I hate giving advice but but I generally try to start my presentations to students and it actually I call students anybody who still studying to make themselves better but but really two young kids and I tell him I'm gonna give them three pieces of advice and it's nothing new to them I said you've gotta study really hard and when I say they'll ask frequently if I want to be an astronaut what do I need to study and some most definitely math and science but study everything you need to be able to converse intelligently you need to be able to express yourself well such that you can sell yourself to somebody else so the language arts the you know in addition to the sciences history is critically important one of the reasons that I think it's so important that we're opening this museum today is because it will enable young black kids who have no clue about their heritage in their history in my granddaughter's ask me sometime you know what do we do black history month and so I have to go through and explain to them they have not been through the struggle of the civil rights era today young ladies have not been through the struggle of or have not lived through a time when a woman could not vote in this country or a woman could not hold a position of authority in this country so the plight of minorities and women in the United States of America I hope has changed forever and you know given an opportunity to make their mark they will do so.
