NASA astronaut Mark Kelly resumed training as commander of the STS-134 space shuttle mission on Monday February 7th. Kelly has not trained with his crew since January 8th when he took leave to care for his wife Congresswoman Gabrielle Giffords, who was critically wounded in a Tucson, Arizona shooting. Kelly and the STS-134 crew practice launches and landings in a space shuttle motion simulator in the morning as they resume training together for the mission targeted to launch April 19th, 2011 in the afternoon. of their first day back together the crew practice docking to the International Space Station in a dome simulator that allows the astronauts to visualize the shuttles approach to the station open i doing in here project 30 30 deep baby I’m all set free 30 30 cm alright great community only a few blocks yes gosh drawing y’all no my equal seconds after and after a trusted seven book their deficit box leave Mary year all six open okay so three point

yes with 320

and

resort

you