Katherine Johnson's story, and most importantly, her attitude, of breaking down barriers of being a women of color in 1950s and '60s has really helped me overcome my own challenges of being a women in the engineering field.

Her and the other human computers of the 1950s and '60s broke so many glass ceilings so that now, as an engineer, it's much easier to break my own.