27T18:27:02+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1299050806600114177

@jorgecandeias It's a description of a conspiracy theory.

I'm basically just referring to topics about which there are conspiracies in the diagram, using short labels in many cases because people are familiar what the supposed conspiracies are.

2020-08-27T18:23:40+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1299049959027662849

I'm a skeptic. But I use "debunker" because you can use "debunk" as a verb. I do stuff, I investigate, I explain, I experiment I demonstrate.

You can debunk stuff, you can't skeptic stuff.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1299048704981098498

@IAmRobAherne Well, I put them all starting between 0 and 1. Pretty low. Because there are some quite plausible versions of all of them.

Big pharma pretty much starts at 0.

2020-08-27T18:17:09+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1299048322137649153

@Personanother1 @Aquila41631314 Look at the diagram. There's very little overlap.

The world is not binary.

2020-08-27T18:16:19+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1299048109251551232

@Personanother1 @Aquila41631314 The judgement of how "extreme" something is will also vary by individuals. But there's a general understanding of how deviant from mainstream science and history a theory is.

Flat Earthers might think their beliefs are reasonable, but recognize they are perceived as extreme.

2020-08-27T18:13:45+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1299047467200077825

@jorgecandeias The idea that it is a hoax is a conspiracy theory. Sorry that's a bit misleading in the diagram. It's really "conspiracy theories about global warming/9-11/JFK, etc."

I guess I should have field tested that a bit more.

2020-08-27T18:11:18+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1299046850327060482

@Personanother1 They are not equal at all, there's just some overlap - like the people who think the planes were holograms are pretty much as extreme as Flat Earthers.

But there's also a huge range where the two spectrums do NOT overlap.

2020-08-27T18:09:13+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1299046324810047488

@IAmRobAherne Lower than 1.3? That's pretty low.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1299046100909711361

@Personanother1 @Aquila41631314 There are many subjective scales that are in common use, and people find useful. Like the pain index scale.

But the subjectivity here is part of the point. Different people have different perspectives on what is "extreme" or just "bullshit". Where do you draw the line?

@IAmRobAherne Extremeness, as in deviation from normality. It's a subjective scale, like the pain index scale.

2020-08-27T17:01:45+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1299029347756462081

@Aquila41631314 "Extreme" as in diverging from history, science, and plausibility. Not "extremists" in the political activist sense.

It's a subjective scale from least to most, like the 1-10 pain index your doctor asks you about.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1299028799984504834

When people are suspicious of you as a source (and somebody inevitably will be), then the best way to present analysis is to show all the data and data sources so that people can verify or even recreate that analysis. A great example here from Christiaan Triebert and team.

@tommyIzito @aka__V @DaveFalch @JChurchRadio @ChiefBigNutsXX There is no pilot testimony with the Gimbal video. There's just the video. I'm just addressing the claims that the video is evidence of a rotating object.

@a51s1 @UFOApollo The hypothesis is that the camera was facing another plane with jet engines. Fairly normal, and only bright in infrared, so no blinding needed.

Also I don't think the pilots were "spoofing" anyone, they just did not immediately recognize what they were seeing.

@aka__V @PstarmanUa Sure, but first I'm showing people something that looks like the Gimbal video. So they see the similarities, then you can show both in white hot to explain how it got that way.

2020-08-26T16:21:48+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1298656904231571456

@JLuvin @PstarmanUa And if the cover rotates relative to the camera, you get the same effect, but derotation not needed.

Also..... a rotating pattern of light and dark in the sky that rotates with the glare.

By George, I think we've got it!

@PstarmanUa I'll probably do a video, but I'm still experimenting.

Camera, as noted is a FLIR ONE, Gen2.
The "Streaky Cover" is a bit of plastic from a Ziploc bag.
Post processing was just inverting the image to Black Hot (BLK), and derotating. Here is the original raw footage.

@edwardcurrent @conorowens94 @Bhima_Jenkins @aka__V @IBKING46 @ChristopherKMe4 It does. A full finger swipe usually creates a longer streak. But just touching the cover (of an iPhone) will change the shape of the glare.

@tommyIzito @DaveFalch @JChurchRadio @ChiefBigNutsXX No, the fine tracking is done with the internal heliostat mirrors. It does not need to do the major (coarse) roll constantly, just when a major correction is needed.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1298411289073442816

@tommyIzito @DaveFalch @JChurchRadio @ChiefBigNutsXX The camera traverses 0Â°, so around there it needs to do gimbal rolls to continue tracking. This rotates the horizon, but not the glare.

The derotation corrects this, leading to the apparent motion of the glare.

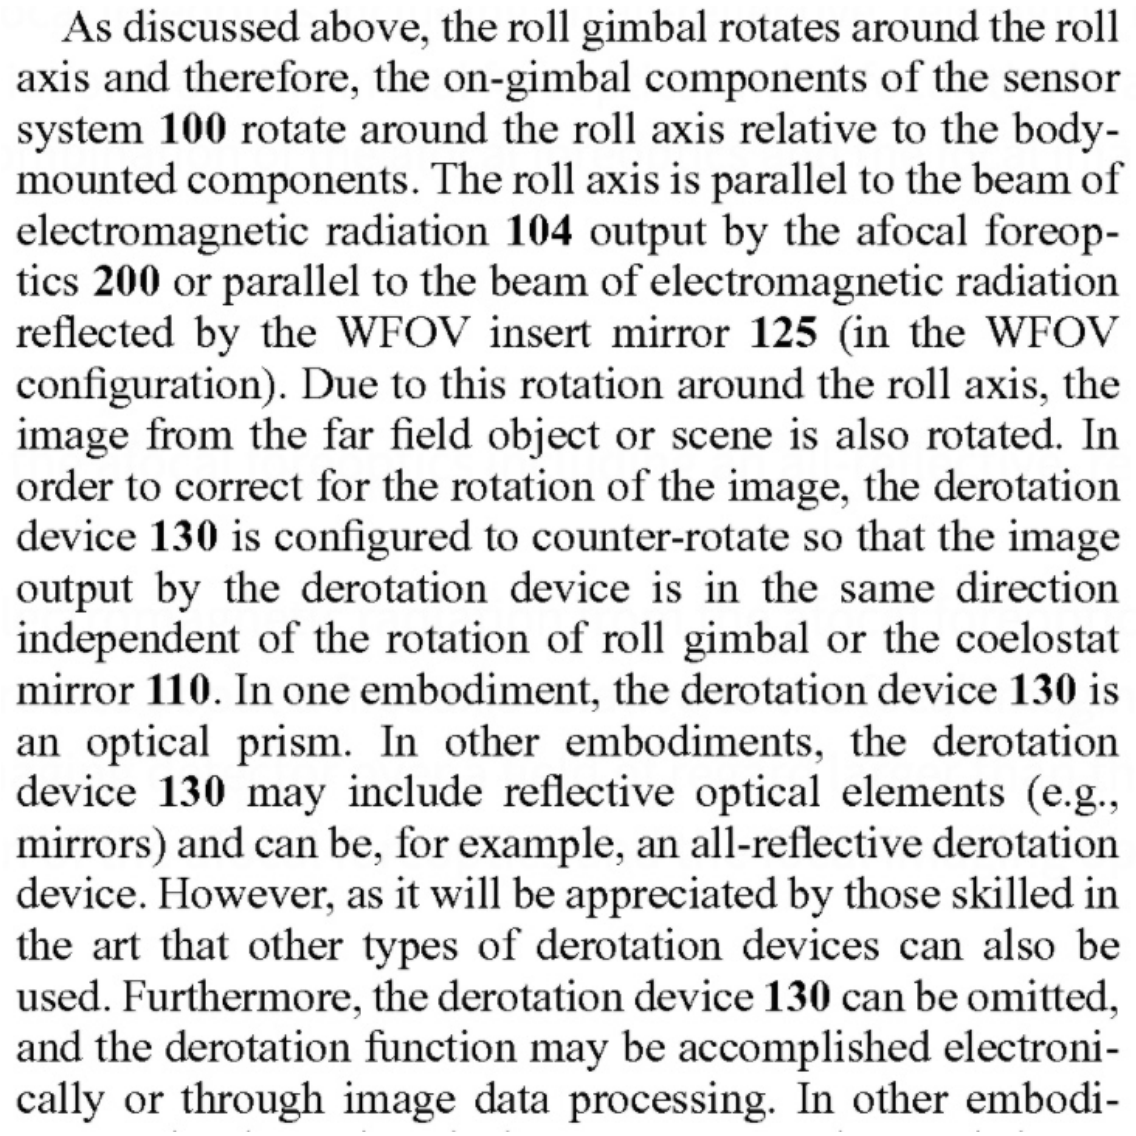
https://twitter.com/_/status/1298398133760614401

@DaveFalch @tommyIzito @JChurchRadio @ChiefBigNutsXX Derotation is an automatic function in ATFLIR to remove unwanted rotations from the roll gimbal. Turning it off would be a malfunction. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EgTV609VAAIe4WI.jpg



As discussed above, the roll gimbal rotates around the roll axis and therefore, the on-gimbal components of the sensor system 100 rotate around the roll axis relative to the body-mounted components. The roll axis is parallel to the beam of electromagnetic radiation 104 output by the afocal foreoptics 200 or parallel to the beam of electromagnetic radiation reflected by the WFOV insert mirror 125 (in the WFOV configuration). Due to this rotation around the roll axis, the image from the far field object or scene is also rotated. In order to correct for the rotation of the image, the derotation device 130 is configured to counter-rotate so that the image output by the derotation device is in the same direction independent of the rotation of roll gimbal or the coelostat mirror 110. In one embodiment, the derotation device 130 is an optical prism. In other embodiments, the derotation device 130 may include reflective optical elements (e.g., mirrors) and can be, for example, an all-reflective derotation device. However, as it will be appreciated by those skilled in the art that other types of derotation devices can also be used. Furthermore, the derotation device 130 can be omitted, and the derotation function may be accomplished electronically or through image data processing. In other embodi-@DaveFalch @JChurchRadio @ChiefBigNutsXX Infrared radiation is electromagnetic radiation just like visible light is.

It has some different properties, but it still follows the laws of optics: it can be: reflected, refracted, diffracted, transmitted, absorbed, scattered, and emitted. Just with different numbers.

@DaveFalch @tommyIzito @JChurchRadio @ChiefBigNutsXX Dero is not there to "level the horizon", Does the horizon look level to you? It's to keep the horizon in the display parallel to the actual horizon

https://twitter.com/_/status/1298395321370726402

@tommyIzito @DaveFalch @JChurchRadio @ChiefBigNutsXX No, because the horizon display conforms to the actual horizon. The derotation is to remove the unwanted rotation caused by the gimbal system.

2020-08-25T23:00:43+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1298394908785389568

@DaveFalch @JChurchRadio @ChiefBigNutsXX It does resemble them.

And are you saying the mirror optics are somehow immune to glare? That they are optically perfect and don't spread light at all? And, further, that ATFLIR NFOV has zero lenses before the derotator?

2020-08-25T22:47:04+00:00

@DaveFalch @JChurchRadio @ChiefBigNutsXX EXACTLY. THAT'S THE POINT!!!

The derotation mechanism rotates the entire image. Correct. That is what it is designed to do.

It rotates an image in which the horizon has ALREADY rotated, but the glare has not.

End result, horizon does not seem to rotate, but the glare does.

When some starts moving with impossible moves then "small" suddenly makes a lot more sense than "far away".

@Fractal_Stuff @AE911Truth There's a spectrum of the "fake planes" theories, and some people at AE911 are certainly on it. At the bottom end it's simply that the hijackers could not have flown the planes. I talked to Tony Szamboti, and he seemed convinced the planes were flown by radio beacons.

@SimpleComplex8 @LtTimMcMillan @HarveyGMcDonald I have "debunked" neither. You can't really debunk a broad topic. I've debunked a variety of claims of evidence in each topic. But you can't prove 9/11 wasn't an inside job, or that UFOs are all ordinary. 9/11 would be easier. Proving global negatives is impossible.

@Outlander_Black I think Trump heard "monkey" and was reacting to that.

@WilsonSeagull @ChristopherKMe4 @LueElizondo That would be great, but perhaps they could also get someone to address the losses of tracking that are visible in the video due to camera movement. And the fact that the last lock loss, LIKE THE OTHERS correlates with camera movement.

@cbdwizard A linear scale of 1 to 10 from least to most. Kind of like the subjective pain scale your doctor asks you. No units, just a rough position between two extremes.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EgJOhbAVAAE5oNY.jpg

Both conspiracy theories and conspiracy theorists exist on a spectrum. If we are to communicate effectively with a conspiracy-minded friend we need to get some perspective on the full range of that spectrum, and where our friend's personal blend of theories fit into it.

There are several ways we can classify a conspiracy theory: how scientific is it? How many people believe in it? How plausible is? But one I'm going use is a somewhat subjective measure of how extreme the theory is. I'm going to rank them from 1 to 10, with 1 being entirely mainstream to 10 being the most obscure extreme fringe theory you can fathom.

This extremeness spectrum is not simply a spectrum of reasonableness or scientific plausibility. Being extreme is being on the fringe, and fringe simply denotes the fact that it's an unusual interpretation and is restricted to a small number of people. A belief in religious supernatural occurrences (like miracles) is a scientifically implausible belief, and yet it is not considered particularly fringe.

Let's start with a simple list of actual conspiracy theories. These are ranked by extremeness in their most typical manifestation, but in reality, the following represent topics that can span several points on the scale, or even the entire scale.

@MajorlyMost I don't. If anything the UFO topic has more genuine evidence than the 9/11 controlled demolition theory. At least there actually ARE unexplained lights in the sky sometimes.

@TheChilterns Why, would you reject a UFO researcher because he believed 9/11 was an inside job?

I have seen similar things as a start of a questioning process. Like some 9/11 group leaders went into chemtrails, and their group broke up because of it. This happened organically.

Not a big deal, but I thought I should clarify my earlier tweet. @LueElizondo gives a numbered list of three paradigm shifts in human history. #2 and #3 are making fire and trans-ocean exploration.

What is #1? It's the allegory of Plato's cave. But what is it referring to?

@LueElizondo Of course, you don't. It simply sounded like you did, and so people unfamiliar with human evolution might think you mean it literally.

What WAS that paradigm shift then? What shadows were no longer real, and at what point in human history?

https://twitter.com/_/status/1546530950527324160

@james4125 There are two main hypotheses there.

1) It's two objects (maybe wedding lanterns, released in a pair, because of love, etc), that remain very close most of the video

2)A single lantern catches fire, and a bit of it burns off and away.

@Falkyrs Yes, it could be any super-hot object, including flying saucers, or even a hot djinn. But I tend to put the more common objects at the top of the list.

@MathewS65234556 @LueElizondo "maybe that was the first fundamental paradigm change for our species"

2022-07-11T16:14:03+00:00

@LueElizondo http://pbs.twimg.com/media/FXZfPmdUsAA3PAt.jpg

Among the best-known examples of allegory, Plato's Allegory of the Cave, forms a part of his larger work The Republic. In this allegory, Plato describes a group of people who have lived chained in a cave all of their lives, facing a blank wall (514a–b). The people watch shadows projected on the wall by things passing in front of a fire behind them and begin to ascribe forms to these shadows, using language to identify their world (514c–515a). According to the allegory, the shadows are as close as the prisoners get to viewing reality, until one of them finds his way into the outside world where he sees the actual objects that produced the shadows. He tries to tell the people in the cave of his discovery, but they do not believe him and vehemently resist his efforts to free them so they can see for themselves (516e–518a). This allegory is, on a basic level, about a philosopher who upon finding greater knowledge outside the cave of human understanding, seeks to share it as is his duty, and the foolishness of those who would ignore him because they think themselves educated enough.[12]

https://twitter.com/_/status/1546527383875776512

I hope @LueElizondo realizes the Allegory of the Cave is just an allegory, and we didn't actually evolve in caves, so crawling out of them to see the sky for the first time was not something that happened, and was not a fundamental paradigm change for our species.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1546364799335796736

@sharpless89 @rpowell2u No. The camera operator is moving the camera so sometimes it moves with the ground - in a similar way to how the camera in GoFast is ground tracking at the start (except more random)

SCU is misunderstanding something. Parallax, rotation vs. translation? The report is a mess.

2022-07-11T05:16:10+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1546362692163604481

@Falkyrs Not one iota. A jet engine causes a glare, obscuring the plane. That glare rotates due

https://twitter.com/_/status/1546361026941034497

This is the same error people made with the start of "GoFast." The GoFast object seems to skim over the ocean, even when the ocean is not moving. "How can this be parallax", people ask (understandably, it's not intuitive)

If a camera is tracking one thing, then the other moves.

2022-07-11T05:06:42+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1546360308716802050

Since the plane is in constant motion, even if the background is not moving (in the frame of the video), there's still parallax. A slow-moving or stationary object will still move across the background - entirely from the parallax effect.

2022-07-11T05:05:01+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1546359885423525889

Here's the problem, @rpowell2u.

Quote: "There are some frames of video having no background motion at all and the UAP can be seen changing locations relative to the background"

But, the camera is in a plane. It does not stop moving.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/FXXFlzhVEAAe3Ia.jpg

Introduction

Some arguments have been advanced that the object could be a balloon and that the motion of the balloon relative to the background is an illusion created by the motion of the plane circling the balloon. This is incorrect. There are some frames of video having no background motion at all and the UAP can be seen changing locations relative to the background. Consider Frames 711 and 712 of Figure 1:

Figure 1

Figure 1 clearly demonstrates the intrinsic motion of the UAP and that the motion of the plane from one frame to the next contributes nothing to the difference in the location of the UAP. This, in itself, does not eliminate the possibility of a balloon since a balloon could have drifted into the frames due to its own motion.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1546358988496809984

The SCU report on the Aguadilla UFO video demonstrates a fundamental misunderstanding of parallax. Yet it's held up as a "detailed analysis".

Lots of details does not mean good. Page 154 is the most egregious. Boldly stating "This is incorrect", then going on royally mess it up

Mick West 32:07 Realigning text with audio

And I'm curious as to why people, individual, that's part of my interest actually is is trying to figure out why people believe what they want, they believe why do people believe weird things? Why do people think that time-traveling humans from the future is actually a reasonable explanation? Why do they think that trickster spirits is a reasonable explanation? I know there's there's some fairly serious people who use the term trickster as kind of an explanation for UFOs. There's some kind of trickster from another dimension, who has come over, you know, Jaque Valee, I think, is a big proponent of this and his, his colleague, I forget his name now, that they talk about tricksters. What is it that actually makes people who are, at one point, serious scientists go over to thinking that, essentially, poltergeists from outer space is a reasonable explanation for things. Now I don't say that to — that sounds like I'm mocking them. But that's actually the type of things they did ...

EW Eric Weinstein 33:16

It sounds like you're mocking them

Mick West 33:17

It does sound like I'm mocking them. Yes, I know. But that's an unfortunate,

EW Eric Weinstein 33:20

Look, I don't want to trap you in, Mick, I don't trap you in language. If it sounds that way to your ear well, it's just real quick, real quick, I want to I want to address that point. Like, I'm not mocking them. I'm essentially trying to accurately describe their positions. And it's unfortunate that with a lot of these things, if he's talking about say, flat Earth, if you tried to describe the position, it comes across as ridiculous. When someone is is using "tricksters from another dimension" as an explanation for UFOs, it comes across as ridiculous, but it's actually what they say.

Mick West 33:24 Realigning text with audio

However I don't see any indication anything has changed. TTSA still has the same incorrect analysis of GO FAST on their site. https://thevault.tothestarsacademy.com/2015-go-fast-footage Great compilation of thermal glares by Dave Falch. The commentary somewhat misses the point as he focuses on cases where the glare does NOT obscure the plane (unlike with the Gimbal video). But there's still some examples of that. Different camera though flashlight video today. Just a round shape. But then say like with the Gimbal video, when it's got those "wings", the thing that actually turns. "Wings" is tricky to use, because we are talking UFOs here, but you know what I mean.

M: Yeah, like the saucer shape. A long axis and a short axis.
K: Right, saucer shape. That, in my experience, is usually scratches in the, ironic, anti-glare coating that's on the glass of the forward section. Scratches from dust, from crew chiefs and pilots wiping off the dust. In my experience.

M: I was just thinking, I did that video on the different types of glare. Would that anti-glare coating on the front of the pod, that's really to prevent reflection showing up outside the pod? So, like, glinting and things like that [K: Yeah] it would really affect anything inside of the pod - it's not to stop glare getting through, it's to stop reflections on the outside.

@conorowens94 @CuriousUap @uelbus @PstarmanUa @PostDisclosure Yeah, and as Underwood recalls, the radar was unable to "hack it", and could not get the speed or heading of the target, so not being able to get range seems correct.

@ReverendRude @6ebquj5 @michaelshermer Yes, it does. That's the whole point. The question is WHY it appears to be rotating.

@conorowens94 @CuriousUap @uelbus @PstarmanUa @PostDisclosure It's not "wrong" as far as I know. It's an indicator that there's no range data. If there's no range data, then that's the correct indicator.
Like 12:00 is the wrong time, but flashing 12:00 has a specific meaning.
Common coding thing, not great UI.

@PostDisclosure @uelbus @CuriousAnthrop1 @JeremyCorbell Right, I disagree with him. I think he's wrong. I explain why he's wrong, and I demonstrate it. He does not address the other losses of lock.

2020-08-20T20:46:07+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1296549096077922310

@conorowens94 @CuriousUap @uelbus @PstarmanUa @PostDisclosure I think it's below the horizontal plane, or the plane defined by the forward axis, and the wing axis projected onto the horizontal plane that passes through the center of rotation. i.e. corrected for roll.

We can tell this as this does not change as the bank angles changes.

2020-08-20T20:39:59+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1296547552351752193

@PostDisclosure @uelbus @CuriousAnthrop1 @JeremyCorbell No, it implies he thought the final loss of lock was due to object movement, and not 2x zoom change (which actually occurs AFTER the loss). He does not address at all the other times lock is visibly lost (and re-acquired) when changing modes, or during the two gimbal rolls.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1296546513741463552

@conorowens94 @CuriousUap @uelbus @PstarmanUa @PostDisclosure I'm told 99.9 just means no range value is available. It's an indicator, like flashing 12:00 on a clock. It does not mean anything has been scrambled, just that no range was acquired when he toggled the range display.

2020-08-20T20:33:17+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1296545866774323201

@conorowens94 @PostDisclosure @uelbus @CuriousAnthrop1 @JeremyCorbell It was a change from NAR to WFOV, which is a physical lens change.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1296536889646657536

@DericKnight @PostDisclosure @JeremyCorbell @uelbus @CuriousAnthrop1 It is on the computer. The human just designates targets. Once lock is fully lost they would have to move the camera and re-designate it. Computer algorithm tries to keep lock and tries to regain after initial loss

https://twitter.com/_/status/1296516392498290688

@PostDisclosure @uelbus @CuriousAnthrop1 @JeremyCorbell And digital zoom changes (1x to 2x and back) should not make it lose lock at all. This is something Corbell totally misunderstood. He's obviously conflating the explanation of the sudden 2x visual jump with the explanation of the earlier track loss. Totally different things.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1296515740325965824

@PostDisclosure @uelbus @CuriousAnthrop1 @JeremyCorbell Changing modes here means changing camera or changing lenses. The system will be designed to keep the target centered during these changes. But it's impossible to be mechanically perfect. Most of the time it gets the lock back. One time it does not.

@buffcommacu Seriously. It's not something you can just magically solve. You can expose for the small bright source and everything goes black, or you can expose for the scene, and you get glare. To do both requires either multiple exposures (like HDR on a phone) or astonishing HDR sensors.

The Gimbal UFO video famously shows a "rotating" object when the camera rotates. An optical artifact.

We can see the camera rotate in the Nimitz FLIR1 video, so why does that not also show this rotation?

Actually, it does.

And this rotation might hold a clue.

I'd like a second by second breakdown of event in the 60 seconds after it drifted out of frame. What he did with the FLIR camera is important thing. Did he zoom out? Did he pan left?

@JLuvin @Oswald1160 @paulsanderson So you are suggesting it went 20 miles in seconds? How many? Ten? So 7,200 mph?

It basically just drifted off the left side, at the exact same speed the camera was tracking it before it lost lock. Chad made no attempt to follow it with the camera. Then he lost it.

@Oswald1160 @JLuvin @paulsanderson It sounds very plausible that the radar object and the video object were different. He says he was not getting a good reading from the radar. He has also said it was consistent with a weather event, just everything else made him think not.

But what if it was unrelated? http://pbs.twimg.com/media/Efyhy_nU4AAVxvJ.jpg

Have you ever seen a weather event on an ATFLIR?
I would say if I captured this object on my sensors independently, like I was the only one that saw it or tracked it, I might have blown it off as something like a weather event. But the amount of people and sensors from other independent sources who found it — given the time period Dave Fravor saw it, and an hour and a half later I went out and saw it, and we captured basically an object with the same description — leads me to believe that a weather event would be unlikely.

All on board systems were functioning normally. The radar was in a standard search mode (RWS/ 80NM/ 4bar/ intr) and the FLIR was in L+S slave (the FLIR would point in direction of an L+S track). There was no radio or communication interference and they had entry into the Link-16 network. Initial awareness of an object came via the radar. According to the radar display, the initial tracks were at approximately 30-40 nm to the south of the aircraft. LT [redacted] was controlling the radar and FLIR and attempted multiple times to transition the radar to Single Target Track (STT) mode on the object. The radar could not take a lock, the b-sweep would raster around the hit, build an initial aspect vector (which never stabilized) and then would drop and continue normal RWS b-sweep. When asked, LT [redacted] stated that there were no jamming cues (strobe, champagne bubbles, "any normal EA indications"). It "just appeared as if the radar couldn't hack it." The radar couldn't receive enough information to create a single target track file. The FLIR, in L+S slave, pointed in direction of the initial track flies as the radar attempted lock. The FLIR showed an object at 0 ATA and approximately -5deg elevation (Figure 2). According to LT [redacted], "the target was best guess co-altitude or a few thousand feet below," estimating the object to be between 15-20 thousand feet. The object, according to the FLIR, appeared stationary (Figure 3). There was no discernable movement from the object with the only closure being a result of the aircraft's movement. As LT [redacted] watched the object it began to move out of FLIR field of view to the left. LT [redacted] made no attempt to slew the FLIR and subsequently lost situational awareness to the object. The Flight continued with training mission with no further contact with object.

00:25:11,279 --> 00:25:15,889 altitude hold it's just flying for that

00:25:13,980 --> 00:25:20,100 so you can go ahead and play the video

00:25:15,890 --> 00:25:21,870 and so those two bars next to the white

735
00:25:20,099 --> 00:25:23,998 object that's a that's a that's a

736
00:25:21,869 --> 00:25:26,218 passive track so what he's done is he's

00:25:24,000 --> 00:25:28,290 commanded the FLIR to track that so what 738

00:25:26,220 --> 00:25:30,298
the system does is it uses its actually

00:25:28,289 --> 00:25:32,159 tracking it can track pixels and it's

00:25:30,298 --> 00:25:33,689
just basically blocked those hot pixels

00:25:32,160 --> 00:25:36,209
those white pixels from the black ones

742
00:25:33,690 --> 00:25:38,369 and you're gonna see now pause it real

00:25:36,210 --> 00:25:39,629
quick so it over the top see it went to 744

00:25:38,369 --> 00:25:41,219
a white screen with the black object

One thing to note that when going from WFOV to NAR, the reticle is initially tiny. Also there's a full-screen loss of video. It's just a different set of data, different outcome.

00:08:10:08,00:08:14:18,what was different about 00:08:11:15,00:08:16:12,this was as soon as i took that lock the 00:08:14:18,00:08:17:23,track started doing all sorts of just 00:08:16:12,00:08:20:20,little things that are not 00:08:17:23,00:08:22:22,normal the heading was erratic it should 00:08:20:20,00:08:25:07,be able to tell me your air speed 00:08:22:22,00:08:26:00,and also your mach number so it should 00:08:25:07,00:08:28:10,say like
00:08:26:00,00:08:29:21,point eight mach for example so you know
00:08:28:10,00:08:31:21,eighty percent the speed of sound
00:08:29:21,00:08:33:07,it should say that it was jumping all
00:08:31:21,00:08:34:12,over the place it was like point eight
00:08:33:07,00:08:36:18,point four point two 00:08:34:12,00:08:39:01,point one point nine and it's just it's 00:08:36:18,00:08:41:13,just like my radar can't hack it 00:08:39:01,00:08:42:22,and in all instances it should be able 00:08:41:13,00:08:44:20,to hack that 00:08:42:22,00:08:46:08,and then i was also receiving what 00:08:44:20,00:08:47:09,they're called strobe lines and they 00:08:46:08,00:08:50:16,just basically look like 00:08:47:09,00:08:52:24,lines on your radar that are 00:08:50:16,00:08:54:14,indications that you're being jammed so
00:08:52:24,00:08:56:22,that tic tac jamming us 00:08:54:14,00:08:58:10,would be considered an act of war it's 00:08:56:22,00:08:59:23,not that i'm going to go shoot down an 00:08:58:10,00:09:01:13,aircraft because of jamming me but i'm 00:08:59:23,00:09:03:09,going to report back to my boss that is 00:09:01:13,00:09:05:03,jamming me and i've got proof of it
00:09:03:09,00:09:07:05,and that'll make its way to the pentagon
00:09:05:03,00:09:07:25,it has consequences he was offensively
00:09:07:05,00:09:09:19,jamming us
00:09:08:00,00:09:11:21,just outside international waters and 00:09:09:19,00:09:13:01,peacetime operations it's an act of war
00:09:11:21,00:09:15:01,and we're going to go out there and make 00:09:13:01,00:09:16:04,you pay for that it does have 00:09:15:01,00:09:17:25,consequences
00:09:16:04,00:09:19:23,however that plays itself out and that's 00:09:18:00,00:09:22:20,where i was like okay this is 00:09:19:23,00:09:24:14,this is something different i was like 00:09:22:20,00:09:26:06,okay i've got a flare lock 00:09:24:14,00:09:27:21,flare is just giving me optical and 00:09:26:06,00:09:29:03,infrared information they can't 00:09:27:21,00:09:30:20,optically jam me
00:09:29:03,00:09:32:08,so i went to the flear pod and that's @conorowens94 @Thucydides___ @LtTimMcMillan @JeremyCorbell "why there is zero signature rotation 50L-15L in gimbal" - maybe because the ATFLIR is not rotating the head assembly (along the horizontal long axis) at that time. It's using the heliostat mirrors, and possibly the tilt, to track.

2020-08-18T14:02:25+00:00

@conorowens94 @Thucydides___ @LtTimMcMillan @JeremyCorbell At 0:51-0:52 the loss was due to a camera rotation, not camera change. Bar expansion was larger. At 1:15 the software did not expand the search area. If it did then it would have easily got it.

@Phenomenology19 It's sometimes called "streak flare" - terminology here is not well defined. But it's really a type of glare if you say that glare is direct (unreflected) scattered light, and flare is internal reflections.

If you don't like using "glare" then use the longer descriptions.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1295715117280067585

@Phenomenology19 It's irrelevant exactly what it is exactly. It rotates with the camera, so it's a camera artifact. Could be the dirt/rain/dust pattern on the front window. Could be something internal.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1295714085179289601
@Phenomenology19 You are are mixing two different things, and unfortunately there is not a standard terminology here. By "glare" I'm referring to unreflected scattered light that spreads from a light source. So "streak flare" is really a type of glare.

Lens flare is from reflections. Different.

@LtTimMcMillan @Thucydides___ @JeremyCorbell Iâ□□m questioning the argument from authority. People argue that since Chad was there, and is a Navy pilot, then his assessment is correct. But the fact that heâ□□s wrong about the lock shows this is not always the case.

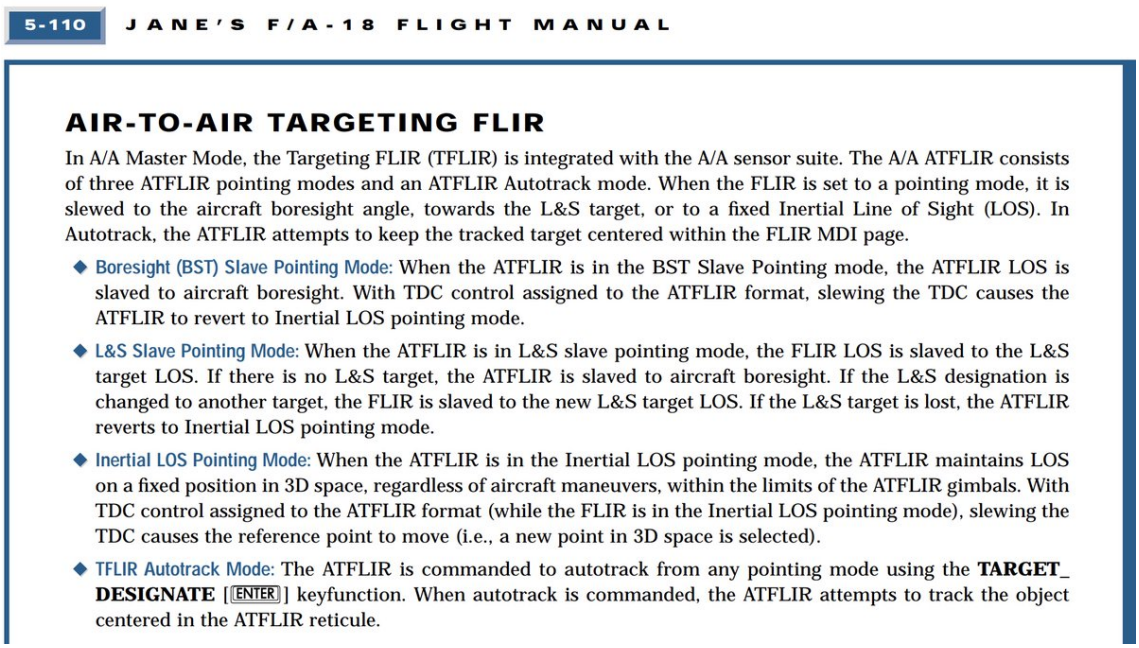
@All4LightBearer @uapufo It does sometimes. It' called autotrack.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/Efrcus7U8AECCMW.jpg



5-110 JANE'S F/A-18 FLIGHT MANUAL

AIR-TO-AIR TARGETING FLIR

In A/A Master Mode, the Targeting FLIR (TFLIR) is integrated with the A/A sensor suite. The A/A ATFLIR consists of three ATFLIR pointing modes and an ATFLIR Autotrack mode. When the FLIR is set to a pointing mode, it is slewed to the aircraft boresight angle, towards the L&S target, or to a fixed Inertial Line of Sight (LOS). In Autotrack, the ATFLIR attempts to keep the tracked target centered within the FLIR MDI page.

- Boresight (BST) Slave Pointing Mode: When the ATFLIR is in the BST Slave Pointing mode, the ATFLIR LOS is slaved to aircraft boresight. With TDC control assigned to the ATFLIR format, slewing the TDC causes the ATFLIR to revert to Inertial LOS pointing mode.
- L&S Slave Pointing Mode: When the ATFLIR is in L&S slave pointing mode, the FLIR LOS is slaved to the L&S target LOS. If there is no L&S target, the ATFLIR is slaved to aircraft boresight. If the L&S designation is changed to another target, the FLIR is slaved to the new L&S target LOS. If the L&S target is lost, the ATFLIR reverts to Inertial LOS pointing mode.
- Inertial LOS Pointing Mode: When the ATFLIR is in the Inertial LOS pointing mode, the ATFLIR maintains LOS on a fixed position in 3D space, regardless of aircraft maneuvers, within the limits of the ATFLIR gimbals. With TDC control assigned to the ATFLIR format (while the FLIR is in the Inertial LOS pointing mode), slewing the TDC causes the reference point to move (i.e., a new point in 3D space is selected).
- TFLIR Autotrack Mode: The ATFLIR is commanded to autotrack from any pointing mode using the TARGET_DESIGNATE [ENTER] keyfunction. When autotrack is commanded, the ATFLIR attempts to track the object centered in the ATFLIR reticule.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1295520530095693824

@uelbus @TRandallizer @MolotoVNKA @ExploreSCU I asked an Avionics System Technician about that. He said 99.9 RNG it meant null data, i.e. no radar lock. It popped up because Underwood toggled it on, but there was no lock.

Maybe that would happen when jamming, but it does not MEAN jamming occurred.

2020-08-18T00:36:19+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1295519862295416833

@TRandallizer @MolotoVNKA @uelbus It's a way of selecting which target you want. Look at GO FAST. He had to get it inside the reticle. It took several goes. Then he was golden, as nothing changed.

2020-08-18T00:34:56+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1295519514453368832

@uelbus @TRandallizer @MolotoVNKA No, he wanted to "debate" the entire topic of UFOs. I just wanted to discuss some details.

2020-08-18T00:34:21+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1295519366998446080

@uelbus @TRandallizer @MolotoVNKA @ExploreSCU I think they may have mistakenly asked someone about how hard it is to break a radar lock. This was no radar lock. (The 99.9 indicates no range data is available) The tacking is just based on the image you see there. So easy to lose when switching lenses or cameras.

2020-08-18T00:31:23+00:00

@FringeCenter @PostDisclosure @RoninSamTripoli @TheProjectUnity @michaelshermer @joerogan @g_knapp @JeremyCorbell @NoRemorseAFVET4 These? I think there are a variety of explanations for a variety of different events. Adversarial craft at some point is an obvious possibility.

2020-08-18T00:29:42+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1295518198830227456

@TRandallizer @MolotoVNKA @uelbus It's looking for things inside the reticle. If it does not find them, then it expands it. You see it expand right at the very end of the video. AFTER it has left the screen.

It just missed it, that's all. So the object proceeded because the camera was no longer tracking it.

2020-08-18T00:25:35+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1295517160228261888

@uelbus @chad_vfa41 I would be happy to do it, providing we could do screen sharing, and Chad watches the "No Sudden Moves" video first.

@FringeCenter @PostDisclosure @RoninSamTripoli @TheProjectUnity @michaelshermer @joerogan @g_knapp @JeremyCorbell @NoRemorseAFVET4 I don't. I'm saying the lock losses are due to camera movement, not movement of the object. I'm not jumping from that to anything. Although I would certainly take it into consideration when hypothesising what the object might be.

> The thing that stood out to me the most was how erratic it was behaving. And what I mean by "erratic" is that its changes in altitude, air speed, and aspect were just unlike things that I've ever encountered before flying against other air targets. It was just behaving in ways that aren't physically normal. That's what caught my eye. Because, aircraft, whether they're manned or unmanned, still have to obey the laws of physics. They have to have some source of lift, some source of propulsion. The Tic Tac was not doing that. It was going from like 50,000 feet to, you know, a hundred feet in like seconds, which is not possible.

A constant problem with debunking is that people who disagree with your explanation think you are either stupid or lying.

Since those are the only options they have, I only get to disabuse one of them.

Generally I don't bother with either, as it's the third option that counts.

@conorowens94 @DaveFalch @PostDisclosure @Oswald1160 @charliedeets @JeremyCorbell @davigray I think here we wade into speculation. What did he say?

He went to great pains to say the dero would rotate the glare and the scene together, because it's just rotating an image. He did not discuss if the earlier rotation might rotate the glare and scene separately.

2020-08-15T22:59:42+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1294770772615938048

@conorowens94 @DaveFalch @PostDisclosure @Oswald1160 @charliedeets @JeremyCorbell @davigray Because the rotation is not an illusion caused by the derotation mechanism. It's quite clear for the subsequent discussion that they both thought the theory was that the derotation rotated the glare independently of the scene.

They did not realize there was ALREADY a rotation.

@steven_nikolic @JeremyCorbell It's not "the irregular plume of a banking jet". It's more likely in level flight the entire time. It's far away, so small, but very hot, so the glare is large.

Close one eye, squint the other to a slit, and then look at a small flashlight. Tip your head left then right.

The glare patterns rotate, but the background doesn't, because your brain DEROTATES the image.

Do it with a camera, and the background moves while the glare doesn't

This makes the world rotate relative to the glare.
World is now at wrong angle. Glare angle irrelevant to the operator, but world angle is important.
Derotator rotates the entire image back.
Result: world does not move, glare does.

@steven_nikolic @JeremyCorbell My base hypothesis is that we are seeing the glare of a jet engine and we are JUST seeing that glare rotate. This is backed up by A) the rotation of the light and dark regions with the glare and independent of the horizon. B) plausible physical mechanisms for this rotation.

@conorowens94 @charliedeets @DaveFalch @JeremyCorbell @davigray @PostDisclosure That's not really technically speaking. I think that's confusing the issue.

I think you are asking if it's A) stray radiation spreading from the bright radiation source. B) sensor bloom, or C) a bit of both?

I'd be happy to get super-technical. But we should go for clarity.

So when the derotation puts the horizon where it is supposed to be, the glare looks like it's rotating. After derotation, there can still be things that contribute to glare.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1294456059294134273
@charliedeets @DaveFalch @JeremyCorbell @davigray @PostDisclosure No. It's glare, not flare.

It's a really hot object (looking down the exhaust of a jet engine) that shows up, essentially, as a VERY bight light, so there's glare directly around it.

The SHAPE of the glare is what is rotating, because something along the optical path rotates.

@charliedeets @DaveFalch @JeremyCorbell @davigray @PostDisclosure Glare is different to lens flare - although terminology usage varies a little.
Lens Flare is internal reflections in the lens.
Lens GLARE is what you see directly around a bright light. Shine a flashlight in your camera, and you will often see both.

@SicCoP1 @JLuvin @LtTimMcMillan @KeenwaAcai Or that they took it seriously, and decided there was nothing worth looking into because the info was consistent with local weather, traffics, and events. If it falls within certain criteria it's assumed friendly. So no big deal.

(3) A radar contact correlated with an authenticated/secure voice (position) report from an air or ground control agency.

(4) External/onboard CID systems (e.g., blue force tracker or non-cooperative target recognition).

(5) Visual ID.

c. Procedural ID. Procedural ID is based on adherence to airspace control measures and rules. ID is assumed to be friendly as long as rules are followed, but ID may be assumed hostile if rules are not followed and the suspect aircraft is not otherwise positively identified. Procedural ID separates airspace users by geography, altitude, heading, time, and/or maneuver (e.g., MRRs).

d. Auto-ID Systems. Some weapon systems have the capability to execute an auto-ID function (e.g., aircraft carrier auto-ID, Aegis-equipped ships, and Patriot missile systems). Use of auto-ID can reduce the workload (no man in the loop) and improve the timeliness of the ID process in an extremely dynamic/saturated AD environment, but it also can result in mistaken ID and friendly fire, engagement of noncombatants or civilians, or inadvertent protection for the enemy.

e. Formation Assessment. Applicable to both friendly and hostile formations Seems no urgency.

@SicCoP1 @JLuvin @LtTimMcMillan @KeenwaAcai Maybe someone should ask the Navy what that actually means.

They DID say the results of any investigation would be classified. So maybe that's "we are not going to identify them to you" @spiralgold1 Huh? You might want to think that through a bit more.

The 2x zoom is a crop. Why would that change the relative size of the glare.

2x digital zoom (crop) on an image simply makes the chosen 1/4 of the image twice as big (in both directions).

Hence at 1x, it's half the size.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1293954186858524672

@JLuvin How would that even work?

I'm genuinely asking here. The Chilean military took two years of careful study to declare Iberian flight 6830 a UFO.

What do you think this protocol would look like?

@LtTimMcMillan @JoeBiden @KamalaHarris No. You are just going to get another dose of reality. The UAP issue in the military seems to be just about domestic and foreign airspace incursions of a relatively mundane nature. It's not the epoch-making topic people think it is. Further studies of this problem will be accomplished at the contractors facility since a full engineering investigation is not feasible at this level. (U)

In the researching of other possibilities, weather was ruled out as a contributing factor in the incident.[81] (U)

A check with Communication maintenance verified that there was no unusual activity with EWO-1 or EWO-2 at the time of the incident.[82] (U)

Rumors of Unidentified Flying Objects (UFO) around the area of Echo Flight during the time of fault were disproven. A Mobile Strike Team, which had checked all November Flight's LFs on the morning of 16 March 67, were questioned and stated that no unusual activity or sightings were observed.[83] (U)

The 801st Radar Squadron, Malmstrom AFB, gave a negative report on any radar or atmospheric interference problems related to Echo Flight.[84] (U)

1 - By being outside the restricted area. Gimbal and FLIR1 are miles away.
2 - By being a military aircraft, part of a larger group, or different group. Just not sure which exactly.
3 - By actually being identified later.

Does the Gimbal UFO video become more understandable as a glare if you view it actual size? The video was recorded with 2x digital zoom. Here's what it might have looked like without the digital cropping.

The glare is tiny, the super hot jet engine behind it smaller still.

Narrow FOV does not make or prevent glare around bright radiation sources. It's the size and brightness of the radiations source, and the exposure.
Switching to NFOV here makes the heat source larger, so the exposure adjusts, glare shrinks.

Unfortunate they are hard to find. Here's two jet planes, obscured by glare, not really spiking.

The diffraction spikes you talk about A) very by camera, and B) are reduced at high altitudes - less turbulence.

As discussed above, the roll gimbal rotates around the roll axis 242 generally perpendicular to the first rotation axis 244. Therefore, the on-gimbal components 310a* of the sensor system 300 are configured to rotate around the roll axis 242 relative to the body-mounted components 310b*. The roll axis 242 is parallel to the beam of radiation output by the afocal fore-optics 110 or parallel to the beam of radiation reflected by the WFOV insert mirror 325 (in the WFOV configuration). As discussed above, rotation around the roll axis 242 enables pointing the first coelostat mirror 220 in the azimuth direction or horizontal direction to enable the first coelostat mirror to receive radiation from a desired object or scene. However, due to this rotation around the roll axis 242, the image from the far field object or scene is also rotated. In order to correct for the rotation of the image, the derotation device 330 is configured to counter-rotate so that the image output by the derotation device is in the same direction independent of the rotation of roll gimbal around the roll axis 242 or the rotation of the first coelostat minor 220 around axis 244 or the rotation of the second coelostat minor 230 around axis 248. In one embodiment, the derotation device 330 is an optical prism. In other embodiments, the derotation device 330 may include reflective optical elements (e.g., minors) and can be for @alpha_check @JeremyCorbell And Underwood says the aspect vector (the indicator of the target's travel direction) "never stabilized" - so how could it "start spinning around"?

@alpha_check @JeremyCorbell But then we have Underwood quoted in this report:

All on board systems were functioning normally. The radar was in a standard search mode (RWS/ 80NM/ 4bar/ intr) and the FLIR was in L+S slave (the FLIR would point in direction of an L+S track). There was no radio or communication interference and they had entry into the Link-16 network. Initial awareness of an object came via the radar. According to the radar display, the initial tracks were at approximately 30-40 nm to the south of the aircraft. LT [redacted] was controlling the radar and FLIR and attempted multiple times to transition the radar to Single Target Track (STT) mode on the object. The radar could not take a lock, the b-sweep would raster around the hit, build an initial aspect vector (which never stabilized) and then would drop and continue normal RWS b-sweep. When asked, LT [redacted] stated that there were no jamming cues (strobe, champagne bubbles, "any normal EA indications"). It "just appeared as if the radar couldn't hack it." The radar couldn't receive enough information to create a single target track file. The FLIR, in L+S slave, pointed in direction of the initial track flies as the radar attempted lock. The FLIR showed an object at 0 ATA and approximately -5deg elevation (Figure 2). According to LT [redacted], "the target was best guess co-

@tinypolitics @ScottAdamsSays It's probably a plane. The glare comes from the jet engine(s)

Remember the Chilean Navy UFO case? That had pilots mistake a glare for something else. That was a plane too. Glare can be a LOT bigger than the engines.

@sandboxpro @ScottAdamsSays It's flying away. The apparent leftward motion is mostly from the following plane (with the camera) flying at (initially) 54Â° right of it (see the 54Â°L indicator). As it get more straight on, the apparent motion vanishes.

"Rotation" coincided with the ~0Â° gimbal lock traversal.

@10dollarbeer @ScottAdamsSays Trail? You only see fairly short cones of heat in IR. When the glare is big enough it covers all the details. Especially when (as seems to be the case here) the jet is facing away from the camera. Apparent motion (and slow down) is mostly parallax.

@conorowens94 @rethgifoof The camera is only rotating one way when contributing the the glare rotation. It's the gimbal lock traversal. You can't see this rotation because of the derotation that keeps the horizon where it should be.

@conorowens94 @minizug @rethgifoof It's because the shape the of IR image in FLIR1 is representative of the aircraft and engine configuration. It's not glaring enough to obscure the actual shape.

There's a huge variation in IR glares, just like with visible light glare. Depends on brightness, camera, contrast.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1291746414632906752
@ChucalescuJR @DavidPittelli1 I'm not dismissing the entire story. This video isn't even from the Nimitz encounter.

All I'm doing here is pointing out strong evidence of a reasonable (albeit unintuitive) explanation for the apparent rotation in the "Gimbal" video. Just the apparent rotation. That's it.

2020-08-07T14:39:15+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1291745729145262080
@ChilliChris1 It's unfortunate that understanding the Gimbal artifact rotation requires a bit of mental exercise.

But it's something of a fallacy to describe this mental exercise as "gymnastics" and use that to suggest it's wrong.

It's complicated. It's understandable people don't get it.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1291744555490897922
@DavidPittelli1 @ChucalescuJR And they just saw it once, on a tiny screen, while flying a plane.

I've seen it hundreds of times, on my giant monitor, frame by frame, sped up, slowed down, contrast enhanced, and with lots of time to think about it.

And I'm not just opining, I'm showing evidence.

2020-08-07T14:31:41+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1291743824021078018
@ChucalescuJR Possibly a fleet of alien spaceships, or Chinese anti-gravity drones. Or something more or less interesting.

Here I'm pointing out that the "Gimbal" object is a glare, and the apparent rotation is a camera artifact.

Nothing more.

Notice they rotate as the "gimbal" rotates?

Notice the horizon hardly moves?

https://twitter.com/_/status/1291742616531296256
@ChucalescuJR Sure, if they could see it.

Here they are just looking at the glare on the screen, like everyone else. In those 40 seconds or so (at least) they did not identify it from the video.

@zaytsev_evgeny Sure, but that seems BY FAR the most likely explanation for a distant heat source that looks like the heat from a jet engine.

Of course it could be a really hot alien spaceship or advanced human flying craft. But if it's not rotating, then why would you think that?

@rethgifoof Notice he does not actually address the details of the glare hypothesis. Instead he mocks it and then makes some vague appeal to authority - an authority that has ALSO not addressed the glare hypothesis (in public).

Look at the video. Explain that rotation.

2020-08-07T14:03:15+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1291736666277781506

The Gimbal UFO video is not a rotating flying saucer or a rotating aircraft of any type. It's a rotating glare from the jet engine of the non-rotating aircraft. You see this as other, larger image patterns also rotate in sync with the glare.

The glare rotates. The light patterns in the background rotate with the glare. The horizon does not rotate.

Paranormal "orbs" are usually night-time optical phenomena caused by out-of-focus dust or water droplets lit by a flash.

Here's a daylight "orb" - a bit of fluff (maybe spider silk) drifting in the air currents, going in and out of low sun, so seeming to glow bright orange.

@Flyingh43892139 @charliedeets Fascinating stuff. The onion rings come from grinding and polishing the surface of the lens.

I'd suspect the few blurry rings might be from a lower quality, maybe small lens?

@Flyingh43892139 @charliedeets I'm not entirely sure. The classic onion-ring pattern comes from the way the lens is ground. Patterns with fewer rings seem to come from aspherical lens elements. Interesting thread on it here:

I think I was mistaken earlier referring to this orb UFO as an "Airy Disk". Airy disks are patterns around dot light sources (like stars) that are in focus. This seems more like an out-of-focus light.: i.e "bokeh", and the concentric circles are referred to as "Onion ring bokeh" @mesolithicguy Well, there are plenty of planes, and many cameras have a hard time focussing on a point of light. So it's entirely expected that there would be many videos like this.

@SocialistFT I agree a balloon seems more likely. But I would not eliminate a well insulated bird. The air at 13,000 feet is 45 Â°F colder than the air at sea level. Birds do fly that high, so they must be able to survive - and they don't do it by rapidly radiating heat.

@JLuvin @ChristopherKMe4 If I were spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on my debunks, I'd at least do a little fact checking. I do that anyway!

Look at what they did. A known solved case presented as a UFO, and a common image artifact presented as a UFO.

It's deception or incompetence. Maybe both @IamDrVenkman So you think they have data about real extraordinary craft, but they can't release it, so they use things that they KNOW are not extraordinary craft?

I think it's more likely they just don't know how to investigate UFOs. They were actually fooled by bokeh.

TV Shows about UFOs are expected to gloss over huge inaccuracies, rehash solved cases, and even have fabrications.

But when one star of the show, @ChristopherKMe4, is literally writing military-related legislation for Marco Rubio, I would have expected something more measured.

3 weeks was just to get the simulation starting going.

Chapter 3

3.6 COMPUTING CONSIDERATIONS

3.6.1 System Specifications

All simulations were run on ARA's high speed Linux Beowulf computer cluster. The system consisted of a head node and eight compute nodes. The head node housed two 64 bit AMD Opteron 250 2.4 GHz processors. The head node had 4 GB of RAM and housed 1.5 terabytes of RAID 5 disk storage. Each compute node housed two 64 bit AMD Opteron dual-core 285 2.6 GHz processors. Six of the compute nodes had 8 GB of RAM, and the remaining two nodes had 16 GB RAM. The compute nodes communicated using Silverstorm Infiniband Interconnects.

3.6.2 Model Size and Typical Run Time

The global model was constructed with 3,593,049 nodes and 3,045,925 total elements. The type and number of the elements were: 3,006,910 shells, 3,190 beams, 2,461 solids, 33,364 discrete elements, and 3,050 rigid elements.

The global simulation was first initialized under gravity loading over 4.5 s of simulation time. Then damage and temperature initialization states were applied over 4 additional seconds. Collapse propagation in the global model required approximately 16 additional seconds after initialization, for a total of close to 25 seconds of simulated time, which generally took up to 8 weeks using 12 CPUs across 3 nodes (4 CPUs per node).

3.6.3 LS-DYNA Version

The analyses were performed with the LS-DYNA finite element code (Version mpp971dR4 beta, revision 41161). Use of this double precision code results in longer run times than a single precision version would require. However, a double precision version was necessary. In structural models where there are physically large dimensions (spatial extents of the building) compared to the characteristic element length, and long time scales compared to the explicit time step size, rounding errors can occur and accumulate when using a single-precision analysis. To address this issue, the double precision version of LS-DYNA was used for the global analyses @Douglas41004693 @QTRResearch The complexity of a simulation increases proportional to the square of the number of objects in it, as each object can affect each other object. So with 100 objects, that 10,000 interactions. With the 3.5 million in the model, that's 12 trillion complex interactions.

But, relevant apparent motion come from lock loss from physical camera changes

The patent says "a reflective derotation mechanism". As Dave notes, it's more efficient to use mirrors.

The key things to think about are:

1) What contributes to the shape of the glare

2) Where is the derotation?

The orientation of the glare is dependent on the orientation of the camera. So as the camera rotates relative to the horizon the glare HAS to rotate relative to the horizon.

Then the image is derotated. Horizon fixed. Glare rotates.

@HarveyGMcDonald @SuperVFunCat1 @apocryphal_x @SomewhereSkies I did, yes. Not that that means they saw something extraordinary - but I'm certainly not assuming they were lying. Most people don't.

And the analysis of the videos one way or the other has no bearing on other events that were not videoed.

Science proves contrails are made of ice. It's not the simplest of science though. Lots of people think colors in a trail indicate oily chemicals. They actually indicate pure water. Not water vapor, but hexagonal ice crystals. https://t.co/gmUVdeGabX @HarveyGMcDonald @SuperVFunCat1 @apocryphal_x @SomewhereSkies I believe they probably thought they saw that. It seems unlikely that they actually did. No video of anything like that exists. I think it was more likely an optical illusion caused by misjudging distance. Or perhaps (but less likely) an alien craft.

@webidextrous You can ask, but generally if a subject is Top Secret, then you are not going to answers, even about exactly WHY it is top secret.

Top Secret information is exempt from FOIA, and the "exceptionally grave damage" is the boilerplate response you'll get to why, if you get anything.

@webidextrous That's simply the default description of the "top secret" classification that some items that were included in a powerpoint had.
Of course they can release "more information", they simply can't release top secret information.

It's just boilerplate language for not releasing TS

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/Edt8_NaU0AIz0hV.jpg

11.2.4 The contrail is formed about one wingspan behind the aircraft when the exhaust has mixed with sufficient air of the environment to produce saturation. The edges of the trails are ragged to begin with but further mixing evaporates these and the trail becomes smooth: this indicates that the condensation persists only in the low pressure region of the vortex cores.

Close to the aircraft it is seen that the two trails from the inner engines descend further than the outer ones, those on the right being separately visible but the outer left one being behind the inner left one. Often one complete rotation of the inner round the outer one can be seen.

In the second picture the trails appear hollow. This is because the exhaust did not enter the middle of the vortex core. The particles are too small for centrifuging to be significant.

The irregularities are intensified, and at the right end the mixing penetrates in a few places into the vortex cores and dissipates the cloud. The spacing of the loops must be determined by the distance apart of the vortices: irregularities of all wavelengths are unstable, but two loops very close together merge into one, while new loops can appear between those that are rather far apart. The interval between the first and last pictures is 90 sec.

Motion identical with that shown here has been observed in smoke trails emitted at the wing tips of a Comet aircraft at 3,000 metres which is far below the normal altitude for contrails.

11.2.5 The condensation outside the vortex cores persisted in the trail of the first aircraft to pass, but not in the trail of the second. It seems probable, therefore, that the first trail was frozen as a result of being at an environmental temperature near to or below −40°C. (See 11.4.)

These pictures were taken looking vertically upwards over a period of about three minutes, and because the aircraft was on a turn the downwash was inclined outwards. The effect is to give a view rather like the side view of a straight trail (see 11.2.3, 11.2.8). Where the vortices are closest together they have penetrated farthest, and the blobs correspond to the places where the mixing has penetrated into the vortex cores. In the lowest picture the linear clouds are composed of the detrained accompanying fluid.

A rather dramatic reduction in revelations in the NYT UFO story, as corrected the next day. From Harry Reid believing in "vehicles from other world" to him believing in "objects of unknown origin"

Why the change? Is Reid concerned about image or accuracy?
http://pbs.twimg.com/media/Edtl9ogUEAAwQLn.jpg

For more than a decade, the Pentagon program has been conducting classified briefings for congressional committees, aerospace company executives and other government officials, according to interviews with program participants and unclassified briefing documents.

In some cases, earthly explanations have been found for previously unexplained incidents. Even lacking a plausible terrestrial explanation does not make an extraterrestrial one the most likely, astrophysicists say.

Mr. Reid, the former Democratic senator from Nevada who pushed for funding the earlier U.F.O. program when he was the majority leader, said he believed that crashes of vehicles from other worlds had occurred and that retrieved materials had been studied secretly for decades, often by aerospace companies under government contracts. JULY 23,2020, 2:58 p.m ET

"After looking into this, I came to the conclusion that there were reports — some were substantive, some not so substantive — that there were actual materials that the government and the private sector had in their possession," Mr. Reid said in an interview.

No crash artifacts have been publicly produced for independent verification. Some retrieved objects, such as unusual metallic fragments, were later identified from laboratory studies as man-made.

One of the more interesting examples of controlled experiments with Uri Geller was one in which he was able to cause a part of a vanadium carbide crystal to vanish (Hasted et al., 1975). The crystal was encapsulated so it could not be touched, and it was placed in such a way that it could not be switched with another crystal by sleight of hand. A more spectacular series of rigorously controlled (and repeatable!) laboratory experiments occurred in the Peoples Republic of China (PRC). In September 1981, an extraordinary paper was published in the PRC in the journal Ziran Zazhi (transl.: Nature Journal), and this paper was entitled, "Some Experiments on the Transfer of Objects Performed by Unusual Abilities of the Human Body" (Shuhuang et al., 1981). The paper reported that gifted children were able to cause the apparent teleportation of small objects (radio micro-transmitters, photosensitive paper, mechanical watches, horseflies, other insects, etc.) from one location to another (that was meters away) without them ever touching the objects beforehand. The experiments were operated under exceptionally well-controlled conditions (both blind and double-blind). The researchers involved included not only observers from various PRC colleges and medical research institutes, but also representatives from the PRC National Defense Science Commission. Because of the involvement of the latter, it was deemed necessary that an unclassified Intelligence Information Report be prepared by the DIA (see Shuhuang et al., 1981), which included a detailed English translation of the article.

Additional research carried out by the Aerospace Medicine Engineering Institute in Beijing was reported in the July 1990 issue of the Chinese Journal of Somatic Science (Kongzhi et al., 1990; Jinggen et al., 1990; Banghui, 1990), which was also translated into English by the DIA. Reported in several articles are experiments involving the videotaping and high-speed photography of the transfer of test specimens (nuts, bundles of matches, pills, nails, thread, photosensitive paper, chemically treated paper, sponges dipped in $FeCl_3$, etc.) through the walls of sealed paper envelopes, double layered KCNS type paper bags, sealed glass bottles and tubes with sealed caps, and sealed plastic film canisters without the walls of any of these containers being breached. All of the Chinese experiments reported using gifted children and young adults, who possessed well-known extraordinary PK ability, to cause the teleportation of the various test specimens. In all the experimental cases that were reported, the test specimens that were teleported were completely unaltered or unchanged from their initial state, even the insects were @PotatoRamirez No more than usual.

Unidentified airspace incursions are a serious issue. Some people conflate this issue with their personal fascination with possible alien visitor. Media loves a good UFO story.

That's all.

instantaneously but in a controlled, intelligent manner "tumbled" into nonsensical angles, that made any engagement by the F-18 impossible. OK-2 and OK-3 were approximately 1000 to 3000 feet from the object when the object turned and "pointed at them". OK-2 conducted one or two evasive turns in their F-18 but the object appeared to maintain positive and dominant control of the airspace.

At no time during the incident did either F-18 have radar contact with the object; however, OK-6 and the female air controller confirmed radar contact. After approximately 8 to 10 seconds, both Source and OK-2 lost visual contact with the object. When Source looked back at the area where the ocean was disturbed, the water was again smooth and calm with no signs of anything submerging. (Field Comment – Source used a pen to describe how the object behaved when OK-2 and OK-3 approached it. Source also drew a picture of the incident, see attachment.)

Upon losing visual contact with the object, both F-18s were low on fuel and returned successfully to the U.S.S. Nimitz without further incident. Upon recovery of both aircraft, Source, OK-1, OK-2, and OK-3 arrived for their routine intelligence debriefing only to find that no debriefing official was available. Furthermore, closed circuit television onboard the ship had movies involving aliens and Mr. Bray. That is correct.

Mr. Krishnamoorthi. How about wreckage? Have we come across any wreckage of any kind of object that has now been examined by you?

Mr. Bray. The UAP Task Force doesn't have any wreckage that isn't explainable -- that isn't consistent with being of terrestrial origin.

@mannlock2 Gravity works downwards. The floor panels could not support the upper mass, so when it was not directly on the columns it just fell through the floor panels, and the outer walls fell away, the inner core, unsupported fell a few seconds later.

The engineers at AE911Truth says these flashes are evidence of explosives being used.

Which is silly because they occur after global collapse started, and many are in mid-air.

They are most likely sunlight reflections from falling sheets of glass.

insulation. A general relationship between the size of the bird and the average surface temperature of the feather is apparent (Fig. 5). The feather-surface temperature of the larger birds, in particular, approached ambient temperatures (see Table 1) during the extreme cold exposures which would result in less convective heat loss because of better or more insulation in these birds. @skullanbone @JeremyCorbell Well, Jeremy is discussing my analysis of these three videos. Will this "lots of stuff" help with that? What? How?

2020-07-19T00:43:10+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284649949305561089

@XRPMultiverse @JeremyCorbell @Rollie3333 @joerogan @g_knapp Kinda vague. I made a calculation (including an interactive model based on the on-screen data) and got 1/10th that speed. (i.e. around 20-40mph)

The speed calculation starts at 4:33, but uses figures discussed earlier.

@IvanHeadless @PostDisclosure "Who cares" is a common response to lots of things I debunk.

@JeremyCorbell @Rollie3333 @joerogan @g_knapp It's kind of bizarre that you said that GOFAST "gives us very little information." It actually gives us the MOST information of the three videos - because it's the only one with an accurate RNG (range) reading.

We can use that to find the object's altitude and approximate speed

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284645008474116097

@JeremyCorbell @JurriaanMaessen So why not address my actual video analyses? Why raise straw men of birds and banking jets?

GIMBAL = rotating glare, not a banking jet.
GOFAST = slow (~40mph) balloon (maybe bird, unlikely) at 13,000 feet
FLIR1 = distant plane, no sudden moves.

2020-07-19T00:15:21+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284640761179369473

@alpha_check @PostDisclosure @JeremyCorbell @BoardGameBuddha @joerogan @g_knapp GOFAST didn't jam. They got a good range reading - that's how we know it wasn't going fast.

So let's say it was a weather balloon with a radar reflector. How exactly would the F18's IFF ability work there?

@CuriousUap @drumshticknow @JeremyCorbell @joerogan And the reason I don't think the tic-tac shaped thing was a bird is because birds are not tic-tac shaped.

@CuriousUap @drumshticknow @JeremyCorbell @joerogan Only to people who don't actually watch my videos.

The bird thing is practically a smear campaign. I DON'T think that a bird is the most likely explanation of GOFAST (and obviously it not the explanation for GIMBAL or FLIR1). I don't think the tic-tac shaped thing was a bird.

2020-07-18T23:55:00+00:00

@SuperVFunCat1 @PostDisclosure @JeremyCorbell @BoardGameBuddha @joerogan @g_knapp I'm not pushing the bird thing. It became a bit of a meme on UFO Twitter. It's a distraction and made an easy straw man for JC to attack. Unfortunate he messed up even that, so now I've got to debunk his debunk of something I don't think is very likely.

Still, science fun.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284636360804929536

@drumshticknow @JeremyCorbell @joerogan It's great that he figured out he was wrong, but I'm interested in how he figured it out and why he was so incredibly wrong in the first place.

2020-07-18T23:47:29+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284635938845372416

@drumshticknow @JeremyCorbell @joerogan I initially thought a bird was the likely explanation, but it quickly became apparent that a balloon was a better explanation. Bird is still possible though.

Jeremy though was utterly incorrect about the "pocket of cold air", an entirely baseless and nonsensical claim.

2020-07-18T23:43:23+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284634905998049280

@ufobelievers @PostDisclosure Birds at 13,000 feet are cold. Not that I think it's a bird - but that "debunking" is wrong.

@RobAgs0817 @PostDisclosure @JeremyCorbell @BoardGameBuddha @joerogan @g_knapp And with Nimitz, I don't think the radar was tracking birds. But I'm not convinced that all the

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284633924598001667

@RobAgs0817 @PostDisclosure @JeremyCorbell @BoardGameBuddha @joerogan @g_knapp I'm not discussing the Nimitz incident here. I'm talking about GOFAST video, which is where Corbell is attempting to debunk the bird hypothesis by saying it was too cold. I don't think it was a bird, but I think his debunking was wrong.

2020-07-18T23:35:43+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284632976781762560

@PostDisclosure @JeremyCorbell @BoardGameBuddha @joerogan @g_knapp Don't get me wrong though I don't think it was a bird. But more because of the strong radar return.

But the "hypothermic bird" counterargument that Jeremy makes does not seem to hold up to analysis.

2020-07-18T23:32:19+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284632121525415936

@PostDisclosure @JeremyCorbell @BoardGameBuddha @joerogan @g_knapp And the air at 13,000 feet is 45Â°F colder than the air at sea level. So probably colder than the sea surface. So if the hypothetical well-insulated bird's outer feathers were a similar temperature to the air, then they would appear to be colder than the sea surface.

2020-07-18T23:29:44+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284631468732342272

@PostDisclosure @JeremyCorbell @BoardGameBuddha @joerogan @g_knapp I mean, Jeremy claims to have debunked the "cold bird" theory by saying the bird would be hypothermic, and dead. But it seems even his analysis of a straw man (straw bird?) is faulty.

An extreme example, some penguins actually appear colder (in IR) than the air they are in.

2020-07-18T23:26:59+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284630776844148736

@PostDisclosure @JeremyCorbell @BoardGameBuddha @joerogan @g_knapp Yet Jeremy seems to be attacking me on specific points, and I'd like to respond.

Maybe we could EVEN talk about the "cold bird" theory. I don't think a bird is likely, but why wouldn't the surface feathers of a well insulated bird at 13,000 feet appear colder than the ocean?

2020-07-18T23:21:36+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284629423820427264

@JeremyCorbell @BoardGameBuddha @joerogan @g_knapp Or maybe you could explain why you think that the "debunker explanation" of GIMBAL is a jet banking? The actual explanation I've been discussing for 2.5 years is that it's NOT banking. It's a camera artifact from the derotation mechanism. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EdPrjSzUMAEOQ9A.png

The IR/CCD optical bench 42 houses the IR sensor 20 which comprises an IR sensor receiver 22, the time multiplexed modulated infrared (IR) reference source 21 that is mechanically aligned to the center of the field of view of the IR sensor receiver 22, a multi-spectral beam combiner 28 that combines beams of the coaligned IR sensor receiver 22 and the IR reference source 21. In the IR optical path is an IR imager 27 (or IR imaging optics 27), a focus mechanism 24, a reflective derotation mechanism 25 that derotates the IR beam to keep the IR image erect, and an IR relay beam expander 26 that expands the beams associated with the coaligned IR sensor receiver 22 and IR reference alignment source 21.

@JeremyCorbell @BoardGameBuddha @joerogan @g_knapp Or maybe you could explain why you were so convinced that the GIMBAL was surrounded by a pocket of cold air, but you now think it's a FLIR artifact? Was I helpful there?

2020-07-18T23:15:38+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284627921110368256

@JeremyCorbell @BoardGameBuddha @joerogan @g_knapp Gosh Jeremy. Perhaps we could actually address the points of analysis that you disagree with.

Maybe start with the speed of GOFAST - you said something like 200+ MPH on JRE. That seems wrong. Can you show your math?

2020-07-18T23:12:50+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284627217553608705

@nathanielswmor1 @tommyIzito @PotatoRamirez @joerogan I don't know what the GOFAST object is. I do know it's not going fast. And a balloon fits what the videos shows. I also know that balloons, if unidentified, would be considered UAPs.

But I doubt that THIS video (GOFAST) has anything to do with the UAP study.

2020-07-18T21:37:10+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284603140541562881

@JeremyCorbell Wrong. I present Fravor's encounter exactly as he describes it. I hypothesize about some possible things that could explain some portions of the encounter (most importantly the apparent motion being caused by a parallax illusion from misjudged distance)

I don't know what he saw.

@JeremyCorbell An "act of war", right - so they handled it by casually telling another pilot to keep his eyes open, then he (Chard Underwood) just videos something for a bit and does not chase it?

This is not really handling an act of war. You are being hyperbolic.

@rethgifoof That's not out of context. I DON'T rule it out. I just don't think it's very likely.

Ruling things out is one of the great failings of any investigation. The Chilean Navy case being a perfect example:

@MajorlyMost @mesolithicguy @joerogan The "just math" is things like the calculation on the speed of the "GO FAST" object.

You can do that math, and see that it's actually high and slow, not low and fast.

That doesn't tell you what it is. But unless the ATFLIR display is incorrect, then it's inarguably slow.

@chasekuertz @JeremyCorbell @joerogan I won't rule out anything, as that ruling out could be based on incomplete or erroneous information. I just rank things.

GOFAST and GIMBAL are different objects. (one hot, one cold).

Maybe they were training on ATFLIR, trying things out.

2020-07-18T15:38:45+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284512941883056128

@chasekuertz @JeremyCorbell @joerogan You are mistaken. A bird was raised as a possibility about 2.5 years ago for GOFAST. However it swiftly became apparent that a balloon was the more likely explanation.

I'd not rule out a bird (or a drone, or an alien spaceship), but it's certainly not #1.

@chasekuertz @JeremyCorbell @joerogan Corbell is flimflamming you about birds. Nobody is picking "birds" as the #1 hypothesis for ANY of the videos. Corbell brings is up because it's easy to poke holes in (which is why it's not #1).

Or maybe he's just not really following the actual analyses?

Either way - weak!

@PotatoRamirez @JeremyCorbell @joerogan The big picture is made up of lots of little details. It's important to get as many right as possible.

I'm glad Jeremy recognized this error. I'd hope it would cause him to check other assumptions in more detail. But apparently not - still going on about birds and banking.

@PotatoRamirez @tommyIzito @joerogan @ChristopherKMe4 I'm an image and video analyst. I'll give my options on other topics, but I don't claim to be some kind of expert.

@tommyIzito @GeezerSqueezer @UFOResearchers @ufotodaynetwork @joerogan What pilot's interpretation are you referring to? The pilots initially probably though it was going fast too. I know I would.

Would they think that later after doing the math? No. I'm sure even Fravor would accept the trig, if he took the time to do it.

@tommyIzito @UFOResearchers @GeezerSqueezer @ufotodaynetwork @joerogan A hypothesis requiring some thought does not mean it is wrong.

GIMBAL is a glare. The glare obscure the plane. You are just seeing one (very hot) temperature - the jet engine(s)

2020-07-18T14:30:44+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284495828069912577

@tommyIzito @GeezerSqueezer @UFOResearchers @ufotodaynetwork @joerogan The FLIR is in ground track mode. It's not expecting something at 13,000 feet. It's a passive (optical) acquisition with manual input. So to the software (and the pilot) it initially LOOKS like something moving very fast.

But the radar range tells a different story.

2020-07-18T14:28:06+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284495164010983435

@tommyIzito @PotatoRamirez @joerogan @ChristopherKMe4 I'm not saying "they are balloons". I try to avoid blanket statements.

I think GOFAST is probably a balloon. I think GIMBAL is a jet engine glare. I think FLIR1 (the video, not Fravor's visual or radar) is a distant plane.

None of that is inconsistent with pilot testimony.

2020-07-18T14:23:55+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284494110221426691

@tommyIzito @UFOResearchers @GeezerSqueezer @ufotodaynetwork @joerogan A bird at 13,000 feet?

While I don't think a bird is likely, I would not entirely rule it out - especially based on fallacious reasoning.

Corbell talks about a bird's core temperature. But we are not seeing that on FLIR, we are seeing the temperature of the outer feathers.

2020-07-18T14:21:47+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284493576227831809

@GeezerSqueezer @UFOResearchers @tommyIzito @ufotodaynetwork @joerogan The GOFAST object is not travelling at extreme speeds. It's got a relative velocity of around 40 mph, maybe less.

It's probably a balloon.

@UFOResearchers @tommyIzito @ufotodaynetwork @joerogan @BrandonFugal It they have a supernatural event that is repeatable, then why don't they repeat it? New science! Claim a Nobel prize!

https://twitter.com/_/status/1284491180252606464

@tommyIzito @PotatoRamirez @joerogan @ChristopherKMe4 It's not on a mountain in Colorado. It's over open ocean.

Standard lapse rate is 3.5Â°F per 1000 feet. So at 13,000 feet over the ocean the air is roughly 45Â°F cooler than at sea level.

So even if the air was 80Â°F at sea level, it would be 35Â°F at 13,000 feet.

@tommyIzito @PotatoRamirez @joerogan @ChristopherKMe4 What data is lacking from my GOFAST analysis?

We have the distance to the object from the plane, the altitude of the plane, and the angle the camera is below horizontal.

From that we can calculate the altitude of the object. No data is missing from that calculation.

Both explanations fit the video. One seems vastly more likely to me.

@Santtu234 @LeifNordh @MiddleOfMayhem "clearly"??? It's not showing up on camera in some sections because of low relative contrast and high noise.

So it kinda LOOKS like it's going behind the hill. But that does not mean that it is, does it?

@MiddleOfMayhem @LeifNordh Yes, it's just showing the last bit of motion - the dramatic zip-by that that's common with these type of drone videos.

I did a bunch of physical experiments.

@LeifNordh @MiddleOfMayhem Here's a newer similar video. Static camera, but it's showing how a small object can go "behind" something when it's a similar brightness. People also thought this was a supersonic craft.

@keigh_see @flattenedOA @TheWrongQuest @ninjashoes Two things. Objects (or light) being "visible" vs. details being "resolvable". Details can be too small to see individually (be resolved) at some distance (like leaves on a tree). But you can still see the tree.

A laser pointer is smaller than a leaf, but visible at 10 miles.

Very simple reality check: 25,000 feet is 4.1 NM. The object is 4.3 NM away (RNG). So the only way it works is for the camera to look straight down. But the camera angle is only 27 degrees down.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1273304083848294400

@JLuvin @DaveFalch @DaveSFoley @JeremyCorbell It's auto-calibrating. It's as accurate as a standard laser pointer thermometer.

The sky just reads really cold. So even ice (and ice clouds) can seem "hot" against it. Ice here is 8Â°F , sky (slightly hazy) is -4Â°F, so the ice is warmer than the apparent temp of the sky.

@charliedeets @DaveFalch @DaveSFoley @JeremyCorbell The camera adjust the image for the overall scene contrast, just like a regular camera. The temperatures measured should not really change though.

2020-06-17T16:40:17+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1273294403797266432

@charliedeets @DaveFalch @DaveSFoley @JeremyCorbell It's measuring incoming thermal radiation (Long Wave Infrared with this camera, I think). The "sky" isn't a a solid object, it's not really radiating heat. The "temperature" of the sky is only an apparent temperature. The air along the line of sight is lots of different temps.

2020-06-17T16:36:12+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1273293378071826432

@tommyIzito @BrandonFugal Well if he's offering to pay my expenses I might consider it. But it seems like a bit of a crapshoot regarding when "phenomena" show up.

2020-06-17T16:01:04+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1273284537317879808

@ContactTour1 @ufouapam @thustweetedmike @PostDisclosure @DrStevenGreer It seems quite reasonable to be skeptical that one can summon aliens by meditating around a camp fire.

Such an extraordinary claim requires strong evidence. Lacking that, it also casts suspicion on related claims by the same people.

This is not an immutable position though.

2020-06-17T15:57:36+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1273283663329849346

What "temperature" is the "sky"? Depends where you point your thermal camera, and how hazy it is. Near a slight hazy horizon it's 30Â°F, in deeper blue sky it's -60Â°F (so even ice looks "hot" agains it). Ambient air temperature is 70Â°F.

@tommyIzito @BrandonFugal What's to debunk? Tom has something wrong with his scalp. Travis had a red mark on his hand that look exactly like a small friction burn (scrape), like you might get when hefting around a large piece of concrete.
So HOW do you confirm that's a radiation burn?

@tommyIzito @BrandonFugal Sure. But it's not like one can just pop round have have a supernatural experience. I'm busy. Travel there is tedious and expensive. As Brandon agrees, there's nothing there that can be repeatable demonstrated or tested. What would I do there? What exactly are you envisaging?

@ufo_classes @BrandonFugal No, there's a difference between shutter speed and frame rate. Here it was 1/15th of a second between frames, but as it was bright sunlight, the exposure was a fraction of a second, maybe 1/1000th or so. So flies look like a series of snapshots. Here's an actual example. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EZnjq3VUwAAbd2S.jpg

In a weak finale to The Secret Of Skinwalker Ranch (History Channel), they attempt to link what looks like a fly to the Navy UFO videos by claiming there's a "halo" around it. And it kind of looks like they faked that because when they zoom in later, it's gone.

Even the "alt-right haven" Twitter alternative Gab is pushing back at Trump's threats against social media. And with good reason, the weakening of CDA 230 would threaten their existence, probably even more than Twitter's.

Don’t Get Excited About The White House’s Social Media Censorship Executive Order

Share This Post On Enemy Platforms

Share Tweet Reddit

According to reports the White House has a drafted an executive order to address social media censorship by targeting Section 230 of the CDA. If reporting on the current draft is correct then this is bad, very bad. It’s easy to get excited that action is finally being taken against the Silicon Valley oligarchs, but this isn’t the right solution. At all.

@UFOA3 Debunking is identifying and removing false claims. "Something you witness with your own eyes" does not fit UNLESS you made a mistake in interpreting what you saw.

There's often a describable difference between objective reality and subjective experiences of that reality.

Does debunking work? It can take a while, and sometimes it can see like you are going backwards. But yes, it does work. Ultimately people DO value facts, even if they are initially resistant.

And the people you reach might not be ones you are arguing with.

@tlathtoani @ChristopherKMe4 @PostDisclosure @LtTimMcMillan @nickpopemod @james_greywood @Deepneuron "Public trust" is important. But I'm not really seeing a lack of public trust arising from the Navy saying that they can't always identify airspace incursions, but they are working on it.
99% of public don't care. So it comes across as a UFOlogist's invented rationalization.

@tlathtoani @ChristopherKMe4 @PostDisclosure @LtTimMcMillan @nickpopemod @james_greywood @Deepneuron I'm a big fan of "civilian input". But the DoD is faced with a trade-off between secrecy and crowd-sourcing their UFO investigations (with a middle option of onerously selectively declassifying things one bit at a time)

I'm not saying it's good thing. Just being realistic.

You know EVERYTHING has a "heat signature" right? Especially against the cold sky. It's just what a target looks like in IR.

This is a heat signature. Probably not a missile, but still a heat signature.

@c64f7e94 @BrandonFugal I think the other fly video comparison kind of removes the need for that type of thing.

The lower bound would be at least as close as this piece of grass. Maybe six feet away.

But I really don't think there's an issue here.

@c64f7e94 @BrandonFugal Depth of field? The object appears to be something far enough away to be not blurred much more than the trees.
Wide-angle security cameras are designed with large DOF, with everything from about 1 foot away more-or-less in focus. Example:

@LyndaRVA_UAP @BrandonFugal It's not humungous, it's about 1/4" long. Fly sized.

The key thing to realize is that it's close to the camera. It's small, not far away.

@cosmicdahlia A fly is obviously the simples explanation there. But I also compared it directly to video of a known fly (presumably, as it was in a field full of flies). It's a perfect match, both visually, and in the distance travelled per frame.

So it's a fly.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1264215309591826435

@cosmicdahlia You can't. That's the point.

Different sizes will give different distances. So you try the math with different sizes.

It could be a fly moving a 14 mph. Or something the size of the cow's head moving at 680 mph. Or something the size of a plane moving at 10,000 mph @cosmicdahlia I cropped an image of the object and duplicated it across the screen until it reached the second position. Then I counted how many duplicates were needed.

That's a visual method. You can also measure the object in pixels, measure the distance in pixels, and divide. Same result.

@cosmicdahlia It's simple

Distance Moved = (Length of Object) x (Number of Lengths Moved)

Speed = (Distance Moved) / Time

We know everything except (Length of Object) so can plug in various values for that to find what the speed would be.

1/4" ends up being a good fit. Also fits a fly.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EYqkwVXUMAEECzq.jpg

PacifiCorp is an electric power company in the western United States.

PacifiCorp has two business units:

1. Pacific Power, a regulated electric utility with service territory throughout Oregon, northern California, and southeastern Washington.
2. Rocky Mountain Power, a regulated electric utility with service territory throughout Utah, Wyoming, and southeastern Idaho.

PacifiCorp operates one of the largest privately held transmission systems in the U.S. within the western Energy Imbalance Market.

In 2001, PacifiCorp was purchased by Scottish Power. Since 2006, PacifiCorp has been a wholly owned subsidiary of Berkshire Hathaway Energy (formerly MidAmerican), itself an affiliate of Berkshire Hathaway.

PacifiCorp is currently headquartered in the Lloyd Center Tower[4] at 825 N.E. Multnomah Street, Portland, Oregon, in the Lloyd District. Pacific Power is also headquartered in the same building. Rocky Mountain Power is headquartered in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Pacific Power and Rocky Mountain Power combined serve over 1.6 million residential customers, 202,000 commercial customers, and 37,000 industrial and irrigation customers - for a total of approximately 1,813,000 customers. The service area is 143,000 square miles (370,000 km^2). The company owns and maintain 16,500 miles (26,600 km) of long distance transmission lines, 64,000 miles (103,000 km) of distribution lines, and 900 substations.

In 1977, PacifiCorp spun off its coal mining interests into a mining company known as NERCO, which was eventually listed on the New York Stock Exchange and ranked as high as 353 on the Fortune 500 list of the largest American companies. Through its majority interest in NERCO, PacifiCorp was involved in the mining of coal, oil, natural gas, gold, silver, and uranium. PacifiCorp still owned 82% of NERCO in 1993, when it was acquired by the mining giant Rio Tinto Group.[5]

7) Seagull

Then roughly sort the list.

@mjbanias @LtTimMcMillan @tlathtoani @Deepneuron @JazzShaw It appears the lock onto the object in GOFAST was a passive IR track (essentially with the video - that big box expanding and contracting). Radar range was acquired after he locked on.
Essentially to the IR camera it looked like a fast moving aircraft, because of parallax @swansandsable @Oswald1160 @JLuvin @BrandonFugal @midd2009 @adminnathan Sorry Tina. You are just quibbling here. You don't like it? Then go fix it.

@LtTimMcMillan @tlathtoani @Deepneuron @JazzShaw Well, what discrimination is actually being displayed in GOFAST?

The radar ranging is yet another reason why "bird" is not #1 on the list. Ballon with a radar reflector is my current #1.

What's your list look like?

https://twitter.com/_/status/1263840339015548928

@mjbanias @LtTimMcMillan @tlathtoani @Deepneuron @JazzShaw I can agree that you and I don't know what it is. I'm not sure that nobody knows, but that's also quite possible.

But there are viable hypotheses for GOFAST, and "balloon" is one of them as it matches the size and speed.

There are lots of clues.

He's in SAG because some movies have helicopter pilots in them.

@swansandsable @Oswald1160 @JLuvin @BrandonFugal @midd2009 @adminnathan Tina, what EXACTLY would it take for you to believe 100% that it was just a powerline surveying helicopter passing by, and not someone spying on the ranch.

@LtTimMcMillan @tlathtoani @Deepneuron @JazzShaw Hypotheses for what? Birds are a poor #2 on the list for GOFAST (#1=balloon), close to "aliens" for GIMBAL, and a possible minor early contributing factor to FLIR1.

The problems of birds at altitude was discussed on Metabunk starting back in 2018.

Ivor Shier

Director of Operations, SAG Pilot

Ivor learned to fly airplanes in Ireland in 1972. Always having a love for helicopters, he finally took the opportunity to get his helicopter rating in California in 1986. This started his career in aviation in which he has accumulated over 8,000 flight hours.

With an FAA approved Motion Picture Manual and as a member of the Screen Actors Guild (SAG), he has developed an excellent reputation with directors and camera operators as a pilot they can depend on to get the best shots while keeping them safe. Ivor has been credited in many television shows, major motion pictures and Imax movies. See Ivor Shier's IMDB profile.

Ivor also possesses a talent for matching helicopter buyers with aircraft. Ivor is one of the founders and shareholders of Corporate Helicopters.

@midd2009 @BrandonFugal @swansandsable @adminnathan We agree on pretty much all of reality. It's the small bits of reality that are of questionably interpretation based on incomplete or uncertain data that are really interesting.

So that's what we talk about.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1263535139855843328

@BrandonFugal @swansandsable @adminnathan You want to bet $100 on it?

The evidence is overwhelming that it's a powerline surveying helicopter doing its thing (as it had done for days). The video shows it flying slowly east, pretty much over the power line. I'm confident that's what it was. How strong is your suspicion?

2020-05-21T18:01:39+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1263530409502994432

@swansandsable @BrandonFugal @adminnathan Yeah, but suspecting that a power-line surveying helicopter, that flew past the ranch as part of on a 100 mile trip along power-lines, of spying on you isn't really skepticism. It's either paranoia or sensationalism. Maybe both?

@TRandallizer @BrandonFugal @UfoJoe11 @Corey_0709 @trelayne @CMetaphor @adminnathan There are lots of sites that are EMF paranoid.

But that's another topic.

Bottom line is the levels he was measuring were just what you get from holding a phone, or being close to a WiFi router. Ordinary. Normal. Expected when in a wired crowd.

@AustinBaar @trelayne @BrandonFugal @UfoJoe11 @CMetaphor @adminnathan Impossible to have two broken phones in the same location?

Did they show the phones working fine before and after this incident?

Simplest explanation is they were already faulty. Then add some dramatization.

2020-05-21T07:32:40+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1263372120202964995
@BrandonFugal @AustinBaar @adminnathan No, it was a regular sized fly just like the one over the cows in my gif.

Flies are unsurprisingly common around cows and cow pats. Here's a bunch more examples.

@AustinBaar @trelayne @BrandonFugal @UfoJoe11 @CMetaphor @adminnathan No, I don't agree.

It's clearly something that happens. Both phones had dirty screen protectors - which is a known factor in ghost touches. You don't need to find WHY it happens yet. Just start with WHEN it happens.

Limited data there.

EMF Safety Standards

Precautionary Guidelines for Microwaves

The following precautionary guidelines are based on scientific research about biological and health effects at extremely low power densities. These are approximately 9000 times lower than international safety standards, which are based on an outdated dogma maintaining that the only harm of microwaves lies in its thermal effects. Check the Table of Effects to see the levels at which various effects have been reported.

Year	Power Density Limit	Name	Description
2001	1,000μW/m²	Salzburg Resolution	Equivalent of 1 mW/m² = 0.1 μW/cm² = 0.6 V/m ; The recommendation of Salzburg, Austria and now also organizations like BioInitiative and Next-Up. In 2008, Liechtenstein adopts the goal of 0.6 V/m, approximately 1000 μW/m² by 2013. Proposed Limit for Public Exposure to Mobile Phone Base Stations
2011	170 μW/m²	Seletun Scientific Statement 2011	Equivalent of 0.17 mW/m²
2001	100 μW/m²	EU Parliament STOA 2001	Equivalent of 100 nW/cm²

@UfoJoe11 @BrandonFugal @trelayne @CMetaphor @adminnathan I'm not suggesting the RF did that to the phones. I'm suggesting the wireless mics contributed to the readings on the TriField meter. 20 mw/m2 is not large when near transmitting things.

@BrandonFugal @trelayne @UfoJoe11 @CMetaphor @adminnathan That depends on how much they malfunction normally. Did they check after?

And those RF levels were NOT high. Trifield meter is for EMF hypochondriacs, and only goes up to 20 mW/m2. It maxes out near a phone.

@BrandonFugal @UfoJoe11 @CMetaphor @adminnathan Well, given that they were perfectly visible, I think that the simples explanation is that your ADS-B receiver wasn't handling that particular situation.
There's no stealth if you can see it and read the number.

@BrandonFugal @UfoJoe11 @CMetaphor @adminnathan No. It was not RECEIVED over large portions of their flight because A) low altitude, and B) very few ADS-B receivers in sparsely populated areas.

@BrandonFugal @adminnathan It's a helicopter used for surveying power lines.
It flew along power lines for two days.
It was flying along power lines by the ranch.
It was flow by Corporate Helicopters, for a power company. I guess you could ask them if you feel it's really needed.

You can legally have ADS-B without that info if you want. But you can't fly without it painted on the side. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EYg79w7U8AENq2V.jpg @BrandonFugal @adminnathan The transponder almost certainly was not off - it was not being received by the ADS-B network because it was low and away from ADS-B stations. It did pass near the ranch, as it was on one side, and then later the other - tracking the powerlines that are 1 mile north of you.

@steven_dor Sure, but there's a reason why the producers are embellishing the show.

Nothing really inexplicable happened during the production. But they still had to make a show. So they made one with what they had.

@Phenomenology19 I'm not sure, but in this episode Travis described 20 mW/m2 as "like inside the microwave oven", when it's actually about 1/100000th of what is inside a microwave oven. So perhaps they don't have a strong grasp on what real dangerous levels of things actually are.

@DaveFalch @PstarmanUa @ChiefofTruth @PostDisclosure @UfoJoe11 "Halo" is a good way to describe it. In fact that's what FLIR call it.

The terminology usage is not consistent though. Some people refer to a local veiling glare as a halo. And "halo" is most commonly the ring around the sun through ice clouds - totally different thing. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EX0xcyRU0AAC8GI.jpg

A ferroelectric detector has a continuous rotating chopper which is susceptible to breakdowns.

Ferroelectric versus microbolometer focal plane arrays

As described in the beginning of this article there is a difference between ferroelectric detector technology, which uses BST, and microbolometer detector technology using VOx or α-Si.

Because ferroelectric sensors are AC coupled, there is an internal mechanical chopper that recalibrates the image. This so-called Auto Image Calibration (AIC), is actually a continuously rotating "chopper". This is needed because the only way that a ferroelectric BST detector can create an image based on temperature differences is by continuously switching the signal that is falling on the detector on and off and then sampling the difference between the successive frames.

The continuously rotating chopper blocks the detector 50% of the time. This means that half the time the detector is not receiving any infrared radiation from the scene. This does not benefit the sensitivity of the camera.

A continuously rotating mechanical device is also very susceptible to breakdown, and is very sensitive to shock and vibration. The Mean Time Between Failure (MTBF) for a ferroelectric BST camera is therefore a lot shorter than for a thermal imaging camera with a microbolometer detector, especially in harsh environments.

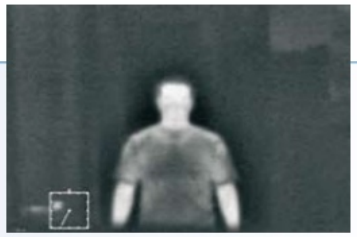
Microbolometers also have an internal mechanical calibration device. This NUC "paddle" will periodically flag in front of the detector. It freezes the image for a fraction of a second and recalibrates it. However, it is only blocking the detector from the scene very briefly and is less susceptible to breakdown compared to a chopper.

Thermoelectric Cooler

In ferroelectric BST detectors, thermoelectric coolers (TECs) are utilized to temperature stabilize the IR detector insuring that what the camera measures is resulting only from external photonic sources. VOx detectors (and some α-Si detectors) do not require this Thermoelectric Cooler.

The advantages of not having to use a TEC are many. Apart from enabling the camera to operate over a wide temperature range while maintaining excellent dynamic range and image quality, two other significant benefits are realized from TEC-less operation: reduced power consumption which is important in battery operated applications, and "instant-on" capability. The time to image is less than 2 seconds – ideal for on-demand applications like firefighting.

Not having a Thermoelectric Cooler is a big advantage in firefighting applications, since cameras are turned on and off to conserve battery power and any delays in producing an image can be potentially dangerous.



BST detectors are susceptible to the halo affect. A dark ring surrounds bright hotter objects.

Image retention and Halo effect

HALO EFFECT

Image retention is a phenomenon where there is a temporary "burn in" when looking at a certain object. An example we all know is when you look directly at the sun. When you look away an image of the sun will persist in your eyesight for a couple of seconds. α-Si detectors are more prone to this phenomenon than VOx detectors.

A halo is a ring of light that surrounds an object. The same effect can appear on a thermal image, and BST detectors are very susceptible to this. Most of the time this happens with hotter objects. They are surrounded with a dark ring. Needless to say, this is not benefiting the image quality.

@uelbus @PostDisclosure @UfoJoe11 Why not? Radar tracks proves there was a plane at that exact spot. Profile and scale of the glare matches the engine configuration and distance. Contrail looks like a contrail.

@PostDisclosure @UfoJoe11 Well Dave Falch is just wrong there. You see glare on thermal cameras all the time. Chilean Navy UFO, for an obvious example. It's not visible light making the glare, it's infrared radiation.

You can verify this.

@PostDisclosure Well, I'm really trying to establish what is NOT going on - which then clears the way for either:

A) - a rather boring possible explanation
B) - an exciting explanation, that looks (in the limited information from the video) like A.

@dsfii @PostDisclosure @UfoJoe11 There's only two mayor axes, so yes the horizon has to rotate. There's some kind of derotation mechanism, but there also seem to be internal gimbals, meaning the need for major axes changes and derotation is not smooth.

@spiralgold1 @ChristopherKMe4 Why would it? It's programmed to display a useful non-rotating image. "Lots of image rotation" is exactly what they want to avoid.
But even then, why would losing lock create rotation? At that point the camera is not moving, or back into ground track.

@spiralgold1 @ChristopherKMe4 Check out how the ATFLIR camera module is mounted. It's essentially a two-axis gimbal for the external housing. You can't track left-right without the image rotating, so it needs some form of derotation. Also corrections for lock, especially around 0Â°.

@DaveFalch @LtTimMcMillan @AFSUnidentified Although, to confuse things more, a larger "veiling glare" can be from both direct and/or indirect light.

Here though we are just talking about the glare that directly surrounds a very bright light (visible or IR) in a camera. Like the sun, for example.

@DaveFalch @LtTimMcMillan @AFSUnidentified Maybe confusing glare and flare here - understandable as the the terms are often used interchangeable. But the shielding from outside light, and avoiding internal reflections, is done for prevent "lens flare". Glare essentially comes along the same light path as the object image.

@DaveFalch @LtTimMcMillan @AFSUnidentified GIMBAL doesn't change Field of View at all - the entire thing is in NAR.

You get glare in infrared videos. The Chilean UFO is a prime example of a distant plane with an IR glare larger than the plane. Here it is to scale. Note the size of the engines vs. glare.

@509thConductor @PostDisclosure Why would it happen in every video? It needs a AFLIR style mount (2 major axes, with the first one being horizontal). Then you need a shaped glare, and then you need the camera rotation from a gimbal correction.

@509thConductor @PostDisclosure The glare in a thermal camera actually becomes more significant (relative to the size of the source) the further away things are. You see this in videos of planes. It's also fairly easy to verify at home.

Unsharp mask was originally an analog process in photography. Older thermal cameras using BST sensors had a strong unsharp mask due to the mechanical "chopper" wheel. So you see that stronger in footage from older camera.

A ferroelectric detector has a continuous rotating chopper which is susceptible to breakdowns.

Ferroelectric versus microbolometer focal plane arrays

As described in the beginning of this article there is a difference between ferroelectric detector technology, which uses BST, and microbolometer detector technology using VOx or α-Si.

Because ferroelectric sensors are AC coupled, there is an internal mechanical chopper that recalibrates the image. This so-called Auto Image Calibration (AIC), is actually a continuously rotating "chopper". This is needed because the only way that a ferroelectric BST detector can create an image based on temperature differences is by continuously switching the signal that is falling on the detector on and off and then sampling the difference between the successive frames.

The continuously rotating chopper blocks the detector 50% of the time. This means that half the time the detector is not receiving any infrared radiation from the scene. This does not benefit the sensitivity of the camera.

A continuously rotating mechanical device is also very susceptible to breakdown, and is very sensitive to shock and vibration. The Mean Time Between Failure (MTBF) for a ferroelectric BST camera is therefore a lot shorter than for a thermal imaging camera with a microbolometer detector, especially in harsh environments.

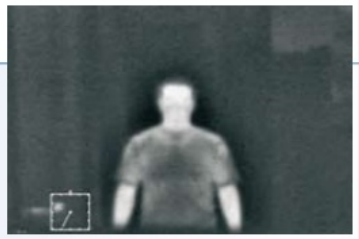
Microbolometers also have an internal mechanical calibration device. This NUC "paddle" will periodically flag in front of the detector. It freezes the image for a fraction of a second and recalibrates it. However, it is only blocking the detector from the scene very briefly and is less susceptible to breakdown compared to a chopper.

Thermoelectric Cooler

In ferroelectric BST detectors, thermoelectric coolers (TECs) are utilized to temperature stabilize the IR detector insuring that what the camera measures is resulting only from external photonic sources. VOx detectors (and some α-Si detectors) do not require this Thermoelectric Cooler.

The advantages of not having to use a TEC are many. Apart from enabling the camera to operate over a wide temperature range while maintaining excellent dynamic range and image quality, two other significant benefits are realized from TEC-less operation: reduced power consumption which is important in battery operated applications, and "instant-on" capability. The time to image is less than 2 seconds – ideal for on-demand applications like firefighting.

Not having a Thermoelectric Cooler is a big advantage in firefighting applications, since cameras are turned on and off to conserve battery power and any delays in producing an image can be potentially dangerous.



BST detectors are susceptible to the halo affect. A dark ring surrounds bright hotter objects.

Image retention and Halo effect

Image retention is a phenomenon where there is a temporary "burn in" when looking at a certain object. An example we all know is when you look directly at the sun. When you look away an image of the sun will persist in your eyesight for a couple of seconds. α-Si detectors are more prone to this phenomenon than VOx detectors.

A halo is a ring of light that surrounds an object. The same effect can appear on a thermal image, and BST detectors are very susceptible to this. Most of the time this happens with hotter objects. They are surrounded with a dark ring. Needless to say, this is not benefiting the image quality.

@ztrussell @ChristopherKMe4 1) Without a radar lock the camera is passive tracking, meaning it relies on the videos data to track the target. When it changes lens/camera there's an interruption in the video, so it HAS to lose lock.

2) Underwood was watching the video.

You'd need an engineer familiar with the gimbal and derotation aspects of the ATFLIR optical pipeline, preferably with relevant operational testing experience (following a distant jet), and who is unencumbered by confidentiality and secrecy.

A glare is the apparent light that surrounds a really bright light like the sun or a flashlight pointed at the camera. Lens flares are internal reflections. This is not an internal reflection.

@paulsanderson @CryptGold @UfoJoe11 @ufouapam @Aviation_Intel @DaveFalch The ATFLIR cares absolutely zero about the rotation of the target. It cares about:

1) Keeping the target in the middle of the screen
2) Keeping the horizon in the image parallel to the actual horizon seen from the plane.

@flarkey @JunoWalker @conorowens94 @LtTimMcMillan The "spill" around the actual image is light that would reach those sensor pixels anyway, but it's usually orders of magnitude too dim to register. But pump up the middle, and the surrounds become visible. It's not overflow, just brighter.

I use the term "glare" (unwanted light in the camera, like "veiling glare") to distinguish it from a lens flare, which is a reflection off a lens.
Glare in general isn't really a sensor overload "spill"thing. It's just a really bright light.

8)Has the Navy, or any other component, come to the conclusion that some of the unidentified sightings reported is due to an aerial phenomena with technological features not currently known to mankind?

A8) The Navy has not publicly released characterizations or descriptions, nor released any hypothesis or conclusions in reference to any reported sightings/observations. As the investigation of UAP sightings is ongoing, we will not discuss individual sighting reports/observations. However, all possible sources of information pertaining to any individual sighting reports/observations are considered in the respective investigations. The information obtained from each individual report of any suspected training range incursion will continue to be investigated in its own right. The information obtained in these reports will be catalogued and analyzed for the purpose ofidentifying any hazard to our aviators. This process could involve multiple Department of Defense and Intelligence Community organizations. Any report generated as a result of these investigations will, by necessity, include classified information on military operations. Therefore, no release of information to the general public is expected.

Navy spokesman Gardisher said very clearly that the results of the investigations into the videos would be classified and not released.

@Rico71091546 @Betofrancafisio Well, you can see the glass. So if there was a light some distance behind her, then it would create a reflection. Hard to say for sure without more context.

I've watched the show but nothing seems to be happening. One guy had a lump on his head flare up, nobody else did. Travis got a bit dizzy, nobody else did. Seems those are more person based than location based.

@therealpmoney @GaryVoorhis @ChristopherKMe4 Vertically. Consider how they would to fly so the top plane could keep eyes on the lower plane. Both planes are moving very fast. Where would they be? Where would the Tic-Tac be?

At least 2 miles away, methinks.

@conorowens94 @uelbus @GaryVoorhis I disagree. But feel free to do a more detailed analysis of the entire video. https://twitter.com/_/status/1257719509776916480

@conorowens94 @uelbus @GaryVoorhis Of course, but I'm pretty sure that the plane is just flying in a straight line. Especially as the angle changes with no wobble.

(And of course, since it's relative motion, it does not change anything about the losing lock argument, so still no sudden moves).

https://twitter.com/_/status/1257717971243290624

@conorowens94 @uelbus @GaryVoorhis I don't think so. A wobble of the horizon indicator is does not indicate the plane is turning right 12 degrees. It wobbles equally in both directions, and none of that actually indicates a turn. And there's significant portions, like 4L through 8L, with no real wobble either way

Did the FLIR video object accelerate off at the end of the video? This is something that can be figured out. If there's a falsehood floating around, is it not best removed when shown to be false?

@GaryVoorhis @conorowens94 @AstrobiologyDay It think it's a mistake to throw an explanation out the window. Just rearrange the list of possible explanations, and move the impossible SEEMING ones down a bit.

I always keep "advanced human technology," and "alien spacecraft" on my list, generally low down.,

@ChucalescuJR @zcichy @YepConsiderably Knuth's fundamental error is easily verifiable.

He claims the camera loses lock because the object is moving off to the left.
But at frame 1:13:29, it has ALREADY lost lock. Yet visually the object moves right for two frames. Re-lock is attempted and fails. Object drifts off.

@conorowens94 The shape of the black blob is the shape of the glare. It's not the shape of the aircraft, or the engines.

Take a flashlight. Shine it at your cellphone camera. You see that glare around the light, bigger than the light.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1257182137393967104

@paulsanderson @UfoJoe11 The black blob is the glare.

The "halo" is an image sharpening artifact.

The "light field" is the pattern of light over the whole image. You can see it best in the sky.

2020-05-04T05:12:17+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1257176196313313286

@conorowens94 I think you're misunderstanding something here.

What's apparently rotating isn't the target. It's a glare - something internal to the camera.

Did you watch this? Especially the last minute.

2020-05-04T04:22:35+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1257163692820463617

@UfoJoe11 Well it LOOKS like it's rotating. If I were there and just looking at the screen, I'd think it's rotating too.

But it's not. It's the IR glare. You can tell this because the light field rotates.

Get the video as a file. Scrub back and forth over the rotations. You'll see.

2020-05-04T04:14:48+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1257161731366776832

@paulsanderson @Aviation_Intel @UfoJoe11 You may be thinking of Underwood's account. Both GIMBAL and GOFAST have much more significant changes in camera angle relative to the front of the plane.

GIMBAL, as far as I can tell, is not rotating.

2020-05-04T04:11:39+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1257160937837957120

@conorowens94 The intent of derotation is to keep the horizon on the screen parallel to the actual horizon.

2020-05-04T02:41:26+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1257138237442674690

@conorowens94 The glare rotating is because of the derotation of the horizon.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1257114201757118471

@Gibson34312773 @UfoJoe11 @chasekuertz @ddeanjohnson @ChristopherKMe4 @PostDisclosure Well, one thing we know is that people DO make mistakes. At least occasionally. We have a lot of evidence of that.

2020-05-04T00:38:57+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1257107410331656192

@conorowens94 @DaveSFoley @mgruberb @rjblaskiewicz Yeah I'm not sure about that. That whole paragraph is a bit confusing as he also talks about it dropping from 50,000 feet. Something he didn't see. And then he says he can't even confirm that it did that leftward movement.

Some clarification from Chad would be great there.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EXIkel3VAAEuMIS.jpg

Ergo, when the object kind of darts away to the left—

I was not aggressively maneuvering the aircraft in the manner that would make the FLIR pod would do that[7]. But look: At that point, I did not actually see the object aggressively accelerate to the left, as the video shows, to actually prove that.

Because you were at a distance where you couldn't make visual contact with your own eyes—

Right.

And so what's happening in the video is a little ambiguous as a result.

Right. Yeah. And that part kind of sucks, because I can't confirm that the object aggressively accelerated that way. But I have my feelings, based off of my experience with my equipment — and also just logic, when it comes to, you know, physics.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EXIkel3VAAEuMIS.jpg

The thing that stood out to me the most was how erratic it was behaving. And what I mean by "erratic" is that its changes in altitude, air speed, and aspect were just unlike things that I've ever encountered before flying against other air targets. It was just behaving in ways that aren't physically normal. That's what caught my eye. Because, aircraft, whether they're manned or unmanned, still have to obey the laws of physics. They have to have some source of lift, some source of propulsion. The Tic Tac was not doing that. It was going from like 50,000 feet to, you know, a hundred feet in like seconds, which is not possible.

And it was doing that during your engagement too?

Yes. That was the thing that was the most interesting to me: how erratic this thing was[3]. If it was obeying physics like a normal object that you would encounter in the sky — an aircraft, or a cruise missile, or some sort of special project that the government didn't tell you about — that would have made more sense to me. The part that drew our attention was how it wasn't behaving within the normal laws of physics. You're up there flying, like, "Okay. It's not behaving in a manner that's predictable or is normal by how flying objects physically move."

@DaveSFoley @mgruberb @rjblaskiewicz Fravor appeared to confirm it on Rogan based on his misunderstanding of the apparent acceleration seen in the video. He also repeated the misconception about a lack of exhaust plume.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1257098996033568768

@DaveSFoley @mgruberb @rjblaskiewicz How then should I go about exposing the errors in the faulty analyses of the videos?

Shall I ignore blatant falsehoods just because someone might get the idea that everything is false?

No. If I see things that are demonstrable wrong then I'm going to demonstrate they are wrong @DaveSFoley @mgruberb @rjblaskiewicz Yes, it's hard to explain eyewitness accounts, like Fravor's.

But pilots did not have eyes-on for the FLIR video.

Was that named based on what you saw with your own eyes, or from looking at the screen on the camera?

No. I was more concentrated on looking at the FLIR[2]. It was inside of 20 miles. You're not going to see it with your own eyes until probably 10 miles, and then you're not going to be able to visually track it until you're probably inside of five miles, which is where Dave Fravor said that he saw it. So, at that point I didn't see anything with my eyeballs. I was more concerned with tracking it, making sure that the videotape was on so that I could bring something back to the ship, so that the intel folks could dissect whatever it is that I captured.

@DaveSFoley @mgruberb @rjblaskiewicz It's losing lock because there's no radar lock, so it's using passive tracking. You can't passive track something when changing cameras because there's blanking between shots. So the system HAS to lose lock, then reacquire it. You see it happen over and over in the video.

@conorowens94 @Gibson34312773 @ChristopherKMe4 Possible? It would be a remarkable coincidence if the object decided to make a hyperspeed jump away just as the lens was being rotated away - and then what, did it teleport back into the center of the screen? Nope, the new lens path just clicked into place, it was where it was.

@ChristopherKMe4 It's less than six minutes long.

But the key few seconds show that if the camera stopped tracking the object, it would leave the the screen at EXACTLY the same speed and direction as it appears to.

And it moves (slightly) like this with every camera change and loss of lock.

@conorowens94 @Gibson34312773 @ChristopherKMe4 The widening of the reticle is simply due to the change from 1x to 2x. It happens cleanly (in both directions) at all digital zoom changes like at 0:14:18-19

@2yang2die @ChristopherKMe4 Perhaps you missed this part of the video? It is near the end.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EXHXjq-U0AAOql8.jpg

So all the apparent movements we see are consistent with the object simply moving in a straight line to the left. So this perfectly consistent with something like a distant aircraft just flying along quite normally making no sudden movements.

So, if this interpretation is correct, what does it mean? It means To The Stars Academy is wrong, it means the experts on the History Channel were wrong. It means the SCU report is wrong. It means Jeremy Corbell was wrong, and it even means that about this one thing, Commander David Fravor was wrong.

Of course that does not mean he was wrong about anything else, nor does this video showing something moving in a boring way mean that it's not a UFO, nor does it mean that Fravor and other people didn't observe different things doing more exciting things at different times.

It just means that, despite what everyone was saying, the Nimitz FLIR object is not an extraordinary craft. It makes no sudden moves.

Nothing else. As I said: http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EXHQuYUVcAAPicA.jpg @ChristopherKMe4 Chris, you (via TTSA) claim the VIDEO shows an object with "flight performance [that] cannot be achieved by any known object."

I've just demonstrated this, and your "observed acceleration on Flir," is false. Will you fix the false claim on the TTSA site?

The camera loses lock. There's zero indication of sudden changes in velocity of the object.

TTSA has faulty analysis on their web site. Demonstrated literally years ago. Prime example is claiming "GOFAST" is "high speed" and "very low over the water", when trig proves it is not. @ChristopherKMe4, you are on the TTSA Advisory Board. Will you advise them to fix this?

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EXBlpGVVcAAeY38.jpg

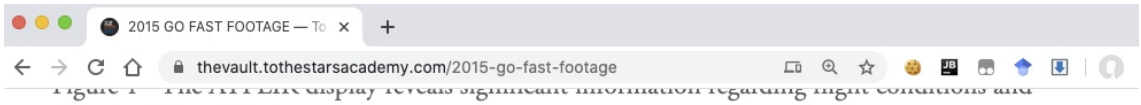
HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

GO FAST is an authentic DoD video that captures the high-speed flight of an unidentified aircraft at low altitude by a F/A-18 Super Hornet ATFLIR forward-looking infrared system. While TTSA was the first to obtain a copy, it should be available to any member of the press or public via the Freedom of Information Act.

BACKGROUND

This video, GO FAST, was captured by a U.S. Navy F/A-18 Super Hornet using the Raytheon AN/ASQ- 228 Advanced Targeting Forward-Looking Infrared (ATFLIR)

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EXBlpGVVcAAeY38.jpg



characteristics of the imagery

The unidentified vehicle appears as a white oval shape moving at high speed from top right to lower left of the screen flying very low over the water. Initially, the sensor is unable to capture the object. The Weapon Systems Operator (WSO) steers the sensor ahead of the object to attempt another capture. On the third attempt, the sensor tracking capture is successful. The sensor is now in "autotrack" mode, where the sensor uses contrast and other parameters to lock-on to a target, automatically keeping it centered in the sensors viewing frame. This mode can track objects that possess speeds and accelerations within defined limits, which are set by expected target maneuver limits. Autotrack was developed because manual target track with an optical sensor is very difficult. The automatic modes in the ATFLIR system, specifically "autotrack", reduces operator workload to facilitate target assessment and engagement. The operator expresses excitement at having successfully captured the object and the sensor is tracking it.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1256611988643299328

@Phenomenology19 @ChristopherKMe4 The biggest problem is that people interpret the losses of camera lock (and the subsequent cessation of tracking, and hence leftward drift of the target) as being sudden movements of a craft defying conventional aerodynamics.

The videos do NOT demonstrate advanced technology. Still could be aliens.

@Shtangist8 @nickpopemod I'm not contradicting the (very limited information) official stance of the Navy on these videos. I have not conflict with their latest statement. I suggest you re-read it.

Statement by the Department of Defense on the Release of Historical Navy Videos

APRIL 27, 2020

The Department of Defense has authorized the release of three unclassified Navy videos, one taken in November 2004 and the other two in January 2015, which have been circulating in the public domain after unauthorized releases in 2007 and 2017. The U.S. Navy previously acknowledged that these videos circulating in the public domain were indeed Navy videos. After a thorough review, the department has determined that the authorized release of these unclassified videos does not reveal any sensitive capabilities or systems, and does not impinge on any subsequent investigations of military air space incursions by unidentified aerial phenomena. DOD is releasing the videos in order to clear up any misconceptions by the public on whether or not the footage that has been circulating was real, or whether or not there is more to the videos. The aerial phenomena observed in the videos remain characterized as "unidentified." The released videos can be found at the Naval Air Systems Command FOIA Reading Room: https://www.navair.navy.mil/foia/documents.

@RollingRock @nickpopemod Fravor did not take the video, and this the video does not show a rapidly accelerating craft.

Maybe Fravor saw something amazing, but the video has not indication of anything amazing, just a distant object.

2020-05-02T10:56:19+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1256538000256667648

@DaveSFoley @MichaelBoatman_ What's the the FLIR1 video evidence of? It shows a distant craft that does not accelerate. That does not match Fravor's account of rapid horizontal movement, or the radar tales of rapid vertical movement.

Fravor himself misinterprets the videos on @joerogan. He's not god-like..

https://twitter.com/_/status/1256455309104525312
@ChristopherKMe4 What I'd really think would be useful is a long-form discussion with a pilot (Fravor or Graves would be great) who has experience of these encounters to try to get a more detailed and unfiltered account of A) what they remember and B) what their interpretation of the video is.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1256453835242913792
@DaveSFoley @rjblaskiewicz Nobody is claiming that advanced technology flying craft don't exist just because a video does not show one. Obviously not.
The claim is ONLY that the videos don't seem to show advanced technology flying craft.
Do you think they do? Why?

2020-05-02T05:18:48+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1256453061096009728
@DaveSFoley @MichaelBoatman_ I don't know what Fravor saw. It's hard to analyze eyewitness accounts. I'm really focussing on the videos. But I think Fravor's assessment of the FLIR video is wrong. The object does NOT shoot off at the end. He's misinterpreting that. What he personally saw is something else.

Old UFO report says "unknown size", but gives a fairly specific speed of "greater than 400 knots"

A fundamental issue with UFOs is that if you don't know how big something is, then you don't know how far away it is, and so you don't know how fast it is going.

@TimSpursFan Yet lots of people find the illusion compelling. The fact that you were not fooled does not mean other people will also not be fooled. Illusions don't need to affect 100% of the population to be significant. In the case of UFO sightings, it often only needs to affect one person.

@quantastrings So you think there's a big conspiracy to hide it, even though there are countless books and videos about it that explain how to do it?

How would that work? Are all the books bogus disinfo to cover the true method known only to the military?

@JJ46758764 Many people in the military are very familiar with motion parallax and related illusions.

https://www.cnatra.navy.mil/local/docs/pat-pubs/P-478.pdf

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/FWw56YWUIAEOxXN.jpg

402. RELATIVE MOTION ILLUSION/MOTION PARALLAX

Motion parallax refers to the apparent motion of stationary objects as viewed by an observer moving across the landscape. When the pilot or crewmember looks outside the aircraft perpendicular to the direction of travel, near objects appear to move backward, past, or opposite the path of motion; far objects seem to move in the direction of motion or remain fixed. The rate of apparent movement depends on the distance the observer is from the object. You may mistake the motion of another aircraft for that of your own (Figure 4-1).

The only way to correct this illusion is to have sufficient experience to understand that such illusions do occur and to not react to them on the controls. The use of proper scanning can help prevent this illusion.

@KilliK69 @DeepSpace41 @FrankRyanArt It's quite possible to say things that are inaccurate or false without lying.

The focus issue will not improve much with better video. See how the HUD is only slightly blurred, but the object is much more blurred. You can only unblur it as much as you can display the HUD.

The mystery of illuminating hillsides in the Skinwalker Ranch area seems to have been solved as an occasional lucky alignment of car headlights and some reflective volcanic rock. Nice practical work by Carl Crusher and team.

Some of the interpretations of the video of Trump's car seem a bit imaginative. It's hard to tell what is going on. And is he even in the first car that people are focussing on? If so, then who is waving from the (identical) second car?

@ham_boy_noon GOFAST? Yes it does. There's a rapid relative motion due to parallax. The "object moving rapidly into and out of frame" is partly this, and partly the camera moving as he tries to get a lock.

@Deepneuron @ExploreSCU Yeah, that's nonsense. The lock was broken SEVERAL times in the video during lens changes. It's using visual tracking, so needs to re-acquire it every time.

@Peter_Levy_18 @The_Sossage @MoremonJ @nickpopemod Yes and in human history we have witnesses of all kinds of things that turned out to be mistakes. What more exactly was in the longer versions that made it unequivocally not a plane? THESE videos don't "look" like planes.

@Peter_Levy_18 @The_Sossage @MoremonJ @nickpopemod No, I'm saying in the 35 seconds in each video (GIMBAL and GOFAST) they were subject to same visual illusions that you and I are. Go-Fast LOOKS like a it's going fast. Gimbal LOOKS like a rotating flying saucer.
35 seconds is not enough time for ANYONE to figure it out.

So, usually, we fly for about an hour, hour and a half, and then land. Then there's the next wave of folks that take off and do their mission, blah, blah, blah. That day, Dave Fravor was landing at the same time I was getting my gear on, and we crossed paths just after he'd seen it. I really don't want to get into what Dave saw, specifically[1], because I didn't see it with my own eyeballs. But I told him, "The Princeton" — again, which has got a really good sophisticated radar — "is reporting that there's an object out there that they wanted us to see if we could find and, if we're able, track."

altitude or a few thousand feet below," estimating the object to be between 15-20 thousand feet. The object, according to the FLIR, appeared stationary (Figure 3). There was no discernable movement from the object with the only closure being a result of the aircraft's movement. As LT [redacted] watched the object it began to move out of FLIR field of view to the left. LT [redacted] made no attempt to slew the FLIR and subsequently lost situational awareness to the object. The Flight continued with training mission with no further contact with object.

All on board systems were functioning normally. The radar was in a standard search mode (RWS/ 80NM/ 4bar/ intr) and the FLIR was in L+S slave (the FLIR would point in direction of an L+S track). There was no radio or communication interference and they had entry into the Link-16 network. Initial awareness of an object came via the radar. According to the radar display, the initial tracks were at approximately 30-40 nm to the south of the aircraft. LT [redacted] was controlling the radar and FLIR and attempted multiple times to transition the radar to Single Target Track (STT) mode on the object. The radar could not take a lock, the b-sweep would raster around the hit, build an initial aspect vector (which never stabilized) and then would drop and continue normal RWS b-sweep. When asked, LT [redacted] stated that there were no jamming cues (strobe, champagne bubbles, "any normal EA indications"). It "just appeared as if the radar couldn't hack it." The radar couldn't receive enough information to create a single target track file. The FLIR, in L+S slave, pointed in direction of the initial track flies as the radar attempted lock. The FLIR showed an object at 0 ATA and approximately -5deg elevation (Figure 2). According to LT [redacted], "the target was best guess co-

LT [redacted] was clear in that he couldn't confirm that it was the same object as described by FASTEAGLE flight. He never had visual, only seeing the object via the FLIR. He reaffirmed that all systems were functional.

Following completion of the training portion, the section returned to the ship for a normal approach, landing and shutdown. The crew met in CVIC and debriefed. LT [redacted] said that the CIVC section attempted to collect his tapes but he refused. They proceeded to their ready room where they debriefed with CDR Fravor and his flight. Copies of the tapes were made with a set being turned into the intelligence section. LT [redacted] was not asked to sign any non-disclosure agreement and he is uncertain how far up the chain the reporting went past his commanding officer. When asked LT [redacted] couldn't confirm any physiological or psychological feelings that were out of the ordinary. He only expressed a feeling of confusion during the event.

@rationalstoic @PostDisclosure @Greensheet6 And I'm thinking of the FLIR video. What other video has been attributed to the Nimitz case? I know GIMBAL and GOFAST are sometimes mistakenly so misattributed, but is there another?

https://twitter.com/_/status/1255234488449355785

@rationalstoic @PostDisclosure @Greensheet6 It's not the aircraft movement. It's the camera movements (usually lens changes) that break the lock. Usually it's reacquired, but at the end it is not.

@Adam_Tkaczuk Accounts vary. But it seems to be after Fravor had returned to the ship.
The relative location is unclear, but the objecte being videoed was very far from the planed doing the videoing. Underwood was not going to where Fravor was.
http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EWtrhC0XQAA__vK.jpg

So, usually, we fly for about an hour, hour and a half, and then land. Then there's the next wave of folks that take off and do their mission, blah, blah, blah. That day, Dave Fravor was landing at the same time I was getting my gear on, and we crossed paths just after he'd seen it. I really don't want to get into what Dave saw, specifically[1], because I didn't see it with my own eyeballs. But I told him, "The Princeton" — again, which has got a really good sophisticated radar — "is reporting that there's an object out there that they wanted us to see if we could find and, if we're able, track."

So, we go out to where our designated training area is. We're not necessarily looking for something, but the Princeton had a specific object that they wanted us to hunt, for lack of a better word. And all of a sudden, I got this blip on my radar.

The "Tic Tac."

The term "Tic Tac," I actually coined that. So, any time you heard the term, "It looked like a 'Tic Tac' out there in the sky," I was the one that kind of coined that.

@jleighton22 @nickpopemod But he's not talking about the video. He's talking about something he saw. I'm not talking about what he saw. I'm talking about the video.
So how does he disagree with me?

2020-04-28T18:52:55+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1255208389283508224

@rationalstoic @PostDisclosure @Greensheet6 It the motion of the plane with the camera that causes the drift, not the motion of the target.

1) Camera is tracking object, needs to keep turning to stay in shot.

2) Camera stops tracking, so apparent motion at same angular rate.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1255207797689511936

@mandalorchick @nickpopemod When the video was taken, there was no simultaneous naked eye sighting. It was a totally different event.

Fravor did not take video. He didn't even draw a diagram.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1255207127620055040

@Kim_Sirius But they did not take video. I'm trying to investigate what's in the video. The video does not show rapid movements, so maybe it's of a different thing to what they saw?

2020-04-28T18:46:36+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1255206801311559680

@rationalstoic @PostDisclosure @Greensheet6 It doesn't take off at speed. It just drift out of frame after the lock is lost.

2020-04-28T17:17:19+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1255184332374695938

@Kim_Sirius Such a movement is not seen in the video, nor was it seem by the naked eye. It was something that only happened on radar, and so may well have been a problem with the radar system.

2020-04-28T17:16:14+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1255184058742538241

@LeafErikson @ChillBones15 @nickpopemod Not the pilots that took the video, at a different time and location. I'm discussing the videoed event, not different events that may or may not be linked.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1255166152436617218

@mandalorchick @nickpopemod I left that out because the only link is that they went into a region of roughly a hundred square miles, and saw something in the vicinity, maybe scores of miles away. No way of knowing if was linked to the radar returns - which showed very different motion patterns.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1255151898425868311

@rationalstoic @PostDisclosure @Greensheet6 Two different radars. The radar on the ship was the one with the 80,000ft glitches. The radar on the plane was the one trying to lock onto a distant target.

@globaltimesnews Well "real" is a rather broad term. Those are real Navy videos. They really show unidentified objects. But they also have some quite plausible explanations. See: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Q7jcBGLIpus @SalAntithesis No.

I don't know what the objects are exactly. They are still unknown from my perspective, and from the perspective of the Pentagon.

I've just debunked some mistakes, like the idea that GIMBAL is rotating, or that GO-FAST is going fast.

I'm sure the Pentagon would agree there.

2020-04-28T06:00:11+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1255013924304384001

@SocialistFT No. People make mistakes, even military pilots. See the Chilean Navy UFO for example.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1255013653247451136

@SalAntithesis I'm not looking to disprove them.

I'm looking to figure out what they are.

Advanced technology would be great, I'd love it.

But that's not what the facts in the videos indicate.

2020-04-28T05:58:14+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1255013435407953921

@DarkstarIE The pilots who took the videos never saw the objects by eye. So they were essentially just looking at the same video we see today.

2020-04-28T05:57:20+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1255013207497793537

@rationalstoic @PostDisclosure @Greensheet6 Radar vectored him to a position expecting object at 20,000 feet. Fravor arrives and can't find it. Keeps looking. Later sees tic-tac at 500 feet.

Radar never saw it drop.

Radar never saw it MOVE to CAP point.

Maybe just radar glitches, unrelated to what he saw, or the video.

2020-04-28T05:54:19+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1255012447745785856

@SocialistFT @ThatBarton @ChillBones15 @nickpopemod Yeah, why do you think her reaction is so vastly different to Fravor's?

2020-04-28T05:47:29+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1255010730593538048
@DarkstarIE The Gimbal is not rotating - that's a camera artifact. The "going against the wind" fleet was something else they saw on the SA.

2020-04-28T05:46:18+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1255010432038756353
@rationalstoic @PostDisclosure @Greensheet6 Fravor never saw the object drop.
The radar never saw the object make rapid horizontal movements.
The video shows neither vertical nor horizontal sudden movements.
So why do you think they are all the same thing.

2020-04-28T05:43:49+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1255009806928056321
@ThatBarton @ChillBones15 @nickpopemod That's separate from the videos. They did not see the objects as the videos were being recorded. The radar accounts for FLIR are nothing at all like what what recorded on video. Fravor's account of motion is nothing like the video OR the radar.

2020-04-28T05:26:40+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1255005492033712128
@DarkstarIE Not in the videos. All three videos show little more than level flight. So maybe the radar and the eyewitnesses saw something else - after all the videos happened at different times to the radar etc.

2020-04-28T05:25:33+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1255005209937326081

@Bhima_Jenkins Yes. Section 2.4.3. It's wrong because he's not accounting for the camera, 1 - changing lenses, and 2 - losing lock. The object simply drifts out of view after that because the plane it turning. There's no detectable non-camera motion.

2020-04-28T05:03:56+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1254999771049148417

@DericKnight @nickpopemod No, we're talking about an IR camera that can optically lock onto a moving target. That's about it. Go-Fast got a range, seeming from radar, but really it's just video. There's nothing linking these videos to shipboard systems other than loose proximity.

2020-04-28T04:20:52+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1254988930459426816

@DanielC23380649 @SSense91 @CBSNews They are not fake. Flir1 is likely a distant plane. GoFast is likely a balloon (it's not fast, just parallax.) Gimbal is likely the IR flare of a distant plane with the rotation coming from an artifact of the gimbal mounted camera.

@steven_dor @BrandonFugal @IBKING46 @UAPGodz @UfoIssue @dave_beaty Light pillars don't need an inversion. They just need some ice fog or ice clouds, which can be quite high in the sky. The sun can make light pillars after it has set.

OG conspiracy theorist G. Edward Griffin suggests his followers won't wear face masks because of "the contrarian information we publish."
Then he tries to make money by selling them anyway.
http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EV0O-QWU4AEnGSH.jpg

from G. Edward Griffin 2020 April 16

Do you really need to wear a face mask?

If you have been reading my reports during the past two months, you know we have a mountain of evidence that the coronavirus pandemic is more of a political crisis than a health crisis. If that sounds unreasonable, I urge you to check the evidence for yourself here.

The purpose of this message is not to question the coronavirus narrative but to deal with whether we should wear face masks in public places. I am writing about this because, a few days ago, a long-time supporter placed a banner ad at Need to Know News that features colorful face masks. They are manufactured by his wife, daughter, and a group of local ladies who need work because of the current strangulation of the economy.

I told him I didn't think our readers would be a hot market for masks because of the contrarian information we publish, but then it dawned on me that, contrarian or not, the time is upon us when everyone needs one or two of these just to get into a grocery store, or travel on a plane, or go to work – if they still have a job.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EV0O20pVcAAXYL-.jpg

Even if COVID-19 is not as deadly as the media portrays it, you still want to avoid it if you can. Furthermore, this still is the flu season, and you don't want that, either – especially if you are over 60 or have health problems that make you more susceptible.

It's with that in mind that I am glad to recommend UniikPillows as a source for well-made and colorful face masks if you are in the market. I note that, on its web site, it has earned a solid, five-star rating.

In general it's hard to get ex-military folk to talk about technology as they are all worried it might be covered by the blanket NDAs or secrecy agreements. Which is why you get myths like the Gimbal video persisting.

@Berserk97981716 @Deepneuron Until now? I say it all the time. Why on Earth (or elsewhere) wouldn't they be possible?
I just generally don't have them high on the list of possible explanations for any one event. Why should they rank high, when there's far simpler explanations?

@Berserk97981716 @Deepneuron Debunking is about exposing falsehoods - i.e. finding things that are wrong and explaining why they are wrong.

Pointing out viable alternative explanations only debunks the claim that there are no viable alternative explanations. Aliens are still possible.

Both are just shape descriptors, and in one case we have a video.

Darn Sky Riders

Jet Trails Dim Sun, Palm Springs Gripes

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6. (UPI)—The air force is long since resigned to the fuss about noise from its jets. Now comes Palm Springs, Calif., with a new complaint—that jet trails overhead are so thick they are beginning to blot out the sun.

Jimmy Cooper, manager of the Palm Springs Chamber of Commerce, outlined this "most serious and urgent problem" in a telegram to Representative D. S. (Judge) Saund (D-Calif.), who has asked the air force what can be done.

"As you know," Cooper wired Saund, "our entire economy is dependent upon the tourist trade, which is predicated on our bright sunshine and warm climate. Recently our sky has resembled a mob of exuberant sky riders performing an aerial circus.

"The 'contrails' are not disappearing but are breaking down into a haze and creating a cloud-like appearance in the sky.

"With the unlimited expanse of barren, uninhabited land in the west, does such activity have to be centered over a resort area, which is offering the visitor cloudless skies and unlimited sunshine?"

The air force, so far, is flabbergasted. No doubt in time it will recover its aplomb sufficiently to give Saund the usual answer to all congressional inquiries—that the matter will be investigated.

The air force figures its jets couldn't blot out the sun short of a wing-to-wing mass flight like the European bombing raids of World war II. If anything like that is going on out of March air force base at Riverside, Calif., the nearest jet base to Palm Springs, air force officials here want to know all about it.

Shill Ousted by Minister

TOPEKA, Kan., Dec. 6. (AP)—Maurice D. Tulloch, who gave up the life of a Baptist minister to become a shill in a Las Vegas gambling casino, was stripped of his ministerial standing yesterday.

The action was taken by the executive committee of the Kansas Baptist convention.

Tulloch, a graying, spectacled man with crew-cut hair who looks closer to 40 than his 50 years, was pastor of the First Baptist church of Sabetha, Kan. Last September 29, he walked out of a meeting of Baptist pastors in Hutchinson, Kan., and disappeared.

On November 26 he was located in Las Vegas, working as a shill—a gambling casino employee who poses as a customer to drum up trade.

@ZombieSymmetry No, they would buy it all when it's cheap, wait for the price to skyrocket, and then sell it on Ebay. Meanwhile people won't be able to get it.

That's why there are laws against price gouging. The market can be brutal in "doing its thing"

04:26 That's back from high school algebra. But let's take a look.

04:29 First, we've got population. The world today has 6.8 billion people. That's headed up to about nine billion. Now, if we do a really great job on new vaccines, health care, reproductive health services, we could lower that by, perhaps, 10 or 15 percent. But there, we see an increase of about 1.3.

04:51 The second factor is the services we use. This encompasses everything: the food we eat, clothing, TV, heating. These are very good things. Getting rid of poverty

@try_thinking @Oswald1160 No, to get that curve optically (starting flat) you'd need rapidly increasing density with altitude, meaning an incredibly steep negative temperature gradient. A gradient that was not there - as the air was stable.

Clearly NY is going to be hit bad. There's multiple factors, but population density is a huge one if no preventative measures are taken. Everyone will get it VERY rapidly.

@Zabbac The densest borough of New York City, Manhattan, skews to younger adults, but there's still 12% (192,000) people over 65 (based on 2010 census data). And the huge population density makes it very hard to avoid infection.

Population density is a significant factor in the impact of Coronavirus on a region. Milan in Lombardy is densely populated.

Manhattan in New York is far more densely populated.

30% of all US cases are in NYC, and it's rapidly rising. Strict measures are entirely justified.

Amazon is not shutting down, or stopping shipping things. They are just deprioritizing restocking non-essential items, so they can meet the demand for essential items.
You can still buy things on Amazon, if it's not in the warehouse, it's often available shipped from elsewhere. https://twitter.com/snopes/status/1240080992423084033

@JasonBermas Amazon are not stopping shipping things OUT to customers. They are stopping certain third-party shipments INTO their warehouses. They are trying to meet panic-buying demand.

The change does not mean Amazon will stop selling non-essential items like phone cases and toys for now, only that products may be more likely to run out of stock in the next few weeks or that sellers have to ship directly to consumers.

The move reflects how the global spread of the virus has created challenges for retailers, from supply chain to delivery.

In a note sent to sellers on Tuesday, Amazon said it is seeing increasing online shopping demand. As its household staples and medical supplies are running out of stock, it will prioritize certain categories in order to “quickly receive, restock, and ship these products to customers.”

EDITORIAL

It has been said the the eightys saw the exciting birth of the concept of information technology, the ninetys were a confused mixup when too much was tried, too often and in too many different ways, the ohs were when I.T. got it together and the dream came true. So what do we have to look back on over the last ten years?

In '00 there was the revolutionary launch of the International Computer Standards Centre (ICSC) by a host of companies including IBM, ICL, Sony, Philips, EDS, CDC, DEC, Apple and Atari to name but a few. Masterminded by David Jones, the ICSC was to change the face of computing as we knew it. The international standards meant that information could be exchanged with a new found freedom. Programs would now work on any ICSC machine of the same or higher level.

The decade has seen the rapid growth of the Data Stream. From it's humble beginnings as an on line database and email service started by EDS in the early ninetys, the Stream has grown to the extent that ninety percent of households in the UK have a link into it. It now offers an amazingly large range of services including email, ebooks, tele-shopping, hundreds of worldwide databases and connection to just about any thing you can think of.

Advances in SLCD technology have bought us the Smarrt range of displays and the first full size hang-on-the-wall colour televisions only 1mm thick and as wide as you like. A whole range of technological advancements have improved the quality of our lives.

Computer power has grown so that the supercomputers of the early ninetys are the home computers of today. The entertainment industry has produced games of realism and quality undreamt of ten years ago. Expert systems are freeing humans from the more mundane mental tasks and are beginning to challenge us in higher realms of thought.

It has been a decade of consistent growth in the field of I.T. the ICSC has ensured that today's technology will integrate smoothly with tomorrow's. The future of I.T. is a secure and bright one.

When you discover the trick of forming a loop in a choke chain, can that knowledge actually hinder you in more complex cases. The (equal sized) rings and the fence are welded shut. So how did I attach it like this?

It's not hard, but do you try to use the trick first?

@TruthRtc Flights are not at contrail altitude when they are within 50km (or more) of the airport they are going to (or from).

Think about when you fly - you spend several minutes getting to 30,000 feet.

@TruthRtc Yes, but all the traffic is TO and FROM Perth, it's not OVER Perth. So you hardly ever see contrails there.

@WitchesCat333 @TutorCambodia @ShepardAmbellas It's in Great Falls, Montana. Hwy 89 (10th Ave S) by Hobby Lobby. Probably just traffic between Malmstrom AFB and the ANG and army reserve center on the other side of town. That's the only big road through town.

The "chemtrail" conspiracy theory isn't very popular in Perth, Australia. This is because Perth is so geographically isolated that planes don't fly over it (just to and from). So no contrails form, so nothing to mistake for a "chemtrail".

@TruthRtc Well, except for Perth, as they are so isolated they don't have much high altitude flyover traffic, and hence very few (if any) contrails. In fact, in Perth, when they see a contrail, they get all excited!

@Oswald1160 @ShepardAmbellas @rjblaskiewicz Yeah, you'd need to actually have the age distribution curve, and other demographic factors. There might also be far LESS 80+ already-sick people. A cruise ship takes retirees, but it's not a nursing home.

By Dennis Romero

A total of 13 deaths at a Seattle-area long-term care facility have been connected to coronavirus, and more could be confirmed in the coming days, a spokesman said Saturday.

Life Care Center of Kirkland, ground zero for the West Coast's coronavirus outbreak, has reported 26 deaths since Feb. 19, when a resident first tested positive for the virus that causes COVID-19, said spokesman Tim Killian.

So far, 13 of Life Care's deceased have tested positive, and tests for two other deceased residents have been inconclusive, he said. All had been hospitalized.

Coronavirus updates live: U.S. deaths up to 19

Test results for the other 11 who died were pending, Killian said. Because the center cares for the elderly and infirm, it usually experiences three to seven deaths a month, he said, so the virus may not be to blame for all 26 deaths.

@Oswald1160 @ShepardAmbellas @rjblaskiewicz Although that's also balanced, somewhat, by the crew, which tend to be younger (average age of crew is about 33 vs. 50 for pax). (1000*33+2700*50)/3700 gives rough ship average of 45. Average US citizen is 38.

@FormallySomeone @ludviggur They might argue that, yes. But then I'd ask them to calculate how much it would be angled.

It's a simple calculation. Just the 360Â° multiplied by the distance to the mountain, divided by the circumference of the Earth.

So typically less than 1Â°, and always less than 4Â°.

Hey media, Masoumeh Ebtekar is not "Iran's Vice President." While still an important government official, she's not second in command - that's the "First VP", Eshaq Jahangiri. Ebtekar is one of 12 VPs. VP in Iran is somewhat similar to the US role of department secretary.

https://www.metabunk.org/curve/?a=a http://pbs.twimg.com/media/ERzOdjOUEAAFPl2.jpg

Distance d = 4 miles (21120 feet)
Radius of Earth r = 3959 miles (20903520 feet)
Distance to horizon, a = sqrt((r+h)*(r+h) - r*r), a = 3 miles (15838 feet)
Note: sqrt((r+h)*(r+h) - r*r) simplifies to sqrt(h*(2*r+h))

Hidden is the amount of the distant object hidden by the curve of the Earth
The calculation of hidden depends on what 'Distance' actually measures. There's three possibilities:
Distance1 = Line of sight, from the eye/camera, grazing the horizon, to the target (default)
Distance2 = Arc distance or surface distance. From beneath the eye beneath the target along water level Distance3 = straight line between the Distance2 endpoints. (unlikely to be used)
Hidden1 = sqrt(a*a - 2*a*d + d*d + r*r)-r = 0.67 feet (8.01 inches) 0.6673400662839413 Feet (8.008080795407295 Inches)

Distance2 is more often used for large distances
Hidden2 = r/cos(d/r - acos(r / (r+h))) - r = 0.67 feet (8.01 inches) 0.6673408597707748 Feet (8.008090317249298 Inches)
Previously expressed as r/cos(d/r - asin(sqrt(h*(2*r+h)) / (r+h))) - r, using the distance to horizon Distance3 is unlikely to be used, but is included for comparision
Hidden3 = r/cos(2*asin(d/(2*r)) - acos(r / (r+h))) - r = 0.67 feet (8.01 inches) 0.667341087013483 Feet (8.008093044161797 Inches)
All three are essentially the same for distances under 100 miles

Sagitta (or 'Bulge') is the amount of rise of the earth's curve from a straight line connecting two points on the surface
'Sagitta' r-sqrt(4*r*r - d*d)/2, = 2.67 feet (32.01 inches)

Drop is the amount the curve of the earth drops away from level, it can be calculated in various ways which are all about the same for under 100 miles distance

- Drop as r-sqrt(r^2-d^2) = 10.67 feet (128.03 inches) 10.669363673776388 Feet (128.03236408531666 Inches) (perpendicular to level line)
- Drop as sqrt(r^2+d^2)-r = 10.67 feet (128.03 inches) 10.669358227401972 Feet (128.03229872882366 Inches) (perpendicular to surface tangent)
- Drop calculated with trig = r/cos(d/r) - r = 10.67 feet (128.03 inches) 10.669365487992764 Feet (128.03238585591316 Inches) (perpendicular to target surface)
- Drop calculated as 8 inches per mile squared = 8 * d*d / 12 = 10.67 feet (128 inches) 10.666666666666666 Feet (128 Inches)

Tilt Angle is angle between 'up' at the camera and 'up' at the distant object
It is the amount a distant object is leaning away from you
It's the surface distance divided by the radius (in radians)
d/r = 21120.00/20903520 = 0.0010103562 radians, *180/PI = 0.0578891432 degrees Or if the distance d is purely horizontal, it's asin(d/r) asin(d/r) = asin(21120.00/20903520) = 0.0010103563+ radians, *180/PI = 0.0578891531 degrees

Horizon Dip is the angle that the horizon is below level as seen from the viewer height
It's arcsin(a/(r+h)), or arcsin(15838.00/(20903520.00+6.00)) = 0.00075767 radians, *180/PI = 0.04341137 degrees @Fibonacci222 @PostDisclosure No. Holistic medicine is a combined approach to health, addressing general mental and physical health as well as individual symptoms.

Homeopathy involves an 18th century pseudoscientific practice of diluting things until all you have is water, and then claiming that's medicine.

Homeopathic medicine is essentially magic. There's nothing in it. Not figuratively, literally nothing in the pills besides the fillers (sugar, lactose). It's not herbal medicine at all.

It's ritualized dilution to zero.

@Fibonacci222 @PostDisclosure Do you know how Oscillococcinum is made?

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Oscillococcinum

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/ERp5vJFUcAAQLyk.jpg

Preparation [edit]

The ingredients of a one-gram tube of Oscillococcinum are listed as follows:

- Active ingredient: Anas Barbariae Hepatis et Cordis Extractum (extract of Muscovy duck liver and heart) 200CK HPUS 1×10^{-400} g[11] which is much less than the mass of a proton (1.67×10^{-24} g[11]).
- Inactive ingredient: 0.85 g sucrose, 0.15 g lactose (100% sugar.[12])

The 200CK indicates that the preparation entails a series of 200 dilutions of the starting ingredient, an extract from the heart and liver of a Muscovy duck.[11] Each step entails a 1:100 dilution, where the first mixture contains 1% of the extract, the second contains 1% of the first mixture, etc.[11] The K indicates that it is prepared by the Korsakovian method, in which rather than 1% of the preparation being measured out at each stage and then diluted, a single vessel is repeatedly emptied, refilled, and vigorously shaken (in homeopathic terminology "succussed"), and it is assumed that 1% remains in the vessel each time.[13] The 200C dilution is so extreme that the final pill contains none of the original material.[11][14]

Oscillococcinum is generally considered harmless. When Boiron (the company that makes oscillococcinum) spokeswoman Gina Casey was asked if a product made from the heart and liver of a duck was safe, she replied: "Of course it is safe. There's nothing in it."[12]

Efficacy [edit]

There is no compelling scientific evidence that Oscillococcinum has any effect beyond placebo.[15] None of its active ingredient is present in a dose of the final product, nor is there any credible evidence that duck liver is effective in relieving (or causing) flu symptoms in the first place. Homeopaths claim the diluted molecules leave an "imprint" in the remedy, but there is no known mechanism for how this could occur.[11][16] Homeopathy as a whole is widely considered to be pseudoscience.[17]

As Robert L. Park, a critic of alternative medicine, explains, some of the characteristics of flu may suggest that Oscillococcinum works. Since the flu normally goes away on its own in a variable number of days, the natural course of the disease is a potential source of error in assessing the efficacy of any intervention: if one takes any medication, and then one's flu goes away, there is a tendency to attribute this to the medication even though the infection would have resolved anyway,[11] which is an example of the informal fallacy post hoc ergo propter hoc. Someone who gets over a mild strain of flu may attribute the mildness to the efficacy of the homeopathic preparation and not to the fact that it was a mild strain, and might recommend it to other people, spreading its popularity.[11] Also, the most likely explanation for its effectiveness with flu symptoms is that patients are misdiagnosing the symptoms of several rhinovirus diseases or of allergies to several hundred substances, and attributing them to a flu infection that they do not have.[11]

A 2005 review of flu treatments (vaccine, medicine, homeopathy) has concluded that the popularity of Oscillococcinum in France was unsupported by any evidence of efficacy.[18]

In a 2007 review, the effectiveness of non-mainstream remedies against seasonal flu could not be established beyond reasonable doubt, and the evidence is found to be sparse and limited by "small sample sizes, low methodological quality, or clinically irrelevant effect sizes", and that the results strengthen using conventional approaches for flu.[6]

A Cochrane review published in December 2015 found that there was insufficient evidence to make a conclusion about whether Oscillococcinum is useful for influenza.[15]

18% of Americans say they've seen a ghost

BY MICHAEL LIPKA

On Saturday evening, many American children will encounter costumed ghosts as they roam the streets in search of candy and other treats on Halloween. Before bedtime, to avoid nightmares, some parents may try to reassure their kids that ghosts are not real.

But not all of those parents may buy their own reassurances: Nearly one-in-five U.S. adults (18%) say they've seen or been in the presence of a ghost, according to a 2009 Pew Research Center survey. An even greater share – 29% – say they have felt in touch with someone who has already died.

Claude Fischer, a professor of sociology at the University of California, Berkeley, explored Americans' persisting beliefs in some supernatural phenomena in a 2013 blog post.

"As we approach Halloween, note that most American adults in the 21st Century say that they believe in life after death and in the devil," Fischer wrote, citing data from Gallup and other sources. "Over one-third say that they believe in the spirits of the dead coming back; about that many also say they believe in haunted houses."

@BlauweStorm @Oswald1160 @MaxHeadxxx Why do you think that when 77 years of books on clouds say the opposite?

Even if you don't trust books, then WHERE do you get the belief that "normal contrails do not persist?"

Old books on clouds are some of the most accessible evidence to help people who think that persistent contrails are "chemtrails"

The challenge is to get the believers to look at the books.

10 CLOUDS AND WEATHER PHENOMENA

A word may be added about the clouds formed, usually at great heights, by aeroplanes, now known by the name of condensation trails (Fig. 42). These are truly cloud formations and not like the smoke trails that were once used for sky-writing advertisements.

When warm damp air is mixed with cold damp air some of the moisture will condense, and if the air is sufficiently damp and the difference of temperature sufficiently great the condensation will be sufficient to form visible cloud. The exhaust from an aeroplane engine contains a good deal of moisture, and if the air into which it is streaming is sufficiently cold and damp a condensation trail will be formed. Sometimes the trails are very slight and short lived, sometimes they are very persistent. Naturally the latter is the case when the cold air is already practically saturated with moisture, as it is when there are traces of natural cloud at the level at which the condensation trails are formed.

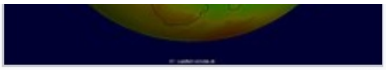
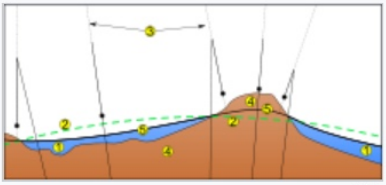
If the ocean were isopycnic (of constant density) and undisturbed by tides, currents or weather, its surface would closely approximate the geoid. The permanent deviation between the geoid and mean sea level is called ocean surface topography. If the continental land masses were crisscrossed by a series of tunnels or canals, the sea level in those canals would also very nearly coincide with the geoid. In reality, the geoid does not have a physical meaning under the continents, but geodesists are able to derive the heights of continental points above this imaginary, yet physically defined, surface by spirit leveling.



Geoid undulation in false color, to scale.



1. Ocean
2. Reference ellipsoid
3. Local plumb line
4. Continent
5. Geoid

Being an equipotential surface, the geoid is, by definition, a surface to which the force of gravity is everywhere perpendicular. That means that when traveling by ship, one does not notice the undulations of the geoid; the local vertical (plumb line) is always perpendicular to the geoid and the local horizon tangential to it. Likewise, spirit levels will always be parallel to the geoid.

On a long voyage, spirit leveling indicates height variations even though the ship is always at sea level (neglecting the effects of tides). That is because GPS satellites, orbiting about the center of gravity of the Earth, can measure heights only relative to a geocentric reference ellipsoid. To obtain one's geoidal height, a raw GPS reading must be corrected. Conversely, height determined by spirit leveling from a tidal measurement station, as in traditional land surveying, is always geoidal height. Modern GPS receivers have a grid implemented in the source of the geoid (e.g. EGM-96) height over the World Geodetic System (WGS) ellipsoid from the current position. Then, they are able to correct the height above WGS ellipsoid to the height above EGM96 geoid. When height is not zero on a ship, the discrepancy is caused by other factors such as ocean tides, atmospheric pressure (meteorological effects) and local sea surface topography.

Hi Ross,

Thank you for your reply!

I absolutely agree with you that it's very unlikely that we are alone in the vast universe. However, I wanted to restrict my questions to this one "Go Fast" video segment, in particular, the claims made on the show where you appeared as an expert.

The video does NOT show anything jumping in and out of the water. In fact, it shows an object maintaining an altitude of around 13,000 feet.

The velocity is not 100 knots. It's difficult to pin an exact figure on it, but it is almost certainly less than 50 knots, and possible in the 20-40 knot range. As you know 50 knots is a not-unreasonable reasonable differential in wind velocity between 25,000 feet and 13,000 feet, so a balloon drifting in the wind might explain it. Another possibility is a large seabird, as the size analysis seems to indicate something around 6 feet across.

Could you possibly supply some details regarding the analysis you did? Did you take any measurements? Did you perform any modeling or geometric analysis?

Finally, there's a moment on the show when Chris Cook says "it's a little less than two-thirds the speed of sound". This was portrayed as being about the object, however, the jet's speed was on display as 0.62 M, which is also "a little less than two-thirds the speed of sound", so it seems like the show producers might have inadvertently taken this number and applied it to the object, which actually seems much slower. Can you confirm this?

Thank you very much for your help in resolving this matter, @BlauweStorm @Oswald1160 @MaxHeadxxx Of course they do. Exhaust contrails are made from the engine exhaust. Prop planes have engine exhaust, so, if they go high enough they make contrails.

That said, prop planes quite often fly lower and make aerodynamic contrails.

@BlauweStorm @MaxHeadxxx and 100000...% passes by the outside of the engine.

The bypass air is just part of the outside air, just pushed by the fan.

The thing that makes contrails is the exhaust mixing with outside air.

@BlauweStorm @MaxHeadxxx They you would know that the exhaust of a high-bypass jet engine makes a contrail just like the exhaust of a low-bypass jet engine.

The bypass air isn't part of the exhaust, it's just air being pushed passed the jet turbine.

@BlauweStorm @MaxHeadxxx All of the intake to the actual jet turbine goes through the combustion chamber. The bypass air is just air, exactly like the air flying past the engine.

This is false, because at a distance the flare from the engines is (visually) far bigger than any plume. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EQxDjQIUEAEXkWf.jpg

As the video starts, the sensor is in infrared "white-hot" mode—white elements in the display are warmer than the dark, or cooler, areas. The UAP appears as a white shape in the middle of the screen. The chasing aircraft is in a left-hand turn flying Mach 0.55 at 19,990 feet altitude. The UAP is flying slightly above (6 degrees) and 4 degrees to the right of the Super Hornet. Pilot interviews state that the UAP was hovering at 24,000 feet.

Note that there is no visible exhaust plume from the object. Mid-wave infrared images of hovering aircraft, such as the AV-8B Harrier, would clearly reveal an exhaust plume if one was present.

At 0:15, the weapon sensor operator (WSO) changes the zoom from 1.0 to 2.0, making the object much larger on screen.

At 0:18, the WSO changes to TV mode and the zoom resets to 1.0. At 19 seconds, the operator changes the zoom to 2.0. In the visual band, the object appears dark against the bright daytime sky and is clearly oblong shaped.

9.6. Access to classified information supplied to the Committee shall be limited to those Committee staff members with appropriate security clearance and a need-to-know, as determined by the Committee, and, under the Committee's direction, the Staff Director and Minority Staff Director.

9.7. No member of the Committee or of the Committee staff shall disclose, in whole or in part or by way of summary, the contents of any classified or committee sensitive papers, materials, briefings, testimony, or other information received by, or in the possession of, the Committee to any other person, except as specified in this rule. Committee members and staff do not need prior approval to disclose classified or committee sensitive information to persons in the Executive branch, the members and staff of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, and the members and staff of the Senate, provided that the following conditions are met: (1) for classified information, the recipients of the information must possess appropriate security clearances (or have access to the information by virtue of their office); (2) for all information, the recipients of the information must have a need-to-know such information for an official governmental purpose; and (3) for all information, the Committee members and staff who provide the information must be engaged in the routine performance of Committee legislative or oversight duties. Otherwise, classified and committee sensitive information may only be disclosed to persons outside the Committee (to include any congressional committee, Member of Congress, congressional staff, or specified non-governmental persons who support intelligence activities) with the prior approval of the Chairman and Vice Chairman of the Committee, or the Staff Director and Minority Staff Director acting on their behalf, consistent with the requirements that classified information may only be disclosed to persons with appropriate security clearances and a need-to-know such information for an official governmental purpose. Public disclosure of classified information in the possession of the Committee may only be authorized in accordance with Section 8 of S. Res. 400 of the 94th Congress.

@YouVacuum @GalaxyReport It's a great question, because it illustrates a huge misunderstanding that TTSA has promulgated.

In IR, distant jets look like blobs, because the IR source (the engine) is very hot, but very small in the image. You see the flare, not the plane, not the exhaust.

@YouVacuum @GalaxyReport I think:

A) The radar returns were probably problems with the system, likely weather related (hence drifting with the wind and teleporting)

B) The video is probably of a far distant plane, the movement from the camera moving. Unrelated.

C) I don't know what Fravor saw.

@RippedToad @Seanjensen66 @SandraC80012392 @CharismaAlasta2 You are missing the point.
The amount of bypass air is irrelevant, it's just like the air flowing around the outside of the engine.
The exhaust is what makes the contrail when it mixes with air. The bypass air is just air, it's not part of the exhaust.

I think you might be confusing a turbofan with an afterburner.
A turbofan simply means some of the energy from the jet of exhaust gasses is used to turn the compressor. The exhaust still exits out the back.

@RobAgs0817 @LtTimMcMillan No, I think there multiple things going on here. I don't think AATIP is related, say, to the new Navy reporting guidelines, or to all the congressional things mentioned.

I'd encourage fiduciary oversight, but "government misspending tax dollars" is hardly news.

@DJThermalD @Scribe1969 @WayneCoste @dchandlerpdx Well we have the flight path of the plane from the radar data. I'm not even sure from a conventional investigation point-of-view what benefit there would be to video of the plane. The priorities of the investigation unfortunately did not include placating conspiracy theorists.

My thoughts on @LtTimMcMillan's detailed article on the government funded AATIP program's study of UFO's.
Summary: interesting details and hints about who is interested in what, but no new evidence for alien visitors or non-newtonian physics craft.

Mick West Great stuff, but largely arcana to the general public. I think the unfortunate thing is that the secrecy apparatus in the military-industrial complex prevents anything really interesting (or even boring-yet-relevant) from being made public. This also allows people to read what they prefer into limited information.
So we've got some fascinating stuff on government-funded studies, and some hints about classified hearings about something (probably airspace incursions). But does it amount to more than Harry Reid following his personal interests in funneling some money to the usual suspects?
I think the several references to "the paranormal" are rather telling, regarding the degree of extreme open-mindedness here.
This is going to be framed in the popular press as "US GOVERNMENT STUDIES UFOS" - but really it's mostly "Bigelow tries to find evidence of UFO technology, and does some technology speculation, and got some funding from the government because he knows Harry Reid. Also the government is concerned about airspace incursions"
That said, where the "10-month report?" That looks interesting.

The bypass air is like the outside air, just moving faster.

The exhaust makes the contrail when it mixes with just air.

@NoErrorOccurred Because we need a word for things that are as yet unidentified. I'm not talking about this particular case, but the general case of lights or shapes in photos, which may or may not be flying and/or objects.

What word to use: UFO? UAP? I posted this pic, someone joked about the "UFO" - but it's not even there, it's just a lens flare. "UFO" presupposes a flying object. "UAP" presupposes it's aerial.

Is there a better term? Possible Aerial Objects? Unexplained Sky Observation?

@1947_z @AFSUnidentified @EngagingThe You can't really control language like that. "UFO" has entered the lexicon as "alien spaceship". Pointing out that "unidentified" could cover ordinary planes, or generic dots, isn't really helping. UAP is better but some people think "phenomenon" means something incredible.

And I don't think it's likely that what Fravor flew around was a seagull. I also don't think it's likely that it's aliens. However I keep both of those unlikely things on the list of possible explanations.

@trutherbothazel 20-40K feet is not "the same altitude". Cloud conditions can vary greatly in a few tens of feet. Air traffic is generally separated vertically by thousands of feet.
Contrails are much more noticeable at sunset and sunrise.

Flares don't hang around in the sky for hours, obviously. But they DO slowly descend (on parachutes) then burn out after a minute or two, and the plane drops a new set of flares about 15-30 seconds before the previous set is due to burn out. Like this.

@GeorgeT96559261 @BoydMichaelE @ChrisSPITZER7 @makoteko1 @dave_beaty The calibration is kind of irrelevant if he is just working from a YouTube mp4 downsampled from a WMV digitization of a Hi-8 VHS recording of a mono interlaced NTSC signal generated from a 10-bit muti-processed (unknown gain) version of a 14-bit original signal.

@dave_beaty @GeorgeT96559261 @BoydMichaelE @ChrisSPITZER7 @makoteko1 That seems to be just part of the problem. Taylor assumes that an object gets less bright as it gets further away. But that only applies to point sources. So as long as the resolved image is larger than a pixel (it is), it's going to "saturate" the same.
So his graph is useless.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/FWRsWpdUIAE2_6s.jpg

Control/Indicator	Function
GN increase/ decrease pushbutton switches	Momentary pushbutton switches. Adjusts gain (contrast) of the infrared video on the FLIR control display. Pressing and releasing changes gain in small amounts. Pressing and holding changes gain very rapidly. Gain is adjusted from 0 (least contrast) to 9 (highest contrast). Initial setting is 5.
elevation readout display	Indicates pointing angle above or below the horizon. Negative sign is displayed when angle is below horizon.
BLK/WHT pushbutton switch	Momentary pushbutton switch. Alternately selects white hot or black hot video polarity. Label indicates selected polarity.
ALG pushbutton switch	Momentary pushbutton switch. When boxed, selects automatic level and gain controlled by the FLIR pod. With ALG selected FOCS increase/decrease pushbutton label replaces GN increase/decrease pushbutton label and LVL increase/decrease pushbutton label is not displayed. ALG pushbutton label is boxed when selected.
LST pushbutton switch	LST is displayed when laser spot tracker (LST) is tracking a properly coded, laser illuminated target. It flashes until the LST target is designated.
velocity vector and artificial horizon line	Indicates aircraft vertical flight path angle and roll altitude information if DCLTR is not selected. Horizon line is enlarged and velocity vector is centered when VVSLV selected.
DCLTR pushbutton switch	Momentary pushbutton switch. Removes airspeed, altitude, mach number, velocity vector, FLIR radar LOS box, FLIR radar LOS box offset symbol, artificial horizon line and azimuth steering line from display. Label is boxed when selected.
altitude display	Indicates barometric or radar altitude. Not displayed when DCLTR is selected.
SETUP pushbutton switch	Momentary pushbutton switch. Causes a 10-shade gray scale to appear across the bottom 1 inch of the video. The gray scale is used as an aid when adjusting GN and LVL. Label is boxed when selected.
CAL	Momentary pushbutton switch. When selected, pod will do a short video calibration.
VVSLV pushbutton switch	Momentary pushbutton switch. Displayed in a/g or nav master mode when a target has not been designated and velocity vector is valid. Slaves ATFLIR line of sight (LOS) to aircraft velocity vector when inflight. Reinitializes ATFLIR to a specific pointing angle of 7.5° below the horizon along aircraft ground track with weight on wheels. Label is boxed when selected.
Field of view reticle	Indicates center of FLIR field of view. End bars on wide field of view reticle indicate limits of next narrower field of view. Not displayed when acquisition gate or tracking gate is displayed.
RTCL pushbutton switch	Momentary pushbutton switch. Selects or deselects ATFLIR field of view reticle.

j. servo controller module

k. servo interface module

l. signal processor module

m. video processor module.

19. Analog Module. The analog module (AM) provides microcontroller and BIT functions. It also produces analog ± 15vdc and ± 12vdc for the analog power forms and the BIT hardwired power forms.

20. Clean Analog Module. The clean analog module (CAM) provides clean analog ± 5.2vdc, ± 15vdc and digital +5.1vdc and -5.0vdc. These voltages are used in the clean analog power forms and video generation where low noise is required. It also includes voltages for the BIT hardware.

21. Control and Interface Module. The control and interface module (CIM) provides control for the TRS temperature, quad detectors TEC, FOV motors and focus motors. The control and interface module also provides a 16-bit and a 24-bit address to the VME bus. The module samples discretes from the focus pot, focus temperatures, auto-alignment diode, TRS and detector temperatures, and BIT voltages. The module also contains the JTAG test bus controller, JTAG scan path links, fibrechannel port bypass circuits and relay drivers for heater and motor control. The module also provides the READY status to the aircraft.

22. Digital +3.3 Module. The digital +3.3 module provides uninterruptible power supply (UPS) +3.3vdc through a 500 µsec input power dropout.

23. Digital Module. The digital module provides UPS +5.1vdc through a 500 µsec input power dropout.

24. Digital Non-Uniformity Correction. The digital non-uniformity correction (DNUC) channels pixel-to-pixel non-uniformity and converts the analog signal to digital. The low-noise 14-bit DNUC receives the ATFLIR detector video output and applies level and gain corrections to each pixel. A fine level calibration takes less than one second.

25. Six sets of corrections are pre-stored and calibrated for each FOV and detection gain combination. Any correction set can be applied within 200 milliseconds. Also, fine real-time level corrections, derived from term generators on the scene based non-uniformity correction (SBNUC) are also applied.

26. Dead pixel and blinker detection is also a function of squares calculations. SBNUC receives 10-bit digital video from the EOSU and converts EOSU timing for a 1:1 aspect ratio display. The DNUC also processes electro optic sensors. The DNUC has a VME bus interface and a fibre channel interface.

27. Input Module. The input module provides EMI filtering, converts the 115vac to 270vdc, provides 50vdc transient protected +28vdc and contains the motor power relay.

28. Pod Control Module. The pod control module controls all pod functions, including the ATFLIR sensor and interfaces with the mission computer. It is a radstone power PC VME data processor.

29. The pod control module functions are to enable the laser electronics to start and stop the laser, close the shutter during BIT firing, and control the eyesafe OPO mechanism. The pod control module interfaces include a dual redundant 1553B interface, a VME64 bus, an RS-232 serial interface, an RS-422 serial interface and an RS-485 serial interface.

30. Scene Based Non-Uniformity Correction. The scene based non-uniformity correction (SBNUC) provides optimal uniformity over all environments in the rapidly changing background environment of a fighter aircraft.

31. The SBNUC incorporates field and line buffering and filtering and motion detection circuitry to support a real-time NUC algorithm. The SBNUC scene based correction is for both high and low frequency active non-uniformities. For high frequency non-uniformities, the module calculates non-uniformity terms based on video from the DNUC and uses a 3LM non-linear filter based on a multi-stage median architecture. For low frequency non-uniformities, dual bandpass filters are used to filter the DNUC video. The SBNUC interfaces with the DNUC using 14-bit digital video and VME bus interface.

32. Servo Controller Module. The servo controller module (SCM) provides the digital servo function and performs LOS stabilizing, step-stare scan control, FLIR-to-laser boresight alignment, @GeorgeT96559261 @ChrisSPITZER7 @makoteko1 @dave_beaty Yes. And IR sensors have another style of bloom, where a pixel sensor can re-radiate the incoming heat to themselves or adjacent pixels - so better IR cameras are cooled (or in olden times used a "chopper" to constantly recalibrate)

Taylor suggested that's happening in Gimbal.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1541468703534874625
@GeorgeT96559261 @ChrisSPITZER7 @makoteko1 @dave_beaty "Veiling glare" sometimes refers to local scattered/spread light around a bright light source. Unfortunately, terminology usage varies, even in optics journals. "glare" vs. "flare", for example.
Mil uses it more in the context of any glare that covers something, usually from sun http://pbs.twimg.com/media/FWRliRmUYAA1Jll.jpg

$$\mathbf{r} = \begin{pmatrix} r_x \\ r_y \end{pmatrix} = \mathbf{x_u} - \mathbf{cc}, \qquad r = |\mathbf{r}| \quad (1)$$

$$\mathbf{x_d} = (1 + \kappa_1 r^2 + \kappa_2 r^4 + \kappa_3 r^6)\mathbf{x_u} + \begin{pmatrix} 2\kappa_4 r_x r_y + \kappa_5(r^2 + 2r_x^2) \\ \kappa_5(r^2 + 2r_y^2) + 2\kappa_4 r_x r_y \end{pmatrix} \quad (2)$$ where $\mathbf{x_u}, \mathbf{x_d}$ are the undistorted and distorted point coordinates, $\kappa_{(1,2,3,4,5)}$ the distortion coefficients (first three radial and the rest tangential), and cc the principal point.

Once estimated, images can be corrected for distortion by warping by a function that maps colors from the distorted point coordinates to the undistorted point coordinates.

Application

Radial distortion correction is generally applied as a preprocessing step in algorithms like panoramic stitching, structure from motion, and other algorithms that rely explicitly on the pinhole model of projection for their correct execution.

▸Light Field

Definition

Lens glare or lens flare is a global light transport phenomenon which occurs due to reflections and scattering of light in the optical elements and body of the camera and leads to decrease in the contrast of the image.

Background

Glare is a phenomenon caused due to bright light source (either narrow or extended) in or near the field of view of the camera. It is typically caused when stray light reaches the sensor and could be either due to reflections at the air-glass interface of the lens or due to scattering in the lens. The effect of glare is a decrease in contrast of the image and thereby its dynamic range and is often considered undesirable. Sometimes glare is used artistically in graphics or outdoor filming to convey a sense of realism. A simple way to decrease glare is to use lens hood to prevent stray light from entering the lens and by using antireflective coating on lens which decreases the reflections at the lens surface.

Glare can also be mitigated by first estimating it and then removing it from the image. This can be done in a passive fashion post capture or in an active fashion where the sensed image is modified for better glare estimation and removal.

Theory

While there is some confusion in the literature regarding the classification and terminology of different kinds of lens glare, glare can be broadly classified into characterizes how much an incident ray on lens contributes to outgoing rays. Please refer the above entries for technical details.

Application

Glare is used in photography and videography to enhance the scene by conveying a sense of realism as shown in Fig. 3.

Glare estimation and removal is an important step in HDR imaging since the presence of glare in captured images reduces the dynamic range. Glare removal techniques in HDR are described in [7]. In multi-exposure HDR imaging, it has been used in [8]. Glare removal techniques are also used in X-ray imaging [5, 9]. They are also used in astronomical imaging where scattering effects cause a degradation in the image. Glare removal has been used to remove glare caused by water droplets sticking to the lens [10].

Since aperture ghosting is symmetrically opposite to the light source, techniques have been proposed to estimate the light source location and the optical center of the camera using this fact [11].

Lens Flare and Lens Glare, Fig. 2 The red and blue spot are focused on the sensor. The purple ray from the blue light source is undergoing reflection, which results in either aperture ghosting and/or lens flare. The cyan ray is scattering due to weak diffusion caused by the lens resulting in veiling glare (Figure courtesy [1]) three kinds as shown in Fig. 1. Two of these, aperture ghosting and lens flare, are caused by reflections at the air-glass interface of the lens. The third, veiling glare, is caused by the scattering of light in the lens.

Aperture ghosting is caused due to Fresnel reflection at the air-glass interface resulting in a number of aperture shaped reflections in the image as shown in Fig. 1. These aperture-shaped reflections or ghosts occur in the image at the symmetrically opposite end of the light source. If there are n lens surfaces, the number of ghosts are $n(n-1)/2$ [2].

Lens flare appears as fogging of a large image area as shown in Fig. 1 and is prominent when the aperture is large and the camera has a wide field of view. The effect is that region surrounding the bright light source is also bright due to reflections in the lens system as shown in Fig. 2.

Veiling glare is caused by scattering of light in the lens since lens acts as a weak diffuser as shown in Fig. 2. This results in a foggy appearance in the entire image with a distinct loss in contrast as shown in Fig. 1. Veiling glare is caused due to bright scene and not necessarily due to bright light sources close to the field of view.

In practice it is hard to distinguish and separate lens flare from veiling glare. Superior optics helps in mitigating glare by reducing the reflections at the lens surface.

Measuring glare: There are various ways of measuring glare. The standard way of measuring glare is to photograph a white board with a black target in the center [3, 4]. The ratio of the luminance of the black target to the luminance in the white region is defined as veiling glare index (VGI) by the ISO standard 9358 (year 1994).

Glare spread function (GSF) is another measure defined by ISO standard to quantify glare. It is defined as the glare intensity as function of distance from the center of an image of a centered point light source. If the glare intensity is invariant to the location of the point light source in the image, then GSF can be represented by a convolution operation like the point spread function (PSF).

Traditional methods of removing glare involve assuming a shift invariant GSF, estimating it, and performing deconvolution. This has been used in removing veiling glare in X-ray imaging [5]. The methods using deconvolution are passive where the glare is estimated and removed after capture. Active methods to remove glare have also been proposed, and they involve modifying the imaging architecture for better glare estimation and removal.

Talvala et al. [6] estimate veiling glare by taking multiple images of a scene by shifting a mask. This method allows the glare to be estimated even when the glare is significantly dominant. Other active approach involves estimating aperture ghosting and lens flare due to point light source by inserting a mask near the sensor and capturing a light field [1]. This method treats glare as high-frequency phenomenon in ray space as opposed to image space and defines a 4D glare ray spread function (GRSF) that

He bases this around a notion of "saturated" that seems poorly defined. Essentially he's using it as a synonym for "overexposed". That means for an individual pixel in an image it's brighter than the maximum value, so we can't tell exactly how hot it is relative to other pixels (other it being hotter than all of the unsaturated pixels). There are several problems with the way he uses that, but we can address those later.

@ChrisSPITZER7 @makoteko1 @dave_beaty No. Veiling glare is SPREADING light/radiation. Generally, that means that the light source itself would be saturated when visible (e.g. the sun) but the spreading light around it is not necessarily a byproduct of sensor saturation. Light spreads due to optical path imperfection.

@WTCphysics @michael_mcleary @ViktoriaLukas1 I think the engineers he knows are a highly representative sample of the engineers most likely to understand the situation - i.e. senior structural engineers in New York City. He also worked on the WTC site from 9/12 for several months.

Yeah. Yeah, I don't think I don't remember the live load being mentioned in in this analysis is though, it's not just the people as the floors themselves, which are the mass of the building. But they're not they're not live load. They're just they're dead load but they're not Yeah. So it kind of a general thing kind of closing up here. Like it's it's very hard To get people to talk about this type of thing, you're you're an engineer, you're an expert on this, this type of things. And you, you were on the site. So it's great, you have this really great perspective on it. But I find it very hard to get people like engineers or scientists to talk about conspiracy theories. what's what's your sense of how 911 conspiracy theories are viewed within the engineering community?

Donald Friedman 40:30

I've never met a structural engineer, a practicing structural engineer who believes them. That doesn't mean that those such people don't exist. I'm sure they do. But you would think that if there was something funny about what happened here, that engineers in New York would be aware of it. And there's really no sign that anybody here believes that kind of theory. It is sort of fascinating to me that so much of the the conspiracy theory comes from people who are quite far away. And not, don't necessarily spend a lot of time dealing with, with tall buildings and don't necessarily, actually tall buildings as opposed to theory, and don't necessarily spend a lot of time dealing with tall buildings that have real life problems.

@HJB96145556 @jordanmiracle1 @Asgeir16813191 @nina_clyde @PostDisclosure @Oswald1160 My standards of "better" are very low. There's vast room for improvement, and every little step in that direction will bolster the case.

Right now we've got blobs and lights. You don't need to give me 8K close-ups. Just a good photo or two would be a start.

@YouVacuum @Rico71091546 @PostDisclosure That's not the issue here. The issue is Wendt's claim that RIGHT NOW the Navy has ruled out all conventional explanations.

@HJB96145556 @jordanmiracle1 @Asgeir16813191 @nina_clyde @PostDisclosure @Oswald1160 Sure, but good photos and video would be MUCH more convincing than the hubcaps, fuzzy blobs, or lights in the sky we have right now. There's vast room for improvement.

@YouVacuum @Rico71091546 @PostDisclosure So you just think it's possible that they are genuine UFOs.

Which means that, right now, they are not. They are just UFOs, and we've not ruled out all conventional explanations.

I'd never stop CONSIDERING prosaic explanations. You need to consider before you can rule out. But to RULE OUT prosaic explanations you need sufficient data.

And again with the insults? Can't we just have a civil discussion about the facts? I have no hard feelings, but it's a problem when trying to be constructive.

@bartjpx @PostDisclosure No. They have always been unidentified, who ever said they were identified?

The issue here is Wendt's claim that the Navy has ruled out all conventional explanations, and hence that they are "genuine unidentified".

They better fit his description of "temporary unidentified"

@YouVacuum @Rico71091546 @PostDisclosure The issue here is Wendt's claim that the Navy has established that "genuine UFOs are real". He bases that on the videos and he claims, based on nothing, that that the Navy has "ruled out all the standard conventional explanations".

@Asgeir16813191 @Oswald1160 @PostDisclosure Continually insulting people's intelligence isn't really a good discussion strategy. It makes your side look bad, and it sets up an adversarial situation that's difficult to get anything constructive from.

The analysis of "go-fast" on the TTSA site repeats the same errors of saying the object is low and fast. They could calculate the actual altitude, and a range of speeds. But they don't

https://twitter.com/_/status/1225592063011352576
@Icculus13 @hughespj1 What position is that?

Of course there's some radar data that shows something somewhere. But since we can't access it, then it's not an actual source we can factor into an analysis.

All we have are memories about the data. And even there no real link to the video.

2020-02-07T01:19:14+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1225589803376185344

@hughespj1 @UfoIssue @PostDisclosure Put another way. It was said we have evidence including "experts, video, and radar data". If the video was just something PJ recorded in 2004, then never saw again. Is it true to say we have video evidence?

16 year old memories of data are not data.

2020-02-07T01:14:34+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1225588629700894720

@hughespj1 @UfoIssue @PostDisclosure "PJ Knows" is just "military experts" it's not radar data.

"PJ says there is data" is not data.

"PJ says the data somehow proves the video is not of a plane" is not good evidence.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1225587887854325762

@hughespj1 @UfoIssue @PostDisclosure Radar data that shows the object in the video is not a plane? How do you know the object in the video is the same as the source of your radar data?

@PostDisclosure @nina_clyde @Asgeir16813191 @Oswald1160 And don't you ever speculate about the reasons for the "aliens" doing what they do? Forming a model that includes intent

https://twitter.com/_/status/1225559174249091073

@PostDisclosure @nina_clyde @Asgeir16813191 @Oswald1160 If you are ascribing things to potentially alien technology, or just to a dot on the screen then it's really helpful to know why. Why did someone think the "radar jamming", an "act of war" came from the craft in the video? What difference would it have made?

@PostDisclosure No, it's not. It's a possible explanation. It's possible the Navy was unable to identify the FLIR1 object because they did not get close enough to it.

@Normah28963081 You disagree with him. But what do you know about the subject that he does not? What is he (the world's leading expert on the topic) missing that you did not miss?

2020-02-05T06:22:42+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1224941396961812481

@Normah28963081 He's the world's leading expert on the science of SAI. He says both that nobody is doing it, and that if they were, it would not look like contrails.

2020-02-05T06:17:22+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1224940056764305408

@Normah28963081 It will look like a faint mist, probably invisible. Not a thick cloud. Only a contrail can form a thick persistent cloud. This is because a contrail is formed mostly (99.9%) from atmospheric water.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1224930535786438657

@BryanKelly @ChiefofTruth @PostDisclosure No, it's not fair at all. TTSA has a page describing Go-Fast as a low fast object, when it's actually a high slow object. That's not a difference you can sweep under the rug as a "general characterization." It's just wrong, regardless of who did it.

2020-02-05T05:36:56+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1224929880615215104

@ChiefofTruth @PostDisclosure I'm an expert in 3D mathematics. It's what I did professionally for 20 years. But it's not even that complicated. Elizondo, directly or indirectly, messed up Go-Fast analysis that needed less than high-school trig.

Hence his opinion, direct or indirect, is worthless.

@PostDisclosure @hughespj1 @GaryVoorhis @jasonturner2 Wendt did not show the Nimitz video. He quite specifically say that the Navy had ruled out conventional explanations for Go-Fast and Gimbal. That's pure unsubstantiated speculation on his part.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1224918604811923456

2020-02-05T04:29:56+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1224913020251336705

@PostDisclosure This reflects a common and fundamental problem in UFOology - conflating "inability to resolve" with "ruling out".

A dot in the sky might be A,B,C,D,E,F, or something else. Not being able to tell WHICH of A,B,C,D,E, or F it is does not mean it's not any of them.

2020-02-05T04:26:19+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1224912108220928000

@PostDisclosure It's nonsense. The two videos (Gimbal and Go-Fast) he gives as examples of "Genuine UFOs" are in fact only UFOs because of a lack of information - and more specifically because they are too far away. He totally misrepresent the Navy here. They did NOT rule anything out.

@DanKaszeta It waxes and wanes, depending on what is on TV. It does not mean there are no actual exotic craft flying around - but most sightings are clearly boring stuff.

@TxUFOSightings It's when a group of people believe that the theory is true, and they start acting based on this and promoting their belief. This can seem similar to people who believe that a cult's teachings are true.

@specrtre @realDonaldTrump People who believe in one conspiracy theory often think of people who don't as being believers in a different one. So if you say democrats are perpetuating a conspiracy theory, they might say that is itself a conspiracy theory. If you were a Trump supporter, then: http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EPiqY4PUwAAmiqz.jpg

@ArchonLobo Yeah, but
A) sometimes they have a figurehead, just less of central focus - Richard Gage for 9/11, Dane Wigington for chemtrails, Mark Sargent for Flat Earth.
B) Maybe they are leaderless cults. i.e. everything but the leader.

@zazzafrazz Well Qanon jumps to mind. But also others like 9/11, chemtrails, even flat earth.
I was reading about "thought stopping" - basically chanting to stop your brain when you start to doubt - common in cults. It seems to tally with some online behavior - particularly flat earth.

Start with plumb, as in a plum bob and line, and then note that "level" is at right angles to plumb.

I think it helps get the concept across better than if you start with "level"

Sorry to interject, but I think here that the dictionary definition of "horizontal" is a bit wooly. I'd like to encourage the more practical terms "plumb" and "level", since they can be measured.
Lovely simple concepts. Level is 90Â° to plumb.

@Bhima_Jenkins @GaryVoorhis @uaptn The problem is, if there were certain weather conditions that caused the SPY to malfunction, then that knowledge would be an advantage to an adversary, and hence would be classified.
So if it's a radar problem, then we might not hear about it for decades.

Equations

Equation	Symbols	Meaning in words
$K = \frac{1}{2}mv^2$	K is translational kinetic energy, m is mass, and v is the magnitude of the velocity (or speed)	Translational kinetic energy is directly proportional to mass and the square of the magnitude of velocity.
$\Delta K = \frac{1}{2}m(v^2 - v_0^2)$	ΔK is change in kinetic energy, and v and v_0 are the magnitudes of the final and initial velocity	Change in kinetic energy is the difference between the final and initial kinetic energy.

@JasonBermas I didn't know that the bail reform would apply to a case like that. I stand corrected.

What are you ultimately hoping for? A total repeal, or a move to NJ's systems, with more judicial discretion to consider potential harm.

@Asgeir16813191 @RobAgs0817 @BobMcGwier_N4HY @hughespj1 @Deepneuron @UFOGuy3 @PostDisclosure @GaryVoorhis But don't make the logically false step of inferring:

- Ultra Top Secret (SCI/SAP etc) stuff looks like nothing special from the outside.
- The incident is treated by the Navy as nothing more than airspace incursions
- Therefore, it's Ultra Top Secret, like alien tech, etc.

@hughespj1 @transformPosit1 @Deepneuron @UFOGuy3 @PostDisclosure @GaryVoorhis @Mick Wrong how? I'm basing that on the Navy memo above, that says some radio frequency allocations are TS, so any list with non-TS and some TS freqs becomes TS.

more banal things that happen to be associated with it get roped in to that TS. So TS could actually be something super banal, like a list of radio frequencies the radar uses.

@hughespj1 @Deepneuron @UFOGuy3 @PostDisclosure @GaryVoorhis @Mick I know, that's my point. The TS stuff is likely just ordinary things, possibly quite mundane. Here's an example of one the exemptions used - radio frequency authorizations. Lists of radio frequencies are mostly boring, but if one is TS then the entire list is TS

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY
CHIEF INFORMATION OFFICER
1000 NAVY PENTAGON
WASHINGTON, DC 20350-1000

30 November 2006

MEMORANDUM FOR DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY DEPUTY CHIEF INFORMATION OFFICER (NAVY) DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY DEPUTY CHIEF INFORMATION OFFICER (MARINE CORPS)

Subj: RADIO FREQUENCY AUTHORIZATION (RFA)

This memorandum provides guidance and justification for exemption of Radio Frequency Authorization (RFA) information pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA).

The RFAs contained in the Government Master File (GMF) are withheld pursuant to Exemption 1, in the interest of national security, and Exemption 2, in that the records are related solely to internal personnel and practices.

With respect to Exemption 1, disclosure of RFAs could compromise the telecommunications networks of the United States. Although most of the RFAs are unclassified per se, lists of unclassified frequency assignment records in a given area can be classified under the provisions of Sections 1.5(a), 1.5(c), 1.5(e), and 1.5(f) of Executive Order 12958 of April 20, 1995 (attachment 1) as RFAs en toto provide sufficient information which could lead to disclosure of military operations, intelligence activities, scientific and technological matters, including vulnerabilities or capabilities of systems, which all relate to national security. RFAs, when compiled, can indicate the overall strategic telecommunications capabilities of the United States and their disclosure could cause damage to national security. Accordingly, RFAs must be appropriately handled.

With respect to Exemption 2, case law provides protection to information concerning vital communication systems and analogous information for internal security purposes. Institute for Policy Studies v. Department of the Air Force, No. 87-0916 (D.D.C. October 9, 1987), and Hall v. United States Department of Justice, et. al., No. 87-0474 (D.D.C. March 8, 1989). Specifically, RFAs are prepared for internal use and their distribution is appropriately limited even within the Department of the Navy (DON). RFAs are provided to DON on classified CD-ROMs and are required to be logged and secured in classified repositories. Accordingly, the RFAs are used solely for internal purposes relating to the operation of DON systems.

FOIA's Exemption 1 and Exemption 2 provisions are applicable to all DON RFAs. There are no reasonably non-exempt portions of the RFAs which may be disclosed as exempt and non-exempt information is inextricably intertwined. All DON RFAs are to be marked as exempt from release to the public under FOIA.

My point of contact for this policy is Mr. Thomas Kidd, Director, Department of the Navy Strategic Spectrum Plans and Policy, thomas.kidd@navy.mil.

A2.3. Lists of Air Force Frequency Assignments.
A2.3.1. Although most individual frequency assignment records in the Air Force RFA list are individually unclassified, the entire RFA list is classified according to the highest level of classification of the assignments it contains. Lists (two or more frequencies) of unclassified frequency assignment records in a given range of frequencies, or in a given geographic area, may need to be classified, because they may provide information leading to the disclosure of military or national security related operations, and scientific and technological matters relating to national security. These lists can indicate the overall strategic telecommunications capabilities of the United States, and their disclosure could cause damage to national security. The continued protection of this information is essential to national security because it pertains to communications security and reveals vulnerabilities and capabilities. Unauthorized disclosure can result in nullifying the effectiveness of telecommunications networks and capability of the United States.
A2.3.2. The USMCEB Security Classification Guide for Frequency Assignment Records gives guidance on classifying compilations of frequency assignment records. Based on this guidance:
A2.3.2.1. Classify a RFA list at the highest level of frequency assignment it contains.
A2.3.2.2. When a RFA list contains only unclassified DoD frequency assignments, it is unclassified. This type of listing contains only assignments of one agency (DoD) and was requested by DoD, meeting the criteria of both paragraphs 4.2 and 7.1.2 of the USMCEB security classification guide.
A2.3.2.3. When a RFA list contains DoD unclassified frequency assignments and unclassified assignments of one or more federal (non-DoD) agencies, classify the list CONFIDENTIAL according to paragraph 4.2 of the USMCEB security classification guide, unless it meets the criteria of any one of the exemptions of the USMCEB security classification guide.
Mark RFA lists classified under this guidance according to DoD 5200.1R and AFI 31-401:

The grouping of lights in the center of the photograph shows a drone flying several hundred feet in the night sky on Jan. 2, 2020 near Limon.

LAST CHANCE — It's 6:36 p.m. on a chilly January night, and the Lincoln County Sheriff's Office is prepping for calls.

"Drone activity reported just now, Highway 71 and County Road 4D," Deputy Justin Allen says in a text message to a Denver Post reporter, who's on the hunt for drones hovering over the Eastern Plains.

On a desolate dirt road just north of Limon, the sky is lit by stars and a waxing crescent moon. Then, a small set of red-and-white lights blink rapidly, punctuating the rural Colorado landscape. The aerial object travels briskly across the sky at several hundred feet above the fields and wind turbines. Minutes later, another one creeps onto the horizon. And then another one.

@Rico71091546 Well, when all the FAA has to go by is "some guys somewhere said they saw something in the sky and they thought it was a drone" it's hard for them to solve it.

This is just one case though. Other things might be Venus, or cars, or buildings. Or drones.

One of best documented sightings of 300 foot high "drones" over Colorado turned out to be 737s. The red light reflects off the engines and the other lights combine to fool the eye. It's happened before.

@hughespj1 @Oswald1160 @GaryVoorhis @bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann So why would ANYONE need to fly out to the ship, if all the data was available remotely?

Maybe the data was only available remotely via CEC, and if that was thought to be where the problem was, then they would need the raw physical data storage.

@hughespj1 @GaryVoorhis @Oswald1160 @bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann The more data the better, when it comes to debugging. It's like having two regular cameras and a MWIR camera. Total information awareness.

@hughespj1 @GaryVoorhis @Oswald1160 @bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann To compare it. It's a different set of sensor data - so they can compare it against the one they think is buggy. Like my two camera example, earlier.

@GaryVoorhis @Oswald1160 @bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann @hughespj1 If the CEC had the Aegis data, and the CES was backed up remotely, then why take the Aegis tapes?

Kind of supports the bug hypothesis - if CES was corrupting Aegis data, you'd need the original.

@GaryVoorhis @Oswald1160 @bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann @hughespj1 By debugging, I mean analyzing the code and data to find out what the bug is, so that a patch can be created. Installing a patch is not usually referred to as debugging.
Initially they can't patch is, because they don't know what the bug is.

@GaryVoorhis @hughespj1 @Oswald1160 @bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann Right, but Aegis isn't just, as PJ said, "a radar" - it's a bunch of datalinks and displays around overlaying a radar system. CEC extends the concept fleet-wide.

2020-01-05T21:40:05+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1213938241843294208

@GaryVoorhis @Oswald1160 @bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann @hughespj1 So the SPY data, that wan't seen via a CEC synthesized view? It was direct from the SPY to a display, with no CEC in-between?

2020-01-05T21:36:37+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1213937371634257921

@hughespj1 @GaryVoorhis @Oswald1160 @bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann But data from the same timeframe from one system can be used to debug another system.

A simple example would be a white spot in the sky on a video. You can't tell if it's really there, but if you compare it against another video you will be able to see if it's real, or a glitch @hughespj1 @GaryVoorhis @Oswald1160 @bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann But in Gary's case they deleted the whole thing. So it was no longer there. Not a huge issue, but raises questions as to why they might do that for reasons other than covering up secret UFOs.

@GaryVoorhis @hughespj1 @Oswald1160 @bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann Yes, but obviously after it was erase it was not working - but as you say it was a prototype, and you could just use Aegis.

2020-01-05T21:20:14+00:00

@GaryVoorhis @Oswald1160 @bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann @hughespj1 So Aegis was not networked to an external datacenter, so they needed the tapes.
Would they be comparing simultaneous data from the two systems? Seems like if they wanted to debug CES then the parallel Aegis data would be useful, even necessary.

2020-01-05T21:16:19+00:00

@GaryVoorhis @hughespj1 @Oswald1160 @bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann So the CEC stopped working after this visit?

One hypothesis this suggests is the CEC software was buggy, they diagnosed it remotely, then had someone come onboard to take it offline so they could fix it. Deleted it to prevent more problems. It's secret, so they don't explain.

Hi Chad.

I've been involved in investigating the FLIR1 video you took for quite some time now. My interpretation of it is that all the movement is apparent movement from the camera regaining lock, and from gimbal corrections.

@HJB96145556 @kevincann @bartjpx @hughespj1 But likewise, if I zoom in and it clearly looks like a well defined white blob with tiny protrusions, then for all practical purposes it's confirmed to be NOT a plane.

@HJB96145556 @kevincann @bartjpx @hughespj1 One can very easily raise confirmation to near 100%, even if you want to get all philosophical about things. Like if I zoom in on a white speck, and it turns out to look like a 737, then I'm going to go with, for all practical purposes, it's confirmed to be a plane.

@hughespj1 @bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann No, I've studied the video extensively for over a year. I've talked to lots of people about it. It's not moving.

2020-01-05T16:38:43+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1213862398957740032
@hughespj1 @bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann No. There's zero evidence of that. It only moves when the camera changes lenses, or does a gimbal correction.

@bartjpx @HJB96145556 @kevincann @hughespj1 No, but it was also clearly not good enough to identify the object. It's small, back-lit, and out of focus. It resembles some kind of distant flying craft, so it's unidentified.

@PstarmanUa @gerrycan1 @DaveyGrean69 So where were, as you said, "Us conspiracy theorists" predicting this 20 years ago? What year did you predict it for? What you quote is a scenario fo the Bush administration, ten years ago.

@Adrian00506915 It's the weather. Like how some days it's cloudy, and other days it's not. Same thing, but with the upper-air weather. Contrails form when it's humid and cold enough at altitude. Varies hourly.

@ChiefofTruth Well regardless, I still think it would be very useful to nail down the actual proportions of the object. Like the ratio of length to diameter, and if the ends were hemispheres or not, and the size of the "feet".

This seems like simple and useful information that would help.

The "Tic Tac."

The term "Tic Tac," I actually coined that. So, any time you heard the term, "It looked like a 'Tic Tac' out there in the sky," I was the one that kind of coined that.

Was that named based on what you saw with your own eyes, or from looking at the screen on the camera?

No. I was more concentrated on looking at the FLIR[2]. It was inside of 20 miles. You're not going to see it with your own eyes until probably 10 miles, and then you're not going to be able to visually track it until you're probably inside of five miles, which is where Dave Fravor said that he saw it. So, at that point I didn't see anything with my eyeballs. I was more concerned with tracking it, making sure that the videotape was on so that I could bring something back to the ship, so that the intel folks could dissect whatever it is that I captured.

@GalaxyReport @PostDisclosure @bartjpx @hughespj1 @naoehogui @Oswald1160 @Mikelynette @GaryVoorhis I'm not losing sleep over this. I'm just fact checking the story. People say the video shows what Fravor saw. But the video does not match his description.

@GalaxyReport No they don't. Protrusions on the bottom don;t change the shape of the top, or make one end larger than the other.

I've updated my model. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/ENZh0kxU0AALPzE.jpg

Just DRAW A DIAGRAM! http://pbs.twimg.com/media/ENZcScmVAAE3cLh.jpg

Silva Record

Corbell: And so you had mentioned to me they were L-shaped appendages underneath the vehicle, the tic-tac?

Fravor: Yeah, like if you're looking at it, you know...go about... I don't know 20%, 25% down and kind of come out make like a little L, to the right, like a little down 90 degree slope. They almost look like little just feet sticking out the bottom. Could be antennas.

Corbell: Were both of the L shapes going to one side or the other or were there two symmetrical...

Fravor: Yeah, I believe they both went to the right. So we're looking at it, you know it goes off to the left side, so they came down and pointed out to the right side. They don't go that far down. I mean, the way they're zoomed in there they're pretty close to the object, you know, zoom wise.

@BryanKelly @marcpalmerdev @PostDisclosure They distort VIS? Then how did Fravor even see the shape?

This is just an appeal to magic now. You're saying they look different because they look different for some reasons, but they are the same thing?

@hughespj1 @GalaxyReport @naoehogui @bartjpx @Oswald1160 @Mikelynette @PostDisclosure @GaryVoorhis Analog video does not use digital compression. MP4 has been around since 2000.
But surely it would be interesting to replicate the video? In fact, I'd think it would be required, to prove that it COULD be a caplet shape.
Right now, it does not look like it could be.

Distance and altitude would not make a visual difference, when you account for scale (which I did, small close model)

@hughespj1 @BurtReynolds0 @PostDisclosure @GaryVoorhis Well obviously there's an underlying reason they classify operations. I'm just saying you don't really need to speculate about what one thing they are protecting. The entire op is blanket classified by default.

@PostDisclosure @Erwal4 @histrangeness Here's a useful though experiment y'all can do. Re-read Fravor's account, but instead of picturing the object as being where he thinks it it, picture it being half-way there - i.e. instead of moving around the other side of the circle, it's drifting in the middle of the circle.

Should people automatically all be put in jail for an indefinite period as soon as they are accused of doing something? For some crimes, yes. For other crimes (with no flight risk), no.

@JasonBermas (That should read "This changed nothing for the majority of VIOLENT felonies.") The intent behind this change is to stop people accused of non-violent crimes being put in jail simply because they can't afford bail.

@JLuvin @MadScientistPod There's always a rational alternative hypothesis - usually there are several. You just can't pin it down because UFOs exist in the Low Information Zone.

@jaydiamond @peterboghossian Street Epistemology is somewhat ad-hoc (less so than "Escaping the Rabbit Hole") but it's a real thing. It intersects conspiracism (and supernatural and pseudoscience) via the notion of "crippled epistemology" popularized by Cass Sunstein and Adrian Vermeule.

@jaydiamond "Street Epistemology" is the name of a strategy that uses the Socratic method with a focus on the belief acquisition aspect of epistemology (which the individual thinks of as knowledge acquisition.) The term comes from ch 1 of "A Manual for Creating Atheists" by @peterboghossian

There's also the possibility that some baseless theories might be correct. So I often use "false conspiracy theories" for clarity

@mikeb8637 @chad_vfa41 I don't think he filmed a reflection in his cockpit, and certainly not a "bird". I think he filmed a distant plane. Similar to this known distant (4 engine) A340 filmed over Chile. The absence of an exhaust plume just means it was far away, so the glare covers the details. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EMKd64vUUAAUQjT.jpg climate of $-4.88\,\mathrm{mW\,m^{-2}}$.

@RobertSmoker Contrails have a net heating effect, as the extra cloud cover traps heat at night. They are not really helping. They makes the days very slightly cooler, but the slightly larger night warming offsets this.

@the_fe_pill @free_energy2016 The function of the device is not a cloud generator, it's a rocket engine. Rain cloud generation is a side-effect of static testing of large rocket engines.

It's a rocket engine. Specifically a Space Shuttle booster engine. Burning hydrogen based fuel makes water vapor. Burn it all in the same place and you make a cloud.

Our simulations suggest that the climate and air quality impacts of aviation are sensitive to FSC and the altitude of emissions. We explored a range of scenarios to maximise climate cooling and reduce air quality impacts. Use of ULSJ fuel (FSC = 15 ppm) at low altitude combined with high FSC in the free troposphere results in increased climate cooling whilst reducing aviation mortality. More complicated emission patterns, for example, use of high FSC only whilst over oceans might further enhance this effect. However, we note that the greatest reduction in aviation-induced mortality is simulated for complete desulfurization of aviation fuel. Given the uncertainty in both the climate and air quality impacts of aerosol and ozone, additional simulations from a range of atmospheric models are required to explore the robustness of our calculations. Finally, we note that our calculations are limited to calculation of aviation-induced RE. Future work needs to assess the complex climate impacts of altering aviation FSC. Future work needs to estimate the health impacts of aviation using newly available concentration response functions (Burnett et al., 2014).

This was swiftly followed by a letter from an outraged doctor demanding the accuser reveal himself and his sources.

Letters to the editor were like social media back then (130 years ago) , just a bit slower.

THE ANTI-VACCINATION MOVEMENT.

To the Editors of THE LANCET.

SIRS,—Cannot something more be done to prevent a repetition of such scandalous libels than the simple comment published by you in THE LANCET of the 20th inst.? Surely the proprietors of the Echo could be compelled to divulge the name of their correspondent, the quondam assistant, in order that he might be indicted as an accessory to what was, at the least, a criminal, if not actually a murderous, line of conduct on the part of his employers. "Dentist, Strand, W.C.," would then in self-defence either give up the names of the two public vaccinators and the Government teacher of vaccination, or he would repudiate his allegation; so that in either case the whole body of public vaccinators might be justified. It is simply monstrous that a profession so nearly ruined commercially by its own unselfish disinterestedness should be blasted morally by the slanders of an anonymous traducer.

I am, Sirs, yours truly,

ALAN REEVE MANBY, M.D. & P.V.

East Rudham, April 21st, 1889.

Anti-vaccination conspiracy theories are not new. I was looking up articles and one popped up from the Lancet in 1889. It's a second hand anonymous anecdote about evil vaccinators spreading disease to make more business for themselves.

https://books.google.com/books?id=N9FKAQAAMAAJ&lpg=PA858&ots=BHZViq4DVP&pg=PA804#v=onepage&q&f=false http://pbs.twimg.com/media/ELhAzQPU0AEhUVl.jpg

THE ANTI-VACCINATION MOVEMENT.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Echo, writing under the name of "Dentist," and giving no other address than "Strand, W.C.," states: "Some fifteen years ago, in my student days, I was assistant to a London public vaccinator. Two of his most intimate friends were another public vaccinator and a Government teacher of vaccination. The boast of these men was that, if possible, they always chose syphylitic (sic) or otherwise unhealthy children to take lymph from as it so spread disease and made business; and my instructions as assistant were never, if possible, to take lymph from a healthy child." The Echo allows this story to be told by an anonymous correspondent who gives practically no address. It is one of the circumstances in connexion with the anti-vaccination movement which will, we trust, be made the subject of investigation by the Commission about to be appointed. A more scandalous story we have never read.

@gerrycan1 Calculating the DCRs (Demand/Capacity Ratios) of the columns only tells you if any of the columns are likely to fail. That's perfectly fine when you are designing a building to NOT fail, but when simulating an actual COLLAPSE it tells you nothing beyond the initial failure.

2019-11-27T06:07:56+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1199570533194461184
@gerrycan1 It's not that complicated. To simulate what a collapse looks like, you can't just iteratively calculate DCRs and remove failed columns AFTER the calculation. You need to actually calculate the point (in time) of failure. i.e. you need dynamic analysis.

2019-11-27T05:55:10+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1199556508754665474

@gerrycan1 But the problem isn't with a simple DCR - it's about simulating how a building collapses - like what it looks like.

You think a static linear analysis can do that?

An exceptional nine-minute Navy video of a UFO displaying highly unusual behavior, studied by Chilean authorities for the last two years, is now being released to the public. The CEFAA - the Chilean government agency which investigates UFOs, or UAP (unidentified aerial phenomena), has been in charge of the investigation. Located within the DGAC, the equivalent of our FAA but under the jurisdiction of the Chilean Air Force, CEFAA has committees of military experts, technicians and academics from many disciplines. None of them have been able to explain the strange flying object captured by two experienced Navy officers from a helicopter.

@pbarracl @mesolithicguy The Nimitz incident did not have any corroboration by radar. The radar showed super rapid movement up and down, and "teleportation". Visual sightings were of small zig-zags, mirroring the movement of a jet, and then rapid apparent horizontal movement. Video showed no movement.

@pbarracl @mesolithicguy But does it prove they are not mundane things? Is there PROOF that they are interesting craft beyond known technology?

Because unidentified flying objects are always going to be a thing. Any object in the LIZ (Low Information Zone) is unidentified.

@Asgeir16813191 @qufoanon @devgru1980mi Sometimes they are perfect observations, but simply with limited information. For example when a plane is very far away, there's not a lot you can do to identify it.
UFOs typically are sighted in the Low Information Zone, just out of range of the observer's skill and technology

White House on lockdown Tuesday morning

The White House and the Capitol Building were briefly placed on lockdown Tuesday morning.

Accoridng to Fox News, U.S. Capitol Police scrambled a helicopter, and the military scrambled fighter jets from Joint Base Andrews during the incident.

Law enforcement sources initially told Fox News the lockdown was triggered after an aircraft moving east violated restricted airspace. But Fox News later learned that officials may have to go back and review the radar to determine what exactly prompted the scare, with sources saying they got "mixed signals at best" as to what the potential aircraft could have been.

One source said they were never sure whether an actual aircraft was ever involved, while another told Fox News that radar was showing "different sectors" as to where the threat was coming from. One source said whatever they saw may have just been an “anomaly” or even “geese.”

@qufoanon @Asgeir16813191 @devgru1980mi If they know it's birds then they will call it birds. But the point is that birds and/or spurious radar returns frequently generate reports of UFOs, because they are not initially identified due to lack of information. See Project Blue Book https://www.esd.whs.mil/Portals/54/Documents/FOID/Reading%20Room/UFO/proj_b1.pdf?ver=2017-05-22-113513-837 http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EKUGdKWUwAEYPFL.jpg

HOW THE PROGRAM IS CONDUCTED

The program is conducted in three phases. The first phase includes receipt of UFO reports and initial investigation of the reports. The Air Force base nearest the location of a reported sighting is charged with the responsibility of investigating the sighting and forwarding the information to the Project Blue Book Office at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio.

If the initial investigation does not reveal a positive identification or explanation, a second phase of more intensive analysis is conducted by the Project Blue Book Office. Each case is objectively and scientifically analyzed, and, if necessary, all of the scientific facilities available to the Air Force can be used to assist in arriving at an identification or explanation. All personnel associated with the investigation, analysis, and evaluation efforts of the project view each report with a scientific approach and an open mind.

The third phase of the program is dissemination of information concerning UFO sightings, evaluations, and statistics. This is accomplished by the Secretary of the Air Force, Office of Information.

The Air Force defines an unidentified flying object as any aerial object which the observer is unable to identify.

Reports of unfamiliar objects in the sky are submitted to the Air Force from many sources. These sources include military and civilian pilots, weather observers, amateur astronomers, business and professional men and women, and housewives, etc.

Frequently such objects as missiles, balloons, birds, kites, searchlights, aircraft navigation and anticollision beacons, jet engine exhaust, condensation trails, astronomical bodies and meteorological phenomena are mistakenly reported as unidentified flying objects.

The Air Force groups its evaluations of UFO reports under three general headings: (1) identified, (2) insufficient data, and (3) unidentified.

@ufotodaynetwork The simplest explanation is that it was downplayed because it was nothing. Quite possibly not even an actual aircraft.

@devgru1980mi No worries. But, as of now, whatever it was is still classified as an unexplained aerial phenomenon. It might get explained as there's so much interest. But many such events go unexplained, simply because of lack of information (and not because of aliens)

https://twitter.com/_/status/1196194522172022785

@Fibonacci222 It is directly proportional, not inversely. The larger the altitude, the larger the drop. I gave you the formula.

And it's non-linear, not linear. That simply means the function is a curve, not a straight line.

2019-11-17T20:36:39+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1196165271389532160

@Fibonacci222 You can plot the dip angle in degrees as a function of h (replacing h with x for plotting) with: 180/pi*asin(sqrt(2*3959*x+x^2)/(3959+x))

Here it is for up to 1 mile up, it's fairly linear after a mile up, but not at all at low altitudes, much steeper increase. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EJmhjz4UwAAEO7Q.jpg @Fibonacci222 Yes, the dip of the horizon, expressed as an angle is asin(SQRT(2Rh+h^2)/(R+h)) (Note SQRT(2Rh+h^2) is the distance to the horizon). R = radius of Earth, h = height of viewer above the earth.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1196146880125661184

Darn Sky Riders

Jet Trails Dim Sun, Palm Springs Gripes

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6. (UPI)—The air force is long since resigned to the fuss about noise from its jets. Now comes Palm Springs, Calif., with a new complaint—that jet trails overhead are so thick they are beginning to blot out the sun.

Jimmy Cooper, manager of the Palm Springs Chamber of Commerce, outlined this "most serious and urgent problem" in a telegram to Representative D. S. (Judge) Saund (D-Calif.), who has asked the air force what can be done.

"As you know," Cooper wired Saund, "our entire economy is dependent upon the tourist trade, which is predicated on our bright sunshine and warm climate. Recently our sky has resembled a mob of exuberant sky riders performing an aerial circus.

"The 'contrails' are not disappearing but are breaking down into a haze and creating a cloud-like appearance in the sky.

"With the unlimited expanse of barren, uninhabited land in the west, does such activity have to be centered over a resort area, which is offering the visitor cloudless skies and unlimited sunshine?"

The air force, so far, is flab- that the matter will be investigated.

The air force figures its jets couldn't blot out the sun short of a wing-to-wing mass flight like the European bombing raids of World war II. If anything like that is going on out of March air force base at Riverside, Calif., the nearest jet base to Palm Springs, air force officials here want to know all about it.

Shill Ousted by Minister

TOPEKA, Kan., Dec. 6. (AP)—Maurice D. Tulloch, who gave up the life of a Baptist minister to become a shill in a Las Vegas gambling casino, was stripped of his ministerial standing yesterday.

The action was taken by the executive committee of the Kansas Baptist convention.

Tulloch, a graying, spectacled man with crew-cut hair who looks closer to 40 than his 50 years, was pastor of the First Baptist church of Sabetha, Kan. Last September 29, he walked out of a meeting of Baptist pastors in Hutchinson, Kan., and disappeared.

@BollerGl I suspect you'll find that 5-10% of all names sum to 33. It's kind of in the middle of the range. So you'll always be able to find someone related to any event with a 33 name. Also 32 and 34. It's just an illusion.

@BeverlyPilot @CCAerial @TimNBCBoston Q200 and Q400 often leave aerodynamic contrails at 20-25,000 feet. The formation mechanism is different to exhaust contrails, and they can form at higher temperatures. Some examples:

@BollerGl Sure, assuming you use a proper ballistics gel dummy, with embedded human skeleton - and preferably a whole crowd of them, and repeat the experiment a few times to eliminate luck.

But really it seems perfectly obvious that it could do that. Why not?

2019-11-09T17:04:30+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1193212782558101507

@BollerGl So you think nobody died on 9/11, because the government was afraid the families would sue them?

2019-11-09T17:02:30+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1193212278432075776

@BollerGl A closer example would be a shotgun. Shoot someone with a shotgun from two feet away, and you can blow holes in them. Shoot them from 20 feet and they get a bunch of puncture injuries. Shoot at a snow fence from a few feet away = minor damage.

2019-11-09T16:55:39+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1193210551922384896

@BollerGl Like, here's a salt rifle. It explosively ejects a few grams of salt. It causes a lot of damage at short range, if the salt hits the target. It can blow a hole in paper if within an inch of it, but just minor damage at longer distances.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1193209312367112192

@BollerGl I'm not deflecting. I'm trying to get you think about the underlying physics.

Like I said, it's a challenge to explain, as most of us have very little experience with explosives. What kind of analogous experiments could we do? Maybe something to show the effect of distance?

2019-11-09T16:48:38+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1193208788007829505

@BollerGl I think it's possible someone could do some kind of false flag attack. I don't think 9/11 or Sandy Hook are plausible examples of this. And if there WERE to do the Boston Marathon bombing, then why not just use real bombs?

2019-11-09T16:07:41+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1193198483433345024

@BollerGl Oh, you need physics. You need to be able to think about what's actually going on in a physical sense, and not in a rhetorical sense.

That's the problem here. You've been convinced with words, when the underlying evidence is physics, which you don't understand.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1193196837953400832

@BollerGl I don't think they need to have placed it on its side (not that it's difficult). It would explode outwards regardless.

All explosions have a vertical plume of smoke. The air is very hot, so it rises. It was a bomb.

@BollerGl Read the papers. Primary blast is the shockwave, which creates overpressure injuries. The low power of the Boston bombs meant this was not a big factor, although there were several burst eardrums among the closest people (who also had the most other injuries).

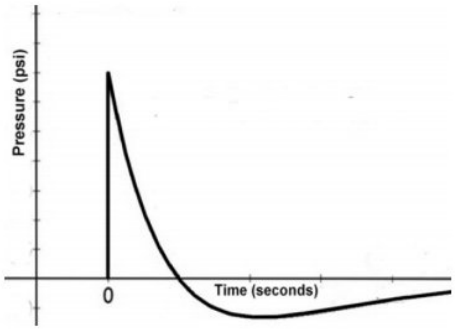

Figure 2. Simplest form of blast wave described by the Friedlander waveform. The blast wave (shock wave) has three components: the positive phase (increase in ambient air pressure), the negative phase, and mass movement of wind (blast wind). The blast wave is followed by a blast wind of negative pressure, which sucks items back in toward the center.

by the explosive device. Injuries are caused by compression and shearing effects in tissues, debris carried by the blast wind, and blunt trauma caused by the victim being displaced and impacting immovable objects (11).

body and results in injuries to gas-filled structures such as the ear, the lungs, and, rarely, the bowel, as well as traumatic brain injuries (11,13). After a blast, secondary injuries are the most commonly encountered and are blunt or penetrating injuries resulting from materials thrown out from the bomb casing (primary fragments) and debris from the environment being carried by the blast wind (secondary fragments) (13,16). Tertiary injuries occur as a result of victim displacement by the blast wind and include visceral injuries, fractures, and closed head injuries. Tertiary injuries also include injuries sustained as a result of structural @BollerGl We can assume we have no clue if he knows what he's talking about.

Sudden massive overpressure (explosive in the cooker) is very different to a gradual overpressure (faulty pressure cooker safety device leading to build up of pressure). Sudden overpressure = multiple cracks.

What we have here is a good example of a well-known psychological fact: "transference" of skill and experience does not usually take place. That is, an expert in one field does not necessarily "transfer" his competence to another one. Thus, it might surprise us that a pilot had trouble identifying other aircraft. But it should come as no surprise that a majority of pilot misidentifications were of astronomical objects.

THE HYNEK UFO REPORT

The Authoritative Account of the Project Blue Book Cover-Up

J. ALLEN HYNEK

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/FWBzsHfUYAATWTm.jpg

THE PEOPLE WHO SEE UFOS

While examining the cases in Project Blue Book, my colleagues and I kept careful records of the occupations of witnesses (with special attention paid to the military and trained technicians of all kinds). The correlation between occupation and what was perceived—or misperceived—is extremely interesting, and appears below:

TABLE 11.7—WITNESS RELIABILITY AS A FUNCTION OF OCCUPATION

OCCUPATION	% OF MISIDENTIFICATION
Military pilot
(single witness)	88
(multiple witness)	76
Commercial pilot
(single witness)	89
(multiple witness)	79
Radar technicians
(multiple witness)	78
Technical person
(single witness)	65
(multiple witness)	50
Other
(multiple witness)	83

It would seem that, as a rule, the best witnesses are multiple engineers or scientists; only 50 percent of their sightings could be classified as misperceptions. Surprisingly, commercial and military pilots appear to make relatively poor witnesses (though they do slightly better in groups).

What we have here is a good example of a well-known psychological fact: "transference" of skill and experience does not usually take place. That is, an expert in one field does not necessarily "transfer" his competence to another one. Thus, it might surprise us that a pilot had trouble identifying

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/FWBz_5LUcAAwcnr.jpg

other aircraft. But it should come as no surprise that a majority of pilot misidentifications were of astronomical objects.

As one might expect, the statistics do show that multiple witnesses are slightly better than single witnesses, since it is unlikely that a group of people would misperceive the same stimulus, group pressure notwithstanding.

BLUE BOOK SPECIAL REPORT NUMBER 14

The great "flap" of 1952 was, as far as we can judge from statistics, a "real" flap and not the result of mass hysteria. Its reverberations in the Pentagon were sufficiently great to have the Air Force commission the Battelle Memorial Institute in Columbus, Ohio—a private, highly regarded industrial research organization—to examine this prime question: Do "Unidentifieds" differ in basic characteristics from "Identifieds"? That is, if one considers these two main classifications separately, and examines each in terms of reported colors, number of objects, shapes, duration of observation, speed, and light brightness (when applicable), does one find similar descriptions reported for both groups? If so, one might deduce that "Unidentifieds" and "Identifieds" belong to the same statistical "universe," to use the statistician's term, and, therefore, that "Unidentifieds" are really all mis-identifications of ordinary things, perhaps seen under unusual circumstances. If, on the other hand, descriptions of "Unidentifieds" and "Identifieds" differ significantly, then one could make a stronger case for the existence of "real" UFOs.

In statistical theory there is a time-honored method of determining the probability (statistics deals with probabilities, not certainties) that one set of things is truly different from another set. This is the "chi-square" test, which one can find described in any standard text on statistics and probability theory. If you were examining, for instance, two crates of apples (but didn't know they were apples), the chi-square test on sizes, weights, numbers of objects, etc., would tell you that the probability was very high that the same sort of things were in the two crates. But if one crate contained apples and the other tennis balls, the chi-square test would tell you that the probability that both crates contained the same thing was extremely small —not zero, but very small!

The Battelle report showed that when six characteristics (color, shape, number, duration of observation, speed, light brightness) were given the chi-square test, the results were as follows:

@SKEPTICLBELIEVR @EasySideMoneyy @R35YYj @MiddleOfMayhem @travisstaylor1 If it's not, then that would only mean there are TWO such cases.

The Pentagon's UAP task force could only identify 1/144 UFO cases. But after releasing some data on the internet they have doubled that to 2/144 - with the new one being some stars and a drone.

You're welcome.

Behind the myth

Based on these early reports, what was it the children saw?

We can't go back – we'll probably never know – but a vehicle reflecting sunlight, and a couple of guys running around in sunglasses or masks, fits most of the evidence. As the vehicle drove off the "light" may have appeared to rise up (going over a bump) then disappear (as it moved into shade and stopped glinting).

Some of the drawings certainly look like a camper trailer (as suggested by Gilles Fernandez) or van, with a row of windows and some with a defined "front" and "back". The children say they couldn't see clearly because of the trees and long grass, which would hide the wheels. Bright sunlight would wash out other features.

And far be it from me to speculate on alien behavior, but why the heck were they on top of their spaceship? Isn't climbing up and sitting on your vehicle's roof something idiot teenagers would do for a laugh?

Maybe those dudes were playing a prank. Maybe they stopped for a spliff and realized the kids were curious, so they had some fun with it. But the fact remains, even if we'll never know exactly what was out there and why, from the earliest accounts there's no good evidence this was anything otherworldly.

The area was part of the school's cross-country running track, a "beaten path" [Hesemann, 1997] through the bush, so it seems there was a way for a vehicle to get in and out. What about the failure to find vehicle tracks? It's possible the children misjudged the distance to the object and the "landing site" wasn't quite where they thought. Gunter Hofer said the earth was rock-hard following a severe drought, so this may also explain the lack of tracks.

What about the objects coming in along the power lines? This may have been an unrelated sighting, perhaps helicopters (a strong wind and a whirring sound were noted in Hind's report) or even birds. Again, we'll never know – but it's odd that only two witnesses saw this: Stefan, who drew it, assuming I've correctly identified his drawing, and Barry, whose testimony we only have indirectly from Hind. In any case, Gunter Hofer recently stated the sighting along the power lines was the day before.

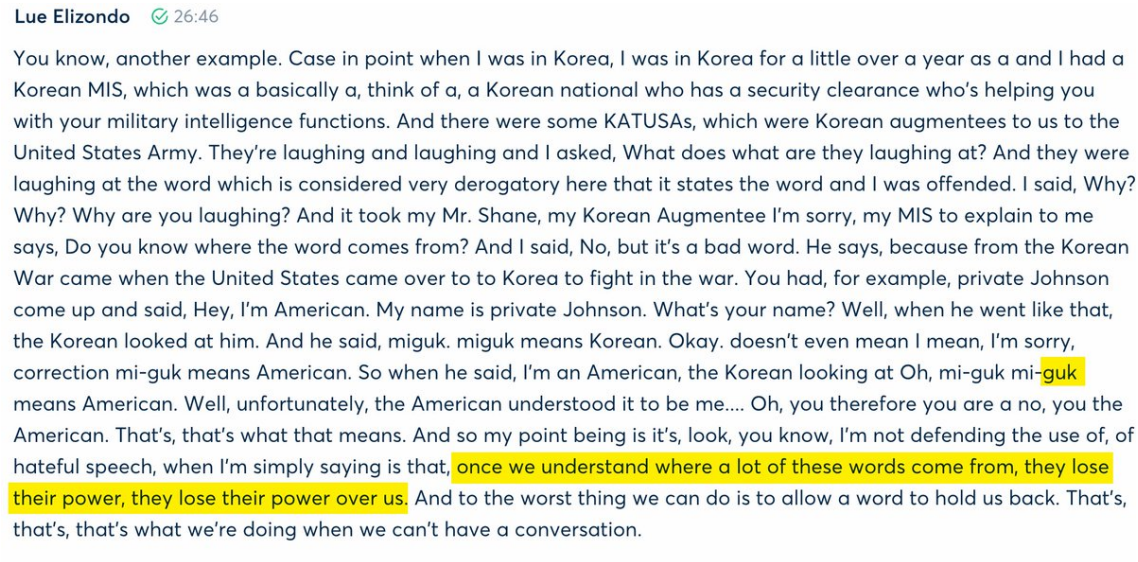
Lue Elizondo 25:10

So when people will say you have, you know, far left ideals and far right so far left ideas like Antifa, for example, I'm not supporting or defending it or, or condemning it just you have far left ideas and far right ideals. The problem is we're not having, we're not doing the due diligence and understanding things. So for example, when people say, you know, the Nazis, white supremacy and Nazis, again, I'm being Latino myself. They say, Well, it's, you know, the Nazi Party is, the neo Nazi Party, is a far right extremist group. Well, let's look at that. Is it really, what what is the word Nazi come from? Well, it comes from the German word, National Socialist Movement. Socialism is in the very title of socialism is a left-leaning effort. Not right. So again, I'm not saying it's good or bad. It's not good. But either way, but let's at least be let's be specific about, about terminology here, just like when someone says a very terrible word, and you can edit this out if you want. But you know, I'll say because I'm Latino, and ??? says, you know the word, right? Because Oh, yeah, that's terrible. Okay, well, that's fine. But let's, let's, for just a moment, let's let's dissect that word, what does it mean? Where does it come from? Well, it comes from the truncation of "Do you es-speak Spanish?" es-spic? It's always one of those. It's not even a real word. So to hold myself, you know, in bondage because someone called me a name. Guys, that's, that's life. You know, I used to tell tell my young agents, what are you going to do when someone calls you a bad name? You're gonna whip out your gun and point it at their head. Now, you can't do that. No, you have to take the moral high road.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/FV7dtMCVUAEptlP.jpg



Lue Elizondo 26:46

You know, another example. Case in point when I was in Korea, I was in Korea for a little over a year as a and I had a Korean MIS, which was a basically a, think of a, a Korean national who has a security clearance who's helping you with your military intelligence functions. And there were some KATUSAs, which were Korean augmentees to us to the United States Army. They're laughing and laughing and I asked, What does what are they laughing at? And they were laughing at the word which is considered very derogatory here that it states the word and I was offended. I said, Why? Why? Why are you laughing? And it took my Mr. Shane, my Korean Augmentee I'm sorry, my MIS to explain to me says, Do you know where the word comes from? And I said, No, but it's a bad word. He says, because from the Korean War came when the United States came over to to Korea to fight in the war. You had, for example, private Johnson come up and said, Hey, I'm American. My name is private Johnson. What's your name? Well, when he went like that, the Korean looked at him. And he said, miguk. miguk means Korean. Okay. doesn't even mean I mean, I'm sorry, correction mi-guk means American. So when he said, I'm an American, the Korean looking at Oh, mi-guk mi-guk means American. Well, unfortunately, the American understood it to be me.... Oh, you therefore you are a no, you the American. That's, that's what that means. And so my point being is it's, look, you know, I'm not defending the use of, of hateful speech, when I'm simply saying is that, once we understand where a lot of these words come from, they lose their power, they lose their power over us. And to the worst thing we can do is to allow a word to hold us back. That's, that's, that's what we're doing when we can't have a conversation.

It's an image intensifier. It's mostly intensifying visible light. It can intensify near-IR, but you'd need an IR source. A warm plane would not do it.

CHAPTER VII.

LEVELLING AND CONTOURING.

Levelling. Levelling is the art of determining the relative altitudes of points on the Earth's surface.

Were the Earth a true sphere, the altitude of a point might be defined as its distance from the Earth's centre; but, as it is spheroidal in shape, the definition is not exact in a general sense, though it is nearly so as regards a limited area. If a long pipe A B (fig. 146) were laid, from one place to another, with vertical pipes at intervals, and filled with water, the altitude of the water-surfaces in the upright tubes would be equal when the water has come to rest. Further, if a network of pipes were laid over a given area, connected together, and provided with upright pipes, the water-surface in each and every pipe would stand at the same altitude.

A surface passing through all water-surfaces in the several pipes, would be a surface of equal altitude, and would be an approximately spherical surface, whose radius is equal to the mean radius of the earth at the latitude of the place.

If levelling operations were conducted, from pipe to pipe, with perfect accuracy, the difference of the altitude of the water-surface, or water-level, in any two pipes, would be zero. The surface of a still lake is a surface of equal altitude. So, also, would be a surface, passing through 'mean sea level' at various places on the earth.

It is a property of a surface of equal altitude that a plane, tangential to it at any point, will be at right angles to a plumb-line, suspended at that point.

If the plumb-line be deflected from its normal position, for instance by the attraction of some large mountain, as sometimes happens, the plane of equal altitude will be deflected also.

The effect of the mountain mass, would be to produce local elevation in the surface of equal altitude (vide fig. 147, dotted lines), thus reducing the apparent height of the summit, above the general mean surface, in the neighbourhood thereof. But if a tunnel were driven through the mountain perfectly level, its invert would exactly satisfy the conditions of a line of equal altitudes as before described, and it would be level from a hydrostatic point of view, as well as from that of the engine-driver.

The Level. The levelling instrument, in its essential parts, consists of a telescope with a horizontal wire accurately centred in the optical axis (vide Chapter on Instruments), thus affording a line of collimation, and two vertical wires to define a perpendicular portion of the field of view. A spirit-level is attached to the telescope, and it is so adjusted that, when the bubble is at the centre of its run, the line of collimation is horizontal, or in other words at right angles to a plumb-line suspended from the instrument.

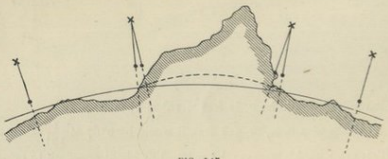

FIG. 147.

Levelling operations. To ascertain the difference of altitude (more commonly called the 'difference of level'), between two points, A and B (fig. 148), not far apart, it is only necessary to set up the instrument at one point A, adjust it so that the line of collimation is horizontal, direct it to a graduated staff at B, and read the height h at which the cross-wire cuts the staff.

Then, measuring the height of the centre of the telescope h above the point A, the difference between h and h_1 is the approximate 'difference level' between the points A and B.

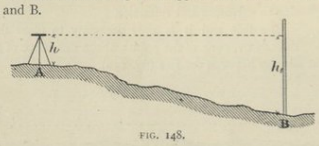

FIG. 148.

If h_1 is greater than h, then B is lower than A, if less, then A is lower than B.

This simple procedure would give for any two points, not more than one or two hundred feet apart, a practically accurate result, provided that the instrument were in perfect adjustment.

Effect of Curvature of the Earth on Levelling. For long distances, however, this procedure is inaccurate, on account of the curvature of the 'line of equal altitudes,' otherwise called the 'curvature of the earth.'

Let A C (fig. 149) be the curved line of equal altitudes, an arc of a circle, then B C is the true difference in level between the points A

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EIjNvWvU0AAnx3w.jpg and B. Draw A E parallel to I D, the horizontal line of collimation of the instrument, when it is evident that the apparent difference of level between A and B as given by deducting h from h_1 is in excess of the true difference E C, due to the 'curvature of the earth.' This excess or error amounts to about 8″·0 or 0·67 feet in one mile, and increases as the square of the distance.

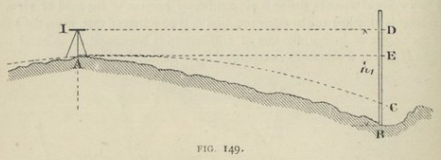

FIG. 149.

For ten miles it would be $0{\cdot}67 \text{ feet} \times 10^2 = 67 \text{ feet}$.

For one-tenth of a mile, or 528 feet, it would be $0{\cdot}67 \times \frac{1}{10^2} = 0{\cdot}0067$ feet only. This error would, however, be reduced by about one-sixth to one-seventh of its amount by 'refraction,' which raises the apparent position of a distant object, to an extent which is somewhat irregular. (See table K, p. 226.)

The error due to curvature, is not serious in a single sight taken at a distance compatible with the optical power of the telescope of an ordinary levelling instrument, but if one were to attempt to determine the difference of level of the first and last, of a long series of points, by proceeding successively in the manner above described for two points, the error would be cumulative, always tending in the same direction, and the final total error would be serious.

Elimination of Curvature and Refraction. It is, however, possible to eliminate completely all errors due to curvature and refraction.

To this end it is only necessary to plant the level, not directly over one of the points, whose difference of level is to be determined, but midway between the two (fig. 150).

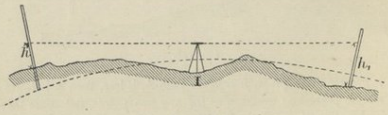

FIG. 150.

It is evident that by so doing, the error due to curvature and refraction will be equal in both directions, and that the difference between the two staff-readings will be the true difference between the levels of the two points A and B.

The effects of both curvature and refraction are thus entirely eliminated, and need no further consideration.

The line of equal altitudes so determined may be treated as a truly level line, even in the most extensive levelling operations.

The above is the usual practice in levelling operations, and involves no error as regards the physical results.

If a railway were set out in this manner, and accurately level, the top of the rails would be a curved line, concave to the centre of the earth. In a length of a few miles, this curvature would be very perceptible, but nevertheless a railway carriage on the line would not tend to move in one direction or the other, for the rails would at all points be at right angles to the direction of the plumb-line, that is to say, to the direction of the force of gravity.

Elimination of Collimation Error. Another, and not less important merit of the midway position of the level is, that it eliminates completely, the effect of instrumental errors in collimation adjustment.

For example, suppose that the line of collimation is not parallel to the axis of the spirit-level, but makes some fixed angle θ therewith, thus (fig. 151).

It is evident that, when the instrument is exactly equidistant between the two staves S and S_1, the errors in reading $d \tan \theta$, are equal and opposite in direction, and therefore produce no error in the determination of the difference of level of the points A and B. Provided always that the bubble remains, or is brought to the middle point, or to any one position in its run, when reading the staff at the two equidistant points, A and B.

Procedure to Obtain the Difference of Level between two points. The following is the procedure to obtain the difference of level between two points, A and X, separated by a considerable distance. Let A be the starting point whose altitude or 'level' (above a selected datum) is known, or has at least some arbitrary or rational value assigned to it. Place the staff on the initial point A (fig. 152), and set up the instrument at a point I, so that whilst the graduations of the staff, held at A, can be distinctly read, as well as those of the staff held at some second point B (equidistant, or nearly so, from I), the position of the level can also be fixed and recorded, if necessary. With the level bubble in the centre of its run take readings on the staff at A and B respectively, when the difference of these readings will give the differences of level between the stations A and B. Next, whilst still holding the staff at B, remove the instrument to some point I_2, about midway between B and the next selected station C. Read the staff at B and C respectively as before, which gives the difference of level between B and C. Proceeding in a similar manner with the staff held at C, D, E, F, &c., and the instrument erected at I_3, I_4 . . . . &c., it is

You know glass is made flat by floating molten glass on molten tin. So it's actually very slightly curved. But you can do the math and over 20 feet it's only 0.0001 inches.

Like many words, "level" has different meanings depending on context.
But here, "level" means the surface equidistant from the center of the Earth, and "horizontal" is the tangent plane, sometimes referred to as "apparent level"

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

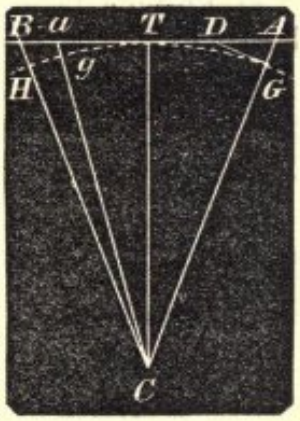
CHAPTER VIII.

LEVELING.

Two or more points are said to be on a level, when they are equally distant from the center of the earth, or when they are equally distant from a tranquil fluid, situated immediately below them. A level surface on the earth, is nearly spherical, and is not a plane; it is everywhere perpendicular to a plumb line.

Any small portion of a true level surface, cannot be distinguished from a plane; and, therefore, when observations are taken in respect to level, within short distances of each other, the spherical form of the earth is disregarded, and the level treated as a plane. But when any considerable portion of surface is taken into account, the curvature of the earth's surface must be considered.

The apparent level, at any point on the earth, is a tangent plane, touching the earth at that point only, and the true level is below this, and the distance below, depends on the distance from the tangent point.



Let T be any point on the surface of the earth, at right angles to the plumb line from this point is the plane or apparent level ATB; but the true level, or the surface of standing water, would be the curved surface GTH.

The distance AG, depends on the distance AT, and the radius of the earth CG or CT.

From G, draw GD, at right angles to AC; then the two triangles ATC, AGD, are equiangular and similar, and give the proportion

$$CT : TA :: DG : GA.$$

Practically.—TA is a very short distance compared to CT, for TA, the distance within which we can take observations, is never more than two or three miles, while the distance CT is near 4000 miles; therefore, CT is nearly equal to CA, consequently, DA is nearly equal to DG, so near that we shall call it equal.

Observe that $TD = DG$; hence $DG = \frac{1}{2}TA$.

This creates a slight downwards refractive index gradient, light bends towards the denser air, and so your line of sight curves slightly around the geometric horizon. It varies with the weather.

Water in general is level (equidistance from the center), not horizontal (in the tangent plane of the surface). Of course locally those two things are about the same, what with the Earth being so big.

Up is the opposite of down. So the up vector is the exact opposite of the down vector (in cartesian coordinates you'd simply negate the X, Y, and Z). A general "looking up" would be anything above the local horizontal plane at your eyes.

With the examples of curvature, like the Willis tower, the distances are MUCH greater than the differences in altitude, so the curve of the Earth starts to have an effect.

Imagine if the Earth were a sphere...

A vector is direction, like a arrow. If we look in the same direction as that vector, then that's "straight down". But "looking down" is more general. If you "look down" now, at your keyboard, you are not looking exactly straight down, just down.

That description doesn't really capture the full curve tho

Really it's simpler to start with the basics. It curves equally around the center (assuming a sphere, which is a good approximation).

It's always towards the center of the Earth.
Put another way, it's perpendicular to the surface of the Earth, at any given location.
So from any point above the surface of the Earth, you have to look down to see any point that's at a lower altitude.

$$x^2 + y^2 = r^2$$

And a good formula for drop, that gives you a circle, is $$drop = \sqrt{r^2 - d^2}$$

Both of which involve squaring a number.

@CoderPW I'd suspect an air-pressure related thing. Looks like the dust is being caught up in some kind of standing wave. Given that it's under construction (or a mine) perhaps blasting, or maybe strong external winds or pressure differentials.

The wormhole explanation is nonsense.

@Rett94291220 @PostDisclosure @WilsonAdmiral @SilvaRecord Sure, what has likely happened is that TTSA signed up Truclear Global with the understanding that they would connect them with the government to attempt to market their projection technology for use as active camouflage. That's why it's the "ground vehicles" division.

@Oswald1160 @DarkstarIE @ChiefofTruth Yeah, the radar recollections (we don't actually have data) don't match the eyewitness recollections. Radar recalls something at 20,000. Fravor flies there, and sees something within a few miles but at 1,000 feet. Radar shows vertical movement, Fravor says horizontal fly-off.

@dmt_quest @Oswald1160 @PostDisclosure @UfoIssue A bird of some sort is possible yes. It would have to be a large one capable of flying at 13,000 feet. It also shows cool on the IR.
I think a ballon is more likely, but I'd put bird at #2.

@GalaxyReport @GaryVoorhis A don't think it's a stretch to see that SOME white specks seen in the distance might be sea birds.

That says NOTHING AT ALL about radar, or Fravor, or video. Just what people were seeing from the deck, with binoculars (or even naked eye).

2019-10-08T17:24:29+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1181621398231367681

@GalaxyReport @GaryVoorhis Go Fast is nothing to do with Fravor. Fravor's thing (and the related Flir1/Nimitz/TicTac video) was on 14 nov 2004. Go Fast and Gimbal were 21 Jan 2015

2019-10-08T17:20:40+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1181620438809505792

@GalaxyReport @GaryVoorhis Big-Eyes are just 20x binoculars. Meaning any object would be twice as big as with ordinary 10x binoculars that a lot of the crew would have. Better, but not hugely so.

And "smaller specks" is absolutely a case where seagulls should enter consideration.

@brianjhanley @cornweaver @ValidatedM @Akam1129 It's probably a bug. Speed estimates depend on size and distance estimates. A small bug fits at the drone speed.

A large craft going 3,000 MPH would have been seen, heard, and felt by the operators.

"Zip-by" UFOs are increasingly common as we get more drone footage. Bugs mostly Sometimes ice crystals appear along the path of an aircraft which flies through a cloud of supercooled droplets. If the crystals grow and eventually fall out of the cloud layer, they may leave a fall-streak hole [see no. 28 and p. 45] in the form of a long clear lane. In the present example [no. 71], however, the crystal trail lies below a clear lane which is probably an ordinary distrail; it was produced in a very thin wave cloud.

Apparent motion is all due to camera zoom changes, with the large movement due to lens changes (WFOV/NAR), the last lens change causing a loss of passive tracking, so it drifts off screen at tracking speed.

@GalaxyReport Or simpler: Someone in particular wins the Powerball Lottery. What are the odds it would be that person, that gas station, that day, and those numbers, which were also the birthdates of his family?

Unlikely things happen all the time. Alien spaceships have never materialized.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EGOmiawUwAEte6g.jpg

Missouri - Patience is a virtue. At least that's the case for a St. Louis man, who after two decades of playing the same Powerball numbers - a combination of family birthdays - is now reveling in a big jackpot win. The special numbers picked by Tom Rea, 62, matched all five white-ball numbers, as well as the Powerball, in the July 4 drawing to win the $70 million jackpot prize. He and his wife, Cathy, claimed the prize at Lottery headquarters in Jefferson City on July 24.

"I've been playing those numbers every Wednesday and every Saturday for 23 years," Rea shared.

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EGOmiawUwAEte6g.jpg

1 in 292,201,338

Drawings for Powerball are held every Wednesday and Saturday evening at 10:59 p.m. Eastern Time. Since October 7, 2015, the game has used a 5/69 (white balls) + 1/26 (Powerballs) matrix from which winning numbers are chosen, resulting in odds of 1 in 292,201,338 of winning a jackpot per play.

And since unlikely things happen all the time, there's no reason they would not.

@SpizeyMeatball @joerogan His video analysis was wrong. It's pretty obviously he's not actually done any. Like he still thinks "Go Fast" is low and fast, and that the "Flir1" video shows hovering then high speed.

And that "new info" about the formation was on the History channel show, "Unidentified"

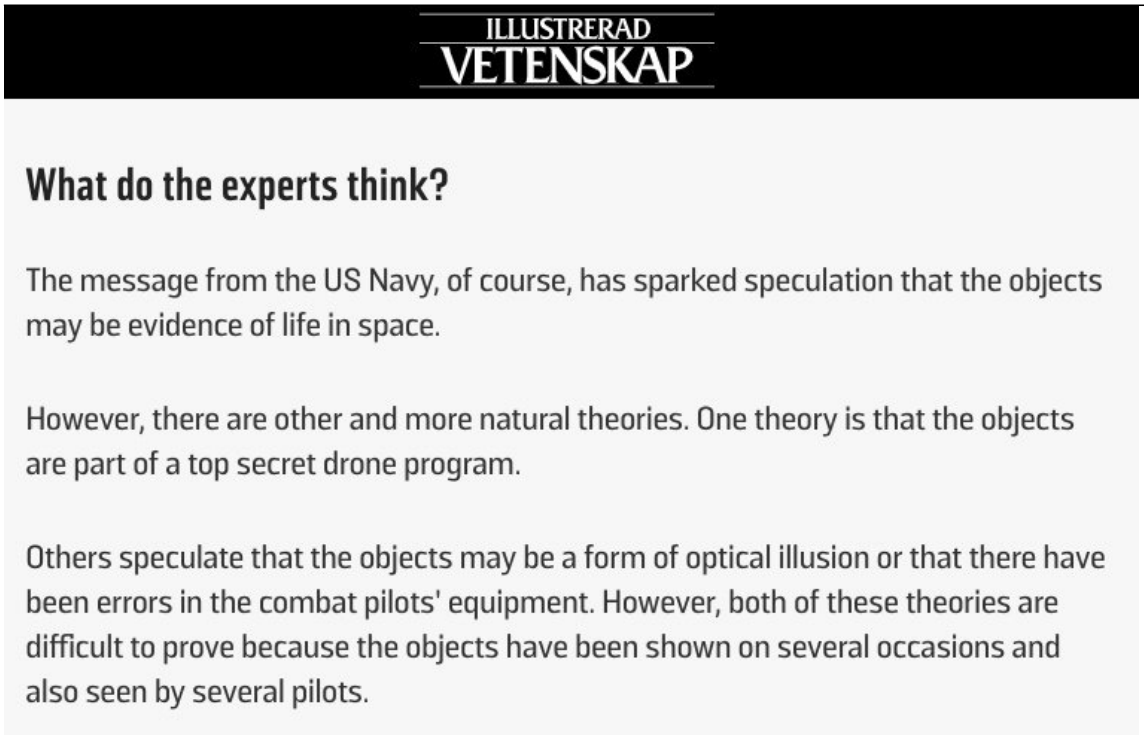
@OmniTalkRadio @ValidatedM And yeah, it's "popular science magazine". It's not actually a magazine that does any science. It also does not say "unlikely", it says "difficult to prove", and it is conflating all the cases together. The IR glare theory is just for "Gimbal". Here's their entire analysis. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EGMAXF5U0AEnq9n.jpg



ILLUSTRERAD VETENSKAP

What do the experts think?

The message from the US Navy, of course, has sparked speculation that the objects may be evidence of life in space.

However, there are other and more natural theories. One theory is that the objects are part of a top secret drone program.

Others speculate that the objects may be a form of optical illusion or that there have been errors in the combat pilots' equipment. However, both of these theories are difficult to prove because the objects have been shown on several occasions and also seen by several pilots.

@DisclosureTLiv @PstarmanUa @Th_Unidentified @joerogan @PostDisclosure Nobody is saying seagulls explain it. But did all witnesses have eyes-on for the entire encounter? A 40 foot object viewed from 20,000 feet is rather small. Where are the WSO accounts? The other pilot gives a different story, https://www.metabunk.org/posts/234516/

In @joerogan's interview today with Commander Fravor, Joe says "explaining away" the high speed in the Nimiitz video takes "mental gymnastics."

But the explanation is just seeing that the fast movement is due to a change in zoom from 1x to 2x. https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=nIl4peYb59E @zcichy @theyre_heeeere 1) 99.99% I try not to go to 100. It's very clear that it's a zoom change. It's also clear that it's not being tracked. So it would naturally slide out of view.

@zcichy @theyre_heeeere About 28:23, he's talking about the Nimitz object shooting off the left side. But it's not. It's a change in the zoom setting, and lack of tracking. I (and other people) explained it nearly two years ago.

@Deepneuron @_jraza @GalaxyReport @Nickelderberry @SethShostak That is what I said. But I'd argue they are very plausible possibilities.
The question for TTSA is really why they don't seem to have done any real analysis, and continue to let their mistakes go unchecked. Like the "aura" @_jraza @Deepneuron @GalaxyReport @Nickelderberry @SethShostak Well that's easy. It's because they ARE (or at the very least WERE) unidentified.

I haven't identified them, I've just explained a bunch of mistakes people make about them (like the "rotating", or "rapid acceleration", or "aura") and given some quite plausible other hypotheses @IvanBuchanJanus @GalaxyReport @alien_expanse @nickpopemod Right, I'd obviously start a company with a plucky rockstar and a team of misfits and have them "discover" stuff like warp drives made with meta-materials until there's so much stuff that I'd have to sheepishly admit that UFOS are aliens and we were covering it up all along.

@IvanBuchanJanus @GalaxyReport @alien_expanse @nickpopemod I see no evidence of that.

But, like what? What exactly might he know that would justify his odd behavior? And why exactly would TTSA be the conduit for that information, and he the recipient?

2019-10-03T23:04:49+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1179895105093681152

@GalaxyReport @alien_expanse @nickpopemod Steve Justice appears to have some deluded idea that TTSA's science division is going to figure out how warp drives work, and then he's going to build one. He's either seriously misunderstanding reality, or he's got suckered in somehow.

All input data, results data, and simulations that were used or generated during this study will be made available here and at http://ine.uaf.edu/wtc7. The research team is currently organizing and uploading all of its data into a format that can be readily downloaded and used. We expect to post the data sometime between September 16 and September 30, 2019.

For anyone intending to download the data, please be advised that there are several hundred gigabytes, so plan your data storage accordingly.

@Soriluin People didn't think the earth was flat. They though it was the center of the universe and the sun wen around it. But it was pretty obvious to anyone who observed the skies and traveled that it was round.
And geocentrist is not simplest when you look at the available evidence.

@BadAstronomer @physicsmatt And while ships do float for essentially the same reason balloons go up, there a huge difference in that ships float at the water-air interface, as they need a vastly higher pressure differential (being dense). Not really a gradient, more a discontinuity (the waterline).

2019-09-29T19:03:05+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1178384722033954817

@BadAstronomer @physicsmatt The accelerating car example is more complex, with sloshing, but still, it's the creation of a pressure gradient that makes the balloon move forward. Like sideways gravity.

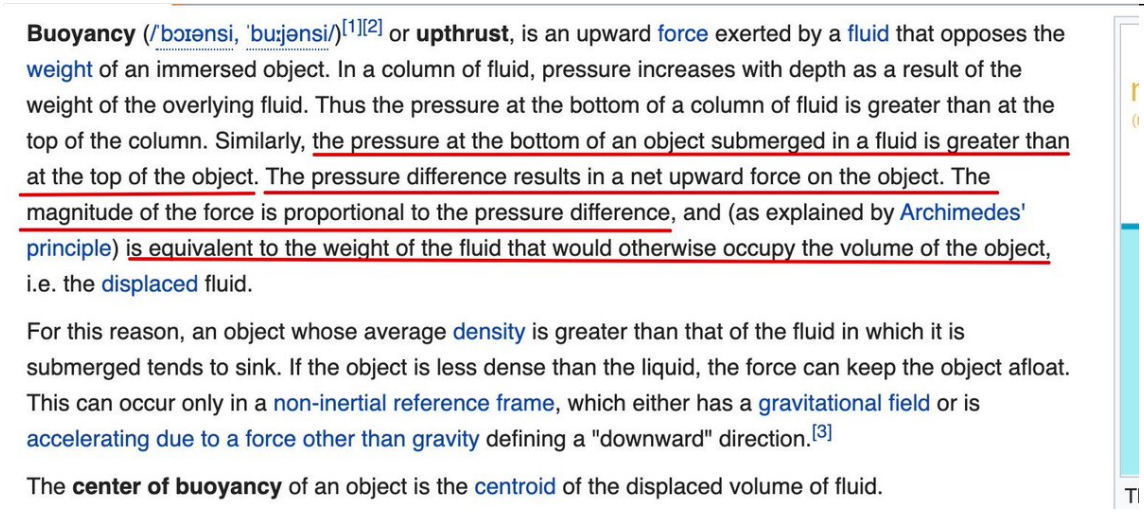
2019-09-29T18:57:08+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1178383223262339073

@BadAstronomer @physicsmatt At which point the weight of the balloon is the same as the net upward force.

If the pressure on the balloon were exactly the same from top to bottom, then why would the balloon move upwards? What force is involved?

See: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Buoyancy http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EFp1SjyUYAABAej.jpg



Buoyancy (/ˈbɔɪənsi, ˈbuːjənsi/)[1][2] or upthrust, is an upward force exerted by a fluid that opposes the weight of an immersed object. In a column of fluid, pressure increases with depth as a result of the weight of the overlying fluid. Thus the pressure at the bottom of a column of fluid is greater than at the top of the column. Similarly, the pressure at the bottom of an object submerged in a fluid is greater than at the top of the object. The pressure difference results in a net upward force on the object. The magnitude of the force is proportional to the pressure difference, and (as explained by Archimedes' principle) is equivalent to the weight of the fluid that would otherwise occupy the volume of the object, i.e. the displaced fluid.

For this reason, an object whose average density is greater than that of the fluid in which it is submerged tends to sink. If the object is less dense than the liquid, the force can keep the object afloat. This can occur only in a non-inertial reference frame, which either has a gravitational field or is accelerating due to a force other than gravity defining a "downward" direction.[3]

The center of buoyancy of an object is the centroid of the displaced volume of fluid.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1178373641496494080

@physicsmatt @BadAstronomer Maybe you did. "helium has no place to go but up" kind of glosses over the forces involved. Bottom air is pushing balloon more than top air, because it's denser. Net pushing force is greater than the weight. Ballon goes up.

@conor_cowens22 @devgru1980mi @zcichy @Raytheon Okay, draw what the plane would look like in the video, based on you worse case scenario. What's the change in the largest dimension from the worst case. (note, the feature measured will not be the same)

https://twitter.com/_/status/1177957225484042240

@Deepneuron @EngagingThe No, I'm not. If the US Navy is updating classified guidelines for US Navy pilots reporting incursions into US Navy airspace, then I think it's most likely it will be handled by the US Navy. Not TTSA.

2019-09-28T14:41:36+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1177956527723802631

@conor_cowens22 @devgru1980mi @zcichy @Raytheon The difference is that a plane is not just a skinny wing. You are abstracting the math to think about a line in space (wingspan) planes are 3D object where the longest projected length does not vary greatly (1/sqrt(2)) methinks.

2019-09-28T14:36:53+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1177955342497406976

@conor_cowens22 @devgru1980mi @zcichy @Raytheon And more clearly - a plane is not just a set of wings. It's kind of like a cross shape. So if the wings are at an acute angle, then the fuselage is at an obtuse angle. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EFjwH5oUEAALGxi.jpg @conor_cowens22 @devgru1980mi @zcichy @Raytheon You might want to think about that in 3D.

Consider looking at a distant plane. Take a mental photo, so now you have a 2D image. Something in that now 2D is the "apparent long axis". Not necessarily wings.. What's the shortest you can make that.

@DaveFalch @PostDisclosure @zcichy @buffcommacu @devgru1980mi Heat is not radiation. The camera isn't measuring "heat", there's no such thing as "heat flaring".

Heat is a property of matter (kinetic energy of the molecules, essentially). Matter gives off infrared radiation. Hotter matter gives off more infrared radiation. It's photonic.

It's an irrelevant point. The point is that a MWIR focuses electromagnetic radiation onto a sensor. Just like a visible light camera also focuses electromagnetic radiation onto a sensor. So it has similar artifacts. It doesn't "see heat", it sees IR.

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

GO FAST is an authentic DoD video that captures the high-speed flight of an unidentified aircraft at low altitude by a F/A-18 Super Hornet ATFLIR forward-looking infrared system. While TTSA was the first to obtain a copy, it should be available to any member of the press or public via the Freedom of Information Act.

BACKGROUND

This video, GO FAST, was captured by a U.S. Navy F/A-18 Super Hornet using the Raytheon AN/ASQ- 228 Advanced Targeting Forward-Looking Infrared (ATFLIR) Pod. This sensor has two imaging modes – mid-wave infrared and visual. It has high resolution and can locate and designate targets at distances exceeding 40 nm. The video imagery represents the image displayed in the @Soriluin No. Although that varies with the topic. With Flat Earth for example I'm pretty much 100% on the side of it being wrong. But even there I examine individual claims of evidence. I don't think "UFO as super advanced technology" is impossible, just unlikely and lacks good evidence.

@BartParty One should be skeptical of all information, but of course one modulates that skepticism depending on the extraordinariness of the claim and the historical trustworthiness and accuracy of the source. I wouldn't spend time investigating David Berkowitz's UFO sightings.

@BTRadford @nickpopemod agrees with working 1991-1994, part time (up 50%, his other duties were things like vetting & clearance of military personnel written books). He says that he says he "ran the UK UFO program" for simplicity. More detailed explanation at 52:27 https://youtu.be/k3iPZXrifso?t=3147

@ChrisGZuger @joerogan @h3r2tic Well, @h3r2tic is mostly about 3D graphics, so there's that. :)

How many complaints does it take to get a video flagged? Youtube probably weighs something like ((complaints-verified*5)/(subs*views))*(manual override) which keeps @joerogan running.

@TheOutThere2016 I suspect it's just a default behavior once something gets one or two hate-speech complaints. It should be reinstated after review, and the people reporting it might get a strike. There was nothing offensive in it that I remember. It's up here. https://www.pscp.tv/w/1gqGvgPnOgnJB

@adrian_probert @UAP1949 It's a bunch of unnecessary math. Obviously the verbal descriptions given indicate something with trans-current-human technology and impossibly high "g" s.
The analysis of the video is wrong, as the only actual movement is from loss of lock with jumps from camera/lens changes.

@Fibonacci222 So the 4-year university study that AE911 paid $316,000 for being riddled with errors is "an empty objection" and "irrelevant shit"?

You should tell them that.

@Fibonacci222 Then why did they need to spend $316, 000 on a study? And why did the study turn out to be very poor quality, with conclusions based on faulty analysis?

2019-09-26T17:46:01+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1177278164256485376

@TheUndeadGaucho @ddeanjohnson @PostDisclosure This appears to be a made-up story, as I don't know what the "Tic-Tac" actually was, and I've not "had my picture taken with the thing". I THINK it's most likely a mid-sized plane in the video, and that and what Fravor saw, and what the radar detected were all different things.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1177250514473373703

@Fibonacci222 It's based on verifiable facts, which is why you don't have to take my word for it. Check it out. Did he do static linear analysis for a dynamic non-linear situation?. Did he pass off box physics as "dynamic analysis"?.

Ron Insana mentions "7 World Trade" and "controlled demolition" when remembering his visit to the 9/11 site. Conspiracy theorist rejoice. Two problems:

1) He went there on 9/12, AFTER WTC7 fell

2) The building he describes as WTC7 is One Liberty Plaza.

4.2 The UAF Research Team's Approach

We simulated a number of hypothetical scenarios in order to determine what types of local failures could and could not produce the key features described above. One set of analyses was performed for the collapse of the east penthouse. A second set of analyses was performed for the collapse of the west penthouse and north face roofline (i.e., the main observed collapse event). For all collapse models and analyses, we included the debris damage assumed by NIST, which involved six exterior columns on the southwest face of the building reportedly being severed by falling debris from the collapse of WTC 1.

@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks Doing a proper dynamic analysis is hard to do. NIST took a shot at it. Hulsey did not. Probably did not have the resources.

NIST's models took EIGHT WEEKS to spit out 25 seconds of analysis. They did this multiple times. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EFVSX_KVAAANmTc.jpg

3.6.1 System Specifications

All simulations were run on ARA's high speed Linux Beowulf computer cluster. The system consisted of a head node and eight compute nodes. The head node housed two 64 bit AMD Opteron 250 2.4 GHz processors. The head node had 4 GB of RAM and housed 1.5 terabytes of RAID 5 disk storage. Each compute node housed two 64 bit AMD Opteron dual-core 285 2.6 GHz processors. Six of the compute nodes had 8 GB of RAM, and the remaining two nodes had 16 GB RAM. The compute nodes communicated using Silverstorm Infiniband Interconnects.

3.6.2 Model Size and Typical Run Time

The global model was constructed with 3,593,049 nodes and 3,045,925 total elements. The type and number of the elements were: 3,006,910 shells, 3,190 beams, 2,461 solids, 33,364 discrete elements, and 3,050 rigid elements.

The global simulation was first initialized under gravity loading over 4.5 s of simulation time. Then damage and temperature initialization states were applied over 4 additional seconds. Collapse propagation in the global model required approximately 16 additional seconds after initialization, for a total of close to 25 seconds of simulated time, which generally took up to 8 weeks using 12 CPUs across 3 nodes (4 CPUs per node).

3.6.3 LS-DYNA Version

The analyses were performed with the LS-DYNA finite element code (Version mpp971dR4 beta, revision 41161). Use of this double precision code results in longer run times than a single precision version would require. However, a double precision version was necessary. In structural models where there are physically large dimensions (spatial extents of the building) compared to the characteristic element length, and long time scales compared to the explicit time step size, rounding errors can occur and accumulate when using a single-precision analysis. To address this issue, the double precision version of LS-DYNA was used for the global analyses.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

E.1 INTRODUCTION

As part of the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) investigation into the collapse of World Trade Center (WTC) 7, NIST worked with Applied Research Associates, Inc. (ARA) under contract to conduct global collapse analyses of the WTC 7 building. The purpose of this work was to analyze the global response of WTC 7 to initial failure events due to fire and to analyze the resulting component and subsystem failures to determine the events that led to the global collapse.

The nonlinear dynamic collapse analyses were performed using LS-DYNA, which is capable of explicitly modeling sequential failures, falling debris, and debris impact on other structural components. LS-DYNA is well suited for this type of analysis since it can model the dynamic sequential failure processes, including nonlinear material properties, nonlinear geometric deformations, material failures, and contact between the collapsing structural components. In addition, LS-DYNA has capabilities to include thermal softening of materials and thermal expansion.

Analyses of the LS-DYNA model of the 47 story WTC 7 were used to evaluate the global response of the building to initial failure events due to fire, including component and subsystem failures, to determine the events that led to the global collapse. Four global analyses were performed:

- Analysis of the building response to debris impact damage, temperature effects (Case B, 4.0 h temperatures), and fire induced damage based on the 16 story ANSYS analysis (Case B, 4.0 h damage).
- Analysis with earlier fire induced damage (Case B, 3.5 h) to determine if a lesser degree of induced damage state was sufficient to initiate a global collapse of WTC 7.

@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks There's data there. There's the column loadings, and there's the building displacement.

The analysis result is a tipping building.

The analysis is deeply flawed, for a variety of reasons, discussed previously.

@fffffuuuuuu6 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks You're missing the point. They have two different models that give two different results. Hulsey seemed unaware that columns were being manually removed after the first 6.

Which model is correct? How do they know?

2019-09-25T18:58:06+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1176933914775965696

@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks They are simplified physical models set up to create the behavior that Hulsey imagine would follow from the static analysis.
They are NOT actual dynamic analysis results. It's OBVIOUSLY just box physics.

@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks I'm working with what I've got. Since everyone is touting the report as PROOF!!! then I feel it's perfectly reasonably to point out the serious and obvious flaws it contains. Like it being obviously wrong, or claiming dynamic analysis when it was box physics.

@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks Really, you don't think the unusually flat distribution of axial loads is a problem? Seems kind of significant, if you are looking for a validated model. Axial loads seems like an easy validation.

2019-09-25T18:44:07+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1176930397986279424

@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks Well of course the linear static analysis leads to figure 4.14. That's the whole point. The linear static analysis is not a reflection of reality, as seem by the super-fulcrum problem and the load distribution problem, (and the "nothing breaks" problem, and the linear problem)

2019-09-25T18:27:56+00:00

@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks Well thank you for your concern, but I've yet to see a good rebuttal, so I'm forced to keep going. I'll make a video soon about the fulcrum problem, and the load distribution. Any suggestions?

2019-09-25T18:16:25+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1176923427065565184

@fffffuuuuuu6 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks No. They are different simulations. He even has three more floors on the model used in the presentation. And much bigger glitches (which is why it's purple). Did you watch all of my video?

2019-09-25T18:15:26+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1176923177399676928

@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks It's a shame Hulsey and AE911 won't engage in public forums.
I'd agree that for some columns a direct comparison is meaningless (they are missing or close to missing columns) but for the east side, the comparison is valid, and shows Hulsey is wrong.

2019-09-25T18:05:05+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1176920574246834176
@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks Is that the only difference then? So the columns on the east wall, and C79, should be pretty much unchanged, right?
So if we restrict comparison to the undamaged East side, that's pretty much like-with-like?

2019-09-25T18:01:52+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1176919763114590208
@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks I'm comparing axial loads on columns at the floor 13 level. Hulsey's numbers are all from the same figure, 4.8.

2019-09-25T17:50:18+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1176916851080646656
@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks Looks like the undamaged case in the table Hulsey includes. But damage isn't gong to flatten it out to that extent. C79 and C38, for example, would be barely affected. NIST has C38 at 1,064, Hulsey has it at 2,560.

2019-09-25T17:10:20+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1176906794607628288
@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks No? Are they not both column axial load around the floor 13 height? What are they then?

2019-09-25T17:09:16+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1176906528453840896
@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks So, when you go Bungie jumping, you fall DOWN, creating tension in the cord. Does this not "try" to pull you back UP?

Similarly, the building tips FORWARD, putting tension on the back columns. Does the tension not "try" to pull it back?

2019-09-25T17:00:33+00:00

C79 at 3,898 while NIST has it at 5,142
C3 at 2,979 while NIST has it at 916

Feedback appreciated!

@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks "Tension would be pulling the building back."

and

"The columns that elongate at the rear of the building are in TENSION."

are not in conflict. So where's the confusion?

2019-09-25T16:42:59+00:00
https://twitter.com/_/status/1176899914279686145
@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks Erm, that sounds backward. Tension would be pulling the building back. This talk of what a building "wants" to do is a bit silly. The tension is a RESULT of tipping (on an infinitely strong fulcrum) it's not something that motivates the building to move away.

@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks No, I'm asking you if I'm wrong, or if I'm right in assuming the numbers refer to column loads in kips. That's figure 4.13, page 101

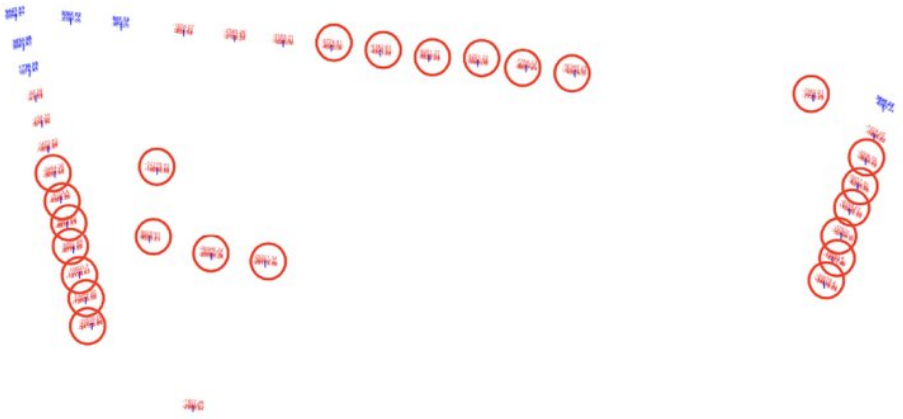

Figure 4.12: Linear static analysis results show that the failure of additional columns (shown in Figure 4.11 above) leads to the failure of the remaining core columns and many exterior columns (circled in red). The columns with blue values are in tension rather than compression, indicating the building is tipping away from those columns.

Column 3 normally carried a load of 1,161 kips, so failing at 4,108 seems reasonable, no?

@gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks This is the result of a deeply flawed application of static analysis. In Hulsey's world C6 and C3 failed at the same time, allowing C6 to act as a 153,000 kip fulcrum.

This alone should invalidate the study.
Hulsey has no valid global model. http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EFUVzAuU4AAUdcy.jpg @gerrycan1 @Oswald1160 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks I didn't attribute "dynamic properties" to a static analysis. I said it SHOULD HAVE USED dynamic analysis, because the situation it depicts is dynamic.

Those back columns are only in tension because the fulcrum was not failed at the right time.

Dutton, 46, was nominated because of her studies on how higher temperatures lead to rising sea levels and polar ice shrinkage. As a field geologist, she has traveled the world to develop a picture of what happened during past warming periods so she can better predict the future magnitude and speed of rising sea levels as temperatures increase.

Sea levels can rise by 20 feet (6 meters) or more when the average temperature increases by just a few degrees, she said.

"The message is, what sounds like small changes in temperature has a very large impact on polar ice sheets," she said. "That is a sobering message when it comes to climate change. It means we may have already have committed ourselves to a 20-foot increase in sea level rise."

The occupants of a Chevy Malibu are lucky to be alive following a severe collision at the Trafalgar Road and Dundas Street intersection Thursday night.

Police said the Malibu was southbound on Trafalgar when it was rear-ended by a Lincoln SUV.

The impact of the collision was so great that the rear portion of the Malibu was pancaked into the rest of the car.

@Shawn5676 Yes. There's initiation pancaking (did not happen) and chaotic collapse pancaking (obviously happened).

I.e. the towers did not collapse because of "pancaking" floors, but when it DID collapse, the floors could hardly avoid being pressed together somewhat.

When a jet engine goes behind a power line, the IR spikes because of diffraction. When it is hot it is bright. The lenses in your IR camera refract IR much like visible light.

IR is diffracted (and refracted, and interferes). IR follows light paths. IR has brightness.

IR differs from visible light in absorption, transmission, reflection, and the type of sensor needed.

@edwardcurrent @AE911Truth @uafairbanks NIST did do another study taking out JUST C79 - but I'm not sure how they went about it - but Hulsey's study is static, so the floors don't fail. NIST did a proper dynamic analysis.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1176644922897661953

@edwardcurrent @AE911Truth @uafairbanks Good point. The NIST collapse initiation isn't deleting columns. It's a full dynamic analysis where floors fall (and hit other floors), columns buckle non-linearly, and loads vary highly dynamically.

It's not clear what Hulsey is doing, but it not what should have been done.

@blackvaultcom In any event under intense scrutiny you can pick out things that seem extraordinary if you frame them out of context.

Epstein was in a crap prison with all kinds of problems, he requested to be taken off suicide watch, then he killed himself.

@blackvaultcom Sound and fury.

The simplest explanation is that he wasn't murdered, so there's no evidence of him being murdered. So the story has no legs.

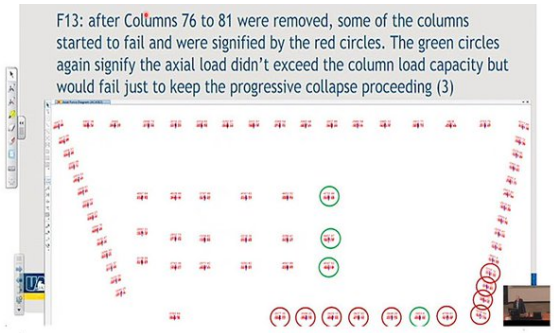
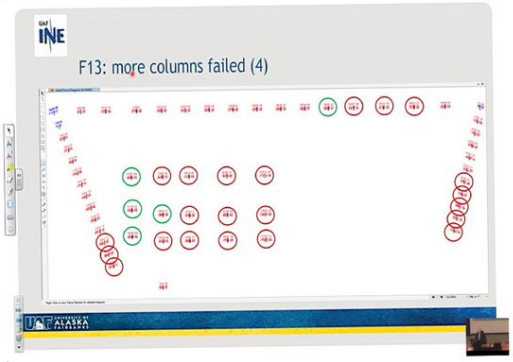
Hulsey's @AE911Truth @uafairbanks report and presentation use radically different models. In the presentation he describes manually removing columns to "keep the collapse proceeding". In the report (on the same day) it just collapses.

So which is the right model? Why the change?

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EFPaUVUU4AA5MEa.jpg





Sept 3 Presentation
Manual Column removal

Figure 4.10: Linear static analysis results show that the failure of Columns 76 to 81 overloads 10 exterior columns (circled in red) around the southeast corner, but not the next row of core columns to the west (not circled in red).

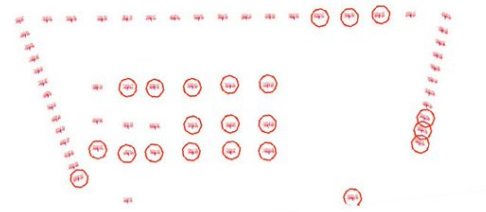


Figure 4.11: Linear static analysis results show that the failure of 10 exterior columns around the southeast corner leads to numerous core and exterior columns (circled in red) being overloaded and failing. A progressive collapse triggered by the hypothetical failure of Columns 76 to 81 is underway.

Sept 3 Report
All columns fail under load

SO WHICH MODEL IS CORRECT?

Was it tweaked to get the desired result?

@carland27488094 @AE911Truth In Hulsey's model, he removes 8 floors entirely. Then EVERYTHING above that falls.

He does not show what happens next, because he does not do a proper dynamic analysis.

@icesurfer @AE911Truth It likely won't be addressed by serious scientists, as they generally think the whole idea is ridiculous. However this lack of opposition actually emboldens them. The study is deeply flawed, and that needs pointing out and explaining else people WILL think it proves something.

@icesurfer @AE911Truth Yes, because the study is being presented as "proof" of controlled demolition. The fact that is not is not something that cannot just be left unsaid. It needs to be clearly addressed.

I'm critiquing the study quite publicly to encourage a rapid response.

@gerrycan1 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks The funny thing is, the "dynamic" model is much more of a "visualization" in the "artist's impression" sense you seem to be using. It's not really data driven, in terms of it being a full-detail simulation. It's essentially an animation.

Ask some fo the folk at AE911 about this @gerrycan1 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks It's visualization of the analysis. The analysis shows the building tipping over. This should not be something in dispute. You know lots of engineers, right? Go ask them.

@gerrycan1 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks I disagree. A visualization of the data is essentially the same thing as data - especially when there's a color scale in the image showing displacements. This is clearly the result of the analysis, and that's how Hulsey describes it.

@gerrycan1 @AE911Truth @uafairbanks Figure 4.14 shows the results of a linear static analysis. However it's an entirely inappropriate use of static analysis for a situation that is neither static, nor linear. Large deformations and buckling require nonlinear analysis.

@gerrycan1 I recognize a model glitch when I see one. They happen all the time in games (before release - they are bugs). Seeing it in the final presentation of 4 year, $316,000 study though, that's rather unexpected. Indicative of a lack of rigor. @AE911Truth @uafairbanks @gerrycan1 @AE911Truth Because I want to hear what your answer is.

If the columns all failed in 0.1 seconds then the building would not tip.

Of course static analysis is time independent. So how does he know the building has tipped over 100 feet based on a sequence of columns failures?

2019-09-23T20:39:50+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1176234742829608960

@gerrycan1 @AE911Truth 1:00:00 ?? He's talking about the Penthouse collapse at that point.

https://twitter.com/_/status/1176232971369476097

@gerrycan1 @AE911Truth What's the time interval between 4.10 and 4.11 and subsequent results?

2019-09-23T20:25:47+00:00

https://twitter.com/_/status/1176231204741210112

@gerrycan1 @AE911Truth So, if all it is doing is calculating DCRs for the columns, then at this point we just have two columns in tension.

So what's going on there? All the columns except two have failed, the entire weight of the building is on two columns, and they are in tension?

http://pbs.twimg.com/media/EFLPqzNUYAAV3rc.jpg

If you are doing dynamic analysis of the failure of some columns in a building, why not show the part of the building with the actual failure? Why not show what happens when the top part hits the bottom? @ae911Truth.
