I came across a couple UFO videos that I found interesting, so I figured I'd post them here for you guys to see.

The first one comes from Salida Colorado on August 27, 1995. It was filmed on a camcorder and is one of the better UFO videos I have seen. You can tell by the witnesses voices that they are legitimately watching something they don't understand. That doesn't necessarily mean it's ET tech, but this is a time before civilian drones and desktop computers having readily available CGI software. It's unfortunate that the witness died a few years back. Id love to see the rest of the footage.

This next video comes from Tijuana, Mexico in 2017. The objects in the video are eerily similar in shape and appearance as the first video. If anyone has seen these before, please post any info you may have on them.

I just finished watching the final video. Mr Knapp is the host of that clip. He found that While investigating the first video, 75 years earlier in the same damn town, An object matching the same description was reported in the newspaper. With a priest reporting it and watching it from a telescope.

For what it's worth, I watched a similar white cylinder for 10 min in AZ back in '97. I had some time to view it from fairly wide area. It was close to the ground, stationary in brisk wind, at a 40 degree angle, and seemed, at the least, larger than a commercial jet.

What I saw wasn't a spider web. As to that id for the Salida video, do spiderwebs stay in the same place for an hour, if not anchored to something? I seem to remember it was up there for awhile.

There toward the end of the Salida clip it makes some very unconvincing movements. If it was truly a UFO, then it sure wasn't very stable. If it was a UFO piloted by an alien, then they need a new pilot! Tell hom to lay off the Kanar!

That was a long video of blue with s white line moving around. They're were a few birds and the edge of a roof, but mostly no context.

As Blue Shift pointed out it seems far more likely to be something like spider silk than a UFO.

The Mexican video is likely a reflection from inside the airplane. It looked awful similar to an effect I can pull off with my glasses. That would explain the double dash lines.

I grew up in Salida, was a teen around the time Tim Edwards recorded that video. I really wanted to go see the Sightings team when they came to interview them, but I missed it. He ended up opening up a restaurant that he called E.T.'s Landing. The food was alright, but the atmosphere was amusing. If I heard correctly, he became a little obsessive and a few years later even claimed he saw an alien steal his neighbors car. XD

It's not that high up, it's only just a little higher than the two roofs it's apparently strung between. It could stay there until a strong enough breeze blew it away. A clue to that is the way it apparently zooms back and forth so quickly. It would likely be going supersonic if it was big and at high altitude. There's also a point late in the video where you can see the thing and the sun at the same time, and the thing moves exactly opposite the jiggling sun exactly the way a reflection would. Becomes obvious when you see it.

Several years ago I recorded a similar thing in my own back yard, even made a YouTube video of it. (Wonder what happened to that?) I did some comparison stills that showed exactly the same kind of thing including the shimmering irregularities you see, which is because a strand of web doesn't come out of a spider perfectly uniform and smooth. The reflection has brighter and darker points that end up looking like lights. In a higher-resolution video, you might even see it slightly bend when the strand is bent by the wind.

I could probably make a better, higher-resolution one these days with fresh video I could literally shoot tomorrow in my back yard. Spider strands - not complete webs - are strung all over some days.

The objects in these videos look nothing like a spider silk mis-identification. I'm just sure Jim D is going to analyze a video like this and not spot something so simple. Also, Trigonometry works the same today as it did when he analyzed the videos.

Could spider silk strands be mistaken for some airborne traveling object? Sure it could, but this doesn't look like one, not to mention the witnesses themselves.

That is something that I would expect Philip Klass to come up with, or Knucklehead Joe Nickell to say without talking to any witnesses, or having seen such a thing before themselves.

People who didn't see anything telling the world what everyone else sees themselves isn't what they saw. That's some entertainment there. 😊

I'm just looking at the hard evidence. I don't really care about the stories unless they somehow explain what's happening in the actual video, which to my knowledge they don't. Why are you so emotionally invested in this video being of a UFO rather than a simple misidentification?

Please understand that this is a stand of spider web making a bright reflection from the sun, which is why it looks and moves the way it does. It looks cool because it's out of focus and you can't see the rest of the strand because it's too fine. It's the reason why when it's moving left the lights move right as the reflection goes along the strand and why it does the opposite when the reflection moves the opposite way, because it's the reflection that's moving and not the strand other than when it's blown by the wind. Blows back, the reflection goes up a little, wind calms down and the reflection sinks. Ask yourself why it only moves either up and down or right and left along a slight arc.

Again, I understand it's hard when something you thought was the real deal gets debunked, but do you really want to hang your hat on this video from a assumedly sincere guy who unfortunately was just plain wrong about what he saw?

I never said I think it is a "ufo". I said simply that it looks nothing whatsoever like some kind of silk strand being misidentified by people.

If you can read my post and then reply insisting I called it a ufo when I didn't say anything at all except it doesn't look anything like silk, then I'm not surprised anymore you might also disregard everything else about this case and say it's spider silk. If you are getting everything you read and see so erroneous, then it's understandable why spider silk might be an explanation for you.

Not trying to be harsh.

I don't think it could have been misidentified by the person who took the footage - it would have been easy to move to another position that removed the effect that was filmed.

When it comes to the UFO that Tim Edwards caught, I'm honestly not sure. I don't ever recall hearing that particular one being sighted anywhere else.

I've seen quite a few UFO's living in Colorado, and 2 of them were in Salida. None of the ones I've seen changed shape like the one Edwards recorded. I always remember that no matter how many times I saw that clip it bothered me how it would change shape like that. Now that I read the spider-silk theory, that makes a whole lot more sense.

Still could be legit, though. My friend saw a cigar-shaped UFO on his way to work once in broad daylight.

This one really threw me a curve ball. I remember this case now after looking at that lighting effect and remember now seeing this before. What got me mixed up over this is from also watching several other videos of cigar shaped craft with black bands on them and others. Then this spider silk effect ones being tossed into the bunch was too much of a contradiction to handle. Some of those look similar.

I never necessarily thought these were legit unknowns, only that it was difficult to comprehend a videographer taking a video of spider silk hanging off their house or whatever, and thinking they were capturing some ufo up in the sky and even fooling video analysts?

That's just too crazy, but I guess it can happen.

 I will hand it out to my investigators for reference when they get similar cases.

I've mentioned a desire to do that. I was thinking of a kind of, "Think you filmed a UFO? Let's analyze it!". Then show clear examples of the most common misidentifications:

- * That bouncing blue lens flare, likely from an iPhone
- * Blurry orbs that are out of focus
- * Jet contrails in the sunset
- * Drones
- * Rocket launch trails glowing in the upper atmosphere
- * "I didn't see anything when I took the picture, but..." transient bugs and birds
- * Airplane lights front-on as they're landing

Basic red flags. Also how to compare multiple images and get better context shots in daylight for comparison. It might help reduce the noise a little, or at the very least serve as a guide for creating a more convincing hoax. Maybe I'll make that a project one of these days. I'm pretty lazy.

But if/when this site shuts down UFO folks might try MUFON. You might want to consider adding a public forum for discussion and analysis. Photo posting. Make it a No Politics Zone.

The thing about the "Salida" footage - whatever it is, it's not a spider web -

- you have to listen to the tape as well as watching it...people with the guy are definitely seeing something in the sky, which he is filming...

...in the beginning, his young child is asking him about the "spaceship", then later his teenage son is talking about how you can see 'lights going all around it', then towards the end an older guy says something about the size of the thing..

And it all sounds totally natural, especially the way he is so preoccupied he can barely answer the first kid - and then tells him to "go get the binoculars"..

I recommend watching the whole thing blown up on a television screen with the sound on...
