For me it's more about the spirit of the people who do it.

Who do this type of thing.

That is why I wanted to make the movie.

I think that's what's so great about the book is underneath all of it is the characters.

great since of humor, and the way he handles all these situations and how he's pretty unflappable.

Like that concept of self-sacrifice and that willingness to put everything you know sojourn everything in your life put the mission ahead of everything.

And it's all about pushing that envelope to see, to further our kind of human experience.

And the survival of this species is dependent on one day getting off this planet and going out and we're in the you know infancy of that but in many ways it's so dangerous and it that explorer mentality that these folks have it's just awesome.
Hopefully the message in a movie like this is one that really galvanizes participation in stuff like this and makes people excited about science. I mean the writer of the movie when I first met with him said I see this as a love letter to science and that's really what I want to make and that's a cool thing to put out into the world right now. I have four little kids and love it if they, if something like this could be part of the rest of their experience kind of push them towards life in this type of world, that'd be great. Thank you for what you've done and what you're doing. And those of us that aren't brave or smart enough to be doing this kind of work are extremely grateful for the work that they're doing and we know how important it is.
