

THE AIRSHIP FILE

A Collection of Texts Concerning Phantom Airships and Other UFOs, Gathered from Newspapers and Periodicals
Mostly During the Hundred Years Prior to Kenneth Arnold's Sighting.

Compiled by

Thomas E. Bullard
517 E. University St. #2
Bloomington, Indiana
47401 U.S.A.

1982

"Nothing is deader than yesterday's news"--unless it concerns yesterday's UFO reports. Research into aerial mysteries of the 19th and early 20th centuries has outgrown the status of a fad or passing interest to become an established branch of ufology. A corps of dedicated investigators deserve the credit for this situation, while an extensive literature of books and articles flourishes in this area and includes such landmarks as Gordon I.R. Lore and Harold Denault's Mysteries of the Skies, Loren Gross's booklets, Jerome Clark and Lucius Farish's series of articles for Saga's UFO Report, Michel Bougard's La Chronique des OVNI, William R. Corliss's Sourcebooks and George M. Eberhart's awesome Geo-Bibliography of Anomalies. Thanks to the hard work of such researchers some of the most thorough and creditable UFO scholarship belongs to historical research, particularly concerning the phantom airships. In fact we know the airship episodes in finer detail than any modern wave except for 1947, which Ted Bloecher has researched so well.

What lures ufologists to the airships is a mystery in itself. Why any apparently sane and sensible individual would clock in a day's work and then devote his evenings and weekends to squinting at microfilms and thumbing through dusty volumes of old newspapers is equally puzzling. I can only speculate about the causes: In the 1950s old sightings "proved" that flying saucers were on the wing before airplanes and satellites cluttered the skies, so UFO partisans valued these reports as ammunition against skeptics. When the extent and sometimes fantastic quality of airship reports came to light in the 1960s, the excitement of discovery fuelled the work as if a major archaeological dig was underway. Then the promise of these findings seemed tremendous. They opened a whole new window on the UFO mystery with a view clear of modern predispositions and prejudices, while the historical distance of the events raised the possibility of a complete and finished reconstruction of a UFO episode. If the same objective phenomenon hid behind both old reports and new, here was the chance to glimpse it without the double confusion of subjective and inadequate information.

Once researchers recognized the true tenor of airship reports a disillusionment set in, however, since the old reports contained differences which were equally as remarkable as the similarities and thereby cast doubt on the ready identification of airships with modern UFOs. Such a failure to provide a final answer should have spelled the doom of interest in airships. Quite the opposite happened and airships seem to ride a continual groundswell of attention, a fact which I believe points to a degree of maturity in ufology. Instead of regarding the UFO mystery as a monolithic puzzle with a single solution, ufologists now accept that the mystery is a whole cluster of problems with many approaches worth trying and many answers worth knowing. In this light airships hold onto their place as a worthwhile subject of ufological study: They mystify us in their own right, yet they resemble the modern UFO phenomenon too closely for us to deny a kinship of some kind. They pose a social and cultural problem for their age like the UFO in ours, but they lend a perspective of different conceptualizations and beliefs to help clarify the role of these factors in modern reports. Finally, the airships functioned as UFOs at the turn of the century and thereby claim a legitimate chapter in the history of aerial wonders, while the data seems more accessible despite the passage of years in comparison with the tangle of modern sources. Of course these rationalizations ignore the fun of following in the footsteps of Charles Fort and the excitement of discovery where lie, I think, the real explanations behind the peculiar fascination of historical UFO research.

* * *

Questions of motivation aside, I suspect that most researchers realize that this work has grown too big to remain a one-man job. Even in a specific case like the 1897 airships, an individual confronts an enormous bulk of surviving newspapers, many of them scattered all across the country and sometimes inaccessible except through a personal visit, as well as the inevitable limitations of time, finances and stamina. Moreover, we simply know too much for every find to count as a pioneering contribution any longer. Future progress toward a well-nigh exhaustive record of airship activities and a detailed picture of all pre-1947 UFOs must rely more and more on shared findings and organized searches. The time is right for these steps; more properly, they are overdue. Through this present volume I call on researchers all over the world to join in an effort to pool our already extensive findings, as a move in the direction of that cooperation and division of labor we need. I hardly need to mention some of the advantages of a sourcebook of airship reports:

- 1) It would gather the scattered findings of historical research into one convenient file and provide collectors with a master list against which they could check their holdings for completeness and accuracy.
- 2) By recording full texts the collection would preserve UFO reports for posterity and insure the availability of the maximum surviving information on each case. No longer would researchers have to rely on second- and third-hand sources, or perpetuate such distortions as, for example, the 1873 Bonham, Texas, and Fort Scott, Kansas, sightings. Readers who swallowed the yarn of a speeding object which caused farmers to dive under their wagons and soldiers to flee the parade ground, presented in Donald Keyhoe's Flying Saucers Are Real (p. 57) and repeated in Lore and Denault (p. 72), can compare the real accounts in this collection on pages 5-6.
- 3) Such a collection would provide historical researchers with an outlet for sharing their findings and thereby overcome the present situation of isolation. If the effort wins international support, cooperation will throw open otherwise inaccessible materials to researchers in all countries and build up the worldwide record necessary to document a worldwide phenomenon.
- 4) From the standpoint of collecting, the sourcebook would reduce duplication of effort and steer workers away from well-worn paths through the San Francisco Call, Chicago Tribune, and Dallas Morning News toward obscure local newspapers where new finds still wait, or toward remoter dates as yet unexplored.

5) From the standpoint of analysis, the collection would offer researchers a sound data base for their studies, and save analysts with no wish to collect from the chore of scraping together their own sample of reports.

* * *

The airship bug bit me several years ago when I started my dissertation research in the Indiana University Folklore Department and I have not recovered since. With the resources of the university and inter-library loan service at my disposal I have been able to accumulate a considerable number of 19th and early 20th-century UFO reports, sometimes by following up a lead from Fort or some other researcher, sometimes by fishing through newspapers between the dates when I reasonably expect to find something. Meanwhile I managed to bootleg enough time from my job to type most of my findings on 4x6" cards, to accumulate a collection of more than 2000 of them over the years. I realized not long ago that my collection, while hardly the largest or most varied, was probably the most readily communicable one in existence because of these cards, and consequently a practical starting-point for a cooperative effort. I decided then to assemble the cards into book form, a process which obliged me to copy them, cut and tape the copies on large sheets of paper, have the local copy shop make reductions, and use these as master sheets for running off the pages of this collection.

Please take note: This collection is a raw assemblage of texts without commentary, analysis or index, beyond the few guidelines and highlights listed on the following pages, along with a list of sources. In the source list I include those newspapers which lacked references to aerial phenomena, and also newspapers whose relevant material I have not yet entered on cards. The order here is strictly chronological except during 1897, when the quantity of materials obliged me to add geographical divisions to the temporal ones, beginning about April 4. Newspaper articles comprise almost the entirety of the collection, since I have tried to avoid duplicating the Corliss Sourcebooks. but I have included a few journal items which I do not remember from his books. In almost every case the text is complete. If not the reason is accident or exact duplication elsewhere, and I try to indicate where to locate the deleted part. When I decided to assemble the collection, I knew I had to dive in or forever chase the mirage of "completeness." A certain time lag always separates the finding of an item and the typing of it, and the consequence for the present work is the inevitable addendum. It catches new finds, items overlooked when their turn came and went, and botched copies in the main body. I should warn the reader in particular that while most actual sightings are here, some items, especially short commentaries and quips or Fortean matters of less direct interest, remain in my notes untyped. As a result no one should try to infer one particular newspaper's complete airship references through this collection. The translations here--French, German and Swedish--share in common an uncompromising sorriness. Readers will have little trouble recognizing where I fudged, and straightforward sighting reports come through better than commentaries or editorials. Insofar as I improve with practice, the ghost rocket articles survive my abuses better than the ghost flier stories, but caveat lector--let this warning discourage anyone from basing a crucial argument on these renditions. Not a single typographical error got lost in transmission, and the reader will soon discover that as a matter of habit I not only beat a typing ribbon to death but hound it beyond the grave as well, while xerox machines read spirit messages only with great difficulty: For these shortcomings I apologize.

Though I fear the result is more a contribution to eyestrain than to knowledge, I hope recipients will find this collection useful, at least for reference if not for bedtime reading. Again, this work is neither intended nor very meaningful as an end in itself. I see these pages as the nucleus or first draft for a second edition, which will include all findings to date, and then the second edition will lead to a third, expanded to contain the discoveries of a wide-ranging and well-organized search through historical sources. Ufologists truly will be able to take pride in such an accomplishment.

Guide.

1800s to 1895:	pp. 1-14.
1896:	14-71.
1897:	71-249.
Feb.:	72-75;	March:	75-82;	April 1-3: 82-87.
Begin geographical divisions with April 4:	87
Begin Kans.	87	Minn.	128	Ill.	152
Neb.	91	Dakotas	134	Ind.	176
Mo.	95	Manitoba	135	Ohio	190
Ia.	105	Wisc.	135	W.Va.	198
		Mich.	141	Penn.,
				N.Y.	199
		Ky.	200	Fla., Ala.,	N.M.	241
		Tenn.	205	Miss., Ark.	217	Colo.	241
		D.C., Va.	215	La.	218	Wyo.	244
		N.C.	216	Tex., Okla.	218	Utah,
		Ga.	216			Wash.	244
Later 1897--Canada:	245
20th century:	249.
1905:	251-255.
1908:	256-260.
1909:	English airship wave--260-267
	Australia-New Zealand--268-69
	New England (summer-fall)--268
	New England (December)--270
	Dec. 20--272;	Dec. 23--273;	Dec. 24--275;	Dec. 25--281.
1910:	288-293.

1913: 293-306.
 1914: South Africa--306-314.
 1930: 317.
 1933: Ghost fliers--317.
 1934: 320; Feb.--331; March--334; Nov.--334.
 1935; 336; 1936: 337; 1937: 337-9
 1946: 343; July--344; Aug.--
 1947:
 Addendum I:
 Addendum II:

Highlights.

- 1) Springheeled Jack and related manlike creatures--p. 1,
- 2) 12/4/1858. Perhaps the eeriest observation I have read. Courtesy of Fort's notes. See p. 3.
- 3) Remarkable airship tests by Solomon Andrews, 1863, whose name turns up in later years in connection with less spectacular flights. Page 4.
- 4) The Bonham and Ft. Scott flying serpents, pp. 5-6. See also p. 12, 5/30/1888 for another such serpent. It made the NY Times but not the S.C. papers. Ats, 250, 252-3.
- 5) 7/8/1878 gives full text of story printed in Cincinn. Commercl. (p.6).
- 6) The Galisteo Junction airship story has a good yarn for a sequel, p.6.
- 7) 1880 was a busy year. The NY papers refer (p.8) to flying objects over Louisville (6-7) and St. Louis. I have searched the St.L Post-Disp. and Mo. Republican without success, but some problems in the date reference is obvious.
- 8) Angelic and Marian apparitions: pp. 7 (1880), 59 (1896), 254 (1905), 314 (1914)
- 9) A number of peculiar aerial lights appeared in connection with the search for the missing balloon Saladin, 1881, pp. 8-11. Compare with Andree's balloon in 1896 and 1897.
- 10) Electric balloons. During the 1909 New England wave, a letter from H.P. Lovecraft (I suppose the famous author of horror stories) appeared in the Providence Journal (see p. 284) and compared the current sightings with an earlier instance when Venus amazed the public. He called attention to a popular astronomy book, Astronomy with an Opera Glass, by Garrett P. Serviss (1st ed. 1888), which says the following on p. 2:

A singular proof of popular ignorance of the starry heavens, as well as of popular curiosity concerning any uncommon celestial phenomenon, is furnished by the curious notions prevailing about the planet Venus. When Venus began to attract general attention in the western sky in the early evenings of the spring of 1887, speculation quickly became rife about it, particularly on the great Brooklyn Bridge. As the planet hung dazzlingly bright over the New Jersey horizon, some people appeared to think it was the light of Liberty's torch, mistaking the bronze goddess's real flambeau for a part of the electric-light system of the metropolis. Finally (to judge from the letters written to the newspapers, and the questions asked of individuals supposed to know something about the secrets of the sky), the conviction seems to have become pretty widely distributed that the strange light in the west was no less than an electrically illuminated balloon, nightly sent skyward by Mr. Edison, for no other conceivable reason than a wizardly desire to mystify his fellow-men. I have positive information that this ridiculous notion has been actually entertained by more than one person of intelligence. And as Venus glowed with increasing splendor in the serene evenings of June, she continued to be mistaken for some petty artificial light instead of the magnificent world that she was....

As far as I can tell from the newspapers I checked, the number of letters referred to was not so great, but then New York had many papers unavailable to me. In fact a "Star of Bethlehem" hoax sponsored by Joe Mulhatton was more widely reported at the time. (See p. 12).

The electric balloon rose again in 1896-97, however. A letter to the St. Louis P-D, April 20 (p. 102) refers to such a balloon sighted "5 months ago," while Pennsylvania had an epidemic of electric balloons sent up in Jan. by scientists from Pittsburg (see p. 72; also Detroit Free Press, Mar. 28, p. 78). Early in February Canadians saw it, launched this time from Syracuse (72). Late in March Northern Michigan and Wisconsin had their turn seeing a balloon from St. Paul (77,79,82,369), while early in April a balloon from Chicago appeared to Bowling Green, Ohio, residents (82-3). Later in April the balloon, this time advertising soap, attracted attention in Michigan City, Ind. (185).

11) Speaking of Joe Mulhatton (F^aen), he was sometimes recollected, posthumously, in 1897 as the king of the fakers. Described as an erratic newspaperman, he authored the "Disappearance of David Lang" hoax which has appeared from time to time in modern UFO literature.

12) Accounts of the Crawfordsville, Ind., aerial monster of Sept. 5, 1891 include those from the Crawfordsville newspapers, recently made available (12,361-2).

13) To my knowledge, the 1892 airship wave over Russian Poland is hitherto unknown in UFO literature. Recurrent appearances of a flying machine and its regular use of the famous searchlight combine to make this the first true airship wave yet discovered. Its memory lingered as long as 1897, when the Deseret Evening News mentioned these events in an editorial (244). I tried tracking these clues through the NY Times and Tribune indexes without success until I stopped looking under balloons or aeronautics and turned to entries under the countries involved (See pp. 12, 13, 362). Note: NF Presse, p. 18, should read March 18, not May.

14) Andree's balloon generated two balloon waves in Canada, July-Sept. 1896, then again July-Sept. 1897 (14-15, 245-49). He seemed to haunt future UFO waves as well, since an article claiming Eskimos murdered him turns up in the 1909 New England wave, while in early 1934 the Swedes concerned themselves with building a monument to him at the same time they worried about ghost fliers.

15) Double and triple-headed fireballs--13, 15, 288, 363

16) For the 1896 wave I scanned newspapers between about Nov. 15 and Dec. 15. Nevadans also reported a number of airship sightings, particularly in December as the wave began to die down in California. Some reports of "angel" sightings came out of N.Y. in early Nov. (59), while Milwaukee saw an airship on Dec. 7 (70), and Nebraska had a visit some time in the fall (73), so the wave was by no means restricted to California.

17) For the 1897 wave I generally searched from Mar. 25-May 15. Earlier airship activity turns up in Nebraska and Kansas, where even as early as the end of February the ship travels an odyssey along railroad lines (74). A longer and more widely reported odyssey took place in Iowa, Minnesota and the Dakotas around April 9. Sioux City seems to have hosted airship activity on a recurrent basis from February onward (77).

A sort of pattern seems to give shape to the 1897 wave: At first the sightings came from small towns and rather remote areas. Then in mid-March the ship appeared over Omaha and the news spread to major newspapers. A week later mass sightings came from Omaha, Topeka and Kansas City, and airship reports established themselves as major news events. In the week following April 1, all was quiet on the airship front in terms of mass sightings or news reports, but the ship had broken out of its former Nebraska-Kansas range and began to colonize new territory, showing up in Illinois, Mich., Texas, Oklahoma, Iowa and even N.C. Then late in the week, on the 9th, the long odyssey captured the headlines again, and during the next few days the airship spent a weekend on the towns--Chicago, St. Louis, Milwaukee and Minneapolis. After these well-publicized events the ship became a nine-days' wonder, turning up everywhere. Reports began to diminish in Illinois and Minnesota around the 15th, or perhaps newspapers began to throttle them, but the West and the South began to sight odd lights. In this spreading process the ship nearly returned to some of its 1896 haunts. As the wave wore on some of the more fanciful stories began to surface, like Hamilton's cow, Adam and Eve from Mars and the Aurora crash. After about the 22nd, reports began a noticeable decline, but then seemed to pick up early in May, with the final mass sighting taking place over Cincinnati before reports almost entirely died out--or rather, transferred to Canada. I suspect that this pattern--of slow starts, publicity boosts, a week or two of intense excitement (uforia?), increasingly bizarre reports (because witnesses or storytellers come forward, or because strangeness alone remains newsworthy), and at last a slow fade--is characteristic of some, if not most, UFO waves.

18) The number of Indiana newspapers consulted here reflects an effort to exploit local sources as much as possible. The Indiana State Library is hard at work filming their collection of bound volumes and occasionally acquires films from commercial companies which hold master copies, but many newspapers are unavailable to researchers. I have searched most of the original-copy newspapers held at the State Library, but I regret to say that I have not gotten around to some two dozen filmed papers which are readily available. Sorry.

19) Readers may notice that the range of the 1897 airship included most states outside of New England. North Carolina has provided several, and Western states besides Colorado check in with several reports as well.

20) Hamilton's Cow, p. 90; and Hamilton's confession, in a letter to the Atchison Cnty Mail, p. 104.

21) The airship wave picked up again in Canada during July, when Andree finally set out on his ill-fated polar expedition. Meanwhile a New Mexico inventor claimed to have built a machine which people saw flying at night (245-6), and the Seattle D. Times reports rumors of a balloon around Mt. Ranier (246). I could find no other reference to this latter apparition, however.

22) Passing into the 20th century, the reader will find a number of articles from the Indianapolis Star. I have searched every issue of this newspaper from its inception in the summer of 1903 through 1909, and have included the most relevant items here; but these entries by no means reflect the full amount of unusual events described in this rather receptive paper. Over the years several "sporadic" airships, unassociated with any wave, occur (250, 252, 255).

23) I also found a reference to a spasm of sightings in Nevada in 1904, one of which looked like a "winged wheel." Checking the Nevada papers themselves produced rather disappointing results, however (250-1).

24) 1905 was another busy year, with L'Astre Cherbourg (251-2), the Salton Sea airship (253), recurrent angel flights in Spain (254) and various other aerial events.

25) The newspaper account of the Burlington, Vt., aerial torpedo says nothing about the torpedo (255).

26) 1908-1910--three years of almost continual international UFO activity.

27) The Washington wave, in the wake of the Russo-Japanese War which led to widespread fear of the Japanese, began in late January and persisted through March (372, 257-9). A stray balloon appeared over the Azores in June (259), and in the summer a slow wave began in New England which lasted till December. Charles Fort (pp. 507-8) writes a charming passage about the undertakers who sighted an airship on Halloween and mentions several other sightings during the summer and fall. I have managed to find all of these except the White River Junction, Vt., case, and a few others besides. (259-60). For Danish wave in July, see MUF0B 9, W4-77-8, 11-13

28) 1909 began with the English wave, followed by the "Flying Dutchman of the Salton Sea. I have been unable to examine any New Zealand newspapers for cases from that well-known flap, but the Sydney Morning Herald indicates that Australia experienced a wave a little later in the summer (268-9).

29) The December wave in New England is a familiar part of UFO literature, but a lesser wave involving N.Y., N.J., and parts of New England late in the summer seems to have gone unrecognized (269-70).

30) Into the first weeks of 1910, aftershocks of the December wave continued in New England even while the center of activity shifted into the South. The major hiatus in this three-year period of major UFO activity occurs from Feb.-July 1910 (pending a concentrated search), but in late summer and fall worldwide activity resumes.

31) The 1912-13 wave of airship sightings in England is well known. Less familiar are the events over continental Europe at the same time, where airships and suspiciously lighted airplanes invaded Belgium (296, 298), Holland (300), and especially Eastern Europe, where the 1892 airships had appeared as well (293, 294, 295, 304, 305-6). A humorous "abduction" episode took place Feb. 5 (296). Also, on p. 295 is a reference that the Germans planned to install searchlight equipment on their Zeppelins--an announcement reported Mar. 14.

32) An operable German airplane took part in military operations between South Africa and German SW Africa (314), but could hardly account for the widely distributed wave of sightings in Aug. and Sept. Note also a Jan. sighting (310, Joh. Star), a report of an airship over the Orkney Islands just before the outbreak of hostilities (309, Pretoria News), and reference to the "Boer signal" (312).

33) From around 1915 till 1930 stretches a barren period for sightings, or at least for any noteworthy pattern in the sightings. The only recurrent theme in sightings of the 1920s seems to be airplanes in trouble or flying lights attributed to transatlantic flights (See Dale M. Titler, Wings of Mystery). I have devoted little time to these seemingly dry years, so whether the dearth is due to lack of research or lack of activity, I cannot say.

34) Worldwide UFO activity resumes in the 1930s, with the Nordic "ghost flier" waves being the most prominent events. I have recognized three distinct waves: The first began to receive press attention in Dec. 1933 and continued with the heaviest concentration of reports for the decade through Feb., with a few reports straggling in as late as April. When Nov. 1934 rolled around, the ghost fliers reappeared for about a month's time. While hints that not all was quiet appear in the news, 1935 and 1936 were quiet years. Then in Nov. 1936 a new wave commenced, peaked in Jan. and Feb. 1937 and then trailed off in March, with hints of activity again in Oct.

Though Sweden, Norway and Finland hosted most of the visitations in the 1930s, England too shared in the waves, in early Feb. 1934 (332), 1936 when the more frequented areas were quiet (337), and especially during the summer of 1937 with visitations over London and Hendon Field (385-6). When Austria joined the proceedings in 1937 (339), UFO activity gained an even more international flavor. Sightings in the U.S. during the 1930s got off to a busy start (317-8) but then died out; again, whether this situation is fact or artifact requires further research for an answer.

Time and again Swedish observers report "Flier X" to the "landsfiskal." My dictionary translates this official as a district prosecutor, but such a rendering seems inappropriate under the circumstances. Maybe he is more like our sheriff, though perhaps with a little more authority and other roles besides law enforcement. At any rate he is a civilian official whose title I leave untranslated in my more sensible moments.

35) Swedish newspapers gave various names to the peculiar aerial objects of 1946: "Spökraket" translates as the familiar "ghost rocket" and "spök-bomb" poses no problem; the infrequent "lufttorped" means "aerial torpedo"; while "eldkula" means "fireball." The problematic terms are "spökprojektil" and "rymdprojektil." Literally they mean "ghost projectile" and "space projectile," but the "projectile" may be represented by "missile." In the case of the "space projectile" or "space missile" I believe the reference is more to the visual similarity or supposed similarity to a Buck Rogers rocketship than to any supposed extraterrestrial origin. In all accounts of origin which do not reduce it to natural causes, the Russians take the blame. This fact is notable in light of the international scope of the sightings. The 1946 wave was the most worldwide since 1908-10, with most of Europe (England excepted, it seems), the Soviet Union and the U.S.

reporting sightings. Once again I can only lament that I have not worked this period with the thoroughness it deserves. The occasional references to "silvery cigars" reveal just how close descriptions of ghost rockets drew to descriptions of flying saucers. Rockets and saucers in a sense overlap, since as late as 1948 reports of rockets still came in.

36) I include a few 1947 flying saucer reports from an Indiana newspaper for anyone who might be interested.

37) Ghost lights: 3 (1860), 79 (Mich., Mar. 29, '97), 82 (Mar. 30), 141, 145, 216, 217, 255 (1905), 260, 267, 268, 316, 358 (1870), 360.

38) Note the yarn of a fatal abduction aboard a phantom ship, 360-1.

39) Some researchers have hypothesized an airship wave in Germany during the 1850s, I suppose based on evidence such as the Chicago Record printed, 4/12/97 (157):

Several old-country Germans contended that the mystery is a return of the phenomenon that worried residents of Germany over 30 years ago.... The light claimed to have been visible in Germany at that time was called the "devil's army," and when it was visible brought the superstitious to their knees.

This name "devil's army" clues the folklorist to a widespread cycle of legends among Germanic peoples, legends which describe an event more often known as the Wild Hunt, Furious Host, or Wotan's Army. The variety of names is considerable--see Jacob Grimm, Teutonic Mythology (Gloucester, Mass.: Peter Smith, 1976), 918-50; Hans Plischke, Die Sage vom Wilden Heere in Deutschen Volke (Eilenburg: C.W. Offenhauer, 1914), 10-20. I do not find "devil's army" as a specific variant, but the titles often substitute the name of the devil for Wotan, so those immigrants probably recollected a phenomenon interpreted in terms of traditional belief rather than in terms of aviation technology. The bright light is no stranger to the Wild Hunt and aerial armies--see the aerial army over Hungary in 1887 (360), whose leader brandished a flashing sword.

On the other hand airship sightings were entirely possible in the 1850s and before. During the 1840s in particular there seems to have been a high tide of expectations, led by graphic illustrations of Henson's Aerial Steam Carriage in flight (imaginary flight, but impressive) and played upon by Edgar Allan Poe's "Balloon Hoax." I would not be surprised to find some phantom sightings during this time.

40) An item of more definite interest appears in Nature, v. 58 (1898), p. 353 (in Corliss, Handbk Unus. Natl Phenom p. 332), where the journal summarizes a belated "Andree's balloon" report and explains the object as a cloud of cyclonic origin. The note concludes by saying this observation "suggests an origin for strange war balloons and other aerial machines occasionally reported as having been sighted." The suggestion that these sightings recurred in the 1890s is clear.

41) How much of the airship waves are hoaxes and newspaper events remains an important question. On occasion we have reason to believe the sightings were newspaper fabrications--see page 153 for a letter disclaiming a reported airship, and 183 for an article entitled, "The Greensburg Liar Is Loose Again." Another matter of some significance I noticed while working the Indiana papers is how seldom airship reports turned up in the columns devoted to news from outlying communities. The content of this correspondence includes sicknesses, births, deaths, marriages, crop news, and mention of anything new or changing in these areas where newness or change was rare. A crime was a major event, and an airship sighting would surely rate a mention. After reading about a lot of Sunday picnics, weekend visits and fine hunting dogs, I can say with safety that those mentions are lacking.

Sources

1896:

California:

Anaheim (wkly) Gazette	Times-Gazette (Redwood City)
Placer Herald (Auburn) (wkly)	Riverside Enterprise
Bakersfield Daily Californian	Sacramento Bee
D. Humboldt Times (Eureka)	Salinas Daily Index
Folsom Weekly Telegraph	San Diego Record
Daily Evening Expositor (Fresno)	(San Francisco) Call
(no 1896)	San Francisco Chronicle
Daily Morning Union (Grass Valley)	San Francisco Examiner
Los Angeles Times	San Jose Daily Mercury
Marysville Daily Appeal	(San Jose) Pioneer--0
Napa Register	Marin County (wkly) Tocsin (San Rafael)
Oakland Tribune	Santa Cruz Sentinel
Pacific Grove Review (wkly)	Woodland Daily Democrat
Mountain Democrat (Placerville)	(Stockton) Daily Reporter
Merced Star

Nevada:

Reese River Reveille (Austin)	(Elko) Free Press - 0
(Battle Mountain) Central Nevadan	White Pines News (Ely) - 0
Belmont Courier - 0	Genoa Weekly Courier - 0
Carson City Morning Appeal	Reno Evening Gazette
Carson City News	Virginia (City) Enterprise
Lyon County Times (Dayton)	(Winnemucca) Daily Silver State

Oregon:

Ashland Tidings	Daily Eugene Guard
Astorian (Astoria)	(Portland) Morning Oregonian
Astoria Daily Budget (no 1896)	Oregon Statesman (Salem)

Washington:

Seattle Daily Times	Spokane Daily Chronicle
Seattle Post-Intelligencer	Tacoma Daily Ledger
	Tacoma (Daily) News

Arizona: Arizona Daily Citizen (Tucson)

Idaho: Idaho Daily Statesman (Boise)

Montana: Great Falls Tribune

Also: Washington Post, Chicago Tribune, St. Louis Post Dispatch and St. Louis Globe-Democrat. / Deseret Evening News (Salt Lake City).

1897: (Feb.-May)

Alabama: Birmingham News Daily Register (Mobile)

Arkansas:

Harrison Times (no '97)	Mena Weekly Star
Arkansas Gazette (Little Rock)	Osceola Times (no '97)
Arkansas Democrat (" ")	Pine Bluff Commercial--0

Arizona: Arizona Star (Tucson)

Colorado:

Boulder Daily Camera	Denver ^{Eve.} Post
Colorado Springs Gazette	Rocky Mountain ^{D.} News (Denver)
	Pueblo ^{D.} Chieftain

Delaware: Delaware Every Evening Morning News (both Wilmington)

Florida: Florida Times-Union (Jacksonville): Tampa Tribune

Georgia: Atlanta Journal Atlanta Constitution

Illinois:

Alton Evening Telegraph	Pana Weekly Palladium
Aurora Daily Beacon	Paris Daily Beacon
Daily Bulletin (Bloomington)	Peoria Daily Transcript
Daily Pantagraph (Bloomington)	Peoria Evening Times
Canton Daily Register	Pontiac Daily Leader
Centralia Daily Sentinel	Quincy Daily Herald
(Charleston) Daily Courier	Quincy Daily Journal
Chicago Journal	Quincy Morning Whig
Chicago Tribune	(Rock Island) Daily Union
Decatur ^{Eve.} Republican	(Rock Island) Argus
(Dixon) Evening Telegraph	Rockford Daily Register - Gazette
Galena Daily Gazette	Rockford Daily Republic.
Galesburg Evening Mail	Savannah Journal (wkly)
Daily Illinois Courier (Jacksonville)	Illinois State Journal (Springfield)
Daily Jacksonville Journal	Springfield News-Telegram
Lincoln Semi-Weekly Courier	Sterling Evening Gazette
Marion Leader	Streator Daily Free Press
Monmouth ^{D.} Review	Streator Daily Monitor
Morris Daily Herald	(Taylorsville) Daily Breeze
Mt. Vernon Daily Register	Daily Illinois State Register (Spring-
Ottawa Daily Journal	Lincoln Weekly Citizen field)
Ottawa Weekly Republican-Times	Monmouth Daily News

Indiana:

Angola Herald	Indianapolis World
Fountain-Warren Democrat (Attica)	West Side Herald (Indianapolis)-- (ceases 4/15)--0
Auburn Courier	Jasper Weekly Courier
Dearborn Independent (Aurora)	Kentland Democrat (no 4/16)
Bedford Daily Mail	Knightstown Banner (no '97)
Hartford County Telegram (Blackford)	Knightstown Sun (no '97)
Bloomfield News	Kokomo Dispatch
(Bloomington) Courier	Kokomo Daily Tribune
Bloomington Telephone	Lafayette Journal
Bloomington World	LaGrange Standard
Republican-Progress (Bloomington)	LaPorte Weekly Argus
Bluffton Banner	Lebanon Patriot
Bourbon Mirror	Ligonier Banner
Brookville American	Logansport Chronicle
Brookville Democrat	Logansport Daily Journal
Brownstown Banner	Logansport Daily Pharos
Butler Record	Logansport Daily Reporter
Cannelton Enquirer	Logansport Times
Columbus Daily Herald	Madison Courier
Columbus Daily Times	Martinsville Republican
(Columbus) Evening Republican	Michigan City News
Crawfordsville Daily Journal	Mishawaka Democrat (no 4/16,4/22)
Crawfordsville Review	Mitchell Commercial
Lake County Star (Crown Point)	Monticello Herald
Hendricks County Gazette (Danville)	White County Democrat (Monticello)
Carroll County Citizen (Delphi)--0	New Albany Daily Ledger
Denver Tribune	New Castle Tribune (no '97)
Ellettsville Farm	Hoosier State (Newport)
(Evansville) Courier	Noblesville Democrat
Evansville Journal	Hamilton County Democrat (Noblesville)
Fairmount Weekly News (lacks 4/22)	Hamilton County Ledger (Noblesville)
Farmland Enterprise--0	North Judson News--0
Fort Wayne Weekly Gazette	(Osgood) Journal (=Ripley Jnl)
Franklin Democrat	(Peru) Republican
Franklin Republican --no Apr.	Pike County Democrat (Petersburg)
Gas City Weekly Journal (issues missing)	Rensselaer Republican
Goshen Weekly Democrat	Rockville Republican
Daily Banner-Times (Greencastle)	Rockville Tribune--0
Greenfield Herald	Rushville Republican
Greensburg Review	Shelby Democrat (Shelbyville)
Greensburg New Era	(Shoals) Referendum
Hancock Democrat	South Bend Daily Tribune
Hartford City Telegram	Sullivan Democrat
Hobart Gazette	Terre Haute Evening Gazette
Huntingsburg Signal (German)--0	(Vincennes) Daily Sun
Indianapolis Journal	Warsaw Daily Times
Indianapolis News	Warsaw Northern Indianan (wkly ed. of D. Times)
Indianapolis Sentinel

Indiana (cont'd.)

Daviess County Democrat (Washington)
 Waterloo Press (to 4/15)
 Worthington Times--0

Iowa:

Burlington Daily Hawk-Eye	Iowa State Journal (Des Moines)
Cedar Rapids Evening Gazette	Iowa State Register (Des Moines)
(Council Bluffs) Daily Nonpareil	Keokuk Daily Gate City
Council Bluffs Globe	Marshalltown Evening Times-Republican
Davenport Daily Leader	Sioux City Journal
Des Moines Daily News	Waterloo Daily Courier
Des Moines Leader

Kansas: (including Kansas City, Mo., newspapers, since their orientation seems more toward Kansas than Missouri.)

Atchison Daily Globe	Kansas City (Weekly) Gazette
Emporia ^p Gazette	Kansas City (Mo.) Star
Fort Scott Daily Monitor	Kansas City (Mo.) Times
Hutchinson Daily News	Topeka Daily Capital
(Independence) Star and Kansan	Wichita Daily Eagle

Kentucky:

Carlisle Mercury (wkly)	(Madisonville) Hustler
Lexington Daily Leader	(Middleboro) Weekly Herald
Lexington Morning Herald	Owensboro Daily Messenger
Lexington Morning News	(Paducah) Daily News
Louisville Courier-Journal	Owensboro Daily Inquirer
Louisville Evening Post
Louisville Times

Louisiana:

(Alexandria) Daily Town Talk	Daily Picayune (New Orleans)
Baton Rouge Daily Advocate	Times-Democrat (New Orleans)
	Shreveport Times

Maine: Daily Evening Argus (Portland)

Massachusetts: Boston Globe

Michigan:

Adrian Evening Telephone	Ionia Daily Standard
Battle Creek Daily Moon	(Iron Mountain) Daily Tribune
Bay City Times-Press	Jackson Daily Citizen
(Benton Harbor) Evening News	Kalamazoo Gazette
(Detroit) Evening News	(Lansing) State Republican
Detroit Free Press	Manistee Daily Advocate
Flint Daily News	Manistee Daily News
Grand Haven Daily Tribune	(Marquette) Daily Mining Journal
(Grand Rapids) Evening Press	(Marshall) Daily Chronicle
Holland City News	Midland Sun

Michigan (cont'd)

Mt. Clemens Monitor	Saginaw Courier-Herald
Muskegon ^D Chronicle	Saginaw Evening News
Niles Daily Star	Saginaw Globe
Owosso Argus Press	Utica Weekly Sentinel
Port Huron Daily Times

Minnesota:

Duluth (wkly) News-Tribune	St. Paul Dispatch
Minneapolis Tribune	St. Paul Pioneer Press

Mississippi:

(Jackson) ^D Clarion-Ledger	(Natchez) Daily Democrat
Jackson Daily News

Missouri: (Kansas City excluded)

Carrollton Daily Democrat	St. Louis Globe-Democrat
Liberty (wkly) Tribune	St. Louis Post-Dispatch
Weekly Democrat-News (Marshall)	Sedalia Evening Democrat
Moberly Daily Monitor	Shelbina (wkly) Democrat
Poplar Bluff Daily American (no '97)	Shelby County (wkly) Herald
Atchison County (wkly) Mail (Rock Port)	(Shelbyville)
Rolla (wkly) Herald	Miller County (wkly) Autogram
St. Joseph Daily Herald	(Tuscumbia)
St. Joseph Daily News

Montana: Butte Miner

Nebraska:

Nebraska Advertiser (wkly)	Nebraska State Journal (Lincoln)
(Auburn)	Omaha ^D Bee
Beatrice Weekly Express	Omaha World-Herald
Kearney ^D Hub

New Mexico:

Albuquerque Morning Democrat	Las Vegas Daily Optic
------------------------------	-----------------------

New York:

Albany Evening Journal	Buffalo Courier
	Buffalo Evening News

North Carolina:

Carthage (wkly) Blade	Caucasian (Raleigh)(wkly)--0
Daily Charlotte Observer	Raleigh Tribune
Fayetteville Observer	Wilmington Messenger
Alamance (wkly) News-Gleaner	Rockingham Rocket
(Graham)--0

North Dakota:

Fargo Forum and Daily Republican	Minot Daily News
	Ward County Reporter (Minot) (wkly)

Ohio:
 (Bowling Green) Daily Sentinel
 Canton Repository
 Cincinnati Enquirer
 Cincinnati Commercial Tribune
 Cleveland Plain Dealer
 Steubenville Daily Republican
 Steubenville (Daily) Herald

Oklahoma:
 Arapaho Bee (wkly)--0
 Cheyenne (wkly) Sunbeam
 Cushing (wkly) Herald
 Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman
 Oklahoma State Sentinel (wkly)
 (Stillwater)

Oregon: Portland Morning Oregonian

Pennsylvania:
 Erie Daily Times
 Harrisburg Patriot
 Lancaster Intelligencer - 0
 Pittsburgh Dispatch
 Pittsburgh Post

Rhode Island: Providence Journal

South Carolina: Charleston News-Courier

South Dakota:
 Aberdeen Daily News
 (Sioux Falls) Argus-Leader
 Yankton Press and Dakotan

Tennessee:
 Chattanooga Daily Times
 (Clarksville) Daily Leaf-Chronicle
 Knoxville Daily Tribune
 Memphis Commercial-Appeal
 Nashville American
 Nashville Banner
 Daily Sun (Nashville)

Texas:
 Abilene Reporter (2ce/wkly)
 Austin Times
 (Brownsville) Daily Herald
 Bryan Morning Eagle
 Johnson County (wkly) Review (Cleburne)
 Dallas Morning News
 (Dallas) Times-Herald
 Austin Daily Statesman
 Sunday Gazetteer (Denison)
 El Paso Times
 Fort Worth Register
 Daily Hesperian (Gainesville)
 Galveston Daily News
 Houston Post

Utah:
 (Logan) Tri-Weekly Journal
 (Nephi) Republic--0
 Ogden Standard
 (Provo) Daily Enquirer
 Deseret Evening News (Salt Lake City)
 Salt Lake Herald

Virginia:
 Norfolk Dispatch
 Norfolk Virginian
 Evening Leader (Richmond)
 Richmond Dispatch
 State (Richmond)
 Roanoke Times

Washington: Spokane Daily Chronicle

West Virginia:

Charleston^D Gazette
 Huntington Daily Tribune
 Parkersburg Daily Journal
 Parkersburg Daily Sentinel

West Virginia Oil Review (Sistersville)--
 (no '97)
 Wheeling Intelligencer
 Wheeling Register

Wisconsin:

Beloit Daily News
 Beloit (wkly) Free Press
 (Fond du Lac) Daily Commonwealth
 Green Bay Gazette
 (Kenosha) Evening News
 Wisconsin State Journal (Madison)

(Milwaukee) Daily News
 (") Evening Wisconsin
 Milwaukee Journal
 Milwaukee Sentinel
 (Oshkosh) Daily Northwestern
 (Portage) Daily Register
 Racine Daily Journal
 Racine Times

Wyoming:

Cheyenne Sun-Leader
 Converse County (wkly) Herald (Lusk)

Laramie Republican
 Rock Springs (wkly) Miner--0

Canada:

Manitoba: Brandon Mail
 Manitoba Morning Free Press (Winnipeg)
 Ontario: Toronto Globe
 Quebec: Le Monde (Montreal)

La Manitoba (St. Boniface)
 Le Courier du Canada (Quebec)

1897 (July-Oct.)

Alberta: Edmonton Bulletin
 British Columbia:

Vancouver Daily News-Advertiser
 Victoria Daily Colonist

Manitoba: Manitoba Morning Free Press (Winnipeg)

Ontario: Toronto Globe

Also: (Portland) Morning Oregonian, Tacoma Daily Ledger, Seattle Daily Times, Seattle Post-Intelligencer, Spokane Daily Chronicle

1903 (June)-1909: Indianapolis Star

1904:

Nevada: (July-Aug.)

Reese River Reveille (Austin)
 Carson City Morning Appeal
 Carson City News
 Free Press (Elko)

White Pine News (Ely)
 Reno Evening Gazette
 Virginia (City) Enterprise
 Daily Silver State (Winnemucca)
 Lyon County Times (Yerington)

1905: Le Figaro, Journal des Debats, Le Temps (all Paris) (April)
 California: Imperial (wkly) Press, Imperial Valley News

1908:

(June-July): Morgonbladet (Oslo, Norway)

July-Dec.:

Conn.: Hartford Times, Willimantic Daily Chronicle

Maine: Lewiston Journal

Mass.: Berkshire Evening Eagle, Springfield Republican, Worcester
 Evening Gazette, Boston Herald

New Hampshire: Manchester Union

Rhode Island: Providence Journal

Vermont: Burlington Daily News, Rutland Daily Herald, St. Albans
 Daily Messenger

Also, Washington, Jan-March: White River (wkly) Journal (Kent)

Morning Olympian (Olympia)

Seattle Post-Intelligencer

Daily Ledger (Tacoma)

Tacoma Daily News

1909:

March-May, England: (London) Daily Express

" Daily Telegraph

Manchester Guardian

June (Calif.): Imperial Valley Press (El Centro)

Imperial Valley News

San Francisco Call

July-Aug. (Australia, New Zealand): Sydney Morning Herald

Christchurch Weekly Press

Sept., Dec. (Sweden): Göteborgs Handels- och Sjöfarts-Tidning

Social-Demokraten (Stockholm)

Dec. 13, 1909-Jan. 1910:

Connecticut:

Hartford Courant

Willimantic Daily Chronicle

Hartford Times

Maine:

Daily Kennebec Journal (Augusta)

Daily Eastern Argus (Portland)

Massachusetts:

Boston Daily Advertiser

Berkshire Evening Eagle

Boston Evening Transcript

Springfield Republican

Boston Globe

Worcester Evening Gazette

Boston Herald

Boston Journal

1930s

Sweden:

Svenska Dagbladet (Stockholm)--1933 Oct.-Dec.
 1934 Jan.-April, Oct.-Dec.
 1935 Jan.-Mar., Oct.-Dec.
 1936 Jan.-Mar., Oct.-Dec.
 1937 Jan.-Mar., Oct.-Dec.

Norway:

Afton Dagbladet (Dec. '33)
 Morgonbladet (Dec. '33, Jan.-Mar. '34)

England:

Daily Telegraph (July-Aug. '37)

1946:

Sweden:

Svenska Dagbladet (July-Nov.)
 Morgon-Tidningen (May-Aug.)

Norway: Morgonbladet (July-Aug.)

Denmark: Berlingske Tidende (Aug.)

Italy: Corriere della Sera (Milan) (Sept.)

Others:

New York newspapers, Aug-Sept. 1880, May-June 1887: Daily Graphic, Evening Post, Herald, Sun, Times, Tribune, World.

St. Louis, July-Sept. 1880: Post-Dispatch, Missouri Republican

Kansas City Journal of Commerce 1858-1860

Atlanta Intelligencer--all 1860

(Washington, D.C.) Evening Star--July 1860

Southern Argus (Norfolk, Va.)--July 1860

Sydney Morning Herald--all 1896

Omaha (wkly) Times--Oct. 1857-Nov. 1858

Add: Philadelphia Press--Jan. 1897

Idaho Daily Statesman (Boise)--April-May 1897

Stockton (Calif.) Daily Independent--Mar.-April 1897

Washington Post--Apr-May 1897

Reno Evening Gazette--Aprl.-May 1897

March 1892: NY. Trib, Times; London Times, Manchester Guardian;
 Le Figaro, Le Temps; Neue Freie Presse

OUTRAGE ON A YOUNG LADY.

Many among the public have hitherto been incredulous as to the truth of various representations made to the Lord Mayor of the gambols of "Spring-heeled Jack," the suburban ghost, and believed, from there being no positive proof of the miscreant carrying his pranks beyond the mere act of alarming unprotected females, that those statements were more the effect of imagination than reality. The following authentic particulars, however, of a gross and violent outrage committed on a respectable young lady, and which might not only have caused her death, but that of both her sisters, by the unmanly brute, will remove all doubt of the subject.

Yesterday Mr. Alsop, a gentleman of considerable property residing at Bear-bind Cottage, in Bear-bind-lane, a very lonely spot between the villages of Bow and Old Ford, accompanied by his three daughters, waited upon Mr. Hardwick at Lambeth-street Police-office, and gave the following particulars of an outrage committed on one of the latter:--

Miss Jane Alsop, a young lady 18 years of age, stated, that at about a quarter to 9 o'clock on the preceding night she heard a violent ringing at the gate in front of the house, and on going to the door to see what was the matter she saw a man standing outside, of whom she inquired what was the matter, and requested he would not ring so loud. The person instantly replied that he was a policeman, and said "For God's sake, bring me a light, for we have caught Spring-heeled Jack here in the lane." She returned into the house and brought a candle, and handed it to the person, who appeared enveloped in a large cloak, and whom she at first really believed to be a policeman. The instant she had done so, however, he threw off his outer garment, and applying the lighted candle to his breast, presented a most hideous and frightful appearance, and vomited forth a quantity of blue and white flame from his mouth, and his eyes resembled red balls of fire. From the hoarse glance which her fright enabled her to get at his person she observed that he wore a large helmet, and his dress, which appeared to fit him very tight, seemed to her to resemble white oil skin. Without uttering a sentence he darted at her, and catching her partly by her dress and the back part of her neck, placed her head under one of his arms, and commenced tearing her gown with his claws, which she was certain were of some metallic substance. She screamed out as loud as she could for assistance, and by considerable exertion got away from him and ran towards the house to get in. Her assailant, however, followed her, and caught her on the steps leading to the hall-door, when he again used considerable violence, tore her neck and arms with his claws, as well as a quantity of hair from her head; but she was at length rescued from his grasp by one of her sisters. Miss Alsop added that she had suffered considerably all night from the shock she had sustained, and was then in extreme pain, both from the injury done to her arm, and the wounds and scratches inflicted by the miscreant about her shoulders and neck with his claws or hands.

Miss Mary Alsop, a younger sister, said that on hearing the screams of her sister Jane, she went to the door, and saw a figure as above described ill-using her sister. She was so alarmed at his appearance, that she was afraid to approach or render any assistance.

Mrs. Harrison said, that hearing the screams of both her sisters, first of Jane, and then of Mary, she ran to the door, and found the person before described in the act of dragging her sister Jane down the stone steps from the door with considerable violence. She (Mrs. Harrison) got hold of her sister, and by some means or other, which she could scarcely describe, succeeded in getting her inside the door and closing it. At this time her sister's dress was nearly torn off her. Both her [comb] dragged out of her head, as well as a quantity of her hair torn away. The fellow, notwithstanding the outrage he had committed, knocked loudly two or three times at the door, and it was only on their calling loudly for the police from the upper windows that he left the place.

Mr. Alsop, who appears very feeble, said that he and Mrs. Alsop have been laid up for several weeks past with a rheumatic affection, so as to be scarcely able to get out of bed, but such was the alarm on the night before, that they both got out of bed, and he managed to get down stairs, and found his daughter Susan with her clothes torn, and having all the appearance of receiving the most serious personal violence. Mr. Alsop also said, it was perfectly clear that there was more than one ruffian connected with the outrage, as the fellow who committed the violence did not return for his cloak, but scampered across the fields, so that there must have been some person with him to pick it up. In conclusion, Mr. Alsop said, he would most willingly give a reward of 10 guineas for the apprehension of the miscreant.

Mr. Hardwick expressed his surprise and abhorrence at the outrage, and said that no pains should be spared to bring the miscreant perpetrator to justice.

1838 March 2 (Fri) London Times, p. 7.

(card 1)

THE LATE OUTRAGE AT OLD FORD. /

On Wednesday a long investigation took place at Lambeth-street office before Mr. Hardwick, Mr. Norton, and Mr. Stock, a county magistrate, relative to the late outrage at Old Ford. Mr. Alsop, his son, and three daughters, were in attendance, as were also the two persons suspected of being concerned in the outrage, namely, Mr. Payne, a master bricklayer, and Mr. Milbank, a carpenter.

The first witness called was James Smith, of No. 9, Prospect place Old Ford row, coach wheelwright, who stated that between the hours of 8 and 9 o'clock on the night of Tuesday week he was proceeding along the New road, and on reaching within about 200 yards of Mr. Alsop's house he heard a violent ringing at the bell and almost immediately saw the door open, and some person bring a light. He also heard the loud screams of a female; and believing it to be some one attacked in distress, he quickened his pace to render what assistance he could. He had a coach wheel on his shoulder at the time, and before he had reached Mr. Alsop's he met a person named Richardson, a shoemaker, and requested him to come on, which he did. They both then proceeded towards Mr. Alsop's residence, and met two men, one of whom had on a kind of shooting jacket, and was a little in advance of his companion.

Mr. Hardwick (to the witness.): Turn around and see if you can recognize one or both of those men you speak of?

Witness: I am sure these are the men.

Mr. Hardwick: Which of them had the shooting jacket on?

Witness: Milbank.

Mr. Hardwick: Well, go on; state what followed.

Witness: Mr. Richardson asked what was the matter, but he gave answer, or if he did, I did not hear or understand it, and went on. Richardson and myself went on to Mr. Alsop's, and heard Mr. Alsop, Jun., and other persons, crying out "Police," from the windows; and on our reaching the gate, they asked if we were police, and we replied that we were not, but we expected that they, the police, would come up shortly. Mr. Alsop, Jun., and the Misses Alsop, came and opened the gate, and commenced relating what had occurred. While doing so, Mr. Payne, whom we had just before met in the lane, returned, and came up to where we were, and said to Mr. Alsop, Jun., "You know me." Mr. Alsop replied, "Yes, you are Mr. Payne." Mr. Payne then stated that as he came by the house he heard some person say, "Give spring-heeled Jack a light," and then went away. Some few minutes afterwards Richardson and I left the house together, and separated at the corner of the Newroad. I then proceeded towards the Coborn road, with the wheel on my shoulder, and when I had got a few yards up it (the Coborn road), I saw the same two men whom I had met before in Bear-Binder's lane. They were in conversation, and Payne said to the other, "It was rascally; I would not have had it done upon my account," or words to that effect. I was carrying my work upon my shoulder at the time and they recognized me, and the man in the shooting-jacket said, "There's the --- who was in the lane." He then came up to me, and caught a hold of the wheel I was carrying, and pulled it off my shoulder, saying at the same time, "What have you to say to Spring Jack?" I desired him to leave my wheel alone, and then Payne came and took him away. I went into the Morgan's Arms public house, and they followed me in, and went into either the tap-room or parlour. I inquired of the landlord who the man in the shooting-jacket was, and he said his name was Milbank, and that he resided nearly opposite to his house. I have no doubt but that the man Milbank was the person who had so frightened the Misses Alsop; and with respect to the "blue lights," neither Mr. Richardson nor myself observed anything of the kind.

Mr. Payne, in reply to the above statement, said that on the night in question he had passed the house of Mr. Alsop on his way home from the White Hart public-house in Old Ford, and at that time all appeared quiet. At a short distance to the west of the house he got out of the lane into a field, and had reached about the middle of it, when he returned to Mr. Alsop's in consequence of hearing the screams of a female. He then spoke to Mr. Alsop, Jun., as stated by the witness Smith; but with this exception the whole of his representations relative to him were perfectly untrue.

Smith, on the contrary, declared before his Maker that everything he had stated was perfectly true.

Mr. Hardwick (to Payne).—Did you not hear a violent ringing at the bell at the house of Mr. Alsop before you heard the screams?

Payne.—No, I did not. I only heard the screams, and those caused me to go back.

Mr. Hardwick.—Had you been in the company of Milbank on the Tuesday?

Payne.—Yes; we had been together, but we parted at the White Hart, and I did not again see or speak to him until I met him at the Morgan's Arms.

Mr. Hardwick.—Then you mean to say that you did not meet Smith at the land at all, and that what he states about your being in company with Milbank, and your remarks to that person, is all false, and the mere invention of the witness?

Payne (after some hesitation).—I do say so.

Smith again declared that he had stated nothing but the truth.

Mr. Nicholson, the landlord of the White Hart, stated, that both Payne and Milbank had been at his house on the Tuesday evening. They had been out shooting together, and the latter got so drunk that he was not able to take his gun home with him, and consequently left it behind. He (Milbank) left his house a little before 9 o'clock, but whether Mr. Payne went with him or not, he was not able to say.

Mr. Burden, the landlord of the Morgan's Arms, corroborated Payne's account of what had passed there.

Milbank, who was dressed as he had been on the night in question in a white fustian shooting jacket and a white hat, said that he was so drunk that he had not the least idea of any thing that happened.

Both Lea, the officer, and Inspector Juard, here remarked that they found that Milbank had procured a brown greatcoat, with a large collar to it, after leaving the White Hart, and that he had purchased a candle at a chandler's shop between the White Hart and the residence of Mr. Alsop.

This also Milbank denied all recollection of.

The Misses Alsop, and Mrs. Harrison, their sister, repeated their statement as to the appearance of the person by whom the outrage had been committed, and which has been already before the public. They also declared their firm conviction to be that the individual was not drunk at the time.

Mr. Strock said that his mind was made up as to the parties, at the same time he could not account for the supernatural appearances described by the ladies, the Misses Alsop.

Mr. Burden observed, that he should feel no doubt in coming at the same conclusion, that the accused persons were those who had been guilty of the act, both from what Millbank said to the man Smith on entering his house--namely, "What do you think of Spring-heeled Jack now?" or words to that effect, and his having the remains of a candle in his possession; but still he was at a loss to reconcile these points with the supernatural appearance spoken of.

Mr. Alsop, jun., and other witnesses were examined, after which, Mr. Hardwick said that it was evident, from what had taken place, the two persons suspected knew more about the affair than they wished to acknowledge, or, if they were innocent, it certainly was most extraordinary that so many concurrent circumstances should be adduced to fix upon them certainly the strongest possible suspicion. He could not conceive what motive the witness Smith could have in making the statement if it was groundless and without foundation, while he could at once find a motive in its denial by the accused. Besides, the fact of Mr. Payne not mentioning the circumstance to any person in the parlour of a public-house on the night in question was, in his mind, a circumstance pregnant with suspicion; and he (Mr. Hardwick) would now take care that the affair should be thoroughly investigated, and if it should turn out that they were the guilty parties, they should be punished to the utmost. He then directed that summonses should be taken out for other witnesses to be in attendance on Friday, and expressed a hope that in any account that might appear of the proceedings a request would be made to the person who was present with the cloak on, on the night in question, to attend on that day.

1838 March [3] (Sat) London Times, p. 7. (card 1)

LAMBETH-STREET.--Yesterday a further investigation, relative to the late outrage on Miss Alsop, at Old Ford, took place at this office before Messrs. Mark Hardwick, Coombe, Norton, Tickle, and Gregory, and the Justice room, as on Wednesday, was very much crowded.

Mr. Richardson, a shoemaker, and the person alluded to by Smith in his statement on the previous day, stated that on the night of Tuesday week, at about a quarter to 9 o'clock, he was passing along Bearbinder Lane, and on arriving within about 50 yards of Mr. Alsop's residence, he saw heard a violent ringing at that gentleman's bell. In about a minute afterwards he observed some person come out of the hall-door with a lighted candle, and advance through the garden to the gate, and presently heard the violent screams of a female. Almost immediately after this he met a young man in a large cloak and a boy, and the former said something about "Spring-heeled Jack" being in the lane. This he said in rather a joking or laughing manner. Witness instantly called out "police," and Mr. Smith coming up at the time, asked him if he would not come on. He replied that he would, and as they were hurrying towards Mr. Alsop's, he observed a man dressed in a white fustian shooting jacket, standing in the lane, nearly opposite to Mr. Alsop's, whom he asked what was the matter, but he made no reply. When they (he and Smith) had got to Mr. Alsop's, Mr. Alsop, jun., and his sister were calling for the police from the front windows, and on observing them they came down and related what had happened, and described the appearance of the person by whom the outrage had been committed, but not in such a manner as to impress him with the idea that it had been so furious as he subsequently saw it described in the newspapers. While (he witness) and Smith, were speaking to Mr. Alsop, jun., and his sisters, the man with the cloak and the boy whom he had before met, as well as Mr. Payne, came up to where they were standing and the latter spoke to Mr. Alsop, jun., and subsequently went away.

Mr. Hardwick here desired Millbank, who was in attendance, and who was dressed differently from the day before, to stand forward, and he having done so, asked Richardson if he could recognize him as the man whom he described to be standing in the lane on the night in question.

Richardson, after looking at him, repeated that he did not think he was, as the person he observed was, in his opinion, much younger, taller, and thinner.

Smith, the other witness, however said that he was positive he was the individual, as he had not only an opportunity of seeing him when he forced the wheel off his shoulder, but also at the Morgan Arms public-house.

Mr. Hardwick (to Richardson).--You have stated that you distinctly saw a lighted candle brought from the house of Mr. Alsop immediately after you heard the screams of the female.

Richardson.--I did, sir.

Mr. Hardwick.--Now, from the position in which you were at the time, can you take it on you to say that if a greater light than that produced by a candle had been exhibited in the garden of Mr. Alsop you must have seen it?

Richardson.--I certainly must.

Mr. Hardwick (to Smith).--And are you of the same opinion?

Smith.--I am, sir; I saw no light but that of a candle.

Mr. Hardwick (to Richardson).--About this young man in the cloak can you say what became of him?

Richardson.--I cannot, sir.

A gentleman, residing in the neighbourhood of Old Ford, here stepped forward, and said that, feeling considerably interested in the inquiry, he had himself taken much pains to elicit the truth, and allay, if possible, the terror which the occurrence had spread over the neighbourhood. With this object in view, he had, since the last examination, and after a good deal of trouble, made out the individual whose name is Fox, and who would be in attendance had it not been for serious illness. He (the gentleman) had however taken down his statements, which he would take the liberty of reading, and which he said he would be willing to swear to if necessary. It was as follows: "I hereby declare that I was the person with the boy spoken of by one of the witnesses respecting the outrage committed at Mr. Alsop's house; but I had no cloak on, neither did I see any one with a cloak. I stopped at the gate when I was told they had seen "Spring-heeled Jack" I thought it was all a game, and left them. The boy came there with me, but I do not know him. J. Fox."

Richardson and Smith both declared that the man they had seen, and who returned with the boy to Mr. Alsop's, had either a cloak or very very large cape on, while Mr. Alsop, jun., asserted the contrary.

Mr. Hardwick here asked Millbank if he had refreshed his memory since the last time he was present, and if he now recollected being in the lane, or what he had been doing on the night in question.

Millbank replied, that he was still unconscious of everything that occurred from before leaving the White Hart at Old Ford, until the following morning, and how he got home or to bed he was unable to say.

A respectable tradesman, who lives not far from the neighbourhood, and who from his "larking" propensities had been suspected of having something to do with the occurrence, said that he had come forward in consequence of some insinuations prejudicial to him, and to remove any imputation that might be cast upon his character, to declare solemnly that he knew nothing whatever of the transaction. He said that the outrage, as it was called, was most injurious to him, as some tenants of his in the neighbourhood talked about quitting their tenements, in consequence of their fears to go out after dark, and concluded by declaring, in a very theatrical manner, and with a peculiar flourish, that he believed the greater part of the statements as to the appearance of the individual committing the outrage was a mere fudge, and that a burning candle, through the fright of the parties no doubt, had been magnified into the blue and white lights they had heard so much about.

Mr. Hardwick admitted that there might be a little exaggeration, but it was quite impossible he could get rid of the solemn and repeated assertions of these respectable individuals on oath, and that, too, without any earthly assignable motive, and arrive at such a conclusion as that expressed. He felt bound to give credence to the testimony of the Misses Alsop, as the violence of which they complained would be in itself sufficiently alarming when committed by a ruffian without the addition of artificial lights, therefore what motive could they have in swearing distinctly to the lights. But, besides, there were other circumstances which went in corroboration of their statement. It would be recollected that a very intelligent girl, and in whose probity her master and mistress had placed the utmost reliance, had on the last examination given an accurate and detailed description of a person dressed in pantomime costume, that she had seen not very far from this neighbourhood and who appeared to vomit forth similar lights to those spoken of. There was another female, he understood, who had witnessed something similar, but who was not now present, close to the residence of Mr. Alsop. So that the case of the Misses Alsop was not a solitary instance of such practices. There was one thing which he really would admit was somewhat irreconcilable and staggering, and that was, that neither Richardson or Smith should have observed the light spoken of on the present occasion.

Mr. Farrell, the proprietor of the Pavilion theatre, being present, was questioned by the magistrates as to the chymical substances necessary to produce such a light as that described, and that gentleman said that the dropping of certain strong acids on a sponge charged with spirits of wine would produce such appearances as those described, and that the colour of the flame emitted would depend on the peculiar quality or description of acid.

Millbank, who cried bitterly, complained that the imputation cast upon him by the opinion expressed by the magistrates on the former day was calculated to do him irreparable injury in his business.

Mr. Hardwick observed that he was not singular in the opinion he had arrived at on that occasion. Now by that both he and Payne knew more about the business than they wished to state, for the magistrate who investigated the case with him, and he believed many respectable individuals who had heard the evidence given, and the manner in which that evidence was given, perfectly agreed with him. From what had taken place that day, and the private information that had reached him, as well as the high character which he had received for general good conduct, he Mr. Hardwick, felt bound to say, not only that his opinion was much altered, but that he believed that he was not the person who had committed the outrage; and therefore he hoped his character would not suffer from any thing that happened. The outrage committed was of a serious description, and one which the magistrates are bound to inquire strictly into. The officers were in possession of some information which should be promptly followed up and acted upon, as no efforts would be spared to bring the party or parties concerned in those disgraceful and mischievous proceedings to justice. The further inquiry, therefore, should stand over for the present.

The investigation lasted several hours, and had not terminated until a late hour.

1848 September 19 (Tues) London Times, p. 4. Cros Adiantum

Astronomical Discovery.--An Inverness correspondent of the Rosshire Advertiser of Friday writes as follows:--"Within the last nine or ten months I and several others have frequently observed two large bright stars, which, so far as I know, are found in no astronomical nomenclature. But for the superior brightness of one of them, and its peculiar sparkling light, it might be taken for Venus. The size and appearance of the other bears as close a resemblance to Mars. The relative position of the clear body is generally south by east of the other, and is often above the centre of our Church-street; but I have frequently observed it at all periods of the evening up to midnight immediately over the wooden bridge, the relative position of the other being W.N.W., opposite to the Caledonian Hotel. But these are not invariably their situations in the heavens during an hour of any evening. On one occasion, to the best of my recollection, a little after 9 o'clock in the evening of the 18th ult., I was in company with several individuals. We observed the clear star a little to the east of Island Bank-house, the residence of Mr. Falconer, of the Royal Academy 1856 August 5 (Tues) London Times, p. 9b.

(Ireland) The Great Comet of 1556.
If the accounts from Limerick are to be credited, the marvellous comet of 1556, after an absence of just three centuries, has made its predicted reappearance in the south of Ireland. The Observer of Saturday says:--

"A gentleman of the highest respectability has just informed us that he saw last night for the third time, what appears from his description to be the long-expected comet of 1556, the re-appearance of which this year has been so long foretold; astronomers, however, guarding their calculations by the proviso that a difference of three years might possibly occur, although there was every reason to expect that the great comet, which takes three centuries to complete its orbit, would be visible about the month of August, 1856. Our informant thus describes the object which attracted his attention for the first time last Wednesday night:--He was standing near the salmon-weir, on the platform before the mills of Corbally, about half-past 10 o'clock, when his attention was attracted by what appeared to be a fire rising on the top of Keeper mountain, due east of his position. He remarked the object to a gentleman who was with him, but, as the fire rose and cleared the top of the mountain, his friend suggested that it must be a lantern suspended to a kite. It had then the appearance of a globe of fire as large as a good-sized orange, with a broad tail of light extending about 18 inches from the body. The two gentlemen watched it for an hour, and the watchman on the weir observed it also. On Thursday night they all saw it again. It rose a few moments later, presenting the same appearance, and was high in the heavens at half-past 11 o'clock, when they went home. At that hour one of the gentlemen pointed it out to his sister. Last night, from the same place, the same persons again saw it rise about 20 minutes before 11 o'clock, and then it first occurred to one of them (our informant) that it might be a comet. He ceased to watch it about midnight, but the watchman observed it up to half-past 1 o'clock this morning. It did not seem so large as on the previous nights, but still far exceeded the most brilliant form in which the planet Jupiter has ever been beheld. As the greatest comet on record is really due about this time, and as the extreme sultriness of the weather would seem to warrant the belief that such a celestial visitor is near at hand, we shall be glad to hear if any other persons have observed the appearance which has thrice risen upon our astonished friends."
1856 August 11 (Mon) London Times, p. 8c.

Ireland (From Our Own Correspondent.) / THE COMET.
Next to the great sea serpent, which did not exhibit its properties in the waters of Barty Bay a few years ago, the comet of 1856 seems to be the all-engrossing subject of speculative curiosity. The people of Limerick have not altogether given it up, and night after night the heavens are searched in the hope of catching a glimpse of the wonderful tail. Meanwhile, the southerners are not going to have a monopoly of the sight. A Sligo paper of yesterday says:--
"On Thursday evening several persons saw what appears to us to have been the comet, the reappearance of which this year has been long foretold by the most eminent savans. It had the appearance of a large oval with a flowing tail. The body was a brilliant red, and the other portions of a pale blue tinge. The head was inclined towards the south-west and from the entire appearance of this strange celestial visitor we are inclined to believe that it is the comet alluded to above."
1856 September 12 (Fri) London Times, p. 6f

Ireland (From Our Own Correspondent) The Comet.
Professor Hind's letter to The Times, announcing the approach of the great comet, has revived the phenomena speculation at this side of the water, and the sight-seekers are keeping a sharp lookout for the advent of the brilliant visitor. A writer in the Cork Examiner says:--
"On Sunday night, about half-past 10 o'clock, a very luminous body appeared in the sky to the south west, apparently larger than the moon. It resembled a ball of fire, casting a brilliant light around. The heavens presented all round a very dingy appearance. At 11 o'clock it rapidly sank below the horizon to the west south west, diminishing as it went, and emitting a bright glare along its wondrous track."
Omaha Times Oct. 27, 1857 p. 2--Earthquake in Mo. & S. Ill.

There was likewise a strong smell of sulphur, and it is said on good authority, that a sulphuric meteoric ball of ~~fire~~ rolled about the streets of the city (Merrimac), leaving wherever it went a most unpleasant smell. (Also, dark during shock; when past, moon shines again.)

Sept. 16 '56 L. Napoleon gives prize for model ornithopter
Sept 30 Donati's comet
Oct. 28pl Balloon escapes from (Adrian) Mich (Ohio), seen at Bliss field, Lanaville, 3 mi hi and apparently size of star; later dimly seen going toward Malden
Nov. 11 Balloon race in Ohio
1858 December 4 (Sat.) London Times, p. 7d.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.
Sir,--Last night at fifteen minutes to 9, it being very dark and raining heavily, I was ascending one of the steep hills of this neighbourhood, when suddenly I was surrounded by a bright and powerful light; which passed me a little quicker than the ordinary pace of a man's walking, leaving it dark as before.
This day I have been informed that the light was seen by the sail in the harbour, coming in from the sea and passing up the valley like low cloud.
Will you or any of your readers be pleased to give an explanation of the above?
I am, Sir, yours truly,
JABEZ BROWN.

Boscawen, Dec. 1.
1860 Wm; 16 (Th) Western Journal of Commerce (Kan. City, Mo) p. 27

Supernatural Light on a Railroad--Singular Phenomenon.
An engineer employed on the Northern Central Railway in Maryland, informs the Baltimore Republican that on Friday night last, while running a freight train over the road, and when about ten miles from Baltimore, he was suddenly startled by seeing directly before him what he supposed to be the front light of another engine coming towards him--not over a hundred yards distant.
He immediately blew the whistle to put down the brakes, and finding that he was about to run upon it, he reversed the engine and did everything in his power to stop, but finding it impossible, he gave the alarm to the fireman and rushed to the rear of the engine for the purpose of jumping off to save his life, when, upon turning again to take another look ahead, he was completely astounded by the discovery that the light had disappeared, but where to or how, no one was able to say. The story is substantiated by all those who were on the train, who state that they all saw the light directly ahead, very distinctly, and rather larger than the usual front lights.
After running a short distance the train was stopped, and those engaged upon it instituted a search for the cause of this mysterious light, but all their efforts were in vain, as there was no light of any kind to be seen in the entire neighborhood. The Republican says it will be remembered that a man was killed at this very spot almost a week since, and it is the supposition of those who saw it, that the light was caused by some supernatural agency, as they are of the opinion that it was entirely too large to have been the reflection from a hand lantern. As we are not inclined to believe in "ghosts," we have some doubts about this, but it was certainly a singular phenomenon of some kind.
1860 August 9 (Th) Western Journal of Commerce (Kans City), p. 2.

A New Mystery--A House that Will Burn Anyhow.
The Taylor (Wis.) Reporter tells the following:
We learn from Mr. Joseph S. Corey, who resides at East Lake, Polk county, Wisconsin, the following facts, which we give our readers, and strange as they may appear, we doubt not their truth in any particular, as they are well authenticated by many witnesses, upon whose veracity as upon Mr. Corey's we place implicit confidence.
On Tuesday, June 26, while Mr. Corey and his two sons were at work in a field near his house, their attention was arrested by smoke, which appeared to rise from his stable. They hurried to the barn as quickly as possible, and discovered a pile of straw nearby on fire. This was immediately extinguished, and as they were returning to the field, the stable caught on fire in different places, which, by considerable exertion, was put out. Before, however, they had left the premises, another fire was discovered underneath the Granary, in a pile of boards. The bottom board was burned nearly through, but the others were not even scorched. After this was put out, Mr. Corey sent one of the boys into the house to ascertain whether all was safe there. He immediately came out and told his father that the house was on fire. Mr. Corey immediately ran up stairs, where he found some clothes that his wife had laid away the day before were burning. They were thrown out of the window, and from that time until late at midnight the fire broke out all over the house. First a paper would catch, then a mosquito bar, then a straw bed, &c, and it was only by the utmost exertions of Mr. Corey, aided by two gentlemen, Mr. Hale and Mr. Treadwell, that the building was saved. The fire continued at intervals until Sunday, 1st inst., and attracted many visitors. We shall not attempt to give any cause for this wonderful freak of nature.
1860 August 30 (Th) Western Journal of Commerce (Kans City), p. 27

Feeding the Sun.
On the first of September last, at eighteen minutes past eleven o'clock A.M., a distinguished astronomer, Mr. Carrington, was engaged had directed his telescope to the sun, and was engaged in observing his spots, when suddenly two intensely luminous bodies burst into view on its surface. They moved side by side through a space of 35,000 miles, first increasing in brightness, then fading away; in five minutes they had vanished. They did not alter the shape of a group of large black spots which lay directly in their paths. Momentary as this remarkable phenomenon was, it was fortunately witnessed and confirmed, as to one of the bright lights, by another observer. Mr. Hogeon, at Highgate, who, by a happy coincidence, had also his telescope directed to the great luminary at the same instant. It may be, therefore, that these two gentlemen have actually witnessed the process of feeding the sun by the fall of meteoric matter. But, however this may be, it is a remarkable circumstance that the observations at Kew show that on the very day, and at the very hour and minute of the unexpected and curious phenomenon, a moderate but marked magnetic disturbance took place; and a storm or great disturbance of the magnetic elements occurred four hours after midnight, extending to the Southern hemisphere. Thus is exhibited a seeming connection between magnetic phenomena and certain actions taking place on the sun's disc—a connection which the observations of Schwabe, compared with the magnetical records of our colonial observatories, had already rendered nearly certain.—London Paper, 1863 September 8 (Tues) New York Herald, p. 38. (card 1)

AERIAL NAVIGATION. / An Extraordinary Invention--The Air Navigated Successfully--The Great Air Ships--Incidents of Their Trial Trips.

We have this week the pleasure to record the success of the most extraordinary invention of the age, if not the most so of any the world ever saw—at least the greatest stride in invention ever made by a single individual.

In October last Dr. Solomon Andrews, of Perth Amboy, N.J., commenced the construction of a war aerostat, for reconnoitering purposes, own his own personal responsibility, not being able, after submitting his plans to the War Department, to make the honorable Secretary of War "see the utility" of a machine which would go over into [] and reconnoitre the force and position of the enemy. His plans showed on the face of them to say one not stupid that the machine could not do otherwise than go ahead in any direction in which the bow was pointed, and that, too, with any amount of power or force which might be desired, and which greenbacks would readily procure. The power required and the propelling apparatus added but little weight to the aerostat, whether of large or small dimensions; consequently it did not increase the dimensions of the aerostat beyond that of balloons of ordinary construction, much less in size than many that are now made. The machine made by Mr. Andrews would carry up three men in addition to all the fixtures and paraphernalia for its forward movement. It contained twenty-six thousand cubic feet of hydrogen gas. It carried him, weighing one hundred and seventy-two pounds, and two hundred and fifty-six pounds of ballast.

Upon his invitation last spring we have sent our reporters at three different times to witness his experiments with his machine, and have watched his progress with great interest.

Its form was that of three segars pointed at both ends, secured together at their longitudinal equators, covered by a net, and supported by one hundred and twenty cords a car sixteen feet below under its centre.

The car was twelve feet long, made of basket work, and was sixteen inches wide at the bottom. The aerostat, or cylinders, were made of varnished linen, like ordinary balloons.

On Friday, the 4th instant, he made his last experiment, and demonstrated to an admiring crowd the possibility of going against the wind and of guiding her in any and every direction with a small rudder having only seventeen square feet of surface. He made no long flight in one straight line, lest his modus operandi aboard be divulged; but by a most ingenious plan demonstrated her capabilities beyond all possibility of doubt, whilst he presented a public knowledge of his method of propelling.

After a few short flights, to satisfy himself and a few friends that all was right, and that she would do all he had contemplated, he set her off in a spiral course upward, she going at a rate of not less than one hundred and twenty miles per hour, and describing circles in the air of more than one and a half miles in circumference. She made twenty revolutions before she entered the upper strata of clouds and was lost to view. She passed through the first strata of dense white clouds, about two miles high, scattering them as she entered in all directions. In her upward flight could be distinctly seen her rapid movement in a contrary direction to the moving clouds, and as she came before the wind passing by them with great celerity. As she was distinctly seen thus to move, both below and above the clouds on the clear blue sky at 5 o'clock P.M., with the sun shining clear upon her, there could be no mistake or optical delusion to consider.

As to her propelling power and motive apparatus, it behoves us not now to speak. It might be considered contraband of war, or affording aid and comfort to the enemy, for with such a machine in the hands of Jeff Davis the armies around Washington would be powerless to preserve the capital.

We think Dr. Andrews deserves more praise for the patriotic ingenuity with which he has preserved his secret, and yet tried his grand experiment in the open air before the public, than even that manifested in the conception and construction of his machine. Of that and its beautiful simplicity we may have occasion to speak hereafter. We have the documents.

1863 September 9 (Wed) New York Herald, p. 4.

Aerial Navigation. / TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD. / Perth Amboy, N.J., Sept 8, 1863.

Will you have the goodness to publish, for the information of scientific men, the fact that the twenty revolutions made by my aerial ship in her spiral circle of half mile diameter were made in the time of fourteen and a half minutes. To me the most astonishing thing was that the material of which she was constructed withstood the resistance of the air at so great a velocity. It was, however, prepared for it, by using brought to a point at the ends of the three cylinders over conical pieces of cork five inches in diameter at their base. Strong cord secured these points to the apex of light strips of wood, extending along the sides of each cylinderoid, and meeting together at that point.

Your reporter has spoken within bounds as to the rate of her speed. The first eleven revolutions were made in seven minutes and a few seconds. The last three revolutions were made in three and a half minutes. A gradual diminution of velocity was a matter of course. The circles did not diminish in diameter, for they appeared larger to the view as she ascended, and they must have increased in size from her slower movement, owing to a diminution of motive power, as well as the rarer air acting upon her rudder. Hence the calculations made by your reporter on the whole number of revolutions, in the whole period of time before she was lost to view in the upper strata of clouds, falls far short of her greatest velocity. It must have been over two hundred miles per hour at the early portion of her spiral movement. Very respectfully, yours, SOLOMON ANDREWS.

1863 August 11 (Tues) London Times, p. 10.

THE AUGUST METEORS. / TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—A large meteor was seen to-night at 8.27 moving very slowly along the northern horizon from west to east at an altitude of about 8 deg. It was at least three times as brilliant as Venus, remaining visible for nearly five minutes, moving slower than any hitherto observed. I should be glad to receive observations made at more favourable stations.

There has been a perfect shower of these strange bodies to-night, and from observations made here we estimate that they fell at least at the rate of 200 per hour. Of course it was absolutely impossible to record all seen, but all appeared to diverge from about one radiant. Many peculiarities were noticed and some of the splendid trains accompanying them viewed under slight optical power.

It appears highly probable that the electrical conditions of the atmosphere was sensibly affected, as auroral clouds, exceedingly luminous, began to spread over the heavens at 11 p.m., when observation ceased. / I remain, Sir, your obedient servant, / THOMAS CRUMPLEN. / Mr. Slater's Observatory, Ruston-road, Aug. 10.

Aug. 13 (Th), p. 9. THE METEORS OF AUGUST 10. (2 reports on the shower). TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—The "large meteor" seen by Mr. Crumplen on Monday evening at 8.27, three times as brilliant as Venus, and moving from west to east, was a fire balloon sent up shortly after 8 o'clock from the Eton and Middlesex Cricketground, Primrose-hill, as a finale to some athletic sports which had taken place during the afternoon. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, St. Johns-wood, Aug. 12. B.C.C.

1866 January 9 (Tues) (London) Times, p. 106.

FALSE LIGHTS ON THE DURHAM COAST.—A good deal of discussion has been going on in shipping circles on the Tyne and Wear during the past month, with regard to the numerous and mysterious wrecks of vessels which have occurred during the winter on the Durham coast, near Whitburn, about equidistant from those two important commercial ports. From whatever cause, there can be no doubt that the majority of vessels that have been stranded have been allured ashore by a light or lights resembling the flashing light upon Tynemouth Point at the mouth of the Tyne. It was bruted abroad a good deal in shipping circles that vessels had been decoyed upon the rocks by false lights; and the shipmasters whose vessels had been stranded, in accounting for the loss of their vessels, were all most positive that lights had been exhibited, and that they had been allured ashore by them. The subject was submitted to the London Trinity-house, and an inquiry was made by Admiral Collinson at Sunderland about a fortnight ago, and from the evidence of various persons no doubt was left on the minds of most persons that false lights had been exhibited, and that vessels had been led ashore thereby. But as it was left in doubt whether the exhibition of those lights was wilful or accidental, the question was in a sense left an open one. Within, however, the last two or three days it has again been brought under the notice of the Tyne Pilotage Commission. Mr. Lyall, the clerk, said that the Nautical Committee of the Commissioners had examined some of their pilots with regard to the lights said to have been exhibited at Whitburn. Benjamin Peel stated to them that he had seen a light exhibited at Whitburn. The light was occasionally seen as a bright intermitting or revolving light. The light, to the best of his judgment, was about the village of Whitburn. Thomas Tynemouth (?) said he saw a bright light to the north of Souter Point, on the night of the 22d of December. It bore W.S.W., and appeared to be a revolving light. It is a rocky desolate shore. There are no dwellings in the neighbourhood, and the light seemed to be considerably elevated above the land. John Skee Blair, a pilot's apprentice, gave similar testimony. The Clerk to the Commissioners suggested that the Board of Trade should be asked to offer a reward for the discovery of the persons exhibiting this light. The Nautical Committee was requested to continue its investigations, and report to the next meeting of Board. "There is a strong feeling in the north that the Board of Trade should make a searching inquiry into the causes of the appearance of these mysterious lights, as much for the character of the fishermen as in the interests of the navigation of the North Sea; for if these lights have been exhibited accidentally a proper light should be put up at once on Souter Point about which there could be no mistake. If the lights have been wilfully shown to allure vessels on a shore, this is a crime that has heretofore been totally unknown upon the north-east coast, and people can hardly believe it."

1866 January 18 (Th) Daily Telegraph, p. 3.

THE WHITBURN LIGHTS.—Admiral Collinson, before whom an investigation was recently conducted into a charge that false lights had been shown by wreckers among the fishermen at Whitburn, on the Durham coast, has written a letter vindicating the Whitburn fishermen from such an imputation. The gallant admiral, after referring specially to the service rendered by some of these men on Saturday morning last, when attempting to rescue the crew of a Belgian ship when the lifeboat had been capsized and washed ashore, says: "The gallant conduct of the Whitburn fishermen is the best denial of the calumny brought against them, and Englishmen will never credit that men who risk their lives in saving the shipwrecked sailor can be guilty of the base act of decoying him to his destruction. So far as I can see, not one particle of evidence has been brought forward which can fix the stigma of exhibiting false lights on the fishermen, and so far as the evidence of the two masters of the shipwrecked vessels is concerned, it appears to me that their loss was occasioned by an error in judgment, and not by the exhibition of any light. I sincerely regret that another wreck has taken place on this ill-fated spot: it will prove to the world that the Whitburn fishermen are ever ready, as they ever have been, to succour those in distress, and their noble conduct on the morning of the 13th will be long remembered by their countrymen."

1866 December 4 (Tues) London Times, p. 5c

THE WHITBURN LIGHTS.—The ship Margaret and Jane, supposed on Saturday to have gone ashore on the Northumberland coast on Friday night, it is ascertained was wrecked that night on the Durham coast upon Whitburn Steel. It will be remembered that great controversy went on last winter among seafaring men through the number of vessels that went ashore at Whitburn, by mistaking lights there for Tynemouth, and some people were wicked enough to impute to the fishermen that they exhibited false lights, with the object of decoying vessels ashore; but, after a most careful investigation, those charges were proved to be utterly false. This winter the same thing, however, is likely to occur again, that is to say, masters of vessels are again beginning to mistake a light which must very much resemble Tynemouth light, as it appears to revolve, and ran their ships ashore on the rocks at Whitburn while believing that they are being guided into the Tyne by Tynemouth light. The master of the Margaret and Jane reports to the South Shields Insurance Clubs that on approaching the Tyne on Friday night in the dark he saw a light, which he took to be Tynemouth light; that he called his officers and men together, and they agreed with him that it was so; and, more, that he had a steamboat alongside of him, and that the master of the boat also said that the light was Tynemouth, and that in following the ship the steamboat was nearly lost also. The light led the ship direct upon the rocks, and if the Whitburn lifeboat crew had not been prompt in taking the crew of the ship off they would all have been drowned, as the vessel broke up half an hour after they were rescued. Another vessel, a bark belonging to Sunderland, ran ashore at Whitburn on Saturday night, it is thought, from the same cause as the Margaret and Jane; but details have not yet reached Shields. The London Trinity-house intend to place a light at Souter Point so strong that no vessel can mistake it. But in the meantime it appears to be incumbent on the local authorities to ascertain where the light is exhibited which is doing this terrible mischief. It is thought that it is accidentally shown from the window of some house in the village.

1866 December 31 (Mon) London Times, p. 4f

THE LIGHTS AT WHITBURN.—An inquiry was opened on Friday in the South Shields Police-court, and extended over Saturday, into the circumstances attending the loss of the bark Margaret and Jane, of that town. The Mayor and Alderman Glover were on the bench, and the assessors of the Board of Trade were Captain Harris and Captain Meight. Mr. Hamel conducted the case for the Board of Trade. The Margaret and Jane, it will be remembered, went ashore on the Durham coast on the 30th of November, in consequence, it was alleged, of mistaking a light at Whitburn for Tynemouth Castle light, and in a very short time she went to pieces. The vessel was bound from Alleante [?] to the Tyne, laden with esparto grass, and was in command of Mr. William Shields at the time she was lost. She was short-handed, having lost one man by cholera at Genoa, and the mate and three of the crew had been detained in Spain, in consequence of some street disturbance. On Friday, the 30th of November, by an observation made by the captain, they were 21 miles to the southward of the Tyne. The wind was then from the south-west, and at about 4 p.m. land was seen on the port side, distant six or seven miles. The vessel was steering N. by W.; but on this point there was a difference of opinion. Between 5 and 6 o'clock a light was seen by some of the men who were aloft, which seemed to be some two points on the port bow. The vessel's course was then N. by W., and a cast of the lead having been taken at the same time gave a depth of 15(?) fathoms. The light that was seen was taken for a revolving light, and when the captain heard of it he took the bearings and came to the conclusion that it was Tynemouth. He put his vessel about to wait for the tide, and the water turning suddenly smooth then rough the captain put his helm hard aport to hold off the shore, when the vessel almost immediately ran among the breakers and struck. A steamboat was near at the time that the vessel struck. The boatswain and most of the hands of the bark were examined, and the purport of their evidence was that they saw a revolving light which they mistook for Tynemouth light, and that it led them ashore. It appeared to lie a good distance from the ship, about a couple of miles, and well up the cliffs, and higher up than the ship's masts, the position that they were in. Alexander Bertram, the master of the steamboat Helen, which was alongside the Margaret and Jane just before she struck, gave evidence that they saw the flash light once, and thought it was upon Souter; and he said that he and other steamboat men had seen similar lights frequently there when they came in from the sea, and in making the land, the light looked very like that of Tynemouth. He had no idea what the light was. He had seen it since the ship was lost. This witness said that he saw the vessel standing into danger, but that it was no business of his, and he gave the master no warning. Captain Harris remarked that the conduct of the witness was almost as bad as exhibiting false lights. Witness said, though he did not warn the master of his danger, he offered the services of his boat to try to get them off the rocks, but was not engaged. Andrew Harrison, who had been 29 years a pilot on the district, said he had seen lights at Whitburn the same as might be seen from any town or village on the coast, but none that possibly could be mistaken for Tynemouth light. Last winter he saw a flashing reflection inside the Souter, supposed at the time it was from blast furnaces. He had, however, when two or three miles south of Souter Point and a little inside, seen Tynemouth light over the headland. He did not believe that the Whitburn people had the skill or wickedness to go on the headlands and by false lights allure vessels on the Steel. Sir Hedworth Willalson, M.P., said that he had gone out at night, and had tried to see if any light about Whitburn could be mistaken for Tynemouth light, but had failed to do so. Robert Blair, a sea pilot and a member of Tyne Pilotage Board, agreed with Harrison's evidence. He never saw a light about Whitburn which could be mistaken for Tynemouth light, but he would deceive a seaman. The Pilotage Board had made an inquiry and heard from pilots that they had seen lights which might deceive a stranger, but not an experienced pilot or a man accustomed to Tynemouth light. The reflection of Tynemouth light could be seen over the end of Souter. Whitburn Steel is about a mile inside the point. If the wind is from the S.W. and its light, so that it cannot drive the smoke from Sunderland clear away, it all lodges from Souter down to Souter Point, so that a person cannot see the land until he is actually ashore. The inquiry is going on.

1866 November 20 (Tues) Sydney Morning Herald, p.

To the Editor of the Herald.
Sir,—The subject of meteoric visitations past, present, and future, being at present invested with more than the usual amount of interest induces me to mention, thus publicly, the circumstances of my attention having been arrested early one morning in November, 1862, by a very peculiar rushing noise, which increased rapidly in volume without my discovering the cause until looking immediately overhead I saw distinctly a large meteor travelling with amazing rapidity in a south easterly direction. Its apparent size was that of a large cask of a dark colour, the surface irregular, and from the variations discovered in the angularities I was led to conjecture it was revolving on its axis. I may add that the morning was very calm, and the atmosphere beautifully clear. The sun was just about to rise.

O.E. MIDDLETON. / Invallewah, near Morpeth, November 15th.

1867 January 2 (Wed) London Times, p. 11c.

A METEOR. / TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.
Sir,—On the evening of the 6th of November, having gone into my balcony as usual to take my coffee, I saw what at first I took to be a lamp hung from the tower of the cathedral which is nearly opposite this Consulate. My flagstaff was in a line with the light from where I sat, and while I was wondering why a lantern should be so placed the light passed the staff. Thus I knew it must be in motion, but so fixed was my first impression that I thought it had merely swung with the wind. It, however, floated away steadily in a north-west by north direction till the roofs of intervening houses hid it from my view. It was of the magnitude, colour, and brilliancy of a ship's red light as seen at a distance of 200 yards.

I immediately ran out to an open space beyond the walls, where I could get a good view of the heavens, but no trace of the luminous body was visible. The sky was cloudy and the night dark. The motion of this (to me) extraordinary object resembled that of those fireworks which are sometimes exploded from rockets, and float in the air till they are consumed, only it was of far greater size and brilliancy. It threw no rays in any direction, appeared to be descending, and was in my sight, from first to last, about three minutes.

Nothing in the nature of an asteroid has been reported to have fallen in the neighbourhood. I have seen falling stars of great splendour in the East, and also on this coast, but nothing that in any way resembles this "light." I may add that it was seen by a friend who was in my house at the time, and who agrees in this description of it. It could not have any artificial origin.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
A. DE G. DE FONBLANQUE
British Consulate Carthagena, U.S. Colombia, Dec. 2.

1873 June 24 (Tues) Fort Scott (Kans) Monitor, p. 4.

Signs and Wonders.
A Serpent in the Clouds.
A few days ago a Mr. Hardin, residing some 5 or 6 miles east of this place, saw something resembling an enormous serpent floating in a cloud that was passing over his farm. Several parties of men and boys, at work in the fields, observed the same thing, and were seriously frightened. It seemed to be as large and long as a telegraph pole, was of a yellow striped color, and seemed to float along without any effort. They could see it coil itself up, turn over, and thrust forward its huge head as if striking at something, displaying the maneuvers of a genuine snake. The cloud and serpent moved in an easterly direction, and were seen by persons a few miles this side of Honey Grove. The question is, what is it, and where did it come from?—Bonham (Texas) Enterprise.

1873 June 27 (Fri) Fort Scott (Kans.) Monitor (daily), p. 4.

Singular Phenomenon. / The Sun Encircled by a Serpent.

A strange and remarkable phenomenon was observed yesterday at sunrise yesterday morning. The sky was clear and the sun rose entirely unobscured. When the disc of the sun was about halfway above the horizon, the form of a huge serpent, apparently perfect in form, was plainly seen encircling it and was visible for some moments. We have this statement from two reliable parties who witnessed the phenomenon, and are willing, if necessary, to make affidavit of their assertions. We have too great respect for the sun to rise before it, and therefore are innocent of the authorship of this "sea serpent" of the sun; but we have all confidence in the credibility of our witnesses. What fearful portent is indicated in this wonderful and ominous phenomenon? We shall join a Sunday school and await the solution.

1877 October 5 (Fri) Times (London), p. 10b.

MYSTERIOUS LIGHTS.—From time to time the West Coast of Wales seems to have been the scene of mysterious lights. In the fifteenth century, and again on a larger scale in the sixteenth, considerable alarm was created by fires that "rose out of the sea." Writing in January, 1694, the rector of Dolgelly stated that sixteen ricks of hay and two barns had been burnt by "a kindled exhalation which was then seen to come from the sea." Passing over other alleged appearances in March, 1875, a letter by the late Mr. Picton Jones appeared in "Eye-gones," p. 148 [1987], giving an account of curious lights which he had witnessed at Pwllheli, and now we have a statement from Towny that within the last few weeks "lights of various colours have frequently been seen moving over the estuary of the Dywynn river and out at sea. They are generally in a northern direction, but sometimes they hug the shore, and move at a high velocity for miles towards Aberdovey, and suddenly disappear." Can any authorities upon natural phenomena furnish further information on the subject?—Osuestry Advertiser.

1878 July 8 (Mon) New York Times, p. 2

What a West Virginia Farmer Saw.

A telegram from Parkersburg, West Virginia, to the Cincinnati Commercial contains this story: "An optical illusion or mirage was seen by three or four farmers a few miles from this city a few days since, the appearance of which no one is able philosophically to account for. The facts are these: A gentleman, while plowing in the field with several others, about 7 p.m., happened to glance toward the sky, which was cloudless, and saw, apparently about half a mile off in a westerly direction, an opaque substance, resembling a white horse, with head, neck, limbs and tail clearly defined, swimming, moving its head from side to side, always ascending at an angle of about 45 degrees. He rubbed his eyes to convince himself that he was not dreaming, and looked again; but there it still was, still apparently swimming and ascending in the ether. He called to the men, about 100 yards off, and told them to look up, and tell him what they saw. They declared they saw a white horse swimming in the sky, and were badly frightened. Our informant, neither superstitious or nervous, sat down and watched the phantasm, (if we may so call it) until it disappeared in space, always going in the same direction, and moving in the same manner. No one can account for the mirage, or illusion, except upon the uneven state of the atmosphere. Illusions of a different appearance have been seen at different times, in the same vicinity, frightening the superstitious, and laughed at by the skeptical."

1880 March 29 (Mon) Santa Fe Weekly New Mexican, p. 3. (card 1)

GALISTEO'S APPARITION. / Mysterious Aerial Phantom Appears at the Junction. / Balloon Becomes Mysteriously Visible Overhead, and After a Short Stay Departs for the East. From Asia Probably.

Galisteo Junction, N. Mex., — train from Santa Fe, and the operator at that point and two or three friends were taking a short walk before retiring for the night, they were suddenly startled by voices suddenly coming from the sky, but they supposed it was [from someone] on the mountain [to the east] town

Loud shouts in a language entirely unknown to the party were constantly given, [apparently offered] to attract attention.

The construction of the [balloon was] entirely different to anything [of the kind] ever seen by any of the party, being in the shape of a fish and at [one] time came so low that [faint] characters on one side of the car, which appeared to be very elegant, were plainly seen. The air machine appeared to be entirely under the control of the occupants and appeared to be guided by a large fanlike apparatus.

The party seemed to be enjoying themselves, as laughter and [occasional strains] of music were heard.

A few articles were dropped from the car as the balloon passed over the junction, but owing to the [light] the only thing which was found was a magnificent flower with a slip of exceedingly fine silk-like paper on which were some characters strongly resembling those on Japanese tea chests. The [article] which from its weight [seemed] when thrown from the car seemed to be be made for [] in the morning.

The balloon was monstrous in size and the car, as near as can be judged, carried eight or ten persons. Another peculiar and moved off very rapidly to the east.

Later—The cup [that had fallen] last night was found this morning. It is of a very peculiar workmanship, entirely different to anything [made] in this country. Both flower and cup of the operator of the Junction by any one who desires to see them.

Galisteo Junction, March 27 (3 p.m.)—This evening a collector of [curiosities] passed through this place and on being shown the magnificent flower and cup dropped from the balloon which passed over this place last night, offered such a sum of money for them that [it could not be refused] and he became the possessor of them. He gives it as his opinion that the balloon must have come from Asia, and thinks 1880 April 5 (Mon) Santa Fe Weekly New Mexican, p. 4.

Solved at Last. / The Explanation of the Balloon Mystery Which Has Been Perplexing Galisteo. / The Aerial Monster, The First of a Regular Line of Air-Ships from China to America. / Special to the New Mexican.

Baugh's Bluff, March 29.

The collector of curiosities who purchased the articles thrown from the balloon which passed over Galisteo Junction Friday night, is here examining and excavating for ancient curiosities at the old Pecos church and vicinity. Last night a party of tourists, having heard of the ancient old church, stopped off here to visit it and the old Pecos Pueblo. One of the party is a wealthy young Chinaman who arrived in San Francisco a few weeks ago. The articles were examined by the party and great surprise expressed. The attention of the young Celestial was called to the writing attached to the flower, who as soon as he had looked at it manifested great delight and excitement, gasping about and uttering delighted exclamations in his own language. On being urged to give some explanation he exclaimed [?] "Hachee goodee we girlee in balloonee [] to makee we ailee flow Pekinee. Muchee glolee it is accomplishee." and other such expressions, at the same time rapturously kissing the flower. As soon as his excitement had calmed down the following facts were gathered, as near as could be from his broken English.

For some time past, great interest has been [found] in China on the subject of aerial navigation. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended in experiments. That just before he left Pekin strong hopes were expressed that victory had at last crowned these efforts and that if such was the case, and he had now no doubt of it, last Friday night's balloon was but the first of a regular line of communication to be established between the Celestial Empire and America. On being asked for some explanation of his delight on reading the communication attached to the flower, he stated that he was engaged to be married to a young lady of a very wealthy family, who had a sister living in New York, and that knowing he was traveling in this portion of the country she had written the message with her own fair hand and had dropped it from the car Friday night and evidently with the hope that it might reach her lover's hands and curiously enough her hopes were realized. The gentleman left on last night's train for New York carrying the love token with him, and confidently expects to find his love in New York where they will be married.

July 29, 1880 Louisville Courier-Journal (Thurs morn) p. 4 (card 1)

More Honeymooning Between the Talented Reporters and That Well-Preserved Old Demo, Madame Rumor.

A Flying Machine Which Two Louisvillians Saw Passing Over the City. / .../With Other Edifying Parcels of News.

A Flying Machine.

That Two Louisvillians Saw Last Evening.

Between 6 and 7 o'clock last evening while Messrs. C. A. Youngman and Dan Flemer were standing at a side window of Haddart's drug store, at Second and Chestnut streets, looking skyward, they discovered an object high up in the air apparently immediately above the Ohio river bridge, which they at first thought was the wreck of a toy balloon. As it got nearer they observed that it had the appearance of a man surrounded by machinery, which he seemed to be working with his feet and hands. He worked his feet as though he was running a treadle, and his arms seemed to be swinging to and fro above his head, though the latter movement sometimes appeared to be executed with wings or fans. The gazers became considerably worked up by the apparition, and inspected it very closely. They could see the delicate outlines of machinery, but the object was too high up to make out the exact construction. At times it would seem to be descending, and then the man appeared to exert himself considerably, and ran the machine faster, when it would ascend again and assume a horizontal position. It did not travel as fast as a paper balloon, and its course seemed to be entirely under the control of the aeronaut. At first it was traveling in a southeasterly direction but when it reached a point just over the city, when it tacked to the southwest, in which direction it was going when it passed out of sight in the twilight of the evening. The gentlemen who saw it are confident that it was a man navigating the air on a flying-machine. His movements were regular, and the machine was under the most perfect control. If he belonged to this mundane sphere he should have dropped his card as he passed over, to enlighten those who saw him, and that his friends, if he has any, might be informed of his whereabouts.

The Flying Machine.

Another Witness of Reliability to the Courier-Journal's Aerial Navigator Who has Solved the Problem.

Dr. D. F. Dempsey, of Madisonville, Ky., has written the following to the Madisonville Times concerning the flying machine which was observed passing over this city two weeks ago:

"I interviewed Mr. Wells, the proprietor of the marble shop, North Main street, and Mr. Royster, a workman in said shop, in regard to what he and his family saw hop over Madisonville last Wednesday, but was not positive as to the day. Mr. Wells stated that Mr. Royster told him about it the day that an account of a flying machine over Louisville was published in the Courier-Journal. I asked them both, particularly Mr. Wells, was it before we received the Courier-Journal. This reply was emphatic, that it was in the morning of the day we received said Courier-Journal. Mr. Royster stated this the evening before, which would be Wednesday, between sundown and dark, his son Johnnie, six or seven years old, called his attention to something he saw hopping over Madisonville. He, Mr. Royster, and his wife and other children went out and looked at it. They live in southeastern Madisonville, about half mile from the railroad depot. He said there seemed to be a ball at each end of the thing, and it looked as if it was about over the depot. It sometimes appeared in a circular form and changed to an oval. It passed out of sight going, as well as could be determined, directly south. Everybody knows Mr. Wells and will believe that what he said in regard to the time Mr. Royster told him these things is strictly true. The time may not be far away, when instead of straddling a horse or getting into a buggy or rail car, we will ride on the sky nor envy Elijah his seat. Holes travel underground by cutting their way; men tunnel mountains and go through; fishes swim in the waters, and so do men; birds fly in the air, and so will we. No one will suppose that the gentleman who flew over Louisville and Madisonville was Gabriel, for he did not toot his horn; but someone suggests that the gentleman in the aerial chariot was the devil himself sent down by the Republicans to interfere with the South in behalf of their sinking ship. This latter, however, in the way of pleasantry. The other just above is a serious matter."

1880 September 1 (Wed) New York Herald, p. 5.

(card 1)

MIRACULOUS APPARITIONS IN LIMERICK / [From the Munster News.]

Every citizen is familiar with the beautiful group of ecclesiastical buildings in our western suburbs, and the visitor to Limerick who has not seen them is a loser if he has taste for chaste architectural designs. The group comprises the church, convent and orphanage of Mount St. Vincent, being amongst the many grand religious and educational works which have been completed, besides those in progress, during the prelacy of the present Lord Bishop. We are not now going into detail of their external perfection, nor of their almost unsurpassed internal completeness and economy, and will only observe they are excelled by very few charitable institutions of the class in Ireland. Columns might be written on their beauty and the elegance of every arrangement, but much more might be penned in relating the inestimable works of religious charity and education which the Sisters of Mercy are effecting outside and hourly performing within the walls. It is delightful to see the crowds of children for whom they so unceasingly care gathered in hundreds on the grounds, or to behold those little orphans congregated in their schools, or busily engaged in their work in the rooms, or actively performing their suitable tasks in the laundries, the kitchen or elsewhere, rosy with health and radiant with happiness and intelligence. Nor are we now going to enumerate all that is done for the safety of their tender charges by the nuns, even while they are secure within their convent refuge, or after they have left it and are sent abroad into the world to provide for themselves. Our notice will be limited to some account of the awe-inspiring apparitions which have been seen within the convent grounds during the past few days, and that have caused intense excitement throughout the city. Within the past twelve months a grand wing was added to the northern side of the buildings, from designs by Mr. W.E. Corbett, C.E., in which are schoolrooms, dormitories and other apartments. On the western side of the building is a large and finely conceived figure of the Blessed Virgin, carved in Caen stone, and underneath is a window which gives light to an oratory of Our Blessed Lady situate in that part of the convent. The statue is thirty feet from the earth; and in front of it the playground and an open field extend to the boundary wall, the land thus inclosed being quite level and including about one acre or more in extent. To the north of the convent gardens is a belt of trees, which skirt the wall five or six hundred yards away, and which inclose the grounds in that direction. We have given these particulars that the facts we are about to relate should be better understood, and to show, too, that what was seen could not be produced by accidental nor by artificial means, such as magic lanterns or suchlike apparatus. It will be remembered that on Sunday, the feast of Our Blessed Lady, though the weather in this locality was magnificently fine, yet the thunder pealed with crashing sound, and the lightning flashed with startling vividness. On the evening of that day the orphans left the convent to play in the grounds in front of the new buildings, and they were told not to be alarmed by the thunder but to pray to Our Lady of Succor should they be so frightened. With the whole faith of Our Lady's protection with which the little ones, like their elders, are possessed, they passed into the grounds and proceeded to their innocent amusements in the usual manner. Soon after the thunder rolled along the sky, and the children at once devoutly offered up their prayers for safety to the Blessed Virgin. Then they raised their voices and sang the touching hymn, "Look down, O Mother Mary," and while the beautiful music of their young fresh voices was ascending, one of the children suddenly called out, "Oh, look there!" and instantly the eyes of two hundred others, her companions, were turned toward the belt of trees to the north of the convent, and in the air above them the figure of the Blessed Virgin was beheld by all, attired in a white robe, with a blue sash around her waist. The Infant Saviour was borne on her right arm, and a rosary depended from her left. She seemed to rest on a white cloud upheld by two angels, who carried in their disengaged hands branches of some description, covered with foliage. The children were spellbound, and involuntarily offered prayers to the Blessed Virgin. After they had gazed on the vision for about ten minutes some of them ran to the convent to acquaint the nuns, but before the good ladies had arrived at the spot the Divine apparition had gone, the Virgin disappearing in the heavens. The children were found in a pale, terrified, trembling state, but all tallied in their account of what was seen, even to the description of the rosary, which they stated was large and white, and the beads of which were far asunder from each other. More startling still was it to find that children, distant from them in another part of the premises, had also seen the vision. There was no wavering and no contradictions among them. Several were from thirteen to fourteen years old of age, and it was impossible not to be convinced of their truthfulness. So much for Sunday evening; but on Monday evening the manifestation was still more decisive. While the children were again at play one of their number called out to look at the Blessed Virgin and instantly almost fainted. All eyes were directed toward the statue on the top of the building, and above it in the air the children saw the Immaculate Mother, vested altogether in white, her hands raised as if in the attitude of invoking or expressing a blessing or prayer, her eyes cast down and a silvery light surrounding the beatific figure. Some of the children again hastened to the convent to communicate what they saw, and one of the nuns, who arrived first on the spot, beheld the Virgin also. The children were unanimous in their descriptions of the strange apparition, and the little one who first saw the vision was absolutely rigid from the astonishment. The other members of the holy community did not see the miraculous spectacle, but they saw, as the sun set, globes of light—some white, some of beautiful azure, some of brilliant red and other hues, come floating through the air from the direction of the orb setting in the west, over and around the convent, and, in some cases, apparently passing through the windows. Last night the vision of Our Blessed Lady was not seen, but the events at the convent were sufficiently wonderful to justify further record. We have already stated that the reports throughout the city as to heavenly visions led to great excitement, and last evening numbers of men and others clambered on the walls facing the new buildings, while hundreds made their way into the field by the same route and lay anxiously watching in the direction of the statue. The form of the Blessed Virgin was not beheld, but a porter in the institution while passing in front of the new building saw a flood of light rise from the direction of the entrance under the oratory, and, ascending, envelop the statue in brilliant radiance. He ran toward the men lying in the field to ask them if they had seen it, when he found them gazing toward the building, having also witnessed the ascent of the light. Impressed ourselves by the reports brought to us, we have gathered the foregoing from various sources, including several of the eye witnesses, and we feel convinced of the truthfulness of those to whom we have spoken.

1880 September 3 (Fri) New York Times, p.4 (last col.)

As yet no pilgrimages have been made to Limerick, but the wonders lately seen there are both as strange and as well attested as any other ancient or modern miracle. Early in the evening of Sunday, the Feast of Our Blessed Lady, some two hundred inmates of the Orphanage of Mount St. Vincent left the convent to play in the grounds in front of the buildings. The weather was very pleasant, but occasionally there were both thunder and lightning, which the children were told would not hurt them if they prayed for protection to Our Lady of Succor. Accordingly they did so when the thunder came, and upon one of their number crying, "Oh, look there!" and pointing to a group of trees, the whole number saw in the air above them the figure of the Blessed Virgin. She seemed to rest on a cloud, supported by angels, who carried in their disengaged hands branches of some sort covered with foliage. She was robed in white, gathered at the waist with a blue sash; the infant Saviour was borne on her right arm, and a rosary hung from her left. So vivid was the image that the children, some of whom were well grown, were even able to declare that the beads of the rosary were white, and were strung at some distance from each other. That evening the apparition vanished before the children were able to summon the Sisters of the convent, but the next evening it came again. This time she was robed wholly in white, and was surrounded with silvery light, and one of the nuns also saw the strange vision. Various other members of the community, who did not see her, saw sights scarcely less strange. At sunset, it is declared, globes of light of brilliant hues came floating through the air, and some of them passed through the windows. And on another occasion, which is as late as the accounts extend, a statue of Our Blessed Lady was enveloped in a flood of light. As the statue is said to be inaccessibly situated on a wall 30 feet from the ground, and to front on an area of about one acre, which is so open that concealment of any apparatus is impossible, no explanation can readily be suggested, and the strange occurrence is best left without comment until further advices.

SOMEBODY FLYING AROUND. / A Buglike Apparition in the Air at Gravesend and a Humbug at the Brooklyn City Hall.

A report that a man in a flying-machine would fly from the top of the Brooklyn City Hall at 3 P.M. yesterday drew a crowd of thousands of persons to the neighborhood. A little after 3 William McConnell, a telegraph lineman, went up on the roof of the City Hall to adjust a wire, and being mistaken for the flying man did all he could to keep up the illusion by occasionally waving his arms and kicking at the wide, wide world. It was 5 o'clock before the crowd concluded to go home. Meanwhile the Brooklyn Argus had discovered a flying man at Gravesend and had done him up in this style:

A queer looking object passed over the southerly end of the village yesterday afternoon, about a thousand feet or so up in the air. The time was 5:15 o'clock, and the object was evidently a flying machine operated by a man. It was not at all like a balloon, and not more than one-fourth of the size of an ordinary balloon. It was black and more resembled an immense bug in appearance than anything else. It had four arms, or legs, which were operated by the occupant with a motion very much like that of a turtle when swimming. The operation of the arms had the effect to cause the machine to move somewhat across the current of the wind, so that while the wind was blowing from the southeast the machine was making a westerly course, and looked as if it would pass on the south side of Staten Island or across to Keyport, N.J., provided it did not make land or fall in the water before it reached that point. Sometimes the machine would roll as if it would turn over completely, but it did not. The face of the occupant could be seen looking down from the forepart of the machine and it looked as though he was in the position of a person swimming, with the machine above him and fastened close to his body. Just as he passed the point where the New York and Brighton Beach Railroad passes over the Prospect Park and Coney Island Railroad, a train on the latter road came along and the engineer blew his whistle, to which the flying man responded by flapping his arms vigorously.

More than a month ago a similar story of a flying machine was published in the Louisville Courier-Journal. The queer object was described on the authority of a druggist of that city of good character for veracity. He said he called the attention of several bystanders to it, and they corroborated his account. Reports of the machine were also received from several points in the interior of Kentucky under circumstances that excluded the idea of collusion.

1880 September 12 (Sat) New York Times, p. (card 1)

AN AERIAL MYSTERY (ed.)

One day last week a marvelous apparition was seen near Coney Island. At the height of at least a thousand feet in the air a strange object was in the act of flying toward the New Jersey coast. It was apparently a man with bat's wings and improved frog's legs. The face of the man could be distinctly seen, and it wore a cruel and ~~staring~~ determined expression. The movements made by the object closely resembled those of a frog in the act of swimming with his hind legs and flying with his front legs. Of course, no respectable frog has ever been known to conduct himself in precisely that way; but were a frog to wear bat's wings, and to attempt to swim and fly at the same time, he would correctly imitate the conduct of the Coney Island monster. When we add that this monster waved his wings in answer to the whistle of a locomotive, and was of a deep black color, the alarming nature of the apparition can be imagined. The object was seen by many reputable persons, and they all agree that it was a man engaged in flying toward New Jersey.

About a month ago an object of precisely the same nature was seen in the air over St. Louis by a number of citizens who happened to be sober and are believed to be trustworthy. A little later it was seen by various Kentucky persons as it flew across the State. In no instance has it been known to alight, and no one has seen it at a lower elevation than a thousand feet above the surface of the earth. It is without a doubt the most extraordinary and wonderful object that has ever been seen, and there should be no time lost in ascertaining its precise nature, its habits, and probable mission.

That this aerial apparition is a man fitted with practicable wings there is no reason to doubt. Some one has solved the problem of aerial navigation by inventing wings with which a man can sustain himself in the air and direct his flight to any desired point. Who is this adventurous flyer and what is his object? are questions of immediate and enormous importance. Of course, the first impulse of the unreflecting mind will be to exclaim that the mysterious flyer is an aeronaut who has invented practicable wings, and is secretly experimenting with the before making his invention public. This is directly at variance with the known habits and customs of aeronauts. Had any aeronaut invented a pair of wings he would have advertised, long before his invention was perfected, that he was in possession of a machine wherewith to make an aerial voyage to Europe in twenty-four hours, and that he was prepared to exhibit it for a few weeks to every one who would pay 50 cents to see it. A little later he would have taken up a subscription to pay the expenses of his proposed voyage in the interests of science, and would probably have published a book on the science of aeronautics. Then he would have suddenly disappeared, taking his wings with him, or accidentally burning them, and after the first outburst of indignation on the part of a windled public would have been totally forgotten. This has been the invariable practice of these ingenious aeronauts who have claimed to be the inventors of balloons or other apparatus capable of navigating the air. That the mysterious flying man has not followed this custom makes it perfectly clear that his not a professional aeronaut.

Beyond any question, either the flying man or some Scientific Person at present unknown has invented the bat's wings and frog's legs with which the flying man now sails through the air. Why has not the inventor patented his invention and had himself duly written up by the press? The reason is obvious. The flying man is engaged in some under-taking which he cannot safely proclaim. In other words, he is an exact aerial criminal, a fact which explains the cruelty and determination visible on his countenance, and what can be the nefarious object which this probable wretch has in view? It cannot be simply theft and robbery, for it would manifestly be impossible for him, in his flying costume, to perpetrate burglary or highway robbery, or to pick pockets. It cannot be plumbing, for obvious reasons, neither can it be the sale of books published by subscription only. Yet the flying villain must have an object, and we have a right to assume that only a peculiarly nefarious object could induce a man to fly to New-Jersey or St. Louis in ~~his~~ hot weather and without an umbrella or mosquito net.

It has not escaped notice that of late Mr. Talmage has been wandering in the West in search of entertaining varieties of crime wherewith to embellish his sermons. It is also known that he returned to this City just before the flying man of Coney Island was seen. Now, if there is a man in this country whose arms and legs are fitted to endure the muscular strain inseparable from the act of flying, that man is Mr. Talmage. He has preached for years with those graceful limbs, and must have developed and hardened their muscles to an extent which would fill every other professional acrobat with envy. What is more probable than that Mr. Talmage has equipped himself with wings in order to study interesting types of immorality from the lofty height of a thousand feet? He has flown over St. Louis and Kentucky—precisely the places which might be expected to yield a rich reward to an investigator of crime; and he is now flying to and fro over Coney Island, preparatory to preaching a scathing sermon on the wickedness and indecencies of our bathing resorts. Here we have a natural and probable explanation of the flying man, and it is earnestly to be hoped that no one, with ~~any~~ mistaken zeal for field sports, will attempt to shoot the preacher on the wing with a shot-gun. There is not a shot-gun in existence which will do any good at a distance of a thousand feet.

1880 September 17 (Fri) New York World, p. 4.

FLUTSAM AND JETSAH. /

An extraordinary astronomical phenomenon is reported from Vizingsram. A correspondent writes that on the evening of July 20, about 8:30 o'clock, a luminous comet, which he estimates at some twenty yards in length, traversed the sky from south to north. The time occupied from the disappearance to the reappearance of the body is stated to have been about three-quarters of a minute, during which time "the whole of the village as well as the surrounding locality was set ablaze to an extent which I am unable to describe." Furthermore, "four minutes after the falling of the comet a distant thunder like that of the discharge of artillery was heard for about two minutes." The phenomenon appears to have been visible also at Radhanpur. A correspondent writes from the latter place: "A brilliant shooting star, casting a very bright yellowish light, and with a bright red trail behind, was observed ascending the heavens like a rocket, from the southeast. It shot up to a great height, and was then seen to burst and disappear, leaving several red sparks, which were also lost sight of in their descent. The strangest thing about the phenomenon was its being succeeded by a continuous peal of distant thunder for about two minutes, although it was a very clear moonlit evening, and there were no clouds except some light ones in the south. His Highness the Navab Sahib was holding a durbar, and immediately sent for the only meteorologists available—the (Josbis) or Brahmin astrologers, who were of opinion that the occurrence boded a peaceful and plentiful year and harvest."

1881 December 14 (Wed) Manchester Guardian, p. 8. (card 1)

THE MISSING BALLOON.

Notwithstanding diligent inquiries instituted by the Meteorological Society with regard to the missing balloon, in which Mr. W. Powell, M.P., was carried out to sea on Saturday afternoon, no intelligence had been obtained up to last evening from any of the ports to which telegrams were addressed.

A special meeting of the Balloon Society was held yesterday, at which it was decided that further search should be made for the missing balloon. Mr. Lefevre, the president, having laid before Lord Tenterden his ~~various~~ views and opinions, the Government have at his special request telegraphed to the Governor of Jersey to send out Her Majesty's ship Dasher to make inquiries in the surrounding islands. Lord Tenterden also caused telegrams to be sent to the consuls all round the Norwegian coast to look out for the balloon. The authorities, however, have a difficulty to contend with in the uncertainty of the air currents. With a south-east wind the balloon may have passed over France into the Bay of Biscay, or should the storm prove to be a circular one it is not at all unlikely but that the balloon may be heard of in Norway. In order, however, to get the best opinion on this point the authorities have telegraphed to America to obtain the opinion of the official weather bureau as to the extent and direction of Saturday's depression. It is along the ~~French~~ French coast, however, that the relatives are now pressing for strict search, as, if the worst apprehensions should be realized, it is quite likely that the balloon and car may be washed ashore on that coast.

Captain Cosens reports that during Saturday night the wind in the Channel veered to the eastward, and upon this fact is based a supposition that the balloon may have been carried clear of France into the Bay of Biscay. Those who are most conversant with the facts and scientific aspect of the case regard it as altogether improbable that Mr. Powell can have escaped. The only vestige of hope now entertained is that the Saladin possibly fell near the course of some outward-bound vessel in the Channel, and that Mr. Powell was rescued in that way. The search from Bridport was resumed yesterday, the steamer Comodore starting with corrected bearings, which were given to the captain by flags being placed on shore in the line of route traversed by the balloon, so that he might follow the track as nearly as possible. He also took extra grappling irons and an experienced pilot, and it was intended to drag the Channel to a distance of twenty miles from the shore. The Jersey and Guernsey mail steamers have not yet brought any information bearing on the subject, but the crews have been advised to keep a strict lookout in their passages across Channel. It is still asserted by one witness that the balloon pitched into the sea about five miles from shore, but this is an hypothesis not generally entertained. Captain Tempier, who left London for Bridport yesterday morning, intends searching with a steamer right along the French coast, but personally he entertains little hope of his unfortunate fellow voyager's safety. Mr. Powell, a brother of the unfortunate gentleman, is expected at Bridport.

A Weymouth correspondent telegraphs that from inquiries made along the coast by Mr. Fowler, manager of the Company's tug engaged in the search, it seems clear that the balloon when relieved of the six weight of two of the aeronauts shot up in the air, and that afterwards, Mr. Powell having prematurely opened the gas valve, it descended into the sea. An eye witness states that it never rose again. According to the corrected bearings taken yesterday morning by Mr. Fowler, the course taken by the balloon would have landed it at Brittany on Monday. A telegraph from Weymouth last night states that Mr. Fowler reports that he has found nothing, and the Commodore is coming back to Weymouth; but another steam tug will be immediately procured to search the coast round the channel islands, commencing at Guernsey to-day. Mr. Fowler is of opinion that the balloon struck the water soon after going out to sea.

It may be stated that the Saladin is a brown balloon, and the word "Saladin" appears prominently in white letters on the centre. It has been ascertained that the Saladin carried a telescope, a speaking trumpet, and a lamp amongst other things, which would prove useful in case the balloon floated. With three passengers the Saladin usually carried about five hundred-weight of ballast, and its total lifting power was about 1,500 lbs. In its past career this balloon had had many adventures, and on one occasion came in contact with a gasometer at Woolwich, and jerked out Captain Lee, R.E. The great size and unwieldiness of the Saladin have rendered it peculiarly liable to accidents.

The following police notice has been sent by the Scotland Yard authorities to all the ports in the United Kingdom:—"Re balloon carried southward on Saturday containing Mr. Powell, M.P.—Please notify at once all outgoing vessels, pilots, shipmasters, and others, that £50 reward will be paid by the family for information leading to the recapture, £100 to the first finder of the balloon, and £200 for the recovery of the body, or amply compensation for assistance rendered to Mr. Powell if still alive."

A telegram from Hartlepool last night says:—"This morning a large balloon was seen on a northerly course over Hartlepool from the sea. It was only observed for a few moments through the fog, and was at a considerable altitude. It was travelling very rapidly, and appeared to be under no control. If it continued on the same course it would travel overland, and if under control it might come down on land."

Captain Tempier, who arrived in Bridport yesterday afternoon, believes that the balloon never left the Channel, and that it would travel nine miles before dropping.

1881 December 15 (Fri) Manchester Guardian, p. 5. (card 1)

THE MISSING BALLOON.

Up to last evening no information had been received at the Admiralty or Foreign Office respecting the missing balloon Saladin either from abroad or any place around the coast. The opinion, strengthened by evidence which is now regarded as almost conclusive, gains ground that Mr. Powell, making up his mind to drop as near the shore as possible in the hope that the balloon would float and that he should speedily be rescued, pulled the valve rope but allowed so much gas to escape that the balloon came down with such force that it was swallowed up, and that both it and the unfortunate voyager are at the bottom of the sea. In West Bay Captain Tempier has been making inquiries. Dragging operations have been commenced, but all operations had to be suspended on account of the very heavy state of the sea. The Captain now states that he is reluctantly compelled to subscribe to the opinion that the balloon had descended into the sea, instead of, as he first thought, ascending into the air and crossing the Channel. In consequence of this belief it has been decided to direct more particular attention to the part of the coast where the balloon went over the cliff, and the fishermen along the shore have been advised of the reward offered for Mr. Powell either dead or alive, while placards have been extensively posted. Men have been engaged to keep a constant watch along the shore in the neighbourhood of Bridport, with instructions to observe anything that may come to the surface of the water. Meanwhile, although more particular search is going on along the Channel Islands coast, no effort is being relaxed. In the Channel Islands the most active measures have been taken; and Major General Nicholson, in response to instructions from the Admiralty, has sent out H.M.S. Dasher to search the coast, and ordered a strict lookout to be kept all along the coast. Although rumours that the hon. gentleman had reached Brittany proved to be altogether unfounded, the family have instructed Captain Cosens to proceed to Guernsey and hire the steamer Rescué, in which he is to search the coast of Brittany. He will telegraph from each town the result of his expedition.

On Tuesday evening a communication was addressed to Captain Tempier inviting his attendance at a meeting of the Meteorological Council held yesterday afternoon, but the gallant officer was not present, owing probably to the letter not having reached him in time. Another letter was forwarded last evening to Captain Tempier, requesting him, if possible, to furnish the Council with more detailed particulars with reference to the ascent of the Saladin.

Nothing more has been heard of the balloon which was reported to have been seen coming from the sea over Hartlepool on Tuesday, but as its appearance on the north-east coast would be consistent with the previously-expressed theory that the Saladin had gone in the direction of Norway, telegrams were despatched to several towns in the North of England, but with no result. The fog was heavy at the time, and if the Saladin did cross at this part it would probably pass over and out into the North Atlantic.

A Jersey correspondent telegraphs that the Channel Islands mail steamers, arrived at Jersey yesterday, report not having seen or heard anything of Mr. Powell or the missing balloon. The Lieutenant-Governor gave orders yesterday morning for the steam tug Duke to go out and make a tour of the island in search of the balloon and its occupant, but the boat being small and the sea choppy it was deemed advisable not to send her out. In the meantime a strict look-out is kept on all points of the island.

A Weymouth correspondent reports that a telegram has been received from Captain Cosens, who yesterday engaged a tug and examined the whole of the coast of the Island of Sark, but with what results is not yet known.

A telegram received from Guernsey states that H.M.S. Dasher and the steam tug Rescué have started in the direction indicated by some French fishermen who have reported seeing a balloon drifting towards the southward near Reches Douvres. It was not expected that they would return to shore before this morning.

Our Plymouth correspondent states that the Esch Dasher returned to Guernsey last night from Reches Douvres, having seen nothing of the balloon. Doubts are expressed of the correctness of the fishermen's report. The pilot landed at the lighthouse with great difficulty, and ascertained from the lightkeepers that they had observed nothing. The Rescué continued the search along the coast. 1881 December 15 (Fri) London Times, p. 61.

The Lost Balloon. (Walter Powell and the Saladin—Capt. Tempier and Mr. Gardner, who broke his leg, were thrown out as they hastily landed the balloon on the verge of its passing out to sea. Powell shot up in the air with the balloon when the other two men were thrown out, and neither Powell nor the balloon were ever reliably seen again.)

It is reported from Hartlepool that on Tuesday morning a huge balloon was seen passing in a northerly course over Hartlepool from the sea. It was only observed for a few moments through the fog, and was at a considerable altitude. It was travelling very rapidly, and appeared to be under no control.

Sat. Dec. 17, 6d.—The Lost Balloon....

A simple explanation is given of the story received from Aberdeen respecting a supposed balloon seen by a gentleman near Dundee for the amusement of his children. It seems to have burnt all night and travelled northwards toward Montrose, where it collapsed.

Dec. 20, 9f.—Reports from Madrid indicate south and southeast winds, so it is likely that the balloon seen over Spain again carried out to sea, as believed.

22, 7d—(ed)—Channel Islands, France and Spain—people there fancied they saw a balloon sailing south.

Mon. Dec. 26, '81, p. 7d.

THE MISSING BALLOON.—A Reuter's telegram dated Madrid, Dec. 24, says:—"A letter has been received from the Chief Officer of Customs at Santander with particulars of the balloon seen last week near that place by three custom-house guards. The balloon was moving in a vertical position over Mount del Fuerte, and the guards stated that a quantity of sparks of fire were proceeding from it. It was these sparks, in fact, that rendered it visible in the darkness of the night. The guards ascended the mountain in order to get a better view of the balloon, but it was driven by the wind in the direction of the Bay of Biscay and was seen the following day near Bilbao."

1881 December 16 (Fri) London Times, p. 7f. (card 1)

The Missing Balloon.

The following telegram, which was received yesterday morning by the Commander of Her Majesty's ship Dasher from the Postmaster in Alderney, appeared in our second edition of yesterday:—

"Balloon seen by several men off Manney-hill yesterday at 7 a.m. Supposed to be Mr. Powell. Also seen by a soldier on board the Courier. The Dasher at once proceeded to Alderney to inquire into the truth of the report."

On the arrival of Captain Cosens at Alderney yesterday, he sifted the reports of several men who affirm most strongly that on Wednesday morning they saw something like a balloon going in an easterly direction through the air. The report is confirmed by a gunner there, who, it is said, can be thoroughly relied upon, and he states that at half-past 2, while on look-out duty, he saw a balloon sailing in an easterly direction. Acting on this information Captain Cosens has desired the Cherbourg steamers to keep a close look-out, and he will start tomorrow morning to make a search in that direction.

A Bridport telegram last evening says:--
"The tug commenced searching in West Bay this morning in and about the vicinity where the balloon is supposed to have descended, to ascertain the state of the bottom with the view of sending down divers. A large gun was placed on board, and 20 or 30 rounds were fired to disturb the water in the hope that it would bring the balloon or the body to the surface. This was continued throughout the day."

An immense number of telegrams and mass of other correspondence have been received, as the result of yesterday's inquiries, from Norway, France, Spain, America, the Channel Islands, and many Continental towns.

Lord Tenterden has communicated to Mr. Powell's relatives at Bridport a telegram received at the Foreign Office from the British Vice-Consul at Cherbourg, dated 10:30 a.m. yesterday and stating that a fisherman named Castel Louis, of [Ligny], had reported having seen an object floating in the water at 7 o'clock on Wednesday morning about 30 miles from the French coast and 20 miles from the English coast, between Cape La Hogue and Alderney, which is supposed to be the missing balloon. Not knowing at the time, however, of the disappearance of Mr. Powell and the balloon, he did not approach nearer than 200 metres, being in a hurry to get to market with his fish. It was dusk at the time, and from its movement he thought it was a whale, but he remarked the appearance of oil in the water for about a league in its wake, and also the prevalence of a bad smell. He has started again in search of the object, and if found it will be landed at Torquay.

The Admiralty and the Foreign Office have interested themselves on behalf of the relatives of Mr. Powell. The Foreign Office, besides acquainting the Consuls of the loss of the balloon, have asked them to inform everyone of the rewards offered for the recovery of Mr. Powell. The Admiralty have issued strict orders to the Coastguards and Marines and all of Her Majesty's vessels likely to come across the balloon, if afloat, to take it to the nearest port. In addition to this, several coasting or guard ships, besides the Dasher, have been ordered to cruise round their respective grounds to pick up, if possible, any information relative to the lost balloon.

The officers of the Aberdeen Steam Navigation Company's steamer Countess of Aberdeen, which arrived at Aberdeen yesterday morning, state that at about 5:30 o'clock, just before daybreak, when about 25 miles off Montrose, they observed a large light three miles high in the air, to which some dark object, which seemed from its movement to be the car of a balloon, was attached, travelling in a north-easterly direction. The light was about 25 miles distant when it was first observed, and it was of an elongated form. The steam whistle was blown for about ten minutes, but no movement indicated that the sound was heard. They further expressed their belief that if the object they saw were the missing balloon it would have descended somewhere among the Grampian Hills.

The members of the Balloon Committee at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, retain scarcely a vestige of a hope that Mr. Powell is alive, and it is doubted whether any trace of him or the balloon will ever be discovered. Entertaining as most feasible the hypothesis of the balloon having exhausted its gas and falling into the sea soon after breaking away from the land, the officials conclude that there would not have been sufficient buoyancy remaining in the calico envelope or the wicker car to support a man's weight in the water for long, and it is thought improbable that any part of the aerial machine itself could have floated for many hours, the aggregate weight of cordage, calico, car, and equipment exceeding 600 lb.

The general opinion in Malmesbury is that Mr. Powell has succumbed. The intense and painful anxiety prevailing during the early part of the week has given place to a general feeling of depression. Mr. Powell was a consistent Conservative, a general favourite with all classes, and his balloon ascents in the neighbourhood always occasioned much interest. In consequence of the sad uncertainty as to Mr. Powell's fate, a large Liberal meeting, fixed for to-night, has been indefinitely postponed.

A correspondent telegraphed last night from Alderney:--

"Alderney has during the last day or two been in a state of extreme excitement with reference to the fate of Mr. Powell. During the evening of Tuesday last, and again about 7 a.m. on Wednesday morning, oscillating red lights were seen high in the air towards the north-east and in the direction of Cherbourg. As the particulars of Mr. Powell's accident were then very imperfectly known here, little heed was paid to the circumstance until this morning (Thursday), when, corroborative testimony having reached the postmaster here, that gentleman communicated by telegraph with Captain Anson, of Her Majesty's ship Dasher, then at Guernsey, who, accompanied by Captain Cosens, the representative of the Powell family, at once steamed over hither to follow up the inquiry. Late this evening fresh tidings reached Alderney to the effect that some Cherbourg fishermen had seen on Wednesday evening an exhausted balloon floating on the sea within 200 yards of them. The Dasher will leave Alderney at early dawn on Friday to follow up the clue, with every chance of obtaining intelligence, but little hope that it can be other than the confirmation of the gravest fears."

At the meeting this evening of the Balloon Society of Great Britain the misadventure of the Saladin, Government balloon, on Saturday last, and the question as to the fate of Mr. Walter Powell, M.P., will take precedence of all other business. As several military and scientific gentlemen, experts in ballooning, as well as many practical aeronauts, are expected to be present, a discussion of great interest is anticipated.

1881 December 16 (Fri) Manchester Guardian, p. 5 (card 1)

NEWS OF THE MISSING BALLOON. /

Yesterday afternoon the following messages were received from London:--The balloon Saladin, concerning which so much anxiety and interest has during the last few days been felt, has now, it is believed, been discovered, and a brief time will set at rest all the hopes and fears that have been entertained by his friends and the public with respect to Mr. Powell's fate. The authorities connected with the various official departments appear satisfied that the balloon has been traced, and Lord [Tenterden] has written from the Foreign Office to Mr. Powell's relations expressing his belief that the searches have got upon the right track. Hundreds of telegrams have been received, not only at the Foreign Office and at the Meteorological Office, but by the solicitors and family of Mr. Powell, from various places along the English and French coasts, but the vast majority of these messages contained little calculated to assist the search. During the course of yesterday, however, several messages arrived to the office that a balloon had been seen in the Channel between the English and French coasts by a fisherman of Cherbourg, and inquiries were at once set on foot which left but little doubt in the minds of the authorities that a definite clue had been obtained. The first news that the balloon had been sighted was received at the Foreign Office in a telegram from Her Majesty's Vice Consul at Cherbourg to Lord Tenterden. The Vice Consul telegraphed as follows:--

"Cherbourg, 10 a.m.--Louis Castel, fisherman, of Exg Isigny, has called here and stated that yesterday evening, at seven o'clock whilst at sea 20 miles from English coast and 30 miles from French coast, between Cape La Hogue and Alderney, he saw an object resembling a balloon floating in the water. Not knowing an accident had happened, and having to return to port with his fish he did not approach nearer to it than 200 metres. It was nearly dark at time. Thought at first it was whale, and remarked appearance of oil on water a league in its train. Have started in search with fisherman. If successful will take balloon to English coast."

In the event of the balloon being found during yesterday, it is expected it will be landed in England, probably at Torquay, this morning at the latest. The authorities indeed think the fisherman will be able to pilot the searchers to within a mile or two of the spot where he saw it. In that case, as it would be a readily visible object upon the water, even at a much greater distance to a good "lookout," there seems no reason to doubt that it will be picked up. Of course the prevalence of one of the frequent Channel sea fogs may delay the chances of recovery very much; or the balloon may have been carried by wind and tide some distance from the spot where it was first seen. It appears to be generally thought that Mr. Powell's body will be found in the car, but this is not to be looked for with much confidence, as should he have succumbed to the exposure, the max probabilities are that he would be washed out of the car in its dragging through the sea. There is, it is feared, but a very faint hope to be indulged in by the most sanguine that Mr. Powell may be found in it alive.

Last evening the following message reached Manchester:--Although the news has been accepted by the authorities as conclusive as to the tracing of the balloon, still the efforts in other directions have in no way been relaxed. The South-western Railway Company have instructed all their captains of the Channel steamers to keep a sharp look out for the Saladin and telegraph immediately if they have any news. The officials on the Channel Islands have also been instructed by the Foreign Office to spare no exertions to find the balloon or obtain some trace of its occupant, and telegrams have been sent in other directions where there was believed to be any change of the balloon turning up. The Commodore steam tug resumed her search in West Bay yesterday morning at the spot where the balloon was supposed to have descended, and endeavored of disturbing the water, in hope of [keeping on] the surface any object that might have been sunk. This was continued throughout the day, but up to last evening without success.

Mr. W.H. Lefevre, ~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ president of the Balloon Society of Great Britain, received a telegram yesterday afternoon from his brother, Mr. H. Lefevre, at Jersey, to the following effect:--"Powell's balloon reported to have been sighted off Cherbourg last night; shall make further inquiries."

Mr. Lefevre believes that thought the fisherman may not have seen any occupant Mr. Powell may have been lying down exhausted in the car of the balloon.

The Admiralty has received information confirming the report from Guernsey, and Her Majesty's ship Dasher has gone to inquire into it.

At the meeting of the Balloon Society this evening the fate of the Saladin and its occupant will take precedence of all other business, and several military and scientific gentlemen, as well as many practical aeronauts, are expected to take part in the discussion.

They x Weymouth correspondent of the Press Association telegraphed at ten o'clock last night:--"On the arrival of Captain Cosens at Alderney yesterday he sifted the reports of several men, who affirm most strongly that on Wednesday morning they saw something like a balloon in the air going in an easterly direction. The report is strongly confirmed by a gunner there, a man who it is said could be thoroughly relied on, and he states that at half-past two, whilst on look-out duty, he saw a balloon pass, sailing in an eastward direction. Acting on this information Captain Cosens has desired the Cherbourg steamers to keep a close look out, and he will start this morning to make a search in that direction."

ANOTHER SUPPOSED STRAY BALLOON.

A telegram from the Press Association Aberdeen correspondent states that a light was seen by the officers and crew of the steamer Countess, of Aberdeen, which has arrived there, and which was believed by all on board to belong to the missing balloon. It is, of course, almost impossible that this could have been the lost balloon Saladin, but the particulars as related by the officers of the steamer will be of interest. The light was first observed about 4.40 a.m. on the port quarter.

off Montrose Ness, and it remained in sight for 45 minutes. The steved called the second mate's attention to the light, and afterwards so distinctly did the seamen make out a balloon that the steved's whistle was sounded. The officers estimated the altitude of the balloon at about 15', apparently above the region affected by light north-westerly breezes. The vessel was moving slowly in the opposite direction, and according to a rough calculation by Mr. Alexander Smith, the second officer, would pass on land between Montrose and Bervie. The balloon appeared to be under perfect control, and the crew of the vessel were about to fire rockets at it with the hope of effecting communication, but the altitude was pronounced too high. When the steved's whistle was blown no signal was received in response. The Foreign Office, besides acquainting their Consuls of the loss of the balloon, has asked them to inform everyone of the rewards offered for the recovery of Mr. Powell. The Admiralty has issued strict orders to coast-guards and marines and all Her Majesty's vessels likely to come across the balloon, if afloat, to take it to the nearest port. In addition, several coasting or guard ships besides the Dasher have been ordered to cruise round their respective grounds to pick up, if possible, any information relative to the missing balloon.

Our Dundee correspondent telegraphed last night:—While the statements of the officers and others on board the steved Countess of Aberdeen as to their having seen a balloon off Montrose this morning are very circumstantial, it is considered remarkable that no eyewitness from the mainland in the district between Montrose and Bervie, where the balloon is said to have disappeared from the view of those on board the steved, has sent in an account. The report that the balloon had been seen near the Gramians is not confirmed.
1881 December 19 (Mon) Manchester Guardian, p. 5.

THE LOST BALLOON. /

Up to the time of going to press no information whatever had been received about the missing balloon.

The Board of Trade has received the following copy of a telegram from the Collector of Customs, Dartmouth, to their assistant secretary, Marine Department, Board of Trade, dated Saturday:—"A pilot reports having seen two bright lights at eight o'clock on Sunday evening last, two to three miles off Dartmouth Harbour; moving very rapidly towards S.W., then disappeared; in about ten minutes dark object was visible above and below them; they appeared to be from about 20 to 60 feet above water, and could by no possibility have been shown from any vessel, but must have been exhibited from a balloon; weather at time hazy, with fresh N.E. wind; full reports will follow."

A Reuter's telegram dated Madrid, Saturday, reports that the Customs officer stationed at Laredo, near Santander, has telegraphed to the Prefect of Santander that at ten o'clock on Friday night he saw a balloon, supposed to be the missing balloon Saladin, pass over the port at a low elevation, proceeding in the direction of Bilbao. The Spanish authorities have despatched orders to the gendarmarie to render every assistance wherever the balloon may descend.—A later telegram says, "a large balloon was seen this afternoon about two kilometres from Bilbao by the conductor of the tramway running between that town and Arenas. The balloon was going in an easterly direction towards the sea coast. A policeman also saw it, and gives much the same information on the subject."

1881 December 19 (Mon) London Times, p. 6f.

THE LOST BALLOON.

No additional news of any certain character has been received about the lost balloon.

A Reuter's telegram, dated December 17, from Madrid, states that the Customs officer stationed at Laredo, near Santander, has telegraphed to the Prefect of Santander that at 10 o'clock last night he saw a balloon, supposed to be the missing balloon Saladin, pass over the port at a low elevation, proceeding in the direction of Bilbao. The Spanish authorities have dispatched orders to the gendarmarie to render every assistance wherever the balloon may descend.

A subsequent telegram from the same source received late on Saturday night states that a large balloon was seen that afternoon about two kilometres distance from Bilbao by the conductor of the tramway running between that town and [Arcuda]. The balloon was going in an easterly direction towards the sea coast. A policeman also saw it, and gives much the same information on the subject.

A further telegram from the same place, dated December 18, says:—"No further news has been received here respecting the balloon, supposed to be the Saladin, which was seen near Bilbao yesterday afternoon, notwithstanding that the Prefects have instructed all the Mayors in the North of Spain to give information in the event of its being again observed. The balloon is believed to have been carried out to sea."

The Board of Trade has received the following copy of a telegram from the Collector of Customs, Dartmouth, to their assistant secretary, Marine Department, Board of Trade, dated Saturday:—"A pilot reports having seen two bright lights at 8 o'clock on Sunday evening last two or three miles off Dartmouth Harbour, moving very rapidly towards S.W., then disappeared; in about ten minutes a dark object was visible above and below them. They appeared to be from about 20 ft. to 60 ft. above water, and could by no possibility have been shown from any vessel, but must have been exhibited from a balloon. Weather at time hazy, with fresh north-east wind."

1881 December 27 (Tues) London Times, p. 5d.

THE MISSING BALLOON. / TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—My friend M. Wilfrid de Fonvielle, the well-known Paris aeronaut, who is at present on a visit to London, informs me that he has no doubt that the balloon seen to pass over Santander, in Spain, is a French meteorological balloon.

Some Paris meteorologists have established a service of balloons of this description. Each is fitted with a self-registering barometer and other instrumental appliances for recording meteorological phenomena, is furnished with one or more lights, and is despatched from Paris at a suitable time and under conditions favourable to obtaining a record of the aerial currents, temperature, &c. of the regions it is desired to have pierced by the balloon and examined. To each balloon there is likewise attached a brief memorandum, in several languages, giving the name and address of the sender, the object for which it has been sent on its journey, and a polite request to the friends to have it packed up carefully and returned to the owner as soon as convenient, who will defray all costs.

Perhaps you will find room for this explanation regarding this "Spanish" balloon and of the reason of its mysterious appearance in the possible track of the unhappy Saladin. I am, &c, C.C.R.

December 26. //

The Missing Balloon.—Nothing could be done on Saturday or Sunday in the search for Mr. Powell and the balloon on account of the rough sea. Yesterday morning four boats, each with four men and grappling irons, began systematic dredging operations under the superintendence of Mr. H. Godd, Lloyd's agent, who has stated from the first that he saw the balloon pitch in the sea. They started from the spot indicated by Mr. Godd, and are going seaward in the direction which the balloon is supposed to have taken. The men are paid at the rate of 10s. a day in addition to the reward if they are successful. The Portland [leaves], which returned to [Chesil] on Saturday, will resume work this morning. A Bridport telegram states that Mr. Agn-Gardner is progressing favourably, and it is hoped he will be able to leave the hospital in a week or two.

1885 September 29 () London Times, p. .

A Lost Balloon

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—The enclosed, which I cut from the W. Bermuda Royal Gazette of the 8th inst., may serve to account for one of the balloons which have made an ascent this year in England or France, and not been subsequently heard of. It is evident from the description that the car had become detached, that the balloon itself was but a shapeless bag, barely able to float. It is, however, if my conjecture be correct, the first authentic instance of a balloon crossing the Atlantic at all.
September 26. / I am &c, / J.H. LEFROY.

"For the Royal Gazette."

"A Balloon Passed Bermuda."

"Mount Clare, Southampton, August 27, 1885."

"Sir,—Thursday morning, about 8:30 a.m., there was observed by Mrs. Adelina D. Bassett a strange object in the clouds, coming from the north. She called the attention of Mrs. L. Lowell to it, and they were both somewhat alarmed by the phenomenon. However, they continued to watch it steadily for some time, and as it drew nearer they observed that it was of triangular shape and about the size of one of our pilot boat's mainsails, with chains attached to the bottom part of it. When crossing the land it appeared to descend, but as it went to the sea it ascended and so continued until it went from their sight in the clouds south."

"ROBERT T. BASSETT."

1885 October 1 () London Times, p. 6c.

A LOST BALLOON. / TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—The letter from Gen. Lefroy, and the cutting from the Bermuda Royal Gazette printed in The Times of today contain a meteorological point of such extreme improbability that any evidence in confirmation of the conjecture that the balloon crossed the Atlantic from England or France would be of the utmost value. The normal circulation of the air over the North Atlantic is opposed to a balloon travelling to Bermuda from Europe in anything like a straight line, and would require a circuitous voyage of some 4,000 or 5,000 miles. This, supposing the wind to be blowing in a steady direction over the whole route and with the steady force of a fresh breeze, 25 geographical miles an hour, would occupy seven or eight days in transit. Are we to assume it possible that a balloon would keep afloat this length of time? A little practical experience in ballooning suggests it to be thoroughly impossible. After the balloon was relieved of its occupants and car, it would in all probability rise quickly and attain its maximum elevation, dependent on its capacity and weight, in an hour or so, after which it would quickly settle down, and its life is not probably to be measured by days but by hours. If the "strange object" was a balloon, might it not have escaped from America? Surely so startling a voyager could not have traversed the North Atlantic without having been sighted by many engaged in the North Atlantic trade between Europe and America. / I am yours faithfully, / CHARLES HARDING, F. R. Met. & Soc. / September 29.

A MIRAGE IN DORSET / TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—This afternoon at 5 o'clock precisely we witnessed from this hill, of 360 feet altitude, a most perfect reflexion in the clouds of a ship in full sail. The Purbeck Hills, situate about 13 or 14 miles to our south-west, shut out our direct view of the sea in that direction, and in all our long experience of many beautiful views of the coast line we have never before observed this curious phenomenon. It lasted for about three minutes, and then slowly faded out of sight. I am, Sir, yours faithfully, / M.F. BILLINGTON. / Chelbury Rectory, Wimbourne, Dorset, Sept. 29.

1887 May 27 (Fri) New York Sun, p. 2.

THE STAR OF BETHLEHEM SAID TO HAVE REAPPEARED. / From the Cincinnati Enquirer.

Lexington, May 24.—A gentleman who has just arrived from Hartford,

Ky., it states that Prof. John M. Klein, Kentucky's great astronomer, discovered the star of Bethlehem last night about 7 o'clock. Its position is in the northwestern heavens, closely skirting the horizon. Its lustre is most intense. This is the same star that guided the Wise Men of the East to the manger where the infant Saviour lay. Its period is about 300 years and astronomers have been on the lookout for it for several years past.

New York Daily Tribune, Sat. May 28, p. 2.

DOUBTS ABOUT THAT STAR OF BETHLEHEM. / From the Boston Herald.

"No, I haven't seen the Star of Bethlehem," said Professor Pickering, of the Harvard College Observatory, last evening to a reporter. "I looked for it Wednesday evening when I heard that some professor in Kentucky, unknown to me, had discovered its presence in the heavens, but I could not see it. I looked for it with the naked eye. It isn't there, and the chances of its appearance are very uncertain indeed. Astronomers are doubtful about it. Many of them do not believe it will come at all. I have received no official information from any quarter that the reappearance of the star had been noted by responsible astronomers."

1887 May 29 (Sun) New York Sun, p. 9.

A Queer Little Cloudburst. / From the Galveston News.

PILOT POINT, Texas, May 19.—At about 5:20 o'clock last evening a sudden splash and rushing of water on the southeast corner of the square was heard and seen, and ~~some~~ teams hitched to carriages standing close by dashed off in fright, but fortunately the drivers had their lines in hand or serious damage would have been done. Upon the first reaction from alarm thus occasioned the cause of this sudden precipitation of such a small body of water, less than five barrels, with a force and accompanied by such a peculiar detonation, as it could have only descended from the clouds, was observed to be two clouds immediately above, one a bronze, angry-looking and the other a purplish, smoke colored cloud with silver streaks through it, repelling each other with great violence.

1887 June 23 (Th) New York Sun, p. 2.

Venus in her Glory.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: Can you furnish any information concerning the star (a large one) seen every evening about over Jersey City, and which disappears at 10 P.M. sharp? Or is it the electric light sent up in a balloon by Edison at his residence at Menlo Park, N.J.?

J.D. / New York, June 17.

We have several times, in reply to questions similar to the above, explained that the brilliant star seen in the western heavens in the evening is the planet Venus, and not an electric light. It will continue to increase in brightness until Aug. 16, setting a little earlier every evening in the mean time, and in September it will disappear from the evening sky to reappear, later in the autumn, in the east just before sunrise. If anybody still thinks it is an electric light sent up in a balloon let him start out in search of the rope that holds it, and if his perseverance equals his gullibility he may walk to the Pacific without getting any closer to his dazzling goal. (could find no earlier mentions)

1888 May 30 (Wed) New York Times, p. 3.

A Flying Serpent.

Columbia, S. C., May 29.—Closely following the appearance of the hand of flame in the heavens above Ohio comes a story from Darlington County, in this state, of a flying serpent. Last Sunday evening, just before sunset, Miss Ida Davis and her two younger sisters were strolling through the woods, when they were suddenly startled by the appearance of a huge serpent moving through the air above them. The serpent was distant only two or three rods when they first beheld it, and was sailing through the air with a speed equal to that of a hawk or buzzard, but without any visible means of propulsion. Its movements in its flight resembled those of a snake, and it looked a formidable object as it wound its way along, being apparently about fifteen feet in length. The girls stood amazed and followed it with their eyes until it was lost to view in the distance. The flying serpent was also seen by a number of people in other parts of the county early in the afternoon of the same day, and by those it is represented as emitting a hissing noise which could be distinctly heard. The negroes in that section are greatly excited over the matter. Religious revival meetings have been inaugurated in all their churches, and many of them declare that the day of judgment is near at hand.

1889 L'Annee Scientifique, v. 32, pp. 66-7.

BALL LIGHTENING AT SAINT PETERSBURG.

The following event was observed by M. Aré at Vladicaucasa. On July 30, 1888, about 6 p.m., a group of brilliant balls were seen moving along a ravine. Three balls were clearly distinguished; one big yellow ball, having the luster of gold, and two small purple balls at the sides of the large one. The slopes of the ravine were lighted by a purple light. About three minutes later, the balls became smaller and disappeared instantly, without any sound.

1891, September 6 (Sun morn) Indianapolis Journal, p. 1.

Was It a Case of "Jag"? / Singular Phenomenon Reported as Having Been Seen by Two Men Early in the Morning. / Special to the Indpls. Journal.

Crawfordsville, Ind., Sept. 5.—Marshall McIntyre and Will Gray, employees of an ice firm, tell a weird, wild story of what they saw last night, at about 2 o'clock. At that hour they were hitching up their teams at the barn of Mr. Martin, in this city, when McIntyre says that "a strange sensation of awe and dread came over him, and, looking up, he saw a 'horrible apparition' coming toward him from the west." The "shape" was over ~~the~~ 100 feet up above the ground, and looked to be about twenty feet long and eight feet wide, and moved rapidly through the air by means of several pairs of fins. The men claim that it did not seem to have a head. When it got immediately over the residence of Mr. Martin it commenced to turn round in a circle, where it remained some time. The men took safety in the barn, from which they viewed the phenomenon. It then sailed off toward the east, but very soon returned, and the men drove away to the ice-house. When they returned it was gone. The electric lights were burning, and it is possible that the reflection of the lights from several directions through the damp air and rain caused the unusual sight.

1891 September 7 (Mon morn) Indianapolis Journal, p. 1. (card 1)

Squirmed Like a Serpent / Crawfordsville's Nameless Aerial Specter Also Seen by a Minister and Wife. / Seemingly Headless and Propelled by Fins, It Swam Its Irregular Way Through the Air, and Filled Its Beholders with Awe. / Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

Crawfordsville, Ind., Sept. 5.—The strange sight seen by Marshall McIntyre and Will Gray, two ice men, last Saturday morning, about 2 o'clock, continues to be the talk of the people of this city. The men are very positive that they actually witnessed something that is as yet unaccounted for. Their story, in brief, as told by McIntyre, was that when they were in the barn hitching up their teams a strange sensation of awe and dread came over them. Looking up McIntyre saw a horrible apparition coming toward him from the west. The "shape" was over 100 feet above the ground and looked to be about twenty feet long and eight feet wide, and moved rapidly through the air by means of several pairs of fins. The men claim that it did not seem to have a head. When it got immediately over the residence of Mr. Martin, their employer, it commenced to turn round in a circle, where it remained ~~some time~~ ~~and~~ ~~then~~ ~~it~~ ~~went~~ ~~out~~ ~~into~~ ~~the~~ ~~street~~, and saw it rise again, as also did his wife. They became tired and went into the house, leaving the object still in sight.

It was about an hour after Rev. Switzer went into the house that the two ice-men were almost scared to death by the same object. There are other persons who were out about the same time, and they all noticed that the birds were chirping as if in distress, and say that a peculiar sensation would come over them every few minutes, like as if they felt that something was going to swoop down upon them. There is no question but that the strange object was seen, but what it was is a mystery.

1891 September 9 (Wed) Indianapolis Journal, p. 1.

Crawfordsville's Airy Spook / Turns Out to Have Been a Flight of Frightened Killdeers—Joke on the Minister. / Special to Indpls. Jnl.

Crawfordsville, Ind., Sept. 8.—Two men of this city claim to have satisfactorily settled the mysterious apparition witnessed in the heavens on last Friday night. They say also that they saw it, and that they concluded that it was a flight of killdeers, all huddled together, flying about in an aimless manner, being bewildered by the electric lights. These birds being very high in the air could not be easily distinguished, and if this is a correct solution those who witnessed it are exonerated of the charge that they were laboring under a "jag" or had a bad case of indigestion, and should be dieted. It is noticed that the apparition hovered around only Methodist people's houses and the Methodist Church. Rev. G.W. Switzer, who witnessed the strange sight, has received many letters inquiring about the "spook." But he received one letter that nonplused him. It was from Keeley's Institute for Inebriates at Plainfield, and in it was stated that the patients there frequently saw just such things, and that the apparitions often had horns and tails. It also stated that after a few days treatment the patients did not see such sights. In the closing sentence Rev. Switzer was advised to come and be treated.

1891 September 11 (Fr.) Crawfordsville, Ind., Daily Journal, p. 3.

Asking About the Spook.

Postmaster Bonnell is receiving letters every mail from people all over the country anxiously inquiring about the "spook" which was seen here last Friday night. The inquiries seem for the most part to be deluded fools and nearly scared out of their wits by what they think portends the approach of Judgment Day. One poor woman living near St. Louis writes a letter which would be pathetic if it were not so deliciously ludicrous. Concluding a terrified appeal for direct information she says she heard the same thing was seen in Ohio some time ago and she fears it is coming West. She wants to know also if it can be seen in the day time and what color it is. There is another class of earnest inquirers who may be denominated as cranks. They write a sort of "I told you so" letter in which they say they have been looking for the approach of the last day for some time, and seem to take extreme pleasure in contemplating its near approach.

1892 March 4: English Mechanic, v. 55, p. 346c (Letters to Ed.)

The British journal can scarcely be accused of being behindhand in his accounts and announcements of marvellous phenomena in the heavens: for to give a single example, "The Star of Bethlehem" crops up as regularly in the newspapers as the sea serpent. But if we may judge from the following extract (which I translate from the Stockholm paper L'Aftonbladet of the 9th), he, in our popular slang, "isn't in it" with his Swedish confreres.

"In the environs of Hochlande," says the paragraph in the Stockholm journal, "there was seen, between 9 and 10 o'clock at night, in the direction of the north, to the west of the Great Bear, and pretty high up in the sky, a large star, which seemed to be of the first magnitude and which rendered itself conspicuous by its extraordinary movement. At first it advanced with great rapidity, and in a straight line, towards the east for an estimated distance of 125 yards (!), appearing then to be oblong, and approximately twelve inches long by about a quarter of that wide, and to be of a fiery-red colour. It then returned to its first position, afterwards to move not less rapidly towards the west, to regain, after about an equal interval, its original position; subsequently rising slowly, then descending considerably below it, and finishing by recovering it. It moved principally in straight lines, with a very slight elliptical curvature, but incessantly changing colour. This agitation (or movement) continued for ten hours, when it ceased. The phenomenon was observed by several people. The sole hypothesis admissible at present," the writer goes on to say, "in the study of these meteors, which are bolides of which the trajectories are often perturbed in their initial direction, is that it may happen that after having encountered atmospheric strata of greater and greater density, the bolides experience a kind of ricochet, which prevents their further approach to the earth, and sends them back towards the upper regions of the atmosphere--circumstances which may occasion changes in the form and curvature of the trajectories of bolides. We must, nevertheless, add that the symmetry of the movement in the present phenomenon is without precedent in the catalogue which treats of these phenomena." I should think so. An elliptical bolide of a fiery red, but continually changing colour, which oscillates like a pendulum and remains visible for ten hours!!! is not likely to be included in any "catalogue which treats of these phenomena."

1892 May 18 (Fri. eve.) Neue Freie Presse (Vienna), p. 6.

At Dombrowa, in Congress-Poland, the Russian border watch observed an aerial balloon at a considerable height flying over the Russian border. The Krakow border-watch commandant, who presumed Prussian officers were in the balloon, ordered it [fired upon, [though it] continued to remain [motionless]. Afterward the balloon was eagerly considered.

March 26 (Sat.) p. 4. Petersburg, 25 March....
The Synod (council) demanded energetic measures be taken against Prussian espionage by aerial balloons, which, according to the Polish newspapers, have repeatedly been observed recently. From reliable sources it is learned that the Prussian military [men] at Thorn, housed at night in a balloon captif, reconnoiter the Russian border with an electric light of great size.

March 28 (Mon) p. 3.
Krakau, 27 March....--Last night in Russian Poland electrically lighted aerial balloons from Prussia appeared, which took a north westerly course and again returned back to Prussia. The balloons had a regular and orderly ~~xxx~~ course and generated by means of dynamos a strong electric light which spread over an extensive area of ground. One such balloon, according to an announcement from the Czar, recently ~~appeared even over the Warsaw fort.~~ 1892 March 26 (Sat) New York Times, p. 3.

BALLOONS AS GERMAN SPIES. / A Fishy Story That Comes From Russian Sources.
Warsaw, March 25.--Much uneasiness is caused here by the presence in Poland of an immense number of Russian soldiers. It may be, however, that this massing of troops is merely with the object of preparing for the usual spring maneuvers.
The feeling of anxiety has been added to by the fact that recently several balloons, which came from the German frontier, have been seen hovering over the Russian fortresses and camps. These balloons are believed here to form part of an extensive German balloon spy service. Recently a balloon was floating above the fortress of Kovno, and ~~was~~ orders were given to fire upon it. It was impossible to hit the balloon, and its occupants, by means of glasses, pursued their investigations entirely undisturbed by the bullets aimed in their direction. A close watch was kept upon the balloon, and the watchers were surprised to find that it appeared to be under perfect control. After hovering about the fortress for no little time it returned to the German frontier.

A more surprising incident occurred a few days ago at Dombrowice, 84 miles west of Warsaw. A balloon made its appearance sailing ~~xxxx~~ against the wind, which was at the time blowing a fresh breeze. When it had reached a point above the military camp it stopped for a time, and was then maneuvered in a manner which showed it was provided with a highly-perfected steering apparatus.
The Russian military authorities believe that France and Germany possess an efficient balloon steering apparatus, that will render balloons an important factor in warfare. ~~xxxx~~ This will prove a most perplexing problem, for at present there is no possible way of protecting soldiers in the field from a fire aimed at them directly from above.
[same story almost verbatim in NYTribune 3/26p.1]
Mar. 28 p. 10 novel on communication with Mars.
1892 March 26 (Sat) Manchester Guardian, p. 8.

Foreign Telegrams. / Espionage by Balloon. / Extraordinary Military Activity in Poland. / St. Petersburg, Fri.
Reports from Russian Poland state that a German spy service in balloons has been organized. A few days ago a large balloon coming from the German frontier appeared about the fortress of Kovno. Several shots were fired at it, but without effect, and it managed to return in safety over the frontier.

The official journal of Warsaw, the Warschawski Dzienik, also states that a large balloon was observed on the 7th March (17th) in the neighbourhood of Dombrowa. The balloon was coming from the south-west, and following a north-easterly direction along the Ivangorod-Dombrowa Railway, and this in spite of the fact that a north-east wind was blowing. The balloon disappeared behind the clouds, but reappeared about 45 minutes later with a light burning (it was then half-past six in the evening), and following a course directly opposed to the former one. It is presumed that the balloon must have been provided with a highly perfected steering apparatus.
There is reason to suppose that both the French and the German military authorities are in possession of some sort of apparatus for steering balloons.
1892 March 31 (Th) New York Tribune, p. 1.

German Army Balloons in Active Use. / Hovering Over the Forts in Russian Poland with Search Lights at Night.
St. Petersburg, March 30.--The presence of balloons over the forts and encampments in Poland is becoming more and more frequent, and this fact is causing much indignation among Army officers, who are unable to prevent military secrets from becoming known to German officers, who are taking observations from a height that places them beyond the reach of bullets. The impression grows stronger every day that the Germans have at last solved the problem of aerial navigation. The balloons that have appeared over various places in Poland are under perfect control.

A few nights ago the people of Warsaw were startled by an intensely bright light in the sky. All eyes were turned upward, but nothing could be seen save a path of light that ended in a small focus. Suddenly the ray of light swept in another direction, and, when their eyes became accustomed to the darkness that followed, the people could see, far up in the sky, a balloon. Then it dawned upon them that it was an electric search light that had caused the brilliant illumination, and that the Germans were continuing their observations of Russian defenses with its aid. The balloon remained over the city until 1 o'clock in the morning, when the light was extinguished, and the balloon, heading westward toward the frontier of Prussia, disappeared. Later another balloon was seen over the Proushof railway station. It remained stationary for a time, and then started in the direction of the fort works near Kaleta, over which it hovered awhile, returning then across the frontier. Reports of similar occurrences have been received from Sosnovitsky and other places along the frontier. The balloons came from Prussian Silesia in the nighttime and projected the rays of powerful searchlights in every direction. The balloons, which were at a great height, remained stationary sometimes for a period of 40 minutes, and would then proceed in any desired direction.
1892 March 31 (Th) Manchester Guardian, p. 8.

Foreign Telegrams / Russia. / The German Military Balloons. / St. Petersburg, Wed. / ...
The appearance of German balloons over Russian Poland is now becoming frequent. On the 23rd inst. the inhabitants of Warsaw saw a balloon right over the city casting rays of light from an electric apparatus. After remaining stationary from the evening until 1 a.m. the balloon took a westerly course. On the previous day another balloon was observed passing over the railway station at Proushkoff, near Warsaw, appearing later over the fortress of Novo Georgievsk and the town of Kalets. The balloons are admirably steered. Reports from other places state that German balloons coming from Silesia have been seen in those localities towards the evening and during the night, projecting powerful electric search lights over a large extent of country. The balloons sometimes remain stationary at a great height for as long as 40 minutes

p. 8--Russian troops massing in Poland; Jews serving as German spies; perhaps 850,000 men on border, claim purpose is defense.
1892 June 10: English Mechanic, v. 55, p. 357

Scientific News.
The Tiflis [Georgian] SSR Kavkaz describes a meteor of great brilliancy observed at Tiflis on May 10. It appeared at 11 p.m. in the west part of their sky, was of round shape, and very brilliant. Three seconds after its appearance a part of it separated, moving towards the Mtaminda Mountains, and disappeared below the horizon, after lighting the slope of the mountain, the central meteor continuing to move, but having lost for a few seconds its great brilliancy, which however, soon reappeared. In about thirty seconds after the first appearance of the meteor a second small part separated from it, increasing in size as it approached the earth. This also disappeared in the west, behind the same mountain, after having brilliantly lighted for two or three seconds its slopes and gorges. After that, the meteor took first a milky coloration, but soon became bright again, and of phosphoric aspect. A third part separated from it, but it was much smaller and ~~xxxxxx~~ not so brilliant as the two former. Finally the meteor disappeared behind the clouds--a white, lighted blot being seen through them--and gradually faded away. The phenomenon lasted altogether about three minutes.
1895 September 4 (Wed) (London) Times, p. 3 (card 1)

REMARKABLE METEORIC (?) APPEARANCE. / TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.
Sir,--On Saturday evening last (August 31) I was walking northward on the eastern pavement in St. Giles's, Oxford, and, having just passed the entrance of St. John's, was still within the enclosed area in front of that College when my eyes were arrested by a brilliant luminous body which suddenly emerged over the tops of the trees before me on the left and moved eastward across the sky above and in front of me. Its appearance was, at the first glance, such as to suggest a brilliant meteor, considerably larger than Venus at her greatest brilliancy, but the slowness of its motion, as if sailed or floated majestically across the field of vision, as if driven by a strong wind, made me doubt whether it was not some artificial firework. Expecting to see it explode or go out, I watched for a second or two till it neared its culminating point and was about to be hidden from me by the lofty College building, on which I sprang over the corner of the low stone wall of the enclosure, and, walking sidewise and backwards across St. Giles's, I was enabled to see it through the space between the old and new buildings of the College, as it continued its course toward the eastern horizon. It did not explode, emit any spark, or leave any train or track; but it became rapidly dimmer and fainter as it approached the horizon, and finally disappeared behind a tree seen through the space in question, leaving me quite uncertain as to its nature. The fact that it so perceptibly grew fainter as it receded seems to imply that it had not a very great elevation, and so far favors a terrestrial origin, though I am quite unable to conceive how anything artificial could present the same appearance. On the other hand, if a meteor, its course was many times slower than that of any meteor I have ever seen. I was too much taken by surprise, and too intent upon watching its behavior, to note at the moment its apparent course among the stars; but on observing the heavens after its disappearance I concluded that its apparent path from my point of sight was from near Mithra on the tip of the Bear's tail, along under the Pole Star, through Cassiopeia, towards Andromeda. I hope that if any other of your readers saw it they will give an account of its appearance to them, which may at least settle the question of its meteoric character. I am sorry not to be able to give the precise time, as I had just left my watch at a watchmakers for repairs; but I think (subject to correction) that it was a few minutes before 8.

Oxford, Sept. 2.

J.A.H. MURRAY.

Fri. Sept. 6, p. 8.—REMARKABLE METEORIC APPEARANCE.
TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—As Mr. Murray in his letter to you in The Times this morning would seem to be in some doubt as to this phenomenon, I may mention that I saw the same, or a similar body, on Saturday evening last at Margate, but the hour was about 10.15. The meteor appeared suddenly from the south-west and, taking quite slowly a north-eastern direction, seemed as suddenly to disappear into space. It did not go near the horizon, but was lost sight of overhead. The body did not seem far distant, was of triangular shape, the base, which appeared to me to be about a foot in length being foremost, and as it disappeared I thought I saw some reddish sparks thrown off. Of course it may have been of "terrestrial origin"; but of this I am very doubtful, and it is at least curious that something so similar should have been seen at places so far distant as Oxford and Margate, on the same evening, although at different hours. / I remain, Sir, yours faithfully, / A. WARREN
MELHUSH. / 1, Down-street, Piccadilly, W., Sept. 4.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—Whilst seated at the side of the Spaniards-[gold], Hampstead-heath, N.W., last Saturday evening, a few minutes before 8, facing west, I noticed on my right a brilliant body, which was doubtless the same as that seen by Mr. Murray at Oxford. It travelled from north to east, horizontally, apparently about 30 degrees above the earth, and moved so slowly I imagined it might possibly be a fire balloon from the neighbouring Wembley-park grounds. I heard no noise nor observed any terminating explosion. Yours faithfully, / P.P. REYNOLDSON. / 2, St. Augustine's-villas, Highgate, N.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—We are disappointed to find no notice in The Times of a curious object that was seen in the sky on Saturday last, about 8.20 p.m., by two members of the family. It was like a star, moving horizontally from west to east at 2ft. (apparent) above the moon. It was watched for four or five minutes, and disappeared in the east, after traversing about a quarter of the heavens.

We should be much interested to hear if it was seen by others and how it is accounted for. / Your obedient servant, / September 3. H.T.

Sat. Sept. 7, p. 7.—REMARKABLE METEORIC APPEARANCE. / TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—Singularly enough I saw exactly the same phenomenon described by your correspondent as seen at Oxford on Saturday, August 30, but I saw it on Sunday evening about eight minutes to 8. We were driving to Scarborough Station that night to catch the 8.10 up train, and my attention was attracted by a large shooting star (as I thought—I know nothing of astronomy) crossing leisurely and at very low altitude from west to east. I was astonished at the time it was visible to me, shooting stars being so very much quicker in their course. I think your correspondent probably meant "Sunday," unless it was a "double event." / Obediently yours, I.W.

Tues. Sept. 10, p. 8.—REMARKABLE METEORIC APPEARANCE. / TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—Having seen the correspondence of Dr. J.A. Murray (September 4) and of "I.W." (in to-day's issue of The Times) on a "Remarkable Meteoric Appearance," I write to give my experience of the same sort of astronomical phenomenon, seen by a friend and myself on Monday, September 2, at 10.15 p.m.

We were sitting at an open window, facing west, in a house on W— Hill, Bath, and had our attention attracted by a brilliant movement in the sky. Looking up we both saw a large, luminous, comet-like body sweep down the sky in a slightly curved line and disappear behind the wooded horizon in the south-west. (We noted the ~~time~~ time at once, and also took the direction by compass, writing down what we had seen, with date and hour.)

The bright body moved, as described by your correspondents Dr. J.A. Murray and "I.W." with a leisurely, slow motion; but the former observer, in his description of the astral apparition, says "that it became rapidly dimmer and fainter as it approached the horizon," which description does not apply to that seen by us. The size of our meteor (?) seemed half that of the full moon, and it had a tail, brilliant, full, but rather short.

In to-day's Daily Graphic (September 7) a correspondent from Ireland gives an account of "a curious appearance," or "a great shining mass, far larger than the sun" (sic.), which struck and injured a boy; but no data is given.

Finally, as to dates, Dr. J. A. Murray saw his meteor (?) on Saturday, August 31, a little before 8 p.m.; "I.W." saw his at about the same time on Sunday, September 1; and my friend and I saw ours on Monday, September 2, at 10.15 p.m.

Will a Greenwich sage expound this weird phenomenon for the benefit of those who find ignorance no bliss and wisdom no folly? I am, Sir, yours, &c., / September 7. A.F.

1896 February 28 English Mechanic (v. 63), p. 33.

Science News.

The Madrid meteor, as it is called, seems to have been observed in Ireland, for a correspondent of one of the Irish newspapers writes: "I observed what I thought was a very red star, but moving up rapidly from the south to north in a straight line. I called out to a member of my family to come out and see the strange sight, and we both rushed to the back of the house and watched it go straight north, until the trees on the hill behind hid it. It was very high over all the other stars and clouds. When we read the account of what happened at Madrid, we came to the conclusion it must have been what we saw."

1896 July 2 (Th) Manitoba Morning Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 4.

A Mysterious Balloon. / Where Was It From and Whither Bound.

Many residents of the city who remained at home yesterday afternoon were surprised to see a balloon floating in space about 6 o'clock. The airship came from the west, and its progress eastward was intently watched as it made a rapid journey some thousands of feet above the earth. The aerial wonder was seen by several of the Central fire hall men, who said it was nearly as large as the balloon used during the recent ascensions at River park. Others again said it was only a toy balloon sent up in honor of the Confederation holiday, but its proportions were almost too large for a toy ship. Several expressed the opinion that it was Andrea's balloon returning from a trip to the North Pole, but Andrea has not yet started on his journey, according to latest reports. Whether miniature or real, the passage of the mysterious balloon caused a good deal of talk among citizens last night.

1896 July 17 English Mechanic (v. 63), p. 4966.

Saturn—Comet...

I was taking a look at Saturn last night July 13, in trying to find him—"having no finder I have to keep moving the movement about till I can fix him"—there came into the field a streak of light on the west side of the planet, and curved from it almost crescent-shaped. Not knowing what it could be, I stuck to it, and kept it in the field. Now, instead of moving across the field of the telescope like Saturn, it went "though much more slowly" in quite the contrary direction, and was, in fact, going to meet the planet. I closely watched it from 10 o'clock till quarter past 11, and then it had sunk too near the horizon to see clearly. During the time I was watching it two or three little stars went through it, or perhaps I ought to say, it passed them. It certainly was going toward Saturn at a good rate, and I should think it was nearer to the planet than any of his moons when I had to give it up. In length it was ~~xxxx~~ longer by comparison ~~xxx~~ than the breadth of Saturn, rings and all. Is it a comet? I could distinguish no nucleus. / Turnbridge Wells, July 14. A. W.

1896 August 7 Manitoba Morning Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 5. (Gr.)

ACROSS THE MOON. / Professor Brooks Watches a Meteor's Flight.

While Professor William R. Brooks, Mx M.A., F.R.A.S., director of the Smith observatory, in Geneva, N.Y., on Tuesday, July 21, was observing the moon with the 10-inch equatorial telescope, he saw a dark round object pass slowly across the moon in a horizontal direction from east to west, says the New York Herald.

Professor Brooks believes that it was the passage of a dark meteor between the earth and moon, and it remained dark because it was too far outside the earth's atmosphere to become ignited. It is well known that space is filled, so to speak, with these meteoric bodies, and that they only become visible as luminous objects when they enter the earth's atmosphere. The friction caused by their rapid passage through the air heats them to incandescence, and we see them as luminous meteors, or, as they are more familiarly termed, shooting stars. The meteor which Professor Brooks saw may have been more than one hundred thousand miles away, or midway between earth and moon. It may, indeed, have been much further away than this, and really nearer to the moon than to the earth; or, it may have been only just beyond the earth's atmosphere. The real size of this meteor is not known because of uncertainty in its distance. The apparent diameter was about one-thirtieth that of the moon. The moon was in the gibbous phase, being three days before the full. The duration of the flight of the meteor over the moon was between three and four seconds.

WAS ONLY A CLOUD. / How a Balloon Story Originated in the Mountains.

When the west train pulled into the depot this morning there alighted from the sleeper a tall, broad-shouldered gentleman, who looked the very picture of health and contentment. The porter of the car beckoned to the reporters standing near and said: "You fellows are always looking for something big. Just go and ask that man if he ever saw a balloon flying. He'll give you a story." The question being rather a peculiar one made even the reporters diffident about broaching it. So lots were drawn and one had to do it. He approached the stalwart gentleman timidly and enquired if he had seen a balloon in the air. The gentleman smiled and with this encouragement the other reporters drew near.

"Why, bless your hearts, no," was the answer. "But I thought I did once. Try one of these cigars and find something for us to sit on and I'll tell you all about it."

The cigars were good ones and the trunks were not too hard. The gentleman's ~~name~~ card read, "J. Melville Stoddard."

"You remember," he commenced, "reading in the papers about two Indians seeing a balloon away up north some two months ago? Yes, well they didn't see any balloon. I was out shooting at the time, and was near the Alaskan boundary in latitude 64, about half way between Cross Sound and Mackenzie Bay. I had left the steamer on the Sound and tramped and paddled inland with these two Indians as guides. In summer in that region you know, it gets light very shortly after midnight. I was sleeping in my tent early one morning when I was awakened by my guides who were making a great hubbub about something outside. They called me out and pointed to the sky. Of course, I was still half asleep. Going slowly in a northwesterly direction was what appeared to be a balloon. It was perfectly shaped with the large balloon and basket below. It was too high up to make out the outlines or to see whether there were any people in it. All this was my impression at first glance. Then I rubbed my eyes, procured a field glass and surveyed the object under more advantageous circumstances. The object, the lenses revealed to me was more surprising than a balloon. It was the most peculiarly shaped cloud I ever saw, looking at it with the naked eye one could easily imagine it was a balloon, but the glass showed that it was a wonderful cloud. The sky was otherwise clear, which made it look more striking. The Indians, who did not use the glass, would not believe that the object was not a balloon. I was made sure of it about half an hour after it appeared by observing it by aid of my glass, fade away. The Indians returned to civilization and started the balloon story you read of some time ago."

Mr. Stoddard proceeded east on his way to England to day.

1896 August 13 (Th) Manitoba Morning Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 2. (card 1)

IT WAS NO DREAM. / That Ghostly Balloon Seen by Winnipeggers.

Victoria, B.C., Aug. 12.—The mystery of that ghostly balloon which passed over Winnipeg on the 1st of July last, was further intensified by receipt of official intimation from Indian Agent Loring, who is stationed at Hazelton, near the head of the Skeena River, of the passing over that far northern part of a similar balloon just two days later. This word comes to Hon. A.W. Vowell, superintendent of Indian affairs, as in compliance with instruction sent to all Indian agents throughout the north to be on the lookout for Andree's expedition, and if required, lend it all possible aid. Here is ~~some~~ Loring's report, which comes under two separate dates:

Hazelton, July 3rd.—Sir,—I have the honor to report this day at 7.35 p.m. (local time) an object, by description a balloon, was seen by a boy about four miles west of here, lat. 55 degrees and 15 mins., long. 7 degrees and 40 mins. At the time there was a strong north-west wind. It was seen to emerge from out of a heavy bank of white clouds, swerving in at an intermediate clear space in semi-circular line, to disappear in another in an altitude of about forty feet above the timber line on the mountains. It had a black appearance, having been seen between the setting sun. The boy's description of the balloon and its actions leaves no doubt as to its reality, and is no doubt Andree's balloon expected to have left Spitzbergen for the north pole on the 1st. inst.

I have the honor to be, etc., / R.E. LORING, Indian Agent.

The supplementary report removes doubt that would otherwise be cast on the story as mere imagining of an Indian boy. It reads:

Hazelton, July 10th.

A.W. Vowell, Superintendent Indian affairs, Victoria, B.C.—Sir,—I have the honor to report information received this day by [Chall], chief, head of [Kitaploux], that while tramping with a party of Indians on Blackwater lake, above the head waters of the Skeena, an object resembling a balloon, and then displaying very bright lights was seen by them on the evening of the same day as before mentioned, 3rd inst., in nearly northerly course. [Chall], whom you know, is a most trustworthy man, and his statement is to be credited. The Indians on the Skeena were made aware that they were liable to see during the beginning of this month, a balloon going north, and of the purpose of its occupants, etc., and to report to me anything noticed by them of that description. R. E. Loring, Indian agent."

Stockholm, Sweden, Aug. 12.—The following telegram from Verges Harbor was dispatched by Prof. Andree on Aug. 3: "Balloon has been filled for several days and all is ready for the ascent. Thus far everything has occurred as anticipated. The wind is still northerly; otherwise all well."

August 12, p. 1: CAN IT BE ANDREE? / BRITISH COLUMBIA INDIANS SAW A BALLOON. / It was 500 Miles North of Victoria and Sailing Due North—The Explorers Driven Far Out of Their Course—History of the Expedition—Very Like a Whale. /

Ottawa, Aug. 11.—An interesting announcement is conveyed in a telegram received by the government to-day from Vowell, Indian superintendent for British Columbia. The message reads as follows: "Creditable information received by Agent Lomas from two Indian parties, separated by long distance at time of observation, that the Andree balloon had been sighted in latitude 55.15, longitude 127.40, pursuing a nearly northern course." The point indicated by latitude and longitude given in Vowell's dispatch is about 100 miles up the Skeena river and nearly 500 miles north of Victoria.

Ottawa, Aug. 11.—Andree and his adventurous companions were waiting at Amsterdam Island, Spitzbergen, last week for a favorable wind, but no information had reached here that the balloon had actually started. If they had left and the balloon reported in theirs, instead of being nearer the north pole they are 15 degrees further south of it in British Columbia than when they left Hammerfest. /

All the governments of northern countries have issued notices requesting people to be on the look out for the Andree balloon, and to render assistance should it be found anywhere. The Canadian government and Hudson's Bay company have been careful to make the fact of the balloon known among the Indians and Eskimos, as it was probable the aerial voyagers might be driven southerly, and desire to land on Canadian territory.

1896 October 23 (Fri) San Francisco Examiner, p. 7.

(card 1)

A QUEER THING IN THE SKY. / Visitors at the Cliff House Witness a Novel Spectacle. / What Appeared to Be a Comet With Fiery Head and Tail Goes Whizzing Rapidly Eastward Over the Water.

Shortly after 6 o'clock last night a stray meteor or comet or something of that sort was seen from the vicinity of the Cliff House. The blazing body whizzed through the heavens about 10 miles out at sea, and was traveling eastward, as if it had important business on the other coast.

Mayor Sutro was returning home about the time the meteor performed; but as his Honor was stepping from a car he missed the startling spectacle. However, it was described to him by some men who happened to see the rushing streak of fire.

"As described to me the appearance of the comet, if such it was, must have been grand," said the Mayor last night. "Half a dozen men who saw the phenomenon, which only lasted a few minutes, said they never before witnessed anything like it. At 6:15 o'clock the display was sighted. The men described it as a vividly bright object, moving with great rapidity and about 500 feet above the water. It traveled in a straight line horizontally and seemed to have a head. A long trail of fire extended behind the flying object, the color of the flame being similar to that of electric light. In a few minutes the display passed out of sight, but it illuminated the sea with a great light while it lasted.

"It was a very wonderful thing indeed. I never heard of or saw anything like it myself. The men were very much excited, as they could not understand the occurrence. It could hardly have been a meteor, as they always strike the earth or explode before coming down. Had it been a meteor the earth's attraction would have caused it to descend. My idea is that a small comet was seen by the men." /

THREE METEORS IN LINE.

Residents of Nevada, Cal., Witness a Thrilling Light in the Heavens. NEVADA, October 22.—A triple connected meteor was observed in the northern heavens at ten minutes past six o'clock this evening. Three balls of fire all in a row and connected like a train of cars with a long fiery tail flashed in view just a few degrees above the western horizon and traveled in a direction a little north of east. In half a minute it disappeared from view high in the heavens, apparently some where over the great Dipper and North Star. See Addendum, p. 364

1896 November 18 (Wed) Sacramento Evening Bee, p. 1. (card 1)

VOICES IN THE SKY. / People Declare They Heard Them and Saw a Light. / AERIAL SHIP, GHOST STORY, OR METEOR—AS YOU LIKE. / Anyway, the Light Was Seen, and It Acted Very Strangely—Carmen Told Cashier Lusk of What They Claimed to Have Heard and Seen—Nothing Heard Up to Date as to What the Object Is or Whence It Came.

Last evening between the hours of 6 and 7 o'clock, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and ninety-six, a most startling exhibition was seen in the sky in this city of Sacramento. People standing on the sidewalks at certain points in the city between the hours stated, saw coming through the sky over the housetops, what appeared to them to be merely an electric arc lamp propelled by some mysterious force. It came out of the East and sailed unevenly toward the southwest, dropping now nearer to the earth, and now suddenly rising into the air again as if the force that was whirling it through space was sensible of the dangers of collision with objects upon the earth.

That such hundreds of the people saw. That such caused consternation in this city last night among groups gathered to hear the tale. What follows some of the witnesses to the strange spectacle assert to be as true as the circumstances related.

VOICES IN THE SKY.

Startled citizens last night living at points of the city along a rough diagonal line, yet far distant from each other, declare that they not only saw the phenomenon, but they also heard voices issuing from it in mid-air—not the whispering of angels, not the sepulchral mutterings of evil spirits, but the intelligible words and the merry laughter of human.

At those intervals where the glittering object, as if careless of its obligation to maintain a straightforward course, descended dangerously near the housetops, voices were heard in the sky saying:

"Lift her up quick! You are making directly for that steeple!"

Then the light in the sky would be seen obeying some mystic touch and ascending to a considerable height, from which it would take up again its southwesterly course.

The light sailed along the line of K Street, so it appeared from those in the eastern part of the city, although it appears that after it had passed Fourteenth Street it was wafted far south of K.

Laughter and words sounding strange in the distance, though fairly intelligible, fell upon the ears of pedestrians along the course of the light who had paused to look up at the novelty.

COMING TO CALIFORNIA.

Last night's Bee contained a telegram from New York announcing that a man had perfected an air ship and would on Friday of this week, accompanied by one or two friends, ascend from a vacant lot in the metropolis and go directly to California, which he promised to reach in two days. The description furnished in the telegram included an apparatus which was electrical to supply light and power for the astonishing contrivance. It is not regarded as likely, in view of the announcement contained in the dispatch, that last night Sacramento was overtaken by this aerial ship. But here is the incident—here the chronicle of words heard, of a strange spectacle witnessed. Whence the light, which was not a meteor all agree, came, whither it went, where it now is—these things it is not within the capacity of this article to deal with.

MR. LUSK'S STORY.

Charles Lusk, Cashier of the Central Electrical Street Railway Company, was at his home at Twenty-fourth and O Streets, last evening when, having stepped outside, he saw the remarkable appearance in the sky. He went into the house and told the inmates of what he had seen.

This morning Mr. Lusk mentioned the incident to some of the carmen and was amazed to learn from them that they had seen such a light as he described while they were in the neighborhood of East Park. More than that, they heard music and voices. One voice distinctly said:

"Well, we ought to get to San Francisco by to-morrow noon."

The carmen say they caught some faint ideas of the shape of the object that was floating in the air. It was of balloon shape, and they concluded that it was a balloon.

THEY SAW IT.

Foreman Snider, of the Car Barn, Says It Was Not a Meteor.

This afternoon G.C. Snider, foreman of the car house of the Electric Car Company, gave the following to The Bee:

"I assure you there is no joke about this matter, so far as I am concerned. Last evening, about ten minutes before 7 o'clock, I saw a light, which was then above, approximately, Twenty-seventh and P Streets, sailing in a southwesterly direction. It rose and fell and swayed from right to left as if it were being propelled by some motor power. It was a white light, and was not a star or a meteor. I am certain of that.

"Mr. Lowry, who used to be connected with the car company, told me that he saw the thing when it was directly over head and that it had a wheel, which was going round.

"I don't think it was a balloon, for it was going in the southwest and a heavy wind was blowing from that direction. David Curl, a horse-trainer at the race track, told me that he heard voices in the balloon, or whatever it was.

"I learn that Michael Shelly, carman on car 103 on the J Street line, distinguished the shape of the affair."

1896 November 18 (Wed.) The Call (San Francisco), p. 3.

CLAIM THEY SAW A FLYING AIRSHIP / Strange Tale of Sacramento Men Not Addicted to Prevarication. / Viewed an Aerial Courser as It Passed over the City at Night. / Declare They Heard Voices of Those Aboard Joined in Merry Chorus. /

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Nov. 17.—A vast amount of excitement was created among residents in the outskirts of the city to-night by the appearance of what they claim to have been an airship, which, seemingly under perfect control, passed over the city, going in the direction of San Francisco. The sky was obscured by heavy clouds and it was impossible to ascertain the shape and size of the aerial conveyance, presuming it to be such, but the onlookers followed its course by the lights displayed, which were about twice the brilliancy and size of an arc light.

In speaking of the appearance of the reputed airship, an eye-witness of undoubted veracity said: "When my attention was called to the travelling light it was, I should judge, about 1000 feet high, but as it approached the city limits it arose to probably an elevation of 2000 feet. When I first saw it it was approaching from a northeasterly direction, and on arriving at the city limits it bore off to the south until past the city, when it turned toward the southwest as if resuming its course toward San Francisco.

"When the airship passed over the streetcar company's barn, a crowd of the employes came out, and they claim that they distinctly heard people's voices singing in a chorus, a rattling song, which gradually died away in the distance. The lights of this mysterious visitant were visible for upward of thirty minutes, until they passed out of sight."

A lineman in the employ of the Postal Telegraph service claims to have seen the same visitant about 9 o'clock a.m. in the vicinity of Suisun on Sunday evening. The impression here seems to be that some one has solved the mystery of aerial navigation, and is conducting his experiments at night in order to escape impertinent curiosity.

Men in charge of East Park, which lies outside the city limits, state that as the airship passed over the park the voices of men, who seemed to be disputing as to whether they should cause their conveyance to rise higher, could be heard. The lights then rose rapidly into the air and passed on.

AIR SHIP, OR WHAT? / Various Views Expressed Respecting Tuesday Night's Quasar Phenomenon. / ALL MEN LIARS? LOOKS THAT WAY! / But Then How Is That Fluctuating White Light in the Sky to be Accounted for? / BARNICK SAYS IT CAN'T BE A METEOR. / And If Barwick Doesn't Know, the People Who Give Their Ideas May Be Pardoned for Entertaining Rather Riotous Fancies on the Subject.

Nothing of a trustworthy character has been heard of the present whereabouts of the air ship, or the what-is-it, which swept over the housetops of Sacramento Tuesday evening, in sight of many citizens who have not served terms in the County Jail for drunkenness nor attained even local renown as romancers.

Meanwhile the sensation groweth apace. Last evening, after the publication of interviews with reputable parties in The Bee, the subject of the "voices in the sky" was the topic of conversation in the restaurants, hotels, and wherever people congregate. The general sentiment was that the light was either a meteor or an attachment to a balloon which had ascended from some point near the city, and the notion that it was part of an air ship was scouted as ridiculous. That such a light as was described in The Bee last night swept in a more or less diagonal line through Sacramento between 6 and 7 o'clock Tuesday evening is indisputable. That voices were heard traveling with the light certain persons assert with great solemnity. That the light was suspended under a contrivance of egg shape, with paddles whirring on the sides, one or two witnesses have been found with the hardihood to describe. That there is some mystery about the circumstance a great number of people believe. That the antics of the light, as in wobbling this way and that, and going up and down are embellishments to a grand hoax, the majority of citizens will probably agree.

On thing most of the witnesses to the phenomenon are positive about is that the light was white like that shed by an arc lamp. Weather Observer Barwick is at as much loss as anybody to account for the appearance in the sky. He says the color of a meteor would be affected by the density of the atmosphere through which it was darting and on an evening like that of Tuesday he believes the light of such an aerial visitor would most likely be purplish, and in no event the extreme white of an arc lamp.

1896 November 19 (Th) Sacramento Evening Bee, p. 1. "Aerop Or What?" (card 2)

Various rumors are afloat but they can scarcely be given credence. One, published in this morning's Record-Union, is to the effect that an air ship has been in course of construction for some time at Oak Park, and that on Tuesday evening a trial trip of the conveyance was made through the city, and out to Arcade where it broke down and is now awaiting repairs.

The authority of Ex-Senator F.S. Sprague is given for the loss of a carpenter's hammer from a scaffolding surrounding the steeple of St. Paul's Church, left there a few hours before the passage of the alleged ship, but this incident is not substantiated.

A Dream Realized.

To the Editor of The Bee—Sir: This is truly an age of invention. I have thought for years that I would live to see the air navigated, and since reading in your valuable paper of last evening of the great air ship passing over this city on the night of Tuesday, I feel assured that I am to realize that hope of aerial navigation. In your issue of Monday or Tuesday a telegram was published saying that this air ship was to start from New York, and make the trip to San Francisco in 48 hours. However, it seems to have made it in less than half the scheduled time.

These navigators of the ethereal regions must have had an experience far more interesting than that of Dr. Nansen, in his search for the North Pole. What a cold strata they must have passed through, when they looked down upon the crest of Pike's Peak! What an altitude they must have attained when they hovered over the dizzy heights of the Rockies! What scenery must have delighted their vision as they looked down upon the waters of Lake Tahoe, and the summits of the high Sierras glittering with the scintillations of snows and glaciers that have been forming for a thousand Winters!

What a prospect must they have enjoyed, as the Mississippi, the "father of Waters," and the Missouri, the "great muddy," looked rivulets, extending from Yellowstone Park on the one hand and Lake Itaska on the other to the Gulf of Mexico!

Imagine them at the dizzy elevation they must have gained in order to increase the length of vision, looking in on Cuba and seeing Weyler being chased by the Insurgents with their machetes and at the same time taking in everything from the Yukon on the north to Patagonia on the south, watching the progress of the Nicaragua and Panama canals, taking a look at the site of the New Monte Carlo at Juarez, the overflowed country in Washington and Oregon, and casually looking after the Schonburgk line in Venezuela.

How their hearts must have gladdened when, coming over the Sierras, they lowered their bird-like vehicle of passage, drank in the refreshing ozone of the pines just below the snow belt, then into the Sacramento Valley, the garden spot of earth, where they soared just above the tree tops, where the atmosphere was pregnant with the perfume of the magnolia and the chrysanthemum. As they passed over Sacramento they lowered their boat so as just to escape the church spires, threw out their illuminators, played guitars, hurred for the Capital City and the Folsom electric power, and those with an acute sense of hearing say they could hear the bear corks pop, and the captain say they had provisions and liquor enough for a six days' passage.

Since the Portland Oregonian said that San Francisco was the tender loin of America, they decided to stay out of its tainted atmosphere.

and pass over Hilpitas. By this time they have, doubtless, looked in upon Honolulu, passed over the islands once ruled by Queen Lili, and are now no doubt looking down upon the land of the Mikado.

They, perhaps, will look in upon Li Hung Chang, the man with the yellow jacket and three-eyed peacock feathers, pass over Mt. Everest, the highest mountain in the world, from which elevated position they can gaze upon famished India, walled-in China, plateaued Thiber, the Philippine Islands, that are giving Spain so much trouble, and away off in the frozen north, immense Siberia, with its new 5000-mile railroad. To-morrow they can look down upon Moscow and St. Petersburg and on Constantinople, and Athens, and Rome, and Paris, and London, and the next day they will cross the Atlantic!

Surely, as I said in the beginning, this is the age of invention, but who would have thought prior to the 3d of November that it was possible to go around the world in 80 hours! The wildest dreams of Jules Verne could not be more romantic, and the most exaggerating of the writings of Muchausen seem to pale into insignificance in comparison.

CONSTANT READER.
Look Out for Squalls.

To the Editor of The Bee—Sir: The extraordinary astronomical phenomenon appearing to the citizens of Sacramento yesterday evening as published by you in your to-day's issue, is without doubt the most notable event of the century; and we must accept this visitation as a warning to look out for squalls. The theory of warships, balloons, meteors, atomized fire balloons, and other wild-cat notions, must be accepted with a large grain of salt and scientists must realize that we are hazy hanging on the ragged edge of evolution, and that we must stand ready to receive the revolution of a new creation. The researches of electricians have depleted the atmosphere of the electric fluid which is the life of the world. This subtle force has hitherto formed the equilibrium of the planets in their correct spheres, and maintained the gravitating force of our earth. The expanded force of human energy, the extraordinary excitement evolved during the Presidential campaign, the waste of breath by the millions who discussed the bimetallic question, the wreckage of the A.P.A. organization against the rocks of "hard cash," the payment of election bets by Trustee Devine, the passage of the pool room ordinance, and the deterioration in the quality of tonales, substituting here for chicken, are the main factors of atmospheric disturbance. The phenomenon is merely an instance of cause and effect.

The mere effort to discuss the visitation of this phenomenon intelligibly would be a labor of such colossal [sic] magnitude as to stop the rotation of the earth round its axis and increase the price of shrimps to such an extent that beef tea would be at a premium, and the California rancher be able to wear a clean shirt on Thanksgiving Day.
C.J. / Sacramento, November 18, 1896.

A Trial Trip, Maybe.

To the Editor of The Bee—Sir: I see by your paper that on last Tuesday evening a magnificent air ship appeared over the city of Sacramento, and, without pausing in its flight, sailed onward toward the west. I have long been expecting something of this kind to occur. A few years ago I received a tip from a friend in the East that Thos. A. Edison had in course of preparation a machine that would revolutionize warfare. In thinking the matter over I came to the conclusion that this new engine of destruction must be nothing more nor less than a flying man-of-war, fully armed and equipped with guns and dynamite.

All readers of the papers know that grave rumblings of war are being wafted across the Atlantic from the sunny shores of Spain, and that at the first gun crack half the nations of Europe might be drawn into the broil.

What time, therefore, could be more auspicious than the present for Edison to launch his machine?

I am convinced that in view of the threatening war clouds that have been lowering over our fair land that our Government has negotiated with Mr. Edison for the purchase of his ship, and that the splendid sight which appeared in the sky night before last was nothing more nor less than this ship making a trial trip, in charge of two or more army officers.

I saw a great deal of military life during the strike in this city two years ago and at that time I studied the habits of the soldiers, paying particular attention to their mode of speech, and I am confident that it was a soldier's voice that was heard apparently coming from the clouds night before last, giving the order "Shoot her up higher or you will hit that steepie."

If my theory is correct, and I am convinced that it is, the days of war will be forever held in leash, and the dove of peace will brood eternal silence o'er our land.

But the arrival of the air ship in Sacramento means even more than this, for a vessel that can carry guns and dynamite can carry merchandise, and there is no doubt that in a few years Sacramento will be the center of a score or more of atmospheric transportation lines.

I believe that aerial navigation has been successfully accomplished and that those who were fortunate enough to be gazing into the sky night before last saw that which will revolutionize the world. VERITAS.
Sacramento, November 19, 1896.

A Reported Apparition.

To the Editor of The Bee.—Sir: ~~Kindly~~ Kindly suppress my name, and I will explain how and when the remarkable sight of an air ship was first witnessed. On last Tuesday evening a little social affair was given at a cosy place on the eastern border of the town, by the Perpetual Jag Club, of which I have the honor to be a member. While seated around the table enjoying the solid comfort that accompanies plentiful libations of steam beer, one of our members, who had absented himself for a few minutes, rushed into our midst and declared that an immense, three-masted schooner was sailing through the sky and that the man at 17 the helm was no more nor less than our late President, Handsome Brady, who was removed from office for having upset a glass of good liquor. Mortified at the consequences of his rash act, our President had arisen from the table, and with a wave of his hand, announced that he would go, but would some day return in a manner that would startle the community.

So, when the announcement was made that Brady had returned, we all rushed to the door and there beheld a sight that I shall never forget. Less than 100 feet distant from the ground there was a magnificent schooner. Her bow was mounted with an immense serpent, out of whose eyes shot great flames of fire, and from the jack staff floated a pennant containing two demi-johns rampant, and a canteen couchant. On the deck were piled cords upon cords of bottled whisky, and at the helm was our lamented President, who, the moment he saw us, gave as the horse laugh and as the crew broke into a rollicking drinking song, the ship disappeared in the distance.

This is all true, on the honor of one of the most bibulous frequenters of the cock-tail routh, and a charter member of the Perpetual Jaggers.

Please do not use my name, but allow me to sign myself,

B.U. THIRSTY.

Sacramento, November 19th.

Can This Be True?

To the Editor of The Bee—Sir: I wish you newspapers would furnish a key to your jokes, although what you see funny in such a thing as this airship story rather beats me. I do not believe a word of it. I have always had great respect for the newspaper fraternity, and have the distinction of being an honorary member of Newspaper Writers' Union, No. 3, of this city, as the beautiful certificate enclosed in an oak frame hanging in my office will show. At the time I had this honor thrust upon me I understood that it was the intention to establish a Bohemian resort where we could discuss tamales and beer and pass profitable evenings and I parted, with much satisfaction, with the $5 asked.

Since I have not yet been handed my key to the Bohemian quarters, I am forced to believe that the active members of the Union have appropriated the money for banquet among themselves and that they were in the enjoyment of the after effects of this feed when they conceived the idea of this aerial ship and sprang it upon a suffering public.

CONSTANT READER.

Sacramento, November 19, 1896.

A Car Barn Conspiracy.

To the Editor of The Bee—Sir: A peculiar feature of this airship story, it appears to me, is the prominence in which the attaches of the Central Electric Railway Company figure in it. I read in this morning's paper, for example, that Carman So and So and Carman Somebody Else and Mr. So and So of the car barn, saw this and thus I am unwilling to think that these hardworking and sober citizens have suddenly become a race of merry lars, and I merely mention the matter as a singular circumstance.

X. Y. Z.

Sacramento, November 19, 1896.

Sensation Reaches Patterson's.

To the Editor of The Bee—Sir: It has been rumored out here at Patterson's Station that an airship was seen passing over Sacramento propelled by two bicycle riders. Have you heard the story? If so, will you please let me know if there is any truth in it?
VOX POPULI. / Patterson's, November 19, 1896.

A Voice From Sutter.

To the Editor of The Bee—Sir: It is being currently reported here that certain Sacramento citizens who were in the neighborhood of a Twenty-eighth-Street brewery last night saw an airship carrying a minstrel show from New York to Sacramento. The story meets with little credence in this community, where we are all farmers. On Tuesday a fisherman living on the banks of Cat Fish Slough captured a sand hill crane, and after tying a Chinese lantern to one of its legs let it go. When last seen it was flying toward Sacramento at a speed of about fifty miles an hour, and must have passed over your city between 7 and 8 o'clock in the evening. Please find out if any one who saw the airship saw the sand hill crane, and oblige. / ~~THE~~ PRO BONO PUBLICO.
Nicolaus, Sutter County, Nov. 18th.

TRUCKEE HAS 'EM AGAIN.

A Correspondent Imagines That He Saw a Big Airship.

The following communication, if the writer was not under the influence of that terrible whiskey at Truckee should stop all speculation about the strange spectacle of last Tuesday night. It will prove to old toppers who gazed into the sky and saw the mysterious light moving over the city that they did not have the delirium tremens. It will prove to religious fanatics that the ball of fire was not a forerunner of the conflagration to come, and it should convince doubting Thomases that the wild dream of Darius Green has come true.

TRUCKEE, Nov. 18.—Considerable amusement was created here when the papers arrived and told of the consternation which prevailed in Sacramento over the flight of a ball of fire across that city. That supposed ball of fire was an immense glass globe lighted by electricity, and was really the "wheel house" of a great air ship.

About 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon the people of this place were astonished to see a wonderful machine sailing through the air from an easterly direction. After hovering above the town for a few moments the machine circled around and gracefully descended to the earth, lighting in the Plaza alongside of the Ice Palace. In a short time it was surrounded by hundreds of men, women and children. The Indians who saw the thing ran howling in fright towards the woods. On the sides of the affair were painted the words "Meteor" and while it resembled a ship, it had great wings similar to those of a bird. They are operated by means of machinery worked by an electric storage battery, and the entire apparatus, which is twenty-five feet in length, is constructed of aluminum.

In the strange craft was the distinguished Phineas Fogg, who is attempting to beat his round-the-world record of eighty days. He was accompanied by three friends, who started with him from New York on Monday morning. They landed at this place to send a telegram to home friends, announcing that they had decided to avoid San Francisco. Mr. Fogg said he and his friends enjoyed themselves by day in gazing at the country, and at night they played poker for the drinks, after setting the screws of the machine to keep high enough up to escape church spires and mountain peaks. After remaining here for fifteen or twenty minutes, the aerial navigators stepped into the ship, a button was pressed, and the wonderful thing arose into the air, glided swiftly towards the west, and barely missed McClashan's museum building which is perched up on the top of the big rocking stone.

1896 November 19 (Th morn) San Francisco Call, p. 1. (card 1)

STRANGE CRAFT OF THE SKY / Sacramento Men Describe the Airship. / Claim They Saw Its Occupants and Heard Them in Conversation.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Nov. 18.--The one topic of conversation in this city to-day has been the reported appearance of an airship over the eastern portion of Sacramento last night. While there are hundreds of people who, failing to catch a glimpse of this mysterious visitant, are extremely skeptical, there are hundreds of others who are positive in their declaration that they did see its brilliant searchlight traveling over the city, and who will also swear that they heard the voices of its occupants and distinguished their merry song and laughter. Then there are others who declare that these aerial travelers used the English tongue, and that they plainly distinguished the words used and commands uttered for the guidance and care of the air vessel.

In investigating this mysterious visitation the local representative of The Call obtained personal interviews with scores of reputable citizens who reside along the route, passed over by the air craft. Many of them lived fully a mile or two distant from each other, but their accounts all agree.

As far as can be learned from eyewitnesses, the body of the craft was oblong and egg-shaped, with fan-like wheels on either side, whose rapid revolutions, beating the air, served to propel the vessel directly against the wind, and in so doing caused the vessel to sway from side to side with a wavering motion, similar to that of a boat being forced against the rapid current of a stream.

Midway of the vessel and suspended directly beneath it was a brilliant searchlight about twice the size of an arc light, evidently so placed that the occupants could ascertain when the vessel approached too near the earth and was in danger of collision with lofty objects. Above the egg-shaped body towered a tall, indistinguishable mass, whose shape it was impossible to ascertain, owing to the fact that the onlooker's [sic] eyes were blurred by the brilliancy of the searchlight.

Such is the description of the vessel given by R.L. Lowry, who also claims to have been able to distinguish four men, who were seemingly engaged in propelling the vessel by its fanlike wheels, much after the fashion of a bicyclist driving his wheel over a boulevard. It is also claimed that a bystander in the vicinity of Mr. Lowry shouted to the men in the aerial vessel and inquired their destination and that they replied they were bound for San Francisco and intended arriving by 12 o'clock--midnight. This, however, could not be verified, as no one appeared to know the name of the reputed interrogator J.H. Vogel, who claimed to have been in the same locality, also states that the vessel was egg-shaped, and that he distinctly heard the voices of its occupants, but says that as the vessel was rapidly rising he was unable to distinguish any words, and that after a brief glimpse of the body of the airship it faded from view and all that was visible was the brilliant searchlight, which moved slowly away in a southwesterly direction, going toward San Francisco, and being visible for upward of thirty minutes, growing more and more dim, until it disappeared in the distance.

E. Wenzel, who is employed at Scheld's Brewery, verifies the stories of Vogel and Lowry as to the shape of the vessel, but claims that when it passed over him the occupants were trolling a merry chorus which, though distant, sounded sweet and clear in the evening air.

The first person who, as far as can be learned, caught a glimpse of the reputed airship was David Carl, a horse-trainer at Agricultural Park. When he first caught sight of the craft it was within a short distance of the ground, and he states that he heard a voice saying: "We are too low down here; send her up higher."

Then a discussion followed as to the advisability of attaining too great a height, as the occupants were evidently anxious to reach San Francisco before midnight. He stated that the vessel then started to rise, doing so on an incline and not going directly up as would be the case had ballast been cast from a balloon. He had no idea, however, that it was anything but a balloon and had never even thought of the possibility of an airship. He was positive in his declaration that it contained at least two occupants, as he could clearly distinguish two voices discussing the strata of air best adapted for rapid traveling.

E.P. de Long when interviewed said: "I could not distinguish the shape of the vessel. All I could see was a brilliant light moving seemingly against the wind, but I could plainly hear the voices of its occupants, who were singing, and it sounded to me like the noise produced by a phonograph. At this time I should judge the vessel was several hundred feet high."

Frank Ross, assistant superintendent of the electric streetcar system, when interviewed said: "I did not see the form of the vessel nor did I hear the voices of its occupants, as I was not informed until it had passed my residence. All that I saw was a brilliant electric searchlight, apparently twice the size and power of an ordinary arc light, which was being propelled through the air by some mysterious force. From what I have learned from my employes--men of undoubted veracity--I am certain that this can by no possibility have been a 'fake', but that a genuine airship passed over the city last evening. I watched the light until it passed out of sight thirty minutes later. It was traveling unevenly toward the southwest, dropping now nearer to the earth and now suddenly rising into the air again as if the force that was whirling it through space was sensible of the danger of collision with objects upon the earth. I, of course, have no idea as to its destination or purpose. I can only say that I am fully convinced by what I have heard that it was something out of the ordinary."

G.C. Snyder, foreman of the streetcar barn, states: "I am fully convinced that an aerial vessel of some description passed over this building last night about 6:30 o'clock. At the time my attention was called to it the craft was at too great an elevation for me to distinguish its form, but I distinctly saw the searchlight, which was going directly into the wind, and from its movement judged that it was attached to a vessel of some description, which was laboring as a sea-going vessel will in a heavy sea and head wind. I also find that hundreds of residents in this portion of the city saw the light, and the are hundreds who claim that they heard the voices of the occupants of the visitor."

Charles Lusk, secretary of the company, also states that he saw the light traveling over the city.

Mayor Hubbard says that personally he failed to catch a glimpse of this aerial visitant, as he was engaged in his office downtown when it passed over, but he stated to The Call representative that upon arriving at his residence in the upper portion of the city his daughter told him that she had seen a brilliant white light, seemingly at great elevation, which had come toward the city from the east and passed directly over it, moving in a southwesterly direction. She said it certainly was not a meteor, as it was a different shade of light and moved too slowly and unevenly, and she was at a loss to account for it.

F.E. Briggs, a motorman on one of the streetcars running to Oak Park, saw the light of the traveling airship, and at the request of the occupants of his crowded vehicle he stopped his car for a moment. He says that while they could not discern the form of the airship, yet the voices of the occupants were plainly heard. He had been informed by a man who resided in the vicinity of East Park, where the air vessel had been first seen, that it was a genuine airship, cigar or egg shaped, and that it had at least four occupants. When the vessel passed over his car he judged that the occupants were singing, but they were at such a height that neither he nor his passengers were enabled to distinguish the words or the tune, as they came in broken snatches, as though borne on gusts of the night wind.

When H.W. Marsh saw the traveling light it was at least five miles away. He thought that it was attached to some aerial vessel, owing to its wavering motion through the atmosphere.

E. Caverly saw the light, but refused to be interviewed on the subject, evidently ~~being~~ deeming it to be uncanny.

M.T. Shelly, a gentleman of undoubted veracity, saw the airship's light, and at one time, when the craft careened somewhat so as to partially obscure the light, he caught sight of the vessel itself, which he declared to be a cigar-shaped receptacle, with what seemed to be a dark wall above it.

Hundreds of similar interviews could be obtained. In this connection the Evening Bee published the following account:

Startled citizens last night living at points of the city along a rough diagonal line, yet far distant from each other, declare that they not only saw the phenomenon but they also heard voices issuing from it in midair--not the whispering of angels, not the sepulchral mutterings of ~~the~~ evil spirits, but the intelligible words and the merry laughter of humans. At those intervals where the glittering object, as if careless of its obligation to maintain a straightforward course, descended dangerously near the housetops voices were heard in the sky saying:

"Lift her up, quick; you are making directly for that stern!"
Then the light in the sky would be seen obeying some mystic touch and ascending to a considerable height, from which it would take up again its southwesterly course. The light sailed along the line of K street, so it appeared from those in the eastern part of the city, although it appears that after it had passed Fourteenth street it was wafted far south of K. Laughter and words sounding strange in the distance, though fairly intelligible, fell upon the ears of pedestrians along the course of the light who had paused to look up at the novelty.

Last night's Bee contained a telegram from New York announcing that a man had perfected an airship and would on Friday of this week, accompanied by one or two friends, ascend from a vacant lot in the metropolis and go directly to California, which he promised to reach in two days. The description furnished in the telegram included an apparatus which was electrical, to supply light and power for the astonishing contrivance.

It is not regarded as likely, in view of the announcement contained in the dispatch, that last night Sacramento was overswept by this aerial ship.

"But here is the incident--here the chronicle of words heard, of a stranger's spectacle witnessed. Whence the light, which was not a meteor all agree, came, whither it went, where it now is--these things it is not within the capacity of this article to deal with."

Then follow interviews similar to those obtained by The Call representative.

Among the eye-witnesses of last night's singular spectacle the wildest speculations are rife. As to the destination and object to be obtained by this night voyage of a reputed airship, one of those onlookers informed The Call representative that in his opinion it was the same invention which it is rumored Edison claimed to have perfected and offered to the Government at the time when the Venezuelan boundary question came up, and that now that relations were strained with Spain the Government has sent a party of engineers out in the airship to test its practicability, and that they were keeping away from populous localities, except during the night trips.

The opinion of the masses is, however, that some lucky inventor, having solved the mystery of aerial navigation, is, with his companions, testing his invention in secret, with no intent of allowing a curious public to view it until his rights are fully protected by letters patent. They presume that he is traveling by night and flying by in desert spots during the day. Be that as it may, there can be no possible doubt that an aerial vessel of some kind passed over Sacramento last night, and hundreds of the residents of this city will so testify.

The residents of Oak Park claim to have a little mystery of their own which may possible bearing (sic) of this subject. They state that yesterday afternoon an object was seen in the sky at such a great elevation as to be almost indistinguishable. It moved slowly in a circle, leaving a volume of smoke behind it. This phenomenon was seen by many, who are unable to account for it.

A rumor is afloat in the city to-night that the airship was constructed near this city and that a trial trip was attempted last evening, a cable being used to confine the machine to a certain elevation.

It is stated that the cable parted and the vessel then drifted over the city and became the observed of all observers. This rumor cannot be confirmed at this late hour, but it is claimed that T. Allen who formerly conducted an employment office in this city, states that such is the case and that one of the men who had made the assertion had informed him that the trial was a success and the vessel worked well, except that it was impossible to fully control its movements. In consequence the inventors had, after going toward San Francisco always, returned and landed in a vacant field some distance from Arcade and about six miles from the city limits. This tale is not generally credited.

THREE WEEKS AGO. / Story Told by a Hunter Living on Bolinas Ridge.

On Sunday the first day of this month, a representative of The Call met on Bolinas Ridge, just to the west of Mount Tamalpais, an old hunter living there, named Brown. The old man was very nervous and started a conversation immediately by asking:

"So I look like a crazy man?"

"Why certainly not, Mr. Brown. Why do you ask?"

"Well," he replied, "I don't expect anybody to believe me. To tell the truth I can hardly believe myself. But it's an honest fact that yesterday morning when the fog began to lift, I saw an airship right up there a couple of hundred feet over them hills."

"No, I can't tell you much what she looked like. She didn't show very plainly through the mist, but I saw a large, dark shape with something moving on it. Don't know whether I saw any people or not. It came on me so sudden I was almost stunned, and by the time I collected my senses she was out of sight."

"I have been kind of dazed ever since, and to have you tell me that I don't look crazy is a great relief. But I know that what I saw was an airship."

As the "superior" type of mirage is not uncommon to people living on the Marin hills it was thought that this was what the old man had seen, so no attention was paid to his story. The mirage effect of a large ocean vessel passing through the sky might appear to him like some new-fangled machine for navigating the air.

Perhaps the mirage is what he really saw, but in the face of the stories circulated in regard to the airship there is a probability that is what Mr. Brown really saw. Certainly he would have no object in telling such a story. (Pic. - The Airship That Passed Over Sacramento Tuesday Evening, as Described by Scores of Eye-Witnesses.)

1896 November 19 (Th) San Francisco Chronicle, p. 5.

1 STRANGE TALE OF A FLYING MACHINE. / ROMANCE FROM SACRAMENTO / SAID TO HAVE BEEN SEEN BY MANY CITIZENS. / It Looks Like a Fake of Large Size --Mysterious Light Seen at the Capital City. / Special Dispatch to the "Chronicle."

SACRAMENTO, November 18.--What is probably one of the greatest hoaxes that has ever been sprung on any community has been started in this city, and yet were it not for the improbability of the thing there would be the very best of reasons for believing it true.

At an early hour last evening a very brilliant light passed over the outwestern part of the city, traveling in a southwesterly direction. This much must be accepted as a fact, as it was seen by a score or more of persons at different points, among whom are some of the most reputable citizens of Sacramento. One of these, Frank Ross, assistant superintendent of the streetcar company, who was on Twenty-eighth street at the time, describes the light as closely resembling an arc lamp, and declares that it was traveling diagonally across the direction of the wind.

Charles Lusk, assistant cashier of the street-car company, who also saw the light, declares that he was struck with the resemblance borne to an arc lamp and was further astonished when he saw it rise and fall as though guided by some human agency.

The most remarkable story, however, is that told by R.L. Lowry, a carman who declares that he not only saw the light, but that he saw an air ship, and the men who were propelling it, and more than this, he heard the men talking. The description of the ship given by him is that the body was cigar-shaped and had a framework hanging below on which two men sat as they would on a bicycle. The lamp was suspended below the men and appeared to be inclosed in a globe. When he saw the affair it was not more than 100 feet from the earth, and he heard a voice say: "Throw her up higher or you will strike that steerle."

Lowry's story is borne out by Emil Wenzel, a barkeeper in the Sacramento Brewery, who also claims that he saw the ship and heard the voices, and Charles Boyles, a mechanic, and J.R. Vogel, a barkeeper, who also claim they saw the ship and heard the voices.

That a remarkable phenomenon appeared in the sky last night there can be no doubt, and although the general belief is that the airship story is a gigantic hoax, it is hard to account for the evident sincerity of those who claim they saw the machine and heard the voices.

1896 November 20 (Fri) The Call (San Francisco), p. 1. (card 1)

THAT PECULIAR NIGHT VISITANT / Many of Sacramento's Best Citizens Certain It Was an Airship. / Brilliancy of Its Light Caused Residents to Rush to Their Windows. / Many Theories Concerning the Strange Phenomenon, but the Mystery is Yet to Be Solved. /

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Nov. 19.--There have been as yet no new developments of a trustworthy character in this locality in regard to the mysterious aerial visitant which swept over this city on Tuesday evening with the exception that the number of persons who saw its brilliant searchlight are daily growing more numerous, or rather in light of what has been published have less fear of public censure and less hesitancy in making their identity known.

There are residents on the outskirts of the city who declare that they received notice of the passing of the airship by having their apartments illuminated by the brilliancy of its electrical light, and rushing to their windows under the impression that some neighboring residence was ablaze saw the brilliant light moving through the air overhead. In the meantime almost the sole subject of conversation is the mysterious visitant, and the leading greeting is: "Have you seen the airship?"

Those who failed to catch a glimpse of this brilliant light still persist in regarding it rather in the shape of a hoax, and numerous stories have been circulated of toy balloons, birds with Chinese lanterns attached and similar ridiculous explanations of this strange phenomenon, but those who were eye-witnesses--and their names are legion--are strenuous in their declarations that this can by no means be a myth, but was an aerial vessel of some description.

Among these eye-witnesses there were several who were practical electricians, and who claim that in their judgment this light was of an electrical character, and they also claim that to produce a light of this size and brilliancy it would require at least one horsepower, and that would mean a vessel capable of sustaining half a ton weight for the light alone, and the one thing most of the witnesses to the phenomenon are positive about is that the light was white, like that shed by an arc lamp.

Weather Observer, Barwick is at as much loss as anybody to account for the appearance in the sky. He says the color of a meteor would be affected by the density of the atmosphere through which it was darting, and on an evening like that of Tuesday, he believes, the light of such an aerial visitor would most likely be purplish, and in no event the extreme white of an arc lamp.

At all events there can be no possible room for doubt that something extremely mysterious passed over this city, and its passage was viewed by hundreds of Sacramento's best citizens. This no one denies, and yet there are hundreds who laugh the idea to scorn that the secret of aerial navigation has been solved, yet wait in fear and trembling lest some authentic news be received of the existence of a veritable airship, and they find that the laugh has been turned upon themselves. /

ONE BELIEVER IN OAKLAND. / John Grieser Says the Secret of Aerial Navigation is Solved.

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 19.--The account of the flying-machine which was seen over Sacramento Tuesday night has been read with great interest by one man, at least, in this city. John Grieser of 37 1/2 Twelfth street has hammered tacks into his shoes and studied the possibilities of making a flying-machine for many years. He has not rested at studying the problem, but has put much of his time during spare hours to the work of constructing something along the line of an aerial ship. It was only the fore part of August that he made a very successful trial of his machine. When seen by a Call representative he said:

"I was much interested in the article in to-day's Call and the picture that illustrates it. The man who designed that machine has the true idea of aerial navigation I believe. One must have a balloon of sufficient carrying or lifting capacity to support at least half of the weight to be carried and then means to navigate the air to do the balancing. I am a firm believer in the success of man to navigate the air and am ready to accept the news that some one has at last succeeded as told in the story from Sacramento."

"I have no doubt but that some one in the country has been at work on a machine and after getting one that would work had been out for a ride, when he got too low and was discovered."

"If I could have had an opportunity to get out and try my models I should have had a successful machine before this time. When I did make an experiment out in the street at an early morning hour I managed to move myself about, but striking the wires broke my machine. It has not since been repaired.

"I first took to working on a machine three years ago from reading an article which quoted an English scientific gentleman who said it was a possibility to be solved. I have never had the assistance of any aid or of any money to develop my models, and, with the exception of a boy, I do not allow any one to see what work I have done. He went and made up a big story about what he was doing and told it to a reporter some time since."

1896 November 20 (Fri) San Francisco Chronicle, p. 13. (card 1)

MORE OF A HOAX THAN AN AIRSHIP. / THE SACRAMENTO ENIGMA. / PROFESSOR DAVIDSON A. STRONG SKEPTIC. / Some Think That a Clever Kite Flyer Was Having Fun. /

Are there up in the sky four jolly and intrepid human travelers, paying their respects to Mars, singing quartets to Venus, and saluting the planets generally within hailing distance, or are the people of Sacramento affected with the disease known in polite society as "illumination staggers?"

That is the question.

The flying machine, with its wonderful arc-light attachment, has not yet paid its respects to San Francisco. Its occupants have either decided, like some strolling actors, that this is a jay town, anyhow, and too materialistic to be regarded with a sight of anything so uncommon, or they have made up their minds to drop in at Yokohama or Sydney for a few hours before steering for this locality.

Those dispatches from Sacramento created intense interest here in the mystery, and it was the principal topic of conversation on the streets all day yesterday. No matter how important the subject under discussion, business men would glance furtively at the sky every few moments and try to make their friends believe that they were simply looking at the weather. But the black oval speck with outstretched wings and mysterious wheels that they expected to see failed to show up above the horizon.

The police, who, when their duties become monotonous in the late night watches, are generally supposed to gaze steadily skyward, saw nothing in the nature of a moving light or a quarter-speed meteor yesterday morning. Up at headquarters they smiled disdainfully at the story and characterized it as a "sweet little fake," but nevertheless, when the night squads went out at 5:30 p.m., every man had about made up his mind to do a little amateur astronomy in addition to his other duties. They were not the only people infected with the fever, either. A smart peddler, who keeps strictly up to date, paraded Market street all afternoon with a bundle of cheap telescopes and a sign, "Watch out for the great New York air ship." He was sold out before nightfall.

Professor George Davidson is righteously indignant. When these wild-eyed stories confine themselves to mundane affairs he doesn't mind, but when they invade the heavens and interfere with the order of the stars he considers the affair a personal insult. "What do I think about it?" he said yesterday. "I think it's the outcome of a sort of freemasonry of liars. Half a dozen fellows have got together, sent up a balloon with some sort of an electric light attachment, and imagination has done the rest. It is a pure fake. Why, if I were to get up on top of the Chronicle tower and sing 'Yankee Doodle' or the 'Marseillaise,' do you think anybody down on the street could hear me?"

"Just look at the story from that statement about the singing alone, its enough to explode it. Then again, these illusionists declare that the machine had propellers on the sides. It was finally decided about ten years ago by expert aeronauts that no side mechanism of that kind could possibly help an air ship, but would, if anything, retard its progress. I expect a couple of thousand fools will be craning their necks and wearying their eyeballs to-night, looking through every kind of telescope and binocular that they can lay their hands on. I can tell you one thing, though, I am not going to be one of ~~xxxx~~ them."

Weather observer Hanson thinks that the whole affair is a practical joke, played by some clever kite-flyer, who has attached a lantern with a powerful reflector to his kite, and dragged it over Sacramento. Hanson says that Maxim and Langley have long ago exploded the theory that anything but an aeroplane will fly, and he doesn't believe that an object such as has been described to be hovering over Sacramento could have any bare chance to keep itself above the ground than a ~~xxxx~~ coffin.

1896 November 21 (Sat) Sacramento Bee, p. 4)

HOW THE AIR-SHIP STORY WAS RECEIVED. /

The Sacramento "voices in the sky" are probably the delayed echoes of those who talked through their hats" during the campaign.--Stockton Independent. /

The Sacramento air-ship may have been an illusion, but all the ~~xx~~ same the air ship is coming.--San Francisco Call.

If the resident Sacramento can see an air ship on a quiet night, what sort of sights will the legislator see when he strikes the town? --San Francisco Call. /

Now that the season is over for the sea serpent, there comes the announcement of a mysterious air ship that has been floating over Sacramento. It is too early in the season for the appearance of this bogie. When the Legislature meets, there may be a great many people up there who will see double, and others may have a wonderful obliquity of vision. The sea serpent never appeared off the Atlantic coast when there was any dearth of whiskey. The air ship or jack-o'-lantern cannot be verified properly without a liberal use of stimulant.

20 The conditions may be more favorable for such a view in Sacramento than anywhere else. It is not a matter of surprise that this spirit in the air should have been announced. The wonder is that it should have been seen so early in the season.--Oakland Tribune.

All in all, it is about the thinnest fake yet set afloat. The usual citizens of Woodland know better. Here it is no mystery, or illusion, but well known to be either the second coming of the Messiah or the promised visit of the angel Gabriel or Elijah of old times, from his trip to the skies. No, gentlemen fakers of Sacramento, you may impose on the unsuspecting bay city people, but you can't fool the Woodland patriarchs.--Woodland Mail.

The Sacramento and San Francisco dailies are giving up their space to accounts of that aerial craft said to have passed over Sacramento a few nights ago. Maybe it was the "advance agent of prosperity," so much talked ~~about~~ of by Republican papers but invisible to all other eyes, they both seem to have been of a decidedly mystical nature.--Napa Journal. /

We have always been told that constant use of Sacramento spirits would produce almost anything to a vivid imagination. That they should seize several hundred people on the same night and in the same way to evolve an air ship calls for an investigation of the recent ~~at~~ ~~xxxx~~ methods.--Marysville Appeal.

1896 November 21 (Sat) The Call (San Francisco), p. 3.

THAT AIRSHIP AGAIN. / Sacramento People Once More See Mysterious Light Passing Over the City.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Nov. 20.--Unless scores of residents in the eastern portion of the city have gone suddenly deaf the mysterious aerial visitant which passed over the city Tuesday night is still haunting the locality, and people here are becoming more and more convinced that it is an airship of some kind, which is making nightly trial trips through the surrounding heavens.

Men whose veracity cannot be doubted declare that the mysterious electrical light repassed the city far to the northward, going in a northeasterly direction, as though to the point from which it first came. This evening several persons declare that they plainly saw the mysterious lights moving through the air at a great distance from the earth, and they declare that from their movement they must have been attached to some aircraft. They at one time moved directly into the wind and again started off at a various tangents.

To-night's reports have as yet not been verified, but that the mysterious lights repassed the city, going northeast, on Wednesday night cannot be gainsaid, and the belief grows apace that some fortunate mortal has solved the mystery of aerial travel, has constructed his vessel in some quiet spot and is making a thorough test of its capacities before presenting it to the view of an incredulous public.

1896 November 22 (Sun.) The Call (San Francisco), p. 13. (card 1)

SAW THE MYSTIC FLYING LIGHT / Oaklanders Who Believe an Airship Hovered Over Them. / Say That They Saw a Dark Body Above the Glen. / It Was Headed for San Francisco and Seemed About to Come to Earth. /

Oakland Office San Francisco Call, / 908 Broadway, Nov. 21.

Some one must be operating an airship in this portion of the State twice within the past six weeks it has been seen by reliable residents of Oakland, and on each occasion it has presented the same appearance.

Six weeks ago a young lady was riding a wheel on Telegraph avenue when she saw a strange-looking object in the sky. It carried a powerful headlight, sufficiently strong to send out long bright rays into the darkness. It appeared to be going in a westerly direction and seemed to be gradually descending as it disappeared over St. Mary's College. She reported the affair to her brother, who is a motorman on the cemetery branch of the Piedmont road.

Last night a little after 5 o'clock, as a crowded car was going west toward Piedmont, the attention of the passengers was attracted to a peculiar-looking contrivance high up in the sky. The most peculiar feature of it was a powerful headlight and another light which seemed to be in the bottom of the machine and to shine directly on the earth. It came into view from the direction of East Oakland, passed over Piedmont, and according to the story of the passengers seemed to descend in such a manner as to indicate that it would land somewhere in San Francisco.

Many of the passengers took up their morning newspapers to-day expecting to see a full description of the peculiar object that they had seen so plainly, and were surprised and disappointed to find no report whatever of it.

They were so convinced that it must have landed across the bay that some of them telephoned to San Francisco last night and made inquiries regarding it. As nothing was known of it it is presumed that it must have changed course and landed somewhere else, for nothing can persuade those who saw it that it was not a genuine airship under full control.

All those who saw this strange object agree in its description and declare that it closely resembles the illustration that appeared in the Call last Thursday of the airship that scores of people witnessed as it passed over Sacramento last Wednesday night. Some of them distinctly saw the propelling arms and declare that they were in motion, but all are positive that the machine was brilliantly lighted, and that the lower light shed a large arc on the earth as it passed over, while the headlight could be seen for a great distance ~~xxxx~~ ahead of the machine.

One of the most mystified observers of the airship was Charles M. Ellis, the armorer of Companies A and F. Mr. Ellis is a middle-aged man and very deliberate in his manner of expression, and one not likely to be easily deceived. He declared this evening that he was as skeptical as a man could be when he first read about the Sacramento airship. He also declared that he had no alternative but to believe his own eyesight.

"I was going home to my dinner about half-past 5 last night," he said, "and was in the neighborhood of Twenty-fourth street and New Broadway, when I saw a strange-looking thing in the sky. It was coming from the eastward and at first I could see nothing but a bright light. When I first saw it the two lights appeared to be one and I thought it was a brilliant meteor. It was getting dusk, but the sky was clouded and just dark enough to permit any one to see plainly. The sky was sufficiently dark to make a background which would render any such object visible.

"As it came nearer I could see that there was some dark object along with the light. When it was nearly overhead I could clearly distinguish that it somewhat resembled a balloon traveling end on, with a bright light ahead, another one beneath it, and with that appeared to be wings both before and behind the light. It was at a great height above the earth, probably a thousand feet, but not so high as to make it impossible to distinguish what it was. I did not want to believe that it was an airship, for as I had regarded the previous report of one in the light of a joke. This time, however, I had no alternative. I had to believe what I saw.

"As soon as it passed over St. Mary's College, it appeared to descend gradually, but regularly, as though under perfect control, and it disappeared in the direction of San Francisco. Of course it was too dark and the machine was too far away to distinguish anything like people or to hear any sounds such as were heard in Sacramento. But there is no doubt in my mind that it was an airship supplied with electric lights and well manned."

Another witness to the visit of the airship is Selby Yost, a motor-man of the Piedmont road and a member of the Oakland Guard. He was a little behind time and was taking his car toward Piedmont, trying to recover the few minutes he was behind. As he passed Thirtieth street, a little boy stood in the road and cried, "Jee whiz, what's that?" The passengers heard it and immediately looked at the direction in the sky toward which the boy was pointing. They had no difficulty in seeing the airship.

"When I looked ahead," said Mr. Yost to-day, "I was mystified, and I may as well confess I was. I didn't like to admit to myself that I had suddenly gone crazy, but really for a moment I did wonder if my senses had deserted me. The passengers all reached out to look overhead, and those inside wanted to see what those outside were gazing at, so when they requested me to stop the car that they might all look I was practically forced to oblige them. They got out in the road and looked up at the airship, the most surprised crowd I ever saw in my life. There it was, sure enough, right overhead, and traveling on at a good rate, with its light blazing away, and the most uncanny-looking thing I ever saw.

"Airship or anything else, it was the most remarkable-looking object, and I am at a loss now to convince myself that I actually saw it. It was altogether a wonderful sight, and nobody could have ever made me believe that I would ever see such a thing. It was perfectly clear, and not only I but all the passengers saw it and watched it till it disappeared. I thought it must have landed across the bay, and I was somewhat surprised this morning to see that no mention was made of it in the papers. I would really like to have that thing found, so that I could satisfy myself as to how it worked, for a more interesting thing I have never seen."

Miss Hugstrom, who resides on Telegraph avenue, saw the same object about six weeks ago. The feature that impressed her most was the bright light which she distinctly saw. On returning home, she told her brother of what she had seen, but nothing more was thought of it until she read recently that a similar object had been seen in another part of the State.

Charles Hagstrom, the brother of the young lady who witnessed this queer object in the sky, is also in the employ of the Piedmont and Mountain View Railways.

"When my sister first told me what she had seen I treated it as a joke," he said this evening, "and placed little credence in her story, believing that she had seen nothing more mysterious than a falling star or meteor. When I heard the same thing had been seen elsewhere, last week, and heard again last night of what was seen in this part of town, I am now convinced that my sister saw the same thing. I have talked to several people to-day who witnessed the object last night, and they are all confident that it was nothing more nor less than a genuine airship!"

W.J. Rodda and his wife, who reside at a grocery store at 2042 Broadway, were also witnesses to the strange aerial visitor.

"When we first saw it," said Mrs. Rodda to-night, "we thought it was a balloon, and if it were not for the bright light I should still be inclined to think it was a peculiarly shaped balloon, but I never knew of a balloon to carry bright lights and travel at nighttime the way that did. I could not see any fans myself, but others say that they most undoubtedly saw the propellers which sent the thing along. As it passed over it angled downward, and if it kept on in the same direction it should have landed somewhere across the bay. I at once concluded that it was the same machine that had been seen in Sacramento. I believe that airships will be brought to perfection, and I wouldn't be the least bit surprised to hear that some one had already built a practical machine of that kind and was operating with it in this neighborhood."

Many of the passengers on Yost's car live out at Piedmont, and all are of the opinion that they saw a real airship.

An Oakland artist who crosses to San Francisco every day said this evening that the airship was seen from Golden Gate Park yesterday afternoon. "I was coming home last night," he said, "in company with a friend who had been out to Golden Gate Park. He told me that he and others had seen an airship during the evening and that it closely resembled the picture of the one published in The Call. He said that they tried to explain it by all kinds of means, but they came to the conclusion that it was the same machine. It was dusk when they saw it and the remarkable brilliancy of the lights on it attracted their attention. I shouldn't have thought say more of it, but to-day in this city I heard several people discussing it."

It is the prevalent opinion that some one in Alameda or neighboring counties has solved the problem of flying in the air, and has been for some weeks putting his experiment to a practical test. / SAILED HIGH OVERHEAD. / Some Kind of Air Craft Seen by a Man Near Tulare.

TULARE, Cal., Nov. 21.--That airship is cavorting through the atmosphere that overhangs this vicinity. D.H. Risdon, who was working in an orchard near Tagus, four miles north of this place, sighted a mysterious object passing over at a considerable elevation yesterday afternoon.

A tramp was near at the time, and remarked that he never saw a balloon sail against the wind. But while the object overhead seemed to be sailing into the teeth of the wind, it may have found an opposite current in an upper stratum.

It was passing to the northwest and Risdon declares it was like an immense sheet spread out in the air. It soon passed out of sight. Risdon had not previously read or heard of the strange visitor said to have been seen at Sacramento, and as his reputation for veracity is excellent his story is generally believed.

PIC. The Mysterious Flying Light That Hovered Over St. Mary's College, Oakland, and Then Started for San Francisco. It Is Exactly Like That Described by Sacramentans, and Similar to the One Published a Few Days Ago in "The Call" From a Description Furnished by One Who Saw It.

1896 ~~XXXX~~ November 22 (Sun) San Francisco Chronicle, p. 16. (cont'd)

A LAWYER'S WORD FOR THAT AIRSHIP. / George D. Collins Says It Flies. IT HAILS FROM OROVILLE. / Safely Housed Now Near San Francisco. / The Attorney Says He Has Seen the Queer Craft and Promises an Exhibition.

The mystery of the airship which has been amusing the State and puzzling some worthy citizens of Sacramento has made a change of base, and now there are plenty of reputable people in and about San Francisco ready to make oath that they have seen the strange thing in the heavens, and that in appearance and motion it was identical with the ship of dazzling lights and buzzing machinery which menaced a church spire at the capital.

More than that, there is a San Francisco attorney, George D. Collins, who asserts that the airship exists, that the inventor is his client, that the strange craft sailed without mishap from Oroville to San Francisco, that it did pass over Sacramento on its way to the bay, and that within a few days this invention, which is the solution of one of the world's oldest and toughest problems, will be navigated in daylight, so that all San Francisco may see it, and that it will circle and rise and sink over the central part of the city.

And yet there are wicked skeptics who chuckle and make rude jests about an epidemic of humbug, and who poke all manner of fun at the good people who think they saw an airship in the sky.

Attorney Collins, who occupies offices on the second floor of the Crocker building, was seen about the matter at his home in Alameda last night. He said:

"It is perfectly true that there is at last a successful airship in existence, and that California will have the honor of bringing it before the world. I have known of the affair for some time and am acting as attorney for the inventor. He is a very wealthy man, who has been studying the subject of flying machines for fifteen years, and who came here seven years ago from the State of Maine in order to be able to perfect his ideas away from the eyes of other inventors. During the last five years he has spent at least $100,000 on his work. He has not yet secured his patent, but his application is now in Washington. I cannot say much about the machine he has perfected, because he is my client, and besides he fears that the application will be stolen from the Patent Office if people come to know that his invention is practicable."

"I saw the machine one night last week at the inventor's invitation. It is made of metal, is about 150 feet long, and is built to carry fifteen persons. There was no motive power as far as I could see; certainly no steam."

"It is built on the aeroplane system and has two canvas wings eighteen feet wide and a rudder shaped like a bird's tail. The inventor climbed into the machine and after he had been moving some of the mechanism for a moment I saw the thing begin to ascend from the earth, very gently. The wings flapped slowly as it rose and then a little faster as it began to move against the wind. The machine was under perfect control all the time."

"When it got to a height of about ninety feet the inventor shouted to me that he was going to make a series of circles and then descend. He immediately did so, beginning by making a circle about 100 yards in diameter, and gradually narrowing in till the machine got within thirty feet of the ground. It then fell straight down, very gracefully and touched the earth as lightly as a falling leaf."

"The reports from Sacramento the other night were true. It was my client's airship that the people saw. It started from Oroville, in Butte county, that evening and flew sixty-five miles in a straight line directly over Sacramento. After running up and down once or twice over the capital my friend came right on a distance of another seventy miles and landed at a spot on this side of the bay, where the machine now lies, guarded by three men. The inventor found, during this trial trip, that his ship had a wave-like motion that made him seasick. It is this defect that he is now remedying."

"In another six days the trouble will be done away with, and it is then his intention to immediately give the people of SACRAMENTO SAN Francisco a chance to see his machine. He will fly right over the city and cross Market street a dozen times. I cannot tell you where he is housing the ship or what his name is, as I am under a pledge of secrecy but it is a fact that the machine does its work perfectly, and will astound the world and revolutionize travel when it has been displayed before the public. The inventor can fly with it to New York to-morrow if he wants to.

"He has forsaken the ideas of Maxim and Langley entirely in building the machine, and has constructed it on an absolutely new theory."

The following dispatch from the Oakland office of the "Chronicle," received last night, would seem to indicate that the inventor has removed the defects spoken of by Mr. Collins and that, before giving his public exhibition in this city, he has still further tested the merits of his machine on the other side of the bay:

OAKLAND, November 21.--That Oakland had a visit last night from the mysterious airship seen at Sacramento, a score of reputable witnesses are prepared to swear. They do not pretend to describe it nor to account for its presence, but they are certain that the heavens had an unusual tenant last evening. A dozen passengers on a New Broadway car watched its flight from a point near St. Mary's College, and while the testimony they offer appears incredible there seems but little room for a mistake. According to their story the winged machine came from the north and seemed headed for San Francisco. The fact that it appeared to slow down and gradually descend strengthened that belief. Some of the fortunate witnesses seemed to think that possibly it was a toy balloon set off by boys, but that theory was disposed of almost at once by the presence of the monster light on the flying device.

Seiby Yost was the motorman of the car and he got fully five minutes' view of the mystery. "I don't know just what to think about this matter," he said to-day, "but I will say that I saw something in the sky. I do not run on the cemetery division of the line, but was there last evening. It must have been about 5:30 o'clock and we had a heavy load of passengers. We were late and were running to make up time. There was a boy riding on the outside of the car and he suddenly drew my attention to the heavens. There above us was some moving object with a very bright light attached. Some of the other passengers looked at it and finally near St. Mary's College I stopped the car for a few minutes to let them all get a look at it. I thought at first that it might be a small balloon sent up by some boys, but could not explain the presence of the light on that theory. The thing seemed to lower as it passed over the city and my impression was that it was moving toward San Francisco. It is all very mysterious and puzzling to me and seems almost too foolish to talk about, but we certainly saw some moving object high in the heavens and it seemed to be under control."

C.H. Ellis, armorer of Company A, was a passenger on the car on his way home to dinner, and he is able to describe the strange ship more accurately than Yost. "I have not the slightest doubt as to what I saw last evening," he said today. "I was very skeptical about this matter when I read about it in the papers, but am pretty well convinced now. I was a passenger on the car with Yost last night, and when my attention was drawn to the object in the air I looked at once. It was getting dark, but the light on the airship was very brilliant, and I thought that I could make out a movement of wings or propellers. It is hard to say how high it was, but it seemed to be miles in the air. It came from a northerly direction, and seemed to be going toward San Francisco. I immediately thought of the machine which passed over Sacramento, and came to the conclusion that the inventor had decided to come to San Francisco and tell his secret. I was surprised when I looked at the papers this morning and found nothing in them. I cannot give you any idea of the size of the machine it was so far away."

Mr. and Mrs. W.J. Rodda of Thirtieth street and New Broadway saw the mysterious aerial visitor also. Mr. Rodda is foreman of the Amador marble yard at the cemetery, and his wife looks after a grocery store which they own on New Broadway. Mrs. Rodda talked about the matter very freely to-day. "Of course we saw it," she said, when asked about the matter. "I was on the street with my husband and our attention was called to a light in the northern sky. At first we thought that it was a balloon, but later, when it got closer, we saw that it was not. It was larger and longer than a balloon, I am sure, for although it was too dark to make the thing out very well, I could see that much. We had read of the mysterious object seen in the air at Sacramento, and at once came to the conclusion that we were seeing the same thing. It passed right over us, and we got the best possible view of it. No, there can be no mistake about it."

Charles Hegstrom, a motorman on the Piedmont line, tells a strange story bearing on the same matter. He says that some weeks ago his sister came home from an evening bicycle ride with the statement that she had seen some mysterious thing with a bright light attached to it in the sky. She said that she was at the corner of Twenty-sixth street and Telegraph avenue and got a full, clear view of it. The members of the family were sure that the young lady must be mistaken, and the idea seemed so utterly ridiculous that it was hardly discussed. When they read the dispatches from Sacramento early this week they began to think that possibly the girl was not mistaken after all.

San Francisco, too, has been seeing funny things after dark.

On Friday night shortly after dusk the people of the Mission saw a mysterious light near Twin Peaks. A crowded Valencia street car was stopped at Sixteenth street to give the passengers a chance to view the aerial light. It is said to have appeared like an immense arc light, surrounded by a long, dark body, which showed a light edge. The light was very bright, say the witnesses, and was not a ray, such as comes from the searchlight at the Chutes. The light seemed to be moving slowly over Twin Peaks and finally disappeared. It was reported that it was seen again in the same place last night. An unverified report came from the Mission that a huge bird-like machine had been seen high in the air to the southward about 4 P.M. yesterday.

Night Clerk McGovern of the California Hotel was one of fifty persons who saw a most peculiar light the night before the papers were published that contained the story of the airship at Sacramento. His attention was called to it by the firemen of engine 2, and he watched it three hours. It was first seen over the Mills building a long distance off and high in the air. It appeared to be three lights, or rather one long, narrow, white light with a red center. It was moving slowly to the southward.

The first that was heard of this airship business was on Tuesday night, when dispatches were received from Sacramento telling how something marvelous had been seen in the heavens by a number of citizens.

Those who said they saw the strange craft said it was a cigar or egg shaped affair and had at least four occupants. The searchlight carried by the alleged ship attracted great attention and caused the mystery to be more talked of than anything else in the Capital City on Wednesday and Thursday.

R.L. Lowry of Sacramento also said he saw the ship, which to him appeared as an oblong mass, propelled by fanlike wheels operated by four men, who worked as if on bicycles, giving the machine motion against the wind. E. Wenzel and J.H. Vogel said they saw the machine moving off toward this city and heard the voices singing. T.F. DeLeon and G.C. Snyder also declared that they saw the vessel, while E.M. Briggs, a motorman, stopped his car that the passengers might see the ship, which was so high up that they could only discern its shape dimly. Dozens of persons were found who said they saw and watched the light, which rose and fell and finally disappeared in the direction of this city.

Pic.--George D. Collins, the San Francisco Lawyer, who Says the Sacramento Airship Is No Hoax.

1895 November 23 (Mon) Evening Bee (Sacramento, p. 1. (card 1)

HAVE WE GOT 'EM AGAIN? / Not So Much of a Ha! Ha! After All, It Appears / ARE OR ARE PEOPLE GOING CRAZY? / The Air Ship Inventor Hovered for a While Over the Cliff House and Lighted up the Seals--San Francisco Gone Mad, Too! /

The mysterious light concerning which so much has been said appeared over this city again last night, and for over an hour was viewed by hundreds of people. The aerial visitor hovered in sight about 5:30 p.m. and moved in a southwesterly direction along the horizon. When first seen it was at an altitude of about 40 degrees, and seemed to move with a wavering motion. At times the light would almost disappear, only to flash out again with renewed brilliancy. The throngs which lined K Street commented upon the strange sight in various ways. Some declared that it was a balloon, others that it was a meteor and one man said that it was the planet Venus.

WAS NOT A METEOR.

Weather Observer Barwick, when the object was described to him, said that it could not have been a meteor, for the reason that it was in sight too long, nor could it have been an ordinary balloon, because the wind was south-southwest, and the object appeared to move against it. Mr. Barwick suggested that it might have been a ball of fire similar to those which were seen in the heavens for several days following the last great comet, only he cannot understand how it was that the light seemed to gain and lose in brilliancy.

SAW THE OUTLINE.

The most remarkable story told in connection with the strange appearance last night is that told by Edward Carragher, proprietor of the Saddle Rock Restaurant. Mr. Carragher, when shown the light, procured a pair of powerful field glasses, and declares that through them he saw some large body apparently supporting an arc lamp. The star was very indistinct, but he was positive that the light was attached to something of considerable bulk.

There were others who claimed they could dimly define something similar to that which was seen by means of the glass, but it is hard to understand how this could be, because the light was seemingly at a great distance from the earth.

IS NOT A HOAX.

After the affair had disappeared in the western horizon, a score or more of practical jokers started up K Street, stopping at every corner to peer into the sky and talk excitedly about an air ship. In this manner many people were misled and the impression got out among those who did not see the light that the whole thing was a hoax. Such, however, is not the case, as all who were on the streets of Sacramento between the hours of 5 and 6 o'clock last night can testify. Opinions may differ as to what the uncanny looking visitant was, but there can be no doubt that between the hours mentioned a most remarkable sight was witnessed by hundreds of people.

HAS SEEN THE SHIP.

The San Francisco Chronicle of yesterday contains an interview with George D. Collins, a San Francisco attorney whose office is in the Crocker building, in which Collins says:

"It is perfectly true that there is at least a successful air ship in existence, and that California will have the honor of bringing it before the world. I have known of the affair for some time and am acting attorney for the inventor. He is a very wealthy man, who has been studying the subject of flying machines for fifteen years, and who came here ten years ago from the State of Maine in order to be able to perfect his ideas away from the eyes of other inventors. During the last five years he has spent at least $100,000 on his work, but has not yet secured his patent, but his application is now in Washington. I cannot say much about the machine he perfected, because he is my client and besides he fears that the application will be stolen from the Patent Office if people come to know that his invention is practicable.

"I saw the machine one night last week at the inventor's invitation. It is made of metal, is about 150 feet long and is built to carry fifteen persons. There is no motive power as far as I could see; certainly no steam.

FLOOPEO ITS WINGS.

"It is built on the aeroplane system and has two canvas wings eighteen feet wide and a rudder shaped like a bird's tail. The inventor climbed into the machine, and after he had been fitting some of the mechanisms for a moment I saw the thing begin to ascend from the earth very gently. The wings flapped slowly as it rose and then a little faster as it began to move against the wind. The machine was under perfect control all the time.

"When it got to a height of about ninety feet the inventor shouted to me that he was going to make a series of circles and then descend. He immediately did so, beginning by making a circle about 100 yards in diameter and gradually narrowing in till the machine got within thirty feet of the ground. It then fell straight down, very gracefully, touching the earth as lightly as a falling leaf.

SAW THE CAPITOL.

"The reports from Sacramento the other night were true. It was my client's airship that the people saw. It started from Oroville, in Butte County, that evening, and flew sixty-five miles in a straight line directly over Sacramento. After running up and down once or twice over the Capitol my friend came right on, a distance of another seventy miles, and landed at a spot on this side of the Bay, where the machine now lies, guarded by three men. The inventor found during the trial trip that his ship had a wave-like motion that made him sea-sick. It is this defect that he is now remedying.

TO APPEAR AGAIN.

"In another six days the trouble will be done away with," continued Attorney Collins, "and it is then his invention to immediately give the people of San Francisco a chance to see his machine. He will fly right over the city and across Market street a dozen times. I cannot tell you where he is housing the ship or what his name is, as I am under a pledge of secrecy, but it is a fact that the machine does its work perfectly and will astound the world and revolutionize travel when it has been displayed before the public. The inventor can fly with it to New York to-morrow if he wants to.

"He has forsaken the ideas of Maxim and Langley entirely in building the machine, and has constructed it on an absolutely new theory." / CONCEIVING THE AIRSHIP. / A Telegram Which May Have Some Bearing on the Subject.

OROVILLE, Nov. 23.--The rumor that the airship which is alleged to have passed over Sacramento was constructed near this town, seems to have a grain of truth in it. The parties who could give information if they would, however, are extremely reticent. They give evasive answers, or assert they know absolutely nothing about it.

Not a single person that saw or knew of an airship being constructed near here can be found and yet there is a rumor that some man has experimenting with different kinds of gas and testing those that are lighter than air. The experiments were made some miles east of the town and no one is able to give any names of the parties, who are evidently strangers and seeking to avoid publicity. /

Our Citizens Are All Right. (From SF Report)

Many of Sacramento's best citizens are said to still believe they saw a real air ship Wednesday night and heard people in it talking. Never mind, Lady Somerset and Miss Willard are coming, and will of course visit Sacramento. /

What Kind Do You Mean? (From the Fresno Republican.)

Up in Sacramento some of the people claim to have seen a mysterious air ship coursing through the air against the wind. Spirits, boys, spirits! /

No, the Same Old Brand. / (From the Oroville Register.)

The Bee puts a dozen or more witnesses upon the reporter's stand to prove that an air ship passed directly over Sacramento this week. The reporter must have struck a new brand which is stronger than his ordinary drink. /

The Bee's Assurance Goes. / (From the Nevada Silver State.)

However, whatever it was, or whatever it pretends, it cannot be reasonably denied or doubted that the thing actually occurred as alleged by our frightened neighbors of Sacramento. For we have the assurance of The Bee that the whole population of the city was not drunk between 6 and 7 o'clock that evening. /

The Wicked Reporter Man. / (From the San Jose News.)

The story doubtless originated in the brain of some ingenious newspaper reporter in Sacramento, who has prepared the narrative with considerable care, going so far as to secure the co-operation of alleged witnesses, a comparatively easy matter, as there are many people who would "stand in" to support any improbable yarn of that kind considering it a huge joke. /

Oh, Now, You Stop! / (From the Woodland Democrat.)

A toy balloon was turned loose in Washington a night or two ago. It floated over Sacramento and the people were deluded with the idea that it was an air ship.

LIT UP THE SEALS. / The Airship Said to Have Done Some Hovering Over the Cliff House.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 23.--The inventor of the mysterious airship which has been puzzling local scientists and others for the past week is believed to be one "Dr." E.H. Benjamin, an alleged dentist, who has occupied rooms in an Ellis Street kiosk lodging house for the past two years, but so far he has successfully evaded all attempts to discover his identity. His attorney, Collins, when seen yesterday and pressed to tell further about the alleged invention and its machinery, said:

"This morning the inventor came to my office in the Crocker building, and told me that he had tested the merits of the ship in last night's storm with the greatest success. The wind currents were very contrary and the test was one that tried the merits of the machine in the most hardest possible manner, but it came out of the ordeal in good order, having breasted the storm as well as any bird.

"He started from the locality where the vessel is housed and flew over Alcatraz and out through the Golden Gate, skirting the Cliff House and returning by the same route across the bay. He hovered over the seal rocks for fully ten minutes and played his searchlight on the seals. His intention is to make another trip this evening, probably over the same ground, running on his return trip as far as Sacramento."

STICKS TO HIS STORY. / Attorney Collins Tells More About the Ship--Hunting the Inventor.

This morning's San Francisco Chronicle announces that Attorney Collins sticks to his story concerning the airship invention and its successful test. The Chronicle reporter remarked:

"Several people are wondering, Mr. Collins, how this inventor can house his 150-foot vessel in a barn in the vicinity of Berkeley without having the existence of such a large structure discovered."

"That is easily accounted for," Collins replied. "The barn is very long but it is tacked on to an old dismantled two-story dwelling. The partitions have been knocked out, making the place practically one long room."

Collins went on to say that none of the larger parts of the machine had been made in this State; they had been manufactured in various parts of the East and shipped to Oroville and Stockton, where they had been gradually put together. When pressed to give some clue to the inventor, he said:

"Well, I will tell you this much. The man lives on the south side of Ellis Street in the 600 block. He is six feet tall and 40 years old, has no occupation and is possessed of plenty of money. The place he lives in is a private house, where he has been for two years, making frequent trips during that time to various places to look after the construction of his airship. He keeps his own counsel and you won't be able to discover him. I can give you no closer information."

There are twenty lodging houses in that portion of Ellis street described by Collins. A complete search of all of them revealed the fact that only in only one was there a lodger answering to the attorney's description of the inventor. This is 633 Ellis Street, rented by E.H. Keiser. Keiser has for two years leased his front room to a "Dr. E.H. Benjamin." This gentleman is six feet in height, about 40 years of age, and as far as his mysterious habits are concerned, Keiser said last night: "We have had him in the house two years now and don't know any more about him than we did the day he came in. He goes away on trips every little while to Oroville, Sacramento, and Stockton, sometimes staying a few days, sometimes a month. He has plenty of means and fills in his time when at his room experimenting with various metals, principally aluminum and sheet copper.

"He is a dentist by profession, I think. I know he has friends, and one relative in Oroville, who are experimenting on some invention or other, but what it is I don't know. He has told me once or twice that attorney Collins does his law business for him, and I have often wondered what law business a dentist in a small way would be likely to have."

"Dr." Benjamin's name is not in the directory, nor in the list of dentists in the city. Nobody could be found last night who had ever heard of him practicing his profession. His room contains very little to show what his real business is. There are a few drawings and charts scattered around bearing trigonometrical figures, two very ancient teeth on a mantelshelf and a litter of aluminum and copper shavings all over the carpet.

According to Keiser's statements of his late movements, he was in Sacramento twice last week, has been out very late at night during the last month and has not been home more than a few hours in the last two days--a record that fits in seemingly with the stories of the airship's movements. Up to 2 o'clock this morning Benjamin had not returned to his room, and the flying machine was at latest reports being steered by its proprietor over localities several miles away from Ellis Street.

Shortly after 6 o'clock last evening people in the Mission thought they saw an airship. John Bazley, a mounted patrolman, was one of the first to discover a peculiar light up in the sky. He had just left the City Hall, and, like the greater part of San Franciscans, kept his eyes upon the Heavens. Almost above him he saw the light. He says that it was moving westward, at a height he could not well estimate. Its motion was not swift, but steady, and he says he watched it till the darkness swallowed it up.

The Call, in its account, under the head of Oakland correspondence asserts:

General W.H.H. Hart met Mr. Collins in San Francisco to-day and talked with him about the discovery. "I have no doubt," said the General, "that this affair is bona fide. I have seen the thing in the air myself, and believe the ideas of this Oroville inventor have proved to be practicable."

Mr. Tyler, Assistant Librarian of the San Francisco Law Library, was in company with his sister and Mrs. Philbrook on Friday evening and distinctly saw the airship a little later than it was seen in Oakland. This evidence fully bears out the statement of the passengers and motorman of the Piedmont car, who asserted that after it had passed over St. Mary's College it was headed for San Francisco. It was seen ported to-night that a newspaper which has up to this time apparently been unaware that an air ship has been flying around the State was intending to credit the discovery to a young dentist at Oroville. Mr. Collins was asked about this and said that it was absolutely without foundation, that the inventor is not a dentist and is nearly 50 years old.

Nautical men who have paid particular attention to the various descriptions of eye-witnesses of this air ship declare that the inventor has carefully followed out the principle of flying exemplified by the albatross. The machine itself closely resembles a bird, and when all the facts connected with its construction are made known it will doubtless be learned that the Oroville man took a seabird for his model and drew from it his inspiration.

In another part of ~~the~~ its story, the Call says:

E.A. Larkin, of 305 Larkin Street, says he saw the airship at an early hour last night making its way toward Sacramento and soon fading away in the distance like a falling meteor.

Walter Malloy, Deputy Sheriff and Commissary at the County Jail, says the light of the airship was seen in San Francisco Tuesday evening. His statement is as follows:

"When I left the jail on Tuesday night I happened to look in the direction of Berkeley and I saw an unusual sight. It was a strong white light, seemingly moving. I thought at first it was a balloon with a lantern attached, but on a closer observation I thought I recognized a dark body immediately over the light, somewhat of a different shape from a balloon. The more I observed it the more puzzled I became as to what it was. Finally I dismissed it from my mind until next morning when reading the Call I saw that others had noticed the strange light. Now I am fully convinced that what I saw was the airship seen by others who were nearer to it than I was. Yet from my position on Kearney and Broadway I had a good view of it and I am ready to indorse what others have said regarding its appearance."

Max Roberts, an employe of the Western Union Telegraph Company, engaged in the capacity of a night watchman, says he saw the airship about 11:50 o'clock Wednesday night.

Knows Attorney Collins.

Judge-elect E.C. Hart said to-day that he is personally acquainted with Attorney Collins, who gave the story to the press of San Francisco concerning the air ship and its inventor. Collins was a candidate before the Republican State Convention a few years ago for Attorney-General. He is a graduate of the State University, is rated as a good lawyer, and, the Judge-elect says, has never developed extraordinary talent in the way of lying. /

THE BAY PAPERS. / The Way They Treat The Airship Sensation To-day.

The San Francisco papers to-day devote much space to the air ship story, and in the Call and Chronicle interviews are published with persons who assert that they saw in the sky what resembled an air ship.

The Call spreads over two pages with its account, embellished with a four-column drawing of the alleged ship. This is the confident way in which it heads up its story:

"A winged ship in the sky. It cleaves the air with pinions like a huge condor. All Sacramento sees the wonder. The inventor's lawyer describes the machine and says it is genuine. It was seen soaring near San Jose at midnight."

The Examiner is jocular, and has a series of pictures by Swinerton showing the effect of the air ship craze on the population. The headlines read: "A Queer things you see when----. A mysterious wanderer of the skies perplexes people. The sea serpent has drawn in his horns and his nose is out of joint. Now an air ship appears in the darkest heavens and causes consternation. Policemen ring for the wagon. Stories of people who saw mysterious bright lights moving among the clouds at night time."

The Chronicle publishes a three-column picture of "the apartment of the man who, Collins intimates, is the inventor," and heads the article: "Collins sticks to his airship story. He directs suspicion to Dr. F.H. Benjamin. The light is seen again. Thousands in Sacramento noticed a mysterious object in the sky."

The Chronicle in the course of its two-column story, says:

H.J. Pyle, the patrolman at the Geary-Street carhouse, had his attention drawn to a light about 6:30 o'clock. It was very dark at that time, as the moon had not yet risen, and he, with several others, watched it for some time. He described the light as being more powerful than the ordinary street electric light and is of the opinion that a strong reflector was behind it. He thought it moved out over Fulton street, and said that when it reached Eighth Avenue it moved in a southwesterly direction and was lost to view.

Pyle's story is substantiated by Policeman De Guire, M. Deury, foreman of Fire Engine Company 26; D. Ryan, a conductor; John Pullen, a gripman, and ten or twelve others. All say they saw it plainly and declare that they were not deceived. Gripman Fisher and Conductor Cooper, of the Geary-Street line, also saw something. "The machine was going against the wind at the time we spied it," said Fisher. "It would not be possible for it to have been a balloon."

NO PATENT ISSUED. / The Sacramento "Airship" Has a National Reputation. WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.--At the Patent Office to-day nothing could be learned of the application for a patent on the flying machine alleged to be making successful flights in the neighborhood of Sacramento.

The rules of the office forbid any disclosures of the names of applicants or the character of the inventions for which they seek protection.

Inquiry among patent attorneys known to control the Pacific Coast business failed to disclose any knowledge of the alleged success in aeronautics. Professor Langley of the Smithsonian Institution, who has experimented scientifically for some time to demonstrate the best methods of solving the question of aerial navigation, excused himself from discussing the matter. His manner indicated plainly that he gave very little credence to the Sacramento reports.

1896 November 23 (Mon) The Call (San Francisco), p.1. (card 1)

A WINGED SHIP IN THE SKY. / It Cleaves the Air With Pinions Like a Huge Condor. / ALL SACRAMENTO SEES THE NEW WONDER. / The Inventor's Lawyer Describes the Machine and Says It is Genuine. / IT WAS SEEN SOARING NEAR SAN JOSE AT MIDNIGHT. / "The Call's" Exclusive Account of the Greatest Invention of the Age is Now Corroborated by Thousands. /

For several days there have been persistent reports that a huge airship has been seen in the vicinity of Oakland, Sacramento and San Francisco. The Call has contained daily and exclusive accounts of the appearance, and now there is an avalanche of testimony to the effect that many persons of truthful reputations have seen something like a huge seraph in the air, spreading its electric pinions and soaring faster than a giant condor of the Andes. So numerous have been the reports that the possibility of aerial navigation is now the absorbing theme of the day.

There is now a vast amount of corroborative testimony to the effect that there is a practical airship afloat in the azure spaces hereabouts, and the meaning of this testimony has been made clear by the positive statement of Attorney George D. Collins of Alameda that he has a wealthy client who is the inventor of the great aerial ship, and that it will soon be known to the entire world.

The ship was seen in Sacramento last night, and the evidence is increasingly that the same great propeller recently passed through the heavens over Oakland and San Francisco.

The positive testimony of Collins that the airship is a reality has now been signally corroborated by the testimony of thousands of citizens of Sacramento who saw the great ship in the air last night. The following accounts from Oakland and Sacramento make the matter as clear as any ordinary human testimony ~~can~~ could do.

One of the most interesting of the corroborative stories comes from Thomas Jordan of San Rafael, who states that he found a machine-ship in a mountain fastness some months ago; that six men were working on an airship and that it would soon be completed.

In the first day's story of the airship, as printed in The Call, it was stated that an old hunter named Brown of Bolinas Ridge had seen an airship floating a few hundred feet above the pine trees one morning just as the fogs were lifting from the ridge. / COLLINS' EVIDENCE IN. / He Knows the Inventor of the Ship.

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 22.--Attorney Collins was the busiest man in Alameda County to-day. During the first part of the day all his efforts were directed to keeping away from the curious throng that wished to talk to him and interview him and try to induce him to describe and draw pictures of the Oroville millionaire's airship. Not until late in the evening could he be induced to go into the parlor of his home on Union street, Alameda, and tell what he knew of the invention that has startled not only this State, but the entire country.

"A few weeks ago," said Mr. Collins, "I came from Washington whither I had been on important business. On my arrival in this State I met a gentleman who introduced himself to me, and when I told him where I had been he immediately said he was very sorry that he had not returned prior to my departure, as he had some important business to transact at the Patent Office in Washington which he would not trust in the mail or by any other means than a trusted servant."

"I asked him what his business consisted of, but beyond telling me that he was an inventor, I got no further details from him at that time. He told me enough in an indirect manner to convince me that he was a man who had a secret that he evidently cherished dearly, but he enlightened me no further, and beyond exchanging cards, our acquaintance developed nothing more till later. A few days afterward he called on me at my office in San Francisco, but as he did not talk about business, I concluded that he had merely paid me a social call. I became greatly interested in that invention. I could not help noticing that there was a desire on his part to tell me more than I knew, and I could also see that he restrained himself from doing so. He called on me a second time, chatted about a few immaterial matters and departed, leaving me in wonder as to when he would confide anything further to me. Altogether, he made about half a dozen of these visits, and I concluded that he really did intend to talk business every time he came, but that his courage failed him as soon as he got in the office."

"Finally he got up courage enough to tell me he was not only an inventor but that he really had an invention. He asked me if he could place confidence in me. I replied, 'Do you mean as a friend or as an attorney?' He said, 'As both.' I told him that I could not recall any occasion in which I had violated a friend's or a client's confidence, and that I thought I was fully capable of attending to any business he might wish me to transact for him. He said that if his secret were made public prematurely it would mean the loss to him of an immense fortune. He further assured me that it was an invention that anybody would willingly steal if they had the opportunity. I talked to him for a little while and succeeded in assuring him that if such were the case I, as an attorney, would be just as anxious to protect his interest as he would be himself."

"I am telling you the details of my first meeting with this inventor because they carry with them a good idea of the nature of the man and also are evidence of his sincerity and belief in the practicability of his invention."

"He is a resident of Oroville and a man of wealth, about 47 years of age, and a fine looking fellow. He does not talk for five minutes without convincing his hearer that he is a man of more than ordinary intelligence. The first time he talked to me of his invention he got as far as the word airship; then I laughed, and laughed heartily.

"What kind of whisky have you been drinking?" I asked him.

This made him indignant, and had I laughed any longer he certainly would have got very angry and I should have most probably have lost a client.

"I have not been drinking, sir," he said, "and when I do it is not whisky."

"Even that answer did not assure me, and again I said, 'Have any members of your family ever been in the lunatic asylum?'"

"He did not appreciate this any more than my other remark, and drawing himself to his full height and stamping one foot on the floor, he replied, 'No, sir, I am a man of business. I have come here on a business errand, and had I not met you previously and been convinced that I could trust you I think our acquaintance would end right here. However, I can excuse your surprise, for everybody believes that an inventor must naturally be crazy until he has proved that his invention is practicable. Then, I suppose, people call him a genius. I have got over the crazy stage, but I do not yet claim to be a genius; but I certainly am practical.'"

"He then proceeded to tell me of his invention. He has been working for several years, and in order to avoid suspicion on the part of local people he has had all the machinery and material shipped from the East in such manner as not to excite curiosity.

"Of course I am informed regarding nearly all the details, but I am not at liberty to talk about them. As near as I can recollect the propelling power is produced by compressed air, which works the arms and also produces the light. There is in the airship a little motor of sufficient power to produce the brilliant light that everybody has seen. As soon as he told me this I hinted that it would be a good thing to make the matter public, but he refused, saying that publicity would call attention to his work, would interfere with the progress of his caveat, and might prove the ruin of his enterprise. Now he is not so particular. He has informed me that it is sufficiently advanced for him to patent, and that he can take out successive patents for any other contrivance he may invent in order to make his machine perfect.

"The next time we met was quite recently and after the machine had been seen in various parts of the state. He told me that those fellows were right who talked to The Call reporter at Sacramento and were telling the truth. On the night that it was seen there he left Oroville in the afternoon, made a straight trip to Sacramento, which is about sixty miles, took a few turns over the Capitol, vent off about fifty miles and descended. On that occasion he made sixty miles in forty-five minutes, but I understand that there is practically no limit to the speed which can be attained, provided the necessary machinery is made. I mean by this that the principle of the airship would almost admit of lightening speed, but that conditions that have to be met of course limit its power of resistance.

"I believe, however that in a very short time it will be able to make three miles in two minutes, and the inventor tells me that more is possible.

"The machine did pass over Oakland last Friday night. The inventor came from Oroville and descended near Hayward. I do not know where the machine is now, but I think all day yesterday it remained where it descended. The inventor is making trips every night and has been doing so for over two weeks, and any night the people look in the sky they are likely to see him. A week ago he told me that it was nearly perfect, with the exception of a little wavy motion, which produced the sensation very closely allied to seasickness. This he was confident of preventing, and apparently from what is reported he has made the necessary adjustment to insure smooth flying.

"From every quarter I have received reports during the past few days of the machine, and although there are many who may still be skeptical regarding what is claimed for it, I thoroughly believe that it is now perfect."

R.B. Mitchell of the firm of Pierson & Mitchell, San Francisco, called on Mr. Collins this evening to discuss the merits of the new invention. Mr. Mitchell had had the idea when he called that Mr. Collins had the inventor hidden in his house for the purpose of keeping him from the public. Mr. Collins, however, denied this and said that he could not really give any information of the inventor's whereabouts.

"I have no doubt," said Mr. Collins, "that if the night is at all pleasant the inventor is in his machine about half a mile over the earth startling some of the inhabitants of this State. To-morrow morning's papers may possibly inform you where he was at this time. I believe he has gone home, and if he has he certainly flew there."

Then Mr. Mitchell became very definite. /p.2/ He said: "Mr. Collins, I have known you for a long time to be a reputable man, and one who has a character to sustain. Now, on your honor as a professional man, do you profess to believe all that you have said and to put confidence in the scheme of this inventor?"

"From what I have seen of the man and his invention," said Mr. Collins, "I have no alternative but to believe implicitly all I have heard."

General W.H.H. Hart met Mr. Collins in San Francisco to-day and talked with him about the discovery. "I have no doubt," said the general, "that this affair is bona fide. I have seen the thing in the air myself, and believe the ideas of this Oroville inventor have proved to be practicable."

Mr. Tyler, assistant librarian of the San Francisco Law Library, was in company with his sister and Mrs. Philbrook on Friday evening and distinctly saw the airship a little later than it was seen in Oakland. This evidence fully bears out the statement of the passengers and motor man of the Piedmont car, who asserted that after it had passed over St.

25 Mary's College it was headed for San Francisco. It was reported to-night that a newspaper which has up to this time apparently been unaware that an airship has been flying around the State was intending to credit the discovery to a young dentist at Oroville. Mr. Collins was asked about this and said that it was absolutely without foundation, that the inventor is not a dentist and is nearly 50 years of age.

Nautical men who have paid particular attention to the various descriptions of eye-witnesses of this airship declare that the inventor has carefully followed out the principle of flying exemplified by the albatross. The machine itself closely resembles a bird, and when all the facts connected with its construction are made known it will doubtless be learned that the Oroville man took a seabird for his model and drew from it his inspiration. /

SACRAMENTANS STARTLED / Thousands View the Great Airship With Wonder.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Nov. 22.--The entire city is in a fever of excitement, and all that can be heard on every side is airship, airship, airship. The mysterious aerial traveler paid this city another visit this evening, and this time it passed directly over the downtown portion of the city and exhibited to wondering thousands of the citizens its magnificent searchlight.

There could be no possible mistake, for there in plain view of all moving slowly along with a slight wavering motion, was a large electric light, fully twice the candle-power of an ordinary arc light. The light was at an enormous height and still plainly visible, as the heavens were entirely obscured by a mass of dark clouds, which every moment threatened to burst into a drenching rain, and in consequence the mysterious light was thrown into intense relief against their dark background. The light first made its appearance over the lower portion of the city, and was moving slowly into the wind in a southwesterly direction. One of the first to see it was Isaac Gough on Second and K streets. As soon as he became fully satisfied that it was the much-talked-of aerial visitant he gave notice to all in the surrounding stores and hotels, and within a few minutes the streets were black with masses of excited people, all gazing heavenward.

As the news spread the housetops became black with people, and frantic men rushed wildly into telephonic communication with their homes in order to inform their wives and families that high up in the heavens human beings were gayly sailing through the air toward San Francisco. The streetcars were an important factor also in spreading the information as the motormen shouted the news to the bystanders as their cars rapidly threaded their way through the crowded thoroughfares, and it needed but a wave of the hand skyward to draw the attention of all to the heavens.

Jacob Zemansky, the well-known downtown cigar man, obtained a powerful telescope and watched the light until it faded into nothingness in the distance. In speaking of it he said: "It simply passes my understanding. If that was not an electric arc light of intense power then I never saw one. Looking at it with the naked eye it seemed to move in a straight line, but seen through the glass it rose and fell like a boat on a gently swelling tide. I could not distinguish any positive shape, only a dark mass of mistlike substance to which the light seemed to be attached."

Mr. Carragher of the Saddlerock Restaurant also gives a similar description of the light and its movements, and states that in his opinion it was attached to an air-vessel of some description, and after being in plain sight for over twenty minutes it faded away in the distance.

Of the thousands who viewed the mysterious visitant this evening, the vast majority had been among the ranks of the most pronounced skeptics ever since the first publication of the subject in Tuesday's Call for the reason that they are living in the lower part of the city and had failed to catch a glimpse of the light on its previous appearance, and in consequence its reappearance descended upon them like a clap of thunder out of a clear sky. For over a week they had laughed and jeered and treated the subject with scorn and derision, but here before their very eyes was the self-same vision which had greeted their friends and neighbors in the eastern portion of the city, and they were foreed by the evidence of their own eyes to abandon their unbelief.

As soon as it became fully evident to all that the light was no meteor or star, a thousand stories were related of what people had heard and seen on its previous visitation.

Mr. Johnson, foreman of the Haggin ranch, in company with another gentleman, was driving across the bare plains adjacent to the city last Tuesday night when they plainly heard a merry chorus of human voices. The thing was uncanny and unreal. They were entirely alone, on all sides stretched bare fields without a bush or fence, no human being was visible, nor was there a possibility of any secretion, and yet the merry chorus rang out distinct, but faint. They stopped their team and listened and looked, saw the clear bright light high over their heads, but did not dream that but a short distance above them human beings were floating along on the night wind and fearing the ridicule of their acquaintances, held their peace.

Another story which has come to light is that an employe of the paint shop of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company has received a letter from one of the inmates of the aerial ship, who was an old acquaintance. This letter, postmarked Oakland, stated that the writer had made one of the crew of an airship which made a most successful voyage last Tuesday night, and had arrived in the vicinity of Oakland about 12 o'clock. He stated that the ship had worked beautifully with the exception that the motion was very disagreeable.

He also stated that after making alterations and receiving patent rights the vessel would be placed on exhibition, and that this would occur before the first of the coming month. It is claimed that the painter's shopmates laughed the letter to scorn, and that he was so thoroughly convinced that his friend was not misleading him that he vagued I20 that what his friend had written would come to pass. This story was related by several, but is not authenticated, as they would not betray the writer's name without his permission.

Colvin Brown, local representative of the Chronicle, was an eye witness of the mysterious light this evening. He has been a skeptic of the most pronounced type and was loth to believe the evidence of his own eyes. Center of a group of the corner of Seventh and K streets, he produced an almanac to endeavor to prove that the planet Venus had left her orbit and was coquetting with Sacramento. As his explanation was not received with favor he started off in search of Sergeant Barwick of weather fame to endeavor to prove ~~xxxx~~ the mysterious light to be a meteor on the warpath.

Of all the onlookers this evening the employes of the streetcar system are the most jubilant. They have been held up to defision for over a week; their lives made miserable by Jocular inquiries as to the nature of the stimulants they mostly imbibe and various inquiries as to when they intended to take a trip, etc.

"I am heartily delighted that the entire city has seen this mysterious light to-night," said one of the motormen. "Now this eternal joshing will cease. My life has been a misery for the past week, but now all can see for themselves that we were not stretching the long bow. It is particularly aggravating, when one plainly sees a phenomenal occurrence and relates it, that he is treated as a gigantic liar."

Assistant Superintendent Ross of the streetcar system is also jubilant. "I was ~~xxxxxx~~ simply positive," said he, "that this light was of an electrical nature. I have made a close study of this mysterious agent for years. I saw this moving light for upward of thirty minutes Tuesday night and was positive that it was electrical. Also I noticed its x swaying and rising and falling movement and was convinced in my own mind that it was attached to a vehicle of some nature. At first I thought it might be in a balloon, but knowing that machinery requisite to produce a light of that volume and intensely would weigh upward of a ton, I concluded that it might possibly be that some one had solved the problem of aerial navigation, and this belief was strengthened by observing that the light was moving south against the wind. I am now almost convinced that the great problem has been solved and that within a short time the air will be peopled with ships."

This seems to be the public belief in this city to-night among all who have witnessed the reappearance of this mysterious light and never has there been witnessed such an overwhelming and sudden change in public opinion as its reappearance has caused. In the corridors of the hotels groups of excited people clustered discussing all the possibilities of this wonderful discovery. In the saloons healths are being drunk to the successful discoverer, and on all sides universal belief has taken the place of skepticism. Since the reappearance of this mysterious light this evening there has been a general search made for copies of Wednesday's Call which gave an exclusive account of the first appearance of the aerial visitant and a copy cannot be purchased for love or money. Those possessing them brought them out to read to their friends but refused to part with them. /

OTHERS WHO SAW IT. / Stories That Corroborate the Fact of the Invention. The following letter from San Rafael explains a phase of the story that has not yet come to light:

SAN RAFAEL, Nov. 22, 1896

Editor Call: The mysterious light mentioned in your valuable paper this morning as seen by several citizens in different parts of the State, and which seems to mystify yourself as well as your readers, is nothing more than an airship, and of this fact I am perfectly cognizant. I think now that I am released of my obligation of secrecy, which I ~~xxx~~ have kept for nearly three months, as the experiment in aerial navigation is a fixed fact and the public or ~~xx~~ a few of the public at least have seen its workings in the air.

In the latter part of last August I was hunting in the Tamalpais range of mountains, between the high peak and Bolinas Bay. I wounded a deer, and in chasing it I ran onto a circular brushpile about ten feet in height in a part of the mountain seldom visited even by hunters. I was somewhat astonished, and my curiosity prompted me to approach it, when I encountered a man who sang out: "What are you doing here and what do you want?" I replied that "I had wounded a deer and was chasing it." He said "that they had been camping ~~xxx~~ here for a month or so and had not seen a deer, but if you think your deer is in the neighborhood I will assist you in finding it as we need a little meat in camp." This man went with me and in less than 500 yards found my deer. We carried it into the brush corral. And what a sight--a perfect machine shop and an almost completed ship. I was sworn to secrecy and have kept it till this moment. Six men were at work on the "aerial ship." It is this ship that a few people have seen at night on its ~~xxxx~~ trial trip. It returns to its home before daylight and will continue to do so until perfected. Yours, William Jordan.

E.A. Larkin of 305 Larkin street says he saw the airship at an ~~xxxx~~ early hour last night making its way toward Sacramento and soon fading away in the distance like a falling meteor.

Walter Malloy, deputy sheriff and commissary at the County Jail, ~~xxxxx~~ says the light of the airship was seen in San Francisco Tuesday evening. His statement is as follows:

"When I left the jail on Tuesday night I happened to look in the direction of Berkeley and I saw an unusual sight. It was a strong white light, seemingly moving. I thought at first it was a balloon with a lantern attached, but on a closer observation I thought I recognized a dark body immediately over the light, somewhat of a different shape from a balloon. The more I observed it the more puzzled I became as to what it was. Finally I dismissed it from my mind until next morning, when reading The Call I saw that others had noticed the strange light. Now I am fully convinced that what I saw was the airship seen 25 by others who were nearer to it than I was. Yet from my position on Kearny and Broadway I had a good view of it and I am ready to indorse what others have said regarding its appearance."

Max Roberts, an employe of the Western Union Telegraph Company, engaged in the capacity of a night watchman, says he saw the airship about 11:50 o'clock Wednesday night. / AN EXPERT'S OPINION. / Lieutenant George N. Chase, U.S.A., Talks of the Wonderful Discovery.

Lieutenant George N. Chase, U.S.A., the inventor of an "aerodromic system of transportation," was seen yesterday on the subject at his residence in Oakland. Mr. Chase has spent many years in investigating the subject of aerial navigation, and is thoroughly conversant with the practical and theoretical difficulties in its way. He has written a pamphlet setting forth his ideas, and outlining a sort of compromise between aerial navigation and the present system of transportation, which many engineers have accepted as in the highest sense practical.

He said yesterday: "I have read some of the accounts of the alleged 'airship.' One in a morning paper yesterday was rather confusing. The attorney for the inventor in his statement says that it is 150 feet long, and that the inventor 'moved some of the mechanism,' and thereafter he saw it rise, the wings flapping to a height of about 90 feet, making a series of circles, and descend, etc. He says also: 'There was no motive power, so far as I could see.' For a patent attorney who made the application for the patent and drew up the specifications this is a remarkable statement. He says that his client has 'forsaken the ideas of Maxim and Langley,' and yet states that 'it is built on the aeroplane system,' the only system ever advocated by either--a system which I shewed in my monograph published in St. Louis in 1894 was the only possible one. As I said then:

Experiment has demonstrated ~~xxxx~~ the fact that it is possible to construct a vehicle possessing the ability to arise in the air, carrying a considerable load, and capable of being propelled. The obstacles that have so far baffled man's ingenuity are his ability to control the machine even under the most favorable circumstances and his failure to provide energy enough to propel it to any considerable distance. This latter difficulty cannot be overcome by any known method of storing up potential energy in a structure which is designed to sever all connection with terra firma and in which levity becomes of primal importance.  Flight is not a function of levity but of weight and power. Man if he ever fly must closely imitate the flight of birds. The fledgeling, after one or two abortive attempts, adjusts its motions successfully and naturally to the accomplishment of perfect flight. The rate of vibration of its wings and the inclination of their surfaces to the varying direction of the wind to the line of flight are instinctively changed with the rapidity of lightening. Given a machine which is capable of performing all the essential functions of a bird in flight it is extremely doubtful if the coolest human intellect could ever be trained to control it safely under all the conditions and circumstances which it must inevitably encounter.

"While I said," continued Mr. Chase, "that the conditions seem too many, or, rather the unknown quantities are at present too few, for a satisfactory solution of this problem pure and simple, still it must be conceded that considerable progress has been made since that was written toward the scientific solution of this great problem by Professor Langley, Maxim in England, Chanute in Chicago and Herr Lilienthal. I must say, however, that if it has quietly been solved upon a commercial basis in one of our back counties it is very surprising, and the secret has been remarkably well kept.

"One thing is certain--he is a rash man who in these days asserts the impossibility of anything in engineering." / PASSED OVER SAN JOSE. / The Air Craft Said to Have Been Seen Sailing Toward Mount Hamilton.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 22.--Frank Everett, a young man residing in this city, claims to have seen the mysterious airship seen by the residents of Sacramento and elsewhere pass over the eastern portion of this city about 11 o'clock to-night.

Everett said he was standing on Santa Clara street, near East San Jose, when he distinctly saw the airship high up in the heavens. He claims that several persons who were in that vicinity also saw the ship, and that others whose attention was called to it saw the flash-light of the craft rapidly disappear. The ship was said to be going in a southeasterly direction, toward Mount Hamilton.

H. Erlich drove up while the crowd was standing gazing skyward and saw the light disappearing. To him some of the people said they distinctly saw the ship. Neither he nor Everett knew the names of any persons in the crowd, most of whom were in carriages. / Experimenters Near Oroville.

OROVILLE, Cal., Nov. 22.--There seems to be some foundation that the airship which recently passed over Sacramento was built in this neighborhood, but no information can be obtained as to who the builder could be. Rumor has it that two parties were recently experimenting with new and light gas which they expected would outdo anything yet introduced for balloon purposes. It is also asserted by others that three or four comparatively unknown parties of wealth have been for several weeks experimenting with various gases and feel confident of solving aerial navigation.

Pic., p. 1: The Great Airship That Is Startling the People of Many Cities. Drawn from Descriptions of the Inventor's Attorney, George D. Collins.

p. 2: Attorney George D. Collins, Who Knows the Inventor of the Great Airship.

COLLINS STICKS TO HIS AIRSHIP STORY. / He Directs Suspicion to Dr. E.H. Benjamin. / THE LIGHT IS SEEN AGAIN. / MISSION PEOPLE CLAIM TO HAVE WATCHED IT. / Thousands in Sacramento Noticed a Mysterious Object in the Sky. /

The mysterious light, supposed to be on an airship, that has for some days been flitting round the bay counties, seems to have at last paid its respects to San Francisco, though in a shy and demure manner and without any attempt to get into a very close acquaintance with the city.

Dozens of people in the Mission claim to have seen the peculiar arc light last night, and they say it did not have a pink tail, blue hair or anything of that sort. To cap this assertion, Attorney Collins again came to the front with a statement about its movements, which information he says was given to him personally yesterday morning by the inventor.

Collins when seen yesterday and pressed to tell anything further about the alleged inventor and his alleged machine said: "This morning the inventor came to my office, in the Crocker building, and told me that he had tested the merits of the ship in last night's storm with the greatest success. The wind currents were very contrary, and the test was one that tried the merits of the machine in the hardest possible manner, but it came out of the ordeal in good order, having breast-ed the storm as well as any bird.

"He started from the locality where the vessel is housed and flew over Alcatraz and out through the Golden Gate, skirting the Cliff House and returning by the same route across the bay. He hovered over the seal rocks for fully ten minutes and played his searchlight on the seals themselves. His intention is to make another trip this evening, probably over the same ground, running on his return trip as far as Sacramento."

"Several people are wondering, Mr. Collins, how this inventor can house his 150-foot vessel in a barn in the vicinity of Berkeley without having the existence of such a large structure discovered."

"That is easily accounted for," Collins replied. "The barn is not very long, but it is tacked on to an old dismantled two-story dwelling. The partitions have been knocked out, making the place practically one long room."

Collins went on to say that none of the larger parts of the machine had been made in this state; they had been manufactured in various parts of the East and shipped to Oroville and Stockton, where they had been gradually put together. When pressed to give some clue to the identity of the inventor he said:

"Well, I will tell you this much. The man lives on the south side of Ellis street in the 600 block. He is six feet tall and 40 years old, has no occupation and is possessed of plenty of money. The place he lives in is a private house, where he has been for two years, making frequent trips during that time to various places to look after the construction of his airship. He keeps his own counsel and you won't be able to discover him. I can give you no closer information."

There are twenty lodging-houses in the portion of Ellis street described by Collins. A complete search of all of them revealed the fact that in only one was there a lodger answering to the attorney's description of the inventor. This is 633 Ellis, rented by E.H. Keiser. Keiser has for two years leased his front room to a "Dr. E.H. Benjamin." This gentleman is six feet in height, about 40 years of age, and as far as his mysterious habits are concerned Keiser said last night: "We have had him in the house for two years and don't know any more about him now than on the day he came in. He goes away every little while on trips to Oroville, Sacramento and Stockton, sometimes staying a few days, sometimes a month. He has plenty of means and fills in his time when at his room experimenting with various metals, principally aluminum and sheet copper.

"He is a dentist by profession, I think. I know he has friends and one relative in Oroville who are experimenting on some invention or other, but what it is I don't know. He has told me once or twice that Attorney Collins does his law business for him, and I have often wondered what law business a dentist in a small way would be likely to have."

"Dr. Benjamin's name is not in the directory, nor in the list of dentists in the city. Nobody could be found last night who had ever heard of him practicing his profession. His room contains very little to show what his real business is. There are a few drawings and charts scattered around bearing trigonometrical figures, two very ancient teeth on the mantelshelf and a litter of aluminum and copper shavings all over the carpet.

According to Keiser's statements of his late movements, he was in Sacramento twice last week, has been out very late at night during the last month and has not been home more than a few hours in the last two days—a record that fits in seemingly with the stories of the airship's movements. Up to 2 o'clock this morning Benjamin had not returned to his room, and the flying machine was at latest reports being steered by its proprietor over localities several miles away from Ellis street.

Shortly after 6 o'clock last evening people in the Mission thought they saw an airship. John Bagely, a mounted patrolman, was one of the first to distinguish a peculiar light up in the sky. He had just left the City Hall, and, like the greater part of San Franciscans, kept his eyes upon the heavens. Almost above him he saw the light. He says that it was moving westward, at a height he could not well estimate. Its motion was not swift, but steady, and he says he watched it till the darkness swallowed it up.

At about the same time Gus Riechers, a gripman on a Geary-street car, believes he spotted the machine, or the light upon it. He says he kept it in sight for about half an hour during his trip to the terminus of the road. Several passengers on the dunny also saw some mysterious light and watched it as it glided along through the darkness.

H.J. Pyle, the patrolman at the Geary-street carhouse, had his attention drawn to a light about (6):30 o'clock. It was very dark at that time, as the moon had not yet risen, and he, with several others, watched it for some time. He described the light as being more powerful than the ordinary street electric light and is of the opinion that a strong reflector was behind it. He thought it moved out over Fulton street, and said that when it reached Eleventh avenue it moved in a southwesterly direction and was lost to view.

Pyle's story is substantiated by Policeman De Guire, M. Brury, foreman of Fire Engine Company 26; D. Ryan, a conductor; John Fullilove, a gripman, and ten or twelve others. All say they saw it plainly and declare that they were not deceived. Gripman Fisher and Conductor Cooper of the Geary-street line also saw something. "The machine was going against the wind at the time we spied it," said Fisher. "It would not be possible for it to have been a balloon."

Collins' statement concerning the intentions of the inventor with regard to the route of his trip last night is seemingly substantiated in part by the following dispatch received by the "Chronicle" from Sacramento.

SACRAMENTO, November 22.—The peculiar light which excited the people of this city a few nights ago appeared again to-night, and this time it was witnessed by thousands of people. During its passage across the southern part of the city, which occupied nearly an hour, K street was filled with people who watched it until it disappeared from view.

The light was first seen by those in the neighborhood of Third and K streets at 5:30 p.m. It was then south of the city about 40 degrees above the horizon, and from there on it seemed to travel downward toward the southwest until it disappeared from view about 10 degrees above the horizon line. The wind at the time was south-southwest, and the light seemed to be traveling almost against it.

Its appearance was that of an arc lamp and its light was a clear white. Occasionally it would die out in luster, at which time it was surrounded with a hazy halo, but would almost immediately regain its brilliancy. As it traveled through the sky it seemed to have a waving motion.

Weather Observer Barwick, in an interview to-night, said that the object could not have been a meteor, for the reason that it traveled too slowly, but suggested that it might have been a ball of fire similar to those seen following the last big comet and which were very erratic in their course. He says that the only thing against this theory is that the light varied in its brilliancy. Everyone here is talking of the affair and hundreds believe that it was a light from an aerial ship.

Nick White, city editor of the Record-Union, who got a good view of it, expresses the belief that it was the light from a flying machine and declares that he at one time saw several smaller lights in addition to the larger light. When the direction changed, but one of the light was visible.

Ed Carragher, proprietor of the Saddle Rock Restaurant, took a look through a field glass and declared that the light was attached to some larger object, whose shape was not distinctly defined in the darkness.

From Oroville, the locality where Attorney Collins says most of the ship was put together, comes the following dispatch:

OROVILLE, November 22.—The report that the supposed airship, which passed over Sacramento, started from a point near Oroville and was built near here, seems to have some foundation, but it is impossible to learn the truth. It is asserted that parties residing about three miles east of the town and in a thickly wooded section, not traversed by roads have been experimenting with different gases for some time past. One man, who is an expert chemist here, was heard to let slip a word or two about parties who were experimenting with a new and very light gas which would supersede the one now in use for balloons. It is impossible, however, to get more than rumors, mere whispers, and it is impossible to say whether they are pure fabrications.

It is asserted by more than one person that comparatively unknown parties with abundant means have for some weeks past been experimenting with different gases and that they were sanguine of having solved the problem of aerial navigation. The form of the airship they are supposed to have constructed is a matter of uncertainty. No one can say how the vessel is regulated or what means are used to govern its speed. It is rumored that such a vessel has been constructed near here by Eastern people, who desired to escape prying eyes and sought seclusion. It is evident that more than one man was engaged in the project, but it is impossible to learn any of the names or give any details about the vessel itself.

QUEER THINGS YOU SEE WHEN— / A Mysterious Wanderer of the Skies Perplexes People. / The Sea Serpent Has Drawn in His Horns and His Nose Is Out of Joint. / Now an Airship Appears in the Darkened Heavens and Causes Consternation. / POLICEMEN RING FOR THE WAGON. / Stories of People Who Saw Mysterious Bright Lights Moving Among the Clouds at Night Time.

Lord, how the world is given to flying! That is not exactly what Falstaff said, but it comes to the same thing. The sea serpent has been called in. His melancholy trail no longer slavers the silly season. His hairy head erects itself no longer on the practical horizon, and of his horns and hoofs there are none to tell. In fact, the sea serpent's Roman nose is out of joint and he has been superseded in the affections of the people by a mysterious "airship."

That some object not yet explained or accounted for has been seen traveling the skies in different parts of the State for several nights past appears to be established by the testimony of credible witnesses. What the thing may be nobody knows. That it is an airship capable of carrying human freight seems impossible of belief in view of the record of failure in the past. If some joker has turned loose a fire balloon to perplex and mystify that might account for the "airship" on an intelligible basis.

There are men who see queer things when they don't have a gun and others who encounter wonders of an early morn or even at dewy eve when it has been more dewy than the law allows. Of course they saw something, but what it was nobody seems to be able to say with any sort of intelligible accuracy. A Sacramento man wandering in the immediate vicinity of a brewery, saw a great light and a dark mass moving up and down the sky. The "dark mass" and the red light is the favorite shape which the uncanny thing assumes. There is vague talk of patents, but nothing tangible in the shape of applications or patents on file. Nobody seems to be able to describe what they have seen except in the most general way. This is the silly season, and a set of graceless jokers might have fun with all California by turning loose a dozen wildcat balloons that would wheel and circle and flame through the sky.

The Oroville people, by the way, laugh at the statement that anything like an "airship" has been built in their neighborhood and scout the whole story as a fake. But there is lots of testimony on the other side and it may speak for itself.

George D. Collins, an attorney of this city, says, for instance, that not only is the airship a veritable, palpitating fact, but what is more—he knows the man who made it, and who soars by himself through the star-lit heavens, causing a maze and wonder among the lowly ones of the earth beneath. Mr. Collins, however, is bound by a double-locked oath of secrecy not to divulge the name of the inventor—for the present at least. He says the airship is his client and has applied for a patent upon his wonderful machine. If the experiments now being made prove successful, and the patent be granted, then Mr. Collins will introduce his modest client to an applauding world and assist in placing the laurels on his brow. The lawyer confesses that he knows nothing about the mechanism or the motive power of the cloud-skimmer for the very simple reason that the inventor told him nothing about it. The airship man will trust no one, not even lawyers, displaying in this latter respect a mark of wisdom that distinguishes him as a true genius. If the creation of the inventor fulfills his expectations, then he will give it to the world, at so much a gift. Until he comes down from the clouds, however, and discloses his identity, or unlocks the padlock that now hangs suspended from the lips of Mr. Collins, the man of the machine will be unknown to fame.

"This airship is not a creation of fancy, but an existing fact," says Mr. Collins. "I have not seen the new wonder, but I represent the inventor, and speak knowingly when I say that he has made a machine which skims through the air with the ease and grace of a bird. What is probably more to the point, the helmsman is in absolute control of the movements of the vessel. The vessel can be made to rise to any altitude desired, describe circles or take an abrupt angle.

At present I am under a solemn pledge of secrecy not to make public the name of the inventor, though I may say that he is a resident of San Francisco and has been for more than seven years past. The greater portion of his time has been devoted to the perfection of this airship. He has spent thousands of dollars—not less than $100,000 I should say—and is now of the opinion that he has at last solved the mystery of aerial flight. He has tried it under every possible weather condition, and the vessel has behaved beautifully through it all. Last night he was out in the storm and I was informed by him to-day that the airship did everything expected of it. He sailed across the Golden Gate and over Alcatraz Island to the other side of the bay, where he landed when off the island the wind struck the vessel with terrific force, but she stood up bravely through it all.

"There is one error which I wish to correct, and that is concerning voices said to have been heard on the airship. The inventor tells me that he has never taken any one with him on these night voyages. He supposes the impression of voices arose from the clanking noise made by the machinery.

"If everything goes well the name of the inventor will be given to the public within two weeks. The application for a patent was sent off four days ago, and will probably receive immediate attention. What the motive power of the airship is I do not know, though I have an idea that it is compressed air. In fact, I am about as ignorant of the actual workings of this wonderful creation as any one for the very good reason that my client has told me practically nothing. He will not trust anyone for fear his idea may be stolen."

Now comes Night Clerk McGovern of the California Hotel, who solemnly avers that he saw a peculiar combination of moving lights in the skies that may have been the airship. Mr. McGovern is accustomed to being up at nights, and he is a reliable man, not prone to excitement, and of an unimaginative nature, as most night clerks are.

"About 2 o'clock last Thursday morning," he says, "I saw in the heavens two white lights moving slowly to the westward. They looked like two stars joined together. At intervals a red light appeared between the two white lights. My attention was directed to the phenomenon by a crowd of men who were observing the object from the corner of Kearny and Bush streets. I watched the lights for half an hour and, during that time, they moved about a tenth of the distance across the heavens. I could not determine how the lights were suspended in the air, for, on account of the darkness of the night, I could see nothing but the blazing lights."

Additional testimony was collected last night in favor of the existence of the airship. Neil Rearden, a policeman attached to the Seventeenth-street police station, detected the bright lights of the sky-skimmer about 6:45 o'clock last evening. He saw the white and red lights moving rapidly through space, and, fearing that some one was making away with a Mission drug store, the faithful and alert policeman at once ran to the nearest alarm box, at Twelfth and Folsom streets, and notified his superiors. The patrol wagon was sent out, but when it reached Rearden's beat the supposed airship had changed its course and was over another man's beat. The alarm, however, called out Sergeant Monahan, Corporal Heggerty and Policemen Montanya and Folsom, who were in the station-house when the wakeful Rearden sent in his message.

The officers at once rushed out on the street, prepared to charge the night rider of the skies with disturbing the peace of the Mission. They saw the lights in the heavens, but on account of the distance could not recognize them as the illuminators of any drug store in their district. They went as far as Capp and Seventeenth streets, watching the floating beacons. At that corner a crowd of people had collected, also watching the lights.

"The ship, or whatever it was, had two lights, one appearing to be much larger than the other," said Corporal Heggerty, in describing the apparition. "The larger was a white light, and the smaller a red one. The red light appeared to be beneath the white light and in a line with it. At first I thought it was all a hoax about an airship, but I was very much surprised when I saw the lights. They swept along at a lively rate, and soon disappeared. The machine, if such it was, appeared to have come from the direction of Mount Diablo. Its course was to the south and west, toward the ocean. It passed over Twin Peaks, and then we lost sight of it. Of course, we could not tell whether it dropped into the ocean or not. Twin Peaks were in the way." Sergeant Monahan and Policemen Folsom and Montanya corroborated the statements of the Corporal. All the policemen saw the moving lights in the heavens, and were correspondingly impressed and astonished.

Policeman Moriarty is yet another star-wearer who saw those wonderful lights last night. Mr. Moriarty is a very careful observer, and nothing that crosses his beat escapes his watchful eyes. "Shortly before 7 o'clock this evening," he said, "I was at the corner of Mission and Third streets, and saw what I suppose was the airship floating in the sky. I watched it cross Mission street. A number of people on the street also saw it, and watched it until it passed out of sight."

The course of the mysterious aerial lights is traced from Mission and Third streets through the Mission district to Ocean View, for they were seen at the latter place last night by numerous people. Conductor Phil Murray of the San Mateo electric line saw the supposed airship about 6:50 o'clock, when his car was at Ocean View. He directed the attention of his passengers to the lights in the sky, and they left the car to observe them. Frank Page, the motorman of the car, also saw them. Page and Murray informed Receiver Bohls and Tinner Peter Leonard of the remarkable sight when the car arrived at Thirtieth street after returning from Holy Cross Cemetery.

It is believed in Oakland that all the stories about an airship floating over the town are the results of practical jokes with hot-air balloons. The witnesses all say that the supposed airship consisted principally of a light, and was seen over Blair Park.

Superintendent Tiffany of the Piedmont electric road said: "I made a thorough investigation to-day of the story told by some of our men of an alleged airship seen floating over St. Mary's College on Friday evening. My opinion is that the object was only a toy balloon. Ever since last summer when we had balloon ascensions at Blair Park the small boys of this portion of the city have been wild over ballooning. They have great sport sending up toy paper balloons with miniature parachutes attached to them. The favorite plan is to attach oil-soaked rags to these toys, setting them afire and enjoying the spectacle of an aerial conflagration on a small scale. This has been repeatedly done to my knowledge in the vicinity where the light was seen Friday night. That is the solution of this so-called mystery. So far as I could learn among our men, none of them say anything but a light."

"I had a long talk with Seiby Yost, one our motormen, and he admitted that he saw nothing but a moving light in the sky. It might have been a meteor or a toy balloon—or an ocular delusion, for that matter. The airship proposition was, I found, not considered for a moment."

E. B. Morgan, formerly a School Director of Oakland, and a very conservative and highly educated man, says he saw a peculiar object in the sky yesterday afternoon while standing in front of his house at Brush and Fourteenth streets, Oakland. He said: "I was called to the sidewalk by my son, who told me that a man had discovered the long-looked-for flying machine. When I first saw it, the machine was high up in the clouds in the direction of Blair's Park. The man on the corner, whose name I do not know, said he had seen it rise from the direction of the park and sail westward at a low level for almost twenty minutes. Then it rose to a such higher altitude and continued its westward course. Just at this time I first caught sight of it."

"It appeared to be a balloon. That which aroused my curiosity most was the change of course from westward to directly east. It moved very rapidly when it changed to the easterly direction, and soon passed out of sight over the low foothills back of East Oakland."

Brother Walther, Director of St. Mary's College, said: "I gave no special thought to the light that was seen Friday night, because there was nothing to attract my attention to it until I heard some of the people about the college discussing the airship story. I found, upon talking to several students and members of the faculty, that none who observed the illumination gave any thought to it except to surmise it was a meteor, although it moved rather slowly for that."

Nothing, I learned, was visible except the light, and that was of such a character as to cause no special comment. Speaking of airships, the consensus of opinion among the college people was that the idea was absurd. I am confident that vivid imagination has contributed largely in manufacturing out of this speck of light or flame an inhabitant of the sky. The successful operation of an airship under the conditions here described would be impossible in my judgment. Besides, had this been a ship of the air, under absolute control, there is no question that the State of California is not big enough to have concealed it from view until the inventor was ready to make a trial. On the whole there is nothing in the affair, save this, that there was a light seen in the sky on Friday night by a number of people in this vicinity, some of whom gave it a second thought. The airship tale, I imagine, is a huge joke!"

George H. Strong, who has been in the patent business for many years, and who knows all about the various attempts that have been made to perfect flying machines, said last night at his Oakland home that he did not believe that the machine claimed to have been seen in the sky was anything more than a hot-air balloon.

"There has been nothing that has been described that would not be the description of a hot-air balloon," said Mr. Strong. "I do not believe that any such ship, of such a size, could be started from any city and returned to any place in this State where it could be concealed. It is now reported to have been roaming about the skies for several nights. During this time it must have rested somewhere, and to my mind it would have been impossible to have hidden it where it would not have been found."

Elior Benjamin, a salesman employed by Sherman, Clay & Co., is said to be the inventor of the brilliant piece of mechanism so many persons say they have seen trailing the sky nearly every night during the last week. Benjamin formerly practiced dentistry, but for the last two or three years he has occupied his present position.

NORHBROOK OR COLLINS?

Has the Famed Oriental Warrior Changed His Name?

OROVILLE, November 23.--Nothing can be obtained here to verify the statement as to the flying machine made by George D. Collins of Oakland Collins is unknown here. There is no wealthy man living here who came from Maine, or any other state, in the past seven years, and there is no one here that a diligent search can uncover who knows anything at all about a flying ship having been invented here or having left here for Sacramento. Herewith are given some of the views of prominent citizens:

"I have read the airship article in the San Francisco 'Chronicle' and consider it a hoax. In fact, I know it to be, so far as its hailing from Oroville or the vicinity is concerned."--E.W. Fogg.

"There is not a word of truth in the airship story. Such a structure could not have been made in this vicinity without some of our citizens knowing something of it. It is a fake of the rankest kind!"--John C. Gray.

"I never heard of an airship in this vicinity. There has been a great deal of wind up here lately, but no ship. I think it a pure fake."--Warren Sexton.

"The 'Chronicle' story of the airship is true. It was inflated with 'Chronicle'-'Call' explanations of their change of opinions on the silver question, rose light and airy and sailed straight for the moon on November 1d."--A.F. Jones.

WHAT SACRAMENTANS SAW.

Bright Lights That Moved in the Heavens, and a Weird Craft. SACRAMENTO, November 23.--Since last Wednesday morning when the first airship story was sprung on an incredulous and skeptical world the absorbing topic has been this aerial mystery. And to-night again hundreds of people claim to have seen moving lights in the heaven, but no ship. The only point on which the lucky observers of Tuesday evening agree is that all saw a big light, as bright as one or two arc lights, moving southwesterly at different heights. In order to compare the statements of these observers "The Examiner" reporter called on some of them this evening, and these are the tales as they told them:

Emil Wengel (?), barkeeper at the Sacramento brewery, on Twenty-eighth street--I saw the light but did not see the machine. I heard a voice from the machine declare they were bound for San Francisco.

Charles O. Broyles, a mechanic, who was in the same company--I saw the light and heard singing in the vicinity of the light and recognized the tune as "Just tell them that you saw me." I could not distinguish the words, though recognizing the tune. When the light got about to N street it turned about due east. (A more sudden change, of course, than any one else noticed.)

J.H. Vogel, bartender--I saw the light and above it a dark body dimly outlined in the form of an egg, with the small end forward. I heard a muffled buzzing of machinery. (He was with the others close to the electric car line.)

The man who retains the most vivid picture in his mind of this aerial voyager is R.L. Lowry, formerly an employee of the street railroad, living now at Twenty-eighth and O streets. He said:

I was standing near the Sacramento brewery when my attention was directed skyward by hearing a voice up there call out: "Throw her up higher; she'll hit the steeple," evidently mistaking the tower on the brewery for a church steeple. Then I saw the light. It seemed like a light within a globular glass covering that magnified it. Above the light I saw two men seated as though on bicycle frames and working with a bicycle movement. I heard on of them say: "We will get to San Francisco about half-past 12," but not mentioning whether midnight or after noon. Above these two men, who seemed to be working their passage, was a kind of mezzanine box capable of holding two or more people, but I saw no others. Above this was a cigar-shaped body of some length. There were wheels at the side like the side wheels on Fulton's old steamboat.

Charles H. Lusk, assistant cashier of the street railroad--I saw the light only. It seemed about 1,000 feet high. It grew dim and brighter again as if passing through a mist. I saw the craft rise and fall and vary its course as though guided by an intelligent mind.

This evening the lower part of the city was again thrown into excitement by the appearance of a bright light about forty degrees above the horizon. It was watched along K street from Fourth to the river by hundreds of people, who all declare that it moved southwesterly until the buildings shut off the view, and then they moved down and many followed it until in the distance it seemed about ten degrees above the horizon. But no one saw any outline of a ship, though one grey-headed enthusiast solemnly declared that he heard the sound of a banjo or guitar and felt sure that there were ladies in the party.

Captain Nick E. White watched it intently. He says he saw the light change its course as if it had made a circuit, and that he distinctly saw five lights during this maneuver. Hundreds of men testify to seeing this light pass over the city all the way from Twenty-fourth street west to the river, but no one was lucky enough to see the airship. (Cartoons: Had been looking upon the airship when it was red (drunk carried by policeman into paddywagon). Invented the airship (nut with wheels in his head). The airship bug (flying around man's head). Floating in a troubled sea of light and shade (as drunk sees street). One man who saw it (restrained in mental institution).)

1896 November 23 (Mon) Oakland Tribune, p. 1.

(cont.)

FLOATING IN THE AIR. / The Mysterious Bark Is Seen by Many Reputable Oaklanders. / ALL THE STORIES COINCIDE. / It Was Plainly Visible About 7 O'clock Last Night. / MANY RUMORS ARE AFLOAT. / Attorney Collins' Story Is Believed by His Friends. /

That a huge airship has been hovering over Oakland for the last few nights has in the minds of many been conclusively proven. A number of persons whose integrity is unquestionable have seen the strange navigator of the air and this number includes many whose skepticism has been pronounced.

Last evening at about 7:30 o'clock, the passengers on an Alameda car were startled by the sight of a brilliant stream of light high in the heavens off in the direction of Haywards. The passengers distinctly saw the outlines of an airship and watched its maneuvers high in the skies.

The ship resembles a huge bird in its outlines and seemed to rise and fall in its course. A light streamed from the head of the ship, throwing a white stream of light for several hundred yards.

As the outlines of the airship were plainly discerned, the passengers in the street car became greatly excited. The phenomenon had first been noted by a man who had been idly watching the heavens. As soon as he perceived the light, he attracted the attention of the other passengers and all intensely interested, watched the peculiar machine as it made its way through the skies. It was high in the heavens and appeared to be of huge size. When first seen it seemed to be floating over San Leandro. It moved rapidly, going at least twenty miles an hour. It shot across the skies in the northwest, then turned quickly and disappeared in the direction of Haywards.

Not only was the airship seen by the passengers, but many other residents of this city distinctly saw the brilliant light and the huge bird-like body floating in mid-air. None of the spectators were acquainted with each other and yet their stories are startlingly similar agreeing as to time, direction of the airship and descriptions. These facts leave little doubt in the minds of many people that a successful airship has been invented and is navigating the heavens.

Miss Wilson, a daughter of Captain Wilson of the police force, and her friend, Miss Hunter, are among those who viewed the strange sight. The two friends accompanied another young lady to the street car about 7 P.M. yesterday, when their attention was attracted by the peculiar light in the skies. The huge bird-like body from which the light emanated was clearly visible and both young ladies are positive that it was an airship. It followed the same course as described by the passengers on the Alameda car.

Other Oaklanders bear similar testimony. Officer Carson was startled by the strange sight and his story is not to be shaken by scoffers. His experience was like others.

Attorney A.A. Moore told a Tribune reporter this morning that Attorney George D. Collins of Alameda informed him (Moore) two days ago that a successful airship had been invented and that the inventor was a client of Collins. The story of its aerial navigations were a fact, he declared, and the public would learn more concerning it in a few days.

A clerk in Attorney Collins' office corroborated this statement and also said that it was a fact that the airship has been navigating the heavens above Oakland, Haywards and vicinity. He furthermore added that the airship left last evening for Los Angeles. This will account for its manoeuvres last evening when it was seen hovering in the northwest.

As all the persons feeding the accounts of the airship are reputable persons, a general belief in the story is gaining ground.

The inventor's attorney, George D. Collins, withholds his client's name at present. The machine is run by compressed air and generates its own electricity for the powerful arc light. Further particulars in regard to the invention Mr. Collins declines to give at present.

1896 November 23 (Tues) W Silver State (Winnemucca, Nev.), n. 3. (col. 1)

SACRAMENTO NOT IN IT. / People in Winnemucca Saw the Airship One Day Before Sacramentans.

It may sound untrue at this late date, and especially so since so much has been reiterated in the California papers, that the airship which passed high up over the housetops of Sacramento a week ago today sometime between the hours of six and seven o'clock in the evening, was no myth or hallucination on the part of the people who say they saw it, because right here in Winnemucca on Monday, a week ago yesterday, at the uncanny hour of midnight, what seemed to be a "schooner" from which shone a powerful electric light, was seen by "Friday" as it flitted along like a ball of fire in the skies. He also heard voices and music like those Sacramento people, but says he thought at first it was Tommy, Patty, Joe and some of those other boys out serenading in a balloon, so did not pay much attention to it until he heard a voice say: "Lower the ship," and with opened eyes he saw a hand protrude from the monster of light and take the Chinese Masonic flag from the high mast which stands immediately in front of the loss house. Then like a flash it flapped its wings and soared high in the air on its way west. The Monzols will swear to the truth of this statement for they have lost their flag.

A number of Winnemucca ladies declare that there is no mistake but that an aerial traveler passed directly over this town, exhibiting a magnificent searchlight at the hour above mentioned. They were up patiently waiting for their husbands to return from lodge and as they sat by their windows they saw what they thought to be a golden chariot resplendent with light, and horses with wings, behind which sat angels with harps and crowns of flowers upon their heads from which sparks of light shone bright as the stones in a crystal mine. "O, no, it was no dream, for we saw and spoke about it next day among ourselves and we all agreed that it was an omen, an apparition, which we read once in a paper would appear to a few of us four years before the end of the world in 1907."

We are positive many other Winnemuccans saw this mysterious visitant and as we go to press our "devil" and Jim are having a quarrel as to who saw it first.

More About Sacramento's Fake.

A dispatch from Washington says that at the patent office yesterday nothing could be learned of the application for a patent of the flying machine alleged to be making successful flying trials near Sacramento.

The rules of the office forbid any disclosures of the names of applicants or the character of the invention for the parties. Search among the patent records now controlled by the Pacific coast business failed to disclose any knowledge of the alleged success in aeronautics.

Professor Langley, of the Smithsonian Institute, who has experimented scientifically for some time to demonstrate the best method of solving the question of aerial navigation, excused himself from discussing the matter. His manner indicated plainly that he gave little credence to the Sacramento reports.

1896 November 23 (Mon eve) Woodland, Calif., Daily Democrat, p. 3.

AERIAL NAVIGATION. / The Airship Said to Have Been Invented by Dr. Benjamin. / Formerly Resided in Woodland and Said He Had an Invention That Would Revolutionize the World. /

A dispatch from San Francisco states that the airship which is said to have been floating around in the air for several days is the invention of Dr. Elmer H. Benjamin, who is a dentist and was Dr. Ben's first time a resident of Woodland.

He first commenced visiting Woodland about eight years ago. He was traveling for Sherman & Clay, as a piano agent. He introduced himself to Dr. Holmes and said he had practiced dentistry under Dr. Hill, of San Francisco.

His visits after that time were quite frequent for six or seven years. He has not been here for about a year and a half, but Fred Holmes saw him in Sacramento about seven months ago.

He frequently went to the office of Dr. Holmes, who considered him a good dentist, and he treated several patients for Dr. Holmes. He had neither a diploma nor a recommendation, and hence opened no office of his own.

He never mentioned airships during conversations with Dr. Holmes, but one day he patted him on the back and remarked: "Doc, I am working on an invention that will one day revolutionize the world."

There are many residents of this city who remember Dr. Benjamin, and some of them believe that the airship is a reality and that he is the inventor.

Saw the Airship.

Dr. Amiel Morris, of this city, was in Sacramento Sunday evening. While in the Saddle Rock Restaurant, between 6 and 7 o'clock, he was called out by the proprietor to see the so-called airship. He saw what appeared to be a ball of fire, about 600 feet high, southeast of the town of Washington. It was in sight nearly an hour.

1896 November 23 (Mon. eve.) Woodland, Calif., Daily Democrat, p. 2.

Davisville Doings. / . . .

It seems that my aerial bicycle, of which mention was made in the Democrat several years ago, is still a thing of wonder to those whose eyes see without understanding it. Shortly after its conception, my friend Harry completed a small machine which we made a trial trip at night. On that occasion we were sighted from Stockton and San Jose, but as we kept well up in the air, we passed as a slow-moving meteor, but on our second voyage of last Tuesday evening the steering gear did not work very well and we came near getting mixed up with the church steeples of Sacramento. The machine is among the possibilities, but as yet it does not come up to our ideal, which is 400 miles an hour and perfect control as to height and distance.

THE APPARITION OF THE AIR. / Oaklanders Say Its Frame Was Like the Body of a Bird. / ATTORNEY COLLINS' TALE SUPPORTED. / Another Lawyer Who Was Informed of the Alighting of the Flier. / MOVING LIGHTS ONCE MORE MYSTIFY THIS CITY. / Dr. Benjamin Disclaims the Invention--Mayor Sutro's Testimony and That of Other Reputable Citizens Offered. /

Testimony concerning the existence of an airship which is supposed to be navigating the air over the bay cities by night and hiding from observation in some secluded place before daybreak came in yesterday from many sources. Many persons saw mysterious lights roving overhead but the projectors of the phenomenon which has caused intense and general interest seem to revel in mystery.

Among those who yesterday told of seeing the lights carried about by an aerial visitor were Mayor Sutro, Colonel Menton, the excursion agent of the Southern Pacific Company; Samuel Foltz, advertising manager of The Call; Professor C.H. Murphy of the Polytechnic High School also many others.

What they saw or heard from others who saw the roving light is told in the subjoined account. They all tell practically the same story, which is that the light appeared quite high overhead and that it moved very fast. They did not all observe it to be roving in the same direction.

Dr. Benjamin, who has been supposed to have invented a flying machine or airship, which is supposed to be the cause of the phenomena observed overhead during the past few nights, was in the City yesterday, and last evening was interviewed by The Call. Dr. Benjamin said that he did not know anything about the airship. At the same time he conceded that if he did know of such an invention of his own, he would consider it wise not to give any information concerning it until he had secured his patents. Dr. Benjamin said that Mr. Collins is his attorney, and admitted that he visited Mr. Collins yesterday afternoon. This, in connection with the fact that Mr. Collins admitted that he is attorney for a man who claims to have invented an airship, must be taken for what it is worth.

Concerning this mystery it should be clearly understood that The Call does not aver that an airship has been invented, nor does it deny that such is the fact. There is no intention on the part of The Call to deceive its readers. The statements which have been made by reputable citizens are given, and these will undoubtedly be carefully considered and the consensus of public opinion will place the true value upon the different circumstances. There are several theories to account for the mysterious moving light, which do not necessarily imply the existence of a flying machine or airship.

There is no doubt that many people firmly believe in the airship. There were many such who sat up late last night to watch for the appearance of such a vessel. Many stood on roofs and in other elevated places, in the rain, until late, hoping to get a glimpse of it. At the hour of going to press the whole matter remained a mystery.

Henry W. Bradley of the law firm of Stanley, Hayes & Bradley made a very interesting statement which will be widely read.

The most circumstantial story yet told came from Oakland last night. Passengers on a streetcar claim to have been attracted by the light overhead and looking upward they saw distinctly the outlines of an airship, which resembled a huge bird in its outlines and which seemed to rise and fall in its course. Many residents of Oakland say that they, also, discerned the outlines of the vessel. / BODY LIKE A BIRD. / What Spectators Across the Bay Say That They Saw.

OAKLAND, CAL., Nov. 23.--There is a general impression in this city that the airship which has been seen so often recently is being housed somewhere in Alameda County when it is not being tested by its inventor.

The whole population is about equally engaged in discussing the qualities of airships and looking at the sky expecting to see the winged machine parting the clouds. Reports are continually being received of its being seen in the neighborhood of Berkeley and Hayward, as though the inventor were confining his experiments to the low land between the hills that skirt the northern boundary of the county and the bay. Several people saw the light over Hayward last night, and the number of people who have seen it in North Oakland is constantly increasing.

Last evening the conductor wearing badge No. 26 of the Alameda electric line reported seeing the affair over Fruitvale. He says it had a powerful headlight and there appeared to be several smaller lights on board.

Mayor Davie is a firm believer in the existence of the airship. "I doubted the story of whose who declared they had seen it," said the Mayor to-day, "but when I looked through the names of the reputable people who unhesitatingly assert that they have seen it I doubt it no longer.

"I have always believed in the practicability of airships, and a few years ago old Dr. Freeling had a model that closely resembled the picture published of this invention, and he told me before he died that when aluminum was brought into use the secret of air-flying would be solved. I have no doubt that some one has built a machine, because many of those who have seen it are certainly entitled to credit.

Attorney A.A. Moore heard the story of the airship a few days ago. "I did not talk with Mr. Collins," he said, "but I was talking with a friend, an attorney, who told me that Collins had talked with him about a client who had invented an airship."

Last evening at about 7:30 o'clock the passengers of an Alameda car were startled by the sight of a brilliant stream of light high in the heavens off in the direction of Hayward. The passengers distinctly saw the outlines of an airship and watched its maneuvers high in the skies.

The ship resembles a hur bird and its outlines and seemed to rise and fall in its course. A light streamed from the head of the ship, throwing a white stream of light for several hundred yards. As the outlines of the airship were plainly discerned the passengers in the car became greatly excited. The phenomenon had first been noted by a man who had been idly watching the heavens. As soon as he perceived the light he attracted the attention of the other passengers and all intensely interested watched the peculiar machine as it made its way through the skies.

It was high in the heavens and appeared to be of huge size. When first seen it seemed to be floating over San Leandro. It moved rapidly, going at least twenty miles an hour. It shot across the skies in the northwest, then turned quickly and disappeared in the direction of Hayward. Not only was the airship seen by the passengers, but many other residents of this city distinctly saw the brilliant light and the huge, bird-like body floating in midair. None of the spectators were acquainted with each other, and yet their stories are startlingly similar, agreeing as to time, direction of the airship and description. These facts leave little doubts in the minds of many people that a successful airship has been invented, and is navigating the heavens.

Miss Wilson, a daughter of Captain Wilson of the police force, and her friend, Miss Hunter, are among those who viewed the strange sight. The two friends accompanied another young lady to the streetcar about 7 P.M. yesterday, where their attention was attracted by the peculiar light in the skies. The huge bird-like body from which the light emanated was clearly visible, and both young ladies are positive it was an airship. It followed the same course as described by the passengers on the Alameda car. Police Officer Carson and John Strickler, the flaxman at Fourteenth and Broadway, also declare that they saw the airship.

"The representatives of the afternoon papers were almost hysterical in their demands that I discredit The Call's interview. I wish to say right here that I have not a word to take back of all that has been reported. It was a truthful, reliable interview and The Call is the only paper that has reported me correctly. The stories in the evening papers that I had denied the interview were false and the writers actually told me they were going to write such stuff before they left my office.

"Since the fact was published that I am the attorney for the inventor I have not seen my client. We mailed the papers regarding the patent to Washington last week and expect to hear soon of their arrival. I do not know when I shall see my client again, but I expect him any day. He is a man that impressed me with the idea of being perfectly able to manage his own affairs, and I have no doubt he knows what he is doing.

"I wish to correct one idea that seems to be prevalent. Some papers have published the fact that the inventor is an Orville man. I have not said so. He is a San Francisco man but he has constructed his machine near Orville. I did say this afternoon to the reporters of the San Francisco evening papers that the story as published in the Chronicle was a fake. Not only that; I told the young fellow from the Chronicle that he had grossly misrepresented me in his interview where he quoted me as having said I saw the airship work, the inventor having come here, and, after talking to me a while, getting into it and moving away. The statement that I had seen it working at all is false.

"As I told you before, as I told him, and as I now repeat it, all I know is that I have been appealed to by a man who appears perfectly ready to act as his attorney in securing for him a patent on his invention. It would be presumptuous (sic) for me to say the story that an airship was being worked about the bay was a fake, when it is taken into consideration the number of people who stake their reputation on having seen one. Even if it was not the ship of the man who came to see me, it is not for me to say that these people have not seen an airship. There is more than one man at work on the question of aerial navigation, and some one is bound to solve it as they did the steam-engine and the electric-car. I am as skeptical regarding the actual working of the craft as any one, but am not such a fool as to say that it is an impossibility.

"I was told in this city to-day that the Chronicle had secured a man--one Dr. Benjamin, I believe--to maintain throughout that the invention is his and that he is the one who has been going about the heavens at night. He is to say that he has paid me $500 as a retainer and that I am to have $1500 when the patents are issued. This is along the line of their story as first told, and it must be kept up at any cost. I desire to denounce the whole story in advance as a pure fake to support the wild imagination of one of their reporters. It places me in an unfair light before the public and injures my business to have such stories set afloat when there is not the least foundation for them.

"When the Examiner man came to me Sunday afternoon he told me that his paper had the whole story and knew the inventor and would publish it this morning. They did not particularly care, he said, for my version, but would like to have it just to verify what they knew. The bold bluff did not work and the story in to-day's Examiner trying to ridicule the affair, but at the same time leaving loopholes to escape, was the result.

"There is no denying the fact that the public has been aroused to a high pitch of expectation by the reports published. The Examiner sent a man to me to-day who said they had treated the whole affair as a huge joke, but found that people were looking at it in a serious manner and they were ready to give the news as received, regardless of how improbable it might look. He asked me to give a true account of the matter as far as I knew anything, but when I denied having seen the machine work or having ridden in it he laughed and said I was hedging." /

KNEW OF THE AIRSHIP. / Attorney H. W. Bradley was Informed of interesting facts.

"I am at a loss to know how you could have ascertained that I know anything about the airship," said Henry W. Bradley of the law firm of Stanley, Hays & Bradley, of this City, yesterday, to a representative of The Call.

"Do you know anything about it?"

Mr. Bradley hesitated a moment, then said: "The man you want to see is George A. Collins, the attorney. All I can say is that if Collins said what is accredited to him in a published interview this morning, Collins knows what he is talking about, and I will say, further, that Collins would scarcely take part in a fake story, because he would have more to lose than to gain by so doing.

"Now, there is that first publication in The Call about the airship. That undoubtedly was by telegraph from Sacramento after 1 o'clock in the morning, for it states it was after midnight that the object was seen over that city. Then there is McGovern at the California Hotel, who told me Saturday night that he saw it between 2 and 4 o'clock in the morning. I know that it landed at 3 o'clock--

"Where?"

"You have made me say more than I intended to," replied Mr. Bradley, with a look upon his countenance which seemed to say that he wished he had remained silent; than as a faint smile lighted up his features: "I cannot tell you where it landed; that is, I do not feel at liberty to state where. The man you want to see is Collins.

"You must understand that I cannot speak about this matter, but will say this: The Call has been consistent in this matter. It is on the right track and it must not back water; and then it got ahead of all the other papers on a big piece of news.

"Then there is A.L. Hart of Sacramento, who stated that if certain parties of that city declared that they had seen the object he believed what they said."

"Where is that wonderful and much-talked-about airship now?" was asked.

"That I cannot tell you, but I will say this: I was to have inspected it to-day, but for some reason the invitation I expected did not reach me; possibly because the premature announcement in The Call has interfered with projected plans, or it may be the weather.

"I wish to place myself right in this matter. While in conversation with a gentleman three or four days before the first publication of the airship story in The Call I was told that such an invention was in existence and the difficulty of navigating the sky would soon be overcome. The gentleman who gave me this information did so in confidence, a confidence that I will not betray. As an attorney I could not afford to do so and as a man I would not.

"There is another reason I have for not wishing to give expression to my knowledge or views, which is this: Several of the newspapers have published interviews with Mr. Collins and other papers have asserted that he denied the truth of the statements attributed to him. Now, it would not look well for me to make statements contradictory to his or have him deny statements that I made. Therefore, I will keep silent."

Mr. Bradley stated that he is in no way connected with the airship scheme, either as an attorney or as a friend to the parties most concerned.

"Do you believe that the existence of an airship at the present time is possible?" was asked.

Mr. Bradley smiled and cautiously answered: "Was the airship not seen by hundreds of respectable citizens in Sacramento, San Francisco, Oakland and other places? I would not presume to dispute their statements."

"Then you believe that we have such an invention that has proved a success?"

"Yes, I believe what my friends tell me. However, I am not an authority. All I know, that is, all I think I know, is from hearsay testimony alone. I have never seen it, and I do not expect to make a trip in it as it has been reported." /

SEEN LAST NIGHT. / MANY MANY PERSONS IN THIS CITY GAZED UPWARD AND WONDERED. /

The mysterious light was seen last night in this City by a gentleman of undoubted practical experience. Samuel Foltz, advertising manager of The Call, was looking out from his residence at 1157 Stanyan street about 9:15 p.m., when he noticed a light traveling in the direction of Berkeley. He at first thought he was dreaming, but looking again he called out the people residing in the house and all agreed that the light corresponded in appearance with that attributed to the mysterious flying ship.

Mr. Foltz said that the light was apparently that of an ordinary lamp; that it was located about 300 feet above the earth, and was, when sighted, above the locality of Van Ness avenue, and that it was traveling direct and with tremendous velocity toward Berkeley. The light remained in sight about four minutes, when it passed out of view.

C.B. Murphy, a teacher at the Polytechnic High School, told an interesting story last evening: "I was coming down Valencia street about 9:15 to-night," said Mr. Murphy, "and I noticed the phenomenon. Above, at an elevation of possibly 4000 feet, was an electric glow, which was moving toward the park at the rate of one mile per minute. This was observed by hundreds of persons. Every one on Valencia street might have seen it. There was only one light. This had a vibration or wave. There was no fake about this. When I saw the light I was on the south side of Valencia street." /

OVER SUTRO HEIGHTS. / Airship Seen by the Mayor's Employee a Few Days Ago.

None of those who have seen the mysterious moving lights in the heavens that are believed to be those of an airship is more firmly convinced that a flying machine hovers nightly over the bay cities than Mayor Sutro, and the story he tells to support his expressed belief is vastly interesting.

The Mayor is nothing if not practical, and he says that there is not the faintest doubt in his mind that the aerial courier passed over Sutro Heights a short time ago and that it was a genuine airship and doing a very fair job of air-sailing.

"I have not seen the airship myself," said the Mayor after the meeting of the Board of Supervisors yesterday, "but some of my people at the heights have, and their stories leave no doubt in my mind as to the truth of the stories The Call has published on the subject.

"Their narratives were not given me after the paper got hold of the matter, but were told several days ago when no such thing had reached public print.

"When I reached home one evening, about the length of time ago I mention, I found them in a great state of excitement, and when I inquired the reason of the agitation they told me of a strange spectacle they had witnessed a short time before. They told me that shortly after dark they had seen a strange, brilliant light coming in from the direction of the sea.

"At first little attention was paid to it, but as the light drew nearer all became very much interested and watched the brilliant spot closely.

"As it approached the heights they saw that it was not over 500 feet above the ocean and was moving swiftly and with a slightly undulating motion.

"When almost over the beach two lights were discernible, one apparently being below a misty-looking mass and the other behind it.

"They paid particular attention to the latter, as it threw a long ray of light, similar to that cast by a searchlight, far out into the darkness. They told me that this stream of light was 500 feet long, but I presume that, while it seemed that long, it was in reality much shorter.

"They watched it until it disappeared in the direction of the City and saw it turn toward the north just before it passed from view. Now, these people would not try to tell me ghost stories, and I know that they saw just what they described.

"I certainly think that some shrewd inventor has solved the problem of aerial navigation and that we will hear all about it within a short time. It would not be any more wonderful than the invention of the telegraph, the telephone, the phonograph or the X ray, and it would seem that some one must hit on the proper appliance when so many smart men have been working on the problem."

It has been stated that the airship passed over the Seal Rocks a short time ago and played its light on the seals, and it may be that this was the occasion when it was seen from the heights.

COLONEL MENTON SAW IT. / Three Lights in View as the Mystery Sailed.

Colonel W.H. Menton, the excursion agent of the Southern Pacific Company, lives in the Supreme Court building at the corner of Larkin and McAllister streets. He is confident he saw the mysterious aerial peregrinator Sunday night. This is his story as he told it yesterday:

"Last night, at about 20 minutes of 8 o'clock, the elevator-boy came to my door and told me if I wanted to see the airship to go to the window. My wife and two lady friends went at once to the window, and looking out toward the park, say at an apparent height of about 100 yards, saw three lights. One shot its rays toward the northwest, another toward the southwest, and one, the most brilliant, poured its light directly toward the earth. These lights had the appearance and intensity of searchlights.

"I am sure," continued Colonel Menton, "that it was neither a star, meteor nor any other wanderer of the heavens. The light was far brighter than any of the electric lights I saw just below, in and about the park.

"It was traveling toward the west, and we saw it distinctly for ten or fifteen minutes. We all gazed at it until it disappeared in the distance. It neither rose nor fell, but maintained an even course parallel with the earth."

CROSSED THE GATE. / XXX And Some Time Later Was Seen Over the Twin Peaks.

M.H. Cohen of 510 Baker street, a conductor on the Hayes-street car line, saw an object in the sky at 7:05 last Sunday evening, which he believes was the airship. The object seemed to be 300 or 400 feet above the earth. Speaking of the sight yesterday he said: "I first saw it at Market and Eighth streets. It seemed to be moving across the Golden Gate and a flash was occasionally displayed. I called the gripman's attention to it, and he looked and said, 'It might be the airship.'" Two gentlemen on the rear end of the car saw it. I told the receiver and the night watchman about what I had seen. The car left the ferry at 7:13 o'clock, and at First street I saw the object again directly over the Twin Peaks. The forward light seemed to be steady. I informed Frank Allen, the machinist at the carhouse, and he remarked that he had seen a similar object and called the attention of two ladies to it.

"I did not see the object again until I got to the top of Pierce-street hill. Then it seemed to be coming back again from Twin Peaks. We left the park at 7:51, and looking back from Ashbury street got a good view of it. A light was flashed downward for a few minutes. The night /p.2/(TAKEN FROM THE RIGGING) was dark, and while the flashes of light could be seen distinctly, the object could only be seen vaguely. There were thirty passengers on the car who saw it. The gripman's name is C.W. Britton. Another person who saw the object in the air was J. Wyatt, conductor on the car following mine." /

BENJAMIN TALKS. / Is Inconsistent, but Refuses to Father the Invention.

Dr. E.H. Benjamin, the man who has either by chance or for a purpose been suggested as the inventor of the airship, was seen at 633 Ellis street last night by a Call reporter. He had retired and was asleep, but arose, partly dressed, and cordially invited his late visitor into his room, a large single-bed chamber at the front of the boarding-house and with a bay-window overlooking Ellis street. Dr. Benjamin is a sinewy built man above the average height, and with a large mustache and brown hair and gray eyes.

He frankly denied having any connection with or personal knowledge of an airship, but his avowals of willingness to impart the information were it his to give were not consistent with his acknowledgements that a man with so very valuable an invention, not completely perfected and not yet securely patentable, would be justified in lying in a straightforward manner in order to divert from himself all attention that might result in his being persistently followed and the whereabouts and design of the flying device made known.

During a long conversation he said in part:

"I am a dentist and have been for twelve years. I am 34 years old and a bachelor. I have a married uncle in Placerville; his name is F.W. Benjamin and he is a practicing physician of some means. George Collins is my attorney, for I have known George for a long time and whatever little law business I have wanted done I have had him do it. I saw him to-day and he laughed heartily when I told him that they had me the inventor of the airship. He is a shrewd fellow. Well, I only wish I was the inventor. But I am inclined to think I would be afraid to go up in it.

"It is true that I am an inventor, but along other lines. My inventions have to do with dentistry, and consist in patented crowns and bridges for teeth and a reducer to draw the gold bars in making gold caps without seams. Then I have a number of other little dental inventions. Since my name appeared this morning in connection with this affair my friends have joshed me a good deal about being the inventor, and I have told some of them that they may have a ride with me tomorrow if the night is favorable. I have given some thought to the possibility of inventing an airship.

"I firmly believe that there is an airship somewhere near here, and that it will not be long before the public sees it, for as yet, as I understand the newspaper accounts, no one has really got a good view of an airship so much as of a brilliant, moving searchlight. I expect to be followed for a while and given a warm reception until people are convinced that I am not the man they are looking for." / HE IS WELL KNOWN. / The Alleged Inventor Recently Visited in the Interior.

Dispatches were received last night from Woodland and Oroville concerning Dr. Benjamin. The list of towns claiming him while he has been supposed to be the inventor of an airship is lengthening, like the list of towns that claimed Homer.

A Woodland dispatch claimed that Dr. Benjamin visited Woodland first about eight years ago, when he was traveling for Sherman & Clay.

He became acquainted with Dr. L.B. Holmes and many others, and treated patients in the office of Dr. Holmes, who considered him a proficient workman. He has not been in Woodland for about a year and a half. He told some friends that he would soon complete an invention that would revolutionize the world. The fact that he has a wealthy uncle in Oroville probably gave rise to the rumor that an Oroville millionaire had built the airship.

A dispatch from Oroville alleges that Dr. Benjamin is a native of Carmel, Me. He was in Oroville November 15 ~~xxxx~~ visiting his uncle. / READY TO SAIL IN AIR. / Court Judges Asking for Passes and Others Seeking Positions.

George D. Collins, who claims to be the attorney for the inventor of the airship, has evidence that there are persons who believe that there is a real airship afloat. One of these, a boy who has been in the navy, has written to him making application for position of cabin-boy or deck-hand. A large part of his time is taken up answering questions. Judges of the ~~xxxx~~ courts have already made application for passes, he says, and he has no end of changes to discuss the mechanism of the vessel. With all this, Mr. Collins throws a dash of cold water on some enthusiasts who base their theories upon alleged utterances of his.

"I am sorry to see," he said yesterday, "that the newspapers have been attributing to me such an extensive knowledge relative to this airship. In truth I know very little about it.

"On Thursday last there came to my office a former client of mine for whom I had prosecuted a claim against the Crocker estate about six months ago, and asked me to get out a patent for him for an airship he said he had invented. I said I could not do anything unless he produced a model, and he said he would have one made at once. He attempted to give me a description of the invention, but I told him it would be of no use to me. I am now awaiting his return with the model. He may call any day. When he brings the model I will make application for his ~~xxx~~ patent.

"I know nothing about the airship. I do not know what it is made of, what power propels it, nor where its inventor now is. I am just as skeptical and incredulous regarding it as anybody can be.

"The reason I believe this airship that people claim to have seen is his invention is that on the day he called me he remarked:

"Did you see an account of my airship passing over Sacramento this morning?"

"I told him I had not seen it.

"He then said: 'I passed over Sacramento last night and arrived on the other side of the bay this morning at 3 o'clock. I have solved the problem of atmospheric navigation.'"

Balloon in the Sky.
OROVILLE, Cal., Nov. 23.--Several people in this vicinity saw a moving light in the heavens Sunday evening. To-day's investigations result in learning of a Portuguese, living in Cherokee, who sent up an experimental balloon last evening inflated with gas from a fire attached to it in which turpentine and resin are the principal parts. There is no doubt this is the light seen here. The Portuguese says he does not think his balloon sailed more than twelve miles. It was his intention to send up another to-night but rain prevented it.

Cartoon, p.1: (Man sees flying naval ship w. searchlight) SCOTT--"An airship? Of course not. That's the last cruiser I bid for and lost. If I've been wondering ever since what became of it."
1896 November 24 (Tues) The Call (San Francisco), p. 6.

AERIAL NAVIGATION. (ed.) /

The manner in which the Sacramento story of an aerial ship has been received strikingly illustrates the condition of the public mind in regard to the possibility of an early accomplishment of success in navigating the air. The story came upon us so unexpectedly that comparatively few people believed it, and yet the consciousness of the great strides that have been made toward success in this enterprise was such that very few were found to declare an absolute skepticism concerning it.

It is beyond question that we have been for some time on the verge of success in this much sought after system of navigation. The project has long since passed from the hands of quacks and eccentrics into those of learned scientists and accomplished inventors. What has been done by Maxim, by Langley and by Lilienthal is sufficient to make it evident that human ingenuity is capable of dealing with the problem and successfully mastering it.

The strange part of the story from Sacramento is that it brings the airship home to us in California when we were looking for it in the East or in Europe. Models of airships have been on exhibition in nearly all the great cities of the world and some of them have shown remarkably good results. Had the story of the airship come from London, or even from Chicago, it would have been much better received. It was too much of a surprise, however, for the general public to learn that the great ship had been built and had sailed forth from Oroville.

We have in this another illustration of the old question, "Can any good come out of Nazareth?" It is hard to believe in an airship coming from a place where nobody expected so much as a balloon. Nevertheless if it proves true and the airship shows herself visibly to us all it will then be remembered it is not the first time that great discoveries have come from places whence they were least expected.

It was from the little obscure village of Philadelphia, in the wilderness of Pennsylvania, more than a century ago, that came the discovery of electricity and the invention of the lightning-rod. It was from a poor barber-shop in a British village came the invention which enables sea captains to determine with accuracy their exact location upon the ocean at any hour of the day or night, no matter how far they may have drifted from their course by winds and waves. A hundred instances of a similar character could be cited. If therefore the airship has come forth from Oroville it will not be an extraordinary thing in the history of invention.

1896 November 24 (Tues) San Francisco Chronicle, p. 9. (cont.)

COY MR. COLLINS AND HIS AIRSHIP. / The Attorney Hedges on His Story. / NOW HE NEVER SAW THE THING / STRANGE LIGHTS OBSERVED IN THE SKY. / Plenty of Good People Who Are Sure They Have Seen the "Seraph of the Air."

"Airship" Collins--that is what the young lawyer's friends are calling him--says aloud that all men are liars, with a legal reservation in favor of "Airship" Collins. This is modest, at least, and modesty is an attribute which enhances the personal charms of even a promoter of miracles.

Collins during the last few days has been engaged alternately in getting into the witness box and then cross-examining himself on the accuracy of his own testimony. During this peculiar process he has succeeded in tangling himself up into innumerable knots and has finally arrived at a point where he has been forced, for want of material to come to a sudden halt.

Last Friday he told a story about the inventor of an airship. The inventor was a millionaire, had constructed a successful machine, and had gone to Collins several weeks before to have him get a patent on the invention. He had sent the application on to Washington for his client, and then, at the inventor's invitation, had visited the airship, which it has been solemnly declared had "wings like the great condor of the Andes," and had seen it fly, circle about in the air, describe graceful curves, pirouette like a ballet dancer, and finally descend to earth "as gracefully as a falling leaf."

The inventor, however, was not quite satisfied. He wanted the intelligence to Collins' secret ear that the machine had a "heavy motion. He would experiment some more. Then to his friend Collins he told another secret. In a few days, after preliminary rehearsals in Sacramento and around Alameda county, he would fly up and down Market street and let all San Francisco see the wonder. And Collins, Collins the demure and bewildered young patent lawyer, Collins the human safe deposit of his great secret--would share with him the adoration of a great city.

All this with bated breath and in a coy, hesitating manner, Collins whispered in strict confidence to everybody who would listen to him.

But yesterday he either had a visit from the true inventor, or order to quit talking, or else he has just been aroused from a hypnotic condition into which some unknown benevolent genius has a week ago. Like a little Joe, he "don't know nothink about nothink." He indignantly remonstrates the insinuation that there ever was an airship and, as for his having seen such a thing fly--the very supposition is ridiculous. There certainly was a man who visited him a few days ago with some talk about a flying machine and a patent and a model, but beyond that he is not aware of anything in connection with the matter. He never sent any airship application to Washington, and in short any man who says he did is a liar and a son of a liar. Mr. Collins thinks it an insult to connect him in any way with anything vulgarly improbable as an airship. He is sorry to have to tell two or three hundred people who have listened to his statements that they are--well, story-tellers, but he can see no other way out of it.

On Sunday the following scrap of conversation passed between two persons:

"Mr. Collins, on your word of honor as a professional man, have you seen this airship in successful operation?"

"Yes, I have."

But Mr. Collins was evidently in a trance at the time, for he doesn't now remember a word about it. So anxious is Mr. Collins to undo the wonder he has worked that he now declares his positive belief that no successful airship has ever been constructed. When he took a retainer from his client last Thursday morning Collins says he instructed the inventor to provide him with a model. Promising to do so, the inventor left and has not since returned.

It was all very well at first to be the attorney for the eighth wonder of the world and to entertain the ladies and gentlemen of the press from morning till midnight, but yesterday came some of the trouble.

A wild-eyed man put his head in at Collins' door and demanded fiercely to know if the lawyer was in. Having had some experience with cranks, Collins diplomatically replied that Collins was at the City Hall.

"What's he doing there?" demanded the visitor.

"He's working on an air ship, I think," the attorney responded gently.

"That's it!" exclaimed the intruder. "That's my air ship; he has stolen it--he has stolen my air ship."

Collins grew uncomfortable. He squirmed in his chair and finally suggested that the man who had had his air ship stolen should report the matter to the Chief of Police, and the unwelcome visitor departed.

This was but one of many cranks who called upon the attorney during the day. There were men who had successful air ships of many kinds. One wanted to procure the agency for sale to the Japanese Government of the right to use it as an war vessel, saying he was sure of making a fortune for himself and Collins. Another came to retain him as his attorney in a suit for the Presidency of the United States by right of heirship, saying he had been referred to Collins as an expert on that sort of thing. The following communication came to Collins through the mail:

I thought I would write you a few lines to ask you if you have any position aboard that airship for a good, strong boy. I am a boy without much schooling and no trade. But a cabin or deck boy I am one of the best, but I guess you have no need for a cabin or a deck boy if you need any boy to keep the thing clean, I would like to go in the airship. If you need any one you will do me a great favor by giving me the position. Yours until then.

P.S.--I can show a good discharge for five months' time I was in the United States Navy.

Another person who began the day yesterday with the idea that there would be great sport in assisting the attorney in this airship business was E.H. Benjamin of 633 Ellis street.

On Sunday Attorney Collins called on Benjamin at his Ellis-street residence and was closeted with him for some time. Later "Chronicle" reporters called at the rooms and found evidence to corroborate the attorney's statements previously made that he was about to visit the inventor.

Benjamin is a dentist by profession and a piano salesman by occupation. He has invented several dental appliances, he says, for which Attorney Collins has procured him patents. He says the aluminum and drawings found in his apartments last night were connected with these inventions and not with a flying machine. He is not a millionaire; in fact, his income depends rather on the sale of his inventions and occasional employment as a dentist's assistant or a piano salesman.

Yesterday Benjamin gravely invited those who broached the subject to take a ride with him in his nice new airship. He had a whole heap of fun out of the joke.

As the day wore on, however, and Benjamin became the butt of all the street jokers and found himself pursued by reporters, he came to the conclusion that the joke was not so funny after all. He paid a visit to Collins' office and after that consultation both the lawyer and himself denied all knowledge of any old airships, and Benjamin was particularly anxious to deny that he was an experimenter along the lines of aerial navigation.

Just now it is recalled that some twenty years ago the name "Tom Collins" was the synonym for a hoax of any kind. If you wanted to send your friend on a wild goose chase you sent him to the nearest saloon with the story that "Tom Collins" wanted him. When he arrived there he was informed that Collins had just gone to the next place, and so the victim was chased from pillar to post in search of the mythical Collins. If you received a message informing you that you had just won the capital prize in a lottery you scanned it carefully to be sure the name "Tom Collins" was not signed to it. As the name of Ben-

Munchausen and Joe Mulhatton have become associated with wondrous tales of the impossible, so the name of "Tom Collins" became associated with every popular hoax of the day. "Tom Collins" was the scapegoat of every recreant and inebricated husband returning home late at night.

The light which is said to shine like the head glare of a locomotive or the "Chronicle's" election return flasher was seen in several parts of the city last night and on Sunday, it is declared, by many hundreds of people.

"I saw the light, and am satisfied that it was attached to an airship," said Policeman Clarence Coogan. "I first noticed it in the vicinity of Golden Gate Park. It was unusually brilliant, and seemed to be traveling toward Oakland. After watching it for some time through a field glass I noticed it disappeared below the horizon.

James A. Hall, an attorney had his attention drawn to the light shortly before 7 o'clock. It seemed to be attached to some dark object to some dark object. After hovering around in the vicinity of the Cliff House, he says, it gradually traveled eastward, and finally disappeared when apparently ten or fifteen degrees above the horizon.

"I am satisfied that the mysterious light was attached to an airship," remarked Police Captain Wittman last night. "I closely observed the phenomenon and was struck by its unusual brilliancy. My attention was first called to it shortly after 6 o'clock Sunday night. It seemed to be traveling in a southerly direction and moving rather slowly."

Dan Dougherty, driver of the hospital ambulance, was returning from the Cliff House when he noticed the mysterious light. It was very dark at the time, and he and several others watched it for some time. After hovering over the Park for ten or fifteen minutes it struck out in an easterly direction and finally disappeared. Dougherty is sure that the light was attached to an airship.

"While I am a trifle skeptical about the airship story," said Dr. J.H. O'Brien, "I am inclined to believe that the light was attached to some dark object. I first saw it about 6:30 o'clock Sunday evening. It appeared to be traveling in a southerly direction. As it changed its course I saw three other smaller lights, but only for a few seconds. I watched it until it finally disappeared, as I thought, some distance from Oakland."

Assistant Police Surgeon Thompson saw the light through a powerful field glass. As it traveled through the sky it had a waving motion and at times would become dim.

Dr. James F. Kearney saw the light shortly before 7 o'clock Sunday evening. At times it would become dim, but would immediately regain its brilliancy. He is convinced that it was attached to some dark object. As it passed over the bay he says he distinctly saw three smaller lights in addition to the larger one.

According to the stories told to Mayor Sutro by his employes at the Cliff House, the airship was seen in that vicinity about two weeks ago. Speaking about the matter yesterday, the Mayor said: "It was about dark one evening, about two weeks ago, when I reached the Cliff House, and, as I alighted from the car, a number of my employes rushed up to me and began telling me about having seen a strange object hovering over the Seal rocks. According to their story, the object came in from the sea and passed directly over the Cliff House, stopping its speed only for a second while over the Seal rocks. It seemed to be about 500 feet above the earth, and it was too dark to get a view sufficient to describe it. The bright light that seemed to be attached to the rear end of the object, apparently a searchlight, was visible to all, and as it passed rapidly out of sight, going in the direction of the city, it left my men full of wonderment as to what it could be."

A. T. Cooper, a mechanical engineer who has been employed in various rolling mills of the city, claims to have seen the mysterious airship through a powerful telescope on Sunday night, and he gives a detailed account of his observations.

"Sunday evening about 8 o'clock," he said, "I saw the airship through a telescope from Market and Fifth streets. With the naked eye nothing but the moving light could be seen, but through the telescope the machine was plain. To me it seemed to be shaped like a cartridge, and the light was on the rear end. At the time I saw the ship it was going in a westerly direction, and it continued on its way toward the sea till it disappeared. The end was flat, not pointed, and on it were four large propellers, which were similar to the large screws on ocean steamships. Two of these propellers were at the top of the back end and two were at the bottom.

"But the most surprising thing of all was that I saw two men standing within the machine, some distance in from these propellers. I saw them distinctly, because they walked about and, under the glare of the powerful light at the end, their movements could be easily seen. A friend of mine saw the same thing, and neither he nor any one else who looked through the telescope had any doubt that two men were in the machine. There were several who used the telescope and all of them plainly saw the ship and its occupants."

W.H. Menton, real estate and excursion agent of the Southern Pacific Company, has seen three remarkable lights floating in the air, and though he can by no means bring himself to believe that they came from an airship, he cannot account for them in any other way. Mr. Menton said: "At 8:20 o'clock Sunday night the elevator boy in the old Supreme Court building, at the corner [of] McAllister and Larkin streets, where I live, came to my room and told me to look at an airship in the sky. I looked out the window and just south of the panhandle of the park I saw three very bright lights close together. They all seemed to start from nearly one spot. Two of the rays of light were horizontal and one was perpendicular. It seemed as if one light was on the port side of an airship, if one may believe in such things, another was on the starboard side and the third was from the bottom and pointing downward. I watched the lights for some time, but could not reason out what caused them. They moved slowly southward and finally disappeared in the distance over Clarendon Heights. The lights seemed to be 200 or 300 feet above the arc lights near the park. These electric lights were dim, but the mysterious lights were bright, being fully three or four times stronger. The rays were long and narrow and seemed to fade away from the central point. I was not the only person who saw the lights. There must have been 200 people in the street looking at them, for I watched the peculiar rays for ten minutes before they faded away entirely. Many people were watching from their windows and I could hear persons in the street talking about the lights."

Joseph K. Carter, the expert who has been retained in the settlement of the Pacific Bank troubles, says that on Sunday evening while returning from Berkeley he reached the ferry at 6:15 o'clock and boarded a Howard-street car to go to his home in the Mission.

"After taking a seat on the dummy," he said, "I heard the gripman tell some of the passengers about the traveling lights he had seen on his down trip. All looked, but could see nothing from that point. As we made the turn into Howard street at East street the strange beacon was in full view. I don't pretend to account for it, but I know what I saw—a light, not like the fitful, flaring light of a hot-air balloon, but a steady electric flare. Except when it was obscured by tall buildings, we saw it until we neared the Mission, when it was lost in the mist. It seemed to be moving closer to the earth. Whether it was going with or against the wind I cannot say. I only know that it was something out of the ordinary."

Out in the Western Addition a big crowd of people watched a mysterious glare in the sky for over half an hour early last evening. Most of them jumped to the conclusion that it was the headlight of the airship, but a few of the skeptics who investigated the matter thoroughly declare that it was a fire balloon and nothing else. In support of their ideas they say that the light was of a dull red color, and that it drifted out to sea with the wind. So great was the excitement in the Mission that many people living down in the hollows actually took the gleam of the electric lights on the crests of the hills, as evidence of some strange phenomenon and gazed up at the brilliant flickering for a good while before they found out their mistake.

Over at San Leandro and Haywards there was a mysterious atmospheric seance on Sunday night that was witnessed by several people. Each of them, since his experience, has been the center of a little knot of admiring friends, and every half-hour there is a levee and a period of speech-making, during which the all-absorbing topic is the "What is it?" let loose on the good people of California.

B. Taffelmire, foreman of the Oakland, San Leandro and Haywards Electric Railroad power-house, saw the thing and saw it distinctly. He was standing outside the power-house at Elmhurst, and just before 11 o'clock the new planet came into his ken. Its magic electric light was on show, as usual, and the side lights were glittering away like demoniacal eyes. Their gleam played on the sides of a long, narrow object that seemed to have the shape of an outrigger racing boat. The lights were about half a mile away from Taffelmire, and as he watched them they passed rapidly over Haywards going in the direction of Suno[il].

George Silva, a barber, saw the object at the same time. His description of its appearance is the same as that given by the electrician.

William Umhoff, a contractor and builder of Haywards and one of the oldest residents of Alameda county, is another who stands up boldly and affirms that he saw a real airship right over his head. He said yesterday: "I had a good view of it and cannot be mistaken about its shape or appearance. It had one very large bright light in its bow and two others at either side. I don't drink and never suffer from the staggers and I know what I am talking about. The six thing was an airship and nothing else. It passed rapidly over the hills toward Suno[il] and ran along with a wavy motion, just like a vessel in a moderate sea. I watched it till the Coven ridge shut it out from my view."

Edward Davis, Tim O'Neill and A.B. Hartnell are three young men living three miles from Haywards who not only saw the object but actually had the audacity to chase it for about half a mile over the hills. They were walking along a wagon trail on Coven ridge Sunday night when the lights came into view directly over the crest of the hill in front of them. They stood and watched it for a few moments as it sailed directly over their heads, about 400 feet from the ground, and then they turned and ran along in the same direction. It was going only about four miles an hour and its bulk was distinctly visible directly above them. They had been following it for about five minutes at a steady trot, they say, when O'Neill saw a head peer out over the side of the machine. The object immediately began to gain speed and in a few moments passed swiftly out of sight, going, all three think, at fully twenty miles an hour.

Haywards and San Leandro are full of stories of this character. If Attorney Collins has filed an application for a patent on an airship the knowledge has not yet leaked out in Washington City. A dispatch from there yesterday says:

"At the Patent Office to-day nothing could be learned of any application for a patent on a flying machine alleged to be making successful flights in the neighborhood of Sacramento. The rules of the office forbid any disclosure of the names of the applicants or the character of inventions for which they seek protection. Inquiry among the patent attorneys who are known to control the Pacific Coast business has failed to disclose any knowledge of the alleged success in aeronautics. Professor Langley of the Smithsonian Institution, who has experimented scientifically for some time to demonstrate the best methods of solving the question of aerial navigation, excused himself from discussing the matter. His manner indicated plainly that he gave little credence to the Sacramento reports."

Concerning the connection of Dr. Benjamin with the alleged airship the following dispatch received last night from Woodland says: "E.H. Benjamin, reputed to be a dentist, has visited this city several times during the past year. His visits were generally of a few weeks' duration. He was never engaged in business here permanently. He is quite well known and is spoken of as being a very intelligent man. As far as can be learned he never built or spoke of building any airship in Woodland, and if was an inventor no one knew it."

An Oroville dispatch to the "Chronicle" last night says: Dr. F.W. Benjamin of this town is an uncle of Dr. E.H. Benjamin, the reputed inventor of the airship, which is attracting so much attention. Dr. E.H. Benjamin comes from Maine, and has been in California about eight years. Dr. E.H. Benjamin is an inventor and was in Oroville on Sunday, November 15th, to see his uncle upon business. He left here to return to San Francisco on the morning of the 16th. Dr. F.W. Benjamin says his nephew is of an ingenious turn of mind.

"The airship that attracted so much attention in Sacramento and which was believed to have started from this locality appears to have been seen by a number of residents of this section or else their eyes deceived them. M.H. West, one of the oldest and best-known citizens of this town, says a gentleman told him he saw the moving light with something attached to it. He was unwilling to be thought a fool, hence would not give his name to the public.

"A young man, while out driving saw a mysterious light in the south, but was unable to tell much about it, yet realized that it was something out of the common.

"Mrs. George H. Elvins, wife of the superintendent of the Banner mine, a few miles from Oroville, and near the edge of Table mountain, has seen a bright light in the heavens. It was not a star, for the sky was overcast with clouds, and the stars could not be seen. She could not tell whether anything was attached to the light or not.

"S.B. Onyett and wife of Palermo were returning home from Oroville when they saw a moving light in the heavens, but were unable to distinguish anything of the size or shape of the body attached to the light. They were unwilling to say anything about the matter at first because they were afraid of being laughed at."

A Santa Cruz dispatch under date of yesterday says: "Several people here claim to have seen an airship sailing over this city at night a few days ago. They say they thought at first that it was three stars moving in a straight line, but are now convinced that it was an airship."

In response to a message sent to Berkeley from this city last night, saying that a mysterious light was visible here and asking if anything of the kind could be seen from that portion of the bay, an answer was received to the effect that the light had passed over the Berkeley campus, moving with the wind in a northwesterly direction, and that it had been seen in transit by several people.

An Oakland dispatch says: "A man representing himself as Manager Alexander McEvoy of the 'American and International Detective Agency' of San Francisco, spent a to-day at Piedmont, and claims that he has exploded the airship story as far as Oakland is concerned. He gave it out here to-night that he went there in the interests of a San Francisco paper, and succeeded in finding a boy who has been flying a wonderful kite. The latter, according to McEvoy's story, was about 9 by 12 feet in size, and by a movable battery a light was operated on it. There were reflectors around the light to increase its brilliance, and it was claimed that by the use of the two lines the kite could be swung across the heavens. He claimed that he made a series of experiments to-night. Lights were seen over Piedmont to-night."

1896 November 24 (Tue) San Francisco Examiner, p. 9. (card 1)

HAVE YOU SEEN IT IN THE SKY? / The Light that Never Touches Land Nor Sea. / Last Night It Made a Visit to the St. Nicholas Hotel. / An Hour Later a Detective Saw Two Men Send Up an "Airship." / AERIAL LAWYERS FROM BLAIR PARK. / The Reputable Citizen All Over the Coast is Now Telling What He Sees When He Stays Out Late. /

The historic bird of Sir Boyle Roche which contrived to be in two places at the same time would, notwithstanding his varied accomplishments, have had a ~~parous~~ parous time to keep up with California's pet "airship." The monster is everywhere by turns and nowhere long. In Tulare he flaunts a scornful tail in the face of the cocked-up moon; in Sacramento he goes kiting up and down the midnight heavens; in San Francisco he has wheels; in Oakland he clanks a wild uncanny clink, and in Siskiyou he flames in the forehead of the morning sky.

Even since the fabled Daedalus melted his waxen wings in the heat of the inconsiderate sun it has been the dream of the dreamers to spurn dull earth and sail the ether blue; and now at last a California dentist soars in the empyrean, defiant and clanking. Can this be the Shortridge Thunderbird once more come to terrify the gounlings with his ethereal flights, or is it merely a scarecrow that blew away? This extraordinary bird was again much in evidence last night. Possibly he had not sense enough to go ~~max~~ in ~~the~~ out of the rain. Perhaps he was starting away to Washington to get out a patent on himself. But never fear; we shall all hear from him again--this unfeathered songster. The papers have been wont to brag about the "ubiquitous reporter," but his ubiquity is a small circumstance alongside of the prevalence of this flying scarecrow. California can't lose him, and what is more, cannot spare him so long as the silly season endures.

From Siskiyou to San Diego and from the Sierra to the Sea this blessed fowl parades the heavens like a weathercock wary of sitting on something that won't hatch, and the whole State say, More power to his ~~arm~~ elbow, and may his shadow never grow less, for by and by when we find his nest we will ask him to deliver us from Mr. Huntington.

Perhaps that's the reason that, o' nights, so many San Francisco people now follow the advice of the Concord philosopher and "look up and not down."

That ghostly light, balloon or whatever it is, passed over the southwestern portion of the city last night, between 9 and 9:30 o'clock. Dozens of people saw it, and all agree substantially as to what they saw. They agree that it was a large round steadily burning light as bright as an electric arc lamp and of a decidedly reddish hue. It was first seen in the direction of the Potrero and moved steadily but rapidly over the city at a height of several hundred feet, finally disappearing off in the direction of the Park.

Some one in the St. Nicholas Hotel, at the intersection of Hayes and Market streets, saw the light about 9:25 o'clock, and called the attention of others to it. Soon everybody in the hotel crowded to the west windows looking out on Polk street. From that point a view of the entire northwesterly portion of the city can be had, and those who reached good points of observation first watched that moving light and shouted back to those behind them tidings of the movements of the sky-traveler.

Mrs. A.M. Gardner of Napa, wife of Dr. Gardner, Superintendent of the Napa asylum, was one of these. "I saw this object or light or whatever it may be, first way down in the direction of the Potrero," said she. "It rose slowly and steadily until apparently about the lower cloud line. I could see nothing but a large red light, as large as a big incandescent light. It was rainy and dark out, but I could see the light move across the city. It had a sort of wavering motion, but, as I say, moved forward steadily and in one plane. I could see nothing behind, or below, or above the light--nothing to which the light could be attached. Once in a while it would disappear for a second as if going behind a cloud. The last I saw of it it disappeared over between the towers of St. Ignatius' Church, and was apparently moving toward the Park and ocean."

Dozens of others around in that section of the city stood out in the rain in the middle of the street and gazed in absorbed wonder at the sight.

Barkeeper Meyer, in the saloon at No. 5 Ninth street, gave the alarm to those persons within earshot. He dashed out into the middle of Market street bareheaded, coatless and breathless and yelled in wild delirium:

"Look at the flying machine!" A crowd soon gathered. In it were many presumably sober men, among them Dr. J.A. Black, J.S. McDonnell of the St. Nicholas pharmacy, Charles P. Barbee and James Kennedy of 1604 Market street and James McDonald of 1218 Mission street.

Switchean A.L. Francis, who swings lanterns for the Sutter-street road at the Market-street crossing, said he thought it was one of his cars broken loose, and he caught himself waving a signal toward the heavens to warn the aerial traveler off from earth. He said the light looked for all the world like a Sutter-street car headlight off duty. All the barkeepers in the neighborhood were especially valuable afterward in telling of the sight and they mixed drinks and talked of red lights for the rest of the night.

Alexander D. McEvoy of the American and International Detective Agency, whose office is in the Mills Building in this city, last evening discovered the source of at least some of the mysterious lights, perhaps all of them. By quiet investigation he learned that Blair Park, in the northern suburbs of Oakland is the place of operation of two men who have been hoaxing the people of Oakland and this city. He stationed himself in the park and watched for what he might see. At exactly twenty-eight minutes after 10 o'clock he saw rising from his station point, a high shelf on the Piedmont hills, about five hundred yards from his place of observation, an object kite-shaped, about ten feet in length, with wheels like little windmills. On the sides of the structure were lights, and from it hung a Japanese lantern, red in color and about one foot in diameter. It moved slowly before the wind. He plainly saw two men on the point and accosted them as they descended the path. They told him that they were sending up objects such as he had seen to mystify the people and to give them material for newspaper articles.

"There is something in the air," that is plain, but people who have seen this something differ in their descriptions to such degree that this errant light might be anything from a Quixotic planet to a flagrant drug store. Yet these same people who give the descriptions are trustworthy citizens with reputations for veracity equalled only by the mariners who have seen the sea serpent.

Attorney George D. Collins has been credited with knowing a thing or two about this fly-by-night aerial rover. A large part of this credit is traceable to another lawyer, a law college classmate of Collins, Frederick Bradley of the firm of Stanley, McKinstry & Bradley. He is an old friend of Mr. Collins, but whether he will maintain the friendship seems to be in doubt. Yesterday Mr. Collins was inclined to send heavenward that prayer of all men in public life: "Lord, deliver me from my friends." Perhaps Mr. Collins is inclined to be cautious and over-sensitive. The newspaper men and flying-machine enthusiasts who called upon him at his house on Union avenue, Alameda, Sunday night were extremely attentive, and they left there early the next morning after an all-night vigil on the front porch. And that new turkey-red carpet in the outer reception room of his office in the Crocker Building, of course, was ruined by the throng that tramped over it yesterday. But about the vigil on the porch and the destruction of the carpet, Mr. Collins will see Mr. Bradley later.

Mr. Bradley says that Mr. Collins told him on Thursday last that he had seen an airship of wonderful construction, but Collins now says that Bradley "has wheels," or something worse.

"It was on the 12:15 o'clock ferryboat, last Thursday night," said Mr. Bradley, yesterday, "that Mr. Collins told me he had been to see a wonderful air ship invented by a client of his. He made no secret of telling me and I did not consider that I violated any confidence when I told a friend about the thing the next day. He told me that a man whom he had never seen before had come into his office Wednesday and said that he desired to get out a patent on an air ship. When Mr. Collins asked for details the visitor invited him to inspect the marvelous affair, and they made an appointment to go together, the day following. They went, taking the Oakland ferry and then the train. Collins told me just the place, but I do not like to state.

"They walked some distance after leaving the train and stopped finally at an old barn. It was locked, but Collins' client had the key. On entering Collins saw, as he told me, a strange-looking affair made of white metal, and this metal, he was told, was aluminum. His guide did not explain much to him, but invited him to get on and have a ride. Mr. Collins declined to do so, but his guide climbed up, pulled a rope that drew aside a big skylight, turned a clamp or two that set some unknown power in action, and the white machine, with the man on it, shot up into the air. It had two side flaps of some flexible material that worked slowly, with a wing-like motion, like the pinions of a large bird. It rose steadily upward for about 200 feet and then descended easily and touched the ground within ten paces of the place where Collins was standing.

"He told me he did not have time to make a very close examination. He noticed there was a big light forward, like a searchlight. There was a sort of cabin, and his strange guide told him this craft could carry six men, and that he was satisfied he could make one that would carry twenty men easily. Moreover, Mr. Collins told me that he and his client returned together to the city and parted from each other with the understanding that they should have a trial trip on Sunday or Monday and invite several friends. Mr. Collins invited me to go on this trial trip, and I have been waiting to get word from him to know the time and place. I intended merely to get a good look at the thing, for I have too much regard for my life to take any experimental voyages."

That's Mr. Bradley's narration of Mr. Collins' statement to him. What Mr. Collins said yesterday to a newspaper man was entirely different.

"The notoriety I am getting about this airship matter is getting to be more than monotonous," said he with a show of righteous indignation. "Bradley must have been drinking to have imagined I told him all such rubbish. Most emphatically I deny having ever told him anything of that sort, and I can't imagine what he means by putting up any such a joke on me. I have never seen any airships and never proposed to take a ride in one.

"All I know of airships is just this: On last Wednesday a man came to me, introduced himself and said he desired to get out a patent for an airship. He started to tell me about it, but I interrupted him to ask if he had a model of his invention. He said he had not. I told him we could do nothing about getting out a patent until he had a model, and he went away saying he would get a model made and would come back this week. I took his name and address, but I do not feel at liberty to give them ~~out~~ out. I presume he will call again, and I will do what I can for him. Perhaps he went to some one who knows Bradley to get that model made, and in that way Bradley fixed up that long yarn about me.

"I have been dumfounded to see some of the statements credited to me that have appeared in some of the papers. I never told any one that I had a rich client from Oroville, or that his name was Dr. Benjamin, or anything of that sort. All I know about airships I have told you now, and I am prepared to take my oath on this. I have been grossly misrepresented, and I wish I knew of some way of getting redress: but I do not.

"This Dr. Benjamin referred to is a dentist. He is a client of mine and an old friend, and I am trying to help him get out a patent on a new sort of gold crown for teeth. He has been experimenting for some time and calls upon me frequently. He has nothing whatever to do with the airship project."

Up to about two months ago Dr. E.H. Benjamin was employed in the piano department of Sherman, Clay & Co. He left there because he desired, as he explained, to practice his profession, dentistry, and he set up an office in the house occupied by Dr. S.W. Dennis and his son at 113 Powell street. While there he has been engaged upon several inventions, all in the line of dentistry, so far as known by Dr. Dennis. He has been rooming at 633 Ellis street, but he left there yesterday, leaving word that he would not be home for a week. Evidently he went to Oroville, for a telegram from that town to "The Examiner" received last evening gives the information that he laughed at the suggestion that he knows anything about any air ship and declared untrue the whole story of his connection with an aerial traveler.

Mayor Sutro recalls that when he arrived at the Heights at 8 o'clock in the evening about three weeks ago he found all of his servants standing in the yard discussing a peculiar object they had seen a few moments before. The Mayor says his servants told him that they had seen something fly in from the ocean not more than 500 feet from the ground and pass rapidly eastward. The men said they could distinguish a row of lights on the side of the object and a large white light resembling a searchlight at the rear.

The strange lights were seen also by several persons in this city. All who saw them agree sufficiently as to the speed and the direction in which they were moving to prove beyond all question that they were not of meteoric origin as was suggested at the time.

The most reliable information that can be obtained in regard to the strange light over Oakland on Friday night last is from G.B. Daniels of Piedmont and his family. Mr. Daniels is a well-known Oakland business man and his father is an attorney and formerly was Police Judge. Both father and son saw the light.

"My father was on the car with the passengers who saw this air ship," said G.B. Daniels yesterday. "The car was standing at the transfer point at the corner of Twenty-fourth street and Broadway. All saw this light which seemed to be over St. Mary's College, and which moved toward San Francisco in a southwesterly direction. None of them at that time said they saw any air ship or anything else except the light, but you never can tell what a person will see after he has been thinking over things for a while. Out at the house my family all saw the light and they called my attention to it. It looked to me just as the searchlight at the Midwinter Fair used to look from my house. None of us, however, thought that we saw any ship or heard any noises, but it moved too steadily and slowly and too near the earth to be a meteor.

George E. Plummer of San Antonio avenue, Alameda, well known in society and in politics across the bay, believes that he has seen the air ship. On Monday night, November 16th, he was going home with his wife at about 9 o'clock from a whist club gathering where only personal service was served when his attention was attracted by something that looked like a fire balloon in the sky over the hills in the direction of San Leandro. "It was moving apparently though I cannot say that it was going very fast," he said yesterday, "and it appeared to me very much like a balloon. The light was white and brilliant as a star. I was struck with its brilliancy and never saw anything like it before. It is not a fact that I heard winging, nor was the song, 'Just Tell Them That You Saw Me.'"

LIGHT OVER WOODLAND.

A Physician and an Attorney Saw the Strange Thing of the Air. WOODLAND, November 23.—Several citizens of Capay insist that they saw something like a ball of fire traveling southward Sunday night. It was in sight about an hour. Dr. Morris, a trustworthy citizen, saw an object about 7 o'clock Sunday night west and south of Broderick. He thinks it was 400 or 500 feet high. It looked like a ball of fire, save that it was not red, but pale like an electric light.

Ed Mering, a well-known lawyer of this city, says he saw a strange light a few nights ago, but thought it was a meteor. I was so slow and eccentric in its movements that he remarked when he reached home that he had never seen a meteor like it. He decided to say nothing about it, and only changed his mind when the matter became a topic of general public interest.

No Patent Asked.

WASHINGTON, November 23.—At the Patent Office to-day nothing could be learned of any application from California for a patent for a flying machine.

[Cartoons: Vanquished, the Sea-Serpent Prepares to Die of Grief. Mr. Huntington's View of the Aerial Flight. "Same Old Octopus," Said the Mayor. Nat Goodwin Believes It Is Following Him. Just Before Attorney Collins Woke Up.]
1896 November 24 (Tues eve) Oakland Tribune, p. 1. (card 1)

A MYSTIC CLUE AT LAST / George Carleton Knows Who Made the Mysterious Airship. / A PLEDGE TO SECRECY. / He Insists Though That the Matter Is Thoroughly Reliable. / THE TALE OF THE TEST. / No One Reports Any Flights as Occurring Last Night. /

It looks as though the mysterious flying machine has shaken the Scotch mists of Oakland from its wings. When last seen it was heading S-S-E, and last night it did not make its appearance at all. The weather may have been too wet, or the apparatus too far away. But had it appeared probably no one could have been much wiser, for this unknown Darius Green is wrapped in mystery, and when he alights from his aerial flight evidently folds up his invention, tucks it up under his vest and quietly goes up the back stairs so as not have to answer embarrassing questions from his family and the cook as to "where he was at."

Yet this man of mystery has taken more than one into his confidence and that one has told a friend, who told George Carleton, the city electrician, singer and pioneer of Oakland. Nearly everybody knows Carleton and will attest to his reliability. He will vouch for the honesty of his informant and his informant swears that the man who told him that he saw the wonderful machine work is reliable. All of these men know the name of the inventor. Carleton is the one who told the story this morning but he kept all names to himself. "I was pledged not to divulge them, and I'd saw my leg off first," he replied to all questions touching identity.

"I heard the story last night from a friend of mine who is also a member of my lodge of Masons. It was he who talked with the man who saw the machine, and I was told the name of the inventor by my friend. As I understand it, the trip was made near Oroville. The inventor made an ascension of several hundred feet, flew off four or five miles, circled around a few times and landed as nicely as could be. This my friend's friend saw. Both men are reliable and neither of them have figured in the matter before."

There are many skeptics and many believers in the mysterious airship. Theoretically, such a machine is certainly within the pale of possibilities, and the fortune that awaits the maker of a successful machine is enough to enlist plenty of capital. John Lockhead, a San Francisco mechanic and inventor, made one a few years ago. His model worked like a charm, flew around the laboratory and heeded its rider well. The late William C. Ralston, formerly president of the Bank of California, became interested in the affair, and spent, it is said, $100,000 in constructing a large machine. Miscalculations were made somewhere, and it never worked. Ralston was drowned off Heigge wharf soon after the unsuccessful trial, and as the purse was withdrawn a new machine was never made.

The Pennington Company of Chicago had a patent which worked quite well successfully and was on display at the World's Fair, but the owner of most of the stock went "broke" and nothing was done with the patent. 1896 November 24 (Tues eve) Woodland, Calif., Daily Democrat, p.3 (ed)

WAS IT AN AIRSHIP? / Curious Phenomenon Witnessed by Two Reputable Citizens of Woodland. / Three Bright Lights Followed by a Brilliant Train Passed Directly Over This City. /

That there is a mysterious light moving about in the upper atmosphere, there seems to be no doubt. So many reputable and truthful people have seen it at various times and places that it does not seem reasonable that they can all be victims of a hallucination.

We do not take any stock, however, in the generally accepted theory that the mysterious object is an airship. It is more reasonable to suppose that it is some aerial phenomenon produced in a perfectly natural way and susceptible of a rational and scientific explanation.

In the Examiner of today is a story of a mysterious light seen navigating the air in the vicinity of Woodland on an uncertain date. The Democrat is able to throw some light on this story.

About three weeks ago, and several days before the phenomenon was first announced from Sacramento, L. Charmak and a gentleman who requests us to withhold his name were standing in front of Mr. Charmak's place of business. The hour was between 8 and 9 in the evening. Suddenly a moving light, or, more properly, lights, appeared in the southwestern portion of the city. Mr. Charmak's attention was called to it. The unusual visitor was traveling in a northeasterly direction, and when first seen was apparently over the residence of A.D. Porter.

As it reached Main street it suddenly arose 100 feet or more, but continued its forward movement in the same direction. It traveled more slowly and it was half a minute from the time it came in sight until the Capital Hotel shut it out from view.

While it was traveling broadside Mr. Charmak and his friend had an opportunity to get a good view of it. There were three distinct lights closely resembling an arc light. They were close together and a uniform distance apart, and were followed by a long train of light like that which usually follows in the train of a shooting star, except that it was white.

Their first thought was that it was a meteor, but its proximity to the earth, eccentric movements and unusual form hardly warranted such a theory. The more they thought about it the more their doubts increased. The circumstance was not mentioned at the time except by the gentleman who was with Mr. Charmak. In the family where he boarded he spoke of it, expressing the opinion that if it was a meteor it was the most extraordinary phenomenon of that character he had ever witnessed.

Neither of these gentlemen pretends that the mysterious light they saw was an airship. They have no theory to account for it. They related what they witnessed, and people can draw their own conclusions. 1896 November 25 (Wed) San Francisco Call, p. 1 (card 1)

MISSION OF THE AERIAL SHIP / Will Probably Be Used to Destroy the City of Havana. / ITS DESTINY IN GENERAL HART'S HANDS. / Interesting Details of the Powers of the Mysterious Conqueror of the Air. / VAST FORTUNES IN EXPECTANCY FOR ALL CONCERNED. / Oakland People Claim to Have Seen Intricate Evolutions in Midair—Venus and Juniter as Fair Deceivers. /

Ex-Attorney-General W.H.H. Hart now has charge of the destinies of the airship, which has hitherto been under the legal wings of Attorney George D. Collins. The reason for the change is said to be due to the loquacity of Mr. Collins. The inventor, who is said to be extremely desirous of maintaining in his income, thinks that Collins talked not wisely and too much.

General Hart admitted his new and mysterious responsibilities yesterday and then made the sensational announcement that the airship was to be used in the service of the Cuban insurgents and intimated that Havana was to be the first point of attack.

While the new custodian of the secrets relative to the aerial mystery states that he has not himself seen the wondrous invention he expresses himself as confident that it can do all that has been ascribed to it by those who claim to have seen it in operation above the earth. He expects to make a fortune out of it for all concerned within a few months.

It is now reported that the inventor is a Dr. Catlin, who was assisted in the work of construction by Dr. E.H. Benjamin.

While The Call is not in a position to give it as a positive fact that a successful airship has been constructed and put into operation, neither is it prepared to say that the thousands of people who claim to have seen such a thing are mistaken. In this connection it regrets that it has to call attention to two deliberate attempts of the Examiner to play upon the credulity of the people.

One of these attempts was made in Oakland on Monday and another hoax was attempted in this City last night. Both were feeble and ineffective, and acted only as boomerangs on that "Mensch of the Faker".

Considerable excitement was created in this City last night by the mistaken idea that got abroad that the airship was visible. The peculiar flight of Venus across the western horizon and the brilliant reflection from Juniter in the east caused this false impression.

Oakland again contributes an interesting chapter to the aerial history of the past week. Among other things it is asserted that the airship was seen performing intricate evolutions in midair.

All the secrets of the mysterious airship are now in the hands of ex-Attorney-General W.H.H. Hart. The responsibility of their keeping was legally transferred yesterday from George D. Collins to that gentleman.

Mr. Hart spoke freely and fully of the machine, but declined to divulge the name of the inventor and owner, its present location or its mechanism.

It was learned by a Call reporter from another source, however, that the name of the inventor and owner is Dr. Catlin; that he was assisted in his work by Dr. E.H. Benjamin and George Applegate, and that the machine is housed within a short distance from San Francisco.

Attorney Collins was visited by the airship inventor yesterday morning, and according to Mr. Collins' story, the latter asked to be relieved from anything further to do with the aerial mystery. His client, he said, asked him to recommend another attorney, and the result was that a visit was paid to the office of the ex-Attorney-General, whose offices are a few flights higher up in the Crocker building. After a short consultation the mysterious client was under the legal protection of Mr. Hart.

"General, I understand that Dr. Catlin, the inventor of the airship seen in various parts of the State within the past week, has placed his interests in that wonderful creation in your hands," was the first remark addressed to the new custodian of the secret, of which the world is to-day anxiously and impatiently awaiting an explanation in detail.

After admitting that such a transfer had been made only a few hours before, the ex-Attorney-General, without further preliminary, went on and made a series of most astounding revelations in reference to the machine and its ultimate purpose. This is his story exactly as he told it:

"There are two inventions and they are very much alike. One was perfected in the East and the other in California. I have been concerned in the Eastern invention for some time personally. The idea is to consolidate both interests."

"I have seen the machine invented in the East and I am convinced it will work all right, and from what I have been told I don't see any reason why the machine invented in California cannot be worked."

"My plan of utilizing the invention would be different from that of other people in the way of making money out of it, and in order to do so there would have to be complete secrecy in regard to it."

"I have very little doubt the California invention will work. The whole trouble in the problem of aerial navigation has been a question of motive power. In this they have the right motive power, which is without question sufficient to work the ship, and that is by electric storage batteries."

"My plan of operating this invention requires it to be kept as secret as possible. I propose to use it wholly for war purposes, and within the next five or six months it will be put to the test."

"From what I have seen of it I have not the least doubt but that it will carry four men and 1000 pounds of dynamite."

"Before it is brought into practical use, however, two important modifications must be made. It must be so constructed that if it should be injured while over a body of water and drop, it will float like a boat. The bottom will also have to be protected so that the cylinder cannot be penetrated by rifle bullets or weapons of small caliber."

"Because we expect to use it for war purposes is the reason I will not give the names of the persons who are interested in it. We don't want to be arrested as filibusters on the first trial of the machine."

"This machine will be tested in the neighborhood of San Francisco from time to time. I don't expect to see it myself or even get a look at it. I have had a full description of it, however, from the people interested. I was with them this afternoon for some time."

"I believe it can be used so that the inventor and the parties interested can make from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 out of it in five or six months."

"Four men or two men can operate it. From what I know of it, I am quite convinced that two to three men could destroy the city of Havana in forty-eight hours."

"This machine is being tested in California owing to the favorable character of our climate. There is one drawback to the invention and that is that the inventor cannot cause it to stand still; it must be kept moving like an arrow. Otherwise it is under perfect control. There is no doubt about this. It can be made to rise from a dead standstill. I cannot go into details about its construction, but will admit that it is of cylindrical shape, is built of aluminum and has wings, but I cannot tell you even how many wings it has."

"I do not know yet whether or not an application for a patent has been made. But if one has gone on to Washington I shall try to withdraw it, as I do not think it will be good policy for us to let the information that would thus be furnished become public, owing to the purpose for which we first propose to use it. We would rather make $5,000,000 in six months than $100,000 for fifty years."

"I am quite positive that The Call is right in what it has reported, but I can't say, of course, whether this machine is the one that has been seen by the people of Sacramento and other towns."

"Before the invention is put to a practical test as a war engine it will be remodeled with the changes I have suggested, and the new machine will be a combination of both inventions."

"Does the inventor, your client, sail on these trial trips that are being made?" was asked.

"That I cannot tell you, because I have not talked of this phase of the matter with him."

"How much longer will these experiments in California continue?" "That I can't tell you, but probably until they become fully satisfied with the working of the ship."

THE FIRST TRIP. / Over One Hundred Miles Covered in a Few Hours. / Probably the most interesting story told of the much-talked-of airship comes from one recently admitted into the inner circle of confidence and who it is believed carries a little bunch of airship story in his inside pocket. It was only under a promise of concealing his identity that he consented to tell of what he knew of the recent movements of the mystery of the clouds. In speaking thereof, he said:

"One of the surprising features of the affair is that the inventor has been able to keep his invention away from the prying eyes of the public so long. As you may suppose, it took some time to construct the ship."

"Where was it constructed?" he was asked.

"Well, it is no use to keep that a secret any more than it would be for a hen to keep secret the location of her old nest after the brood is hatched and away. It was built not such a great distance out of Oroville at the home of the inventor's aunt. The statement of other parties to the effect that the material was brought from the East and put together in this State is correct. The men worked hard for some time to get the parts together in the right shape, and several short experimental flights were made to test the batteries and machinery."

"Then electricity is the power used?"

"Yes; one of the forces of nature that is made use of. The ship carried a storage battery. The hull is of aluminum. But I must not say too much about the thing itself, for I have never seen it yet. The first night that it was seen by the people in Sacramento was the first time that the inventor made a practical test of the strength, buoyancy and speed of his ship."

"He started out alone, for, to tell the truth, even his assistants were a little timid about venturing off the earth. Well, the doctor started out alone and went to a great elevation, when he discovered that one of the corner bearings was becoming heated and he wanted to get nearer the earth. He slowed up his speed and began to come down, and as he approached the earth he realized that he had lost his course to some extent, for he could not clearly make out the nature of the country over which he had been and was passing."

"High hills and low hills have about the same appearance to a man high up in the air, you know. At last he made out that he was approaching a large town, for he saw many electric lights, and in order to be sure of his bearing and location he steered straight for the lights. He soon recognized that he was close to Sacramento. To tell the truth he had dropped lower than he intended and the lights on the airship attracted the attention of a large number of people of that city."

"The next morning an account of the mysterious light in the sky over Sacramento was published in The Call. The people of Sacramento made one mistake, and that is they did not hear voices. It was the noise of the machinery and the hum of the wheels that they heard and mistook for voices and songs. I have no idea that the doctor either sang or talked to himself, for he was entirely alone, as I said before on the first voyage."

"He spent the night sailing around in the sky and about 3 o'clock in the morning he landed in the barnyard of a farm situated in one of the bay counties. He put his airship into the barn and locked the door, for he had previously made arrangements to that end. The ship worked splendidly and behaved most satisfactorily. Of course there were improvements to be made and several changes were necessary. But taken on the whole everything went well."

"This was the very first trip of this airship. Since then he has been out nearly every night, so I am told, and as he has not limited himself as to distance the ship has been seen at night by people in many localities. There, that is all I am going to tell you this time. /AN INVENTOR'S OPINION./ Dr. C.A. Smith Has No Doubt That an Airship Is Being Tested."

"Have I seen the airship? Well, I can't say that I have," said Dr. C.A. Smith, the inventor, when seen in his office in the Spreckels building last night. "But I have no reason to doubt that it is an airship the people in this City and other cities have seen in the heavens for the past few nights."

"I have been experimenting on air machines for the past forty-eight years and have invented no less than thirty useful machines, some of which have been used in every State of the Union. I know of its practicability as I have had a model running through the air."

"I expect to have machinery ready for business in the beginning of next April to make a trip across the continent. It will be 100 feet long from bow to stern and 125 feet cylinder. The main body will be 125 feet long. The front end will be a cone, as it is a scientific fact that a cone presents less resistance in passing through the air than any other solid body. The gas compartments will be in the upper portions of the cylinder and cone, and after being filled with hydrogen and acetylene gas, recently discovered, they will be hermetically sealed. The sheet aluminum to be used is lighter per square foot than the oiled and varnished silk used in making balloons."

"The rear end of the ship will be made like a frustum of a cone and the air will thus pass freely back to the propeller, which will drive the ship. In the interior will be a cabin for passengers 35 by 40 feet, entirely partitioned off from the gas. In the bow inside of the shell will be a pilothouse, from which the rudders will be operated and controlled. It will have windows, so that the pilot can see in all directions."

"A horizontal rudder of sufficient dimensions will steer the ship up or down, and a vertical rudder will steer it to right or left. Both will be on the stern. The wings will extend the full length of the cylinder and in flight will be used as aeroplanes, like the wings of the larger birds, and in crossing currents of air they will be closed. When in a light atmosphere, too light for the gas, the wings can be utilized to carry the ship up into the atmosphere."

"There will be a wellhole in the bottom for an anchor and above will be a capstan on which the rope will be wound. The ship will land by deflecting the wings and the horizontal rudder; the propeller will drive the ship forward, the aeroplanes, wings and rudder steering it to earth. It will pass above a platform where an anchor rope will be fixed, and the capstan will then draw it down onto the platform."

"I can get a Maxim engine which weighs 320 pounds and produces 100 horsepower. The ship will carry from twenty-five to thirty passengers. I calculate that the ship will run at a speed of 100 miles per hour and perhaps more."

"As to light, we can have a storage battery to give all that is necessary. The gas will be inclosed in aluminum compartments, so that it cannot escape, and this will insure permanent buoyancy, and, as a consequence, absolute safety."

"I do not know who is the inventor of the airship that people say they see flying through the atmosphere. When it is placed before the public it will, I think, be seen that it is identical with the one I have described."

VENUS AND JUPITER. / These Celestial Orbs Mistaken by Thousands for the Airship.

An amusing phase of the airship mystery was developed last night, when that inoffensive planet Venus, sinking in the west, was mistaken for the clipper of the clouds scudding across the empyrean. That the bright light which excited the curiosity of many thousands on Market street about 6 p.m. was nothing more than Venus there seems to be no room for logical doubt in view of a statement obtained from such an authority as Professor Davidson last night.

Avoiding scientific details it will be sufficient to say that the planet Venus is at this season of the year almost at the full, and may be seen any clear evening after dusk traveling rapidly from east to west until she disappears below the horizon.

As soon as the professor heard the story, shortly after 7 p.m., he got out his telescope and had no difficulty in identifying the supposed airship as an ordinary, everyday star.

At 6 o'clock last night or thereabouts the cry was raised on Market street that the headlight of the much-talked-of airship was plainly visible at a lofty altitude in the neighborhood of the Chutes. Excited groups of men and women rapidly gathered in every direction and all eyes began to scan the skies. Sure enough a bright speck of light was at once distinguished high in the heavens and at that time seemed to be out toward the west in a line with Market street. After an interval it was noticed that the light had changed its position somewhat, moving apparently west and north. Speculation ran riot, but the consensus of opinion was decidedly in favor of the airship theory, to which the gradual movement of the light seemed to lend a color of probability. A few unimaginative ones were sufficiently prosaic to suggest that the light was merely the star Venus, but the majority quickly scouted that suggestion as absurd in the highest degree.

It is safe to assume that Venus has been acting just as she did last night for many years past, but never before, as far as can be learned, has she been mistaken for an airship.

Bob Hill and various other portions of the City also had their crowds of heavenward-gazers viewing the unembarrassed Venus in the firmament. On California-street hill there were the buds and beauties of society in elegant wraps and pallants equipped with loggnettes, while near the water front binoculars were brought into requisition.

Later in the evening Jupiter, scintillating brightly east of the zenith, drew the attention of thousands in a similar manner. Some claimed it was the airship, which had reached that position by a circuitous route.

But those who had seen what the confidently asserted were the lights of the airship declared that neither of these celestial beacons resembled the lights that had previously crossed their vision.

BERKELEY, Cal., Nov. 24.—The mysterious airship, or at least a big light that was taken for it, was seen by a large number of Berkeleyans to-night. It appeared to be hovering over the bay, and a large crowd gathered at the corner of Center street and Shattuck avenue to watch it and speculate as to what caused the light. The ship, or whatever it was, soon disappeared without allowing any of the spectators to see more than a roving light like that of a searchlight.

CHICO, Cal., Nov. 24.—Although discredited by many as being a hoax and a phantom story, yet there are many people who firmly believe in the airship. Last evening about 7 o'clock a bright and sparkling light was seen in the sky west of Chico. The light seemed to be traveling with great rapidity in a northwesterly direction. Many people living along Fifth street were out with craned necks looking at the mysterious fire, and all who saw the aerial light will vouch for the certainty of an airship.

RED BLUFF, Cal., Nov. 24.—Fully fifty people in Red Bluff are now willing to vouch for the reality of the airship. What appeared to be it passed a few miles west of Red Bluff about 7 o'clock this evening at an elevation of probably 2000 feet. In a few minutes it fell fully 1000 feet and all the time was traveling rapidly westward. It finally disappeared over the Coast Range Mountains, going in the direction of Eureka. The light only was visible and appeared to be about the size of a good-sized arc light. / FAKING OF THE FAKER. / Underhand Attempts to Discredit the Airship Story.

Just as the theatrical audiences were leaving the theaters last evening at 11:30 o'clock a balloon with a light attached to its base shot up into the air immediately over the Examiner's business office on Market street and attained an altitude of about 1000 yards, when it passed over the buildings on Market street, opposite Mason. Those who saw the balloon shoot into the air from the corner of O'Farrell and Market streets are positive that they discerned the picture of "Faker Billy" on the alleged aerial ship, which caused many people to crane their necks and cry, "Oh, there she goes!"

The balloon swept along rapidly and attained a height of at least half a mile before it struck a new current, when it changed its course and slowly drifted in the direction of the Alameda marshes, where in all probability the remnants of it will be discovered by some duck-hunter tomorrow.

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 24.—One of the funniest stories in connection with the airship was that told by a so-called detective-reporter, who came over here last night from San Francisco to create some imaginary men playing with an imaginary airship on Inspiration Point. This individual came over about 10 o'clock and boarded a Piedmont car. He asked the conductor for his name and number, and requested the carman to take a good look at him so that he could prove he had really been to Blair's Park. The detective must have been of a very amateurish disposition, for before he reached Piedmont the conductor knew what his mission was, and that he was connected with the American Detective Agency, and that he was working for the Examiner.

The conductor referred to is No. 13 and his name is Crist. The man who claimed to be an Examiner reporter was a large man with a black mustache. On coming in from Inspiration Point he went straight to the Examiner branch office, on Broadway, and left for San Francisco on the 11:20 broad-gauge train. His plan, as outlined to a friend, is this:

He was to tell a story of having gone to Inspiration Point, where he saw two men who were working with a machine like a balloon placed lengthwise, to which was attached a light and some arms and an apparatus like a kite. When the detective-reporter approached the two men were to run away and pack their traps with them. The detective-reporter further stated that he had been perfecting his plans for several days, so as to upset the Call's story.

Conductor Crist said to-night: "I was accosted by an individual last night who wanted my name and number. I gave him the latter when he told me he was an Examiner reporter. After promising me faithfully not to use my name and saying he wanted it to prove that he had been ~~out~~ to Blair Park I gave it. He came out on the 9:34 car and reached the park at 10. He wanted to know what car he could take back in order to catch the 11:22 local. I told him to get the 12:10:53, and I presume he did. He could have reached Inspiration Point and returned if he hurried, but as it was so wet and slippery I doubt if he ever saw the point."

The Examiner amused Oaklanders this morning by publishing the following:

Alexander D. McAvoy of the American and International Detective Agency, whose office is in the Mills building in this city, last evening discovered the source of at least some of the mysterious lights, perhaps all of them. By quiet investigation he learned that Blair Park, in the northern suburbs of Oakland, is the place of operation of two men who have been hoaxing the people of Oakland and this city. He stationed himself in the park and watched for what he might see. At exactly twenty-eight minutes after 10 o'clock he saw rising from Inspiration Point, a high shelf on the Piedmont hills, about 500 yards from his place of observation, an object kite-shaped, about ten feet in length, with wheels like little windmills. On the sides of the structure were lights, and from it hung a Japanese lantern, red in color, and about one foot in diameter. It moved slowly before the wind. He plainly saw two men on the point, and accosted them as they descended the path. They told him that they were sending up objects such as he had seen to mystify the people and to give them material for newspaper articles.

The absurdity of the above can be appreciated when it is stated that at exactly 10:28 o'clock last night, and for hours before and for hours after, the rain fell in torrents, and a "Japanese lantern red in color and about one foot in diameter" would have lived about half a second. Detective McAvoy said he saw the apparatus "500 yards from his point of observation." A man who could see through 500 yards of last night's storm on Inspiration Point would make a fortune in a dime museum.

A HIGH-SPEED WORM. / W.J. Kenney Furnished One for an Airship, He Thinks.

There is no one among the watchers of the mysterious moving light in the sky who scans the skies with more interest than does William J. Kenney of Kenney & Payton, model-makers and bicycle dealers, 517 Valencia street. The reason for Mr. Kenney's interest is that he believes he is the maker of some part of the aerial wonder.

Mr. Kenney's skill is responsible for a contrivance known as a "ball-bearing worm."

"A man about 45 years of age, wearing a gray mustache and appearing to be a professional man, called on me about three or four weeks ago," said Mr. Kenney last evening, "and laid before me his plans for an unusually large and high-speed worm." I immediately concluded that he was intent on making an improvement on the cyclometer, a bicycle run by a small gasoline motor, and proceeded to fill his order.

"He explained that he wished the worm and gear to be practically frictionless, and I suggested that the journals of the piece of mechanism be fitted with ball bearings. He acquiesced and gave me the measurements, and we went to work. For two weeks we labored on the worm and finally completed it.

"The party who gave us the order failed to give us his name, but appeared to have plenty of money and paid one bill, $14, without a question. He was very anxious to have the piece of machinery completed, and when it was finally done he took it and left the store in a hurry.

"We have not seen him since, and until all this talk of an airship thought nothing more of the matter.

"When the aerial wanderer was finally seen, however, it dawned upon me that the man who bought the worm was interested in this airship and that my production was a part of it.

"To strengthen my belief I had many mechanical problems before me. First, the gear of the arm was too high for a cyclometer and it was just the thing to compress air or run a small dynamo.

"In view of the terrific speed it would produce it was worthless for any other use. Lastly, the peculiar actions of the man who ordered the worm have convinced me beyond a doubt that the machine is now being used on this airship."

EVOLUTIONS IN MADAIR. / Peculiar Performance of the Aerial Visitor Above Oakland.

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 24.—Oakland was beside itself to-night with excitement. For over two hours a large light attached to something was seen cruising over the city toward San Francisco and back again. About 7 o'clock the report was started that the airship was to be seen, and people at once began to congregate in the streets and gaze at the heavens.

The excitement commenced when the 6:30 train from San Francisco arrived at Broadway. While crossing the bay the passengers had observed the strange thing in the sky, and the interest increased with the number of beholders. They watched the movable light, which alternated between remaining stationary and taking flights in the sky.

Of course many were skeptical and declared it was a brilliant star or possibly a planet, but when they received visible proof that it did not remain many minutes in any one particular constellation they joined the majority and agreed that they were looking at a veritable airship.

Soon after the arrival of the train the strange thing was seen over Oakland, south of Sixth street, and as it passed across Broadway the street was crowded. One of the most noticeable features of it was the frequency with which the light was put out and made to shine again. This was afterward explained by one of the spectators who watched it with a powerful glass and stated that he could see the machine performing evolutions which caused the light to shine in different directions. It did not appear to move rapidly, but it was at a great height above the earth and was somewhat unsteady in its motion, which somewhat resembled that of a ship in a sea-way.

As it passed over the city thousands of people saw it and were anxious to add their testimony that it was a genuine air vessel. Among them were Colonel Garrity, City Electrician Carleton, George Hatton, managing editor of the Tribune, Melvin Holmes, ex-deputy Superintendent of Streets, and scores of others.

The mystery of the skies was watched every foot of its course by curious thousands.

The aerial rover appeared to cross the bay and hover over San Francisco for a time and then return. While passing over the city the light disappeared for a time and when it was again visible the machine was over East Oakland. As soon as it crossed Thirteenth avenue Deputy Constable Robinson announced its approach and as it went by fully 5000 people turned out to see it.

"I am willing to make an affidavit that I saw the airship," said Deputy Robinson to-night. "There was no fake about it and we could plainly see that it had a motion like a ship. It wheeled around over Alameda and then seemed to cross over San Leandro toward Piedmont." By the time it was headed for Piedmont the excitement was intense. Proprietors and clerks came to the shop doors; bartenders left their beer pumps; ladies stopped walking and directed their attention heavenward; cable and electric cars backed up so that passengers might peep at the wondrous light.

At the Calindo Hotel the windows were thrown open and guests appeared with all manner of spyglasses and looked at the traveling light. Sometimes they declared that there were several smaller lights visible and that they could see a dark object, but it was too high in the air for any of them to detect the nature of its wings or tail, if it had any.

At Fourteenth and Broadway a large crowd gathered and grew excited as the remarkable light cruised around and occasionally disappeared. The play of lights caused many to think that the party who was directing the thing of the night was signaling to some one on the earth. Everybody agreed that no tricks with kites or balloons could account for what they saw, for the light was so brilliant and powerful that to produce it a dynamo of no mean capacity must be carried.

Melvin Holmes, ex-Deputy Superintendent of Streets and a man well known in Oakland, leveled a glass at it and declared it is an air traveler of some description.

George Carleton, the City Electrician, who is better known than almost any man in this city, knows the name of the inventor. Carleton was taken into confidence by a friend of the inventor, and he vouches for the honesty of his informant. Anybody who will doubt George Carleton when he says a thing is true does not know the man. Carleton told his story this morning, but he kept all names to himself.

"I was pledged not to divulge them, and I'd saw my leg off first," he replied to all questions touching identity. "I heard the story last night from a friend of mine, who is also a member of my lodge of Masons. It was he who talked with the man who saw the machine, and I was told the name of the inventor by my friend. As I understand it, the ship was made near Oroville. The inventor made an ascension of several hundred feet, flew off four or five miles, circled around a few times and landed as nicely as could be. This my friend's friend saw. Both men are reliable, and neither of them have figured in the matter before.

Fred Gattee of 858 Broadway, as soon as he heard that the machine was over Oakland, rushed for his telescope and ~~declares~~ declares that he distinctly saw the machine perform some evolutions in the air. While he could not see the details he is positive that he saw it maneuvering.

Manager Jesse Malsted of the Oakland Theater watched the machine cross over Oakland, and with a pair of opera-glasses satisfied himself that he saw an airship.

The mysterious light of the heavens was also seen last evening by Mrs. E.H. Crawford and Miss Kate N. Bassett, a teacher at the Harrison-street School. The ladies after some hesitation told their experiences. "I went to my south window about 10:30 last evening," said Mrs. Crawford, "to see if it was raining." I noticed a lightoff in the south, and watched it because it was the only light visible. In a few moments it disappeared, ~~xxx~~ and later came to view again. It looked like the searchlights I have seen at the World's Fair and in New York City. I called Miss Bassett, and we both watched it for fully fifteen minutes and until it finally disappeared.

"When first seen it appeared to be moving away from us and gradually sank until out of our sight. Miss Bassett said it must be an electric light with a tree waving in front of it, but this was not the case, as it was too high, and then I looked this morning, but there was no tree anywhere near where we saw the light. Neither of us saw an airship, but we did see lights that we do not understand, and shall take much interest in watching this evening and for some time to come to see whether the light is to be seen any more.

"Before I went to bed, about 11:15, I again went to the window and the light had returned and was moving eastward slowly, but steadily. I could not tell how far away the light was or anything about it, but having read the account in the papers concluded that the light must be the same as seen by others in this vicinity."

Dr. J.H. Buteau was another who stood amazed as he viewed the strange visitor passing through the heavens. "I was at Seventh and Market streets this evening," said he, "when I noticed a very strong clear light down near the horizon, moving along in the face of the wind. The movement was very steady, and it made good time, although we watched it for fully ten minutes. As it receded it appeared to go lower, but that would be natural if it was moving on a level. I am at a loss to account for the display, as I am incredulous regarding the talk that it is an airship. It might be a light attached to a balloon moving in an upper stratum of air. We could see it go behind buildings and emerge later on the other side as we watched its movements."

The mysterious machine finally disappeared over toward Contra Costa County, and before midnight all Oakland was satisfied that it had seen the airship. / FAITH IN SONOMA. / J.B. Loser Saw a Mysterious Rapidly Moving Brilliant Light.

SEBASTOPOL, Cal., Nov. 24.--The report that an airship has been observed floating around in various sections of the State has created widespread interest in Sonoma County, and it now transpires that several citizens whose integrity is unquestionable have noticed the mysterious craft flying through the air at night with a headlight as brilliant as an electric flash.

J.B. Loser, proprietor of the Analy Hotel at this place, gives a graphic description of the vessel, and his story is corroborated by the testimony of numerous citizens both here and at Santa Rosa. He says that while driving to the county seat a few evenings ago he observed what appeared to be a brilliant light in the heavens. A few ~~xxxx~~ moments later the dazzling object seemed to be less than a mile away and then it presadually wended its way in an easterly direction and finally disappeared. Mr. Loser says that it was a phenomenon such as he had never seen before, and he thinks that the strange object was nothing more nor less than the mysterious craft that has been seen in other sections, as it tallies exactly with the description given in the papers. / SIGHTED TRIPLE LIGHTS. / A Rapid Aerial Traveler Observed in Placer County.

BOWMAN, Placer County, Cal., Nov. 24.--The articles published in The Call and other papers in reference to the observed mystical aerial traveler have aroused great interest here. Several persons in this locality have been favored with a view of the strange visitor.

C.T. Musso, a fruit rancher, and several members of his family affirm that about four weeks ago and shortly after dark they saw a singular light, which they are now convinced could have been nothing else than the much-discussed airship. Mr. Musso says he saw "the prettiest sight that his eyes ever viewed." It appeared to be three very bright lights moving horizontally and easterly at a rate of perhaps 100 miles an hour.

A.H. Thompson, a painter, states that at about the same ~~xxxx~~ time he saw a similar sight, which he describes as being three very bright and large lights appearing about eight feet apart, and the forward one as being larger and brighter than the rest, and moving horizontally eastward ~~xx~~ rapidly and gracefully.

Professor S.D. Musso states that about two weeks ago he and his wife saw a similar sight moving in the same direction and with about the same velocity. He feels quite confident that it was not a meteor, as there were three lights appearing about seven feet from each other in a direct line, the forward one being larger than the other two. The light, he states, was different from a meteoric light, the velocity was too slow for a meteor, and it was traveling horizontally as long as it was seen, which was for several minutes. / SANTA ROSE EXCITED. / People Willing to Swear the Light Had Huge Wings.

SANTA ROSA, Cal., Nov. 24.--The excitement over the airship has reached Santa Rosa, and the presence of a bright light in the heavens to-night at 7:30 set hundreds of people star-gazing. The light appeared to be moving in an easterly direction, occasionally disappearing entirely from view with a dull red glow, only to reappear more radiant after a few seconds. It was impossible to see anything beyond the light, owing to the distance, but when it finally disappeared there were many people willing to swear that the object beyond the light had huge wings.

This light to-night revived the rumors of an airship invented by a man at Mark West that was said to have been entirely successful as far as the upward and onward direction was concerned, but it persisted in going off at an angle without warning.

On Saturday night, just before midnight, several reputable gentlemen of this city reported seeing a bright light moving in a south-westerly direction. It was first observed about two miles southeast of town, just above Taylor Mountain, and seemed to come from toward the Sacramento Valley. It moved quite swiftly and disappeared in the direction of Alameda County. This is vouched for by Charles Winters, a well-known merchant, and William Kohrer of the firm of Kohrer, Einhorne & Co.

John Stump of Orr & Stump, a would-be wag, and several others sent up a small balloon with a lantern attached this evening, but the presence of the big light in the west made his fake fade into insignificance.

While it is just possible that the light seen to-night was the work of some bold aeronaut there was nothing visible to show a balloon and there are hundreds who believe it to be the famous airship that startled Sacramento. / SAN JOSE STARTLED. / Several Persons Claim They Saw the Airship Traveling in That Vicinity.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 24.--People in this city were startled to-night about 11 o'clock on beholding a bright light moving rapidly in the heavens, and they were convinced that they beheld the famous airship. It was seen moving in the direction of Gilroy, as was testified by Eugend Barro, Dan Manning and Jerre Sullivan, who are employes of the Sunset Telephone Company. The light was of such a character that the parties are convinced that it was none of the ordinary lights in the sky. About one hour afterward others saw the same mysterious light moving northeasterly very rapidly, as if it were returning from the direction of Gilroy. These parties, James Stanley and Mia M.J. O'Brien, are also positive that they beheld the rapidly moving light of the airship.

pic, p.1: Two Centuries of the Flight of the Airship; From Bird Wing to the Maxim Machine.

p.2: Soaring Between Heaven and Earth (article on ideas of flight ~~through~~ through the ares). 1896 November 25 (Wed) San Francisco Call, p. 4.

YE EDITORS BID VALLEJO GOOD-BY / All Enjoy a Visit to the Mare Island Navy Yard. / That Airship Comes Up as a Subject Requiring Much Discussion. / ...

VALLEJO, Cal., Nov. 24.--The members of the California Press Association were up with the lark this morning and ready for their trip to the navy-yard at Mare Island. That is, they would have been if Vallejo were given to larks, but in their absence Editor Parker of the E Vallejo Vacaville Reporter suggested that it was about time the airship was going to bed.

The airship was a prolific source of argument among the knights of the shears prior to the pleasure excursion, and the opinions in its existence and attributes were many and varied.

Willis of the Sacramento Record-Union asserted in tones of the most positive conviction that he saw it Sunday night hovering over Sacramento and then going to the southward with a peculiar, wavy flight. He described it as a bright light with an opaque body dimly discernible over it, and says it was about 1000 feet from the earth.

J.A. Filcher, president of the State Board of Trade and proprietor of the Placer Herald, thought it a serious proposition when the Chronicle had taken up what it at first designated as "a Call fake." He thought that fact proof enough that there was something sailing in the air, whether it was an aerial machine or not.

J.E. Walden of the Napa Journal thought it a mighty fishy story, but didn't like to disbelieve the many persons of known veracity claiming to have optical evidence of its existence. If it had appeared in any other paper than the Call he should have paid no attention to it.

Brother Pennycook of the Vallejo Chronicle is still a confirmed skeptic, and remarked in a jocular manner that there must be a considerable quantity of bad liquor ~~xx~~ imported into the State in the last week or two.

W.M. Denlo, a Vallejo blacksmith present, said Ves Wilson, the sheriff of Butte County, while staying with him a day or two ago declared that he knew for certain such a machine was being built near Oroville. Some of the editors were so eager for news that they wanted to hunt the Sheriff up and "pump" him for more, but he "had went."

P.W. Johnson, business manager of the Marysville Appeal, said he saw the airship very plainly over that city a few days ago, but did not care to say anything about it for fear of being laughed at. Then everybody laughed.

1896 November 25 (Wed) San Francisco Chronicle, p. 16. (cont'd)

MARS AND VENUS UNDER SUSPICION. / Planets Stay Out Late at Night. / AIRSHIP HUNTERS SEEK THEM / "Aluminum" Benjamin Throws Up The Sponger. / "Conjurer" Collins Explains the Reasons Why He Didn't Do What He Did. /

The United States ship Collins of the Aerial Navigation and Irrigation Company was out again last night on a few more of its trial trips, and the sky was filled with mystery, fire balloons and other things from dark to daylight.

As soon as it began to grow dusk Venus started to display her charms and flamed all the colors of the rainbow down into the darkness beneath. Immediately some highly excitable and impressionable citizen discovered that the illumination wasn't Venus at all, but the airship Collins. He stood in the middle of Market street, oblivious to the danger of being run down by a cable car, pointed his finger impressively at the plowman and said, "Ahi!"

That settled it. In five minutes he was surrounded by a crowd of people, who gazed in wonder at a sight that has been visible since the reign of the Pharaohs and for a few million years previous to that time. One man said that it wasn't the airship, and another promptly called him a liar. The sympathies of the crowd went with the latter and the skeptic was ignominiously turned down.

Then they began to feast their imagination on the planet. Somebody distinctly saw an oven door open and shut, another pointed out two wings and a tail, while a third called the attention of everybody to the fact that the "thing" was on the move. The fact that it only takes every star in the heavens six hours to travel from zenith to horizon didn't cut any figure. They wanted to think that Venus was the airship, and they thought so to their hearts' content.

At a few minutes after 7 o'clock, however, the planet sank out of sight. The hour was early. There were crowds on all the street corners, and the airship enthusiasm was beginning to fade away perceptibly, when some humble searcher of the heavens got his eagle eye on Mars--poor, inoffensive old Mars, doing his duty as usual at the same old saana, and supremely indifferent to any effect his presence might have on the people of San Francisco.

The ruddy glow that is given out by the war pod at all times was intensified by the bright, clear weather, and, led on by the enthusiastic discoverer, people again began to "see" things.

Many of them, by some unearthly process of reasoning, evidently believed that the new center of attraction was the same object that they had seen disappear below the horizon in an entirely opposite direction, half an hour before. The old furnace-door chestnut raised its unabashed head again, and this time half a dozen people distinctly saw a stoker shoveling in coal.

After that the crowds seemed to dissolve into factions. Two or three fire balloons were sent up from different parts of the city and the allegiance of the watchers was divided between them and Mars. One of the balloons with an extra large cargo of alcohol aboard sailed a round gayly for over half an hour and won numbers of adherents, all of whom were willing to wager everything they had or even expected to have in the world on the proposition that it was a real live airship.

One of those enterprising traders who cater to the whims of the moment and who is quick to seize on any public excitement and turn it to his own advantage had a telescope, or rather the outer shell of a telescope, on the streets. The fact that the instrument was devoid of glasses of any kind did not detract at all from its money-making power.

All the enthusiasts with a spare quarter about them wanted to get a good, square look at something in the sky. It didn't matter much what it was--the moon or any old thing. In every case the imagination was quite sufficient to round out any defects that existed in the telescope. Everybody who paid 25 cents saw the airship distinctly and they all went home happy.

"Airship" Collins and his partner, "Aluminum" Benjamin, had several consultations yesterday. They have finally decided to forget everything they ever knew. If in future a question of any kind is propounded to either one of them they have made up their minds to go off to Petaluma together and have a private meeting before giving an answer.

If Collins is asked the time he will beg to be excused till he has consulted his friend Benjamin. If anybody wants to know from Benjamin something about a reliable cure for toothache, the inventor will have to appeal, before replying, to his friend Collins. There is between these two gentlemen such a community of interest that this course has become absolutely necessary.

"Airship" Collins yesterday mornign, before entering into the compact mentioned, made a few statements to some of his visitors in connection with his present troubles. He explained the situation in a thoroughly lucid manner as follows:

"I know nothing whatever about any airship, and never saw one in my life. The inventor, when he took me to see his machine the other day, explained its workings to me and gave me a practical exhibition of its flying powers. I know nothing about airships, and certainly never came into contact with "Aluminum" Benjamin in my life. It is true, and I do not wish to deny, that I have seen Benjamin in my office and had dealings with him many times, but what I desire to explain is that I am not in a position to make any explanation. Explanations do no good and only complicate matters. Now, I always try to make straightforward statements, and don't like complications. If you have ever been mixed up with airships you will appreciate how it is yourself."

"Aluminum" Benjamin came into the "Chronicle" office yesterday and said that he ~~want~~ wanted to throw off the mask. This continued deception was killing him. He was the inventor of an airship, and had been working on the proposition for seven years. He had the whole thing nearly ready for the public, and was only waiting to perfect a few details before springing it on an anxious world.

Benjamin has a serio-comic air about him that fits in well with the eminently respectable and judicious sidewhiskers that are exhibited by his senior partner. An operetta with laughing gas effects, airship searchlights from the wings, and a stage setting of wretched cauldrons and half-bound legal volumes would fit in well with the pronounced characteristics of both the stars in this modern drama of the heavens.

And still the search for that airship and its owner goes untiringly on. The fact that Thomas Johnson has been away from home for three nights is eagerly seized on as a possible explanation of the phenomenon and a clue to its inventor. If John Smith has been heard to remark at any time since his birth that people in Sacramento were not a thousand miles away from a correct solution of the affair, John Smith is forthwith shadowed and run to earth in the effort to mix him up with the airship.

It isn't safe for a man to visit a machine shop or inquire about the prices of cowwheels in a hardware store nowadays without bringing down on his head the suspicion that he knows more about that strange light in the sky than he cares to tell.

The Disease Still Spreading.

PLACERVILLE, November 24.--A bright aerial light was seen to pass over this city in a southerly direction this evening. It alternately raised and lowered as if borne upon an air wave. Among those who witnessed it are many of the most reputable citizens of this place.

1896 November 25 (Wed) San Francisco Examiner, p. (card 1)

AIRSHIPS NOW FLY IN FLOCKS. / So Many That They Spangle the Void Air With Light. / Moreover, the Inventor Has Changed His Legal Advisor. / His Attorney Now is W.H.H. Hart, Who Has Two Airships on One String. / HOW MR. COLLINS TALKED TOO MUCH / General Hart Advises That the Ship Be Sold for Millions to Cuba and Used to Destroy Havana. /

It is a winged ship in the sky. It is an apparition seen and gone, like "joys we dote upon." It is a searchlight. It is a lantern from a kite. It is shaped like unto a cigar, and verily it is alight, though no one has seen it smoke. It is like a camel. It is backed like a weasel. Or like a whale. Oh, very like a whale. It is also very like a bird--the Shortridge Thunderbird, in fact, or the Shortridge lightning bird. It is "streamed like a meteor to the troubled air." It is a toy balloon, and it is Venus, the evening star that "sets ere Mercury can rise."

It is vagrant. It appears over Twin Peaks. It rests over Telegraph Hill. It vegetates over Oakland. It adds to the glories of New Sacramento. It sends a thrill through Woodland. And every person is a child again and peers into the air and repeats his nursery rhyme: "How I wonder what you are." It came out first last evening just after sunset and was rediscovered as many times as there were people looking, and the number of people looking seemed, from the crowds on the streets, to be the entire population of San Francisco. The visitation in the upper air dazes our world. The first paragraph of this scientific treatise tells exactly what is this mystic stranger and what it is like. Now for the proof.

It is an airship. It is a flock of airships. Are there not several? Who can doubt it? Has not "The Examiner" received a letter direct from the inventor? If any one doubts that it is an airship "The Examiner" will show him the envelope that contained the letter. There is other proof, almost equally strong, the word of W.H.H. Hart. Now, Mr. Hart is a lawyer and a General. He was the hero of the war of words in Tom Fitch's eloquent speech placing him in nomination for Attorney-General. Subsequently he was elected Attorney-General of this State. He was and is the principle attorney for Florence Blythe Hinckley in the vast litigation over the estate of Thomas Blythe; and did not the "airship" pause a moment last evening while directly over the Blythe property on Market street and bob up and down as though making a military salute to the ~~xxxx~~ General? What more proof can be asked?

General Hart is now attorney for the inventor of the airship, or the flock of airships. Yesterday he was substituted in this important and confidential relation for George D. Collins. The reason for this substitution will develop in due time. In a relation of such importance the facts must come in orderly sequence.

General Hart acknowledges his retention as attorney for the airship or ships. In his office in the Crocker Building yesterday afternoon he told of his engagement. An inquisitive man was asking him questions, beginning this wise.

"I have called to ask you for information of the airship."

"Yes," answered the General, "and what have I to do with the airship?"

"I am ~~xxx~~ told that you are the attorney for the inventor."

"I should judge from certain publications that I have seen that Mr. Collins is the attorney."

"I am informed that you have been substituted for Mr. Collins."

"Whence is your information?" asked the ex-Attorney-General.

"Mr. Collins."

"Yes, it is true," then shyly admitted the General. "I have consented to be his attorney. We have already agreed upon a plan of action. My suggestions have been accepted. These differ somewhat from the course he intended. He desired immediately to procure a patent on the airship that he has invented. I advised him not to ask for a patent and he has taken my advice."

"As I told him, an airship might not be a very profitable vessel of communication for ordinary commercial purposes. Suppose he obtained his patent and advertised that he would carry passengers. In the winter time he could not expect much patronage in the eastern part of this country or in Europe. The weather is too cold for airship trips. In California the weather is ~~xxxx~~ mild, but how many people are there here who would care to take a ride in an airship and to pay a price that would give the inventor a reasonable profit?"

The inquisitive man suggested a campaign of education to get people into the habit of riding in airships.

The General barely heeded the interruption. He was speaking seriously upon a serious subject. "Of course he might make something by constructing his airships and selling them. But as soon as he obtained his patent and the principle was made public somebody would invent a better airship and his profit would be gone. Suppose even that he should make $100,000 a year, fifty years would pass before he received $5,000,000, and the man who invents an airship certainly is entitled to millions. Therefore I advised him to keep his invention an entire secret, trusting that no one would steal it from him. The chance that somebody else will learn ~~the~~ something of the principle he has discovered, of course, we must take."

"Then what can he make of his airship to bring him commensurate profit?"

"An engine of war!" answered the General, with a motion as though reaching for his sword. "The use of the airship is for military purposes. I advised the inventor, and he agreed with my views, that he should employ his invention in war. I assure you that I believe that by means of this airship a great city could be destroyed in forty-eight hours."

"Cuba!" came involuntarily to the lips of the inquisitive man.

"Exactly," answered the General. "That was my suggestion. Offer this airship to the Cubans for a price that would repay the inventor at once and supply him with a sufficient fortune. Undoubtedly venture-some men would take whatever risk there might be in manning the airship for a generous share of the proceeds. From this ship Havana might be destroyed in forty-eight hours. You see, there are ample reasons ~~and~~ that the inventor should not be known. He might be arrested as a filibuster. Therefore I advised him to say nothing about his invention. He was anxious to make a public statement and to disclose his identity, as so much matter about the airship has been printed, but he sees the reason in my counsel and will say nothing."

"Do you mean that the airship could reach Havana from San Francisco in forty-eight hours?"

"No, I did not say that," answered ~~the~~ General Hart, "I said that from the airship the city could be destroyed in forty-eight hours. The ship would be taken to Cuba or to the neighborhood."

"Where is the ship now?"

"That information I do not care to give. I may say that some slight improvements must be made before this airship is thoroughly satisfactory. Now in the East an airship--"

"Are there more airships than one?" asked the inquisitive man of this military oracle who was peopling the void air with flying engines of destruction.

"Yes, I was just going to tell you," said General Hart. "I am interested in a device for storing electricity, a storage battery, in fact, much lighter and otherwise better than any other battery yet invented. A man in the East is using this storage battery in an airship he has constructed."

"Where is this inventor?"

"Well, I think there is no harm in telling you. He is in New Jersey. His name has been printed in the papers within three weeks. I shall not come closer to identification of him than that. I saw him and saw his airship while I was East. My interest in the storage battery that he uses brought us together."

"Do you represent that inventor?"

"Yes, I may say that I represent both him and the California inventor," answered the attorney with two airships tied to his strings. "I have advised a consolidation of their interest, and this advice is taken. The good points of each machine will be used. I will say to you frankly that I believe the Californian invention is better than the Eastern invention. The only trouble with the airship made in New Jersey is that it will not stay in the air. It moves through the air, but its course is toward the ground. The Californian inventor has a machine that will stay in the air. The appliance that keeps it in the air is a great parachute that opens automatically when the ship descends and closes automatically when the ship ascends. The parachute is something of the shape of a hat--and the General illustrated the automatic movement of the parachute with his brown Alpine hat which had recently been in the rain, pushing it together with his hands to show the closing as the airship ascended and then pulling it open to show the effect of descent. "This hat-shaped parachute keeps the ship in the air and makes the descent very gentle when the ship comes to the ground. It seems, however, to impart to the ship a wavering motion as it leaves the ground, upward bound. This is a defect to be remedied. This parachute is the principal advantage of the Californian invention over the New Jersey invention. But the New Jersey man has so constructed his ship that should it drop into the sea it becomes a water boat. The Californian airship has not this advantage. If it should drop into the water the occupants might be drowned. I believe, however, that by a slight change in the form the Californian airship can be made to become a water boat as well. For the safety of the passengers I think this modification should be made."

"Are the two airships similar in construction?"

"Yes, similar in many respects," responded the attorney. "It is remarkable that ~~we~~ two men working at opposite ends of the continent should have developed machines so much alike in many respects."

"Has the local airship been in the air?"

"Yes, it has been in the air. I have no doubt that the object seen in the air over Sacramento and over Oakland, and possibly also over Twin Peaks, this city, was the airship. The light that is seen, I may tell you, is a reflected light, not a direct light, like a headlight. Some people who have seen it say that it looks like an arclight. Of course it is not an arclight. That is absurd. To provide the current for an arclight would require almost as much power as to operate the ship."

"Have you seen it in the air?" asked the inquisitive man.

"Not the local invention. I have seen the New Jersey invention in the air, however," was the answer. "I believe thoroughly, however, that the airship constructed in this State has been in the air. I believe the inventor. I have no idea that he is insane. I believe also Mr. Collins, in whom I have great confidence and for whom I have great respect. Why not? The thing necessary to send up an airship is sufficient power. Heretofore this power could not be obtained without over-weighing the airship. Storage batteries were too heavy. Compressed air could not be used satisfactorily. Now light and powerful storage batteries can be obtained. That solves the problem. No gas is used. Gas would require a material used in construction that would expand. This is not a balloon. The material of ~~the~~ which the airship is made is aluminum. The motive power is electricity in storage batteries. Now you have as much information about it as I deem it right to impart. The inquisitive man had another question: "Suppose the two inventors would not consolidate their interests and the Cuban junta should bid for one airship and Spain should bid for the other--?"

The ex-Attorney-General did not wait for the end of the question. "I am as certain as I can be of anything," he resumed, "that within a few months the airship will be flying as the operator directs, with the wind or against the wind. The defects to be remedied are few. There is the wavering I spoke about and there is also difficulty in keeping the ship stationary in the air. I am assured by the inventor that his ship will carry a ton in weight."

"If the ship flies by night, why is it not sent up in the daytime?" "That I cannot answer. I did not ask the inventor. He left here but a short time ago. I believe he is not well known in this State. He is a foreigner--an Italian, I should judge, from his appearance."

The inquisitive man had one more question: "Why were you substituted for Mr. Collins in the position of attorney for the inventor?"

"Because the inventor said Mr. Collins talked too much," answered General Hart, seriously.

"So you have advised your client to say nothing about the airship, and you will say nothing about it yourself?"--this from the man who asked questions.

"Yes, that's it!" said General Hart. The inventor told me this afternoon I should not see him again for a week." The General glanced through the window as though expecting a flight of airships to his office. He excused himself again from giving any information, and turning to his desk applied himself to a study of the latest decisions on the laws of aerostatics.

Close upon this unsatisfactory conversation with General Hart came to "The Examiner" this significant letter: //November 24, 1886. /

To the Editor of "The Examiner"--Sir: As there seems to be a good deal of skepticism as to whether or not a ship capable of navigation in the air has finally been invented and constructed, this is to inform the people of San Francisco through your columns that Thursday night, November 26th, at about [8]:30 o'clock, I will approach the city from a point in the direction of the Cliff House, at an elevation of about 1,000 feet. I will return over the same course about 11 o'clock. I am making some experiments in the heavy winds outside the Golden Gate. I am then going over the Sierras with my ship and will probably not be back for several days.

As the secret is soon to be made public, I desire to prepare the people for it and to convince them that an airship is at last an actuality, and that another era is at hand when transportation methods are to be revolutionized. Respectfully, THE INVENTOR.

General Hart should beware. He is in danger of losing his client. The inventor threatens to cross the Sierra and the wavering caused by the hat-shaped parachute has not yet been steadied.

Having proved that the mystic light above is "reflected" and from an air ship now the necessity comes to prove that it comes from Venus, the evening star. Between 5:30 and 8 o'clock last evening throngs upon the streets gazed at a bright light in the West and shouted, "That's it, that's it, right over the Twin Peaks." That was it, or, to be more gallant, that was she. This assertion is made with all the weight of the knowledge of the genial astronomer Professor George David son. The professor looked out of his back window when a reporter asked him to tell something about that bright light in the sky. "That is Venus, the evening star," answered the Professor. "Here, look at it," and he pointed a telescope at the bright light. "Just Venus. Soon 'the bright light' suddenly disappeared from sight. 'It's gone,' said the crowd," said the Professor, and that's all there is to that ~~story~~ story.

Later in the evening ruddy Mars came into view, and immediately became an airship. Mars was immediately turned to profit by the proprietor of the nickel-throw telescope, which for years has been sited skyward from either the corner of Grant avenue and Market street or the corner of Stockton and Market streets. He is the man with the musical voice who chirps "Lovely Moon" when the theatres close. But the telescope man has had no use for the moon during the past few evenings. It's all airship now, and the telescope man wishes airships right come in flocks forever. Last night he was surrounded from sunset until midnight by a crowd of fifty to two hundred people. The telescope was aimed at the red planet, Mars. Flakes of cloud were floating across the sky during the early part of the evening, and these would now and then obscure the star.

"There, the light has gone out," someone would shout, and then every eye would be strained into the fog bank, eagerly watching for the reappearance of the light.

"There it is again," would be the cry when a rift in the clouds brought the red planet again into view.

"A nickel a peep at the flying machine," was the telescope man's song, and the hardest work he had to do was to take in the nickels and keep in line those who were fighting with one another to get at the eyepiece. There were plenty of people willing to swear that they saw the "light" oscillate and bob around most playfully. There were even those who could see the "dark object" to which the light was attached and not a few could discern the wings.

While Mars blazed serenely in the zenith, lights of various sizes and shapes flitted across the sky. Many of these were mystical, according to the condition of those who saw them, but close to midnight the watchers thronged the downtown streets at that hour were rewarded by the sight of a strange reddish light, ~~fix~~ floating high above all the buildings and gradually ascending skyward. It was first seen in the vicinity of Kearny and Post streets, whence it rose slowly with the wobbly motion affected by all aerial travelers that have been seen lately hereabouts. There was no hallucination about this light, and all the scoffers who chanced to get a glimpse of it grew serious as they noted the majestic movement and the thorough business-like air that attended its ascension.

As the weird light moved across the center of the city, steered steadily southward either by the wind or by some unknown mechanism known only to those concerned in its flight, cheers burst from the crowds of watchers. In a short time other lights rose heavenward from the same corner. When the crowd on Kearny street observed that some relation might exist between this particular flock of airships and the roof of the Bohemian Club the cheers were silenced.

Then of course the "bright light" is a lantern hanging from a kite. This can be proved by cumulative evidence from many sources. W.H. Hammon, forecast official in the Weather Bureau, has made a study of construction of cellular kites— and has used them in scientific study of the currents of the air. Mr. Hammon says every movement of the strange lights described by people who have seen them could be made by lanterns attached to such kites as he makes and uses. The lights could be made to move in a slow, majestic sweep by drawing in and letting out the string. The kites are covered with cloth, and can be raised in the rain as well as in dry weather. Mr. Hammon confesses that he was strongly tempted to send up a kite bordered with lanterns, but he restrained his desire, and he declares that he does not know that any of the enthusiasts in flying cellular kites, of whom there are about twenty in San Francisco and Oakland, have been playing a joke upon the ~~public~~ people.

While the people of Central California have been watching the flight of flocks of "air ships," a notable citizen of San Francisco, none other than the redoubtable James F. J. Archibald, leader of the paper chase, social hero and insurance agent, has been preparing to perform a deed of daring in aeronautics. Mr. Archibald has recently taken a spin through the East, visiting in New York, Cleveland and Chicago. From Chicago comes the news of his purpose to fly. When the people of New Mexico see Mr. Archibald paper-chasing in the skies they may take him for an airship or a Shortridge thunderbird, and this publication is made to warn them what to expect. The facts are related in the following telegram:

CHICAGO, November 24.—James F. J. Archibald of San Francisco left Chicago for the West on last night's train with an idea in his head. All he needs is a balloon and possibly a parachute.

His first stop will be at Albuquerque, N.M., for it is sixty miles by stage from that point that his present center of interest lies. Mr. Archibald has frequently heard that 500 Navajo Indians long ago were stranded in their barren home on top of a plateau-like mountain half a thousand feet high, by the sliding away of the earth on the only accessible side of the hill. That landslide left the home of these Indians cut off from the world by four great precipices. According to tradition they lacked the ingenuity to find a way down so they starved to death. Their bones lie there in the New Mexican sands, whitening, according to Mr. Archibald's best knowledge and belief.

Now Mr. Archibald proposes to see for himself. The gratification of his curiosity will in large measure repay the trouble and financial outlay, though he suspects that reward in the nature of Navajo ~~blankets~~ baskets, rich ores, blankets and skeletons awaits him.

It is in a balloon that Mr. Archibald will lift himself to the top of this mysterious mountain, and it is in a parachute that he hopes to let himself down. After the expedition he will be prepared either to confirm or to laugh at the legend. The explorer on leaving Chicago did not take a balloon. He said he would rent one in Albuquerque.

Mr. George, who represents Mr. Archibald's business interests during the absence of the latter, has not been informed of the fugitive purpose of his principal, and hence cannot give any light upon the reason of this outburst for scientific research. John Crooks, who was the umpire of the paper chases that Mr. Archibald gallantly led over the hills of Marin, has not been admitted to the confidence of Mr. Archibald concerning the ascension. Therefore the underwriters and society must depend upon press telegrams for information of the discovery of the bones of the Navajos, rudely cut off from their neighbors by the descent of ~~the~~ the mountainside.

However, San Francisco has sufficient now to engage its attention in watching Mars "wobble" and inspecting the flocks of thunderbirds visible every night and growing.

PLACERVILLE, November 24.—This evening at half past 6 o'clock lights were seen in the heavens passing from north to south over this city and declared by several reputable citizens who saw it to be an airship. It was visible for five minutes and traveled against the wind with a rocking movement.

1896 November 26 (Th) The Call (San Francisco), p. 1. (card 1)

HART STANDS BY HIS SHIP / A Confirmation of the Story Received From Sacramento. / THE MYSTERY AGAIN KEEN AT THE CAPITAL. / It Makes Its Appearance in the Company of the Deceptively Brilliant Venus. / JOCKERS MAKE GENEROUS PURCHASES OF FIRE BALLOONS. / More New and Interesting Particulars Regarding the Local Invention Given by the Ex-Attorney-General. /

Either the reputed airship is one of the most gigantic hoaxes of the age, or it is one of the most wonderful advances made in mechanical science, and is the solution of the great problem of aerial locomotion which has enlisted the inventive genius of many centuries.

Whichever it ultimately proves to be, the subject is to-day the all-engrossing topic. Greetings are tuned to this key; heated arguments are evolved out of it; wagers are laid, and even physical strife has been engendered over the question whether or not there really exists a successful aerial traveler.

Though there were many new and interesting developments yesterday, nothing has yet been brought to light that definitely and conclusively solves the mystery, and speculation continues as absorbingly as for the past week or more.

Ex-Attorney-General Hart in an interview fully confirmed his interview of the day before and added much interesting information to the first statement he made. Among other things he substantiated the first reports concerning the airship which came from Sacramento by affirming on the authority of the inventor that the airship was actually over Sacramento when the people there claimed to have seen it.

Sacramento, according to reliable witnesses, was again visited by the aerial vision last night, which put Venus into the shade by the more brilliant glow of its lights.

Considerable sport was enjoyed by practical jokers last night in dispatching fire balloons skyward, but they had no more the appearance of the alleged lights of the aerial mystery than the dull glare of a candle resembles that of an incandescent light.

Venus again beguiled people at some points, but her deceptive charms have evidently been shorn of much of their power by the publication of the story of how people had been mistaking her for her earthly and more interesting rival. /

HART CONFIRMS THE STORY FROM SACRAMENTO. /

General Hart was as reticent yesterday as on the day previous regarding the identity of the reputed airship's inventor or his whereabouts, but was more definite in his statements as to the identity of the flying machine, whose secrets are now reposing in his breast. His words were the first uttered by any reliable person positively connecting the invention in his charge with the peregrinating lights seen in the heavens at various places during the past week.

"As I stated before," said the ex-Attorney-General, "I have not myself seen the machine in action or at rest, and I cannot at this time reveal the names of the persons connected with its invention and construction for the reasons already stated. You know the idea now is not to get it patented, but to use it for war purposes."

"I do know, however, that it made a flight last night and was seen at East Oakland by a lady, Mrs. Taylor, the wife of W.J. Taylor, who is a bookkeeper and who lives in East Oakland. She saw not only the lights, but an outline of the ship. It was also seen by others in the same locality. I do not know what the movements of the machine are to be at any particular time, but I was told by my client that I would not see him again for some days, as he intended to make experimental trips with his invention right along for some time."

"People are inclined to be skeptical, general," remarked the reporter, "of the existence of the machine and expect some statement from you definitely connecting the lights alleged to have been seen traveling the air with the invention now in your charge."

"So far as the public is concerned," smilingly replied the attorney, "we do not care what they think of the matter. In fact, we would rather they believed it a thing of fancy. We are not asking the public for anything and do not propose to do so, and therefore don't propose to take them into our confidence."

"But your reputation is more or less at stake in view of the statements published in the newspapers and for which you have become sponsor."

"Well, all I can say on that score is that the interview with me as published in The Call is absolutely correct in every particular, and I will add this on the authority of a statement made to me by the inventor. He told me he actually went over Sacramento at the time the people there claimed to have seen the airship. The inventor has now practically decided to follow my advice as to maintain as much secrecy as possible, and consequently I don't want to go into particulars about it."

"Where was it put together? Was it not in the vicinity of Croville?"

"That is a question I do not care to answer."

"You have stated that you are satisfied the invention is a success?"

"Yes. I have implicit confidence in it and that it is a success, because it is very like the one I saw in New Jersey, and which I witnessed make a flight of fifteen or twenty rods."

"Did Dr. E.H. Benjamin assist in the construction of the machine?"

"I don't know Dr. Benjamin, and don't know whether he did or not."

"From what do you derive your confidence in the airship; from having seen it in actual operation, from a view of it at rest or simply from having seen the plans?"

"I have seen the plans. I have no doubt that when the machine is completed it will be a success."

"What do you mean by being completed?"

"When it is completed for the purpose for which it is now intended to utilize it—for war purposes. It would drown everybody in it if it were to fall over a body of water as it is now built."

"What are the other weak points that the inventor is trying to perfect by these trial flights?"

"From what I understand it has to be able to carry power enough to maintain itself in the air for a certain number of consecutive hours, say about six. It can now maintain itself for six hours, but not against the wind. To sail against the wind or at angles to it more power is required than to go with it. Then it lands too quickly. There is no provision for maintaining it in the air when the power gives out."

"Is it not possible that people frequently take the planets, such as Venus, Mars and Jupiter, which now appear very clearly in the sky, for the airship?"

"In all probability. The airship sometimes displays one light and sometimes three. These lights are under control and can be used as desired by the person managing the airship. I have no doubt that you will have ample and unmistakable evidence of the existence of the invention in a few days. The machine will be made plain to the public, though my advice is to keep the details of its construction secret."

How this evidence was to be presented the general did not say, but allowed it to be understood that the machine would be brought so close to the earth's surface that its shape would be plainly distinguishable, as well as the lights that are now seen.

Picking up some telegrams, General Hart called attention to the widespread and deep interest the reports of the flights of the aerial wonder have created. "Here are telegrams from two New York papers," he said, "asking me to confirm the reports telegraphed East about the invention. One of them asks for 500 words, but all I shall say in answer is that I believe the airship will be a success and that the inventor insists on secrecy, and has nothing more to say at present." / ALL SACRAMENTO AGAPE. / Thousands Confident the Airship Mystery Made Another Visit.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Nov. 25.--Again the mysterious aerial visitant made its appearance over this city this evening, and within a few brief moments the entire city was in an uproar of excitement.

The floating searchlight was plainly visible to all the gazing thousands, and it so timed its arrival as to appear at the same time that Venus, the brilliant evening star, was illuminating the heavens. The onlookers found that a marked difference existed between Venus and her strange aerial competitor. This difference consisted not only in the marked color of the lights, but also in the size of the two lights. Large and brilliant as X is Venus, queen of the heavens, the light shown by the mysterious aerial visitant proved to be fully three times as large.

When the searchlight of the winged visitor first appeared it was seen moving rapidly from the northeast and heading in a southwesterly direction. As it neared the southern boundary of the city it turned directly toward the west and after passing the city went south, being distinctly visible for upward of twenty minutes. It moved with far more rapidity than it had been seen to do in its two former visits, and this would be accounted for in case it be a veritable airship by the fact of the calmness of the atmosphere, there being not a breath of wind moving at the time of its first appearance.

Later in the evening it again approached the city from the west, having evidently made a circle, and passed away to the north and east, thus completing the circuit of the city, and allowing nearly all the residents a perfect view of the mysterious visitant. There were many, however, who failed to leave their houses in time to catch a glimpse of the swiftly moving light and who, when they did reach the open and gazed into the ethereal vault, saw nothing but Venus; but the vast majority saw both--Venus and the moving searchlight.

Among the numerous groups gazing skyward this evening was one composed mainly of State officials and prominent lawyers of the city, and their expressions of amazement and, in cases, intense chagrin were very plainly expressed, often in vigorous though perhaps not eloquent or refined Saxon.

Hon. E.D. McCabe, secretary to Governor Budd, was one of this group and as it was the first time he had witnessed the mysterious lights he was correspondingly astonished. During the past week he has been inclined to laugh at the theory that aerial navigation had been accomplished, and in speaking of the subject after the disappearance of the visitant he said:

"I am simply astonished, and will not attempt to give any explanation of this mystery. The light is certainly produced by electricity or magnetism, and can by no possibility be a star or a meteor. Again, there were seconds when it flickered and disappeared entirely from view, exactly as I have time after time observed ordinary arc lights to do when the current was interrupted.

"In my judgment it certainly resembled an extra large arc light, and it moved so rapidly that I was obliged to repeatedly step back several feet in order to keep it in view over the intercepting buildings. I am not prepared to say it is an airship, although it certainly looked as though attached to a body of some kind. I can only say that I am thoroughly convinced that it is a mystery and in my judgment neither a star nor a fake."

District Attorney Frank D. Ryan viewed the visitor for the first time. After expressing his astonishment he muttered: "And there will be strange sights seen in the heavens. Wars and rumors of wars. I shall certainly attend church to-morrow, for this may be the advent of the millennium." Then laughing he said:

"That thing is too deep for me. I don't understand it. It might be that aerial travel has been accomplished. It seems as strange and improbable as were the inventions of the telephone, phonograph and electric power as applied to streetcars."

George A. McCalvy, Deputy Secretary of State, said: "I confess I am simply amazed, for ever since the first appearance of the reputed airship I have been a most pronounced skeptic. Attorney Collins of San Francisco is an intimate friend of mine, and I must confess that I have experienced considerable amusement by interviewing him by 'phone since his reported connection with the air vessel. In the language of the day, 'I have done many things to Attorney Collins,' but you may put me on record as saying that I am now fully convinced that there is more truth than poetry in the old adage 'that he laughs best who laughs last.' This light is certainly no fake and I am almost tempted to believe that the problem of aerial travel is solved."

J.A. Donlon, Assessor of Ventura County, was one of the onlookers. It required considerable persuasion to induce him to cross the street to catch a glimpse of the mysterious visitant, but the look of incredulity quickly left his face and he said: "This simply passes by under standing. That is certainly no star, and I won't attempt to offer any explanation."

Professor Dodge of Galt, who is in attendance on the Teachers' Institute, now in session, saw the light and declared that he could distinguish the outlines of a dark body connected with it, but so indistinctly as to be unable to give any idea of its shape.

Judge W.A. Henry was also an interested spectator, and also proclaims it not a fake, but a reality.

Charles T. Max Jones, the attorney, was a spectator, but firmly declined to give any opinion as to what the light was, except to say that he thought it was neither a star, a meteor nor a fake.

W.R. Stone of the Secretary of State's office was also deeply interested in the moving mystery. He said:

"It looks like an arc light and moves as though attached to some kind of vessel, and is certainly neither a lantern attached to a kite nor any kind of a fake that I can imagine. I must confess that I am stumped to find an explanation of the mystery other than that it may be an air vessel."

Such were the expressions of but a few of some of the leading men of note in this city, and there were hundreds who stood in close proximity to these few and who uttered similar sentiments.

Lieutenant Fred Martin, commander of the Signal Corps, who was an onlooker, said:

"It simply passes all explanation, and I am fully convinced this is no fake. This afternoon two gentlemen, Messrs. Haines and Fleckart, came into my office about 4 o'clock and told me that they had just seen the airship moving over the city in a northeasterly direction. They described it as a dark, misty object, traveling at an enormous height, yet visible against the clear blue of the ether. I did not pay very much attention to their story at the time, as I was inclined to think they might have seen a cloud, but they were evidently much in earnest in their deliberations and said that no clouds were visible and that the dark object moved with great rapidity. Now that I have seen this mysterious light coming from the same direction in which they saw it going, I am rather inclined to believe that they have been eye-witnesses of some mysterious air vessel." / DR. BENJAMIN DISAPPEARS / The Friend of the Inventor Changes His Place of Residence.

Dr. E.H. Benjamin, formerly of 633 Ellis street, who is reputed to have considerable knowledge of the airship, has apparently disappeared and as mysteriously as the light that so many thousands have seen in the heavens.

For two years past Dr. Benjamin had rented the front room of this lodging-house from E.H. Keiser, but yesterday the furniture, carpets and household fixtures were disposed of under the auctioneer's hammer. Where Mr. Keiser and his tenants have gone was not stated, nor was there a reason given except one given in the spirit of fun by a pretty brunette, who said:

"We have had to move for our self-protection. You see, since that airship story has been afloat, the representatives of the press have been calling here at all times of the day and night to see and interview Dr. Benjamin. Why, some of them have camped upon the front steps until 4 o'clock in the morning, and if they had not been personally known to the police no doubt the officers would have suspected that there was trouble in the house. Our house has become an object of curiosity to every one who passes, and dozens have stopped and looked up to the windows as though they expected to see the windows open and an airship or two fly out, and all because the name of Dr. Benjamin has been connected with the airship story."

"Where is Dr. Benjamin today?" was asked of the lady, but before she could answer the glib-tongued auctioneer chipped in and said: "He has gone to get his airship and take this lady to Europe, where he will marry her."

After the parties had joked to their own apparent satisfaction they gave this information. Dr. Benjamin left the house early in the morning--about 8 o'clock as near as they could judge. He said that he would be back at noon, but he failed to return.

Before leaving he packed up all his effects in trunks, which the auctioneer and his assistants moved into a back room there to wait until the owner should return. Those who moved his effects found in his room some refuse copper which furnished food for comment for a long time. These consisted of a lot of copper cups about the size of ferules for small canes. As these to some extent resembled percussion caps, such as are used on the end of blasting fuse, it was suggested that the little cups were a part of the material to be used, as Attorney Hart suggested, for the destruction of Havana.

The romance of these little pieces of brass was shattered, however, when it was learned that Dr. Benjamin has been experimenting upon continuous bridge-work for teeth and these little cups were the crowns for rows of artificial grinders. Many of these cups were taken away by the auctioneer's assistants for souvenirs, but upon being told that they were only unfinished store teeth the men tossed their copper cups into the street in disgust.

Dr. Benjamin did not return during the afternoon or evening and although in the evening a dim light was to be seen in one of the rooms no response was made to a call at the door. In truth the door bell was fastened on the inside. Thus Dr. Benjamin disappeared. Whether his effects have been removed or not is a matter of conjecture.

In connection with the movements of Dr. Benjamin there is one incident that apparently connects him with the inventor of the airship. It will be remembered that several people who claim to know much about the new whip of the skies have stated that it was built near Oroville and that its first flight was taken therefrom on the night that the lights were seen in Sacramento. Also that the inventor and owner is or was a wealthy resident of Oroville. The latter statement was made by Attorney Collins at the time when ex-Attorney-General Hart said that he talked too much. On that occasion Mr. Collins stated that the inventor was brought to him by a client. In the same interview he acknowledged that Dr. Benjamin ~~xxxx~~ has wealthy relatives in or near Oroville.

It was learned last evening that a few days before the appearance of the airship's lights over the Sacramento Valley Dr. Benjamin went to Oroville to see his relations.

His visit at that particular time has given rise to some speculation in the mind of Dr. Joseph D. Hodgen, secretary of the State Board of Dental Examiners, of 1005 Sutter street. Last evening Dr. Hodgen said:

"I have known Dr. Benjamin for some time. He comes from Maine, I believe. He is not a regular practicing dentist, but he gives much of his time to experiments in dental work. Of late he has been at work upon continuous plate bridge work in artificial teeth, and idea he got from a dentist from Oregon.

"About two weeks ago I met him with his gripsack in his hand on the street, and he told me that he was going to Oroville or Auburn for a week. I am sure, come to think of it, that it was Oroville and not Auburn. He said that he was going to see his aunt. I have not seen him since. The day I saw him was either on the 17th or the 12 inst. Soon after that I saw the first accounts of the airship over the Sacramento Valley."

NEW CONVERTS. / Dr. Paulin No Longer a Skeptic on the Airship Proposition.

That each day is witnessing the conversion of many skeptics to the belief that the airship is a verity is shown by the willingness of these doubting individuals to become witnesses to their new faith.

Last night Dr. Paulin of 1757 Nineteenth street, East Oakland, took the trouble to telephone his interesting experience to The Call. He said:

"I never had any faith in the airship until to-night. About 8 o'clock Judge Horburgh, a neighbor, called to us and told us we could see the airship. We looked out and saw above us what appeared to be a group of ~~xxxx~~ four or five lights and above them was outlined something which had the form of a whale. It was moving toward the City. Then it changed its course toward Sausalito, and averted again toward the City and soon went out of sight."

A night watchman at North Berkeley says that he saw the light Tuesday night distinctly, and watched it while it traveled from San Pablo and crossed over until it was back of the high hills of Berkeley. This may give some indefinite sort of a clew concerning the place where the alleged airship may be in hiding during the day, so this man thought.

A noticeable fact connected with the mystery of the alleged airship is that the light which is observed is seen to be traveling against the wind as often as with it. This would not be the case if the light were carried by a balloon or kite, as a matter of course. / PRACTICAL JOKERS. / Lighted Balloons Sent Up in Various Parts of the City.

Toy balloons were sent soaring upward with hot air for a motor from several places along Market street last night. The wind was brisk, and when once the balloons were above the roofs they traveled along steadily, and naturally attracted some attention.

Soon, however, the fuel which gave them motion consumed the balloon. There was no one who was stupid enough to believe for a moment that any such proposition as that had been sufficient at any time to deceive the many who have ascribed to the mysterious airship the possession of a large electric light. Those who sent up the fire-balloons on Market street last night soon tired, observing that little interest was taken in them.

Several persons with apparently an idea of having a little fun at the expense of the public went to the top of Nob Hill last evening at about 9:30 o'clock and sent up a hot-air balloon with a Japanese lantern attached to the bottom.

Instead of mounting rapidly to a great height the thing wobbled around and floated off on the wind over Kearny street toward the bay. For half a mile it scarcely rose 300 feet, and its construction and shape were plainly seen. The people on Kearny street jeered at the fake article inflated over them, and several suggested that Mr. McEvoy of the American Detective Agency had changed his place of operation from Inspiration Point, near Piedmont, to Nob Hill, San Francisco.

A local fireworks company reported to-day that they had been doing a big balloon business within the last few days. In fact they have sold more of this kind of fireworks within a week than they have since the birth of July. Purchases have been made by people from Alameda, Hayward, Fruitvale, Oakland, Berkeley and San Francisco. / AGAINST FAKERS. / A Vigilance Committee Formed in the Mission District.

Public interest in the airship is growing every day and with witness practical jokers people have no patience.

The prevalence of small hot-air balloons, carrying dingy lights across the darkened heavens, imposing on the credulity of persons looking for an aerial wanderer, has led to the forming of a vigilance committee. The committee is at present composed of but four members--James Peoples, Ed Perley, Gus Skelly and M.L. Peoples, and is known as the Mission Dolores Vigilance Committee. Although the organization has but a few members each member is capable of making it thoroughly interesting for any man caught in the act of releasing a miniature gas-bag. The most enthusiastic member is James Peoples, the captain, who measures about six feet four inches and is built in proportion. He is looking for and is anxious to meet a practical joker with a balloon under his arm. Then the trouble would commence.

"We take an occasional trip to Twin Peaks in search of balloon men."

said Mr. Peoples, last evening, "but as yet we have not captured one. If we do find one all four of us (we measure all together something like twenty-four feet six inches) will jump all /p.2/ over him for his idiotic acts, and it is safe to say that he will reform." / ~~xxxx~~ ATTRACTIVE VENUS. / Her Charms Still Beguiling Many of the Uninitiated.

AUBURN, Cal., Nov. 25.--People here have been inclined to discredit the existence of the aerial traveler of the heavens, but last night found several reliable citizens who can swear that they saw the light in the sky.

John T. Walsh, hospital steward, noticed a light in the western sky just about over Sacramento, forty miles distant. He called his wife and she and several of the hospital patients vouchsafe the ~~xxxx~~ story as true. Their description is that it was a round light of yellowish hue, nearly as large as the sun. It dipped and curved for a while and then disappeared. Dave Chamberlain noticed a light in the heavens when going to supper shortly after 6 o'clock, and when he reached home called his father's and mother's attention to it. Deputy Recorder Henry Hart is another who saw it.

FRESNO, Cal., Nov. 24.--The airship passed over Fresno at 6 o'clock this evening. Only the light could be seen. Some say it was Venus setting. The light passed over the city in a northwesterly direction. / INQUISITIVE RIVALS. / Searchlights Seeking for the Warship of the Air.

VALLEJO, Cal., Nov. 25.--The searchlights on the monitors Monadnock and Monterey are flashing throughout the heavens this evening, in hopes of discovering the whereabouts of the great airship. Up to 8 o'clock no discoveries have been made and it is expected by the officers at the yard that some other course will be pursued by the air voyagers for fear that big Betsy and Alice on the Monterey will be trained on and fired at the warship of the air. Pic: Ex-Attorney-General W.H.H. Hart.

1896 November 26 (Th) The Call (San Francisco), p. 6. (ed.)

THE AIRSHIP.

Few things of recent occurrence have been more gratifying to The Call than the way in which its reports of the airship have been received by the public. That a story so strange and so seemingly improbable as this should have found a wide acceptance when coming from The Call is, conclusive evidence that the people are aware The Call deals in no fakes, and that whatever it reports is well founded on reason and on fact.

Public opinion on the subject was well expressed by Editor Walden of the Napa Journal at the State editors' convention in Vallejo, in saying that while he was incredulous of the airship he did not like to disbelieve the many persons of known veracity who claiming to have optical evidence of its existence. Mr. Walden added: "If the story had appeared in any other paper than The Call I should have paid no attention to it."

This and other expressions of popular confidence in the reliability and accuracy of The Call's reports on all matters of public interest are in the highest degree gratifying. It will be borne in mind The Call has never asserted the existence of an airship, and never has undertaken even to describe on its own authority the strange light which has been seen. It has given only the reports of those who claimed to have seen it, and who being persons of reputation and good standing in the community are entitled to public confidence in what they say.

The subject is one of popular interest and of so little public importance. It is, therefore, nothing more than proper that a newspaper which aims to give all the news all the time, and give it accurately everytime, should gather these reports and seek diligently to find upon what cause they are based. This is what The Call has done and will continue to do.

It is evident that so many men of good understanding cannot be wholly deceived in a matter of such a nature. There is certainly some cause for the strange lights which so many intelligent people have seen and described. That cause we are now seeking out. We have no intention nor object to deceive the public. We aim simply to make known the truth. The readers of The Call may rely upon it that they will receive as early as possible a full and complete explanation of the mystery whatever that may be. There is certainly some cause for the light and The Call will find it out.

1896-November 26 (Th) San Francisco Chronicle, p. 14. (card 1)

THE AIRSHIP CRAZE FAST FADING AWAY. / STAR-GAZING HAS CEASED. / "ALUMINUM" BENJAMIN RISES TO EXPLAIN. / Bemoans His Unfortunate Lot and Says the Reporters Are Shortening His Life. /

Public interest in the airship proposition has waned considerably during the last twenty-four hours. People are tired of craning their necks and gazing into the sky on the invitation of any excitable person who takes it into his head that he sees something out of the common.

Besides, it is the general impression that the mysterious inventor has been fooling long enough. If he wants to "hold the crowd" it will be necessary for him not only to come out boldly and declare who and what he is, but also to let people see his invention under way in broad daylight, without the mystic glamour of heavenly constellations and fire balloons. Until that time it may be taken for granted that the airship story, like ~~xxx~~ many another good story before it, has run its course.

"Aluminum" Benjamin, under whose pious black hat works an untiring and romantic imagination, was on view all day yesterday, and seemed thoroughly satisfied with the universal homage paid him. He is a man with a naturally imposing appearance and unlimited belief in his own powers of explanation, persuasion and conversation generally.

"All this balderdash about me and Collins parting company is a fake—a bald-headed fake—and nothing else," he said yesterday. "Why, me and Collins are like brothers. This airship trouble has only brought us closer together, and he has acted like a dandy. The man that says I have gone off and joined forces with any other attorney is a liar."

Benjamin has been talking volubly for two days about a working model of his "invention." He has been asked a dozen times to describe it, but has never yet managed to get beyond a vague preamble. He says that "It ain't so big as the Palace Hotel, nor yet so small that you can't see it," and with this lucid explanation his questioners have to be content.

Last night he made a heroic move and shifted his trunk from his Ellis-street lodging to a house on Eddy. He said that it had become necessary for him to change his quarters on account of the trouble that reporters were inflicting on him.

"Anybody 'ud think that I was a cattle thief, the way them fellers are camping on my trail," he said yesterday. "I can't eat in a restaurant but what there's three or four of them looking at me through the windows. Every night when I go home I've got to hold a reception for a couple of hours on my doorstep before I can get into the house. It's come to a point now where I'd almost as soon make the city a present of my airship as have any more trouble about it. Indeed, the only thing that stops me from making such a gift is that they would immediately give the machine my name, and I hate notoriety."

Here and there still remain enthusiasts who claim that the airship is a real and tangible creation and that they have seen it. The betting phrase of the question has just been started by a man from over the bay, and no doubt a few more people, as positive as he, will follow suit. He is H.P. Mitchell, a well-known Oakland painter, and his he is willing to bet $100 that the airship really exists. He said yesterday that he has seen the wonderful flying machine twice and that he was sure that he was not and could not be mistaken about the matter.

"I saw this thing first about six weeks ago," he said, "and again about two weeks ago. The first time it was out over the bay early in the evening, and I could see it quite plainly, for there were three lights on it. The next time it passed over the city and I got quite a good view of it. Some of my men were with me and there was no mistake about it. It moved about as rapidly as a dove flies, and seemed to be under perfect control. I am not very sporty, but I am willing to lay $100 that the airship exists. Yes, I would be glad to place the money under satisfactory conditions, for I feel sure that I would win it easily. I was not deceived by any star or meteor. I have a pair of eyes that do not deceive me, as a rule."

"The Real Inventor," as she signs herself, writes to the "Chronicle" that her plans have been greatly misunderstood. She intends to make a grand trial trip this evening over San Francisco and Oakland, and goes on to remark, "The powerful searchlight which has hitherto been used and which has excited so much general interest will be discarded and the car lighted in such a manner that its form and shape will be distinctly visible."

Ex-Attorney-General W.H.H. Hart, who has told a number of his friends that he is the new representative of the unknown airship inventor, is having lots of fun with everybody who visits him in connection with the affair. Hart delights in a little joke to liven up the dull round of legal work now and again. Unlike "Airship" Collins, however, he is not making a mystery out of it, and consequently will not experience the same shock to the nervous system that it was the misfortune of his fellow-attorney to receive.

It is probable that Collins will go to some hot springs' resort in the near future, where, by strict compliance with the demands of a vegetable diet, he may possibly recover from the effects of the nervous strain of the past week.

ANOTHER LOCALITY INVADIED.

At Red Bluff It Resembled a Star, an Egg and a Kite.

RED BLUFF, November 25.—Although the residents of this city were apparently sober last night, yet the airship that has been puzzling San Francisco and Sacramento for the past few days was seen at two different times in this city. At about 6:45 o'clock a crowd on the corner of Walnut and Washington streets noticed almost directly west of them what appeared to be a star, but which was moving rapidly in a southerly direction toward the mountains. Dr. J.A. Owen, who was in the crowd, called to several others who were near, and the crowd watched the object till it went out of sight over the mountains.

C.N. Chase, an attorney, says that he saw it first while standing on the corner of Main and Walnut streets, and that it was rapidly moving toward Leesville. He watched it for about twenty minutes, at the end of which time it disappeared over the mountains. Mr. Chase says that it was going directly west, as part of the time the ship was on this side of the mountains and he could see the summit of the mountains above it.

Soon after the object had passed out of sight a telegram from Chico was received stating that the object had passed over there a few minutes previously. W.H. Hughes, a carpenter, climbed to the top of the City Hall after it had disappeared, and says that after making a few turns it came back over the mountains, and a few minutes later it again passed over this place.

A telegram was a short time later received from Leesville saying that the strange craft had gone as far as that place and from there had turned and gone back toward Red Bluff. Several people say not only that the light was visible, but on the return trip the body of the object was seen. The witnesses compared it in shape to an egg. Many thought that the light was from a star, but this theory was spoiled by the rocking motion of the machine. It was precisely like that of a kite.

THE SCARECROW FLY-BY-NIGHT. / The Thunderbird preparing to Throw Eggs at Weyler. / Airships Come Not in Single Spies, but in Battalions Invading the Blue. / Plenty of Authority, but Most of It Has Filtered Through Three or Four Generations. / SCIENTIFIC MEN PRONE TO SCOFF / Every County in the State Has One or More Fiery Monsters Careening Up and Down the Heavens. /

Fly not yet, tis just the hour/When pleasure, like the midnight flower/That scorns the eye of vulgar light,/Refrains to bloom for sons of night/And maids who love the moon./Twas but to bless three hours of shade/That beauty and the mood were made./'Tis then their soft attractions glowing/Set the tides and goblets flowing./Oh stave oh stay! / --Moore's Address to the Thunderbird. /

Nevertheless the Thunderbird will not stay for any or all of these attractions. He is busy getting ready to drop a hot bomb on Weyler's head. People who have ventured to suspect that he is a common, ordinary goose, addicted to cackle, are treated with reviling. He is a filibuster bird, he is, and he is ready to destroy Havana in forty-eight hours. The bird is preparing to throw eggs at Weyler.

The man who has not an airship in his backyard in these days is poor indeed. The man who has not seen a fleet of airships maneuvering in the skies has left California ashamed of himself. He is like the man who fell out of the balloon. He is not in it. They come not in single ships, but in battalions. The county or town in the State which cannot produce a machinery bird or two is hiding its head in shame.

In Santa Clara the monster was seen striding the blast in the direction of Gilroy. In Sonoma he was horsed upon the sightless courier of the air. In Placer he flipped and flapped like tuppence in a rag, and in Alameda he is writing letters to the papers.

There was a faker yesterday on a side street who had gathered a bunch of listeners whom he was trying to interest in the virtues of soap—his soap. But somehow he could not hold their attention. It seemed as if every man in that crowd had a rubber neck. Then he unde stood, and he began:

"Why stand ye gazing up to heaven? Looking for airships, eh? Well, that is all right, but you won't see any airship to-day. There is an airship all right. I've seen it myself, and you'll all hear about it and see it in a few days. I know the man that made it, and it is straightening out the wavy motion that bothers him up in the cloud. That'll be all right, but you won't see it this afternoon, and as I was saying, this soap—"

There is not a respectable star in the heavens that is not in danger of being confounded with this vagrant fly-by-night, and a hot-air balloon is enough to cause a riot on the streets. Neither is there any lack of authority of a sort for stories. It is true that most of them have filtered through three or four generations of story tellers for the family tree of the father of lies has many branches that over shadow the earth.

Still another ex-Attorney-General Hart has become entangled with the mysterious flying machine—or at least with one of the flock. This particular "ex" is A.L. Hart, formerly of Sacramento. Mr. Hart confided to some friends a few evenings ago that he knew the lawyer who had been retained by the inventor of this bird or birds of the air, and who had taken a ride into the ether aboard the craft. Mr. Hart explained yesterday that he bases this statement upon information imparted to him by an acquaintance who said Lawyer Collins was the man, and that the latter had told him all about it. Collins, said Mr. Hart's friend, went into great detail in explaining the workings of the aerial navigating apparatus, and assured him that this saw machine was the identical one which has so narrowly missed knocking down a few church steeples in Sacramento.

But now that Attorney Collins has found that the "time for his appearing" has arrived, and has repudiated all statements attributed to him regarding the mysterious airship, ex-Attorney-General Hart—that is, A.L. Hart—is unable to be of any further assistance in the way of clearing up the mystery surrounding the "strange light" that dodges among the clouds.

Another inventor came to the front yesterday, or, rather, permitted himself to be discovered—and to those who were inclined to be inquisitive he seemed willing enough to allow them to mistake him for the millionaire who is reported to have been lately scurrying and slumping in midair. He would not admit that this was true, but would vouchsafe inquirers a knowing smile and say, with a show of commendable modesty, that he'd rather not discuss the subject. This inventor does not hail from Oroville. He is a local man and his name is David Francouer.

"But you do not deny that you are the inventor of a flying machine?" Francouer was asked yesterday.

"Oh, no; not at all," was the reply. "I am free to confess that I believe I have solved the problem of aerial navigation."

"Have your experiments been successful?"

"Quite so. My machine is a veritable bird. After two years of hard work I struck the secret of combining both the balloon and aeroplane theories, and after that all was easy. Yes, my machine has traversed the air already, and the one I have now is capable of carrying twenty people across the continent without a stop."

"Have you made any experiments in the neighborhood of Sacramento, San Francisco or Oakland lately?"

Now, it was this question and similar ones that invariably caused Mr. Francouer to grow coy.

"No, I don't think I have ventured close to any of the places you mention," he would say.

But finally the inventor was asked what he intended doing with his airship--that is, for the present, prior to sailing to Havana and destroying that city in the interest of the Cuban revolutionists. He must have forgot himself.

"Why, I've rented a vacant store on Market street and I'm going to exhibit it to the public at two-bits a squint," he replied before his friends could catch him and admonish him to shut up.

Lawyer George W. Monteith, not to be outdone by the ex attorney-generals or by the visionary Mr. Collins, made a real discovery of a flying machine yesterday, and, like his rivals, immediately became mysterious.

Meeting a friend on Market street, Mr. Monteith seized him by the arm, hissed into his ear that not a word should be spoken, and then dragged him into a dark and deserted alley.

"Sh-h-h!" was the attorney's first admonition. "Not a word of this to anybody. I've found it, sure. It has wings and a long tail."

"Say, my old friend, it's plain to me that you have caught the airship malady, too," and the lawyer's victim, as he endeavored to disentangle himself from Monteith's grasp.

"Haven't touched a drop, sir; but I tell you I have discovered the real airship--the one that's been cutting all these capers over the housetops at night. Why, I can take you to a man who can tell you all about it, and more than that, can show you a working model of the skyscraper in a minute. Listen, and I'll tell you how it happened. Do you know George Crossley? No? Well, he's the engineer of the Spreke's building. George has been acting mysteriously of late, and when I took him to task the other day he came right out and admitted that he had been assisting the gentlemen who were interested in the new airship, and that he had been practically superintending the recent experiments which have been astonishing everybody."

To prove his assertion Mr. Monteith hurried his friend to the Sprekels building and dragged him into the elevator.

"We will go and see the model first," he whispered, and they were both waited to the third floor. The attorney led the way to a room and opened the door.

Well, there was a flying machine there all right enough--that is, a model of one--with its wings and tail and a propeller, which, by its rapid revolutions, was making a noise like a Japanese top. But the airship was not flying around the room. It was held securely to the ceiling by stout steel cords.

Dr. C.A. Smith, the inventor of Mr. Monteith's discovery, has had it on exhibition in this room for a number of weeks, and is endeavoring to get some capital interested in the scheme in order that he might make some practical tests of his invention. He is certain that it can fly.

"No, I'm not the inventor who has been flying up and down the coast of late," said Dr. Smith when seen last evening. "I'm glad I'm not, for I have a better machine than the one that has been making those nocturnal flights. Of course I have never seen the latter machine, but I know mine is better. Do I believe that the problem of aerial navigation has been solved? Why, you talk foolishly. Of course it has. My dear sir, it is merely a question now of who has the more perfect apparatus. I have no doubt that somebody has invented something in which he has been floating about lately, but that does not bother me, for I know that I have the superior article. And what is more, I have it protected by patents. They can't steal it from me. My invention is intended to wipe out railroads and steamships, and is not for midnight pleasure parties."

Another anonymous inventor writes to "The Examiner" promising that his ship will be, as he spells it out, "visible to every one by daylight on Thanksgiving Day at noon," and he adds that none others are genuine. All the fly-by-nights he insists are fakes, for the safety lanterns on his ship are not big enough to be seen at any distance. So now look out for a daylight bird.

THICK AS GEESE.

Airships Over Oakland Grouped in Flocks in the Sky.

OAKLAND, November 25.--Mysterious lights were seen floating over Oakland and Alameda last night. Shortly before 8 o'clock a light shot up over Piedmont and drifted up into the clouds. About 9 o'clock another light was seen drifting in the vicinity of Alameda. Thousands of people saw the lights and many reputable citizens were ready to affirm that they had seen the mysterious airships.

Joseph D. Strong, who spent this evening in Oakland, said that he had obtained ~~the~~ glimpses of "flocks of airships." They seemed to him to be going up in all directions, grouping themselves in the sky much as a flock of geese in spring time follow the parent goose and pander.

Another explanation of the wandering light that has been pursued over the hills of Oakland has been given. All of those who have seen the light have described it as being like the searchlight that shone over the Midwinter ~~and~~ Fair grounds in San Francisco. The conclusion is that the light comes from the chutes each night and when reflected on the fog gives a weird appearance. Mrs. E.H. Crawford and Miss Kate N. Bassett, who reside at 522 Tenth street, saw the light several times during last evening. It raveled back and forth through the heavens just as described, and the ~~ladies~~ ladies are satisfied that it was the searchlight at the chutes.

FRESNO DISAPPOINTED.

It Was Only the Planet Venus After All.

FRESNO, November 25.--An amusing incident occurred shortly after sunset this evening. A Thanksgiving crowd was drifting around the town when suddenly the report was circulated that the airship was in sight near the Western horizon. Several hundred people gathered on Mariposa street looking westward, where a bright light appeared in the clear sky just above the coast range. When it became known that the object was the planet Venus the crowd melted away and pronounced the airship a fake.

HUNG A LANTERN IN THE SKY.

Auburn People Say It Is No Longer a Joke.

AUBURN, November 25.--The mysterious aerial traveler has been looked upon as a joke here until to-day. People can hardly dispute the word of Hospital Steward J.T. Walsh, who says he saw a lantern in the sky last night about 6 o'clock. It looked to be just over Sacramento, and had the shape of a round light half as large as the sun. Mr. Walsh's family, several inmates of the hospital, J.B. Chamberlain and family, Deputy Recorder Henry Hart, and other reputable citizens saw the light. It remained about half an hour.

[cartoons: Beats Edison--The Blind See Ships (vide X-rays to make blind see). The Inventor of the Airship (2 boys w. hot air balloon). Only Star Not Mistaken for an Airship Is Sad (Saturn crying).]
[Poem: The Thing of Wheels and Cranks and Frolic]

1896 November 26 (Th) Grass Valley, Calif., D. Morning Union, p. 3.

THE ALLEGED AIR SHIP. / Numerous People Saw a Strange Light in the Heavens.

The people of this city are becoming aroused over the stories in the newspapers about an alleged air ship or flying machine, which people in different parts of the State claim to have observed of late.

Several people in this city say they plainly saw a strange light in the western heavens at about 6 o'clock last evening. It looked as though it was far away but was very bright. A Union reporter enquired of a number of people who were named as having seen the light and found among them the following who stated that they observed it: Justice Holbrooke, Sheriff Getchell, Deputy Sheriff Neagle, a man named ~~as~~ Patterson and several others. They all describe the strange light about the same, saying that it is oblong and raises and drops occasionally. Those who witnessed it think that it was in the direction of Sacramento.

1896 November 26 (Th) (Carson City, Nev.) Morning Appeal, p. 3.

AIR SHIP OF WINNEMUCCA.

A number of Winnemucca ladies declare that there is no mistake but that an aerial traveler passed directly over this town, exhibiting a magnificent searchlight at the hour above mentioned (!). They were up patiently waiting for their husbands to return from lodge and as they sat by their windows they saw what they thought to be a golden chariot, resplendent with light, and horses with wings, behind which sat anela with harps, and crowns of flowers upon their heads from which sparks of light shone bright as the stars in a crystal mine. "O no, it was no dream, for we saw and spoke about it next day among ourselves and we all agree that it was an omen, an apparition, which we read once in a paper would appear to a few of us four years before the end of the world in 1900.

Nov. 24 ed.; 25, 2 article; Dec. 3, Horen.
1896 November 27 (Fri) The Call (San Francisco), p. 14. (card 1)

AS LARGE AS A BIG WHALE / W.H.H. Hart Tells of the Length of the Airship. / ANOTHER WILL BE BUILT / It Is to Be Used to Destroy the City of Havana for the Junta. / TEN MILLIONS IS DEMANDED. / No Trouble to Navigate the Sky Now That a Perfect Storage Battery Is Invented. /

The subject of the airship and lights seen by the people of half a dozen counties has not lost any of the interest in the public mind. Notwithstanding the fact that the weather was very cold last evening hundreds of people on both sides of the bay spent considerable time out of doors looking for the mysterious lights to reappear and skip across the ~~map~~ sky.

Up to a late hour no lights were seen, and the impression was that the inventor ~~and~~ his assistants were taking a night off and enjoying a Thanksgiving dinner and a little rest.

The legal representative, however, says that the men never rest, but are hard at work improving and perfecting defective parts of the machinery. He promises that ere long the public will have positive proof that the ship exists.

Attorney W.H.H. Hart is as enthusiastic over the airship in which he is interested as though the matter were that of praise instead of ridicule on the part of the unbelieving. He seems to be thoroughly convinced that he has a good thing, and if there are those who regard the whole affair as a hoax or a fake Mr. Hart says they will have to remain in ignorance ~~as~~ so much longer.

That it exists and has made successful flights he has no doubt, although he has not seen it.

Of those who are convinced that there is such a thing as an airship Mr. Hart said: "It will be a matter of only a very short time before they can say, 'I told you so.' Even if I had not personal knowledge I would be very careful about branding the thing as a fake. The position of The Call has been fair and impartial. It has simply published the statements of those who saw what which they believed to be an airship, and has made no attempt to convince the general public that these people were either fools or had wheels in their heads."

The attorney, in the course of a long conversation upon this all-important subject, explained a number of features that heretofore have not been made public. In the first place he gave the length of the airship as about 125 feet and of a width in proportion to its length. This corresponds to the statement of W.J. Taylor of East Oakland, who said the airship he saw on Wednesday evening looked like a large whale. Another important disclosure was that the inventor and Mr. Hart have already discussed a proposition to construct another airship of not ~~as~~ over fifty feet in length, to be used for war purposes principally.

"The one the inventor has now," said Mr. Hart, "is too large and uses up too much power in running against the wind--that is, it presents too much surface to the wind--and the one we are thinking of constructing will carry the same apparatus and power. The amount of power now used to operate the big airship will last twice as long and do much more service if applied to a smaller ship."

"Do you seriously consider the building of another airship?" was asked.

"Yes, if there is any inducement. I see in to-day's paper that the Cuban Junta wants to purchase Cuba's liberty from Spain for a hundred million dollars. Now our ship would secure the same results at a much less figure. I talked with the inventor yesterday morning and he said that if the Cubans would give him $10,000,000 he would wipe out the Spanish stronghold of Cuba."

"Would he demand the cash in advance or its equivalent in securities?"

"Oh, no. The new Cuban Government would be good for such a debt. All he would want would be the dynamite. He would furnish the rest and do the job."

The attorney spoke of how the inventor with his airship and deadly explosive would do the job with as little emotion as though it was a nest of rats instead of a city of wealth, power and beauty. Resuming, he said:

"If such an agreement or contract is made the airship can be taken to New York and shipped by steamer to Cuba. My suggestion is that it be landed not far from the scene of operations. I advised that a balloon be used to raise the airship to the desired height, so as to save the power ~~xxxx~~ stored in the storage battery. When the ship is raised to the desired height the balloon can be cut loose and the airship go about its business. When it gets through dropping dynamite into Havana it would still have plenty of power left to get back to where it started from."

"And the inventor will do this job for $10,000,000?"

"So he says. He asserts that he is not in need of money and that it will only take about thirty days to build a smaller airship. The material would cost considerable, as aluminum comes high. He could put the smaller ship into perfect working order for about $25,000 or $30,000, and I believe that he will construct such an airship before long."

The attorney was led off to the subject of the power used on the airship, and, as before, he said that it is electricity stored in a storage battery. He has an interest, he said—a part interest—in a new storage battery so light that it practically overcomes one of the greatest obstacles of aerial navigation. Mr. Hart continued, saying:

"For a long time scientists puzzled their heads over the question ~~show~~ they could secure a large amount of power without carrying a large amount of weight. This has been accomplished in the Fargo storage battery in which I am interested. I can put in an airship a twenty-horsepower battery that will not weigh over 100 pounds that will run continuously for ten hours. It does not require any more power to run the airship than my client has operated lately."

"Has he a Fargo storage battery in his ship?"

"Well, I am not at liberty to state at present. The inventor of the Fargo storage battery and the inventor of the airship are personal friends, and as I was interested in the new battery it may account for my being called into the airship scheme. I do know that this battery would give all the power such an airship would require and it can be easily charged from any common motor."

The destruction of Havana by an airship came once more before the eye of Mr. Hart, and he said that the charging of the storage batteries might be a matter of difficulty in the neighborhood of Havana. The destroyer would not dare to go too near to the Spanish fortifications, as it is not bullet-proof. It might be difficult to secure electricity in the little tropical island. The battery might possibly be charged on the deck of the steamer from a dynamo run by the steamer's engines, but eventually would ~~xxxx~~ be attended by great risk considering the vigilance of the Spanish cruisers.

"Would not international complications arise out of an aerial warship leaving the United States to destroy a Spanish city in Cuba?"

"Oh, no, not at all. The parties could go outside the jurisdiction on a chartered or purchased steamer and sign the contract and make all of the arrangements necessary. No, the United States would not become involved in any annoyance with Spain. At any rate, the inventor is ready to take the risk and send an airship to Cuba for war purposes as soon as the Junta is ready to talk business."

While much of this conversation was taking place Mr. Hart was at the Chutes showing his little boy the hot air balloon. After the huge smoke-filled bag had shot into the air with the daring athlete dangling to the end of the parachute crossbar, and the excitement was over, the attorney started for home. Just before entering the house he said: "You can tell the public that in ~~xx~~ a very short time it will have positive proof that the airship is ~~xx~~ a reality and not a hoax. I assert this, although I have not yet seen my client's airship. I am convinced that it exists, for I know that the main obstacle, sufficient power, has been overcome and that was all that has stood in the way of aerial navigation for years past." /

GLEANED OVER SAN JOSE. / Several People Saw Lights Moving in the Air Above the City.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 26.—The mysterious airship, according to the statements of many persons of good standing, passed over this city again this evening about 7 o'clock. The lights of the machine alone are alleged to have been seen, but all of the parties who saw these from different quarters agree as to the character and course pursued by the supposed airship.

Robert Shiels, an employe of the San Jose Art Emporium, was on San Carlos street, near Eighth, in the company of two young ladies, when his attention was called to the moving light by persons residing in the neighborhood. Mr. Shiels claims to have previously been skeptical in regard to the airship, but stated positively that he is now satisfied he saw the lights of the machine.

He said he at first saw one light about the size of an ordinary arc electric lamp. He stood still and watched the light moving westerly. It began to lower and then two lights were visible. When it arose again only one light could be seen. The machine, he said, eventually took a southerly course, again displaying two lights which were visible for some time and then disappeared in the distance. George Prasted said he saw the light from the Julian street road about three miles from the city. His description of its size and course agreed with that given by Shiels.

S.S. Farley, proprietor of the Mayverne Creamery, saw one large light moving rapidly westward. A turn south was made when two lights were visible. Mr. Farley's wife, Percy Steeves and a Miss Harris, who are neighbors, were with him at the time the supposed airship and substantiate his statement. (1)

Mrs. E.P. Young, who resides at 328 East San Carlos street, stated that her attention was called to the supposed airship by the son of Mrs. Parkinson, who resides opposite, and who was sent to her house to tell her the airship was passing over the city. She went to the door in company with her daughter and a young lady, a Normal student, and they saw the moving light as stated. Each of these persons is satisfied that the lights they saw were attached to an airship. / LIGHTS IN THE SOUTH. / Several Believe That the Airship Was Over Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Nov. 26.—The now thoroughly famous airship, which has interested so many people in Central California for many days and nights, has apparently passed over the Tehachapi range, and was seen in Southern California last night by at least three persons of excellent reputation for truth and veracity. One of these is George Smith, the bookdealer on Second and Main streets, who insists that he saw the aerial navigator and its lights while on a Pasadena car last night. Others of the passengers, Smith believes, also beheld the remarkable sight. Walter F. Parker, secretary of Mayor Rader, insists that he saw the airship while star-gazing last night, and Robert Kern, the well-known boniface, also adds his testimonial to the general credence of the reports made. None of these gentlemen ever gaze on the vine when it's red, hence their story does not need an affidavit.

It is also reported that Frank Smith, a brakeman on the Santa Barbara local train, saw mysterious lights in the San Fernando Valley last evening. The brakeman concluded that the overhead lights were meteors, and therefore did not communicate with any one on the train about the matter, but the proximity of at least three lights at the same time, moving on parallel lines, impressed him with the idea that the sight was a remarkable one. On relating his observations to a fellow-railroader here to-day, he was reminded of the airship of the bay region. He afterward secured copies of The Call, read up the whole story for the first time, and is now confident that the aerial navigator is what he saw.

A remarkable feature of all the stories is that the lights were all seen at the same time and each individual describes exactly what the others saw, viz.: triple lights dancing in a zigzag way and moving on parallel lines from northwest to southeast and passing over the mountains toward Riverside. / Saw a Bright Light.

PETALUMA, Cal., Nov. 26.—Almost the entire population of Petaluma was on the streets last evening about 7:30 o'clock, watching a distant twinkling, brilliant light moving horizontally and southward as well, which, under telescopic scrutiny, furthered showed what was apparently a dark cigar-shaped body, which evidently carried the light, so, though skeptics are numerous, no doubt Petaluma was treated to a far-away view of the much-talked-of airship.

1896 November 27 (Fri) The Call (San Francisco), p. 14.

Viewed the Airship.

ALAMEDA, Cal., Nov. 26.—During the excitement of the past three evenings over the reported airship the wags have made life miserable for many of the Alamedaans. Monday night Max Gundlach and J.A. Riley, two well-known business men, were upon the street corner with a section of tin-conductor of a gutter-pipe, looking through it and insisting ~~xxxx~~ that they had a telescope and could see the outline of the aerial monster. They refused to allow any one to look into it until they had been paid. Being so well known no one hesitated to pay the price asked. The people taken in refused to divulge the sell to others and so the joke went on indefinitely.

1896 November 27 (Fri) San Francisco Chronicle, p. 6.

(card 1)

THE AIRSHIP HOAX. /

It is not astonishing that so many people who looked at the matter theoretically were deceived by the flying machine hoax. This is an age of such amazing wonders that an interrogation point has been placed at the end of the word impossible. A quarter of a century ago a man who would have prophesied a time when Jones could stand in San Francisco and talk with Smith in Oakland would have been taken care of by his friends. Yet the telephone has made it practicable for Jones to call up Smith in San Diego and converse as long as he pleases without raising his voice. At a time when a roll of wax will carry one's own speech down to posterity long after the speaker has passed beyond these voices, and when the vision can be projected along a single ray of keener light through flesh and blood and wood and stone, what is there in the idea of a flying machine which seems incredible? The only wonder is that man did not invent a means of flight long ago.

Shall the sparrer and swaller / Beat us holler? as Darius Green scornfully queried.

But there is one astonishing thing about the recent or present hoax and that in the case with which people's eyes have deceived them. Scores of reputable men say they have seen the dim shape of an airship in the light of the arc lights on its hull, yet they were plainly fooled by a flying scud of cloud through which the stars shone fitfully. Even Venus and Mars have been pointed out by excited razers as part of the electrical plant of the aerial arroyo. A stray fragment of some broken star from Flammarion's celestial avalanche has been enough to convince thousands that they had seen the rocking side-lights of an outlined vessel as it went surging before the gates of the empyrean. The soberest men "sav things" and swore to them. With a bit of luminous vapor the credulous mind could shape a winged monster of the air that even the spyglass could not betray to the overwrought senses, while the sound of wind in the telegraph wires came to his strained ear as the voice of the sky-pilot yelling orders to his crew.

It was a strange hallucination while it lasted and, indeed, is not over yet. An esteemed contemporary manages to see the thunderbird with in an hour after each day's sunset. But in a day or two even its credulity will lapse and then the star-gazing public will wonder how it could have been so badly tricked by its imagination. Perhaps it may occur to some that it [is] not so surprising after all, when the cynical moderns of San Francisco have been so badly taken in by the phenomena of cloud and star, that the unlettered people of the Black Forest were wont to see serpens and chimeras dire and the poor peasants of France the gracious figures of their embodied saints. Imagination goes a long way to account for miraculous appearances in the mediaeval past when its power over an every-day street crowd of Californians is so manifest.

1896 November 27 (Fri) San Francisco Chronicle, p. 7.

KITE TAKEN FOR AN AIRSHIP. / A. H. Babcock Causes a Little Excitement in Oakland.

OAKLAND, November 26.--A.H. Babcock, an electrician, sent a monster box kite skyward this afternoon, and unintentionally convinced hundreds of people that the airship was a fact. High up in the air it really looked like a pair of small balloons with a car between the two. It attracted instantaneous notice, and so complete was the deception that the members of Babcock's own family gazed at it for a time under the impression that an airship was visiting Oakland. They were not convinced until they were given a change to tug on the line which held the kite.

The kite was in plain view of all the eastern end of the city, and even through a glass looked like an airship. To make the thing appear more real the line parted when the kite was nearly 1000 feet in the air. The kite circled around and then went off toward Fruitvale. It seemed to be lowering as it left the city limits, and the impression was created that it was coming down. Many of those who had been observing it started to follow it up in order to get a closer view. Babcock pursued the runaway kite on his wheel and managed to recover it from some boys near Highland Park. The kite is sixty-seven inches long and consists of two boxes of cloth supported by a stout framework.

1896 November 27 (Fri) San Francisco Chronicle, p. 7. (card 1)

GRISER SMASHES UP HIS AIRSHIP. / YEARS OF TOIL FOR NOTHING. / WAS A MACHINE THAT WOULD NOT FLY. / Recent Reports Were Discouraging to His Hopes and He Abandoned the Scheme. /

OAKLAND, November 26.--The flying machine, which so many Oaklanders have come to regard as a reality, has struck despair deep into the soul of John Griser, an inventive shoemaker, and has induced him to destroy a contrivance upon which he has spent years and years of toil in an endeavor to solve the problem of aerial navigation. John Griser's shop is at 374 Twelfth street. It is tucked away between to tall and more pretentious buildings, but very few people know that Griser lives in squalid quarters because all his spare money has gone for improvements on his flying machine.

As long ago as 1880 Griser cherished the idea of solving the ~~same~~ problem which has baffled the ingenuity of man. He figured and planned on a dozen or more of machines, and finally struck the idea which he thought would win. He commenced the construction of an airship, and piece by piece he got it in shape for trial.

Patience and perseverance were necessary to his success, and he has both qualities in abundance. A score of times he built up a thing of wood and iron, with fan-like wings and unsightly fittings, and a score of times he sent it all to the trash heap. Then, at last, he struck the plans which promised to develop a ship able to do all expected of it. His contrivance was large and awkward. He gave up his sleeping-room back of his shop and placed the thing in readiness for trial. The body of the machine was much like a cone, and four flimsy wings swung from it. Slats, iron rods and canvas were planted upon each other neatly and to stay, and the whole machine, as explained by the enthusiastic owner, seemed able to fly if it but had the chance.

The chance came one morning last July, when Griser and a number of his German friends gathered on Franklin and Thirteenth streets before daybreak to try the invention. There were no people on the streets to inquire or look curious, and the trial was made. Griser took his position in the pecan-shaped boat, and started the treadle which was to furnish the power. The wings swung about obedient to the mechanism, but some of them his the cobblestones and were demolished. The body of the ship wobbled around for a time as it lay across the car tracks, but never gave any sign of leaving ~~the~~ earth.

Again and again John Griser tried his machine. As fast as it broke he would mend it, and apparent defects were rapidly made good. The whole undertaking was a secret for a long time, and then people caught glimpses of the strange object during the early morning hours and waxed curious. They got in the way of going to see the trial flights and then John Griser ceased his endeavors altogether. He stored his wooden bird in a back room and let ~~shams~~ shoes go unsoled to tinker about it.

Time went on, but he could never perfect his contrivance. Then came the story from Sacramento and elsewhere that an airship had been seen. Griser grew disconsolate and looked upon his own creation with suspicion. He satisfied himself that some one had anticipated his dream of triumph, and then he gave up. He marched into his back room the other day and smashed his idol into smithereens. It went to the kindling pile, and now John Griser is back at his bench a wiser, a sadder and a more distrustful man.

1896 November 27 (Fri) (Tacoma) Daily Ledger, p. 4.

WHAT WAS IT? / Wonderful Apparition Seen Over Tacoma.

Tuesday night at about 12 o'clock Mr. and Mrs. St. John saw a peculiar phenomenon in the heavens as they looked out of their window on Tacoma avenue. Mrs. St. John first saw the strange light and called her husband's attention to it. It appeared to be high up in the heavens, east of Mt. Tacoma and moving slowly in a southeasterly direction. They were lying in bed and watched this heavenly stranger a long time. They first saw it through the north window in their room, but after awhile they could see it through a window several feet further south, without having changed their position in bed.

This proves that it must have traveled a long distance during the time they were watching it. Mr. St. John describes it as having the appearance of a brilliant electric searchlight and looked to be nearly the size of an arc electric light. It flashed often and each time sent forth various colored rays of light, shooting out from the center in every direction, like spokes from the hub of a wheel. It seemed to have a wavering motion and moved back and forth in its course through the heavens like a vessel at sea in a storm. He is puzzled to know what it was. The article in the Ledger yesterday morning speaking of an airship in California struck him that possibly this stranger in the heavens might be somewhat related to the California wonder.

1896 November 28 (Sat) Sacramento Bee, p. 1 (1).

STILL THEY COME. / The Air Ship Said to Have Voyaged from Near Oak Park to Arno.

M.A. Bunce, of the Louisiana Tract, called at the Bee office this morning to declare that he had positively seen the air ship last evening. He said that it was about three miles from him at the time and was not more than 100 feet in the air. He declares it had one red and one white light and that he distinctly saw it flapping its wings.

A telegraph message was received by The Bee from Edward McGuirk at Arno to the effect that he, too, saw the air ship last evening and more than that he ~~skxxxx~~ heard voices coming from it.

Next:

Nov. 27 p. 4 eds. A Coincidence Merely. (From the Yreka Journal.)

The report that an air ship was seen to pass over Sacramento ~~was~~ one night last week has caused considerable excitement among residents of that city. A number of people declare they heard voices from the ship. Many theories have been advanced as to what these citizens really saw, and a peculiar feature being that most of those who saw it ship were in the vicinity of a large brewery.

A Rash Assertion. (From Stockton Record.)

Stockton has some people who are known to possess as much veracity as the inhabitants of the Capital City.

And now the Sacramento lover, as he proposes to go moon-gazing with his dear one, whispers "Will you airship with me!"

Nov. 28 p. 1. The Air Ship Heard From--The crew of the air ship has just sent a telephone to the Capitola Tamale Parlors...to prepare the turkey tamales for their refreshment, public invited.

Jan. 7, p. 4: DeForest's model airship.

1896 November 28 (Sat) Sacramento Evening Bee, p. 2. (card 1)

SHIP AT OTHER PLACES. / Some Suggest Our Whisky. Some Take It Seriously. / SAW THE LIGHT; BUT NOT THE FLAPPING WINGS. / In One Town the People Get Mad When You Mention It--Fresno Envious of the Quality of Our Beverage--The Story Spreads Beyond the State's Border. / (From the San Bernardino Sun.)

It seems to be established beyond doubt that a strange visitor of some sort is just now disturbing that part of the heavens which extends over San Francisco and Sacramento and the intervening territory, and even the scoffers at the news as first stated have been forced to admit that the mass of testimony is so great as to put the question of its existence beyond doubt. / Ship Remains to Be Seen, Too. / (From the Grass Valley Tidings.)

Whether the story of the air ship passing over Sacramento was a fake or not remains to be seen. But if it was not it has been the cause of bringing to light many liars who have hitherto been veiled in obscurity, and who have borne good reputations for veracity. / Light? Yes; Ship? No! / (From the Oakland Times.)

The air ship passed over Oakland last evening at 7 o'clock. Plenty of people saw the [] gracefully with the wind, which was from the west. It was probably a thousand feet high, and vanished toward the foothills. / That Danger Has Passed! / (From the San Jose News.)

It is said that there are several men in San Jose who have seen the flying machine, who will not admit it, fearing they may be regarded as eligible candidates for the Keeley cure. /

50
TKI Thinks It a Reportorial Conspiracy. / (From the Stockton Independent.)
It was not the probability that an air ship could be made to travel as the Sacramento story related that was doubted. It was the way the story was written that caused doubts of its correctness. Private information from Sacramento says it was a "hoax" concocted by the other reporters to deceive the Call correspondent who made the most of it. / Had Never Heard of Stockton / (From the Stockton Record.)

Since the alleged embodiment of one of Jules Verne's wildest dream shot across the sky above Sacramento last week, it has been a very easy thing to see an air ship darting through space in the nocturnal watches, and everyone who gives testimony as to its reality is booked as "a reputable citizen." People have even gone so far as to say that the man-made aerolites are being manufactured now and that Stockton has ordered three. If that is the case one of them passed over the city last night, but the engineer evidently did not recognize the place and went on down the valley. Stockton has some people who are known to possess as much veracity as the inhabitants of the Capital City, and they say they saw the air ship last night. / Must be a Hoax Now. / (From the Carson Appeal.)

The Bee's account of the big air ship at first regarded as a hoax is now being written up in all the Bay papers. / If a Fake, a Good One. / (From the Fresno Republican.)

That air ship which twice has swooped down upon the citizens of Sacramento--causing The Bee to inquire in ~~xxxxx~~ largest headline, "Have We Got 'Em Again?"--and which has furtively showed itself to a select number of San Franciscans and Oaklanders, may be a fake, but it bears a more than ordinary amount of the fingermarks of truth for a story of that ~~sax~~ character. If it is a fake, it will take its place among notorious and successful ones. If it is not, a new world opens before mankind. /

Saw Verne, Most Likely. / (From the Alameda Encinal [?].)

Now, in Alameda, last night it was different. Knots of people stood on the streets gazing at a bright light in the east, but could not perceive even the faintest outline of an air ship. The light was too high up for either an electric light or a railroad signal, and opinion was divided as to whether or not it was a star. While we watched the object it remained fixed in one position. / Getting 'Em About It. / (From the Dixon Tribune.)

A few steps further and the party discovered to their utter chagrin and discomfiture that an incandescent street lamp with the bracket that supported it, aided by the falling rain and a background of clouds was responsible for one of the strangest optical delusions that they had ever experienced. The very mention of an air ship is now enough to arouse the ire of a number of our worthy citizens. / Our Fame Spreads. / (From the Deseret Evening News, Salt Lake.)

The supposedly perfect air ship of California, to which considerable attention was given in the press dispatches of Sunday and Monday and of which first mention was made in the News last week, continues to attract much notice. One reason of this is the mysterious night voyages which its builder is said to be making to the astonishment of very many Californians, who declare they see the strange craft, brilliantly illuminated, moving about each evening. Salt Lake City also has one eye-witness to the strange things that have been going on--Mr. Harman, of an eastern merchants' protective agency in this city. He has been to San Francisco, and his account does not differ from ~~sax~~ that told in the News on Saturday evening. / Our Whiskey Complimented. / (From the Fresno Republican.)

The Stockton Mail says that air ships "will be a reality yet." Order your drinks from Sacramento, neighbor, and see if it is not a reality now. /

El Dorado Offers a Solution. / (From the Placerville Republican.)

As the stern was turned toward the Placerville Observatory, something was seen straggling out into the air behind the ship. Professor Miano turned a powerful night glass upon it and as the ship disappeared he discovered that the object was a dead newspaper reporter hanging with a rope around his neck and branded LIAR in big letters across the seat of his pants.

We know how it is, boys, since the campaign is over and rainy weather has set in it is decidedly hard to get news. We feel for you. / Either Way. / (From the Stockton Independent.)

Air ships are becoming as plentiful in these dull and dreary night as fireflies are in June in some countries. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say that ornamental but rather inartistic romancers are becoming more numerous. / A Supersensitive Reporter. / (From the Red Bluff Sentinel.)

It ~~sax~~ is very annoying to the average newspaperer to get track of a good sized item and not be able to run it down, and as the foregoing is altogether second hand we hope our readers will "take it for what 'tis worth" with the understanding that the veracity of the writer thereof is not at stake. While we are perfectly willing to swear by what the gentleman said concerning this aerial what-is-it, we don't ask everybody else to do so. / P.9: Local Notes. /

It is a singular thing that nobody has offered a sane explanation for the light in the sky which has developed so many liars in quarters where their existence was not dreamed. For that a whole lot of people are lying about what they heard and saw there can be no question. But there are hundreds of reasonably truthful citizens of this town who did see this light and did see it move overhead, and did see it disappear. And what they saw was not the evening star, which at present is very luminous and large. This much it is safe enough to admit. The rest of the story about flapping wings and lights of changing hue should be taken with general allowance. N.A. Bunce, of the Louisiana Tract, declares that he saw all this, and Mr. Bunce is a trustworthy man, not only that, but his wife and daughter saw what he did. The only comment which can be made with reference to their version is that they must be mistaken. But why doesn't somebody tell us what it is that these people and hundreds of others did see?

1896 November 28 (Sat) The Call (San Francisco), p. 1. (card 1)

IT FLITTED OVER SAN JOSE. / Aerial Lights Cross the Vision of Prominent Residents. / THEIR APPEARANCE MOST VIVIDLY DESCRIBED. / General Hart Takes Some of His Professional Friends Into His Confidence. / ATTACHES A BALLOON TO THE WARSHIP OF THE AIR. / The Public May Be Given an Aerial View of the Great Mystery of the Day at a Prearranged Time and Place. /

Interest in the great aerial mystery continues without sign of abatement. It still furnishes the main theme of discourse in all circles. Many are ready to make oath and stake all their earthly possessions that a veritable flying-ship has been hovering above the earth in this vicinity, while the scoffers are also in evidence, equally vociferous and insistent.

As yet, however, nothing has transpired that can be accepted as either positive proof or disproof of the existence of an aerial voyager, operated and controlled by human inventive genius.

San Jose has furnished one of the most interesting reports of the mysterious aerial lights that have yet been published. The strange moving illumination was seen there by a number of men of the highest standing in the community, and the description of the phenomenon given by them is both vivid and clear.

General Hart now states that the inventor is a cousin of the electrician of General Antonio Maceo, commander of the patriot forces in Cuba. He also contributes much additional information relative to the reported warship of the air and has promised to intercede with the inventor to have the invention appear at a prearranged time and place for the purpose of gratifying the deep and widespread curiosity of the public. //

PROFESSOR WORCESTER'S EVIDENCE. / The Well-Known San Jose Educator Scrutinizes the Mysterious Flier and Gives the Result of a Care Examination

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 27.--An interesting account of the mysterious moving light which passed over this city Thursday evening, and which is supposed to be attached to an airship, is given by Professor H.B. Worcester, president of the Garden City Business College. Professor Worcester resides with his family in East San Jose. To a Mercury reporter who asked him regarding the strange light, he said:

"There was a small party at my house in East San Jose on Thanksgiving day and dinner was prolonged until about 7 o'clock in the evening. The company then repaired to the front of the house to enjoy some music and I went into the rear yard to get a lantern. I happened to look up and saw several miles away, apparently about over College Park or Santa Clara, a large light moving rapidly toward San Jose. In a second I surmised it was the mysterious light which people had seen and which was supposed to be attached to an airship. In order to call the attention of those in the house to the same I ran around the house to save time and called out that the airship was passing. Everybody rushed out into the front yard.

"Within the time it had taken me to run around the house the light had changed its course from east to southwest and had traveled several miles and was in a line over the southern portion of San Jose. The entire party saw the moving light and saw it go west, then turn south and then change to southeast. We watched the light until it disappeared behind the horizon.

"When the ship turned to the southeast I could distinguish two lights, one behind the other. The single light first seen was about the size of an engine headlight and had more the appearance of a large incandescent light than anything else. It was moving at the rate of from 60 to 100 miles an hour and it was only a few moments before it had disappeared behind the horizon.

"There were three things regarding the light which impressed me, viz.: Its velocity, its regular movement and its apparent intelligent control. The motion of the light would suggest the alternate flapping of wings.

"I have seen many fire-balloons, but the light I saw had none of the characteristics of such a toy. Its velocity was too great for a balloon on such a still night and its movements too regular. The light was about 1500 feet high when first seen and may have continued at that elevation, but it appeared to lower as it disappeared on the horizon."

Professor Worcester stated that his party consisted of Professor H.S. Cross of the University of the Pacific, Mrs. Dr. Allen, Mrs. Colonel Moore, Miss Annie Chase, Harry Worcester and himself. All of these, he said, saw the mysterious light and expressed their belief that it was under intelligent control. Among others who saw the light was a party at Bella Vista, near Alum Rock, composed of Mr. and Mrs. Bert M. Babcock and Mr. and Mrs. Elton.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 27.--John Bawl, a farmer who bears the reputation of being practical and unimaginative, declared that he saw the airship in flight over his residence in East San Jose, on Monroe Street near Franklin, Thursday evening, and though it was moving rapidly and was at a considerable altitude, he was able to plainly distinguish its general outline and most striking features. He describes the great winged ship with vividness and realism. His wife and family corroborate his story.

"I was standing in the rear of my residence about 7 o'clock, or shortly before that," he said, "when my attention was attracted by some bright object in the sky about 150 yards distant, and bearing rapidly toward me from the northwest. I looked at it closely and observed it was lunging from side to side, sometimes swerving sharply to one side, but always maintaining a general southwesterly direction. It occurred to me that this was the famous airship, and I shouted lustily to my family and they all witnessed it as it came over our residence. It was so high up I could form no very definite idea of its size.

"It had a pair of wings which were constantly flapping not from side to side like a bird's, but with more of a forward and downward motion. Beneath it several feet hung a ball of red light which lit up the bottom of the ship and sent its rays far down below it. At the front was a cone-shaped projection which I surmised was a windbreak. The vessel lunged badly and once made a beeline to the west, but regained its course again. It varied in height considerably during the time I watched it. Its speed I judged to be about that of an electric-car doing its best."

Mrs. Bawl tells a similar story of the strange voyager of the air. / NEARING SOLUTION. / General Hart May Give the Public an Aerial Exhibition of the Mystery.

Ex-Attorney-General W.H.H. Hart came a step nearer to disclosing the name of the inventor of the reputed successful airship yesterday. He also gave many new details regarding the marvel, and promised to confer with the inventor with the object of bringing the wonder of the air within the observation of the public at a prearranged time and place.

"Interest in the airship, general," remarked the reporter to the legal captain of the aerial warship, "continues unabated, and the public are anxiously awaiting more definite news in reference to it. They are demanding something more tangible than aerial lights at night."

"I am sorry that I am still unable to tell you all you want to know. I can tell you this, however; The inventor is a cousin of John Linn, the electrician of the Cuban patriot general, Antonio Maceo. Linn is now, of course, in Cuba, but was formerly a resident of Chicago, and is an American citizen. The inventor is not a Californian, but came here, owing to our favorable climate, to make tests of and perfect his machine."

"It is admitted that the power problem is the great one in aerial navigation, and in view of this a detailed description of the Fargo storage battery which you state is to be used on the improved and re-modeled craft would be interesting," suggested the reporter.

"I would be glad to comply with your suggestion, but we have only made application for a patent for this storage battery in this country, and to expose its ~~name~~ composition and construction would interfere with the procurement of foreign patents on it. I reiterate, however, that of my own knowledge I know that the Fargo storage battery has sufficient capacity to furnish power for a flying-ship, if the latter can be constructed to fly at all. This arrangement is different from all other methods that have been heretofore tried. No acids are used at all, and it will store electricity in any amperage and voltage. A 20-horsepower battery to run ten hours can be made to weigh 150 pounds and to run six hours the battery would need to weigh not more than 100 pounds. Tests have been made which prove this. The man who invented the battery is not the man who invented the airship."

"Why not have the inventor, in order to satisfy public curiosity, bring his winged craft over a certain place at a certain time, giving him sufficient latitude for delays and baffling air currents? His programme could be announced through you to the public. He would thus run no risk of identification, nor would his invention be in danger of being exposed. Such an arrangement would be most gratifying to the public, and would, at the same time, most conclusively substantiate all the claims made on his behalf."

"He don't care to submit his invention to the public, and is perfectly indifferent to what the public thinks. I have an arrangement to see him on Monday, however, and will then endeavor to have him carry out the plan. When I last saw him he said he was going south to test his machine in the higher altitudes. He is experimenting on the difference between the heavy atmosphere near the ocean and the lighter air on elevated plains. You see he is preparing to carry out precisely what I have said in reference to Havana. I know he can and will do it, and he is not going to give out a description of his invention until he makes the attempt on Havana. I am quite convinced he will be at Havana within sixty days with one of those ships equipped to do what he says it can do."

"This plan, then, of destroying Havana is a preconceived idea of his?"

"Certainly; and he came out here to work it out. I did not know him before he came to me on this matter, though I know his friends."

"Have you had any applications to sell stock in connection with this invention?"

"No, and there is none to sell. I asked my client if he wanted to sell any stock and he said no. He added that he had all the money he wanted, and did not care to take in any person or organize any company for the present. This was the only thing that gave me the impression that he might be off his pins. He is the first man I have struck of that kind in California. But I am quite convinced that he is not crazy nor a crank. He is thoroughly cool and logical in all he says, and his entire conduct is such as to inspire perfect confidence in his invention and faith in what he says."

In response to an inquiry as to how he looked, General Hart said he has a dark complexion and bears considerable resemblance to Arion, now performing at the Chutes. / HART GETS CONFIDENTIAL. / Discloses New and Important Features of the Aerial Mystery to Professional Friends.

General Hart told a cluster of friends, principally professional men, gathered in the Supreme Court rooms yesterday something more about the airship which his client has in view. "My client says that he has built one airship and has successfully navigated it," said General Hart. "The first ship cost him $15,000. He says that he will now construct a second airship in the locality of Rk Bolinas and that the expense will be $30,000."

"So far as I know, the second ship will resemble the first. I am now willing to make public some more facts concerning the general structure of the ship which has been operated in this locality recently. The sustaining power is supplied from gas tanks, which are in the hull of the vessel and which are connected with the balloon which flies over the airship by a pipe. When the inventor wants to go up higher he lets more gas into the balloon out of the tanks, which are filled with condensed gas."

"When the inventor wants to fly lower he simply opens a valve in the balloon and the contrivance naturally descends, just as an ordinary balloon does. It appears to me that the unsafe part of the whole contrivance is this reliance upon the balloon, which is all that keeps the ship up. If the balloon would fall down would go the ship. For this reason I am frank to say I would not care to take a ride in the airship. Do I believe that the airship actually exists? Why, certainly."

"The inventor says that he has traveled 120 miles in the air in about ~~six~~ six and a half hours, which is a little over twenty miles per hour. His storage battery he uses for power only to propel his airship when he is sailing against the wind. When he is running with the wind or a few points off he needs no power, but naturally drifts, just as a balloon would."

"I believe that four pounds of dynamite thrown vertically downward from the deck of the airship would make terrific havoc among an enemy gathered below the ship. The dynamite throwing could be done most easily by hand. All that would be necessary would be simply to drop it."

"The ~~and~~ condensed gas serves no purpose except to raise the airship. It has nothing to do with propelling it in any other direction."

"It may or may not be possible for my client's airship to sail the air from Key West to Havana. He thinks that it is possible. Whenever he arrives in Cuba his power would be nearly exhausted. Therefore it would be necessary for him to have a Cuban base of power supply. The location may be something like thirty miles from Havana. That would seem to me about the proper distance." / WAS NOT A PLANET. / Observations by a Clever Watcher of the Mysterious Light.

The following communication has been received: Editor Call--Dear Sir: As public attention is at present very much taken up with the recent appearances of a strange light in the heavens here and in neighboring places, I venture to offer one or two observations made by myself personally on the occasion of the appearance of the strange light in the western sky some few nights ago, which attracted so much attention among our citizens. These observations you may take for what you may think them worth, merely prefacing my remarks by saying that in years gone by I made somewhat a study of astronomy, and took quite an interest in the heavenly bodies and their movement.

On the night in question I was one of a group of persons stationed near the edge of the sidewalk in front of the Flood building, southwest corner Fourth and Market streets, watching a strange bright light in the western heavens. At first it seemed to me as though I had sometimes seen the evening star look nearly as large and bright, and so I remarked to a gentleman in my immediate vicinity. But a closer observation seemed to show that it had not the steady and serene rays that mark the light of a planet. It was observed for brief intervals from time to time, and its altitude when I first observed it seemed to negative the idea of any terrestrial obstruction.

I then decided to make a practical test and take the bearings from some fixed object, taking the small building with its turret-like cone that forms a gore at the south side of Eddy street, at its junction with Market, and maintaining my position by a telegraph-pole at the edge of the sidewalk.

The light appeared to be in a straight line from where I stood with a point directly over the aforesaid turret-like roof that crowns the gore at the southwest corner of Eddy and Market streets. I soon observed that the light moved from over the point of the roof in an easterly and northerly direction, until at last it had crossed the path in the sky corresponding to the width of Eddy street, when it disappeared around the corner of the Baldwin Hotel.

The gentleman above referred to observed the same thing, and remarked that by stepping backward he could see it again.

This test proved conclusively to my mind that the light observed was not that of a planet, for if any one ever saw Venus or any other planet travel from the westward in a northeasterly direction he must have observed a phenomenon not recorded in ancient or modern times.

You may insert the above, if you deem it of ~~some~~ sufficient interest, in your valuable paper. / Yours respectfully, Austin R. Reid, / 219 Geary street, City. / MODESTO HAS IT. / Prominent Citizens See What They Believe to Be Lights of the Aerial Destroyer.

MODESTO, Cal., Nov. 27.--Residents in the ~~northern~~ northern part of this city were treated to a sight of what was undoubtedly the flying machine at 10:30 o'clock last night.

RE J.E. Ward, cashier of the First National Bank, discovering what he believed to be the lights of the flying machine, aroused his neighbors, all reputable men, among whom were County Treasurer W.A. Dwyer, Deputy Treasurer W.B. Bell, C.P. Schafer, the bookkeeper of the First National Bank, Armory L.J. Maddux [?] and others. The lights were seen at a considerable height, going in a northwesterly direction toward ~~Stockton~~ Stockton. The lights moved steadily and at an even ~~height~~ height from the ground. / SEEN AT TACOMA. / Sighted Near Mount Tacoma--Vari-Colored Flashes.

TACOMA, Wash., Nov. 27.--The airship phenomenon which has startled San Francisco has appeared here. Several reputable people have observed it. They believe it is an airship and that the inventor has either made two models and set one up in this neighborhood or was taking an evening's pin from California to Puget Sound.

The airship seen here resembles that described by California witnesses in every particular. It possesses the same birdlike shape and moves swiftly with an up and down wavelike motion, varied occasionally by a dart forward and some times in slanting directions.

Last Tuesday night the operator of the airship is believed to have visited and explored the top of Mount Tacoma. Tuesday night Druggist George St. John closed his drugstore on Pacific avenue at 11/30 and went home. He reached his residence on Tacoma avenue fifteen minutes later and soon retired. It was a beautiful moonlight night and the window curtains a few feet away from the bed were left ~~up~~ up.

Just about 12 o'clock Mrs. St. John saw the strange light and called her husband's attention to it. It appeared to be high up in the heavens east of Mount Tacoma and moving in a southeasterly direction. The ~~p.2/~~ distance from Tacoma must have been at least fifty miles. They watched the heavenly stranger over half an hour. They first saw it through a north window in their room, but after a while could see it through a window several feet further south without having changed their positions. This proves that the airship traveled a long distance during the time they were watching it.

Mr. St. John says that vari-colored lights were shot forth in all directions. They were emitted from each end and both sides. Sometimes the light at one end or one side would be cut off. Some of the lights were white, others red, blue and green. These four shades were distinctly visible. When all the lights were shining the aerial monster seemed incased in a brilliant glow, having the appearance of a powerful electric searchlight. The size then seemed to be that of an arc light. It flashed often, sending the various colored rays shooting out from the center in every direction like spokes in the hub of a wheel. Sometimes it had a wavering motion and swayed back and forth in its course through the heavens like a vessel at sea in a storm, but the undulating motion was its chief course, being varied by frequent dartings.

The moonlight was not strong enough to permit a distinct view of Mount Tacoma, but the airship was seen to approach the neighborhood of the mountain at what seemed to be its exact height, and dart hither and thither as if an exploration was in progress.

The supposed airship was still in sight when Mr. and Mrs. St. John became tired of watching it and went to sleep. They spoke of the strange occurrence to many friends next day, but what they had witnessed was not made public until to-day. They have eagerly read accounts of the California airship, and declare that what they saw must have been the same or an exactly similar contrivance.

Hundreds of people are on the lookout here for another appearance of the ~~airship~~ airship. 11/23 S.F. Chronicle, p.11
THAT IMMORTAL PHANTASY / A Small Additional Crop from the Old Field of Airship Yarns. /

C.F. Merrill, agent of the Southern Pacific Co. at Antioch, has seen a "thing" in the air, and writes to tell the Chronicle all about it. He says:

"I don't suppose anyone will object to me having my say about the airship that seems to be creating a lot of excitement around these diggings. Up to last night I was as ready to pooh-pooh this airship business as any one in this State, but I must confess that I have changed my views slightly in favor of the 'thing.' I do not believe fully in the airship itself, but am very much on the fence at present. Here is what I saw last night:

"At 6:50 o'clock last evening my attention was drawn to a bright light directly to the south of the depot. I was sitting at the back of the office at the time, and distinctly saw the steady light in the heavens through the window and almost directly over a lighted lamp. We watched it (I saw we, ~~xxx yxx~~ for there were several of us) moving in a westerly direction. Someone yelled 'airship,' then all was excitement. It passed over the first range of low hills, and was at one time distinctly seen shining below the top of Mount Diablo. We all watched it as it slowly ascended and then disappeared behind Mount Diablo in the direction of Oakland. From actual tests we found that we could not see the brightest star through the window of a lighted room, especially directly over a lighted lamp. Every word of this report of the airship will be verified by S. Cleaves, Nat Cleaves, Thomas Uren, C.E. Sweeney and John Chase, ~~mail carrier.~~"

1896 November 28 (Sat morn) San Francisco Examiner, p. (card 1)

WITH HERE AND THERE A GLEAM OF FAITH. /

If the light seen by the people of the north is attached to a flying machine the inventor need not worry about the wolf. He will realize the aphorism about the predilection of the people of this arc to push a good thing along.--Los Angeles "Express." /

Have you seen the nocturnal flying machine? No? Then you are not in it.--Stockton "Mail."

Well, "seeing is believing," and whenever this phantom ship shall arrive at Los Angeles under the skillful pilotage of some stalwart Vanderdecker from Thompson's Flat or Himshev Ravine, the "Times" will believe the skill of man has conquered the ozone, as it has long since subdued the sea and made the yeasty waves of ocean to be his willing servant. Till then we are content to wait.--Los Angeles "Times." /

And now the aerial monster has been seen sailing over the outskirts of Oakland. The "New Brew" must be a popular brand.--Chico "Enterprise." /

Surely Attorney Collins has done us out of a good thing. The wretch ought to have said in the beginning that the wonderful information which he had to disclose to the world was not true. We all could have enjoyed it in greater comfort and regarded the elaborate newspapers portrayals of it with much more complacency.--Santa Cruz "Penny Press." /

One who is skeptical about the practicability of airships must have had his ideas somewhat upset during the past few days. There is so much accumulated testimony to the effect that an airship has been seen floating over Sacramento, Oakland, San Jose and other points that the story can hardly be an ordinary fake.--Grass Valley "Tidings."

It must be a remarkable quality of liquor kept in Sacramento just now. The ordinary article will assist a man to see snakes, but the capital brand seems to fill the sky with flying machines. Oh, for another Gough.--San Bernardino "Sun." /

The story of the airship has awakened latent California talent in fiction of the Munchausen type, and those who like that kind of literature can now revel in it.--Stockton "Independent." /

If it is a fake, it will take its place among notorious and successful ones. If it is not, a new world opens before mankind.--Fresno "Republican."

A couple of planets shining in the blue overhead and a hot-air balloon with lantern attached, let loose by a practical joker, can do wonders in convincing the intelligent people of two cities that there is an aerial ship whizzing about in the evening sky.--Oakland "Inquirer." L/

The flying machine said to have been seen hovering around the country may be a hoax, but everything points to its genuineness.--San Diego "Vidette."

It is almost incredible that such a sweet as is now on can be created by a newspaper fake--and such a very poor fake as the "Call's" airship story.--Alameda "Argus." /

The men who think they saw an airship passing over Sacramento a few nights ago and heard voices in the heavens ought to change their drinks before it is too late.--Visalia "Times."

Your friend no longer has "wheels in his head": he has "seen an airship."--Danville "Sentinel." /

If that airship is really circling about as its pleasure, can carry a thousand pounds of dynamite as stated, and is intended for use in behalf of the Cuban revolutionists, General Weyler in his palace in Havana will be likely to hearsomething drop before long.--San Jose "Herald."

Let's hope that story about the making of a first-class flying machine isn't a fake. We'll shout for any invention that'll enable folks to travel along Riverside after this mud thaws out.--Stockton (Wash) "Chronicle." /

The airship fake appears to be something like Banquá's ghost, "it will not down." Barnum was quite right when he asserted that "the bigger the humbug the better the American public was pleased."--Reading "Free Press." /

Some believe in the reported airship, while others laugh to scorn any such theory. If the inventor has discovered the way by which navigation of the air can be made his fortune is a certainty and the greatest discovery of the age has been made.--Washington "Press."

The machinery in the heads of a great many of the people in the bay cities is having a great time in turning out all kinds of airship.--Santa Cruz "Record."

California airships are becoming quite numerous in the imagination of a lot of people. After they have worked the minds of the credulous sufficiently they may begin to travel through the atmosphere.--Santa Rosa "Republican." /

The fact that nobody has succeeded in larlating the festive airship will not be accepted as evidence that the gas mechanics on the Pacific Coast are not in excellent working order.--Santa Rosa "Press."

California's wonderful airship must be in the form of an air castle.--Anaconda (Mont.) "Standard."

1896 November 28 (Sat) Daily Humboldt Times (Eureka, Calif.) (cd.)

IS THE MYSTERY SOLVED? / Has the Noted Air-Ship Paid a Visit to Our City. / STORY OF AN INTERESTED PARTY. / On of Eureka's Residents

Claims to be on the Inside--Can It be True? /

The following letter was received at this office on the 25th instant, but the rule of rejecting all unsigned manuscripts forced it to the waste basket. The deep interest taken in the doings of the mysterious air-ship, and particularly the interest Eureka appears to possess in it, leads to a suspension of the rule. Of course the Times cannot vouch for the truth of what follows, but it certainly reads like the honest statement which it purports to be, and we give it as such. It is left to the reader to fix upon the Eureka who is directly interested in this modern marvel. Here is the letter verbatim:
Eureka, Nov. 25th, 1896.

EDITOR TIMES:--An article in your paper this morning is my excuse for this writing. Your correspondent, who signs himself (or herself) "E H H," seems to have written for the purpose of showing your readers that recent newspaper reports, from various cities in this State, of an air-ship are without foundation. Probably he (or she) drew his (or her) conclusions from the fact that such machines have not heretofore had a place in our system of locomotion. Probably the same declarations were made by the same person twenty-five, or even twenty years ago regarding the then unsolved problems of electricity as we understand them today. But it is not my purpose to find fault with the writer's reasoning. I wish simply to throw a light on the absorbing topic, the air-ship; for that it is [an] air-ship which has been seen in operation by so many people I shall briefly demonstrate.

Everyone who reads knows that the scientific and mechanical world is alive with airships theories; that France, England and Germany are vying with the United States in bringing into actual use this long-believed-in vehicle of the air; that men of brains and of wealth everywhere are struggling for first achievements in this new field of invention. In this the men of California are up with their fellows--indeed, I may say, a step or two in advance, for while others are still planning and ~~experimenting~~ perfecting, we have actually solved the problem. Some months ago a small number of men were brought together

(by invitation) in a quiet business office in San Francisco "to examine a certain mechanical contrivance, with the view to promoting its manufacture if found to be feasible--very much in the same manner as any new enterprise is "worked," (Incidentally I may say that wealth had nothing to do with my becoming interested in this enterprise, but that certain facts in my possession, and certain experiences of a kind needed, prompted the invitation which I received.)

It is not necessary now to go into the details of the first or subsequent meetings. A few ~~walk~~ declined to venture, but the company was formed, and the work of construction, which had been carried on to considerable extent by the two men whose idea it was proposed to work out, was pushed forward as rapidly as possible. During the conference stage many things were discussed which it was thought might have a bearing on the outcome. At the first meeting it was decided that the best interests of all concerned would lie in absolute secrecy--so many new and valuable ideas and things as would necessarily enter into a successful air-ship could not be safely trusted to any who might choose to examine or investigate. The wisdom of the first step, which has been more and more apparent as the work progressed, is demonstrated in the fact that the "ship" was launched and made many successful voyages even before the world at large knew that such an undertaking was really underway.

When the organization was effected and in working order it was thought a machine, fully equipped, could be launched by mid-summer at furthest; but many unexpected hinderances had to be met, chief of which was the lighting apparatus, which, for a time, seemed to defy all skill and perseverance. The flight of the ship, the steering, the landing were all tested, except at great elevations, months before the lighting arrangements were completed. This light is described (for I have not seen it except as stated later on) as a wonderful piece of mechanism. The "ship" itself is simple, at least comparatively so. But I am not the historian, and shall not enter into details. That will be done later on, probably in one of the scientific magazines of the day. The pledge of secrecy has not been removed. But so much has been accomplished, and so many people have seen and marveled at the car, or "ship," as it glides solemnly above them--and moreover such wild speculations are indulged in by the credulous and incredulous alike, that I feel justified in thus placing the matter properly before the people, who have a right, at least, to prepare themselves for the many and radical changes soon to come.

The following extract from a letter received from one in charge of the company's affairs at the "depot" is pertinent here:

Works completely. Your suggestion of three coils at the opening makes it perfect. When at 6073 feet elevation yesterday, the after valve stuck, and for a minute thought we should bring up at the moon, but the other coil had the reacting effect you said, and all went well. Went to head of valley, keeping well up until evening, and back to depot by zig-zag course. Used lights with good effect, could see towns and even men far below; 24 hours without sleep. Keep look out. If nothing goes wrong, will come your way 15th or 20th.

I confess a certain amount of excitement on reading the letter from which the above is extracted, for it gives many interesting details of the "ship" and of the voyages already made, but more especially because of the promised visitation from this modern vander. I felt that I must go out and tell the glad news to friends and neighbors, but the pledge to secrecy held me back. So I could only wait and watch. It was a long vigil, for I could not rest until "the 15th or 20th." Would it come by day or night? The uncertainty kept me constantly on the alert. But it came. And none too soon for my nerves. On the evening of Nov 17th, soon after six o'clock, a small white light came out of the cloud and drifted away to the south-southeast. It wavered and paled, and shone again brighter than before--it certainly grew larger, and then disappeared. I was in a feverish state, and must soon have ~~made~~ made some outward demonstration, but suddenly a great white light flashed out from the heavens, almost within hailing distance as it seemed, and moved away toward the west, and finally passed out over the ocean and was lost to my sight.

The airship! Who can for one moment doubt it! And the great white light, in whose perfection I had been instrumental, but whose brilliancy I had not seen before. Well, I did not sleep that night. The dream was realized and I could afford to dissipate--rather, I could not avoid that kind of dissipation. On the evening of the 20th the mysterious visitor came again, but, though I did not expect it, I was not prostrate this time. I did not see the ship, only the light, whose powerful rays seemed to eclipse the dark mass I knew to be above it. Neither did I hear voices or [] from the direction of the passing ship. I am not aware that the ship or its light was seen by any of the people of Eureka, but I know it passed over the city and it will come again.

I withhold my name under the bond of secrecy until the history of the enterprise is made public. If the above, in the interest of truth and progress, would be of interest to young readers, give it to them. If not reject it without fear of offending.

1896 November 28 (Sat) Folsom, Calif., Weekly Telegraph, p. 2.

A Fake. The airship story is rapidly going to pieces. The phenomenon of the heavens that "cleaves the air with pinions like a huge condor" has lost its chief support. The man who made it has melted away, and those who saw it are lying low. Mr. George D. Collins, attorney-at-law, who, according to the Call's story, knew the Oroville millionaire who invented and engineered the wondrous air vessel that was seen as a great light in the heavens now proclaims this marvelous story a plain ordinary fake. When interviewed he said: "Oh, I wonder what the papers are all doing me up in this ridiculous fashion."

for?" "As I the airship Mr. Collins? Well I don't know. I had a pair of reporters waiting on my front steps till four o'clock that morning to see me ascend to the stars or somewhere else, but I didn't ascend, not a bit of it. I never saw the airship and I don't know anything about it. It is true that a man of standing in the community came to me asking to get out a patent on an air machine." 1896 November 28 (Sat) Redwood City, Calif., Times-Gazette, p. 3.

Henry Smith and F. Becker are sincere believers in the airship so minutely described by Attorney Collins of San Francisco, and which is now agitating the minds of scientists. Smith and Becker were out hunting last Sunday night on the marshes back of Flood's pond. Shortly after 10 o'clock their attention was drawn to a brilliant light far up in the sky. Both watched it in vondrous amazement until it passed from view. Their description of the supposed airship agrees precisely with that given by those who saw it as it passed over Sacramento. A large headlight threw out bright rays, above which could be seen a sombre object, cigar-shaped, with ponderous wings. The airship was going at a ~~xxx~~ terrific rate of speed in a southerly direction and took about ten minutes to pass out of sight. Smith and Becker related what they had seen only to a few friends. They are modest young men and have no desire to gain notoriety by their names and photographs appearing in the San Francisco dailies. Incidentally, it might be remarked that both are total abstainers, so that no discredit can be placed upon the story from that source and what they say must be taken as gospel truth.

1896 November 28 (Sat) Woodland (Calif) Daily Democrat, p. 2.

MORE AIRSHIP STORIES. / A Well-Known Lawyer Sees an Electric Light in the Skies. / If It Was a Mechanical Contrivance a Man on the Ground Could Not Have Operated It. /

If the so-called airship is an illusion it is a very clever one, and the man who is manipulating it thoroughly understands his business and is having a great deal of fun at the expense of people who are credulous.

That an unusual light has been seen floating in the atmosphere we do not doubt. Too many people whose veracity and sobriety are above suspicion have seen this light for us to question this fact.

The people of Woodland heard the remarkable story told by Ed Arche and Obe Love. It was fully corroborated by some of the most reliable men in Sacramento.

Friday night, about 10 o'clock, a well-known attorney who does not court any notoriety, and hesitates to make his name public because he does not want to lose his well-earned reputation for sobriety, discerned a bright but unusual light in the skies to the southwest of Woodland, traveling in a southwesterly direction.

The attention of the members of his family was called to to the light, and nearly all the neighbors living close by were also aroused, and saw the phenomenon, if such it may be called.

The attorney's first impression was that it was a group of stars, but he soon became convinced that it was an illumination produced by the agency of electricity, and of that he is now has no doubt, although this must not be construed into an admission that he believes it was an airship.

Of course in estimating the rate of speed at which it was traveling the distance is an important factor. Assuming that it was no farther away than Sacramento, and five or six hundred feet high, it traveled a distance of about twenty-five miles an hour.

All the people who saw the light agree that it was in sight fully an hour, and some fix the time considerably longer. Our informant sat at his window fully that long, but he does not know how long it may have been in the heavens before he discovered it.

He is fully satisfied upon another point. If it was a mechanical contrivance it could not have been manipulated by a person standing on the ground. The electric light can only be accounted for upon the theory that the contrivance was supplied with a storage battery.

About the same hour two officers of the Salvation Army were returning from Knights Landing. They also saw the light and fully corroborate the statements made above.

1896 November 28 (Sat) Silver State (Winnemucca, Nev), p. 3.

The Airship Again. The airship craze is not dead by any means, and the indications at present are not good for its passage into oblivion along with the other fakes that have been sprung on a credulous public. Here in Winnemucca there are a number of believers in the existence of the airship, and about 9 o'clock last night the hill in the vicinity of the courthouse was occupied by an excited throng of men, women and children gazing heavenward at a luminous object in the southern sky. Of course the unbelievers of the crowd declared that what was seen was simply one of the brightest of the planets, but we will venture to say that twenty people can be found in town this morning who will willingly swear that they saw the famous airship and who can give a more vivid description of the winged wonder than has yet been published in any of the faking newspapers of San Francisco.

1896 November 28 (Sat) Tacoma News, p. 4 (eds).

The Tourist of the Air. The California air ship passed over Tacoma on Thursday night. It was a bright but wobbly light far up in the ambient atmosphere, like an arc light with a jag on. The cigar-like superstructure above it and the voices issuing therefrom could be imagined as easily here as in the state of glorious climate. For it doth seem to be an established fact that the air ship was indeed a baldheaded fake.

It is perhaps not surprising that so many Californians were found to testify to the reality of the air ship and the voices, or that a few of them even counted the number of men in the ship, and one conversed with the occupants. No fake is so raw that it does not attract believers. Some actually think they see what is described. Others, who do not wish ever to be left, immediately proclaim that they saw all and a good deal more than is described.

Recall the Post-Intelligencer's fake of Mount Tacoma being in eruption. That was a bold, bald hoax. Yet at once hundreds of people all over the Sound country began to testify their knowledge of the eruption by ocular demonstration, one of the most positive being a Port Townsend preacher of lively imagination and great credulity.

Let some one start a story that he saw Mayor Orr riding a bike on a trolley wire, and many would believe it.

1896 November 29 (Sun) The Call (San Francisco), p. 1. (card 1)

HART'S INVENTOR HAS THREE AERIAL FLIERS. / A Full Statement Made Over the Signature of the Attorney for the Alleged Cuban Filibuster. /

In reference to the airship which has been puzzling and astonishing many of the people of California I will say this:

I have not seen it personally, but have talked with the man who claims to be the inventor. I have spent several hours with him. He has shown me drawings and diagrams of his invention and I am convinced that they are more adapted for the purpose for which he claims them than any other invention making such claims that I have ever seen.

It seems to me that the evidence that The Call has been enterprising enough to collect in reference to this airship, the character of the people who have seen the same, the fact that it moves against the currents of air as well as with them, the fact that it has the power to dart from side to side or forward, ought to convince the people that there is something in the invention.

I asked the gentleman who claims to be the inventor what his desires were in regard to carrying on the business, and he stated that he did not desire any money; that he didn't ask or want any one to invest in it; that he was not a citizen of California, and that he had come here to perfect and test his airship as the climate and currents of air were most suitable to his purpose. He further stated that he had progressed so far since coming to California that California certainly was entitled to the honor of its invention, as it was in quite a crude state when he first came here; that he had two airships already constructed. One, he said, was of large size, capable of carrying three persons, the machinery, the fixtures and 1000 pounds of additional weight, and another that was much smaller, capable of carrying one man, the machinery, fixtures and 500 or 600 pounds of other matter.

He also stated that he was a cousin of Mr. Linn, who was Antonio Maceo's electrician, and that he expected to take it to Cuba for the purpose of aiding in the capture of Havana as soon as he could perfect it and acquaint his associates with the handling of it.

He was a man of dark complexion, dark eyed and about 5 feet 7 inches in height and weighed about 140 pounds. He looks considerably like the gentleman playing the part of Arion, the aerial acrobat, but is a little taller.

He claims to have three assistants with him, all of whom are mechanics; that he uses two kinds of power, gas and electricity; that his lights are sometimes produced by electricity and sometimes by gas, with the aid of reflectors.

He claims to have moved 120 miles at one flight and in a little less than six and a half hours, and at that time was not going wholly with the currents; that he uses electricity for propelling his vessel against the wind, and uses gas largely on going with the air currents. He does this in order to save power.

He proposes to build another airship, and in fact one of the parties interested with him has told me that they are now at work on the third airship, which is to be more commodious and more perfect than the other two, and that it would be so constructed that in the event the machinery got out of order and it should fall into the water it could be used as a boat by detaching a portion of the airship. When this is completed and ready for use the inventor intends to leave California for Cuba.

So far as the electrical power is concerned, the Fargo electric storage battery is of sufficient capacity, as to power and lightness, to furnish the requisite power for aerial navigation, and the inventor proposes to use this power in connection with the other for his operations. The battery can be stored to its full capacity, which is 20 horsepower, in 17 minutes.

I am of the opinion that this airship will be a success, and that its success is far more probable at this time than the Morse telegraph was at the time he first offered the same to the public.

So far as the public is concerned this inventor does not ask anyone to invest in the enterprise. Perhaps this may be evidence of insanity. I will admit that this is the first time to my knowledge that anybody had anything in California in which he did not want anybody to invest money. / (Signed) W W H Hart.

pic: Viewing the Mysterious Aerial Lights From the Dome of the State Capitol.

1896 November 29 (Sun morn) The Call, San Francisco, p. 1.

THREE AIRSHIPS, SAYS HART. / Over His Signature the Attorney Tells of His Client. / THE WHY AND HOW OF THE MYSTIC LIGHTS. / And Again the Brilliant Shafts Are Sighted Speeding Above the Bay Counties. / INTELLIGENT TESTIMONY OF STABLE CITIZENS. / Spectators in Haywards Insist on the Aeronautic Theory--Professor Cross, the Linguist, Adds His Evidence. No one has as yet identified the aerial voyager that is supposed to be displaying the mysterious lights that have shone down startled specters in various parts of the State, but the number of those who have seen what they are ready to swear was an airship is constantly growing larger.

While even many of those who have seen the flitting and gleaming lights are not prepared to declare they are carried by a full-fledged aerial craft they admit they can account in no ordinary way for the phenomenon.

There is, therefore, yet ample room for the mystery to be proved fake, a hallucination or a verity. Meanwhile, and until the mystery is completely solved, The Call will continue to chronicle the news relating to it, taking nothing from nor adding anything to the reports it receives. Whenever definite and conclusive proof, however, is received it will be given freely, fully and fairly, whatever it chances to be.

General Hart received a visit yesterday from one of the men who stated, has been making trips with the mysterious inventor in his aerial vessel. The general declined to give any information of these trips. He stated, however, that this man and another mechanic in the services of the inventor had gone to the workshop of the inventor to assist in the work of completing a third and much improved craft. This remodeled vessel would be completed, he expected, in about a week.

It was to be a great improvement on the two airships already built, and when it has been properly tested was to be at once dispatched for the scene of its deadly purposes (Havana), which was to be overwhelmed with a shower of dynamite. Considerable time will be consumed, according to the statement of General Hart, in making the crew who are to go on the novel expedition familiar with the working of the vessel.

General Hart has contributed a full statement regarding his connection with the reputed warship of the air and tells some new and interesting things therein in regard to it. He also takes up the defense of the Cuban patriots in a most patriotic and martial spirit.

Professor M.S. Cross, dean of the University of the Pacific, now adds his testimony to that of the believers, and Haywards people of prominence tell some additional startling stories. / SEEN BY PROFESSOR CROSS. / The Dean of the University of the Pacific Testifies to the Passage of the Conqueror of the Air.

Professor M.S. Cross, dean of the University of the Pacific and professor of ancient languages, is one of the best-known scholars and linguists in the United States. He is a brother of Senator Cross of this City. He stands very high in the estimation of all students and professors, so that his testimony on the aerial wonder will be received with profound attention. The following telegram, giving his opinion on the subject, was received yesterday:

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 28.--Professor M.S. Cross, dean of the University of the Pacific, confirms the story of the airship's passage over East San Jose Thursday night. Professor Cross is known in this vicinity as a careful and conservative man of impeccable veracity, and his testimony has won scores of doubting Thomases over to a firm belief in the existence of an aerial craft in this vicinity. The fact that the head of a Methodist representative educational institution on this coast has been fortunate enough to view this nocturnal visitor is well nigh silenced the scoffers.

"It was just about 7 o'clock on Thursday evening when my attention was called to the strange light in the air," said Professor Cross. "I was visiting at the residence of Professor Worcester and was called into the yard by him to view the airship. Whether or not it was an airship of course I am not prepared to say, but certain it is there was a rapidly moving light in the heavens far too large and bright to be electric street light. To my eye it appeared to be about six inches in diameter. It was moving in a westerly direction and apparently at a high rate of speed.

"The motion was not steady. It wavered and swerved, rising and falling slightly. The motion, however, was not that of a balloon. I have frequently watched balloons in the air, and the motion of this light was in no way suggestive of the manner in which I have always seen them behave. Moreover, it was a quiet night. A slight breeze there was I think was from the south. Yet this light traveled rapidly in a southerly direction. As it left us the light seemed to broaden. This suggested to us that there might be two lights which as the craft swung broadside to us joined rays and gave the appearance of a wide streak of light."

Professor Cross is confident that it could not be either a balloon or a natural heavenly body that he saw. "I will be very much surprised he declared, "if something more than a balloon is not found to have been floating about. I see nothing very wonderful in the construction of airship. From experiments already made there seems to be every reason to hope for success in aerial navigation."

The point where Professor Cross viewed the ship is about two blocks distant from where John Bawl, whose account appeared in yesterday's Call, saw it, and the two accounts tally precisely in point of time, direction and general movements. The ship was nearer the earth when Bawl viewed it. // PASSED OVER HAYWARDS. / A Mysterious Light Traced From a Canyon of the Palomares Valley.

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 28.--The residents of Haywards are convinced that the peculiar thing, airship or something else, that they have been watching pass over their town on numerous occasions, has its home somewhere among the canyons of Palomares Valley.

To-night the marvelous light was observed in such a manner as to forever set aside the idea that it is a star. Two parties, several miles apart, observed it. To one it was to the eastward and to the other it passed westward. When notes were compared it was agreed that it had passed over between the two observers.

Ed O. Webb, who is known all over the county as a man not prone to make assertions unless he can back them up," informed George Oakes, editor of the Haywards Journal, that he saw the airship traveling through the heavens in the direction of Castro Valley Wednesday evening about 9:30 o'clock. The brilliant light was plainly seen at his home and also by other members of the family.

Fred Hoyt also saw the light as it was floating leisurely along in the direction of the Liedel place, near San Lorenzo. He was so interested in watching the moving object and would no doubt have solved the mystery had he not lost his balance and fallen into a ditch that he did not see was in his path.

Carl Mohr furnishes the most startling information. He told Mr. Oakes that he saw the airship rise from a canyon near his place Thursday evening about 7 o'clock and proceed in the direction of San Francisco, and also saw it return. Mr. Mohr is very positive in his statement, and firmly believes that the machine is being housed near Lone Tree Cemetery.

About the clearest statement yet made regarding the mysterious airship comes from C.S. Long, C.W. Evdrett and M. Liedel, three of the best-known citizens of Haywards, who were crossing the railroad track at the depot in a buggy Tuesday evening, about 6:30 o'clock, when their attention was attracted to an exceedingly bright light in the direction of the bay and they watched it for some time. It was moving very rapidly, and while they could not swear that it was an airship they do not hesitate to say that it completely puzzled them.

"I was going home about 7 o'clock," said Mr. Hoosen, "when I met my brother, who called my attention to a remarkable light in the heavens. At the first glance I could see it was a powerful electric light. It was slightly south of west and was moving steadily across the country toward the bay. I have not been a believer in the published accounts of airships, but must now say that I have seen something that was not natural to the skies.

"The light was not a steady light like a star, but flickered like our arc lights here on the streets, and it looked like one of them some distance away. One peculiar feature of the light was the way it changed from time to time.

"It appears as if the operator of a searchlight was placing red and blue glass before the light occasionally so as to make the light more noticeable to any one who happens to be looking into the heavens. No star has ever done that in the past and I am not ready to believe that one is doing any such capers at present. If this was the first time the lights had been seen here I might not think so much of it, but residents have been seeing a light come from the hills on a number of occasions and make its way across the heavens toward the south. It was only corroboration of these to-night when I saw it."

Editor George A. Oakes was another who saw the visitor to-night from his residence in the northern part of Haywards.

"I saw the light to-night for the first time," said he, "and am sure it was no star or fire balloon. It passed east of town and appeared to go across the bay, as if headed for lower San Francisco. The white light was not steady, and changed to a red occasionally. It is more than I can solve, and must be some one who has finally solved the problem of aerial navigation."

Jesse Hoosen, a student at St. Mary's College, had a good view of the visitor at Haywards to-night.

"I was startled," said he, "on coming along the street to-night to see a very bright light in the heavens. It was like an arc electric light, and, naturally, I stood watching it. The thing was moving toward the southwest with the wind at first, but changed its course several times, and finally came up into the wind for some distance. It finally disappeared over toward Redwood City. The thing seemed to be operated by some one to see how it would answer a helm or guiding apparatus of some kind."

These parties already referred to saw the machine to the eastward. Now comes a story from a man who was evidently on the other side of it.

Steve Morrison of Haywards was in San Ramon, and coming home to-night he saw the aerial visitor in such a manner as to fix its location approximately. "I was driving over the hills from San Ramon," said he, "when I noticed a very bright white light in the sky west of me. It looked like an arc electric light, but was too high in the heavens for that, and then I knew there were no arc lights out in that part of the country. It was a surprise to me and I watched the thing very carefully. I first noticed it as I came up out of one of the small valleys and could see it move about until I went into another. It is possible that the thing, whatever it may be, is being kept up here somewhere. I know of only one place where it would be possible for an airship to be worked out, and I can hardly believe that even there the material could have been taken in without exciting some suspicion. James Spiers, of the firm of Hinckley Spiers & Hayes of San Francisco, resides out in the Palomares Canyon, and is quite an inventor. His sons are great students also, and it might be that they have been at work on something of this kind, and have succeeded in getting a ship that will really travel through the air.

Marshal Ramage of Haywards tells a story which may result in clearing up the mystery of the affair. "It has seemed very strange that this mysterious light should be seen in this vicinity so often. It is possible that the thing, whatever it may be, is being kept up here somewhere. I know of only one place where it would be possible for an airship to be worked out, and I can hardly believe that even there the material could have been taken in without exciting some suspicion. James Spiers, of the firm of Hinckley Spiers & Hayes of San Francisco, resides out in the Palomares Canyon, and is quite an inventor. His sons are great students also, and it might be that they have been at work on something of this kind, and have succeeded in getting a ship that will really travel through the air.

"I recently had a talk with a man who worked for them this summer, and he told me that a new trail had been constructed from the house up to the table land near the crest of the hill and in a canyon. I know the place, and it is hidden entirely from view and would be an ideal place for such work.

"I asked him what the trail was being constructed for, and he said he asked the same question and was told that all that was required of him was to do the work and not worry about what it was for. After this he completed the work without further questioning. He does not know to this day what the trail was built for, and I know of no one who has ever been on the place or on the new trail."

An interesting story was told by W.H. Warren in Crane's story on Thirteenth street. Warren is engaged in the chicken business above the Zelle place. According to his statement he has succeeded in inventing a machine that he states he made a trip in, reaching the height of 100 feet. This took place at San Pedro not over a month or so ago. He is quite a young man and a clever machinist. He has a complete working model capable of carrying one man. It is made in the shape of a cigar, with a round head, and built of a light frame covered with tin and fitted with wings, and a tail like a fan. The machinery is worked with gasoline. A trial trip was made and was a success.

The inventor objects to exhibiting his machine, as he has not yet secured his patent on it. He says he secured his idea from watching the flight of the seagull. The machine is now in San Francisco. He has not yet used electricity, but admits that it would be a great improvement.

George E. Tom Toynne, who interviewed Warren for the Haywards Journal, said to-night that Warren had a partner whom he had sent to Croville to see if he could learn anything of the plans of the new airship for the purpose of comparison.

HART AROUSED. / His Martial Spirit and Patriotism Expressed With the Ardor of a Soldier. /

All of General Hart's martial ardor and spirit of liberty was aroused when he read the editorial in the Bulletin of Friday evening which called him to task for being a party to the proposed use of dynamite for the purpose of destroying Havana. The article in question reads as follows:

A man of former prominence in this State is announced through a paper of standing as the agent or attorney of a man who proposes to destroy the city of Havana with dynamite. In apparent unconsciousness of the horror with which dynamite plots are regarded in all parts of the civilized world this degenerate invites a subscription of $10,000,000 to furnish the means by which a rich, populous and beautiful city may be destroyed.

At a time when the world is devising ways to prevent wars with their inevitable consequences, this man, whom the people once honored with their votes for a high public office, plans a scheme by which the horrors of war may be increased a hundred fold. Whether or not the plan is practicable does not matter. It tends to familiarize the public mind with methods of destruction that have been considered too horrible to contemplate. Assassination is a playful manifestation of hate compared to this plan of wholesale murder. And all for what? It is not proposed to do evil that good may come of it. It is not proposed to offer a sacrifice of lives in a forlorn hope to promote a righteous cause.

The assassins of tyrants have been in darker periods represented as acting under a delusion that robbed assassination of its infamy. But this California lawyer, this man who was at one time the head of the Department of Justice for this great State, now proposes to make murder a speculation. For a sum of money he proposes to destroy the capital city of the most populous island in the West Indies. This proposition is made without any seeming sense of its monstrosity. It is discussed with the same disregard of moral sense the hired bravo exhibits when asked to name his price for murder.

It is no wonder that an eminent clergyman said in his Thanksgiving discourse that California is noted for the startling irregularity with which society advances. If this eminent clergyman had seriously considered the dynamite proposition he might have added that California is also noted for the startling irregularity with which civilization leaps backward into the dark ages. The fact that a proposition of this nature could be placed before the people of this State is a reflection upon our civilization. The least measure of punishment that could be anticipated from a self-respecting community would be a protest that would make the State an impossible place of residence both for the originator of the infamous proposition and for the agents of dissemination.

That law and journalism should have combined to make the destruction of great cities a legitimate speculation is much to be regretted. It is the province of law to teach how evils may be remedied through the exercise of reason. It is the province of journalism to show how society may lawfully protect itself from all kinds of desperadoes and anarchists. But in this case a lawyer uses a newspaper to familiarize the public mind with a scheme that an average jailbird could not contemplate without horror.

The day for the promulgation of this project was badly chosen. It was a day when peace and good will were being invoked in public meetings and private residences. The churches were open that the people might be taught the blessing of peace and charity. In public halls all through the city the poor were invited to partake of the cheer of the season. On such a day the conscience of the people was startled by a proposition to wipe a great city off the face of the earth in consideration of the sum of $10,000,000.

Commenting thereon yesterday he said:

"My attention has been called to the editorial in the Bulletin of last night. All I have got to say in reference to it is that the destruction of Havana by dynamite is not half as horrible as the press dispatches of the butcheries of Cubans by the Spanish authorities.

"Of course, in the event that Havana was to be attacked by the airship with dynamite sufficient time would be given for non-combatants to leave the city.

"The apathy shown by the Government of the United States in extending belligerent rights to the Cubans, in view of the atrocities of the Spaniards toward the Cubans and American citizens, is such that it is not to be wondered at that the genius of American invention should discover a means whereby justice can be done to those heroes who are fighting for independence against the oligarchy of Spain.

"For my part, I consider it far more noble to aid a struggling people like the Cubans, who are trying to free themselves from the oppressions of Spain, even though by dynamite, than to be silent and say nothing and practically wink at the atrocities shown the Cubans by the Spanish authorities.

"In the event that it should become necessary to capture Havana, either with artillery or dynamite, it would no doubt be horrible for those who are located in that city. But at the same time if it is necessary to destroy Havana in order that the Cubans may gain their liberty Havana will be destroyed. And, notwithstanding the Bulletin, I predict that within ninety days Havana will be destroyed unless it surrenders to the Cuban forces.

"It appears that the Bulletin is greatly afraid of dynamite, yet we all know that the Government of the United States has been experimenting with dynamite guns for months, and, in fact, they have reached such a point of perfection that it is proposed to use it in guns for harbor defenses in the United States.

"Does the editor of the Bulletin think it is proper for the United States to throw a few hundred pounds of dynamite at some foreign vessel and sink her or blow her up and kill or maim those on board, and that such an act is not proper for the Cubans, who are fighting for liberty? We would simply be trying to keep a vessel out of one of our harbors, while the people of Cuba are fighting for the most precious boon of mankind. I submit that it would be more proper for the Cubans to use dynamite than for the United States to destroy a foreign vessel with a dynamite gun.

"In the event, as I have heretofore stated, that the airship should be used for military purposes in and around Havana it would be better to have a base of operations within thirty or forty miles of Havana.

"There is no doubt that Maceo would throw dynamite into Havana giving them ample notice of that purpose. But suppose that he should give such a notice it is quite evident that the Spanish authorities would pay no attention to it. They would simply remain there and doubt the feasibility of the airship and the horrors of dynamite until they actually felt it. Therefore it seems to me that if the Bulletin would use a little more force in trying to persuade the Government to recognize the belligerent rights of Cuba it might save itself the horror of hearing that a few hundred people had been destroyed by dynamite.

"It seems to be the American policy of late to permit all kinds of atrocities and to permit its citizens to be trampled upon in foreign countries without making more than a mere protest. As an American citizen who has known something of the horrors of war I protest against such a policy, and for one say that it is necessary for the Cubans to begin using dynamite. The sooner they use it the better it will be for Cuba and American civilization.

"Certainly the generalship shown by Antonio Maceo and his associates and the fact that the part of the island of which they have control has opened free schools on the system of the public schools of the United States convince me that Maceo would be warranted in us in anything that God has created or man invented to give the people of Cuba their political rights and freedom."

The attention of the Examiner has also been attracted to the Bulletin's editorials, and it comments thereon yesterday as follows:

An evening contemporary gravely criticizes an ex-Attorney-General Hart for his scheme to destroy Havana with dynamite dropped from a cruiser of the air. The scheme is rather blood-curdling, considered a practical warfare, but it is extremely interesting from the point of view of romance. The romantic quality is highly developed in General Hart. Personally he would not hurt a fly. He never did hurt one, as far as known. But he received his nomination to office as a hero accustomed to revel in carnage on ensanguined battlefields.

What more natural than that his mind should dwell on new deeds, even gorier than those whose narration gave him his fame! The exercise will please him, and it will do nobody any harm.

We can think of no one better qualified to be the custodian of an airship than General Hart. Our evening contemporary is wrong to chide him for the use he proposes to make of his charge. The more exciting he can make its programme the more gaily of the gayety of the commonwealth will be promoted. A reference to the airship was medicine that soothed even "California's" gloom on Thanksgiving night.

To this the Bulletin in its editorial columns last night rejoined as follows:

The Examiner gently chides the Bulletin for having taken the proposition to destroy Havana by means of an airship seriously. The scheme our contemporary admits to be rather blood-curdling, but is considered interesting from a romantic point of view. It is not supposed that military authorities have been greatly disturbed by the menace of the airship. In fact General Weyler is more intent upon defending Havana from the insurgent forces than from the California general who derives his title from a civil office. But there are lots of people in the world who do not weigh either men or proportions scientifically. They take a man seriously if he takes himself seriously. It is not likely that California has heard the last of this dynamite scheme. It will be dilated upon as illustrating the characteristics of our people. The romance of the proposition will be visible indistinctly, if at all, through the smoke of a series of dynamite explosions.

People are now curiously awaiting further developments in this paper warfare, with sympathy leaning toward the side of the Cuban advocate and defender.

SAW IT FROM THE DOME. / Graphic Story Told by George Scott, Assistant to the Secretary of State.

George Scott, assistant to Secretary of State Brown, was at Sacramento on the night of the first reported visit of the aerial wonder to that city. He gives a graphic account of what he witnessed.

"Three friends and myself were standing in front of the Capitol," he said, "when the strange light first met our gaze. I said that I saw the light moving in the southeastern part of the city toward the northwest, but some one in the group ridiculed the idea.

"He said it looked like a light in some distant house on the hills and that the appearance of its moving was due to the mistiness of the atmosphere.

"I had the key of the buildings in my pocket and suggested that we go up into the dome and take a look at the phenomenon. We climbed up and there saw the lights very distinctly, sweeping across the sky toward the northwest. There were three of the lights, and they appeared to be attached to some body, of which we could only discern a dim outline.

"It's no use trying to tell me that there is no airship," he sententiously concluded.

WAS NOT STARS. / Attorney Hurst of Woodland Satisfied Himself as to a Strange Light.

WOODLAND, Cal., Nov. 28.—N.D. Hurst, a well-known lawyer of this city, discerned a bright and unusual light in the skies about 10 o'clock last night, traveling in a southwesterly direction from Woodland. Nearly all Mr. Hurst's neighbors also witnessed the phenomenon. Their first impression was that the mysterious light was a group of stars, but closer observation convinced them that this was wrong. The lights appeared to be electric and were watched for an hour.

Mr. Hurst is fully satisfied that if the mysterious object was a mechanical contrivance it could not have been operated by a person on the ground. He watched it upward of an hour from a window in his home. He does not pretend to say that it was an airship, but insists that it was not stars. Two Salvation Army officers, who were driving from Knights Landing to Woodland, corroborate Mr. Hurst. / Heard Them Talk.

UKIAH, Cal., Nov. 28.—E.G. Case, grand chief ranger of the Ancient Order of Foresters of the Pacific Jurisdiction, and William Held, official stenographer of the local Superior Court, left this afternoon for Potter Valley, a small town twenty miles north of this city.

A telephone message was received from Held at 7:30 o'clock tonight containing the startling information that they had seen an airship when within two miles of their destination. The two gentlemen were driving along in a double team when the airship passed so close to them that their horses were frightened.

The gentlemen distinctly saw the aerial wonder. It was cigar-shaped and was evidently suspended from a balloon.

1896 November 29 (Sun) San Francisco Chronicle, p. 28.

STILL ANOTHER INVENTOR. / THIS TIME IT IS A HAYWARDS MAN. / Says He Has Solved the Airship Problem, and Takes a Ride.

Oakland Branch Office of the "Chronicle." / 950 Broadway, corner 9th St. OAKLAND, November 28.—The people of Haywards, in common with the rest of the residents of Alameda county, have been taking great interest in the much-talked-of airship. Their interest has been intensified now by the discovery in their midst of an airship inventor, and one, moreover, who says he has built a flying machine that will actually fly.

W. H. Warren is the name of this ingenious person. He derives his income that enables him to carry on his scientific work from a chicken ranch.

About a month ago Warren completed a working model, capable of carrying one man, and took it down to San Pedro for the purpose of testing its practical value. In speaking of this trial trip he expresses himself as being satisfied that he has solved the problem of aerial navigation. He made the trial himself and found that he had perfect control over his machine. According to this statement he rose to the height of 100 feet and at that elevation maneuvered his invention in every direction.

The model is made in the shape of a cigar with a round head, being lightly constructed and furnished with wings and a tail like a fan. Gasoline is the motive power, but the inventor says he will use electricity in the larger model now in course of construction. He got his ideas from watching the flight of a sea gull. The model is now in San Francisco, where it will remain until the inventor has perfected his product of ingenuity by patent rights.

1896 November 29 (Sun) Daily Humboldt Times (Eureka, Calif.), p. 4.

Has It Visited Arcata? / A Strange Light Observed by Residents of That Place. / Was It the Airship?

The following letter was received last evening from a gentleman, whose truthfulness cannot be questioned:

EDITOR TIMES:—A high school student, several days ago, about half-past 6 o'clock in the morning, saw near the horizon, in a direction a little north of west from Arcata, a strange, large, bright light.

He went to school as usual. Another high school student who lives near Mad river had seen a light about the same hour, in the same place, and commented on it to the first mentioned schoolmate. Strange coincidence, don't you think?

Yours respectfully, etc.,
MIKROS.
Arcata, Nov. 28, 1896.

Nov. 25 p. 1.—SF daft over araps--5 balloons sent up & newspapers deluged with reports.

BUILT AN AIR SHIP. / A Haywards Chicken Rancher as an Inventor.
OAKLAND, November 28.—W.H. Warren, a chicken rancher of Haywards, has come forward as a claimant for airship honors. He says that he has invented and airship capable of carrying one man and is satisfied that he has solved the problem of aerial navigation. He says he made a trial trip recently and had perfect control over his machine. He rose to a height of one hundred feet and maneuvered the machine in every direction. The machine is cigar shaped and is furnished with wings and a tail. The motive power is gasoline, but the inventor says he will use electricity. He got his idea from watching sea gulls fly.

Dispatches from Los Angeles last night state that the strange lights have been seen in the neighborhood for the past few days. General Hart had something further to say yesterday on the use of dynamite in war.

HART'S ROUTE CONFIRMED / Aerial Lights Seen Flitting in San Fernando Valley. / SIMILAR PHENOMENON SEEN IN ALAMEDA. / Brief Review of the Remarkable Developments of the Past Week. / SAGE REFLECTIONS MADE BY MAYOR DAVIE. / Sees No Cause for Surprise in the Claim that Aerial Navigation Is Possible. /

It is now about ten days since the first report regarding the elusive and mysterious aerial lights came from Sacramento. Since then developments in reference to them have been rapid and sensational, but mystery still surrounds the object and the human agency that are said to be responsible for their appearance.

At this time the history of the myth, phenomenon, airship or whatever it may prove to be, will bear a brief review. This is given that the readers of The Call may the more readily and intelligently grasp the present situation.

Incredulity, deep and general, greeted the first report which credited the lights to an aerial voyager. Next it was announced that George D. Collins, an attorney of this City, was the legal representative of the inventor and manipulator of the wonder of the starlit sky. This honor Mr. Collins did not disavow, but was unconquerably obdurate when it came to a question of disclosing the name of his client, the location where the marvel was put together, or the place where it found exemption from the eyes of the curious.

The knowledge that this interesting information was lodged in his legal custody caused him to be besieged by newspaper reporters, speculators, investors, x-rays and a horde of curiosity-seekers. Under the pressure thus put upon his time and patience, he made numerous statements relative to the matter that was absorbing public attention and his connection therewith.

Unfortunately these statements, as published in the various newspapers, did not fit together quite as accurately as a scientifically constructed edifice should. Among other things he allowed it to be inferred that a Dr. E.H. Benjamin had aided in the construction of the invention.

Meanwhile reports continued to come to hand daily of strange and luminous visions. Men well and most favorably known in scientific, official, professional, business and educational circles claimed to have seen these nocturnal visitations of moving lights at great altitudes. None, however, appear to have secured a clear view of the body to which it was supposed these aerial lights were attached, though most observers of the phenomenon stood ready to assert that they were gaid in their course athwart the horizon by human power. Sacramento, Oakland and San Jose furnished the most frequent and startling descriptions of the mystery.

Suddenly came the news that ex-Attorney-General W.H.H. Hart had been substituted for Mr. Collins as the legal custodian of the secrets and destinies of the reputed airship.

This was followed by the announcement, on the authority of General Hart, that the airship mystery was only incidental to a full-fledged and extraordinary filibustering scheme for the capture or destruction of Havana, the stronghold of the Spanish authorities in Cuba, by the use of dynamite. He further informed the startled public that the aerial warship to be used in this enterprise would be designed to carry half a ton of dynamite, in addition to its necessary appurtenances and crew. He also, over his own signature, averred that two airships were now in readiness to sail the ethereal blue, and that another, on modified and improved plans, was in course of construction

As soon as this last-mentioned craft was completed and the crew made thoroughly acquainted with its handling it was to take flight, he said, into Havana, there to aid the Cubans in their struggle for independence.

For his advocacy of the use of dynamite General Hart was taken to task by the Bulletin, which was tentatively abetted by the Examiner. This attack elicited a spirited and martial-toned rejoinder. The fear in the public mind now is that the scene of war may be transferred from the carnage-stained fields of Cuba to the unoffending columns of the local newspaper.

Shortly after the name of Dr. E.H. Benjamin appeared in connection with the mystery of the air he disappeared from his lodgings at 633 Ellis street, where he had lived for two years, leaving nothing more than a carefully locked trunk behind. Yesterday morning he called for his baggage and then "flew the coop," as the detectives phrase it, leaving no extrace as to his future movements, but on the contrary taking precautions to cover his tracks.

Saturday night reputable people of Alameda aver that they saw the floating lights, and an electrician states it bore all the characteristics of an electric light.

Anderson, a town about ten miles south of Redding, lays claim to the honor of a visit from the aerial nondescript on Saturday night.

"In the event that an airship could be made to destroy a city," he said, "that in itself would firmly establish the peace of the civilized world. It would be realized that it would be no use to fight against such means. The very fact that such a thing could be done would bring about universal peace. The result would be that the nations would resort to arbitration in all matters of international differences. It would no longer be a matter who has the biggest cannon and who can shoot the farthest. There would be no use for navies or fortification and thus would be brought about absolute peace."

He also took occasion to explain that the 120-mile flight referred to in yesterday's Call was made with the larger airship. The smaller one, he added, is capable of moving much more rapidly. By going with the atmospheric currents and using the electric power at the same time he claimed, it can attain a speed of forty to fifty miles an hour.

One point that has been noticed is that Attorney Hart intimated several days ago that the course of the airship would be southerly and dispatches confirmatory of this were last night received from Los Angeles. /

OVER ALAMEDA. / The Mysterious Lights Made Their Appearance on Saturday Night Last.

Alameda had another spell of excitement over the airship on Saturday night, when the mysterious light that has been puzzling residents of the towns about the bay made its appearance over the southern portion of the Encinal city.

Shortly after dark the family of a gentleman living at Versailles station, while observing the heavens from the southern windows of the house saw a big white light suddenly appear high in the air about over Bay Farm Island. It seemed to flare out in a second as though something that had obscured it had suddenly been removed. All watched with breathless interest while it rose, passing rapidly westward meanwhile to a greater height, where it seemed to pause for an instant. It then turned toward the south and passed on in that direction.

It appeared about the size of a man's head when first seen, but grew smaller and smaller until it passed out of sight. The time elapsed between the first appearance and the disappearance was about twenty minutes, and all agreed that it seemed to lurch from side to side as it went southward.

A gentleman visiting at the house, who has had considerable to do with electric light power, and who saw the aerial mystery, is convinced that it could have been nothing else than an electric light of great power. /

ANDERSON IN LINE. / Her Citizens Claim to Have Seen the Aerial Mystery in Its Flight.

REDDING, Cal., Nov. 29.—Anderson, located about ten miles south of Redding, is either in line with other cities of the coast or else her citizens have the same "night owl" proclivities, for it is current talk that the aerial monster passed over Anderson last evening about 20 minutes past 8. Her citizens claim to have seen the stranger in its flight.

It was first observed from the corner of East Center and Ferry streets by a reputable citizen noticing a peculiar light in the westward. He called the attention of others to the seeming phenomenon, and quite a crowd collected. It was generally conceded that this must be the long-talked-of airship. Its course was south and west, and the lights soon disappeared in the south. The light was large and brilliant and seemed to move in a steady course. /

AN ORAL REVERIE. / Mayor Davie Says Some Pointed Things About a Current Topic of Interest.

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 29.—Mayor Davie has seen a phase of human inconsistency during the past week that has amused him. It is best told in his own words:

"Whether there be an airship cruising nightly over this neighborhood," said his honor to a little group of friends yesterday, "is only a secondary matter with me at this time. If there be not one now, I am convinced that the problem of aerial navigation will soon be solved. What is now interesting me is the peculiarities of some newspapers and some newspaper readers.

"Early Sunday, as you all know, we find on our doorsteps small libraries which are called daily newspapers. We look through them and find that a good portion of them is occupied with the marvelous things that scientists perfect and prophesy. During the past few months this has been more the case than ever before. The newspapers publish all these things as facts, profess to believe them, and the majority of their readers accept them as truth. Being somewhat of a scientist myself, I am led to believe in many things that now appear improbable. But I have a precedent for it.

"A year ago if any one had told me that they could produce a ray of light that would photograph my watch through a wooden box would I have been called an ass for doubting him? Yet I have seen this very thing done. We have all read of the progress of aeronautics, and yet when a thousand reputable citizens declare that they have seen some kind of a machine navigating the skies, and believe their eyesight as proof that some one has done what the newspapers have told us for years is only a matter of time, most of those papers try to make us believe that they have been fooling us with their probabilities, and that their stories of scientific prophecies are all fool stories.

"Several years ago there was an old inventor named Dr. Seering who lived in this city. One day I heard a conversation between him and the late Walter Blair, who build the Piedmont cable road. Seering told Blair not to think of putting his fortune into an expensive trench in the ground as in a short time electric-cars would be running all over Oakland. Blair laughed at the idea, put his trench in the ground and put his fortune into it, and electricity was substituted on his system faster the road had been sold by the Sheriff. Dr. Seering fell dead on the street here about two years ago, but a few weeks before his death he told me that with aluminum and electricity and airship would soon be a certainty. I don't say this as proof that there is a successful airship now in use, but I will say that if I were to read in to-morrow's paper absolute proof that one has been constructed, I should not be any more surprised than Walter Blair was after he saw his mistake' / SOUTH OF TEHACHAPI. / The Aerial Wonder Appears to the People of San Fernando Valley.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Nov. 29.--The operator of the California airship seems to find the climatic conditions south of Tehachapi very favorable for the evolutions of his bird-like machine.

Persons whose occupations keep them up late into the night relate experiences of having seen strange and peculiar lights during the past three nights moving about near the summit of the mountains or crossing the valleys at a rapid rate.

These visitations have heretofore been witnessed by only a few persons, but tonight scores of residents of East Los Angeles saw the flitting light in the direction of Pasadena moving along the foothills toward Santa Monica.

A Call correspondent took great pains this evening to verify the reports about the lights, and is now thoroughly satisfied that some very unusual spectacle was seen by a large number of persons, all of whom gave substantially the same description of what they saw, and there can no longer be any question but that some figure of huge outline and carrying a light has been seen in the San Fernando Valley and along the foothills extending from the valley to Santa Monica.

Motorman Millsap of the Downey avenue car line, which runs into East Los Angeles, gave the best description among the many interviewed. He is quite sure that what he saw is an aerial machine operated by a human being.

p.6: AN AERIAL ELOPEMENT. /
 Come fly with me, my aeroplane / Is tugging at its anchor chain;
 We'll slip our cable, mount, and feel / The old world drop below our keel,
 Come fly with me, my airship waits / With wings a-flutter at your gates;
 While deep in night this planet gropes / We'll climb the upper stellar slopes.
 Come fly with me beneath the arch / Of swelling blue we'll join the arch--
 The stately constellations dance, / Down thru the heaven's wide expanse.
 Come fly w me, sweet to our ears / Will come the music of the spheres
 Then yonder solar system jars / In the aria of the stars.
 Come fly w me, my love, we'll stray / Along the misty Milky-Way;
 We'll speed around the cycle track / Where wheels the whirling zodiac.
 Come fly w me, we'll chase the Bear / And Ursa Minor to his lair;
 We'll drag bull Taurus from his pen / And beard old Leo in his den.
 Come fly w me o'er starry seas, / We'll sail among the Pleiades.
 We'll tempt the astral gales that blow / Loud in old Saturn's beard of snow
 Come fly w me, we'll soar and sail / Up where the comet whisks his tail;
 We'll take in Venus as we move / Along, and meet the Queen of Love.
 Come fly w me, away we'll bound / Where distant Neptune goes his round,
 Where Jupiter in glory turns / Where Mars, the ruddy war-star, burns
 Come fly w me, out in the voids / We'll chase the fleets of asteroids;
 An airy race away we'll skip / With Arctus Navis--skyeey ship.
 Come fly w me, we'll take a run / Around some mighty central sun,
 And orb among the rolling spheres / Throughout the long sidereal years.
 Come fly w me, my aeroplane / With wings as-spread tugs at her chain.
 We'll slip or lince, spring up and feel / The old world drop below our keel.
 1896 November 30 (Mon) San Francisco Examiner, p. 6.

This Ought to Settle It. / From the Hanford "Sentinel."
 Last night when the sullen black clouds of Jove were rolling in chaotic gloom and the storm king's wand was sweeping the heavenly vistas in an effort to command "peace be still": when the whirling winds had parted and rifted the murky elements into billowy columns and the luminary of night had cast his silvery sheen upon the valley from over siddy Sawtooth's massive brow; when earth's fire-sides were still and the lamps had ceased to flicker over the dreamy pages of the student; when the dogs were off their watch and the whip-poor-will was picking its teeth with a blackberry brier, Will Matthevson and Mont Hornbeck, two reputable and trusted young men of Hanford, whose antecedents are substantially correct and whose reputations for truth and veracity are fully 16 to 1, witness and give testimony that they saw a great light at an angle of forty-five degrees in the heavens.
 The light was not a bull's-eye lantern, because it was too low down; it was not a Roman candle, because the Romans are not in it now days; it was not a comet, because it had no tail; it was not a meteor, because it didn't meet anybody; it was not an electric light, because Lacey don't do business that high up; it must have been an airship because it was not in the water. The light was surrounded by a halo, the prismatic beams of which so dazzled the eyes of the beholders that the true form of the ship was obscured, but amid the blaze of glory could be seen the outline of its massive wings as they rapid strokes carried it through space at a rapid rate. . . . There is a plan on foot to snare it next time it crosses this way.
 1896 November 30 (Mon) (Bakersfield) Californian, p. 4.

THE AIRSHIP. / Bakersfield People Who Are Sure They Saw It.
 Pon the air all boundless and underless ve glide.
 Up, up amid the stars, sweeping the clouds aside.
 Look up, look up, you suckers below and wonder there.

Dazzling your brains to know what in thunder we are. (Frazzling!) Thus sing the airship sailors as they stand on the deck of their wonderful ship in its nightly voyages through the heavens over Bakersfield and the surrounding country.

There are many here who declare as no more a josh--not this song, but seeing the airship. Now comes C. J. A. Hughes, of Hughes drug store, and declares that he saw something set against the western horizon early (Friday) evening that was very surprising, to say the least of it--very unusual to say more. It looked like a great moving, white looking length, similar in appearance to a street electric light. Mrs. Hughes also saw it and also a young man living with the family. It was not very high, and it was moving slowly toward the south. Mrs. Mahan Webster, at the Land Company, avers that on Thanksgiving evening as she and her husband were driving home from Poso, they also saw a wonder in the heavens. It showed blue and white lights. They looked at it through a telescope, and it appeared to be balloon like in its construction. It was gliding slowly along toward the south.

Mr. and Mrs. Webster related this story to a few people in the Land Company office. Inasmuch as the public is so incredulous over the airship stories that have been reported of late, they do not care to say much about it. Hence the meagreness of the story.

A long time ago when the divine Tennyson dipped into the future, he / Saw the heavens filled with commerce, argosies of magic sails, / Of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bails.

It may be that time has stolen unawares upon the world, and that x by this time next year all about this mysterious something seen in the heavens of late by incredulous people, will be part of the pioneer history of air navigation. Quien sabe!

So in the light of this possible fact, keep your eyes open and heavenward these nights and watch for that mysterious heavenly visitor
 1896 November 30 (Mon) Oakland Tribune, p. 5.

EITHER MARS OR VENUS. / Professor Burckhalter Tells of the "Airship's" Light. / HE LAUGHS AT THE TALES. / The Astronomers, He Said, Have Not Noted Anything Unusual. / WHAT THE WATCHERS SAW. / He Says the Present Theories Are All Pure Fakes. /

There is one confirmed skeptic in regard to the airship. He is Professor Burckhalter of the Chabot Observatory. His time has been taken up lately by persons who are anxious to view the aerial machine through the telescope. Many persons have advanced the theory that the airship is a clever advertising dodge of some gas company that is trying to boom a new kind of illuminating gas. Professor Burckhalter laughs at this theory as well as others.

"If there were any airship I would turn the telescope on it, you may be sure," said Prof. Burckhalter today. "What people have been taking for the brilliant electric light of an airship is nothing more than or less than one of the two planets, Mars or Venus. People want to believe in the airship, and it is astonishing the way they deceive themselves. Venus is as brilliant as an arc light and does move very slowly through the heavens. Anyone who pays a little attention to the heavens might be deceived into believing it an electric light gleaming through the clouds. Last Saturday night when there was such excitement over the airship, what people were looking at was the planet Mars, which appeared very brilliant that evening.

The theories in regard to the airship are pure imagination. If there were any strange objects in the heavens, we would certainly know of it, and all these theories are, I believe, pure fakes."
 1896 November 30 (Mon eve) Woodland, Calif., Daily Democrat, p. 3

DAVISVILLE DOINGS /... That Mysterious Light.
 What is it? This thing they call the airship I mean. It has not yet been my good fortune to see this mysterious wanderer, and at present the nights are too chilly for star-gazing. But accepting the stories told of it as wholly or partly true, we must believe there is something in them. It is certainly not a meteor. Meteors adhere strictly to a single direction and are generally in a hurry. It cannot be a kite or a balloon, for either of these must go with the wind. It cannot be a toy machine sent up simply to mystify the people, for the simplest of these would be too expensive for frequent repetitions, and I do not take stock in any airship, which, if of any size, would certainly require powerful machinery and produce a noise that would be heard a long distance. Now, I'm not going to say that it is not an airship, for in this age of scientific discovery, when one may talk to a friend across the continent, or by means of the X ray explore that same friend's internal structure, lights, liver and gizzard, at closer range; when one may listen to the songs and speeches of a past generation, or gaze upon the portraits of stars that lie beyond the reach of the Lick telescope, I may doubt, but I will not dispute. If a man should tell me that he had discovered a practical route to Mars, or the moon, I should consider it possible. And so there may be an airship. I don't know and cannot say there isn't but supposing such a thing to exist, is it not almost incredible that some level-headed observer has not detected it before this? The inventor of this machine may have rendered it invisible by the use of some hue outside of the visible spectrum, like Ambrose Bierce's mountain lion, but still it must be a substance, and in its passage athwart the sky it must eclipse the stars that lie in its path. The arc it describes in passing from horizon to horizon would determine its distance. This obtained it would be an easy task to calculate its speed, and the time of passing a given star would fix its length. Its depth might be determined by the vertical distance of the stars eclipsed, and your trained observer be able to give a better sketch of this strange thing than the average man could obtain if it were lying on the ground before him. Why don't these influential journalists who talk so much about the airship get our old friend Herwick hold of it?

Beats the Airship. / An Angelic Aerial Apparition Agitates Rustics in New York State.

A letter from Wolcott, N.Y., Nov. 17, says:

The villages of South Butler, Butler Centre and Slyburg are greatly excited at present over an apparition which has appeared in that section recently and for which there appears to be no possible hypothesis except a spiritual one. The visitor is nothing less than an angel or at least it bears every appearance of one, and is seen in broad daylight and in a clear sky. Its appearance was on the second of November about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when it was seen by at least a score of people within a radius of five miles of Butler Centre. Some of the people who have seen the apparition are: R.D. Mack, a farmer, living near Slyburg; H.B. Newton, a mechanic, whose home is in Savannah; A.W. Miller, a South Butler farmer, and D.F. Everhart, an ex-school teacher of Butler Centre.

Mr. Everhart, who is a well-educated man and not a spiritualist, gives the following account of its appearance: "I was returning from Wolcott about 3 o'clock in the afternoon Nov. second, when I noticed an object floating in the air, apparently about 100 yards away and nearly overhead. Its appearance was that of a person about twenty years of age, clad in a long white robe with the arms bare. On its shoulders were a pair of long, white wings which appeared nearly motionless. At first the features were clearly visible, but as the object floated higher they gradually became indistinct through distance till finally the form faded from sight in the distance. It was a clear day and not a cloud in sight at the time. I should think it was about 15 or 20 minutes from the time I first saw the object till it disappeared. I could not believe the reality of the vision and even pinched myself to be convinced that I was awake and not dreaming. I said nothing about it for several days, fearing to be thought drunk or crazy, till I heard others speak of similar occurrences."

The story told by others who have seen the angel is the same in all essential details as that told by Mr. Everhart and few of them mentioned the incident outside their family circle for some days, until the story gradually became current. Several people have seen the vision since on clear days, as it has appeared on at least three different occasions and has created great wonder and alarm throughout that section. Not one has any theory concerning its appearance or errand.

Some one with an artistically constructed kite is amusing himself—

1896 December 1 (Tues) The Call (San Francisco), p. 7. (card 1)

SAILED OVER LOS ANGELES / Three Strange Lights Seen Above the City of Angels. / BACK ON THEIR COURSE / Hart Tells Why His Client's Airship Takes to Great Altitudes. / IS MUCH EASIER TO OPERATE / The Attorney Gives an Account of a Wonderful Electric Storage Battery. / Every day and every night add more testimony from those who have seen or claim to know something about the mysterious lights that for the past two weeks have appeared in the sky from Central to Southern California. Every day and every night add to the number of those who are converted from skepticism to a belief that these lights are attached to an airship or aerial craft such as the world has never seen before.

Whatever all these mysterious things may be it stands to reason that the mystery cannot exist for ever, and in all probability the truth will be known ere many days or weeks pass. It is the purpose of The Call to secure this knowledge and present it to the public, be it airship or hoax.

The telegraphic dispatches published in yesterday's Call gave accounts of the appearance of strange lights making rapid zig flights over the San Fernando Valley, in Los Angeles County. Last night the people of Los Angeles City were treated to the strange sight. Two fixed lights passed over the city at a high rate of speed and at a very great distance from the earth. A third light that appeared to have all the characteristics of a searchlight in the hands of a skillful manipulator was also seen in conjunction with the two fixed lights. These passed according to reports from the northwest to the southeast and two hours later they reappeared, passing from the southeast to the northwest. A number who witnessed the phenomenon were inclined to believe that some practical joker was sending up toy balloons from the hills, but those who believed in the airship theory were unable to understand how toy balloons could pass in opposite directions over the same course, or what kind of toy balloon was used that could stay up at a high altitude with lights ablaze for over two hours.

Ex-Attorney General W.H.H. Hart, the attorney for the inventor, while discussing the power that could be or is used for airships, made public some very interesting information regarding the new Fargo storage battery in which he is interested. He stated that the whole apparatus of a twenty-horsepower storage battery weighs only about 125 or 130 pounds. The receiving jars proper have been reduced to such a small compass that they weigh less than three pounds, and that a jar of this size can be charged from an ordinary incandescent light wire. Under such circumstances the master of an airship would have but little trouble in taking in "fuel" that would enable him to travel a great many miles. He could have his ship secreted in the hills, walk into any town along the route on which he might choose to travel, hire a room in a hotel, tap a wire, fill his soda bottles with chain lightning and resume his voyage through the upper air for another hundred miles or more.

The proposition seems almost too gigantic to be true, but stranger things have happened in the realm of science within the last few years. A late dispatch received last night from Los Angeles reads as follows:

"The mysterious airship was seen again here to-night. The thing moved about over the city for an hour. There is no doubt as to the genuineness of the phenomenon, whatever it might be. Jack Faulkner, Richard Sweet and other reputable citizens, who were directly under the strange visitor, state that they saw its wings. It created great excitement on the streets to-night."/>

WHY HE SAILS HIGH. / Attorney Hart Tells Why the Airship Is Taken Far From the Earth.

General W.H.H. Hart still insists that the much-talked-of airship is a reality and that the thousand or more people who have seen lights moving in the sky and were able to discern the outlines of an object above were not the victims of high-pressure imaginations. He goes still further and asserts that there are two airships now moving about in the heavens over the Golden State, a large one and a smaller one. He believes that one is now in the southern part of the State and the other is prowling around through heretofore unexplored space in the more northern latitudes.

"Then your inventor must have an assistant who understands aerial navigation as well as himself," was suggested to General Hart.

"Yes, he has," was the response. "He told me that there is very little trouble in handling the machine. All that is required is a good cool-headed man with a fair amount of common-sense and one who is not likely to become excited or lose his presence of mind at high altitudes."

"I have no doubt that he has such men with him. At least he told me that he had. You must remember that an airship is very easy to handle at extremely high altitudes—much easier than near the surface of the earth."

In explaining what he meant by this assertion General Hart gave some interesting information as to why the lights are always seen at such great distances from the earth. He illustrated his point by calling attention to the fact that an ordinary gas or hot-air balloon, on being released from the ground, darts like an arrow from a bow into the air and as it farther away from the earth it gets the slower its upward flight.

"The reason for this," he explained, "is that after the balloon has reached a certain altitude the gas that carried it to that point is not so much lighter than the surrounding atmosphere and its buoyancy is thereby decreased. Then aerial navigation becomes practically easy, for the operator does not have to expend power in forcing the balloon filled with gas and the airship attachment against the wind. This is the reason that the inventor has gone so high when experimenting with his ship. He tells me that at a great height he can go against the wind with comparative ease, but that at 300 or 400 feet from the ground he is compelled to use up a great deal of power."

The subject uppermost in the general's mind, the freeing of Cuba from Spain, came to the surface in the conversation, and the attorney said that "the inventor is likely at any time to pack up his smaller airship and start for the scene of bloodshed and trouble."

"It can be easily done," he said. "In the first place the material of the outfit is light and the ship can readily be packed in cases and shipped away by rail without attracting the least attention, and it would take but a short time to put it together again."

"How could this be done when your power is a storage battery that will only last six hours?" was asked.

"There would be no difficulty about that," was the response. "The Fargo storage battery can be recharged anywhere where there is an electric-light wire, and there are electric power and lighting plants in all of the towns from here to Arizona, and from Arizona to the Southern states."

"The whole apparatus of the twenty-horsepower Fargo battery does not weigh over 125 pounds, and the storage battery proper can be carried in your overcoat pocket, it not weighing over three pounds. Each section weighs but a little more than a sodavater bottle filled with water. He could come into this office and charge his entire battery by tapping one of these incandescent-light wires. So, you see that he could take his ship across the continent without any trouble at all. Speaking of the expedition to Cuba reminds me that already I am beginning to receive letters from people who desire to go as volunteers in the new aerial navy. Here is one. I will read it to you, but not give the writer's name: / Madera, 11-29-'96.

W.H.H. Hart--DEAR SIR: If it is possible please consider me as a volunteer for the party in the airship to go to Cuba. I am 40 years of age and in perfect health and strength. Am a fairly educated man, a good telegraph operator, stenographer and typewriter operator. I understand that it will be a very hazardous enterprise, but believe me, there is no danger that I am not perfectly willing and glad to face.

I shall fear nothing and will go anywhere and do anything my superiors may command or desire. It does not matter to any one if I am killed, as I have no ties. I have no family, relatives or persons relying upon me, and for that reason alone I should be sent. I will take any obligation as to secrecy, faithfulness, etc. and willingly answer with my life for it. High altitudes do not affect me. Please let me hear from you at your earliest convenience. Most respectfully,

"Will you engage him?"

"I will not. I will hand his letter over to the inventor, and he will do with the proposition as he sees fit. I have no doubt but what, as he is related to the electrician of Macco's army, all the arrangements were made as to the crew and other details before he came to this part of the continent. As I have said before, he came here to test his airship in the high altitudes, the lower heavier strata of air and the fogs from the ocean. He wanted to test it under ocean conditions. In the East the wind blows from the land to the sea, but here it blows in from the ~~land~~ sea, and in an expedition over Cuba he wants to be thoroughly familiar with ocean atmosphere. The last time I saw the inventor his purpose was to operate his ship in the high, dry atmosphere over the southern part of the State, and from the telegraphic ac- counts in The Call he must be there now with one of his airships. We are told that his lights have been seen by hundreds in Los Angeles County, and I have no idea that they were jack-o'-lanterns or fakes."

SEEN OVER LOS ANGELES. / The City Excited by Over Bright Lights Apparently Under Some One's Control.
LOS ANGELES, Cal., Nov. 30.--Los Angeles is excited and people are gazing upward from every corner at what all who have seen them declare are the lights of an airship. The altitude of these strange lights was very great and the movement was from northwest to southeast. Passengers on board many of the streetcar lines witnessed the zigzag glimmer as it floated slowly and placidly through the upper air.

Most of the force of the two morning dailies saw the lights, which reappeared after two hours' time going in the opposite direction. Some of the witnesses describe the appearance of these lights, two of which were fixed, while a third light had the characteristics of a searchlight and was apparently under the operation of a skilled manipulator.

These lights were seen by so many reputable citizens that the town is talking nothing else to-night except the strange lights and the probable influence of the invention, if it proves such, upon methods of warfare and the transmission of intelligence from one part of the world to another. The probability of the ship is conceded on all hands, and much speculation is rife as to its most important uses in peace and war.

The latest and most conclusive evidence extant reached this city to the effect that Foreman Woods, on Lucky Baldwin's ranch at Santa Anita, had seen the visitor this afternoon by the full light of day. H.A. Unruh, manager of the ranch, places the utmost reliance in the word of his foreman and in consequence said to a Call correspondent that this statement satisfied him. There is some ground for the report that a genuine airship was being operated among the foothills, not only in the night but in the daytime.

This information was telephoned to the Chamber of Commerce in this city today. This information staggers the most credulous. Serious people, judges and prominent business men have now been led to conclude that there is more in aerial philosophy than they had ever dreamed of.

Foreman Woods' description tallies with the published accounts and pictures in The Call during the past week, namely: as to its birdlike wings and other characteristics. Mr. Woods claims to have had a good, plain view of the winged visitor, and describes in detail its every part.

The hull or body, he says, is of oval shape, while the wings are long and fashioned remarkably like those of an American eagle. Its rapid movement through the air is what impressed Mr. Woods the most. The machine, he said, was traveling against the wind, and at a rate of speed equal to the fastest train.

The hills about the city are lined with gazers watching for a late reappearance of the ship. To this mass of evidence a hackman, whose occupation keeps him up all night, adds that he has seen the ship as late as 8 AM A.M. This gentleman, whose name is Carroll, describes the appearance of searchlight features with clearness.

He says that he is absolutely certain that what he saw was an aerial machine under the guidance of an intelligent being, and that the searchlight was capable of revealing objects on the earth and the general topography of the country to the operators.

1896 December 1 (Tues) San Francisco Examiner, p. 2. / That Airship Again./ It Was a Toy Balloon w. a Reflector, & It Floated Over L.A. Los Angeles, Nov. 30.--The airship fakir has been at work here, and the result of his labors tonight caused much excitement among the promenaders on Spring street. Shortly before 7 o'clock a brilliant light like the rays from a locomotive headlight was seen in the air over the southwest part of the city. It bobbed up and down and slowly moved to the northwest, disappearing over the hills at about 8 o'clock. Charles Fuller Gates, a bicycle expert stated this evening that he believed the affair to be a practical joke on the part of some residents of the University, who had prepared a six-foot paper hot-air balloon with an aluminum reflector, so that the flames from the sponge would be reflected downwards. That the airship was a xxxxxxx xx xx xxx xxk w/ xx xxw trick arrangement there is no doubt, but it was enough of a success to be the talk of the town; and until late at night many people kept their places on the curbstones scanning the sky in the hope of its return.

1896 December 1 (Tues morn) Los Angeles Daily Times, p. 5. (card 1)

THE AIRSHIP ROMANCE. / PEOPLE WHO THINK THEY HAVE SEEN THE REAL THING. / Some of Them Mistake Mars and Venus for the Flying-machine. A Los Angeles Man Engages in Airship Building. /

The people of California will soon be suffering from "cricks" in their necks. Nightly, as soon as the sun goes down, every man, woman and child turns out and with head thrown back, begins gazing skyward in search of the airship. Each day that passes adds to the number of believers who are convinced that they have seen the new wonder. Witnesses are cropping up in every part of the State, who have seen strange lights in the heavens. For some days the contagion was confined to the northern part of the State, but it has now spread to Los Angeles, and last evening the streets were crowded with open-mouthed gazers at the skies, to whom every star of more than usual brilliancy appeared a full-fledged airship.

Sacramento was the spot first favored with a visitation from the mysterious vessel. On the night of Tuesday, November 17, numerous citizens assert that they saw a brilliant searchlight moving over the city. Apparently some emulation was aroused among the witnesses. Those that spoke first saw only the light, but their successors gave more and more vivid descriptions of the appearance and construction of the strange visitor. Finally the last man to testify eclipsed all his predecessors by relating a conversation carried on by the occupants of the airship as they passed over his head. All of these veracious witnesses assert that they were entirely sober and had not been hitting the pipe.

Oakland and San Francisco valiantly came to the front with columns of corroborative testimony, and the climax was reached when a Mr. Collins, an Oakland attorney, announced that he was the legal advisor of the inventor of the machine, and was familiar with its plans of construction. Mr. Collins received enough free advertising to satisfy a patent medicine man. He was soon compelled to share his honors with ex-Attorney-General Maxx W.H.F. Hart, who was also retained as counsel by the unknown inventor. Gen. Hart gave out the interesting information that the airship is a vessel of war and is to be used to aid the Cuban revolutionists by dropping packages of dynamite upon Capt.-Gen. Weyler's head. Gen. Hart and his associate counsel, Mr. Collins, differ somewhat in their descriptions of the general appearance of the airship, but both agree in the appropriate statement that the motive-power is gas. Both attorneys decline to give their client's name. They say, however, that he has already constructed two airships and a third is on the stocks.

Last Friday evening numerous citizens of Los Angeles discovered a bright light in the heavens near the southern horizon. It was first observed about 6 o'clock and attracted the attention of many people who were on their way home. The most intelligent account of this particular appearance of the phenomenon is that given by Capt. Frank B. Taylor, U.S.A., No 3211 Key West street. About 6:30 Friday evening Capt. Taylor was called out by a neighbor and his attention was directed to the light which was then near the horizon. To the naked eye the object seemed like a brilliant electric light or like a fired star, although no scintillation was perceptible. Capt. Taylor brought out a field-glass and made a careful observation. In describing the light as it appeared through the glass, he said:

"The light was apparently at a considerable distance, perhaps fifteen or twenty miles. Through the glass it appeared pear-shaped or like a soap bubble when suspended from the pipe, with the apex tilted a little to the left. About one-fifth of the surface, on the left-hand side, was dark and the remainder was very bright and covered at regular intervals with still more brilliant spots. It was up about 20 or 25 deg. in the heavens and appeared to be moving away in a south westerly direction. I watched it through the glass for about ten or fifteen minutes. It finally disappeared, apparently going toward the ocean. I did not think it was an airship. It seemed more probable that it was some novel affair sent up by someone to impose upon people. It might have been a fire-balloon, although it hardly had that appearance. I could not see any indication of a car or any other attachment, though if there were anything of the kind it probably would not have been visible."

Many of the neighbors watched the mysterious light through Capt. Taylor's glass. Among them was George P. Taylor, who had first seen it from the street car half an hour before. He described the light as very brilliant, with the prismatic colors of a mass of bubbles. Mr. Taylor considered it something unusual, although he was unable to determine the character of the strange visitor.

Last night expectant wonder-seekers were again treated to a sight of the new luminary, which seemed to appear in suggestive proximity to that part of the heavens which Venus should occupy at this season. The airship seemed, however, to be in the condition unkindly ascribed to its observers, by some skeptics, for its course was decidedly unsteady. It appeared above the southern horizon and moved along in an erratic way. The news rapidly spread that the flying-machine was billed for another exhibition, and hundreds of people turned out to see the wonder. The majority of them fixed their gaze upon Mars, and that inoffensive planet was promptly equipped with wings, tail and a full cargo of dynamite. Doubtless some of the spectators overheard the remarks of the inhabitants, and this testimony may be expected soon.

INVENTED HERE.

San Francisco and Sacramento have had a monopoly of the airship long enough, and Southern California now gets into the game through the enterprise of a patriotic and inventive citizen of Los Angeles. This patriotic patron is a business man who has had experience in the manufacture of fireworks. He learned from the reports of the appearance of the aerial mystery that an airship consisted of a light in the sky, and he prepared to supply that light. With a hot-air balloon and an aluminum reflector, he constructed a flying ship a few days ago, and last night he launched the craft into the illimitable blue from his home in the southwestern part of the city.

It was a simple contrivance, just a paper balloon with a wire basket containing a sponge saturated with alcohol, and over the sponge and aluminum funnel. When the alcohol was ignited the funnel conducted the hot air into the balloon and reflected the light downward. For popular purposes, this machine is just as good as a cigar-shaped car with wings, and a searchlight. In fact, any bright planet or star served as an airship last night, and hundreds of persons stood on street corners and gaped at Mars or Sirius by the hour. The evening star, when it blazed up in the southern sky early in the evening, was a most brilliant success as a flying ship, and attracted more admiring attention than ever before had been bestowed upon a planet. More than a hundred persons are willing to swear that the evening star bobbed up and down with a wavy motion, and finally landed just back of the Soldiers' Home, and they were sober, too.

1896 December 1 (Tues) Los Angeles Times, p. 6.

THAT AIRSHIP AGAIN. / The Call is, as an English paper said of McKinley a few days after the election, "a creature of sublime faith." It was the first to discover the existence of a "majestic monarch of the skies" that was simultaneously to be seen hovering over Red Bluff and Bakersfield, the Alpha and Omega of the great basin formed by the confluence of the San Joaquin and Sacramento. As the machine could not be in two places that were over four hundred miles apart, the Call was about to "throw up the sponge" and confess that it had been cruelly lunched, when suddenly a rescuing angel appeared on the scene.

This was no less a person than William Holy Heavenly Hart, ex-Attorney-General of the State of California and likewise of counsel in the famous Blythe will case. He accounts for the ubiquitous character of the mysterious pilgrim of the azimuth by a statement that there are three of these airships, two in nightly operation and the other nearly completed. At first there was only one airship, the existence of which was stoutly denied by the Chronicle and the Examiner. Now there are three. They multiply as fast as did the heads of the [Lernean] hydra when struck off by the club of Hercules.

Last night, in this city, several people said they saw the spook of "the desert and illimitable air" moving steadily in the direction of Santa Monica. It was at a great altitude, so as to be scarcely visible to the naked eye and inspired the ancient army of old soakers to repeat their wonted question, "Have I got 'em again?" Astronomers have predicted the approach of no comet, so it cannot very well be one of them. We must leave this deep and inscrutable mystery to be unraveled by the Call and the ex-Attorney-General, with the lord high executioner and the groom of the back stairs to bring up the rear of this weird procession.

1896 December 1 (Tues eve) Daily Californian (Bakersfield), p. 1.

THE AIRSHIP. / Still More People Who Are Sure They Saw It.

W.H. Sanborn and Robert Blodgat, connected with McKelvey's store, saw the mysterious light low in the southwestern heavens about 7:30 o'clock Friday evening from the back door of that establishment. They declare that it moved out of their sight within a short space of time and it also had a descending and ascending or undulatory movement. It was a very large light, resembling in color an electric light. These gentlemen do not claim that it was an airship, but a mysterious moving light, and that's all.

Several people in the Lowell addition saw the same mystery at nearly the same hour in the direction of Tejon. They stoutly maintain that it was moving and had a reddish appearance.

Stories similar to these are reported by reputable citizens all the way up the valley to Sacramento. These people have certainly seen something or else they have gone daft, and the Californian is prepared to say that the people whose names are here used are anything but daft. They are of the best and most trustworthy of our citizens.

It is reported that R.C.P. Fox declares that the mysterious illuminator is a proof of the great fact the near advent of co-operative socialism, and that the light is a gathering cohesion of the meteors which Flammarion, the great French astronomer, predicted would shower upon us a short time ago, into a planet all their own, wherein man is to help his neighbor and every neighbor help his man. That its roving nature is to gather material and when the fullness of time arrives, that is when this co-operative planet gets grown, it's going to back up to Mount Whitney and take aboard all those who desire to go into that good world from Kern and surrounding counties.

An effort was made this morning to see Mr. Fox for the purpose of authenticating this report, but he could not be found. His closest friends however declare that the report is true in every detail.

1 Reports come from Delano that the airship was seen there Sunday night. The whole population turned out to gaze at the heavenly visitor and there is abundant assurance that if not a real airship, still something mysterious was seen floating in the air.

On the same night something was seen in the sky at Mojave, which those who saw it are decidedly of the opinion was the airship.

Word comes from Los Angeles that the airship was seen there last night and the hills were covered by people who turned out to gaze at the visitor.

1896 December 1 (Tues eve) Oakland Tribune, p. 1. (card 1)

SAYS HE SAW IT. / Cass Gilson Gives a Graphic Description of the Airship. / HE WATCHED IT MOVING. / It Was About 1500 Feet Above the Level Ground. / SIDE PROPELLERS WORKED. / It Was Cigar Shaped With a Tail Like a Fish's. /

The airship has again been careered through Oakland atmosphere, and has even permitted a favored few to catch a glimpse of its metal sides and patent wings. Those who have seen it refuse to believe that they were misled by their imaginations or have mistaken Mars or Venus for electric light streaming from the fancied head of a mythical airship.

Now a young electrician of this city declares on his word of honor that he has seen the airship at close range, and describes its exact appearance. The young man is Case Gilson, a son of Professor Gilson, ex-superintendent of Schools and principal of the Normal Training School. His testimony is supported by other young men who saw the strange aerial navigator at the same time.

Gilson and his friends saw the airship twice during last Thursday evening, at 8 and 8:30 P.M. The skies were perfectly clear, and a strong northwest wind was blowing. The airship was moving rapidly from the southeast towards the north in the teeth of the wind. No light was visible, merely the weird peculiar body silhouetted against the clear skies. Case Gilson, his small brother and the Petah brothers distinctly saw the strange light, and Gilson describes its appearance very graphically.

"The airship was moving very rapidly from the southeast towards Lorin, and not a light was visible," said Gilson. "It was about 1,000 or 1,500 feet in the air and looked like a great black cigar with a fish-like tail. If it had side propellers, they were revolving so rapidly that I could not see them. The body was at least 100 feet long and attached to it was a triangular tail, one apex being attached to the main body. The surface of the airship looked as if it were made of aluminum, which exposure to wind and weather had turned dark. I saw all this distinctly, and I am willing to take any oath to the truth of what I say.

61

"The airship went at a tremendous speed. As it neared Lorin it turned quickly and disappeared in the direction of San Francisco. At half past 8 we saw it again, when it took about the same direction and disappeared.

"I have studied the subject of airships to a certain extent, and I see no reason why one should not be successful. I know that I was not mistaken about the airship and took a kite for the real thing. It was an airship, of that I am convinced."

Gilson has some ideas of his own on the construction of airships, and since seeing the strange objects in the skies has become more enthusiastic than ever.

Percy Drew was another individual favored with a glimpse of the airship. He says it visited Oakland Saturday night. It then carried a red light and moved with its usual quickness. Both young men agree that the ship was of enormous size, measuring at least 100 feet in length. Gilson thinks nitrogen gas is used to lift the machine, and that Fargo & electric batteries supply the propelling power.

Gilson is at present the only person who has openly declared that the machine was visible on a clear night. Its previous appearances have been on cloudy, obscure nights, when persons may have been misled by taking stars for electric lights and clouds for the shadowy form of an airship. Gilson is also an amateur astronomer, and declares that he could not mistake a star or a cloud for an airship. He believes that if the French made a partial success of an airship in 1888 it is not surprising that American enterprise has perfected plans for a machine which is now successfully navigating the atmosphere. Why the machine does not appear in the daylight no one seems to know, and until it does unbelievers will continue to scoff.

HOW ABOUT THIS?

A San Josean Declares That He Travelled on the Ship. / By Associated Press to The Tribune.

SAN JOSE, Dec. 1.--The champion air-ship story of the season is told by John A. Horen, an electrician in the employ of the Electric Improvement Co., of this place. ...
1896 December 2 (Wed) The Call, (San Francisco), p. 14. (card 1)

SAW THE AIRSHIP AT CLOSE RANGE / One of the Most Startling Tales Yet Told of the Mystery. / DESCRIBED IT IN DETAIL / Seen by a Son of a Professor Gilson of the Normal Training School. / STAMFORD BOYS IN THE SWIM. / Treated to a View of What They Believe Was the Light of the Midair Cruiser. /

Mystery deep and impenetrable still enshrouds the mysterious client of ex-Attorney-General Hart and his tantalizing and equally mysterious cruisers of the upper air.

From Oakland comes a tale told by the son of Professor Gilson of the Normal Training School that is the most startling yet contributed on the subject. He claims to have seen the aerial wonder at short range and gives what he earnestly asserts is a detailed description of the flier in full flight.

Other interior points also send reports of aerial moving lights which are supposed to belong to some aerial craft or crafts.

"I have heard nothing from the inventor of the airship for some days," said General Hart yesterday, "and from the reports received by the Call I have no doubt he is experimenting in the dry and high altitudes of the interior, as he told me he intended to do." This was all the more surprising for the mysterious inventor of the equally mysterious aerial craft had to say on the subject yesterday, though he expects to be able to give some additional interesting information in a few days.

SAW THE AIRSHIP. / Graphic Tale Told by a Son of Professor Gilson of the Normal Training School.

OAKLAND, Cal., Dec. 1.--Case Gilson, a young electrician of this city, declares that he has seen the airship at close range and is able to describe it.

Case Gilson is a son of Professor Gilson, ex-Superintendent of Schools and principal of the Normal Training-school. His testimony is supported by other young men who saw the strange aerial navigator at the same time.

"The airship was moving very rapidly from the southeast toward Lorin, and not a light was visible," said Gilson. "It was about 1000 or 1500 feet in the air and looked like a great black cigar with a fish-like tail. If it had slide propellers they were revolving so rapidly that I could not see them. The body was at least a hundred feet long, and attached to it was a triangular tail, one apex being attached to the main body. The surface of the airship looked as if it were made of aluminum, which exposure to wind and weather had turned dark. I saw all this distinctly, and I am willing to take any oath to the truth of what I say.

"The airship went at a tremendous speed. As it neared Lorin it turned quickly and disappeared in the direction of San Francisco. At half-past 8 we saw it again, when it took about the same direction and disappeared. I have studied the subject of airships to a certain extent and I see no reason why one should not be successful. I know that I was not mistaken about the airship and took a kite for the real thing. It was an airship; of that I am convinced."

Gilson and his friends saw the airship twice during last Thursday evening at 8 and 8:30 o'clock. The skies were perfectly clear, and a strong northwest wind was blowing. The airship was moving rapidly from the southeast toward the north in the teeth of the wind. No light was visible, merely the weird, peculiar body silhouetted against the clear skies. Case Gilson, his brother, and the Petan brothers distinctly saw the strange sight, and Gilson describes its appearance very graphically.

Gilson is at present the only person in Oakland who has openly declared that the machine was visible on a clear night. Its previous appearances have been on cloudy, obscure moonlight, when persons may have been misled by taking stars for electric lights and clouds for the shadow of an airship. Gilson is also an amateur astronomer and declares that he could not mistake a star or a cloud for an airship.

Percy Drev was another individual favored with a glimpse of the airship. He says it visited Oakland Saturday night. It then carried a red light and moved with its usual quickness. Both youngsters agree that the ship was of enormous size, measuring at least 100 feet in length. / OVER THE OAK CAMPUS. / Skeptical Students See the Alleged Cruiser of the Upper Air.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Cal., Dec. 1.--Those mysterious lights supposed to be a part of the airship were visible to several students on the campus here last night about 10:30 o'clock, and their excitement was intense. Most of those who saw the lights sweep across the sky have heretofore been most skeptical about the existence of any such creation as an airship, and it is amusing to note their uncertainty, now that their own eyes have witnessed the peculiar lights.

Among those who saw the inexplicable lights are R.S. Garfield, C.F. Aaron and H.H. Hindry. Ordinarily the announcement by some of the students that they had seen the airship would be received with a wink, or a counter remark on "wheels that needed oiling," a comment on the virtue of temperance; but Hindry, Garfield and Aaron are reputed to be little given to practical joking and absolutely free from any other characteristics that might make their story incredible.

Hindry was rather averse to talking about what he had seen, but as it had somehow reached the ears of all the students, he thought best to give an account of it. In substance he stated that he was looking out of his window when some one called his attention to the peculiar antics of one of the lights in the heavens, resembling a very large star or planet. "I watched the light pointed out and thought it was a planet at first, but when the darn thing began to rise and sink and to shoot rapidly from one side to the other I knew enough about astronomy to know that it was no star or planet. I rubbed my eyes to make sure I really saw what I thought I saw, but when I opened them it was still there and continued its darts about for some minutes, though constantly receding and growing dimmer."

"It was high in the air and apparently many miles off when we saw it, and was going in a northerly direction toward San Francisco. I'll never know whether it was a real airship or a 'fake.' I'm inclined to think it might have been a balloon, but it moved in such a peculiar manner."

R.S. Garfield also saw the light, and fully corroborated Hindry's account of its appearance and motions. "The light was in a part of the heavens where there was no other large star, and it was so noticeable that I watched it, thinking it a planet and wondering which one it could be. Then it commenced to rise and sink, and a little later flew off at a tangent as though struck by a gust of wind. I called up my roommate and let several other fellows know about it, and we watched it until it faded away in the distance. I wouldn't bet that it was an airship, but if it was not it was a most ingenious contrivance and gave a very powerful light."

C.F. Aaron is quite communicative about it, and is sure he saw, if not the airship, at least the same light that has been exciting the public for two weeks past. Neither he nor any of the other spectators claim they could distinguish any form above or about the light with which it might be connected. All are hopeful that it may be visible again soon to all, for they are receiving an undue amount of guying at the hands of their more skeptical friends. / IN MERCED SKY. / The San Joaquin Valley Treated to a Sight of the Aerial Lights.

MERCED, Cal., Dec. 1.--Merced was treated to a visit last night by the airship that has been provoking so much discussion. A bright, red light appeared in the sky to the west of the town about 8:15 o'clock. Observers at first thought that it was a particularly bright star, but as they watched it the light grew larger and brighter and other lights showed themselves on the mysterious visitor. It came in from the west, circled to the north over the town, and seemed to rest in its flight about over the center of the business portion of Merced.

Among the observers of the phenomenon were T.M. Edmunds (the Wells-Fargo agent) and J.B. Olcese (a prominent Merced merchant). Mr. Olcese noticed it as he was on his road home, and called the members of a dramatic club, who were rehearsing in the opera-house, to see the lights. At that time the flying wonder was headed for the north and was rapidly passing out of sight, the watchers keeping it in sight until it had grown to be quite a small speck in the darkness.

Some skeptics scouted the idea of its being an airship, and maintained that it was a large star, but the light was too large and brilliant for that. Others stoutly declared that it was a balloon sent up by some practical joker, but the light was visible too long for such an explanation. What served to attract the greatest amount of attention was the peculiar quality of the light, which did not present the characteristics of the ordinary electric light or of the gas lights that people are accustomed to. Many who were inclined to be skeptical beforehand are now firm believers in the existence of this wonderful and mysterious visitant. /

ABOVE HIGH MEXICA MOUNTAINS. / Two Mysterious Lights Over Robinson's Ferry, Calaveras County.

About the time the airship is said to have taken its flight to the south southern part of the state lights were seen over several localities in the course indicated. According to W.H.H. Hart the inventor desired to test his ship in the higher altitudes. Whether he went as far east as the foothills of the Sierras is a matter of conjecture. However, P.F. Perryman of Calaveras County claims to have seen the lights of the mystery of the sky, for he sends the following letter to The Call:

Robinson's Ferry, Calaveras County, Dec. 30, 1906. Five miners here and myself last night saw the two lights, which we believe were attached to an airship. The one light in advance in the direction in which they were traveling convinced me that it was of an electrical character. It would be steady for a while and then die out. The other light, which seemed to be of a different character containing more orange rays, remained equidistant from the other in its career through the air. Both lights oscillated up and down in passing across our vision in a direction from left to right looking down the river. These lights were a considerable distance off and seemed to be at a considerable elevation. They remained in view but a very few minutes, passing out of sight behind the hills forming the river canyon walls on the right looking down stream. You may use this letter as you please, as it is no fake and I am willing to make affidavit to the facts contained herein. P. F. PERRYMAN.

P. 7. THE AIRSHIP.

Which mysteriously floated over this City and vicinity for some time was seen rising at 10:30 o'clock last evening by a multitude of at least 10,000 people, corner Twelfth and Market streets. It was a sight never to be forgotten.

On the side of the ship in bold letters were the words "Smoke Mill Half Million Club Cigars." The navigator turned its prow toward the Union Iron Works, whence it returned at 9 P.M.

Messrs. Adelsdorfer & Brandenstein were offered a sum for it quite in excess of their expectations by the representative of the Cuban revolutionists. Cubans can appreciate a good article, and the Half Million Club is the mildest and best cigar in this market. To-night the airship will make another ascent from Twelfth and Market streets at 8 o'clock. It is worth seeing.

1896 December 2 (Wed) San Francisco Examiner, p. (card 1)

PIERCING THE VOID, OR ON TO HONOLULU. / A Story in One Chapter Narrating the Marvelous Adventures of John Horen. / Being a Faithful Account of a Trip by Night Amongst the Clouds and Over the Sea. / TO WHICH IS ADDED A SEQUEL. / The Last Making It Clear That It Remains Easier to Talk Than to Fly, Even in California. /

SAN JOSE, December 1.--"There is nothing gives a man such spirits," wrote Byron in "Don Juan," "leavening his blood as cayenne doth a snake's curry, as going at full speed." There must be something in it, after all, for even now, three days subsequent to his return, Mr. J.A. Horen sparkles with such life as even his most intimate friends know not that he could manifest.

His return from Honolulu, that is to say. As the bird flies, the Hawaiian capital is more than 2,000 miles from San Francisco, and as Mr. Horen is a busy man and couldn't afford to while away such of his time voyaging to and from the Summerland of the far Pacific, he got aboard one of the five hundred and eighty-seven airships floating hither and thither out here in the West, made the round trip in twenty-four hours and is feeling very nicely, thank you.

Mr. Horen is chief electrician of the San Jose Electric Improvement Company, and is well known as an expert in his line. If it be wondered how he came to be the guest of the inventor of the airship in which he flew away as on the wings of a dove--for as such guest he travelled--let it be known that he is an inventor on his own account. It is all very clear, as he explains it. A sparking apparatus patented by him was purchased by the airship man for use on a gas engine. The contrivance declined to work properly, so the San Francisco firm that had sold it sent a messenger to Horen telling him "a mining man" who had bought a gas engine had experienced trouble with the sparking attachment and offering him $50 to go and "fix the thing."

Last Friday, according to Horen, he journeyed to San Francisco, where he met the "mining man," who proved to be forty or forty-five years of age and of heavy build. He didn't look a bit like the inventor General Hart has introduced, nor did he move about in an atmosphere of somberness and pain that brought up thoughts of Cuba. On the contrary, he was talkative and jovial and argued strongly in favor of peaceful settlement of international disputes.

Nevertheless, there were two points in common between him and General Hart's unknown--both had dark eyes and both declined positively to give either name or address.

The stranger took Mr. Horen to a train and they slow-coached it for about fifty miles northeast of the metropolis. Then they traveled on horseback to a lonely spot.

Where the sacred owl, on pinions gray, / Breaks from the rustling boughs.

The destination was reached about nightfall. Greatly to his surprise the electrician from San Jose found himself in front of a structure which he afterwards found to be 163 feet in length, 52 feet wide and 23 feet high. It was shaped somewhat like one of Mr. Vining's best Market-street cars, but its arching sides, which came together at the prow like the bow of a ship, glistened in the semi-darkness and proved to be made of aluminum. Near the bottom was a row of curtained windows like the windows of a car, and a door with four folding steps. At either end was a propeller, sixteen or twenty feet in diameter, and in front was a "telescopic apron," whatever that may be, "which could be adjusted to raise or lower the great ~~xxx~~ structure in its course."

"This," said the "mining man," as he struck a match, "this, sir, is my airship."
"The vessel," Mr. Horen explains, "is steered to right or left by the propellers. On top of the vessel is a bridge, running fore and aft, but I didn't learn what it is used for. Within, the cabin is ten feet high. The windows seemed made of mica. On each side of the cabin are fifteen double seats. Forty tons is the carrying capacity of the ship. The propeller shafts run directly through the vessel, the motive power being supplied by machinery concealed within a box. This box is about 1/2 feet high, 5 or six feet long and about 5 feet wide. I couldn't say what was in the box, but the motive power seemed to be some sort of gas."

About 1:15 o'clock, Mr. Horen having worked awhile on the sparking apparatus, and the darkness having grown intense, the inventor called out something which might have been: "What, bo! let the portcullis fall!" and away they flew.

Within half an hour San Francisco had been left behind. At the bow stood the inventor, his hand upon a rudder. Near him were three gauges. One indicated 1,000, another 360 and the third 150. Whether motor pressure or revolutions were thus indicated Mr. Horen could not make out. This may have been due to the dimness of the light, for the cabin was only faintly illuminated. And, by the by, it is a fact somewhat discouraging to those who have repeatedly seen the ship skimming about all brilliant in the heavens that the craft displays no light that could possibly be seen from the earth when she gets above the housetops.

Mr. Horen states that the ship sped on and on over the sea, and as he was dozing in an early morning nap the inventor shook him by the collar and asked:

"Do you see those lights down there?"
"I do," replied the electrician.
"Well, then," said the inventor, "know that we are immediately above the city of Honolulu."

"Lord!" exclaimed the man from San Jose. "How I do like airships!" They circled about the Hawaiian group until they felt sufficiently refreshed by the balmy climate and then made for California, arriving at their starting point at dusk of Saturday.

Which was doing pretty well for an airship that was only a beginner.

Mr. Horen was told by the sky captain that he guessed he wouldn't make any trips for three or four days, because the bearings of the stern propeller had heated and new boxing would have to be put in.

But by Sunday, the captain thought, everything would be in trim for a neat little pleasure jaunt, and Mr. Horen was invited to day a day off and run over to New York. He says he accepted the offer, inasmuch as he could take a turn on Broadway and get back in time to look after his usual Tuesday engagements.

To-day the electrician is having his share of work explaining. He does it with the utmost gravity and says he is willing to make affidavit to all he has said concerning the experience.

San Jose is puzzled. /
MRS. HOREN EXPLAINS. / And the Gas Escapes From Another Airship.

John A. Horen, the San Jose electrician, who has given certain good people the hope that yet a little while and they could lunch, run up four steps, shut a door, pull a lever, fly over to a soiree at Blenheim Castle and be back for breakfast, has his home at 249 Stevenson street, in this city.

His wife, on being told last night of his wonderful tale, laughingly explained that Mr. Horen is a star practical joker and was having some sport at some one's expense.

She added that at the time the gentleman says he was hovering over Honolulu he was doing some of the soundest sleeping of his life, and not in an airship, but in his bedroom, Stevenson street, San Francisco. He came to this city on Friday, remained at his home until Monday and then returned to San Jose.

This seems to leave General Hart's unknown in his accustomed position of vantage.

Illus.: THE AIRSHIP IN WHICH JOHN HOREN VOYAGED. / From a pencil sketch by the San Jose electrician who made the round-trip run from San Jose to Hawaii without leaving Stevenson street.

1896 December 3 (Th) The Call (San Francisco), pp.1,9 (ard 1)

THE AIRSHIP DESCRIBED BY FISHERMEN / Say That It Landed on the Beach Near Pacific Grove. / SEEN AT SHORT RANGE. / The Men Assert That They Conversed With the Three Aeronauts. / ABOUT SIXTY FEET IN LENGTH / The "Call" Correspondents Will Visit the Place To-Day for Corroborative Evidence. /

According to the testimony of two fishermen of Pacific Grove, Monterey County, an airship landed on the beach yesterday about fifteen miles north of that place and they held a conversation with and dined with the aeronauts. The fishermen described the airship, which they say they viewed from a distance of fifty yards and asserted that it is about sixty feet long and made of metal.

The Call correspondent, who interviewed the fishermen states that they have the reputation of being truthful and responsible toilers of the sea. However he will today visit the place where the airship is said to have landed. If the fishermen's story be true the aeronauts will surely have left behind some evidence of their visit.

W.H.R. Hart, the attorney for the inventor, stated yesterday that he had not heard of his client recently, but he believes that he is still navigating the sky somewhere over the southern part of the State.

A letter received by The Call from five residents of Watertown gives the information that they saw an airship pass over their locality on the 29th ult. bound apparently to the north. / NEAR PACIFIC GROVE. / Two Fishermen Say They Saw the Airship on the Ocean Beach.

PACIFIC GROVE, Cal., Dec. 2.--That the problem of navigating the air has at last been successfully solved there no longer remains a doubt.

At an early hour this morning, some fifteen miles from this city, two Italian fishermen, Giuseppe Valinziano and Luigi Valdivia, while engaged in their vocation, were completely terrorized by seeing an object descending from the heavens, which to their terror-stricken imaginations seemed to be falling directly upon their boat. When the object had fallen within some few hundred yards of the water it floated easily and at a moderate speed until it landed on the sandy beach. The airship, for such it proved to be, seemed to be under the perfect control of its occupants, three in number.

Immediately on landing they alighted and picking up their ship, carried it back from the beach and into the woods. As soon as the two fishermen had recovered from their astonishment they drew in their nets and attempted to make a landing, and after several unsuccessful attempts to get through the surf, which was very rough, a landing was made.

During this time the persons who had so strangely appeared upon the scene were watching the action of the fisherman, and upon the first signs of a successful landing one of the party advanced to meet them and warned them away from the exact spot where the ship was concealed. But Valinziano, who is a man of considerable intelligence, was not to be got rid of so easily, and engaged the aeronaut in conversation with the intention of learning as much as possible concerning the strange visitor. At first the man who had met them at the water's edge refused to answer any questions or allow the two fishermen to proceed further toward the spot where the ship was located, threatening to use force if necessary to prevent their doing so, but finally seeing that Valinziano and his companion were determined not to leave without obtaining at least a glimpse of the aerial traveler milder counsels prevailed.

Telling them to remain where they were until he could consult with his companions the aeronaut left and disappeared in the woods, remaining away some fifteen minutes, and on his reappearance beckoned Valinziano and his companion to advance.

Upon their arrival at the edge of the woods they were met by the entire party. One who appeared to be the leader courteously bade them "Good morning" and said: "I suppose your curiosity has been aroused by our rather unusual mode of traveling. I am not yet ready to make my discovery known to the public, but hope to be able to do so as soon as some slight changes are made in its construction. Until such time I must refuse to allow any one to make a close inspection. You are welcome to get such a view of the ship as you can from a distance, but any attempt at closer inspection will meet with forcible resistance."

The man who had done nearly all the talking for the party was addressed by his companions simply as "captain." He declined to give any information as to where the ship was constructed or where he intended going, saying it was simply an experimental trip.

While this conversation was being p.9/ carried on his two companions were busily engaged in working about the ship, which the captain admitted was in need of repairs before they could continue on their journey.

The party of aeronauts were well supplied with provisions, and a soon after landing began preparations for a meal and cordially invited the two fishermen to join them, which invitation was accepted.

Shortly afterward Valinziano and his companions began making preparations to return to their city, but were urged by the captain to remain, that repairs would soon be made and they could see the airship launched. The captain was very urgent in his request for them to remain, and finally prevailed upon them to do so, but later in the afternoon he informed them that it would be impossible to complete the repairs in time to make an ascension that night.

Valinziano now thinks the purpose of the aeronauts was to detain him until it would be impossible for him to reach the city in time to give publicity to his discovery before the airship had resumed its flight. One of the party, an elderly man and slightly deaf, who seemed to be the machinist of the ship's crew, was addressed by his companions as Stevart.

Valinziano is able to give but a slight description of the ship, as he was not allowed to approach closer than fifty feet, but says it appeared to be easily sixty feet in length and cigar-shaped, with a steering apparatus, the latter being the part on which repairs were being made.

The ship was constructed of some light-colored material, and from the vague description of the machinery, most of which is concealed, the motive power is thought to be electricity.

Large wings, of which there are a great many, were closely folded against the side of the ship. The two fishermen got started on their homeward trip about 4 P.M., and, having contrary tides to contend with, did not reach this city until 10 P.M.

At first his fellow-fishermen were inclined to make light of his story, and thought him a victim of hallucination, but Valinziano is anything but visionary, and is well known as a most reliable and intelligent man, and there is no doubt but that he is stating facts.

The Call correspondent has arranged to leave here at daylight in a company with Valinziano as guide, and visit the spot where the aeronauts made their camp. While it is probable they have long since taken flight, they must have left some indications of their visit. /

ANGELELOS CONVERTED. / They Give Interesting Testimony Regarding the Mystery of the Day.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 1.—The evidence that an aerial navigator is abroad in this part of the State is accumulating from many quarters from scores of individuals of unquestioned veracity.

All manner of more or less sensational reports were current upon the streets here last evening. One was that the ship had collapsed and fallen upon the Nadeau Hotel. Another was that it had swept over the Wilson black, opposite the Nadeau, and had suddenly risen to a great height.

Colonel Chase of the Nadeau denied having corralled the visitor for private uses, but had seen the lights overhead, along with half a dozen guests. Judge W.A. Ryan got a peep at the visitor on his way from dinner, and as a result his incredulity regarding aerial machines has been entirely removed.

Managing Editor Creighton of the Herald and several members of his staff saw the interesting machine. Mr. Creighton does not undertake to say ~~xxxxxx~~ that what he saw was an airship and neither does he dispute that apparent fact.

Conductor Johnson of the university line saw strange lights overhead and called the attention of his passengers to them while his car was at Second street, on Spring. Necks were craned and a great crowd soon gathered about the car and enjoyed the sight for several minutes. The editorial force of the Morning Times saw the lights and were greatly interested in the spectacle.

THEY SAW AN AIRSHIP. / Five Men Near Tulare Lake Witnessed Its Remarkable Flight.

According to the written statement of five men of Watertown, Fresno County, the airship passed over that part of the State in its flight to the northward. General Hart of this city, the attorney for the inventor, a week or so ago stated that the aeronaut proposed to take his airship into the higher and lighter atmosphere of the southern part of the State.

Since then hundreds of people in Los Angeles and along the route have seen lights that convinced them that they had seen the illuminated evidence of a ship of the sky.

From the later accounts the vessel must have started upon its return trip about the last day of November, as shown by the following letter sent from Watertown: / Watertown, Fresno County, Calif. / Nov. 29, 1896.

Editor Morning Call, San Francisco, Cal.—DEAR SIR: An airship of great magnitude passed over our town this evening at 8:45.

The light first appeared about ten miles south of here in the vicinity of Tulare Lake, and passed directly over the postoffice building, which is located near the southwest corner of section 11-19-19, M.D.M., and disappeared to the northward, in the direction of Mendota. The elevation at this point seemed to be about 400 feet, although at times it ~~xxxxxx~~ approached much nearer the earth. The light was intensely brilliant as it approached. After passing, the form of the ship and the propelling apparatus was plainly discernible against the clear sky. Human forms could be distinctly seen, but no intelligible utterance could be heard.

We would not hazard an opinion as to the rate of speed, but would say not less than fifteen miles an hour.

The undersigned are prepared to make oath to the above statement: Robert McQuarrie, Postmaster, / C.B. Hurlbut, Secretary West Side Canal and Land Company, / G.H. Brooman, artisan well-borer, Watertown, Fresno County, / H. Jerome Spaulding, caterer, / R. Preston Hurlbut, civil engineer.

[Fac-simile of letter received from Watertown, p. 9] / Viewed by Daylight.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Dec. 1.—Since the publication of the airship items from various portions of the State in The Call it has leaked out that some of the most responsible people in this city saw a strange object in the clouds on the afternoon preceding the first public sight of the mysterious searchlight in this city.

They claim that this object was at such an enormous height that they were unable to plainly distinguish its form, but also say that when it turned they caught the glint or shine as of a metallic object, and that frequently sheets of paper would slowly flutter earthward as though the occupants were casting them out for the purpose of ascertaining whether their vehicle was approaching or receding from the earth.

1896 December 3 (Th) San Francisco Examiner, p. 9.

Too Much Airship. / An Oregon Man's Mind Is Deranged by the Stories and He Is Sent to an Asylum.

PORTLAND, (Or.), Dec. 2.—From brooding over the sensational stories of the appearance of an alleged California airship and his failure to perfect an invention of what he claimed was an aerial vessel, Henry W. Herne, an eccentric individual living west of this city, has been committed to an insane asylum. Herne a few days ago became violently excited over the airship stories and declared one of his ideas was stolen in its makeup. The old man refused to eat and secluded himself from his neighbors till the attention of the authorities was called to him.

Nov. 26 p.6—There is only one paper in the U.S. that can't see a joke in the airship story.

That ship is suspected of being on an expedition in quest of a castle in the air.

28,6—Hardly had news of the arap's hostile intentions toward Havana been cabled there, than info was wired back that the guards of the city had been doubled.

Harpers Nov or Dec '96—"The Martian" by du Maurier.

Dec. 1 p.6—From the Papers of the Coast: Speaking of araps, "they've got 'em" in about every town of size, except Napa. This is a temperance town.—Napa "Register."

Fri. Dec. 4 p.6—Viewed in relation to the airship, with which it is intimately associated, there seems to be some doubt as to whether insanity is cause or effect.

26, 6—One esteemed contemporary, the "Call," would be fully justified in detailing a member of its justly celebrated staff to build an airship right away.

Tues Dec. 22, p. 16—Came in an Airship. Santa Claus ~~xxxxxx~~ Discarded His Reindeer Team and Took to a Flying Mach. to Visit Male Bros. (Santa comes in model arap w flapping wings, in window, w model of SF below and dolls looking up).

26, 2—Mirages in Alaska—monstrous serpents apparently several 100' long & sometimes w riders on their backs, are sometimes seen.

29,6—small illus. of Astron in '97—man looking through telescope at the moon, sky also full of araps.

1896 December 3 (Th) Anaheim Weekly Gazette, p. 1.

THAT AIRSHIP. / ANWFUL EFFECT OF THANKSGIVING TURKEY UPON AN INSANE EDITOR. / From the Santa Ana Blade.

The identical airship that waved its icy hand at Sacramento and gave the marble heart to Placerville and which set all San Francisco arap as it soared over the Twin Peaks of the metropolis, passed us by last night.

Speeding through the heavens at a breakneck pace and with a fearful disregard for any of the fixed planets which might be in its way, this great unknown thing with eyes of fire and tongue of flame was seen high in the air twixt the hours of 11 and 12 Thursday eve.

Its flight was marked by a trail of twinkling lights. And so low did it fly that the hum of its hundreds of wheels could be distinctly heard as it rolled and bowed along in a trackless sea of virgin ether.

Many there be who saw the lights of this nocturnal and aerial rover. Beatrice Harriden's famous ship was nowhere in point of comparison created. The testimony of the more credulous eye witnesses can be secured to the end that they heard singing and instrumental music aboard the queer traveler which chose no uncommon path and such as scarcely hours for its trip from north to south.

All unannounced it came straight out of the banks of space above Anaheim as the last minutes of a happy Thanksgiving were being ticked away. Only late travelers abroad, while the city lay sleeping, saw the strange visitor. From the north it came sailing along, rising and falling in an unsteady but rapid course to the southland.

It was full ten minutes after it dove in sight before the last rays of its electric brilliancy faded away in the southern skies.

When directly overhead the shape of the ship was easily discernible. It resembled a huge Silkwood cigar. From either end extended propellers and from the sides light paddle wheels. As from time to time the rays of powerful electric lights from within played upon the outside of the flying affair it was evident the sides were either aluminum or steel, they glistened so.

1896 December 3 (Th) Merced (Calif) Star, p. 3.

THE AIRSHIP. /

The manipulator of the much-discussed airship, whoever he may be, has at last taken in Merced in the course of his nocturnal flights, and there are many firm believers in the existence of the wonder, who were skeptical previous to Monday night.

About 8:30 Monday night a very bright red light was seen approaching Merced from the west. The light rapidly grew larger and brighter, until coming nearly over the town the visitor veered around describing a large circle in the air and as rapidly disappeared, going almost directly north. During the time it was making the circle observers noted three large lights, which merged into one as it started off on the northward course.

Speculation was rife as to the nature of the strange visitor. Some skeptics could not be convinced and insisted that some practical joker had sent up a balloon with a light attached to it, nor would they change their belief when enthusiastic watchers pointed out that whatever it was, it was going at a high rate of speed directly against the wind. The majority of those who saw the wonder are firmly convinced that the airship is now a settled fact and that Merced's aerial visitor was the invention that has been so much discussed of late.

1896 December 3 (Th) Salinas (Calif.) Index, p. 1.

That Air Ship Again.

A large, spherical body with scintillating lights, high up in the sky and majestically sailing over these benighted regions where Monterey and Pacific Grove are supposed to be, was observed by a dozen people on the streets of Salinas about 7 o'clock last night. The word was quickly passed along the street and soon there were many dozens of men anxious to catch a glimpse of the aerial vessel. A gentleman talking through the telephone to Pacific Grove was told to wait as the operator in that town wanted to see the airship. The vision lasted about fifteen minutes and then disappeared. There is no question about its being an airship because there are any number of credible witnesses ready to swear they saw it.

p. 2: Koren. That airship business was a godsend to the great San Francisco dailies, as it filled in a gap between election and the holidays.

Nov. 19, p. 1: Pacific Coast News. / A machine is being constructed at Hoboken, N.J., in which the inventor proposes to fly overland to California in 48 hours. Hunters should make a note of it and not shoot it.

Nov. 26, 3d: Local Brevities. / Mysterious rumors have been floating around for a day or two past in regard to the launching (sailing ~~xxxxxx~~ rather) of a mythical airship. Its appearance is expected to be unexpected and sensational. So far as the Index could learn the embarkation is to take place across the river in the Toro, and the proposed course of navigation will bring it to the Court house in this city.

3f: Sacramento people have been somewhat worked up by the appearance of a strong high electric light passing over the city at a considerable elevation. It is said to be a successful trial of an arc lamp.

4a: A mysterious flying machine has been sailing over Sacramento, Oakland and other places. Its bright lights are always seen at night and the big daily papers are full of it. Bro. Bradford of the Owl sighted it as it passed over Salinas Saturday evening.

1896 December 3 (Th) Reno Evening Gazette, p. 1.

The Airship. / It Was Seen Floating About Southwest of Town Last Night. Reno has been favored with a visit of the much-talked-of San Francisco airship, unless some of the reputed citizens have wheels in their heads.

A strange light was visible floating about in the western heavens last evening about 7 o'clock, and was seen by several gentlemen of unquestioned integrity.

Prof. H.E. Wilson, Professor of Chemistry, at the University Experiment Station, saw a strange light over the Mackey and Fair mountain southwest of town, and to use Prof. Wilson's own language: "A light as large as an electric arc lamp light, I saw over the Mackey and Fair mountain last night about 7 o'clock; it seemed to be moving toward town and shortly disappeared over the mountain."

"I would not like to say," said Prof. Wilson, "that it was an airship, but it was something very phenomenal. My wife saw it at the same time I did."

Harry Martin of the Reno Mercantile Co., and Manager Brown of the Western Union saw the same strange light. They are all reputable citizens and could not be mistaken.

The circumstance reminds one of a little story. Several years ago in Carson, a gentleman given to imbibing freely from the cup that makes merry, saw an ordinary mud turtle one night in a saloon in that city. His eyes (the man's, not the turtle's) began to bulge out, as he asked the proprietor, "What's that?" When told it was a turtle he said—"Sure! Well, I'm devilish glad it's a turtle, for I thought I had the jim-jams."

The story, however, is in no way applicable to this case.

1896 December 4 (Fri.) The Call (San Francisco), p. 1. (card 1)

PLUNGED FROM A DIZZY HEIGHT. / An Airship Lying Helpless on the Twin Peaks. / IT LANDED SUDDENLY IN A DITCH. / Two Men Came to Grief in a Forty-Foot Mystery. / IT IS RUN BY GAS AND ELECTRICITY. / Speculation as to Where It Came From--The Owners Very Reticent. /

An airship built of galvanized sheet steel, forty feet long, caused much excitement among the people on the Mission hills last evening. They saw it sail over the Twin Peaks and then getting out of order in some way it made a wild plunge into a gulch 200 yards south of the Corbett road, near what is known as Stanford Heights.

Its two occupants were turned out of the cockpit in which they sat and stood and landed badly bruised in the bottom of the gulch.

When seen late at night by two Call reporters the huge metal affair presented a pitiable appearance.

The propeller was twisted and bent; one elevating fan was ripped off and lay on the ground, while the other was badly twisted from the force of the shock.

A large hole in its side permitted the escape of a sickish smoky smelling gas. The steering apparatus, rudder as it was called, which had been on the bow was also broken off.

As stated, the machine was about forty feet long and was of cylindrical shape, with both ends cone-shaped.

Near by stood one of the bold, but unlucky aeronauts, J.D. deGear of 538 Fulton street.

He looked woefully at the wreck, and thanked his lucky stars that he was still alive. The other man, the inventor, had disappeared as soon as he found that no bones were broken.

Dr. Gear positively refused to reveal the name of the inventor.

Dr. Gear upon being pressed told in substance the following story of the airship and the accident:

"I am a tin-roofer and metal-worker, and the inventor who has the money is a well-educated man. Some time ago we decided to build an airship, and we built this one in the Mission. We put it together up the hill back of here in a clump of trees.

"This was our first attempt to make a flight. The hydrogen gas used is made from muriatic acid, and the fans and propellers are operated by electricity.

"This evening the inventor and I started out from the hill up yonder to see how it would work, but after we got started we failed to rise over ten feet from the ground, as the metal of the fans was too thin for the work they had to do.

"In a short time we saw we had trouble ahead, for we lost control of it and away we went.

"I can't describe the sensation better than to say it was a feeling similar to that one has when he had a nightmare and dreams that he is falling.

"You see we started high up the hill so our downward flight was very long, or so it seemed to us. But we were in for it and did not have very long to wait.

"When we struck we struck hard in the soft ground, and the force of our flight carried us over and into the gulch, where we were thrown to the bottom of the ditch.

"No, I will not tell who the inventor is nor where it was built. We are not discouraged, for we know we can fly when this is perfected. It needs strengthening."

"Is this one of the ships seen over the City with electric lights etc.?" was asked.

"No, it is not. We don't know any of the people connected with airships the papers have mentioned.

"This is a private enterprise. D--- the luck," and he scraped a chunk of mud off his coat.

The first news of the unfortunate airship was obtained from Edile H. Lapison, who has a milk ranch about 200 yards from where the airship lies. In his words he said:

"I was about to go to bed when I heard a h--- of a noise down the pasture. It sounded like a collision of trains loaded with coal-oil cans.

"A second later I heard two voices down the gulch crying 'Help, help!' I went down there with the lantern and found this affair."

Mr. Laplace says that the ship could not have been built near this place for there are no trees there to conceal it and he knew every inch of the country thereabouts.

He is sure that the airship came from a distance, but how far he is unable to say.

He says that as soon as the inventor learned that he was about to telephone to town from the Alms house, he skipped out for the city, but not before the two had stripped the wrecked vessel of all the electric apparatus appliances and storage batteries, so as to prevent curious outsiders from getting an idea of the theory and principles they are working on.

The machine ~~measures~~, in a manner, to the usual cigar shape. It is about forty feet in length and is built of galvanized sheet steel.

The main body or hull of the contrivance is cylindrical in shape, ten feet in diameter and twenty feet in length.

Attached with rivets and thoroughly soldered to the body are two metal cones each ten feet in length.

Two eight-bladed fans, each a few inches over six feet in diameter, are located on top of the body, and are evidently capable of tremendous speed.

The vessel is fitted with a huge propeller, also eight-bladed, which is furnished with power from a steel shaft running to the center of the hull.

A similar shaft runs forward and protrudes through the end of the front cone, and to this shaft the rudder or steering apparatus is attached.

In the center of the ship lies the secret which its builder refuses to thoroughly explain--the vessel's motive power.

He acknowledges the power to be an intricate electrical apparatus, run by storage batteries and connected by means of a worm and cog to the driving gear.

He also says that the storage batteries are capable of carrying sufficient electricity to run incandescent lights, one of which, the aeronaut said, is always brightly burning when the aerial machine is in motion.

Buoyancy is produced by gas generated within the hull by means of muriatic acid and other chemicals.

The gas has a nauseating odor and fumes which leave a sweet taste on the lips and produce ~~an~~ drowsiness.

It does not seem to be a common gas. What its capacity as a lifting gas is, however, another proposition.

It must be unusually great as the airship, built of sheet steel, carrying fans, a propeller, electrical apparatus and two men, weighs many hundreds of pounds.

The gas produces sufficient buoyancy to almost lift the ship and its load from the ground.

After being filled with gas the top fans are revolved at great speed, and after the machine is lifted a few feet above the earth the propeller is set going and, the navigators say, the machine sails away.

The machine sailed quite a distance, according to its builder's testimony, before it woke the neighborhood with the thunderous rattle of its impromptu landing.

It was stripped of all its electrical apparatus and the inventor, who risked his life in order to perfect the machine, skipped away in the dark and hid away his treasured secrets. /

A STRANGE VISITOR. / Excitement Caused by the Landing of a Tin Ship Near the Alms house.

Captain Reddy, superintendent of the Alms house, reported last night that a man called at his office about 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon and asked for the telephone number of the Chutes. The number was given and he called up Mr. Riley.

In the conversation he said to Riley: "We will make a break or make a start to-night." The man who used the telephone gave his name, but Captain Reddy does not remember it.

Last night a boy came to the Alms house very much excited, saying that the airship had fallen in a gulch between Sunnyside and the Alms house.

In an interview Captain Reddy last night gave this narrative:

"Dr. Conlin and I started for the place where the ship was reported to be. We found the machine about a mile from the Alms house. It was between thirty and forty feet long and weighed, I should think, 250 pounds.

"It was made of common tin, and to it was attached propeller blades made of the same material. The man in charge of the ship said he had started from the hill above. I examined the machine, and it looked too heavy and clumsy to fly.

"There was no storage battery visible. The ~~man~~ man said he had a partner who had taken the machinery out. He said the lifting power was gas, but I saw no compartment or place where sufficient gas could be stored to lift the ship. I did not see the ship in the air, although the boy who gave us the news said he saw it come down."

"I examined the contrivance closely," continued Captain Reddy, "and observed that it had been freshly painted, but the paint was worn off, indicating that it had been dragged over the ground some distance. The propeller was very flimsy, and seemed as if it could not impart any force in revolving. The tin of the body of the ship was dented in places.

"From the story told about the partner who had removed the machinery, and from the flimsy appearance of the machine, I came to the conclusion that the whole thing was a fake, and that the airship had been dragged to that place."

1896 December 4 (Fri), San Francisco Chronicle, p. 5.

AN AIRSHIP WHICH RODE IN A WAGON. / WAS PLANTED IN A GULCH. / THE LATEST FAKE TO DECEIVE THE CREDULOUS. / Build of Galvanized Iron and Conveyed to a Secluded Spot. /

The Call's airship was found early this morning. The "sdraph of the air" spread its wings like a "giant condor of the Andes" and slid down the hill in the vicinity of the Sunnyside House on the Corbett road and with a peculiar whirring sound scraped all the paint off its underside.

It landed ignominiously, like its great prototype invented by Darius Green, for lucklessly the spot chosen for its resting-place was a cow pasture.

Sunnyside House on the Corbett road fronts a milk ranch and the herders heard a noise shortly before midnight that they describe as like an earthquake. Rushing forth they heard cries proceeding from an ill-favored gulch where the cows ruminated at night time. Going to the spot they found a strange looking craft of metal, modeled, no doubt, after a seagull with wings and propellers.

They did not examine the machine closely, for the writhing forms of two men appealed to their humanity. The writhing forms were soon out of their misery and recovered sufficiently to explain that they were the inventors and builders of an airship in which they had been sailing about when the machinery got out of order and they fell to earth. In proof they pointed to the immense cigar-shaped metallic tube, with its propellers and wings. Messengers were hurried to the Almshouse for medical assistance and word was conveyed to the press.

When the Almshouse physicians and the reporters arrived it took but a moment to puncture the "fake." Captain Reddy recognized in Professor J. D. de Gear, the inventor, a man who had, through the Almshouse telephone, called up a prominent local amusement director during the afternoon whom he assured that everything was all right and that "she would go tonight, sure."

The reporters found that the airship was constructed of galvanized iron; that the paint was not yet dry upon it, and that the propeller blades would bend at a touch, and the thing was left to rest where it had fallen.

The inventor vainly endeavored to convince them that it had once sailed the skies, but under close questioning admitted that it had been hauled to the crest of the hill on a wagon, dumped over and dragged down into the gulch where it was found.

1896 December 4 (Fri) San Francisco Examiner, p. (card 1)

THAT AIRSHIP, IT WON'T STAY PUT. / Cornered in a Forest Near the Sad Sea's Shore, but Gets Away. / Even the Hardy Fishermen of Monterey Who Saw the Thing at Bay Evasish. / ESCAPES LIKEWISE FROM STANFORD. / Academic Groves No More Congenial to this Wanderer of the Void Than Pacific Grove or Orville.

PACIFIC GROVE, December 3.--You remember, reader, that sonorous line of Henry V: "All things are ready, if our minds be so."

Apparently the San Francisco daily yclept the "Call" has this point of view as to the airship, that phantom of the night. The airship is ready, heaven be praised, if only the human intellect can bolstered be to think so. Venus, Mars or which you will of the "isles of light"--indeed, any old thing, will answer the purpose, provided it be viewed from a friendly standpoint, as witness the stories--fast growing beyond numbers, no two agreeing--for which that journal stanchly vouches.

Somewhere, surely, amidst this multitude of floating things the airship ought to be, on every principle of the philosophy of chance. 'Tis hard if all is false that I advance.

A fool must now and then be right by chance. Howbeit, the report that it has been at anchor on the beach of Monterey will have to be courteously and reluctantly but none the less stoutly denied.

This report, published in the "Call" this morning, begins in this way:

That the problem of navigating the air has at last been successfully solved there no longer remains a doubt. At an early hour this morning, some fifteen miles from Pacific Grove, two Italian fishermen, Giuseppe Valinziano and Luigi Valdivia, while engaged in their vocation, were completely terrorized by seeing an object descending from the heavens, which to their terror-stricken imaginations seemed to be falling directly upon their boat. When the object had fallen within some few hundred yards of the water it floated easily and at a moderate speed until it landed on the sandy beach. The airship, for such it proved to be, seemed to be under the perfect control of its occupants, three in number. Immediately on landing they alighted, and, picking up their ship, carried it back from the beach and into the woods. As soon as the two fishermen had recovered from their astonishment they drew in their nets and attempted to make a landing, and after several unsuccessful attempts to get through the surf, which was very rough, a landing was made.

A close search of the peninsula fails to reveal this convenient forest, and the most faithful questioning of all the fishermen who go down to the sea thereabouts has not yielded the faintest tidings of the men with the musical names--Giuseppe Valinziano and Luigi Valdivia. Nor at Monterey could be heard or seen of them, or of any who have ever set eyes on them or ever expected so to do.

Nevertheless, inquiry was not altogether fruitless. It yielded this plain tale: The conductor of the train running from San Francisco to Pacific Grove said: "At 2:30, just as we were about to push out of the Third and Townsend depot, a man hurried up to me and asked if I would kindly deliver a letter to the Pacific Grove telegraph operator and ask him to wire it to the 'Call' office after 7:30 o'clock. I did as I was told, and that's all I know about it." The telegraph operator here declares that the telegram which was spread on the "Call's" first page this morning in all the glory of leaded type, was forwarded by request of a man who handed him an envelope and said: "Wire this to the 'Call.'" A. W. Jones Jr., the "Call's" correspondent here, denies that he was the author or sender of the message. And there you are.

The dispatch is so absurd that the people are disgusted. They think we are a set of idiots down here to thrust such nonsense in our teeth," said a member of the Town Board. "The story is a mass of the silliest lies and an imposition on common sense. The sooner such bosh is called off the better."

For all that it may be well to keep in mind this editorial declaration of the "Call":

The "Call" correspondent, who interviewed the fishermen, states that they have the reputation of being truthful and responsible tellers of the sea.

AND NOW STANFORD.

Now a Sensation Declined to Be Spoiled by Facts. STANFORD UNIVERSITY, December 3.--It may be just as well to explain that the "Call" story, published yesterday, to the effect that the airship had at last been seen here, is untrue.

The story was to the effect that three university students saw a light Monday night about 10:30 o'clock which they were inclined to think was the light of an airship. The students were represented as being very much excited over the sight and very much puzzled as to the true nature of it, and as having changed from a state of skepticism regarding the existence of an airship to one of perplexity and credulity.

The facts of the case are that the three students in question saw a light, but knew from the first that it could not be attached to an airship, because its motion was such as to prove conclusively that its support was a kite or balloon driven about by the wind. For the sake of a joke the three students claimed to have seen General Hart's aerial visitor or one of the swarms of them that fills the air every night according to the testimony of eye-witnesses whose veracity cannot be impeached. Their story soon spread about the men's dormitory and occasioned some talk, but very few were blind to the fact that the boys were "joshing." Indeed, quite a number of other students saw the "mysterious" light at the same time and knew that the three had no idea that there was anything wonderful about it. Then a little later in the morning, when the students began to arrive from Palo Alto, it was learned that the light was that of a fire balloon sent up by Douglas Bartholomew, the proprietor of the Pala Restaurant. The "Call" correspondent was informed of the solution of the matter, but his story was already written, and it was better to add the weight of the testimony of University students to the support of a fantastic sensation than to spoil a good yarn, so along it went to the "Call" and led another trustful "scoop."

The students are agreed, however, with the "Call's" opening statement:

Mystery deep and impenetrable still enshrouds the mysterious client of ex-Attorney-General Hart and his tantalizing and equally mysterious cruisers of the upper air.

Certainly nothing has been observed here that tends to strip away any of this raven mystery.

This all, of course, taking the "Call's" word for it, that there is a mystery.

An Airship at Twin Peaks.

One airship has been captured at last, but it wasn't the Shortridge Thunderbird. It was just a big cigar-shaped galvanized tank, with lots of wheels and a bright, wax-walrd light.

Emil Laplace, the florist, who lives on Stanford Heights, about half a block south of the Twin Peaks, was startled out of his slumbers last night by a most fix frightful clatter and unearthly uproar in a deep ravine near his home. He roused his family and they all rushed out to ascertain the cause of the clamor.

They found that J. de Gear had come to grief in his initial attempt to fly. His machine had collapsed and he himself was somewhat bruised by his fall.

De Gear says that for five or six months past he has been working on a flying machine for a capitalist whom he will not name. The machine consists of an iron or steel tank, cigar-shaped and about forty feet long. In the center is an opening, where the navigator sits and steers. There is a propeller in front and one at the rear and one on each side. The tank is filled with gas and then the propellers are set in motion by a small electric motor that also feeds an incandescent headlight.

De Gear and his employer took the machine out to Stanford Heights last night. They got it onto a hill of sharp grade and then set the dynamo in motion. De Gear got in and soared about fifteen feet down hill when the crash came and then they picked him up. He says that there was not enough gas on board and that the wheels were too small. He will haul the wrecked airship back to town to-day and perhaps will some night try another flight.

HEARST AND HIS TWO FACES / Editor Hearst Has One Opinion East and Another Here. / The "Journal" Describes the Invention and Credits the Phenomenon. / News of the Aerial Visitor as the Wires Flash It From Neighboring Localities. /

The many Jekyll-Hyde features of "Little Willie's" journalistic character are beautifully exemplified in the two views of the phenomenon that has recently appeared in the heavens hereabouts which have from time to time appeared in the Examiner here and in the New York Journal of New York City--both Mr. Hearst's newspapers.

In spite of the testimony of many reputable witnesses that strange moving lights have been seen in the sky the Examiner has continually referred to these phenomena as the result of "red eye" and midnight walks near breweries.

The following parallel columns concerning the airship, taken from Mr. Hearst's two papers, give a fair idea of how little one may depend upon anything seen in either paper: AN AIRSHIP SEEN. (N.Y. Journal, Nov. 28)

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 27.--The biggest problem of the age has been solved. Man has won what seemed to be his hardest battle with nature. A successful airship has been built. Scientists all over the world are tremendously interested by the stories which have been telegraphed from here; nearly everybody on the Pacific Coast is widely excited over the matter.

The story sounds like one of the romances of Jules Verne, but its truth is testified to by so many reputable citizens that there seems to be no reason whatever to question its accuracy.

EVIDENCE FIRST CLASS. / (N.Y. Journal, Nov. 28)
A WORKING AIRSHIP SEEN ON THE PACIFIC COAST--UNDER PERFECT CONTROL--IT CARRIES FIFTEEN MEN AND A SEARCH LIGHT.

The Pacific Coast newspapers are full of stories about an airship seen hovering above Sacramento and other towns. The testimony concerning it seems to be unimpeachable, but certain details are lacking which make Eastern inventors and scientists doubt the accuracy of the statements of alleged eye-witnesses.

IT WAS A REALITY. (N.Y. Journal, Nov. 28)

It swiftly drew near the city, sailing evenly to the southwest.

Then it dropped nearer the earth, but suddenly shot up into the air again, as if the force that whirled it through space were sensible to the danger of collision with objects on the earth.

That much hundreds of prominent residents of Sacramento saw, and it caused consternation in all parts of the city, where groups gathered at the corners until far into the night listening to the tale of those that had seen it.

ONLY A DELUSION. S.F. Examiner, Nov. 24.

The man who has not an airship in his back yard in these days is poor indeed. The man who has not seen a fleet of airships maneuvering in the skies has left California ashamed of himself. He is like the man who fell out of the balloon. He is not in it. They come not in single ships, but in battalions. The county or town in the State which cannot produce a machinery bird or two is hiding its head in shame.

The strange thing about the positions of the two papers is the fact that the descriptions that appeared in the Eastern paper were probably

PROBABLY DUE TO LIQUOR. (San Francisco Examiner, Nov. 21)
There are men who see queer things when they don't have a gun, and others who encounter wonders of an early morn or even at devy eve when it has been more devy than the law allows.

THE RESULT OF BEER / (S.F. Examiner Nov. 23)

At Sacramento a man wandering in the immediate vicinity of a brewery saw a great light and a dark mass moving up and down the sky

IT COULD NOT BE. (Examiner, Nov. 23)

What this thing is nobody knows. That it is an airship capable of carrying human freight seems impossible of belief, in view of the record of failure in the past. If some joker has turned loose a fire balloon to perplex and mystify that might account for the airship on an intelligible basis.

SURELY AND AIRSHIP. N.Y. Journal, Nov. 28.

For purposes of self-protection during the pendency of his application for letters patent, the inventor has not disclosed all the details of his contrivance. Enough, however, has been discovered to show that he has found the true principle of aerial navigation. The excitement here has assumed the form of a tremendous sensation. It is the one topic of conversation in every village, town and city in the State. In California the prevailing question to-day is: "Have you seen the airship?" That there is reason for that question the following facts strongly demonstrate:

written in the Examiner office. They doubtless represent the San Francisco editor's real views, while the light vein pursued here has doubtless been because the paper pook-pooed the real news the first day it was driven to give it later, after the chagrin of being beaten by The Call the first day. /

AIRSHIP AT LIVERMORE. / Editor Ellis of the "Herald" Gives His Views of the Machine.

The following article will appear in the Livermore Herald to-day, giving the views of Editor Ellis:

The Herald may be a little late in coming to the front with an airship story, but nevertheless it has one, and as for its authenticity man in Alameda County can doubt. The parties who witnessed this remarkable phenomenon are none other than the Rev. John Kirby of Oakland, presiding elder of the Oakland district, and Rev. Hugh Copeland.

Rev. Mr. Kirby was in Livermore Wednesday of this week and in the presence of Rev. Mr. Alexander, pastor of the Methodist Church, and Madison Beck of the firm of Beck & Co., made this statement:

"On the evening of November 22 Rev. Hugh Copeland and myself were riding in a buggy in the vicinity of Knights Ferry in Stanislaus County. We were just crossing a bridge when our attention was riveted to an object about a quarter of a mile ahead of us. It appeared at first like a huge ball of fire that rose from the earth.

"We were traveling in a southwesterly direction at the time and stopped our buggy to gaze in wonderment upon this startling and unexpected scene. It sailed along above the surface of the ground for probably 100 yards, then gradually raised higher and higher. Had it continued its course when we first saw it, it would have passed almost directly above us, but instead made a half circle to the west and north and was about the same distance when it reached a point opposite to us as it was when we first noticed it. Before it passed us we could plainly see two lights in front and at right angles of the flying machine, and as it was going by we saw a light, that was not visible before, attached to and at the rear of the object. We watched it for some time before continuing our journey. It could not have been a meteor because it did not go to the earth, but skimmed along rapidly.

"Had I been alone I might have believed that my eyes deceived me, but there was Mr. Copeland, who witnessed the same scene, and there is no possibility of our being mistaken. I had believed that the successful navigation of an airship was beyond the reach of mortal skill, but I look at it in a different light now. I do not claim, mind you, that what we saw that night was a genuine airship, but the natural question that arises is, if it was not an airship, what was it? I saw enough to convince me that the papers have no grounds to picture this phenomenon in the light of a burlesque. When we reached Stockton the following day the papers were full of descriptive accounts of an airship in Yuba County that pictured exactly what we had seen on November 22."

OAKLAND, Cal., Dec. 3.--The Rev. John Kirby, presiding elder of the Oakland district for the past two years, and pastor of the Park-street M.E. Church of Alameda six years previous to that, was interviewed at his home on Park street, Alameda, at night. He repeated and confirmed the story as told above and added: "After reading the accounts of the airship in the Call I clipped them and forwarded them to Mr. Copeland at Oakland. To-day I received a reply in which he says: 'If there is an airship we shall share in the glory. People in Oakland saw it on the same night.'" /

STRAINED NEAR FRESNO. / The Great Airship Caught in a Current and Sent Southward.

FRESNO, Cal., Dec. 4.--The skepticism of the people of this city regarding the existence of the airship has been removed largely by a strange statement of George Jennings, one of the proprietors of the bar in the Grand Central Hotel. He is a thoroughly reliable man and there is good ground to give credence to his story. He avers that he is practicing no deception. Mr. Jennings asserts that there is no question that an airship exists and that it has been sailing through the skies as reported. He talked with the inventor and the craft is now somewhere in Fresno County, not far from this city.

Mr. Jennings was interviewed by a Call correspondent this evening and made the following statement: "Yesterday shortly before noon a man appeared at my place of business and inquired for me. The stranger was covered with dust and travel-stained. I recognized him as an old friend whose name I cannot possibly give at present. It is true the airship is in Fresno County, just where I do not myself know. This man who was in here is one of the inventors. He told me that the trip to this county was involuntary upon the part of the men in the airship. In other words the machine came itself and they couldn't stop it.

"His statement was that they were flying, as usual, around Contra Costa County hills and rose to a height of about 1000 feet. Suddenly the airship struck a current of air and refused to answer its steering gear. It was borne rapidly southward against all efforts to change its course until suddenly the current of air seemed to lessen and the machine once more became manageable. The men aboard at once descended and flew about looking for a hiding place, which they at length found.

"My friend told me that their ship was made principally of aluminum and that the rising and falling was accomplished by improved aeroplanes, while the motive power was electricity. He says the machine is perfect, except for the fact that at times it refuses to be steered in a given direction, and that it will not stand still in the air. He has gone to San Francisco and will return with some material and men probably to-night. He said if the news from Washington was satisfactory, he would bring his airship over to Fresno where every one could see it.

"I know the man well," concluded Mr. Jennings. "He had no reason to tell me such a story if it was not true. He had no business here, know no one but myself and left without asking any favors. Moreover, he wanted the matter kept quiet." /

OVER SELMA. / Reputable Citizens View a Strange Aerial Traveler.

SELMA, Cal., Dec. 4.—The airship, or some other aerial traveler of like appearance, passed over Selma last night between 9 and 10 o'clock. It was seen by many reputable citizens. N.W. Stewart, grain merchant, went to the door of his residence about 9:30 o'clock and saw a light approaching from the west. It had the appearance of a locomotive headlight and was apparently about 150 feet above the earth.

Mr. Stewart called to his family, and all saw the wonderful light pass over the town and disappear in an easterly direction. It was traveling at about the speed of a passenger-train.

C.S. Reichard, attorney-at-law, and many other persons also saw the remarkable light.

There is no question about an airship having passed over this part of Fresno County last night. / THE WOMAN IN IT. / Strange and Circumstantial Story of a Sailor Passenger.

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Cal., Dec. 4.—William Gordon reached this town this morning. He states that he is a native of South Carolina and a truthful person, a graduate of Berkeley, but recently a sailor and just from New York.

His story is that yesterday evening about 9 o'clock, he was at Indio, and responded to the inquiries of a stranger who was looking for some one able to splice a rope. Gordon, being a sailor, offered his services, which were accepted, and he followed the man who claimed to have a shybaling outfit about a mile from town to a place where he found a cigar-shaped structure about 80 feet long and 25 feet in diameter. The structure was standing on projections, and had under it two propellers, five-bladed, say 15 feet across. There was a huge tail, which served as a rudder, of which the tiller-ropes had parted. Gordon spliced them.

The structure was of metal. There were a number of windows and two doors. The interior was divided into compartments and the motive power, which the captain stated was compressed air, seemed to operate machinery contained in a great case and controlled by levers.

Gordon was invited to come along and did so. He was given the rudder, operated by a wheel, and followed the courses given him as shown by compass. They rose in the air to a great height, probably 3000 feet, and took a northerly course and traveled at enormous speed. In a few hours they passed over Los Angeles, easily known by its great number of lights, and then sped over Ventura, Santa Barbara and other places, and about 3 o'clock this morning settled down in a place in the mountains about six or eight miles southeast of this city.

Here the manager of the airship announced his intention of stopping a while and Gordon was sent for water, but after going a short distance he turned and discovered the strange vessel disappearing.

The airship man, Gordon says, was of swarthy appearance and spoke Spanish to the only companion he had, a woman. / A Fake of Showmen.

It developed yesterday that the cigar-shaped galvanized iron tank, constructed to resemble an airship, which was found late Thursday night in a gulch near the Almshouse, is a "fake" creation. It was carted to the point where found in order to provide some cheap advertising for a local place of amusement. Owing to the darkness and lateness of the hour the imposition escaped exposure, as there was neither opportunity nor time for a close or full investigation.

pic., p.1: The Great California Airship, as Shown in an Illustration in the New York "Morning Journal" of Sunday, November 28. The Article Which Accompanies the Illustration Says That the Witnesses of the Phenomenon Are All Credible. 1896 December 5 (Sat) San Francisco Chronicle, p. 16 (card 1)

DIZZY FAKE OF STANFORD HEIGHTS. / TIN TOY OF A METAL ROOFER. / THE "AIRSHIP" COULDN'T FLOAT ON WATER. / An Absurd Contrivance Bestowed in a Ditch for the Edification of the Credulous. /

All in the neighborhood of Stanford Heights turned out yesterday to look and laugh at the fly-by-night airship which ran off the track late Thursday night and ditched itself conveniently close to the Almshouse telephone. In consequence the Sunnyside inn did a thriving business in steam beer, of which Professor Frank de Gear, press agent of the weird machine, got more than his share. He and his brother, George, borrowed blankets and sheets from the milk ranch and carefully covered the "airship" to protect it from the rude gaze of the public, and then, lest a too curious investigation should strip it of its coverings, drove stakes and stretched ropes about it at a respectful distance.

The small boy is no respecter of ropes, and the seraph of the air, fallen from "dizzy heights," was soon stripped of its covering. Down into its interior one of them made his way by tearing up the floor of the cockpit. Once inside the full splendor of the fake was revealed.

The cylinder, about six feet in diameter, was built up around wooden ribs, and the plates, instead of being riveted together, were nailed to these ribs. The "sickening smell of gas made from muriatic acid and something else" came from the use of muriatic acid as a flux for the solder used in closing some of the joints.

The propeller shafts were fixed firmly in blocks of wood. They had no bearings and were never intended to revolve. Instead, the propellers revolved upon the shaft as loosely as the wheels of a carriage upon their axles. There were no worms and gearing to communicate power to the propellers, and if there had been a speed of fifty revolutions a minute would have thrown every one of the flimsy blades off, for they were made simply of galvanized iron, with rods around the edges to stiffen them, and were fastened to the hub by three rivets each. An inconsiderate skeptic tore one of the blades from its fastenings with his fingers and carried it home as a souvenir of the "airship."

Upon the inside of the cylinder, in great red letters, were these mystic words: "Junjata, H.M. & S., 30x96, 16-117." An enthusiastic believer in aerial navigation declared this to be a cabalistic sign indicative of the forces used to propel the "mysterious visitant." A more practical every-day fellow said it was the brand of the metal used. Holbrook, Max Merrill & Stetson confirmed the latter view and said that it denoted a certain brand of galvanized iron made for them, of size 30x96 inches and of weight sixteen ounces to the square foot and 117 pounds to the bundle. They also knew De Gear, but had no record of the sale to him of any such material.

That Havens is in no danger of annihilation at the hands of De Gear is a certainty. Indeed the latter will have not even the consolation of getting the "airship" on exhibition. The amusement manager who has engaged it as a forthcoming attraction has decided to have no more to do with it. "After the newspaper articles of this morning," said he, "it would prove to be a negative attraction."

Still there are people who believe that the problem of aerial flight has been solved by De Gear, and among those most thoroughly convinced are those who in public print yesterday declared it had fallen from "dizzy heights," that it was built of galvanized steel; that it had cleft the air on its gigantic pinions. That the builder of this famous flying machine drew his inspiration from the same source as comes all these assurances of the existence of an airship is made certain by a comparison of the contrivance itself with the published pictures of the "mysterious aerial craft cleaving the sky like winged lightning," as drawn by "special artists from descriptions" given by reputable people.

That the clumsy contrivance did not fall from any height dizzy or otherwise is proved by the fact that the sticky soil whereon it reposes is not indented in the least, and the sharp-pointed prow did not force its way a hair's breadth into the bank against which it was supposed to have struck.

Jefferson de Gear, brother of the press agent, called at the "Chronicle" office last night and made a statement as to the purpose of constructing the machine.

"I am not its inventor," he said. "I was simply employed as an expert cornice-maker to build the machine and put it where it was found. Yes, it was built for exhibition purposes. It took over three bundles of galvanized iron to construct it, and the thing weighed over 400 pounds. I built it in two nights and one day, and had eleven men working on it Wednesday night. I think I deserve credit for the job; it was a good piece of work."

Fired Him at San Luis Obispo.

SAN LUIS OBISPO, December 4.—A man of good appearance arrived late to-night. He says his name is William Gordon, and that he came to this county in an airship from San Bernardino county, and was then made to leave the ship by the owner, who went north. The man seems to be sane.

The Airship at Lodi.

LODI, December 4.—Between 6 and 7 o'clock this evening several reputable citizens saw the alleged airship traveling rapidly to the south. One man says he saw some kind of a body above and below the brilliant light, and is convinced that some large object passed through the air going northwest.

(Pic: The Almshouse "Airship" As She Lies and the Press Agent Ditto. Jefferson de Gear, Builder of the Fake Airship. (Sketched by Chron. Artist)

1896 December 5 (Sat) Daily Humboldt Times (Eureka, Calif.), p.4.

About Town

A red lantern at the top of a flagpole on Torrent engine house Wednesday night was mistaken by many for the mysterious light of the equally mysterious airship. So keen were the imaginations of some of the beholders, that with the aid of it and their opera glasses they were enabled to see the outlines of the airship and a man who was supposed to be the engineer.

Dec. 12 p.2 Inventor La Roche of Hoboken plans to fly to Calif in 48 hrs.

Jan. 2 '97 Mr. Eddy of [Rippon] N.J. flies kite. 1896 December 5 (Sat) Redwood City (Calif) Times-Gazette, p. 3.

To William Brown belongs the honor of discovering the much-talked-of airship. Early Monday morning he saw a small object somewhat the shape of a balloon descend on one of the Brittan hills and went at once to the place. He found a toy balloon about three feet high and encircling it was the advertisement of Nolan Bros., shoe dealers, San Francisco. Inside was a red light, and no doubt those who saw it in the skies the evening before were sure they had seen the flying machine. Many metropolitan firms take this means of advertising and this may account for the numerous airships seen by people throughout the State. 1896 December 5 (Sat) Redwood City, Calif., Times-Gazette, p.3.

COAST AND BAY-SIDE NEWS. /...

The whole of California seems wild over the newly invented airship, and the people of Pescadero have a word to say relative thereto. It—the airship—sailed over our little town, and away far off over the "white elephant" on pebble beach one night last week, and to the surprise of all it was captured. Yes, verily, it fell by a shot from the rifle of Constable Geo. Smith, and to add greatly to the surprise of all those present, it proved to be a large rubber bladder or balloon bearing the advertisement of a firm in San Francisco. George has the airship on exhibition now so that all may see what one-half the world is worrying over.

The Woman in Black.

A spook in sombre robes is said to be seen evenings between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock on Stambaugh street. The denizens of that part of town are greatly wrought up over the strange apparition and steps are being taken to have the ghostship find some other quarters for her wanderings. Several parties have seen a tall woman in black black quietly walking up and down the street night for over a week and no one has had the temerity to inquire about her apparent aimless wanderings.

Santa Rosa was visited about a week ago by a woman in black and the result was that six houses were entered and robbed, one gentleman having $3,000 stolen from his residence.

1896 December 5 (Sat) Reno Evening Gazette, p. 3.

The Airship Again.

The "airship" was seen again last night. A Gazette reporter was fortunate enough to "see it" floating over the Mackay and Fair mountain about 6:30 last evening. It was a very bright light, throwing out rays as if from an electric search-light. It finally disappeared over the mountain, the same way as the other night. We give it as our opinion that the "airship" was the evening star, Venus, now so brilliant in the southwestern heavens in early evening. The star, or "airship," is a magnificent sight and well worth seeing. The Gazette ran takes no stock in the "airship" fake, and, while he may be mistaken, he is willing to stake his reputation as an astronomer that the "airship" is the evening star Venus.

1896 December 6 (Sun) The Call (San Francisco), p.1. (card 1)

HEARST'S AIRY CHAMELEON. / In the New York Journal It Is a Bona Fide Flying Machine. / IN THE SAN FRANCISCO EXAMINER A FAKE. / Illustrations of the Sacramento Street Scene Were Sent From This City. / AN OSTRICH-LIKE ATTEMPT TO DELUDE THE PEOPLE. / Conflicting Stories Printed by the Siamese-Twin Faker Show the Unreliability of the Two Shameless Pappers. /

A further study of the New York Morning Journal's page indorsement of the San Francisco airship story confirms the opinion that it was written in the Examiner office for this City.

The illustrations of the street scene here during the passage of the aerial visitant appear to have been drawn in the Examiner office here.

The Call today reproduces in a diminutive form the picture that the Journal printed across an entire page, being a street scene in Sacramento during the night when some bright object passed over the City, attracting the attention of all who had eyes.

The incident illustrates as plainly as did the two views Mr. Hearst held on the gold question how the young millionaire toys with the truth and fakes here and there to cater to the strange mob that reads his papers.

Another illustration of the absolute unreliability of the Examiner and like instances appear in the Journal-is seen in yesterday's issue. Great space is given to the account of a supposed airship that was discovered in a gully near Twin Peaks a few nights ago. The Examiner's misleading description and great illustration might lead the reader to believe a bonafide airship had been found, whereas the most cursory examination shows that the tin rattle-trap discovered was a clumsy fake, probably projected by some advertising man who will seek to exhibit it later.

A little more detailed study of the article that appeared in the Journal of November 28 shows how fully the paper gave credence to the story which the Examiner here ridiculed because The Call had the news first. Among other things, after quoting a number of people, the Journal said:

"Hundreds of similar interviews could be obtained. Many practical electricians saw the strange light. All of them maintain that the searchlight was electrical in character. They say, too, that to produce a light of such power and brilliancy would require at least one horsepower, and that would mean a vessel capable of sustaining half a ton weight for the light alone. One thing all the witnesses of the phenomenon are positive of; that is that the searchlight was white, like that shed by an arc lamp.

The inventor of the successful airship is Dr. E.H. Benjamin of San Francisco. It is, however, suspected that this is an assumed name to conceal the inventor's real identity. His attorney is C.W. Collins, a prominent lawyer with offices at rooms 21 and 22 Crocker building, San Francisco."

Describing the appearance of the phenomenon seen in Sacramento, the Journal said:

"On the evening of Tuesday, November 17, many citizens of Sacramento, California, were surprised by the sudden appearance, directly over the city, of a startling aerial craft. The peculiar xxxxxx night visitant made its appearance about 7 o'clock. People standing on the sidewalks saw coming through the sky, over the housetops, a huge and brilliant light, propelled swiftly by some mysterious force. So brilliant was the light that as inmates went to their doors expecting to find a neighboring house in flames. Instead they saw a wonderful craft of the sky"

Throughout the Journal article the affirmation is made that what was seen was some craft in the sky, while every line that appeared in the Examiner pooh-poohed the idea. The articles aside by side show how unreliable the Examiner is in its handling of local news. Its real views appear in the Journal's account of the airship, while every line in the Examiner was written from the spirit of envy because it was originally beaten in the news.

As later evidence of the puerile, fantastic double-dealing of the Examiner of this City may be adduced the contradictory attitude of its local and editorial treatment of the "fake showman's" airship, exposed in The Call. In the local columns this is treated as a solemn, incontrovertible fact, to be viewed by visitors to Twin Peaks. Turning over the page, an editorial says:

"Two men in this City, apparently trying to turn the craze to financial account in the dime museum line, have just taken the trouble to build a forty-foot galvanized-iron "airship"; and roll it down a hill, with the safe chance of flattening themselves under it."

Again, in the face of the straight negating of The Call, and the warm championship of the airship by his New York Journal, Mr. Hearst in the Examiner of yesterday says, editorially:

"Fake Journalism" has a good deal to answer for, but we do not recall a more discreditable exploit in that line than the persistent attempt to make the public believe that the air in this vicinity is populated with airships. It has been manifest for weeks that the whole airship story is a pure myth. /

Shears and paste are cheap, and the Examiner, in its disgruntled envy caused by being outclassed in giving the news, might try to redeem itself by extracting some airship news from the columns of its Eastern supplement, the New York Journal.

pic.: The Sacramento Crowd Gazing at the Wonderful California Airship (Reproduced from the New York "Morning Journal" of November 29.) 1896 December 6 (Sun) The Call (San Francisco), p.6 (ed.) (card 1)

WITH ITS OWN PETARD. /

The Examiner was hoist with its own petard yesterday morning in a most awkward but highly entertaining way. It undertook with characteristic impudence to shift its established reputation as Monarch of the Fakers to other shoulders, with the result of fastening that reputation all the more firmly upon its own. In an editorial article entitled "The Airship Nuisance," which opens with the appropriate confession that "Fake Journalism has a good deal to answer for," the Monarch of the Fakers presumes to take The Call to task for publishing the news upon the subject of the airship. It charges The Call with a "prolonged attempt to humbug the community," and describes those who have testified to having seen the strange lights and other indicia of an aerial traveler as "practical jokers or unbalanced enthusiasts." It derides the whole subject as a "silly craze."

While engaging in this sort of drive editorially the Examiner locally delivered itself over to an already exploded airship fake of the most rank kind, devoting a page or more to the congenial labor of giving it the appearance of truth. In the headlines and body of the article it describes the TwinPeak contrivance as flying, and in a half-page illustration depicts it as the man who it states flew in it. That the Twin Peaks airship was a clumsy fraud it only required daylight to discover, and the fact that it was such was known about town at least twelve hours before the Examiner was vent to press. In fact it was just such a fake as led many people to believe it to be of that newspaper's own devising. It is evident that in this as in several other more or less important respects the right hand of the Monarch knoweth not what its left hand doeth.

By a happy coincidence The Call was enabled to supply yesterday another apt example of the duplicity of Mr. Hearst's organs in the matter of news. The New York Journal of last Sunday devoted an entire page to the California airship, giving a large cut of the vessel passing over Sacramento, with a long descriptive article under such headlines as "A Working Airship Seen on the Pacific Coast," and the like. The body of the Journal article contained the statements of many witnesses to the phenomenon, with the repeated assurance that they were persons of unimpeachable credibility and good repute. The article was evidently sent to the Journal from the Examiner office in San Francisco, and our "deadly parallel" proved that it was written at the very same time when the local Faker was casting all sorts of ridicule upon the idea of an existing airship, and was asserting that alleged observations thereof were had in suspicious proximity to breveries, and were made by those who had been viewing the heavens "through a glass darkly," so to speak.

The Call has carefully abstained from the expression of any opinion regarding the existence or non-existence of an airship, and intends to continue to do so while the subject remains in its present condition of doubt. It desires to submit, however, the following proposition to candid minds. If in its airship stories the New York Journal was indulging in an unwonted approach to the facts, has not the Examiner been willfully keeping itself quite a distance away from them? It may be remarked incidentally that there is nothing unusual in this, for the reason that the Monarch of the Fakers could not well expect to sustain its reputation as such without being watchful to have the width of the continent between itself and the truth.

Without in any way deciding whether the stories of the airship are true or false, let the impartial reader consider the relation of Mr. Hearst's two newspapers toward it, by the light of each other. The Journal of last Sunday declares that "a successful airship has been built." The Examiner of yesterday asserts that the whole airship story is a pure myth. The Journal repeats that "The testimony concerning it seems to be unimpeachable." The Examiner insists that its alleged observers are "practical jokers or unbalanced enthusiasts." The Journal reiterates that the truth of the story "is testified to by so many reputable citizens that there seems to be no reason to question its accuracy." The Examiner asseverates that any paper which publishes such a "persistent falsehood" is attempting to "infect its readers with a silly craze."

What do the public think of this exhibition of deliberate double-dealing on the part of the two newspapers whose owner is Mr. Hearst? What do people who believe in truth and decency the country over think of Mr. Hearst anyway? From the above revelation of his right to the title of "Monarch of the Fakers," it must be evident that he has missed his vocation, and that instead of posing as a journalist in two cities he ought to be engaged in making grimaces, singing ballads, shuffling cards, or selling gawags in the side-show of a circus or the byways of a county fair. As King of the Gypsies and Monarch of the Fakers Mr. Hearst is an immense success.

1896 December 6 (Sun) Carson City Morning Appeal, p. 2.

Scott Hart tells a story that he saw something passing through the air about twenty miles north of Reno and at an elevation of 500 feet. There was a light, then two more flashed out and he heard voices and the words, "We are four degrees too far north, change the course." Scott says he don't know what it was, but he saw it.—Reno Journal. (also Gazette stories 6p.3, 8p3, 18p3)

Tues. Dec. 8 p. 3: The Air Ship.

Ever since a light was seen in the sky above Sacramento and it was supposed that an airship was afloat, the natives of Carson have sat on their roofs and gazed out of windows until 12 o'clock at night waiting for a visit from the aerial mystery, but have waited in vain. Some times, they misconstrued Mars and Venus, and the light from the setting stars caused them to hold their breath waiting for the searchlight to peep over the hills.

Saturday night the long looked for event was supposed to have occurred and every man of repute saw the flickering light traveling toward the Pacific Ocean. Those who went home with joy in their hearts thinking they had seen the egg-shaped invader, may have a tired feeling when they learn that they may have seen something on the same layout as Reno—a star behind a cloud.

Some funny men were seen in the vicinity of Nevers' ranch with a fire balloon on Saturday night, but of course balloons are used to lie on the grass ground.

Wednesday Dec. 9 p. 3: Airship Burned.

Last evening, what at first was taken for an airship slid over town. A bright light attracted the attention of many people and the word airship caused many to rush to a point of view. When over the western portion of the city the gasoline tank exploded and the ship burned up. A few minutes later Ed Patterson showed up with the remains of the ship in his hand which consisted of a piece of bamboo and a rag saturated with alcohol. The balloon was still burning when Patterson found it.

1896 December 7 (Mon eve) Woodland, Calif., Daily Democrat, p.

THE AIRSHIP AGAIN. / A Conductor and Three Passengers Positive They Saw It. / About a Thousand Feet High, Traveling Faster Than the Train and in the Direction of Alameda. /

Davisville, December 7.—Conductor Corbell, who runs a freight train on the main line, was here this morning and told an interesting story about seeing an airship.

Last Friday evening his train ran into Oakland. While between Dixon and Elmira, and between 6:30 and 7 o'clock, a man named Byrns, who was riding in the caboose, saw two bright lights to the right of the track and traveling parallel with the train.

After watching it a few minutes he called the conductor. The phenomenon was so unusual that the conductor called two men traveling on the train in charge of some stock. These four men saw the light distinctly and their stories agree perfectly. They were about one thousand feet high and traveling in the same direction as the train. Their speed was greater than that of the train, however, and they watched the lights until they disappeared in the southwestern heavens.

One of the lights was as large as the head light of an engine. One of the stockmen offered to wager two carloads of fat cattle that there was no delusion about it but that it was a genuine airship.

George Little and his wife, of Davisville, partially confirm this story. A few minutes after six o'clock they saw something in the air that tallies exactly with the description given by the conductor.

1896 December 7 (Mon) Chicago Tribune, p. 4

Milwaukee's Flying Machine Scare

Strange Looking Kite Causes Much Commotion Among the Inhabitants of the Cream City.

Milwaukee, Wis., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Milwaukee tonight has a sensation similar to that enjoyed by Sacramento two weeks ago. Its people or at least a considerable portion of them, believe that they saw a flying machine floating over the bay about 4 o'clock this afternoon.

It was first sighted by Herman Nunnemacher, a millionaire who boards at the hotel. He was seated in his room at the Pfister Hotel, and, happening to look out over the lake, he was astounded to see what looked like a flying machine floating over the bay high in the air and moving up against the wind. He happened to have a field glass handy, and looking through the same saw something that appeared to him to be a man working the wings of the air craft.

Satisfied that it really was a flying machine he put on his hat and rushed out. When he got on the street he could no longer see it and came back, supposing it had passed over the city on the way to the north pole. Ten minutes later he saw it again. This time he was sure, and dashing down to the lobby of the hotel he shouted: "It is here again. It is a flying machine."

He had not returned to the hotel up to a late hour tonight. Hundreds of other people saw the strange sight and are positive that it was a sure-enough flying machine. Men who were in the Lake-Front Park, however, say that two men sent up a strange looking kite without a tail. It had huge wings and the men sent up a number of signals on the wire rope which was used to fly it with. It is one of the kites with which the army has been experimenting for some months.

1896 December 8 (Tues eve) Woodland, Calif., Daily Democrat, p. 3.

THE MYSTERY SOLVED. / A Resident of Arbuckle Explains the Airship Phenomenon.

70
phenomenon. / Aerial Navigation Successfully Accomplished Three Years Ago by Tolo and Colusa County Inventors. /

Mr. Editor: Sir—Now that I have had a chance to get a glance at the much-talked-about flying machine as it was passing over the Coast Range Mountains in a southwesterly direction, fifteen miles west of Arbuckle and about three miles north of Ramsey on Tuesday night last, I will try and explain to the public the queer actions and also the mechanical construction of this wonder of the age.

Three years ago I submitted the plans I had drawn of an aircycle, with explanations, to Mr. E.W. Brown, of Davisville. He at once saw that there was no doubt as to the successful operation of a machine constructed on those plans and at once advanced the necessary funds for the construction of the same.

The machine consists of an aluminum tube twelve feet long and three feet in diameter pointed at the end like a cigar. Four feet under the tube and running parallel with it is a light steel frame similar to a tandem bicycle frame. Each end of this frame is connected with the tube. On the frame there are two seats, two handlebars and two pedals the same as on a tandem. The pedals operate the propeller and side wings. The propeller is used to force the aircycle ahead and the wings are used to ascend and descend as the operator chooses. There is also a rudder that sits behind the propeller the same as those on a steamship. This is operated by the handle-bars. This part is very simple. The difficult part is in obtaining the gas which is used in the tube and has great lifting power. This gas is obtained at an altitude of twenty-five miles above sea level. How this is obtained will not be stated here. Suffice to say that this is also simple when one has the instruments.

After the machine was finished Mr. Brown borke over the handle-bar an empty beer bottle and pronounced her the Konesuch.

After several little skims over the ground Mr. Brown became more nervy and insisted on making longer and higher flights. The Konesuch was a success beyond our expectations. We at last concluded to make a trip south. Doubting his life insurance, he told his friends that he was going to spend a few days in the country. No one knew of our aircycle; all our experiments were conducted on dark nights. Everything being ready, we started south on the 1st day of March, 1893, at 10:30 P.M.

We could make thirty miles per hour without any exertion, and with the wind at our backs, seventy-five miles an hour was easy. We could always make better time at night, for when we were surrounded by darkness, we did not experience that dizzy feeling that would come over us in the daytime.

On the morning of the 2nd day of March we landed near Los Angeles. Securing our cycle to a fence (which was necessary, for as soon as we dismounted there was an upward pull of 330 pounds).

1896 December 9 (Wed) Daily Humboldt Times (Eureka, Calif.), p. 4.

THE MYSTERY EXPLAINED / Where and How the Airship Story Originated. / ... / The Truth About the Airship.

Now that the daily papers have run their wild riot upon the airship problem, the "looker-on" in the News Letter will take the public into his confidence, and tell just what the phenomenon was. It is simply a large kite upon which electrical apparatus is cleverly arranged, which was sent skywards by the officials of the Meteorological Bureau for the purpose of determining the power of certain chemical compounds when exploded beneath rain clouds, to rip a hole in the soggy banks of vapor and let down a flood of water upon the parched earth. Those who followed the accounts of the airship's appearances, disappearances and reappearances, will recollect that the first reports of the strange spectre in the skies came from Sacramento. One of the most reliable residents of that town averred that he not only saw two men in the ship, but he heard them singing "Just tell them that you saw me." He was mistaken about the men, for there were none upon the kite sent up by the weather sharps. What he supposed were men were the large storage batteries of electricity fixed upon the cross-bars of the kite to supply the powerful arc lights fastened to the upper and lower points of the sky-scraper. Strange as it may seem, however, investigation has shown that the Sacramento man's musical ear was not deceived about the tune wafted down from the skies. Some wag attached to the Weather Bureau sent up with the kite a music box loaded with popular airs, and so arranged that it would let out its tunes automatically. Just as the rain searcher crossed Sacramento the time lock opened and poured forth "Just tell them that you saw me" upon the midnight air. The Sacramento man, therefore, was not laboring under the effects of an excited imagination. He was just telling the plain and simple truth in a Sacramento way.

The expense of sending this novel agent into the skies was borne mostly by a number of farmers of the San Joaquin, who, fearing to be taxed out of their lands by the formation of irrigation districts, determined to bring water down from the clouds at a minimum of expense and maximum of flood. Time fuses were set upon the chemicals borne aloft, so that the explosions would take place at the time when, according to estimates, the kite would reach the clouds. The magnificent success of the experience was illustrated best in the city. The heavy downpour of Monday night and Tuesday was the direct result of the visitation of the apparatus of the Meteorological Bureau to the rain-filled clouds. Upon this occasion, however, the experts put on a heavier load of chemicals than had been used before, with the result that everyone had to come in out of the wet.

1896 December 10 (Th) Central Nevada (Battle Mountain) (wkly), p. 3.

What Could It Have Been?

A strange light appeared above the horizon almost north of here the other evening and traveling in a westerly direction and after some time disappeared from sight. It was not a meteor because it raised too straight from the earth, and it was not a bright lightening bug for this is not the right time of the year, but in all probability it might have been the new comet discovered by the Lick Observatory. If it was neither of these what could it have been? Dear people we do not want to unstring your nerves but it must have been an "airship."

17, 3 Shower of birds at Baton Rouge, La.
1896 December 10 (Th) Carson City, Nev., Morning Appeal, p. 3.

The Air-Ship.

It is reported at the N.-C.-O. office that L.T. Stephenson, agent at Chat, saw the much talked of air-ship last night between Chat and the Summit and had a talk with the inventor. Mr. S., so it is said, wanted to take a ride in the airship, but the operator would not let him get aboard. The Gazette does not get this story from Mr. S., but from the train hands that were on the road.

Fri. Dec. 11, p. 3: Air-Ships in Empire.

During several days past there has been rumors of an air-ship in Empire which was seen floating above Wiggin's Hall, and moving along like a large turkey buzzard hunting grub. Yesterday the Appeal received the following: / Empire, Dec. 9th.

E! Appeal:--I address this to you because I thought it might be of interest to your subscribers. On Monday evening Jack Garrity saw a flying machine pass over Empire. / Yours truly, / A Subscriber.

We have to say in this connection that we cannot give space in future to communications of this kind. If men rush into print every time they see an airship in the sky it will keep the papers filled up with nothing else. Air-ships are now so common a man might as well write the Appeal that he saw a four-wheeled wagon in the vicinity of Gardnerville.

Sat. Dec. 12, p. 3: Booher Has / Em.

Editor Booher of Elko also seems to "have 'em" in a mild form. He says: "About 50 people at Elko were out watching a 'strange light' the other evening. The light seemed to rise above the horizon almost north of here and after rising far into the air traveled in a westerly direction and in about two hours disappeared in the west. It was not a meteor they say, for it raised tootax straight from the earth, and it was not a lightening bug for this is not the right time of year. It was not a bullseye lantern because it was too high up, and it couldn't have been a balloon because it traveled too steady and fast, and remained visible too long. What was it then? Good people we do not want to startle you, but it must have been an 'airship.'"

1896 December 12 (Sat) Territorial Enterprise (Virginia, Nev.) p.2

AIRSHIP YARNS. /

The airship continues to hold its own as a subject of public discussion. It is alleged to have been seen in many parts of Nevada and California and the visual evidence in support of one such ship is as good for fifty. The only person whose talk may be considered serious is Mr. W.H. Hart, the well known lawyer, who soberly declares that he is the attorney of an inventor who has recently built and operated two airships in that State and that he is now engaged in building a third. He has been able, Mr. Hart declares, to attain and sustain for several hours a speed of about 20 miles per hour and is making improvements designed to vastly increase the efficiency of his ship. Mr. Hart does not claim to have personally seen these ships, but he says they undoubtedly exist and that San Francisco will soon be given an opportunity to view them in broad daylight. A cock-and-bull air is given to Mr. Hart's story by his addition to it that his client is negotiating with the Cuban junta for the destruction of Havana by dynamite and that he will demand for such services something like $10,000,000. People generally have come to regard the whole thing as a hoax, but there are many who assert that they have seen the mysterious air ship and are willing to stake any sum upon its existence.

1896 December 17 (Th) Reno (Nev) Evening Gazette, p. 3.

The Airship Again.

The Long Valley Indians say they have seen the much talked of airship in the daytime. One Indian said to a Gazette reporter this morning, "Him big as a car, and goes all same as bird." The Gazette man asked if he had not heard about Johnson Sides lecture on fire water--if he did not think it wrong for Indians to drink whiskey. "He no drink," said Jim. "He haap see 'em all same as see you now. You think I dlink cause I see 'em airship. I see 'em, my mahala see 'em, my papoose see 'em too and other Injun he see 'em. No all drunk. My mahala dlink some time, but no dlink when he see 'em. While we don't question Jim's vision, or doubt but that he saw something, we confess a doubt about it being an airship."

1896 December 18 (Fri) The Call (San Francisco), p. 8.

BIGGS SEES THE AIRSHIP. / Over Fifty Citizens Watch Mysterious Lights at Night.

BIGGS, Cal., Dec. 17.--The strange and mysterious lights so often seen of late were seen by over fifty of our citizens this evening at 6:30, and no doubts exist here but that it was the much talked of airship. The lights were seen very plainly one mile southwest of our town and kept up a waving motion, passing out of sight in the direction of Colusa. The Red Bluff local stopped just outside of town to view it.

1897 January 8 (Fri) (Salt Lake City), Deseret Evening News, p. 5.

ASTRAL PHENOMENON. / Was It a Planet or a Sun Spot on Old Sol's Face?

This morning Mr. Albert M. Merrill, an employe of the E.C.M.I., noticed a dark spot on the face of the sun, and communicated the fact to his fellow employes. Soon a large number of them were gazing at Old Sol through smoked glass, and noting the unlooked for spot on his face. It was first visible about 8:30, and seemed to pass slowly across the sun's disc, accompanying about two hours in the passage. Just what it was has not been explained, but it appeared like a planet, which some supposed it to be; but as such an eclipse of the sun is foretold by the almanac for this day.

A press dispatch from Butte, Montana, dated yesterday, describes a similar phenomenon: "None of the almanacs gave any predictions of the strange phenomenon visible on the face of the sun today. On account of the smaller smoke the naked eye could see on the surface of the sun a large irregular black spot. By using smoked glass one could see two more smaller spots, one above and to the right, the other below and to the left of the larger one. The larger spot was below the horizontal diameter of the sun in the forenoon, but moved up along the disc later in the day, by which time the relative positions of the three spots had also change perceptibly. The one above, and to the left and the one below and to the left were on the opposite side (?). The smaller spots were revolving around the large one, the position changing noticeably every hour or so."

1897 January 12 (Tues) San Francisco Chronicle, p. 13.

A Shower of Meteors. / A Brilliant Skyway Sight Witnessed at Butte, Montana.

People who were fortunate enough to be up at an early hour yesterday morning witnessed one of the most interesting celestial phenomena ever displayed to wondering eyes. It was a meteoric shower or bombardment of the earth by shooting stars. Several persons who saw it said the shower commenced, or was noticed first, about five o'clock and continued for about an hour. The sky was clear with the exception of a bank of clouds around the horizon. At first there were a few shooting stars and then suddenly the whole heavens lit up with a flash like lightning and it grew brighter and brighter until there appeared across the whole sky a trail of fire like the trail of a huge comet and from it in all directions shot stars or meteors.

The light gradually formed itself into a long streak like lightning and then moved in a slow zigzag, snakelike movement across the heavens and finally shaped itself into a perfect letter "Z," in which form it remained for a long time, and then slowly faded away. During all this time there were numerous shooting stars and the whole earth was lighted up almost as bright as day. The display lasted for the better part of an hour, but the greater light described was of much shorter duration. The phenomena frightened many people and several instances were related where horses were almost paralyzed with fear at the strange sight.

1897 January 15 (Sun) San Francisco Call, p. 15. (card 1)

SHAPED LIKE A SPARROW-HAWK / General Hart Describes the Appearance of His Client's Airship. / Expects to Hear Any Day of the Destruction of Havana by Dynamite. / The Wondrous Aerial War Craft Are Equipped With Sails, Wings and Propellers. /

From recent press reports received from Cuba and from private sources of information, ex-Attorney-General W.H.H. Hart is now confident that two of the flock of three airships said by him to have been constructed by his mysterious and still unknown client are in Cuba, and being prepared for their work of destruction.

In conversation he said he expected to hear every day of an aerial attack on the Spanish forces in Havana.

"I have not seen the inventor of the airship," said General Hart yesterday, "for some time. I am informed that he started for Cuba some weeks ago. While I am not in direct communication with him, I am kept posted on his movements and in regard to his wishes by his representative, who is now superintending the completion of the third airship at a secluded place over in Marin County."

"From him I learn that just previous to his leaving the United States, the inventor made a final test of his large aerial cruiser. He took flight at a point in the San Joaquin Valley, and without stopping, alighted in the mountains near Pasadena, after having traveled a distance of about 350 miles. This was the longest trip he ever made at one flight.

"Here the machine was carefully taken apart, boxed and shipped to some point near Yuma, whence it was sent by rail to New Orleans. The smaller flying craft was shipped from here direct to New Orleans, and from the latter port they were transported to Key West, Fla.

"Three days after their arrival at the latter town the inventor and his aerial destroyers took passage on the Three Friends, and were on board that vessel when she had the encounter with the Spanish war-ships off Cuba.

"I am certain that the recent press dispatch from Cuba, stating that the rebels were preparing to drop dynamite into Havana by means of kites, was founded on information given out by the inventor. This was merely a ruse to cover up the real means by which the dynamite was to be dropped over the Spanish stronghold."

Then in a musing tone he continued: "I feel so well satisfied that the machine is a success that I am sorry I did not take an interest in the invention."

General Hart then consented to give a general description of the craft which for several weeks was supposed to have flown over the soil of California to the amazement and mystification of thousands of people.

Its sustaining power, he said, was an egg-shaped balloon filled with gas, the larger end of the balloon being the front. To the sides of this gas body was attached elbow-shaped sails, which were principally used to control the forward direction of the airship. These are so arranged that the cruiser can sail at an angle of forty-five degrees from the direction of the wind. These sails also serve to drive her forward in a favorable wind. When traveling against the wind the sails are laid close to the sides of the balloon, so that no portion is exposed to offer resistance.

From the balloon depends the airship proper, in which are carried the machinery, ~~and~~ the crew and all other apparatus necessary to its navigation and control. This is shaped like the body of a sparrow-hawk and is equipped with wings patterned also after that bird. The wings are movable and are worked for propulsive power, or may be spread and made rigid to form an aeroplane. At the front and stern are propellers, which are used only in traveling against the wind or when desirous of traveling with it, but at an increased speed. When it is desired to remain stationary in midair the propellers are revolved in opposite directions and each at the necessary speed, as they work independently. The motive power for the wings and propellers is electricity.

In order to descend gas is allowed to escape from the balloon, and when another ascension is made the gas in the balloon is replenished from a supply of condensed gas carried in a cylinder.

1897 January 22 (Fri) Sacramento Bee, p. 1.

AND NOW LODI. / The Airship Now, It Is Said, Flies by Daylight.

LODI (Cal.), Jan. 22.—The airship craze was revived here by the appearance of an aerial navigator in daylight. Many people in Acampo, three miles north of here, saw it the other afternoon sailing over the plain. It seemed as big as a small house, and looked like built of canvass. It went southeast. Some farmers also saw it the same day near here. The ship seemed to be under perfect control.

1897 January 25 (Mon. morn) Harrisburg, Pa., Patriot, p. 1.

CITY EXCITED OVER A STAR / Some Fo[a]lks Thought Venus Was an Electric Light at Pittsburg. / ...

Many Harrisburgers have been interested almost to the point of excitement over the evening star the last few days and not a few residents have become indignant when told it is not an electric light sent high in the clouds for experimental purposes.

The trouble was started last week when some people read in newspapers that aerial experiments with electric lights were to be made at Pittsburg. It was stated that electric lamps of an immense candle power with powerful reflectors and lenses would be sent up to see how far their rays could be distinguished. Reports differed as to the height these lamps were to go and on this subject the papers have been silent the last few days. Some people said they would be sent up seven miles, others nine and others ten, but from the general remarks seven must have been reached as a compromise. Early Saturday evening when Venus, gleaming in its brilliancy, shone over the city from the west, some persons who had been reading or hearing of these experiments at once declared the large and beautiful planet which is the evening star at present, was nothing else than the electric light with which tests were being made by some folks at Pittsburg, 250 miles away, over the mountains and in [a] direction considerably different from the location of the star. The report spread and dozens of people who had not been guilty of star gazing for years, or else they would not have been so easily deceived, promptly looked at it and fell to discussing experiments of such magnitude as those of which they had been told. There were a number who walked out into wind-swept streets and others who went so far as to go to the river bank to see a star which they had apparently never noticed before even in starlight walks. On Market street Saturday the eyes of a good many of the persons on the street watched the bright planet and one man asserted he had seen "then take it down," being unaware Venus set at 8:56 o'clock that evening. Last night it was watched with redoubled curiosity and scores of credulous ones believed that "the bright star of twilight" was nothing more than the gleam from an unpoetical electrical experiment.

February 2, 1897 Omaha Daily Bee (orn. ed.) Tues. p. 2

See an Airship at Hastings

Travels at Night at a High Speed and Carries a Bright Light. Hastings, Feb. 1.—(Special.)—Some persons within ten miles west of Hastings are making an experiment with an air ship which from all appearances so far seems to be a great success. It was first noticed some time last fall when it was seen floating in the air about 200 feet above ground, and after standing nearly still for about thirty minutes it began to circle about and then took a northerly direction for about two miles, after which it returned to its starting place and went into oblivion. Since that time it has not been seen until last night, when it was observed standing nearly still a few miles west of Hastings and seemingly about 200 feet in the air. At first sight it has the appearance of an immense star, but after a closer observation the powerful light shows by its color to be artificial. It certainly must be illuminated by powerful electric dynamos, for the light sent forth by it — wonderful. At 9:50 last night the large, glaring light, was seen to circle around for a few minutes and then take a northerly direction for about three miles. It then stood perfectly still for five minutes, after which it ~~ascended~~ ~~ascended~~ ~~ascended~~ ascended for about 200 feet as straight as a shot, where it remained for eight minutes and then descended for about 200 feet, circling as it did so, then taking a bee line west it traveled at a most remarkable speed for about two miles and then slowing up it circled about for fully fifteen minutes, when it began to lower and disappeared as mysteriously as it had made its appearance. So far the air ship, or whatever it is, has only been seen by a dozen people, each of whom in keeping it a secret and trying to discover just what it is and where it comes from. Whatever it is it travels with great speed and carries a most powerful light. A close watch is being kept for its reappearance when efforts will be made to discover what it is if not an air ship.

Wed. Feb. 3 Le Courrier du Canada (Quebec, Queb.), p. 4.

A Mysterious Star / VISIBLE EVERY EVENING ABOVE THE MOUNTAIN / WHAT IS THE CAUSE OF THE PHENOMENON? / (Soleil story again)

This mysterious star has been seen by the whole population for a certain time at Quebec, Fraserville and elsewhere, and we have difficulty believing that it is an electric lamp.

1897 February 4 (Th) Le Monde (Montreal), p. 4.

A Mysterious Star / [Dreamed by] the "Soleil" of Quebec. / Says the "Soleil" of Quebec:

The past several evenings, a brilliant light resembling a planet but having even greater brilliance has been noticed in the sky. This mysterious star appears each evening about 7 o'clock and disappears about 9. A lively curiosity has been stirred up by this phenomenon and hypothesis after hypothesis proposed in order to find the explanation [?].

One claims the cause of the phenomenon to be for certain electrical projections made by Edison in the course of experiments which he is presently making in New York. Other people are not willing to believe in this hypothesis and allege that the distance is much too great (in order) for a mere electrical projection (beam) to be strong enough to light the two cities.

Whatever the cause may be, the phenomenon exists and gives rise to much comment. There is no lack of superstitious people who draw all sorts of presages from the appearance of this light in stellar space. Is it a preage of misfortune or a salutary advertisement? Time will tell.

1897 February 5 (Fri) Le Monde (Montreal), p. 4.

The "Soleil" / And Its Mysterious Star. /

Says the "Soleil" of Quebec:

"After taking account, we have become certain that the star which many have observed in the west during the great part of the evening, and which has so greatly intrigued a large number of our readers is nothing other than the planet Venus. Its brightness is such at this time that with a little attention and (knowledge) toward what point in the sky to direct one's looks, one can observe it with the naked eye in broad daylight.

"We will make available to our readers more ample information about this mysterious star in our following edition."

Poor Venus! Poor "Soleil"!

Wed. Feb. 17, p. 4.

LUMINOUS PHANTOMS / In the ruins of Barron block.

The residents in the vicinity of the Barron block have complained in recent times of a strange noise of chains which is produced in the night in the ruins of the burnt-out block. The timid are afraid and believe ~~XXXX~~ they [see] Satan incarnated under the form of luminous phantoms. Others say that it is the ghost of Mme. Murphy, who protests being buried under this rubble.

Whatever it is, these creditable persons say they hear the noise all night and have taken a complaint to that effect to the police.

The officers of the peace believe that it is thieves who seek to remove the iron or other debris and have promised to watch the area as closely as possible.

1897 February 6 (Sat) Omaha Daily Bee, p. 6.

Air Ship Is Seen at Inavale. / Thirty to Forty Feet Long and Conical in Shape—Voices Heard.

INAVALE, Neb., Feb. 5.—(Special.)—The airship mentioned by a Hastings correspondent in Tuesday's Bee has been seen by Inavale people at different times. The first time it was thought to be an optical illusion, as it was only seen by a few persons and the night was very light, but last night it being very dark, as a party of ten or a dozen people were returning home from prayer meeting they suddenly saw what appeared to be a very bright light passing almost directly over their heads. As it drew closer they could distinguish, besides the big headlight, several smaller lights, which seemed to be placed at regular intervals on quite a large body.

The ship was flying at a considerable height, but in about ten minutes it returned and was again seen by nearly all the crowd that saw it before, and this time it was much lower and could be distinctly seen as well as heard in the damp night air. It seemed to be conical shaped, and perhaps thirty or forty feet in length, with a bright headlight and six smaller lights, three on a side, and seemed to have two sets of wings on a side, with a large fan-shaped rudder.

Voices were plainly heard and a man's laugh was easily distinguished as the ship passed over the last time.

Much excitement was caused by its appearance and a constant look will be kept by the people here for a reappearance.

Feb. 13, p. 9—Charles Andress of Chicago claims Leonard E. Clawson & Adam Beck of SF have stolen the design for his flying machine, which has 4 wings, 2 flapping up while 2 flap down.

1897 February 6 Nebraska State Journal (Lincoln), p. 4 (Sat)

Nebraska Notes: Speaking of the night flights of a flying machine west of Hastings the Grand Island Independent says: "There is no cause for any time being spent nights watching the phenomena. The light referred to is Rod (?) Smith holding a tallow dip while Congressman Billgreene recites his essay preparatory to departure for Washington. And the 'flights' referred to are some of 'Bill's' flights of oratory."

Mon. Feb. 2 p. 4--Nebraska Notes

A very pretty celestial phenomenon was observed just after sunrise one morning last week at Beatrice. The sun was flanked by two brilliant sun dogs parallel with the horizon. These later transposed themselves into a brilliant arch over the sun, and with the rays of the sun forming a cross in the arch with the sun as the focal point, presented a scene of indescribable grandeur. The sun dogs to the right and left of the sun were at intervals as brilliant as the sun itself. The beautiful spectacle continued for over an hour.

1897 February 8 (Mon) Le Monde (Montreal), p. 4.

VENUS, THE BLONDE / Gives proof of inconstance / And leaves the "Soleil" of Quebec for the "Progrès" of Sherbrooke. /

The "Soleil" of Quebec, tired of making love to Venus, the mysterious star, object of many bad jokes, has had its plant pulled up by the roots by our confrere the "Progrès de l'Est" of Sherbrooke, which likewise pays homage to the "queen of the starry heavens."

Tuesday evening, one of the employes of the 'Progrès' came looking for us to show us Edison's electric balloon, which was poised above the city of Syracuse in the state of New York, and which was distinctly visible, he said, behind the office of the newspaper. We took ourselves into the presence of Venus, more [], more brilliant perhaps than usual, but certainly the same beautiful and charming planet, one of the most beautiful jewels of the firmament. In her coquetry the evening star, showing herself in all the brightness of her supurb beauty, has succeeded in having herself talked about by a numerous population of admirers who are carried (away) en masse by contemplation, not only in Sherbrooke, but in Quebec, in Montreal and elsewhere.

All of us were intrigued and at the same time a little frightened, wondering if it was a new star announcing some misfortune or other and there was a great number holding to the electric balloon (ideal) and extolling ~~the~~ American genius, but everyone has paid indirectly a wiled homag to the queen of the starry heavens. To everyone his due: Edison has his glory; it is only just for Venus to protect hers.

February 9, 1897 Omaha Daily Bee (Tues. morn.) p. 2

See the Air Ship From York.

Public Curiosity Greatly Aroused by the Mysterious Bright Light.

YORK, Neb., Feb. 8.--(Special).--A mysterious light was seen in the sky last night and public curiosity is greatly aroused as to what it really was. It is supposed to be the same light seen at Hastings recently. George S. Cook and G. H. Jerome are the witnesses and their prominence in local circles in an assurance of their veracity. The light was first seen about 9 o'clock, and it seemed to be about two or three miles west of the city and at a very high elevation. It stood perfectly still for some time and then shot down some distance and zig-zagged to the north and south, finally disappearing in a northwesterly direction. The light was intensely bright, appearing more like an arc light than any other known kind. Its movements were evidently under such perfect control that York people, skeptically as they are, can account for it in no other way than that it is a part of a flying machine. An effort will be made to ascertain the real nature of the light and its operation.

1897 February 11 (Th.) Beatrice, Neb., Weekly Express, p. 4.

Bad Case of 'Em at Hastings.

That ordinarily sedate and circumspect publication, the Hastings Independent, gets off the following, which needs no explanation other than implied in the heading hereof.

"Several Hastings people report that an air ship, or something of the kind, has been sailing around in the air several miles west of this city. It was first noticed some time last fall when it was seen floating in the air about 500 feet above ground, and after standing nearly still for about thirty minutes it began to circle about and then took a northerly direction for about two miles, after which it returned to its starting place and sunk into oblivion. Since that time it has not been seen until last Sunday evening, when it was observed standing still a few miles west of Hastings and seemingly about 800 feet in the air. At first sight it has the appearance of an immense star, but after a closer observation the powerful light shows by its color to be artificial. It certainly must be illuminated by powerful dynamos, for the light sent forth by it is wonderful. At 9:30 last Sunday night the large glaring light was seen to circle around for a few minutes and then take a northerly direction for about three miles. It then stood perfectly still for about five minutes, after which it ascended for about 200 feet as straight as a shot where it remained for eight minutes and then descended for about 200 feet, circling as it did so, then taking a bee line west it traveled at a most remarkable speed for about two miles and then slowing up it curled about for fully fifteen minutes, when it began to lower and disappeared as mysteriously as it had made its appearance. So far the air ship or whatever it is, has only been seen by about a dozen people each of whom is keeping it a secret and trying to discover just what it is and where it comes from. Whatever it is it travels with great speed and carries a most powerful light. A close watch is being kept for its reappearance.

1897 February 18(Th) Kearney (Neb.) Hub, p. 3.

Seen Near North Platte. / The Air Ship Story Revised and Rehearsed in Western Nebraska.

And now come the North Platte Telegraph and deposes and says: "North Platte is not to be outdone by her sister city, Hastings, in the matter of having seen the much talked of air ship in that vicinity, for now comes one Hy Smith, Charles Braternitz and Harry Reese, who depose and swear that they each saw the celebrated ship of the air last night while coming east on an extra at a point near the cuts west of Big Springs. They aver that the light was about the size of a barrel and would rise straight up in the air about 300 feet and then descend very rapidly, at the same time sending out sparks as it descended. These movements were repeated as far as they could see, which was about six miles and was distant from the track in the neighborhood of two miles in a southerly direction close to the river. The night being very clear and the moon shining very bright, objects could be discerned [1] at a long distance. Considering the well known reputation of these gentlemen for veracity and not being a believer in the supernatural, we are forced to the conclusion that the now famous California airship inventor is in our vicinity."

73

Mon. Feb 15 p.3--Spice of Local Life.

Hastings, York and Inavale people have been seeing air-ships passing over. Kearney people appear to be more fortunate in the assumption of a better quality of wet goods. The small boys of this city would have a world of amusement with the "rubber necks" of these localities.

Mon. Feb. 22 p. 4--Spice of Local Life.

The passing of the airship seems to have been final. It has not been seen for several nights.

Tues Feb 23 p. 3--Spice.... The strange "light in the sky" that appears in the west every evening is developing in Kearney a large class of star gazers. As yet the phenomenon has not been explained.

Th Feb 25 p. 3--Spice / People who have seen the "airship" are becoming so numerous that they can't all be named. But the fact that "Yank" Hayward has seen it will cause many people to apply to him for a description of its size and dimensions.

Fri Feb 26 p. 3--Spice / Letters are being received at this office continually giving information asking for the same in regard to K's ars

Th Mar. 4 p. 3--Spice / Col. Cash explains the airship by saying that it was one of Hon. W.L. Greene's government building air castles floating around over the country.

1897 February 18 (Thurs) Omaha Daily Bee, p. 7.

South Omaha News.

Thomas Hazel, 26th and H streets, asserts that he saw what appeared to be an air ship passing over the city about 9:30 o'clock Tuesday night. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Hazel were entertaining a couple of dozen of their young friends, when the little daughter of Mr. Kantner had occasion to go out into the yard. She immediately called back to those in the house to come out and see the funny thing in the sky. Quickly the family and guests were in the yard watching the strange object. In speaking about the matter yesterday afternoon Mr. Hazel said that he saw a long, dark object moving rapidly northward. Flash lights appeared frequently. When the light was straight ahead it was impossible to see anything of the body of the ship, but the light was kept turning up, down and around. Mr. Hazel did not think that the object could have been more than 400 or 500 feet above the ground. The party watched it until it was lost in the darkness. Neighbors of the Hazel family also saw the strange sight and are as much mystified as the Hazels are. Those who saw the object think it was an air ship; the same, most likely, that has been reported at York, Hastings and other places. Mr. Hazel holds a responsible position with the Hammond Packing company and is considered trustworthy in every respect.

1897 February 19 (Fri) Kearney (Neb) Daily Hub, p. 3. (card 1)

NEAR KEARNEY NOW / An Air Ship Story Without the Usual Whiskeretes. / "LIGHT IN THE SKY" SEEN BY A CITIZEN. / Whether It was an Air Ship is Not Explained. /

The Hub must admit that it has taken all airship stories coming from our sister towns with a grain of salt, and in one or two cases the dose of the saline accompaniment has been doubled. It doesn't believe in air ships, and the writer personally has never seen anything that resembled the much talked of "light in the sky" more than one of the "free" arc lights furnished in the past by the Kearney Electric company. Yet any belief should be held subject to revision when confronted by good and sufficient evidence. That evidence appears now to be on tap.

Charley Prescott, the obliging city clerk, has the evidence in his possession, and seeing the need of giving it away, has cheerfully given

If Mr. Prescott has seen an air ship he doesn't know it. In fact, if he was to see one he wouldn't be sure of it without it was labeled in large Gothic letters. But Wednesday evening while walking home, between the hours of nine and ten o'clock, he saw a light in the west, a description of which strongly resembles the stories of the air ship that have come from other towns. The light appeared to be a great distance away, and its size looked to be about the same as the head of an ordinary wooden water bucket. It didn't move around to any great extent, but stayed out in the western atmosphere long enough to be seen distinctly. Whether it was an air ship, or one of the populistic signs of the times forecasting the selection of Sullivan for judge, has not yet been determined.

At all events Mr. Prescott saw a light in the sky such as he has never seen before. To the part of the story relating to what the light was or what it was doing there he doesn't wish to make affidavit, and as nothing but affidavits are taken when air ships are under discussion, the remainder of his experience is not here repeated.

Mr. Prescott is a man whose reputation for truth and veracity is rated considerably above par in all commercial reports. Mr. He gained this reputation while doing newspaper work, before he became the servant of the people in an official capacity, and it is unreasonable to suppose that its luster has been dimmed by contact with the boards of aldermen or other cormorants of the city corporation. In fact most people will take what Mr. Prescott has to offer in the air ship line at published prices and await future developments.

Stories of the air ship, coming from the various towns, closely agree. At Hastings, Grand Island, York and North Platte, nothing more than a strange light, moving in the air with upward and downward wavy motion, was seen. Mr. Prescott saw no more than that. But at Inavale, Nebraska, the people who saw it swear they could see the wings of the ship and hear people on board it talk.
1897 February 20 (Sat) Kearney Daily Hub, p. 3.

AIR SHIP STORY AGAIN. / Many Kearney People See the "Lights in the Sky" Friday Eve.

Here it comes again—corroborated and substantiated beyond doubt. Many people who read the account of what City Clerk Prescott saw, even after considering the reliability of the source, were doubtful. The family of Peter O'Brien, clerk of the district court, saw the light and watched it on Wednesday evening—the night it was observed by Mr. Prescott. Their descriptions of it tally exactly with what Mr. Prescott saw.

Now comes Frank Schmidt, the good looking artist of the Hub bindery, and makes oath and affidavit to seeing it Friday evening. About a dozen ladies also witnessed the strange light at the same time, and enough corroborative testimony is now at hand. Mr. Schmidt says the light at first seemed large and bright, and would then dwindle down to a very small spark. It was then seen in the sky west of town, and had the same undulating, uncertain motion, described by all who have seen it. After dwindling down so small it could hardly be seen it would grow brighter and larger, as though approaching nearer. It was impossible to form any correct idea as to what it was, other than a light in the sky.

Several "air ship parties" will watch for the strange phenomenon each evening from now on and an effort will be made to get more accurate descriptions.
1897 February 23 (Tues) Nebraska State Journal, p. 5.

AN AIRSHIP OR ILL-OMEN. / Mysterious Light Sighted in the West by Kearney People.

KEARNEY, Neb., Feb. 22.—(Special.)—Last Wednesday night a new and mysterious light was seen in the west, and since then it has been seen on two or three different occasions by various persons. According to the testimony of those who have seen it. It appears between the hours of 7:30 and 10 p.m., and grows from bright to dim and dim to bright. After remaining apparently in one place for some time, it suddenly takes an undulating motion and finally disappears to the north. What it is, where it came from and where it goes to is a matter causing considerable speculation. Some think it is the wonderful airship reported from California some time ago, and others think it an ill-omen. Any definite and satisfactory explanation concerning it will be thankfully received by the more superstitious. The families of M.A. Brown of the Daily Hub and Peter O'Brien, clerk of the district court, are among those who have seen the mysterious light.
1897 February 23 (Tues) Omaha Bee, p. 2.

AIRSHIP IS SEEN FROM KEARNEY. / Responsible Citizens Are Witnesses of the Mysterious Lights.

KEARNEY, Neb., Feb. 22.—(Special.)—For three or four days past there has been more or less speculation and interest in a mysterious light seen in the west between 7 and 10 o'clock in the evening. It has appeared in the west and seems to grow from a small, faint light into a large, bright one and then diminish again. On two occasions it has remained apparently stationary for an hour or so, and then would take an undulating motion and disappear to the north. Some think it is an air ship and others who are more superstitious think it is a sign of some dire disaster. The light has been seen by some reliable and responsible persons, among whom are the family of M.A. Brown, editor of the Daily Hub, and Peter O'Brien, clerk of the district court. A satisfactory explanation of it would be gladly received by many, as they are getting considerably worked up over it.
1897 February 24 (Wed) Nebraska State Journal (Lincoln), p. 5.

Light Surely Genuine.

M'COOL JUNCTION, Neb., Feb. 23.—(Special.)—The floating lights at night witnessed by two of York's reputable business men and telegraphed to the Journal were not seen by any of M'cool's citizens and, considering that York prides itself on being the most temperate town in the county and state (even its five drug stores were refused druggists' permits) it is all the more a most wonderful phenomenon. Both citizens of York still claim that they saw this wonderful light floating in circles and in different directions.
Feb 24 p.1 (Nov 24, 96!)—Arsp over Cal.
Mar. 5 p. 4—can see Venus in broad daylight
Tues Mar. 9, p. 4 (eds) Neb Notes.—The mysterious air ship has been heard from again, this time at Clarks, where it was seen by a woman who never was drunk in her life.
Th Mar 11 p. 4—Neb. Notes.—Lincoln, Neb.

The flying machine which has been seen in various parts of the state, passed over Wood River at 1:17 a.m. Wednesday morning. The aeronaut must be carrying a big lantern. He was a mile or so high, but the outline of his queer craft was plainly visible.—Wood River Interests.

Feb 11 P. 1—New flying machine—Clayson and Beck of SF apply for patents.

1897 February 24 (Wed eve) (Bowling Green (O.) Daily Sentinel, p. 4

What Was It?

Last evening about 11 o'clock, what seemed to be a bright star made its appearance in the northeastern heavens. It was exceedingly bright and seemed to sway from side to side. About 12 o'clock a spark from it shot off toward the west and was extinguished. Its appearance attracted much attention by those who happened to be out at that time and saw it. (See Apr. Journal in same paper, p. 92)
1897 February 26 (Fri) Nebraska State Journal, p. 3.

SAW A STRANGE LIGHT. / Nebraska Citizens Are Startled by a Supposed Airship.

People of Beatrice, Wymore and Hastings were excited last night over the appearance of a strange light about half a mile above the ground. The light was kite shaped and the color of a lantern. It was visible to the people of Beatrice for a time. Then it would recede to appear again more plainly at some other point. It was proceeding in a northerly direction. It was seen about 10:40 at Beatrice.

Wymore citizens were also treated to a similar sight. It is claimed that fully 100 saw it. It was travelling in a northwesterly direction.

At Hastings it seemed to be about half a mile above ground and was moving towards the Kansas line. They were unable to tell anything about the shape of the ship back of it, but all seemed to be of the opinion that it must be the cigar-shaped vessel which was discovered at Inavale a few weeks ago.

Some think that it was a supernatural light which has appeared in the heavens and will not be convinced that it is an air ship. They contend that it foretells the coming destruction of the world by fire as related by John, the inspired apostle, in the book of Revelation.
1897 February 27 (Sat) Atchison (Kans) Daily Globe, p. 4.

The supposed Kansas airship has been seen in Nebraska, and last night all the telegraph operators in northern Kansas and southern Nebraska were on the lookout for it. Many of them claim to have seen it. It was 10:15 p.m. when Dispatcher Robinson, of the Missouri Pacific's Atchison office, was called by Ike Chidsey, telegraph operator at Falls City. "I expect you will laugh at me," rattled away Chidsey at his instrument, "but while standing on the platform just now, with a dozen persons, we all witnessed a very unusual light. In the heavens to the north we saw what appeared to be a big searchlight, moving in a westerly direction, apparently at a speed of about 60 miles an hour, and in the same portion of the sky a red light, much like a switch lamp, was plainly seen." The conversation continued, Chidsey saying that he could not distinguish the outlines of an airship, as Valley Falls, Kans., people claim to have been able to do about a week ago. The weather was cloudy last night, which may have caused the mysterious sky scraper to be less visible than under more favorable conditions. It was travelling in the direction of Stella, Neb., and the operator there was posted to be on the lookout for it. In a very few minutes he reported that he saw it plainly in the southwest. Then the word was passed all along the lines of the Missouri Pacific and R. and N. as far west as Denver. The curious visitor was reported to have been seen at the following places at the following hours: Beatrice, at 10:30 p.m.; Wymore, at 10:45 p.m.; Hastings, at 12:45 a.m.; Keneas, at 1:30 a.m.; Hartwell, at 3 a.m. All the towns mentioned are in Nebraska. Then it seemed to leave the line of the railroad, and was seen no more. Figuring the time and distance from Falls City to Hartwell, it traveled about 45 miles an hour. Operators at different stations claimed they had seen it for several nights, but were afraid to say anything about it for fear of being laughed at. The phenomenon, it is, of course, nothing else, has worked up a great interest among operators.
1897 February 28 (Sun) Omaha Daily Bee, p. 2.

His Hobby Is Flying Kites. / Juniata Men Who May Be Able to Explain Air Ship Stories.

YORK, Neb., Feb. 27.—(Special.)—The Times of last evening contains an interesting story of a Juniata station agent who flies kites. This is his hobby, and inasmuch as his duties as station agent do not require much of his attention, he has plenty of time to devote to his pet diversion. This man—J.K. McLean—does not do his kite flying to satisfy merely an idle whim, however. He bases his experiments on scientific grounds and is demonstrating some interesting things in connection with aerial flight. He uses several different kinds of kites and all are without tails. The box kites are the most interesting from a scientific point of view. They are composed of a series of planes set at slight angles which present considerable resistance, although not taking much room.

A kit which McLean exhibits in a photograph is of the common kind of tailless kites. It is over eight feet high and five feet wide. McLean occasionally sends up kites a half mile, and at night he attaches a lantern to one of them. He, perhaps, could explain a number of the mysterious heavenly lights which have been startling people in that part of the country recently.

BLUE HILL, Neb., Feb. 27.—(Special.)—A strange looking object was seen last night in the western sky by several prominent and thoroughly reliable citizens of Blue Hill. There is a variety of opinions concerning its form. Tom Delahoyde thought it looked like a tin bucket. W.W. Higgins and K.W. McKinzie say it resembled a rattlesnake of the kind found in Hastings several years since. To Lou Williams it looked like a war ship submerged in water.

M'COOL JUNCTION, Neb., Feb. 27--(Special)--It is now reported that boys at Red Lion mills, east of here, are flying kites at night. Many of them have attached lanterns to the kites and are having lots of fun over the airship stories that have been sent out from neighboring towns. p.20--A New Thing in Air Ship Bicycles (cartoon).
1897 March 1 (Mon) Kearney Daily Hub, p. J. (card 1)

MORE AIR SHIP LORE / A Beatrice Paper Tells a Queer Air Ship Story. / A JUNIATA KITE FLYER WHO SENDS UP LANTERNS. / More Strange Lights Seen By Kearney People. /

One evening recently Superintendent Weston and Lawrence Ketchum were working at the gates at the cotton mill and observed two strange lights, apparently nearly over the Platte river bridge south of Kearney. The two lights kept a relative position north and south, and seemed to have a positive movement. They threw out no rays but apparently the color of the lights changed from a dark yellow to white light. Neither Mr. Weston nor Mr. Ketchum attempt to say what the lights were. /

While on the question of strange lights, the Hub reproduces an extract from a letter, published in good faith by the Woman's Gazette, of Beatrice, by Anton Pallardy, a scientist from the Black Hills who has recently been visiting in Beatrice:

"The air ship which has been seen over Grand Island, Hastings and Beatrice is no myth. It is a reality. Where it was built, I dare not tell you; more than that your readers know that to the northwest of Nebraska is a weird (sic), lonely and strange country known as the Mauvais Terres. There are canons, caverns, nooks and crannies in these bad lands that are so secret and remote from the ordinary pathways that men can and have lived there uninterruptedly for years, with some none to molest or make afraid. It is from these Mauvais Terres the air ship comes. With my three companions we have sailed over Nebraska in a line from the forks of the Platte, along the Little Blue Valley and thence to Manhattan, Kansas, generally at night, returning to the Mauvais Terres in the early morning. Why do we take this route for our experimental trip? I will tell you. It is because of the currents of air that are almost perpetual at an altitude of about one mile. These currents are almost invariable and regular the year round. It is but a six hours trip from the Mauvais Terres to the junction of the Blue with the Kansas river. It was necessary that we should become familiar with the earth configurations lying under our aerial track. Hence I am in your city to make some necessary investigations, in order that we may obtain a title to the route over which we propose to operate our ship. We make these experimental trips in order to familiarize people beneath us with our ship so that they may not become frightened, and should some accident happen to our ship, that we should have to descend, that we would be among friends, and not arrested as trespassers. We have chosen this experimental route, because all the conditions are favorable. Being nearer the center of the continent, we are less subject to the influences of trade winds, ocean currents and the like.

"At the surface of the earth and for half a mile above it occurs at intervals violent winds, tornadoes in summer and blizzards in winter. At an altitude of 5,000 feet, the air is comparatively quiet except in the regular currents that flow from the north west in the morning.

"For prudential reasons I dare not describe our ship in detail to you. Those who have seen it, know its general appearance to be something like a very large umbrella with a transparent covering. This large umbrella is immediately above the car, which also contains the little motor for operating the large wings immediately above the umbrella. These wings are expanded and contracted at the pleasure of the engineer. Suspended above and attached to these wings are two very thin, aluminum balloons containing the new gas, helium. Immediately between the wings is another smaller umbrella-like affair that can be made to revolve very rapidly, for a purpose I dare not disclose to you. This then is the air ship in brief, and its description will correspond with the observations of those who have obtained a good look at it.

"I have shown you why we travel at night, simply to escape too close observation, until we have made a few further improvements that we see are necessary to the successful and formal public trial of our air ship. The kindness that I have received at Beatrice, through a stranger, has influenced me to plead with my partners to name this first successful air ship the "Beatrice."

"I very much regret to announce, that while we were sailing over the town of Odell, in your county, last Saturday night that a small flask of helium fell from the car and exploded with a loud noise and set fire to a barn near or in Odell. The people of that section thought of course, that it was a winter thunder storm, and that the exploding helium was a flash of lightning. This will explain an unaccountable phenomenon happening there that evening. Anton Pallardy."

The York Times, however, publishes the most logical conclusion yet reached regarding the strange lights. It says: "J.R. McLean, a station agent at Juniata flies kites. This is his hobby and inasmuch as his duties as station agent do not require much of his attention, he has plenty of time to devote to his pet diversion. He does not do his kite flying to satisfy merely an idle whim. He bases his experiments upon scientific grounds, and is demonstrating some interesting things in connection with aerial flight. A kite which McLean exhibits in a photograph is of the common kind of tailless kites. It is over eight feet high and five feet wide. McLean occasionally sends up his kites a half mile, and at night he attaches a lantern to one of them. He, perhaps, could explain a number of the mysterious heavenly lights which have been startling people."

1897 March 2 (Tues) Omaha World-Herald, p. 6.

(card 1)

EXPERTS ON THE "AIRSHIP" / Some Nebraska Landmen Size Up the Apparition of the Celestial Craft. / Each Has an Opinion That Is Copyrighted, Original and Nobody Else's. / A City Jailor, a Union Pacific Trainman and a Western Cattleman Give Opinions Upon It. /

Conjecture is rife over the "airship," or celestial craft that has been sailing over the country for some weeks, and was first sighted at Sacramento. The same elevation, the same colored lights and the same steering course have been reported from point to point, but the California opinion has met many Doubting Thomases. Reputable private citizens in Kearney, and South Omaha and Omaha, who reported sighting the aerial navigator, have been recipients of circulars from Keesley institutes and calls from some Good Templar lodges. Even the modern theory that the sky-rocket was no more than a train of weather office box kites has been frowned down by Forecaster Welch, who has insinuated that its very existence pertained to Collector North's department—that of internal revenue—and not to that branch of Secretary Norton's bureau, to which he himself has the honor to belong. In this extension the World-Herald has sought and obtained a number of careful opinions, which are herewith submitted:

PATSEY HAYES'S PHILOSOPHY.

"All dis guff about the airship makes me weak!" observed Patsey Hayes, the jailor at police headquarters. "All dere is to dis is dat some man has been runnin' up agin de wrong kind o' booze. Dere's different kinds of de red liquor; dat which makes youse see snakes, and dat which makes youse see balloons and airships.

"Dere was a guy in de jail here once dat tought dat dere was moonkeys climbin' around de cage and dat a couple of 'gators was tryin' fer his legs, and it took a pint of jag juice to git de notions outen his nut. Now I ax ain't sayin' dat dere is no such ting as airships, nor am I castin' reflections on de 'racity of de guys what say dat dey have seen de ship; what I want ter git at is dis: Dere ain't no airships flyin' around Omaha or over Omaha. I ain't castin' any doubts upon de sayin' of his nibs what seen de ship or radder de lights what he thought belonged to de ships. Dat's all right, all right. He seen 'em, and I'll be de bones on it; any ole man can see de lights if he's feelin' well.

"But I wants a ter give youse a straight tip on dese lights. Dey wasn't no no airships. Dey're what youse would call a mirage. You can get de big book on de rack and look up dat word if youse don't grasp it. Well, dis mirage was caused by de heated debates on de exposition bill down in Lincoln; dat's de trut. De guys down dere, ye' see, gets all het up talkin' on de bill and dey has to open der winders to let it out to prevent de woodwork from catchin' fire, and of course de heat rises and throws dem different lights up on de clouds, and dat's de mirage. See?

BRAKEMAN WILLIAMS' VIEWS.

"I don't know anything about the airship," remarked Joe Williams, the Union Pacific passenger brakeman. "I guess it's all right, but somebody has got mixed up with the switch lights and can't tell 'em from the semaphore or a lantern. Some man got his freight on and pulled off the main line onto a sidetrack, and when No. 2 went by on the main line he thought it was an airship. You see he may have had a rear-end collision with a lamp post somewhere and hax broke his air brakes so that he was running wild, and that's how he got off on the siding. If he hadn't he'd made directix connections with the celestial train, for No. 2 had the right of way.

"You see this Omaha booze they sell along the tracks has a name of putting out ordinary lights and if a man gets loaded with it he can't run on schedule time, even if it's on an Ogden and Hot Springs card. He can't get up steam, you know. He might start out with a clear track ahead, but the first thing he'd know he'd bring up in the ditch if there wasn't a siding; and he'd be pretty sure to dump his load somewhere before he'd gotten out of the yards.

"When he's running this way you know he can't be expected to keep orders or even to read 'em, and as soon as he lands in the ditch or takes a siding it's all up with him. The chances are that he had turned over in the collision and consequently thought that he was looking up into heaven instead of up the bank to the main line. The varied colors are all right; he could see any kind of an old a color."

JOHN KEITH'S OPINION.

"I've read about the airship in the papers," said John Keith, the well known stockman from Sutherland, "but don't put much stock in it. It looks to me as though some man had wandered off the range and wasn't able to make out the brand in the dark, and so called it an airship, as he had to report it.

"He might have wandered into a buffalo wallow and got a little mixed up on the way the herd was drifting, and when he rounded himself into the corral he thought that he had seen some mysterious maverick up in the skies with lights attached. It's possible, too, that he had stumped himself with frontier liquor, which would have helped him out and prevented him from distinguishing a shorthorn from Texas. They could have all been canners and he'd have sworn they were corn fed.

"If the cowboy had been thrown off his broncho he might have seen lights and imagined that he'd been struck by an airship and thus called it that, but my private opinion is that he was simply straining the boys."

1897 March 3 (Wed) Kearney Daily Hub, p. 2.

(card 1)

HOW IT STARTED / Stories of Seeing the Airship in Western Nebraska. / A TRAINMAN AND A RANGEE TELL ALL ABOUT IT. / Explanations That Are Not Satisfactory nor Plausible. /

Conjecture is rife over the "airship" or celestial craft that has been sailing over the country for some weeks, and was first sighted at

Sacramento. The same elevation, the same colored lights and the same steering course have been reported from point to point, but the California opinion has met many Doubting Thomases. Reputable private citizens in Kearney, and South Omaha and Omaha, who reported sighting the aerial navigator, have been recipients of circulars from Keelley institutes and calls from some Good Templar lodges, says the Omaha World-Herald. Even the modern theory that the sky-rocket was no more than a train of weather office box kites has been frowned down by Forecaster Welch, who has insinuated that its very existence pertained to Collector North's department—that of internal revenue—and not to that branch of Secretary Morton's bureau, to which he himself has the honor to belong. Following is published two scientific opinions on the aerial wonder:

"I don't know anything about the air ship," remarked Joe Williams, the Union Pacific passenger brakeman. "I guess it's all right, but somebody has got mixed up with the switch lights and can't tell 'em from the semaphores or a lantern. Some man got his freight on and pulled off the main line onto a sidetrack, and when No. 2 went by on the main line he thought it was an air ship. You see he may have had a rear-end collision with a lamp post somewhere and broke his air brakes so that he was running wild, and that's how he got off on the siding. If he hadn't he'd made direct connections with the celestial train, for No. 2 had the right of way. You see this Omaha booze, they sell along the tracks has a name of putting out ordinary lights and if a man gets loaded with it he can't run on schedule time, even if it's on an Ogden & Hot Springs card. He can't get up steam you know. He might start out with a clear track ahead, but the first thing he'd know h'd bring up in the ditch as if there wasn't a siding, and he'd be pretty sure to dump his load somewhere before he'd gotten out of the yards. When he's running this way you know he can't be expected to keep orders or even to read 'em, and as soon as he lands in the ditch or takes at a siding it's all up with him. The chances are that he had turned over in the collision and consequently thought that he was looking up into heaven instead of up the bank to the main line. The varied colors are all right; he could see any kind of an old color."

"I've read about the airship in the papers," said John Keith, the well known stockman from Sutherland, "but don't put much stock in it. It looks to me as though some man had wandered off the range and wasn't able to make out the brank in the dark, and so called it an airship, so he had to report it."

"He might have wandered into a buffalo wallow and got a little mixed up on the way the herd was drifting, and when he rounded himself into the corral he thought that he had seen some mysterious maverick up in the skies with light attached. It's possible, too, that he had stampeded himself with frontier liquor, which would have helped him out and prevented him from distinguishing a shorthorn from a Texan. They could have all been [cappers] and he'd have sworn that they were corn fed."

"If the cowboy had been thrown off his broncho he might have seen lights and imagined that he'd been struck by an airship and thus called it that, but my private opinion is that he was simply stringing the nose."

1897 March 5 (F.) Omaha Daily Bee, p. 1.

Air Ship May Be a Falling Star. / Bright and Mysterious Light Seen in the Heavens by Clarks People.

CLARKS, Neb., March 4--(Special)--The strange star that has been exciting people elsewhere in the state has made its appearance here. Miss Viola Daniels, a young woman living a short distance out in the country, reports that she saw it the other night. She is entirely trustworthy and there is no reason to doubt her statements. About 9 o'clock in the evening she saw the light come up from the north, traveling very swiftly. It was very large Miss Daniels says, appearing like a giant ball of fire. When almost opposite her it went partly to pieces, two large pieces shooting downward and brightly illuminating the earth. The main star disappeared swiftly to the southward. Miss Daniels' story is substantiated to some extent by Mrs. John Wilson of this town. On the same night she was lying awake on the bed with her daughter, who is ill, when the room was suddenly lighted up by a very bright light--the brightest she has ever seen. It almost as quickly disappeared. Mrs. Wilson feels sure that the light came from the heavens. The appearance of the strange star has excited a good many people here and all sorts of theories are advanced to explain it. Some declare it portends dire disaster to the country.

1897 March 8 (Mon) Kearney (Neb) Hub, p. 3.

The Air Ship Again.

As a great many people are interested in "airships" just now the Hub clips the following from the Leon, Kansas, Indicator: "A. H. Barker exhibited his flying machine at the Opera House last Saturday night--despite the inclemency of the weather, to a fair-sized audience. It was the first time that our people had seen the machine, and we hear many expressions of faith in its practicability."

Wed. March 10 p. 2--The Strange Light Seen.

The family of Mr. C.J. Straud, living on Avenue C and 17th, Tuesday night witnessed the strange light that has been seen in so many different places in Nebraska of late. The light was first seen about 9:15 in the evening and disappeared in the northwest about 10 o'clock. It came from the southwest, was very brilliant, and seemed to be travelling at a very great speed. The elevation was impossible to approximate, although it seemed to be very high in the air.

11, p. 3--Astronomy article says light of Venus sometimes mistaken for light of an airship.

LIGHT SEEN AGAIN / C.W. Hodges Sees a Strange Phenomenon in the Sky. / LIGHT SEEN TRAVELS RAPIDLY TOWARD THE NORTHWEST. / Was Seen in the East at Dawn of Thursday Morning.

People may talk all they please about the strange light that has been reported seen in the sky so often of late, and claim that those who have seen it don't know a star from an air ship until they are gray-headed, but they won't make C.W. Hodges believe anything of the kind. Until Thursday morning he was one of the scoffers, and didn't take much stock in air-ships, but he talks about it now in a serious manner. He has seen something himself--that it was, he doesn't pretend to say, other than a very bright light--and is now willing to believe that other people have not been fooled by the stars.

Thursday morning he was leaving his home for work. He lives at Thirtieth and G, and holds a bench at Marti's harness shop. When a short distance from the house he happened to look up and was astonished to see a very large and bright light rapidly passing over. When first seen it was almost directly overhead, seemingly between a half and a mile high. It was travelling very rapidly toward a little north of northwest, and in a very few moments disappeared over the hills northwest of town.

Mr. Hodges describes the light as a very bright, white light, seemingly from twelve to sixteen feet long. It was seen at six o'clock and seven minutes, when the stars had nearly disappeared in the morning dawn. Nothing could be seen of it excepting the light. When he first saw it he thought he would go back to the house and call his mother out to look at the strange sight. Before he had reached home the light disappeared over the hills.

Mr. Hodges doesn't know whether the light seen belonged to an air ship or not. One thing he does know is that it travelled very swiftly, and was seen when it was so light that one had to look twice to locate a star. When he discovered the light he was not looking for air ships nor thinking of them. He is not in the least superstitious, and doesn't believe that he has seen anything supernatural.

While the reporter was talking to Mr. Hodges, a gentleman in the shop said that last year someone had predicted that Kearney would be destroyed by an aerial visitor, who would drop from the clouds, begin work on a certain street and exterminate the town. The name of the false prophet was not given, but the fact that such idle prophecies are repeated shows what strange speculations are indulged in over the strange light seen.

1897 March 15 (Mon) Kearney (Neb) Hub, p. 2.

The Strange Light Again.

The Hub's mind-reader states that Charlie Bessie saw the "air-ship" the other evening. Mr. Bessie describes it much the same as other people have, who have seen it. It was merely a moving light, and Mr. Bessie is now more than ever convinced that everybody who have [] seen the strange lights have not been looking at the stars.

Monday's State Journal says: "Operators in Chalco and South Omaha reported last night that they had sighted the airship which has been troubling Nebraskans lately. Chalco reported it visible at 10:25, South Omaha reported it at 9:45. He said it came from the southeast and was traveling in a northwesterly direction. The light was the only thing noticed in each instance."

Fri Mar. 19 p. 3--Spice / Kite flying has now become a favorite pastime in Kearney with Kearney boys, and anyone can see airships now at any time of the day almost.

1897 March 16 (Tues) Nebraska State Journal (Lincoln), p. 3.

That Strange Light Again.

NORTH LOUP, Neb., March 15.--(Special.)--A remarkably brilliant ball of fire was seen in the sky by many persons who happened to be out late on Saturday night. They describe it as having appeared in the western heavens and that its course appeared to be peculiarly irregular and erratic--sometimes moving upwards and sometimes the reverse, while its brilliancy also varied greatly, and that it frequently threw out dazzling sheets or streaks of sparks. Its brilliancy must have been considerable, since the snow on the ground and the bright light of the moon made the evening one exceptionally unfavorable for meteoric observation.

1897 March 16 (Tues) Omaha Daily Bee, p. 7.

(card 1)

VISIONS OF AN AIRSHIP. / It Carried a Huge Light, but Form of the Ship Not Distinct. / Heavenly Visitor Seen at South Omaha. / Wanderer Through Space Said to Have Appeared to Parties Who Were Returning Home From Church.

The mysterious airship has again sailed across the heavens in the vicinity of this city. At least the thing which is supposed to be an airboat that someone in this state is responsible for is believed to have been the object seen about church time Sunday night. A view of the object, however, seems to have been confined to South Omaha. The "thing" flashed into view about 9:30 o'clock. It appeared to be coming from the southeast. It had the appearance of a big engine head-light and floated off toward the west and north and finally disappeared behind some buildings. It was in sight something over half an hour, the people who saw it estimating it was a few minutes after 10 o'clock when it sank out of sight. Among those who saw the strange object was I. J. Copenhaver, who is one of the composers on The Bee and who lives at 26th and H streets, South Omaha. Mr. Copenhaver does not drink any exhilarating liquids and in addition was coming home from church at the time. He, with several others, saw the object very distinctly and could not be mistaken.

"We thought at first that it was a balloon," said Mr. Copenhaver. "If there is such a thing as an airship, however, I believe now that it was one. There was a bright light about a foot in diameter and some of us who saw it thought that we could distinguish some dark body below the light, but we might have been mistaken in that."

Mr. Copenhaver and his friends are not the only people in South Omaha who saw the stranger. Some railroad men working in the north end of the railroad yards near the Burlington switch shanty saw it. It had then altered its course and was sailing toward the northeast. The men watched it until it disappeared.

Sunday night was the second time that the visitor has appeared in South Omaha. The "thing" showed itself a couple of weeks ago. At that time it was very much like Sunday night's visitor. All that could be seen was a big light that burned very steadily. Nothing definite could be distinguished regarding any other part of it. On the occasion of that visitation, the object caused a good deal of speculation, and that has been increased now that it has appeared a second time. Some South Omaha people think that it is a big star, which is predicting the end of the world, or something else. Those who have seen it, however, say that the "thing" is not a star at all. Besides being too large, it appears to be floating not very far from the earth. No one, however, has been fortunate enough to distinguish more than the light.

During the past few months there have been several reports of an individual in the state who is working on an airship. The inventor has been located somewhere near Hastings, but he has succeeded in keeping his identity pretty well concealed. They say that he does not want his airship invention to be stolen by unprincipled individuals.

March 16, 1897 Chicago Tribune (Tues.) p. 1

Omaha People See An Airship.

Observe a Light Resembling an Immense Headlight Moves Over the City from the Southwest.

Omaha, Nebraska, March 15.—(Special.)—Omaha people are much interested in a supposed airship that sailed across the heavens in the vicinity of this city last night. The object flashed into view about 9:30 o'clock. It appeared to be coming from the southeast. It had the appearance of a big engine headlight, and floated off toward the west and north and finally disappeared. It was in sight more than half an hour.

Among those who saw the strange object was I. J. Copenhaver.

"We thought at first it was a balloon," said Mr. Copenhaver. "If there is such a thing as an airship, however, I believe now it was one. There was a bright light about a foot in diameter, and some of us who saw it thought that we could distinguish some dark body below the light."

During the last few months there have been several reports regarding an individual in the State who is working on an airship. The inventor has been located somewhere near Hastings.

Thurs. March 25, 1897, p. 1—Venus Attracts Attention.

(The Evening Star appears exceptionally brilliant in the west, and readers have asked if it is a new star, or the Star of Bethlehem returned.)

March 17—St. Patrick's Day fight between Corbett and Fitzsimmons, the latter winning the heavyweight championship in Carson City, Nev.

Early March—The Chi Tri runs feature on the power of X rays to communicate, also destroy ships. End of the World prophecy preached by black minister.

March 20, p. 1—During a cloudy day the city becomes darker, then suddenly at 4:41 for a full minute the city is dark as night.

April 6, p. 1—(cartoon) Descent of Aeronaut Marlan (mayoral candidate), who falls out of a balloon and misses the mayor's throne. Cuba is much in the news.

1897 March 19 (Fri) Kearney (Neb) Daily Hub, p. 2.

AIRSHIP TESTIMONY. / Tom Gass Tells a Few Things About Air Ships Not Generally Known.

A reporter wishing to get an idea of the air ship from an expert this morning interviewed Tom Gass, and found him a walking cyclopedia of knowledge on the subject of aerial transit. Learning that he was to be interviewed, Mr. Gass threw caution to the wind, and talked as freely and unreservedly as a phonograph.

"Did you ever see an airship?" queried the reporter.

"Never in my waking hours," was the reply.

"What would you do should you see one?"

"That depends. If I were near a newspaper man I would keep my mouth continually closed."

"If you saw one do you think you would do anything you might afterwards be sorry for?"

"I might. If I should see an airship with snakes for passengers I probably would take the Keeley cure."

"If there were no snakes?"

"I would question the integrity of my eyesight."

"It has been intimated that once or twice you have gone straight up."

"Probably true but I always light on my feet without assistance."

"What do you think this airship is that everybody is seeing and talking of?"

"One of Norris Brown's air castles that floated beyond his reach and got away."

"Do you think anyone has ever seen it?"

"Yes. Charley Bessie saw it."

"Do you want this interview published?"

"No."

1897 March 22 (Mon) Nebraska State Journal, p. 3.

Venus Shines in Broad Daylight.

TABLE ROCK, Neb., March 21.—(Special.)—From about noon yesterday till the heavens became clouded a majority of the people here seemed to be gazing heavenward. Someone had made the discovery that Venus could be plainly seen shining, seemingly oblivious of the fact that it was broad daylight. Several persons declared that it was the veritable air ship which has been floating around over Nebraska recently, trying to frighten the members of the Nebraska legislature into a sense of their duty. And yet Table Rock has always been considered a temperance town.

1897 March 22 (Mon) St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minn.), p. 3.

Sioux City's Air Ship. / Several People Claim to Have Seen the Machine.

Sioux City, Special, March 21.—Those who wish to see Sioux City's air ship should be out between 9 and 11 p.m. with their telescopes covering the heavens between Smith's Villa addition and the Nebraska side of the Big Muddy. It was seen three weeks ago by train crews on the Sioux City road. Twice after that the same men had glimpses of the machine. Now several residents of the western part of the city claim to have been added to the list. The witnesses do not insist that the visitant is an air ship but they positively deny that it can be a paper balloon. It is evidently under perfect control, traveling in a bee line at a uniform distance from the earth and carries a row of lights at each side of the color of incandescent lamps. If it isn't an air ship, what is it?

1897 March 24 (Wed) Detroit Evening News, p. 4

Wolverine Tidbits.

Holland—A beautiful ball of fire was seen in the clouds the other night. One moment it was brilliant, the next dimmed, as if covered by a veil. It lasted about an hour.

Mon. June 21—meteor showers sparks over Troy, S.C.; blacks frightened

1897 March 25 (Tues) Green Bay (Wis) Gazette, p. 3.

IT'S ONLY A STAR. / Imaginative Yarn Circulated About the Evening Star.

It is not probable that Venus, the evening star, has ever before attracted quite as much attention in Green Bay as is the case just at present. Some genius of vivid imagination who evidently had never heard of Venus started the story that the brilliant star which is now visible during the fore part of the night and gradually sinks below the horizon was nothing more than the electric light suspended over St. Paul for purposes of scientific investigation.

It's a pretty good yarn and several people have been found who believe it, but the light is the evening star. St. Paul people haven't any string tied to it.

1897 March 27 (Sat) Kansas City Times, p. 5.

Say They Saw an Airship. / Strange Nocturnal Visitor Hovers Above the Town of Belleville, Kans. / Special to the Kansas City Times.

Belleville, Kans., March 26.—J. A. Rea, operator at the Rock Island depot; Nealeigh of the Rock Island lunch room and two other men, saw at 9:20 last evening an airship above this city. The light appeared to be a mile above the earth, and looked half the size of a locomotive headlight.

Mr. Rea first saw the strange light, and watched it all the time it hovered over the city, 45 minutes, when it traveled rapidly away to the northwest. It seemed to be governed by human agency. The light was bluish and seemed to come from a strong reflector, and the rays were plainly visible. Its course when departing was exactly opposite the earth wind current of air.

Tonight at 10 o'clock the mysterious light was again seen by Ed Patterson, Claude Moon, Chris Bell, Henry Fisher and six other responsible persons. This time it appeared only half as high as on Tuesday, and the light was so strong as to reflect brightly through windows. At times the light would disappear, and then in an instant flash out again. Its course was erratic while over the town it would rise and fall, and otherwise change positions rapidly. This time the object remained half an hour, when it started rapidly north and was soon beyond the horizon.

Fifteen minutes later the same strange sight was seen by the same people. It appeared to be ten miles southwest of here. The witnesses are credible men, and our people are becoming interested in the strange nocturnal visitor, and arrangements are being made to notify the people of the next visit.

Sun. Mar 28 p. 4—Several people of Bellevue, Kans., have seen airships floating in the circumambient ether. And Kansas is a prohibition state!

Mon. Mar. 15 p. 4—Those citizens of Kansas towns who have seen a strange looking air ship sailing over their heads with voices issuing from it should swear off at once.

1897 March 27 (Sat) Galveston (Tex) Daily News, p. 2.

Saw a Meteor. / Brenham People Startled in the Afternoon by the Appearance of One.

Brenham, Tex., March 26.—At 1:20 o'clock this afternoon by the town clock a large meteor passed over Brenham from southwest to northeast. When it reached a point about half way between the zenith and the horizon it appeared to burst into fragments, though no report was heard by those who were watching the phenomena. After the explosion there arose a white smoke or cloud at first in a wavy line, almost like the letter S or an interrogation point. This smoke remained in posit-lon for about ten minutes and then began to separate and finally disappeared.

The meteor is described by several who saw it as a bright ball of fire, burning with a bright white light in front and leaving a bluish white trail in its wake.

Mar. 29, p. 3--The Meteor. / Saw It From Marlin.

Marlin, Tex., March 25[81].--One of the guests at the Arlington hotel, standing on the veranda on the 26th instant, saw the meteor, which was described by the correspondent at Brenham in the issue of the 27th instant. It was in a southeasterly direction and was traveling northeast. It seemed to dissolve while he was watching it, leaving a cloud of smoke.

Meteoric Display.

Huntsville, Tex., March 28.--The meteoric display described in the News of the 28th, from Brenham, was also witnessed by several here, the white cloud or smoke being much in evidence after the rumbling had passed over. An explanation of the phenomena would prove of interest.

Apr. 11 p.22--Past Month's Weather.

On Mar. 26 Mr. J.S. Skinner of Galveston and others while out hunting on Bolivar observed a bright meteor at 1:30 p.m. The meteor moved fr the SW tow the NE and left a long trail of white smoke or clouds, & became very bright before bursting. It was visible for abt 20 secs., c its trail of smoke & clouds, including where it exploded, was probably visible for more than 10 min. The sky was clear at this time and the wind from the S. The m. was also observed at Brenham, Huntsville, & Melbourne, & it was reptd fr H. that a rumbling sound was heard during its passage.
1897 March 28 (Sun) Topeka Daily Capital, p. 1. (card 1)

STRANGE LIGHT IN THE SKY. / Was It the Headlight of An Airship? / HUNDREDS GAZED AT IT. / Some Thought It Moved; Others Were Unertain. / IT WENT OUT SUDDENLY / Red Light About the Size of a Human Hand. / CAME WEST OF THE CITY / And This Is No "Pipe" Story Either, But the Plain, Unvarnished Truth to Which Many Will Testify. /

Did you see the "airship" last night? Perhaps it will reappear again tonight; look for it in the west.
For several days the Capital has been receiving special dispatches from near-by towns about airships floating around at night. In each of these dispatches the machine carried a huge headlight. All these dispatches were of course thrown into the waste-paper basket, and the correspondents' names placed in the "doubtful" column. Several country papers took the airship story up and used it for a "shocker." And now it turns out that perhaps the country people are not so far wrong aft; all!

About 9 o'clock last night a dispatch was received in Topeka stating that the air ship would reach here about 9:30, and it really appeared on schedule time. Perhaps it was not an air ship, but it was something--something startling. It appeared in the heavens, west of the city. It seemed as if about one thousand Topekans saw it about the same time, and they were all kind enough to notify the Capital office about it by telephone. It came near driving the usually patient telephone girl to drink.

Six fleet-footed reporters were pushed out into the night with instructions to run the thing down or never come back. At 2 o'clock this morning just one of the reporters had been heard from--he telephoned from Rossville that he thought he could find work in Chicago.

But there the monster was! Hundreds of people were watching it, to see if they could distinguish any wings or other things. Some said it was stationary; others were certain that it moved. Tom Anderson said it was Venus; said he knew Venus since he was a child in petticoats. But your uncle was wrong this time. Certainly it was not a star--the light was too red and too large to be a star. Some thought it was a comet; others were sure it was a mirage. As a matter of fact it would disappear and reappear, and there were many who could see it travelling through space.

None of the local astronomers dared to venture out of their houses--they always want time to think over these things before committing themselves. But there the thing was, and it made the cold chills run up and down many a man's back. Could it be that some ingenious Kansan had succeeded in perfecting a machine that really worked? And was he testing his machine at night so some thief could not steal his idea and patent it before he could get to Washington. And was Kansas to have all this honor thrust upon her!

The light disappeared suddenly. No one could guess where it had gone, but the fact that it had disappeared suddenly proved that it was not a star.

The best view of the strange light could be obtained from the corner of Seventh street and the avenue. At one time there was a crowd of 200 people gazing at it. There were many learned people in the crowd who advanced all sorts of solutions.

The firemen at the headquarters station procured field glasses and different persons who gazed through the glasses would give information to the crowd. Mike Waggoner had the best eyesight and imagination.

"It's coming this way," he shouted to the crowd. "It's getting higher and that is a sure sign it's coming our way. If it were going the other way it would come down lower."

"Say," said Nick Chiles, "that looks like one of the Sun vapor street lights we used to have."

"Oh, rats," exclaimed Major Tom Anderson. "If that isn't Venus, I never saw her before. Don't you know Venus is the evening star now?"

"She's struck the city limits," yelled some one. "Telephone to Tim Donovan to go down and arrest her."

"It's brighter than it was a while ago," said L.S. Woolverton. "looks just like an electric light."

"O.L. Clarke: "I just read in the paper yesterday that the airsh was headed this way. That is it, sure. I don't believe that is a st I have seen stars before."

The dispatch from Belleville read as follows: Belleville, Kan., March 27.--The air ship was seen at Belleville, Kan., again last night about 10 o'clock going south, also at 5 o'clock this morning going back north. It seems to be under perfect control and lowers and raises moving north and south at will of the operator. It has an electric head light which appears in they sky larger than the headlight of an engine and its movements are rapid and mysterious.

More than fifty people watched it last night until it disappeared in the southwest, and many have seen it in this vicinity for the past four nights. Its speed is estimated to be ~~xxxxx~~ from sixty to seventy-five miles an hour. It passed over Belleville the other night lighting up the houses and city like an immense meteor and seemed to stop a little northeast of the city, remaining almost stationary for about twenty or thirty minutes, then sailed rapidly up and down going northwest, then south passing below than above some scattering clouds and moving in a playful manner, finally disappearing in the distance; appearing again at 2 o'clock going south and returned north about 5 o'clock in the morning.

It is supposed to be the work of an inventor who is experimenting secretly with the machine and travels at night testing the speed and control of the movements of the ship.
1897 March 28 (Sun) Kansas City Star, p. 2.

Take Venus for an Airship. / The Credulous of Neighboring Villages Greatly Excited Over the Planet.

The planet Venus, which is about 26 million miles from the earth and which glows with great brilliancy in the northwestern heavens, has been taken by credulous correspondents in various parts of Kansas for a fully equipped airship cruising about among the clouds within a few miles of the earth's surface. These correspondents, with more imagination than astronomy, have telegraphed stories to various Kansas City and St. Louis papers describing the monster. The telegrams invariably say:

"J.A. Fakir, James Snorter and half a dozen other reputable citizens of this place saw an airship floating above this city this evening at 9:20. It carried a huge light half as large as a locomotive headlight. Mr. & Snorter, who keeps the railway lunch stand at this place saw the strange sight first. He watched it hovering over the city for three-quarters of an hour and then it traveled rapidly away to the northwest. It was undoubtedly governed by human agency, as it traveled against the wind. The light was bluish and seemed to be reinforced by a strong reflector. Fifteen minutes after this uncanny visitor disappeared beyond the horizon here it was seen fifteen miles northwest of here by farmers. Arrangements are being made to alarm the neighborhood if this nocturnal visitor again appears."

Some of the correspondents say that it is supposed that this harmless planet, which is the nearest neighbor of the earth, is an airship of the British War department, spying through the country for fortifications. The stories have been given some circulation, and Friday at night members of one family in Kansas City, Kansas, declared that they saw the strange craft of the air with its blazing beacon light. The story was passed from mouth to mouth and last evening hundreds of people of that city viewed the planet with awe, and the question on every lip was:

"Have you seen the airship?"
Many of the people actually believed that it was an airship. It disappeared from view about 9:30 o'clock.

Venus is now the evening star and is giving forth its brightest light. It was bright enough on March 21 to cast a shadow. It is now on the wane.
1897 March 28 (Sun) Detroit Free Press, p. 17.

A BRILLIANT SPECTACLE. / An Ignorance That Was Not Altogether Blissful.

Some weeks ago a story was circulated in Harrisburg that there would be visible in the western sky soon after sunset a brilliant light which was nothing less wonderful, the rumor told, than a huge electric spark which some scientists were sending up nightly over Pittsburg.

The story spread rapidly, and when evening came the streets were filled with credulous people who gazed with amazement at the brilliant orb, which, true to report, shone out bright and clear. The newspapers of Harrisburg commented on the occurrence the following day and told the people that the xxx story of the electric light was a fake, and that the ball of fire was simply the planet Venus, which had been shining there at corresponding seasons for ages and would doubtless continue to illuminate that part of the heavens until the world should be no more.

The Harrisburg people perceived that they had been duped and were ashamed at their display of ignorance. But a week later the same story was spread in the town of West Chester, and the usually intelligent people of that borough went through the same performance of admiring the wonderful electric light. The newspapers again assured the role of instructors in astronomy, and Venus was for the second time given proper credit for the evening illumination. But ignorance will not down, and last week the good people of Lancaster, having heard the story, went out after sunset and beheld with amazement the glowing orb that had already brought so much fame to the scientists of Pittsburg. There are some doubting Thomases, however, among the Lancastrians, and the story was not accepted universally. A pilgrimage was made to the observatory on the grounds of Franklin and Marshall college, and there a glance through the telescope dissipated at once all belief in the story that, singularly enough, had found lodgment in the minds of the people in three distinct localities.

79

Where the display of ignorance may break out next is problematical. Perhaps the delusion is at an end. But all this should point the lesson that the facts of the world in which we live are not taught plainly and intelligently enough in the schools, and the habit of observation is scarcely taught at all. If children in the schools were given some rudimentary instruction in astronomy, or at least had their attention drawn to the wonders of the heavens, there would be no such displays of ignorance as have broken out in this state, and the people would have a better chance to enjoy the world, because they could appreciate some of its many beauties.—Philadelphia Times.

1897 March 29 (Mon) Kansas City Times, p. 1.

(card 1)

NEITHER STAR NOR PLANET / ERUDITE TOPEKANS INSIST THEY WITNESSED A STRANGE LIGHT. / Idea that the Crowd Mistook Venus for the Frakish Visitor is Scouted—Governor Leedy, Secretary Little and Editor Chase Testify in Behalf of Science and Truth—What They Saw at Belleville. / Special to the Kansas City Times.

Topeka, Kan., March 28.—Half the population of Topeka watched the western sky tonight for an airship. The report of last night's aerial visitor spread like wildfire, and it was the principal topic of conversation throughout the city today. A colored minister preached a sermon about it. But the patience of the watchers tonight was not awarded. The strange, blood-red light did not again appear. The only star near where the light of last night was seen was Venus, and some people who were not out last night made the assertion that the people had been fooled by that planet, that she was the only airship in sight. But there can be no truth in this assertion. The light seen last night probably may not have been an air ship, but it certainly was neither a star nor a planet. The light moved parallel with the horizon and with great rapidity. Stars do not perform these feats. Neither do planets. And then when the strange light was reddest there was Venus, a short distance to the right, shining forth in all her effulgent glory. Again, when the midnight watchers caught another glimpse of the light, Venus had long before sunk to rest.

Major Tom Anderson holds to the Venus theory. The major may know how to get the Topeka pension agency, but he is short on stars. His star-gazing days are past. Fred Freeman, cashier of the Bank of Topeka watched the light twenty minutes from the rooms of the Commercial club. "It wasn't a star," Mr. Freeman said. "At any rate, it wasn't like the stars with which I am familiar. In the twenty minutes I watched the thing it passed behind the First Presbyterian church and appeared on the other side, traveling parallel with the horizon. It was very brilliant at times, like an electric light. At other times it was a dark red. I couldn't see any airship about it, but it certainly is something odd."

Harold T. Chase, editor of the Topeka Capitol, said: "I saw the light last night about half-past 9 o'clock, from the State house steps. Among others there were Governor Leedy and Private Secretary Little. The light could not have been a star. It had neither the shape nor the color of any planet or known star. It was large, oblong and as red as blood. It disappeared while I walked three blocks."

J. A. Rea, the Rock Island operator at Belleville, telegraphs that he is still confident that he saw an airship. "I know it," he said. "I could distinguish the ship. I am watching tonight, but at 10 o'clock nothing has been seen." Another dispatch from Belleville says:

"The air ship was seen at Belleville, Kan., again last night about 10 o'clock going south and also at 5 o'clock this morning going back north. It seems to be under perfect control and lowers and raises moving north and south at will of the operator. It has an electric headlight which appears in the sky larger than the headlight of an engine and its movements are rapid and mysterious.

"More than fifty people watched it last night until it disappeared in the southwest and many have seen it in this vicinity for the past four nights. Its speed is estimated to be from sixty to seventy-five miles an hour. It passed over Belleville the other night lighting up the houses and city like an immense meteor and seemed to stop a little northeast of the city, remaining almost stationary for about twenty or thirty minutes, then sailed rapidly up and down going northwest, then south, passing below then above some scattering clouds and moving in a playful manner, finally disappearing in the distance; appearing again at 2 o'clock going south and returned north about 5 o'clock in the morning."

Several persons with powerful glasses perched themselves in windows and on porches, hoping that the ship would return to view, but they had not been rewarded at midnight. No one seems to be able to offer an explanation of the light, although everybody refers to it as the "air ship," notwithstanding the light looked no more like an air ship than it did like a farm wagon. It simply was a blood-red light, different from anything ever before seen in the sky. The dispatchers from other points where the light was observed give a description of it similar to that herein contained. The light caused great excitement on the street, and ignorant people hurried for their homes, fearing that a great calamity was about to occur, some hid in their cellars.

March 29, 1897 Chicago Tribune (Mon.) p. 4

Airship Is Seen by Gov. Leedy

Strange Light Seen by Residents of a Dozen Kansas Towns on Several Different Nights.

Topeka, Kansas, March 28.—(Special.)—Residents of a dozen or more northern Kansas towns are greatly excited over the appearance of a strange light in the western sky. It has been seen several nights. Reports from some points are that it is an immense ball of fire.

Reports from other points are that it resembles the pictures which newspapers print of airships.

Friday night A. J. Rea, telegraph operator for the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railroad company at Belleville, reported that the light hovered over the city for three quarters of an hour and then moved rapidly away. It looked half the size of a locomotive headlight and was of a bluish tint. Last night hundreds of Belleville people watched for the light and it appeared about 10 o'clock. This time the light was so strong that it reflected brightly through the windows. At times it would disappear and then in an instant flash out again. While over the town its course was erratic. It remained half an hour and then darted off toward the north and soon disappeared. Several who saw the light through a strong glass say they could distinguish the outlines of an airship.

At 8:30 o'clock last night a strange light appeared in the sky west of Topeka, evidently the one reported at Belleville. The light was about the shape and twice the size of a man's hand and was blood red. It was travelling slow in a northerly direction. It was in sight about half an hour and then disappeared with a flicker like a candle put out by the wind. Several hundred people witnessed the light from the State House steps. Among them was Gov. John W. Leedy. He said: "This is a very strange light. I don't know what it is, but I hope it will solve the railroad problem. If it is an airship, maybe it will."

The light gave the colored people a great scare and they hurried home quite sure the end of the world had come. The light was also seen last night at Atchison, Hiawatha, Holton, Concordia and elsewhere. Half the people of Topeka watched for the light tonight, but it did not appear.

1897 March 29 (Mon) Cedar Rapids (Ia) Evening Gazette, p. 1.

NEWS OF IOWA. / Farmer's Garments and Versacity Badly Strained. / RELIQUARY IN THE AIRSHIP. / Its Anchor Rope Hooks the Frightened Man. / ... / A Sioux City Yarn.

Sioux City, Iowa, March 29.—It will not be long before the airship will be as serious a menace to life and limb as the bicycle. Robert Hubbard, a farmer living fifteen miles north of here, thinks that it is nothing less than criminal recklessness on the part of skippers of such craft to permit a drag rope with a grapnel attached to dangle from the rear of their cars. He asserts that the anchor of one of them caught in the slack of his trousers a few nights ago and dragged him several rods before the seat of the tortured garment gave way and dropped him into a dry run on the border of his "cow lot." Hubbard's reputation for truth telling has never been bad and the general opinion is that he either "had 'em" or dreamed his remarkable experience.

What the residents of Sioux City and vicinity supposed to be an airship has been seen in this vicinity several times within the past month. Hubbard is one of those who have been eagerly watching for a glimpse of it. On the night in question he says he was tramping about his farm in the moonlight praying for a sight of the nocturnal visitor, when suddenly a dark body, lighted on each side by rows of what looked like incandescent lamps, loomed up some distance south of him. He watched it intently until it was directly over his head. At this point the skipper evidently decided to turn around. In accomplishing this maneuver the machine sank considerably.

Hubbard did not notice the grapnel dangling from the car until suddenly, as the machine rose again, it hooked itself firmly in the seat of his trousers and shot away to the south. Had the car risen to any considerable height the result, Hubbard thinks, would have been disastrous. Either his weight was sufficient to keep it near terra firma, however, or the operator of the machine did not care to ascend to a higher level. On the banks of the dry run where it shook him off grew a small sapling. Hubbard passed near it in his flight and with the gripe of a drowning man, grasped it with both hands. Instantly there was a sound of tearing cloth and the machine went on with a section of the farmer's trousers, while Hubbard himself tumbled into the run. He related his experience to several neighbors and, despite their incredulous grins, firmly maintains the truth of the story.

1897 March 29 (Mon) Detroit Evening News, p. 4.

Weird Lights / Seen in Two Little Lakes in Ogemaw County.

PRESCOTT, Mich., March 29.—A sensational ghost story reaches here from Boughner and Mills lakes, in Mills township, Ogemaw county. Weird lights are seen on the water every night, and the sound of groaning and weeping is very audible.

A party set out the other night to investigate. Upon their approach the lights, which seemed to float on the surface of the water, immediately disappeared and the groaning ceased.

Last summer a young woman was drowned in one of the lakes and three years ago a dead man was found on the shores of the lake. It was discovered he had been murdered for his money.

These lakes are near the village of Shearer, a number of whose inhabitants are said to have left town because of this ghost scare.

1897 March 29 (Mon) Daily Mining Journal (Marquette, Mich.) p. 6.

Ishpeming and Vicinity. / THAT ST. PAUL LIGHT. / How a Commercial Man Fooled Many Ishpeming People.

The evening star never attracted the attention of the Ishpeming people as it did Friday and Saturday nights. The sky was cloudless both evenings and the star shone out so brightly that it looked like a big arc lamp a short distance west of the city.

Attention was first called to the star by a commercial traveler at the Nelson House. He said it was a 5,000 candle power arc electric light which had been sent up from St. Paul in a balloon. The light was first seen above the city, he said, and had been sent up by the government in pursuance of some sort of a scientific experiment which it was conducting. Every man in the hotel became interested in the light's story and went out to see for the light. None of them had heard anything about the balloon ascension and they were inclined to be skeptical regarding it. In order to convince them that he was right he offered to wager anything from $10 to $100 that it was really an arc light instead of a star as they supposed. He also asserted that the light would come down at 9 o'clock, or shortly after. No one took him up on the wager.

Soon the report about the big light at St. Paul got around town and nearly every person on the street could be seen "rubber-necking." Many got out glasses to better observe the light. With a strong glass it looked twice as large as an ordinary electric light. Saturday evening men, women and children in all parts of the city stayed out watching the star until nearly 9:30, when it disappeared.

There was at least one man at the hotel who would not be convinced that the star was an arc light. This was Captain McCullough, of the cinematoscope company. He is an old sailor and has seen the evening star too many times to not recognize it when it comes up. He related instances where his men often mistook the star for the light at some lighthouse station. He told of times when they tried to convince him that he was off his course through their mistaken conviction that the star was a lighthouse beacon. The captain says the star will shine every evening from now until April 6.

1897 March 28 (Sun) Kansas City Times, p. 1. (card 1)

MANY SEE AN AIR SHIP / Strange Nocturnal Visitor Hovers Over Topeka. / IT THROWS A POWERFUL LIGHT / Attention of the Entire City Is Attracted by It. / BELLEVILLE IS PANIC-STRICKEN. / Phenomenon Is Witnessed in Several Kansas Towns. / BREAKS UP A NEGRO CRAP GAME /

Dispatches to The Times from various points in Kansas state that an air ship, which is ~~xxxxxxx~~ supposed to be the one which excited the entire Pacific coast several months ago, and only two weeks ago was sighted in ~~xxxxxx~~ numerous towns in Kansas, was plainly visible.

That a strange light appeared in this section of the West, for which the inhabitants can not account under any other hypothesis than that of an air ship can not be disputed. At 2 a.m. the people of Topeka were watching the strange visitor, and the entire city is excited. /

Special to the Kansas City Times.

Topeka, Kan., March 27.--What is generally believed to be the mysterious air ship that has appeared at various places in Kansas and Nebraska during the past three weeks was plainly visible here and at neighboring towns last night. It hovered about the city for several hours, and an immense light, much more powerful than an ordinary arc light, directed the attention of a large part of the city's population to it. Governor Leedy watched the phenomenon from the State house steps. "I don't know what that thing is," he remarked to The Times correspondent, "but I hope it will solve the railroad problem."

The light first appeared, as nearly as can be learned, at 9:15. At 1:30 it is still visible.

When first seen the light appeared to be red, and moved in a northerly direction and then disappeared abruptly. It soon reappeared some distance to the eastward, and made its way back to where it was first noticed west of the city. The news of the strange aerial visitor's presence spread rapidly, and soon the streets were dotted with animated groups of watchers. In several instances people with powerful glasses perched themselves in windows and porches, hoping to penetrate the darkness and learn something of the monster's outline. Two or three, it is reported, claim to have distinguished a framework and a pair of balloon-like wings, but at this hour these claims can not be substantiated.

The spectacle had its humorous side, and several ignorant colored people hurried home, quite sure that the end of the world had come, and expecting to hear Gabriel's trumpet sound at every step.

A policeman reported that he saw the light far in the northwest shortly after midnight. It appeared just above the horizon and was visible for about five minutes. It did not seem to move and it disappeared, the officer said, with a flicker like a candle put out by the wind. It is reported at the Rock Island offices here that the light shone with great brilliancy about 11 o'clock tonight at Belleville. Darkness was turned into day and many people were panic stricken. The first report was that the outlines of a great airship on the order of the California machine, of which the newspapers printed pictures, were plainly visible.

It is likely, however, that the ship outlines were imagined, as the second report said that the object seen was like an immense volume of flame traveling westward. The light seemed to pass within ten miles of the town.

Couriers have been sent from Belleville to investigate but nothing definite has as yet been learned.

Dispatches have been received tonight from various points along the Rock Island and Central branch railroads in Northern Kansas in regard to the light, but nothing further than its appearance and the excitement it caused is reported.

The greatest excitement in Topeka over the "airship" was on smoky row, a particularly wicked section of the city. When the light was reported the joint-keepers closed their places of business, the crap games were brought to a sudden close and in half an hour the row was as silent as a cemetery. Policemen on the smoky row beat say that it is the first quiet night experienced in that section for months. There was also great excitement at one of the colored churches, where a revival was in progress. The preacher told the congregation that the light had been sent to warn sinners of the wrath to come, and many became converted on the spot. /

Almost two weeks ago dispatches from numerous towns throughout Nebraska stated that a light, supposed to proceed from an air ship, had been seen at various points throughout that state. The newspaper speculators at that time associated the Nebraska airship with the visitor which had startled the entire State of California some three months ago. The California story is familiar. Before reference is made to it, perhaps it should be stated that within the past two weeks dispatches have come from various small towns in Central Kansas to the Times, stating that a light which was almost blood red had been seen near. But little attention was paid to these statements, as the stories could not be authenticated, and it became something of a joke about The Times office. It is only a speculation that associates the airship seen /p.2/ in Kansas and Nebraska with the aerial visitor of the Pacific Coast.

About three months ago two of the San Francisco papers announced that an inventor from the East had gone to California for the purpose of experimenting with an airship in dense fogs along the Pacific coast. The story was that this inventor, whose name was not given, but with whom ex-Attorney General H.M. Hart of that State, one of the best known men in California, claimed to have consulted, had gone there for the purpose of avoiding impertinent inquiries of scientific men in the East. The airship, with its light, was first seen in Sacramento, 100 miles south of where it was supposed to have been constructed. Later it was seen in Oakland, and still later, as far South as the foothills near Los Angeles.

Column after column was written about the strange sight in the California newspapers, and the entire State was for weeks given over to a discussion of the strange phenomenon. While the Pacific coast was forced to believe the statements and affidavits of the many well-known citizens who had witnessed the appearance, the East was inclined to make jests about it. In the same manner the Nebraska light was a subject for the paragraphs' sarcasm.

Only yesterday morning The Times published a dispatch from Belleville, Kan., in which it was stated that J.A. Rea, operator at the Rock Island depot; Jack Nealeigh of the Rock Island lunch room, and two other men had seen, about 9 o'clock Thursday evening, an air ship above the city. "The light appeared to be a mile above the earth," said the correspondent, "and looked half the size of a locomotive headlight." Mr. Rea first saw the strange sight, and watched it all the time it hovered over the city, forty-five minutes, when it traveled rapidly away to the northwest. It seemed to be governed by human agency. The light was bluish and seemed to come from a strong reflector, and the rays were plainly visible. Its course when departing was exactly opposite the earth wind current of air.

Tonight at 10 o'clock the mysterious light was again seen by Ed Patterson, Claude Moon, Chris Bell, Henry Fisher and six other responsible persons. This time it appeared only half as high as on Tuesday, and the light was so strong as to reflect brightly through windows. At times the light would disappear, and then in an instant ~~xxx~~ flash out again. Its course was erratic while over the town--it would rise and fall and otherwise change position rapidly. This time the object remained half an hour, when it started rapidly north and was soon beyond the horizon.

1897 March 29 (Mon) Green Bay, Wis., Gazette, p. 6.

PERHAPS AN OMEN OF EVIL. / Nebraska People Excited Over Appearance of Celestial Phenomenon.

The strange star that has been exciting people elsewhere in Nebraska has made its appearance at Clarks, Neb. Miss Viola Daniels, a young woman living a short distance out in the country, reports that she saw it the other night. She is entirely trustworthy and there is no reason to doubt her statement. About nine o'clock in the evening she saw the light come up from the north, traveling very swiftly. It was very large, Miss Daniels says, appearing like a giant ball of fire. When almost opposite her it went partly to pieces, two large pieces shooting downward and brightly illuminating the earth. The main star disappearing swiftly to southward. Miss Daniels' story is substantiated to some extent by Mrs. John Wilson, of this town. On the same night she was lying awake on the bed with her daughter, who was ill, when the room was suddenly lighted up by a very bright light--the brightest she had ever seen. It almost as quickly disappeared. Mrs. Wilson feels sure that the light came from the heavens. The appearance of the strange star has excited a good many people here and all sorts of theories are advanced to explain it. Some declare it portends dire disaster to the country.

1897 March 29 (Mon) Green Bay, Wis., Gazette, p. 8.

XXX FRIGHTENED BY HUGE METEOR. / Aerial Visitor at New Martinsburg, W. Va. Bursts.

A meteor made its appearance the other morning at New Martinsburg, Fayette county, which frightened the inhabitants of that village greatly with its antics. It was spherical in shape and rushed through space at a rapid rate, leaving in its trail three columns of smoke. It was accompanied by a half rumbling, half hissing noise which could be heard for several miles.

When directly over the house of David Leisure it burst with a terrific report. Leisure was knocked down and rendered unconscious for several minutes. Shortly after recovering consciousness he went to his barn and discovered three holes in its side, each about five inches in diameter.

Inside the barn one of his horses was found dead ~~xxx~~ in its stall, with one side of its head blown off. In another stall stood a horse ~~xxx~~ made totally deaf by the concussion. A search is being made for the meteoric stones.

1897 March 30 (Tues) Omaha Daily Bee, p. 8.

More People See the Air Ship. / Stake Their Reputations That It Was Not a Star.

Sunday night appears to be the time for the appearance of the "air-ship." The mysterious visitor was seen again Sunday night by a number of Omaha's reputable citizens. It hove into sight about the time that church was over and in half an hour had traversed the heavens and had once more disappeared. It was seen by people in all parts of the city. This time the "airship" came into view in the southeastern portion of the horizon. It was in the shape of a big bright light, too big for a balloon, and glided steadily. It sailed over the city to the northwest and there disappeared behind houses and bluffs. It moved very slowly and seemed to be quite near the earth. Nothing but the light was visible. A big crowd of people watched the trip of the visitor at 24th and Lake streets and speculated upon it.

Thurs., March 25, 1897, p. 5—Jove Hurling Bolts.
(Piece of red-hot copper from the sky almost strikes a Michiganander—Miles, Mich., Mar. 24—C. F. Earls sees three-inch diameter meteor strike the ground and burrow in close to him.)

1897 March 30 (Tues) Kearney (Neb) Hub, p. 3.

Seen at Papillion.

J.H. McCarty, night-tower man at the postal station, says that he is firmly convinced that the light seen in the sky is either a mammoth kite or an airship of some kind, says the Papillion Times. He is admirably situated to watch the phenomenon, and for several nights has observed its actions closely, and when compared with other objects cannot help but notice its various movements as being entirely different. The light apparently comes up directly from the ground, and moves about gracefully in long symmetrical curves. It turns and twists and finally mounts to a great height where it remains stationary for some time. Afterwards it descends and is lost sight of at the horizon. Many people at Portal corroborate the statement.

1897 March 30 (Tues) Atchison (Kans) Daily Globe, p. 2.

City News

The newspaper airship, which is being pushed to the front, now that the prize fight is over, was seen at Omaha Sunday night. Saturday night it was visible at Topeka. There is no question that a peculiar light has been seen in the heavens, and the Globe printed the best story concerning it on February 27. The Missouri Pacific operator at Falls City, looking into the heavens, saw what appeared to him to be a red switch light at 10 o'clock, on the night of February 26. It appeared to be traveling in a northwesterly direction, and he notified all the night railroad operators in ~~the~~ Nebraska to be on the lookout for it. One by one the operators at Stella, Beatrice, Wymore, Hastings, Kenesaw and Hartwell reported seeing it. Still, none of them saw an air ship: only a red light in the sky. A.H. Bewsher, of Atchison, who was at Auburn, Neb., a few days ago, says there are many people in Nebraska who become offended when the airship story is scoffed at. They apparently believe it. One liar at Auburn declared he had plainly seen the outlines of the ship. Church Howe, the Nebraska politician, is being quoted as explaining the phenomenon. The story he is credited with telling is that an air ship has been invented by a man living at Chadron, Neb., and that he makes nightly trips to Missouri, where he has relatives. Everybody who knows Church Howe will know what to do with his story.

p. 2--It is not surprising that some people believe that an air ship is floating about the country: some people believe in spiritualism, occultism, etc. So many people believe in miracles that charlatans advertise in the newspapers to perform them. A man who believes that a fortune teller can take a pack of cards and tell his past and future, has a perfect right to believe that an air ship is floating about the country at night.

April 2 p. 1--News and Comment: The air ship fake is the best that has been sprung for years. They always make it appear at night, and then at such a height that it cannot be investigated. But then the newspapers will have to be careful, as it was "seen" last night at two different places 75 miles distant at almost the same time.

1897 March 30 (Tues) Topeka Daily Capital, p. 3. (card 1)

WILL 'O THE WISP. / Perhaps That Was What That Strange Light Was. / Special to the Capital.

Lawrence, Kan., March 29.--The "airship" story was the subject of some comment by the scientific members of the Kansas university faculty this morning, but none of them placed a great deal of credence in the tale told. Prof. E. Miller, dean of the school of arts, and professor of mathematics, who has given much attention to the study of astronomy, said that he considered the story a humbug. "I think," he said, "that the papers must have been short of copy, and found a good subject to write up and proceeded to make a readable article."

He said it could not have been Venus nor any other star, and that the only way it could possibly be explained, if the facts were as stated, was that it might have been a "will o' the wisp," but if they did that would be the only natural explanation of the occurrence.

Chancellor Snow said he had not read the article through, because he thought it was a hoax, and had given it no thought ~~xxx~~ whatever.

A Populist member of the faculty said that when he read the account he thought it might be the nemesis of the late Legislature.

Another member of the faculty thought it might be the fabled sea serpent which had taken unto itself a pair of wings, and had been properly illuminated to produce the effect that had caused the mysterious light.

Many airship fakes have been published that have become famous. The most successful of these, perhaps, according to the Kansas City Star, was one written by Edgar Allan Poe and published in the New York Sun in 1844. The story purported to describe the journey made by eight Englishmen across the Atlantic ocean in a steering balloon christened "Victoria." The trip, it was said, occupied only three days and was ended by a successful landing on Sullivan's island near Charleston, S.C., afterward famous in the bombardment of Fort Sumter. The demand for the paper containing the fake was unprecedented.

The airship fake which gives foundation for the story started in Kansas last week, upon the bright appearance of the planet Venus, was started by the San Francisco Chronicle soon after the election last November. It told how several people of a suburb of San Francisco had seen a mysterious craft flitting about in the air over the city and finally printed an interview with a man described as a well known lawyer of the town, who admitted with seeming great unwillingness, that the airship was an actual invention of a client of his whose name he could not divulge. It developed, however, that the lawyer was a man of no standing. The exposure of the fake did not reach the prominence of the original publication of the story.

The story last week in Kansas was the direct result of this story. One correspondent telegraphed that the airship was supposed to be the same one that had journeyed among the clouds about the Golden Gate. It was the result of the observations of night telegraph operators along the railroads and for the last two weeks during the period of the greatest brilliancy of Venus the operators along the line have frequently discussed the airship with operators in the railroad offices in this city.

This is not the first instance of Kansas being used for the scene of a fake. Joe Mulhatten, an erratic newspaper man, wrote a story several years ago of an immense meteorite that fell in Kansas, that was generally credited by scientific men for a time. Many other fakes have become famous along with the New York Herald's story of the escape of the animals of the Central park Zoo. The Tacoma, Wash., News published a story which, like the Herald story, was intended to bring about a reform. It described vividly the breaking out of a great fire in a remote part of the city and told that the firemen were unable to check the conflagration owing to the inadequate water facilities. It said that lines of hose were coupled together and relays of engines employed to get water on the flames, but that at the time of going to press the fire was still gaining. The paper came out at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and the account caused great excitement. Crowds ran to the scene of the supposed fire only to return indignant and abashed. The publication of the story, however, resulted in the extension of the water service.

Underground river fakes and stories of cutting through the crust of the earth have also been started and been imitated far and wide. In Kansas City, Kan., the underground river story was sprung on two different occasions, once during the digging of a well in the old Carno house, since rated, and again a year or two later.

A fake that attracted widespread attention was printed in 1890, detailing how several inhabitants of Bosnia had applied to the authorities for permission to be beheaded in the place of Baron Rothschild, since dead. It was stated that a rumor was circulated in the country that Rothschild was condemned to death for some crime, and had offered a reward of one million florins for a substitute. The thrifty Bosnians had formed a club and drawn lots to select a substitute and the survivors were to divide the reward.

One of the most notable fakes of recent years was perpetrated by a Dallas, Tex., newspaper man at the time of the proposed Pittsims-Corbett fight. He printed a story that the Prince of Wales was coming over to see the mill. Only an official denial under the signature of Albert Edward himself stopped the story--not, however, until it had spread over the entire civilized world.

1897 March 30 (Tues) St. Joseph Daily Herald, p. 4.

TOPEKA'S VISION (ed.)

The city of Topeka, Kan., is in a great uproar. A few evenings ago, a number of the night owls were startled by the appearance of a strange light in the heavens that filled them with a fear of approaching evil. Believing that there might be a possibility of mistake, owing to the nature of the tea imbued at the supper table, ~~xxxx~~ these few provokers of the night were loth to tell of the vision that they had seen. However, it was discovered that others had seen the strange light also. Possibly these were the "better halves" awaiting the home coming of the tardy spouses, but this, history does not record. Anyway it has been asserted upon the testimony of a number of reputable citizens that the light floated through the atmosphere of night, like the iridescent dreams of a former senator from that state.

Chief among these witnesses was the editor of the Topeka Capital. As a rule his testimony is unquestionable; in this case, however, it would satisfy the curious to know the brand of soothing syrup he imbibed, in order to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion. Considering the fact that he was but recently engaged in conversation with the governor of Kansas, and that he could discern the difference between a church spire and a picket fence, it appears that his testimony is all right, unless the desire of a "scoop" on the other papers quite overcame him. It is generally admitted that something happened to Topeka that evening. Since then, the occurrence has been the chief topic of conversation.

An explanation is now being sought. Some thought that the six calendar of Providence had become a little mixed, and through misinformation regarding the vision of the legislature, the Idea of March were to have a new significance through the destruction of that body because of a wrathful Providence. Others assert that it was a party of explorers flying about in an air ship, picking out choice corner lots previous to the annual real estate boom. The best explanation, however, is the one which the Herald offers to the much perplexed citizens, namely: That it was only the signal from the inhabitants of some other planet, rejoicing with the citizens of Topeka that the late legislature of Kansas had really adjourned.

1897 March 30 (Tues eve) Saginaw, Mich., Globe, p. 1.

CASEVILLE HAS A MYSTERY / STRANGE LIGHT MOVES AT NIGHT IN THE BAY. / Discovery First Made By a Saginavian is Now Attracting Great Attention

Caseville, Mich., March 30.—Excitement is running at a high pitch here over the presence of moving lights or fires seen nightly in the bay off here during the past week. It was first seen by S.F. Owen of Saginaw, who is interested in [something] here. In company with two other men they described what they thought was a signal of distress from a distressed fishing boat crew. It being about 10 p.m. they procured a lantern and swung it as a signal. They assert that they received answering signals. It has been seen every night since then, and appears in the form of a bright moving light. The beach is thronged nightly by interested people, ever on the keen lookout, and the superstitious element are having a splendid inning.

All sorts of speculations are a rife, some asserting that it is the ghosts of those lost off the steamer Oconto, which went on the big Charity Island off here some years ago; others that it is a distress signal from the lightkeeper and his assistant on the Charity. The light is completely isolated from the mainland all winter, the nearest land being nine miles. Large floes of ice are between here and the light, and, owing to the rumor, the lightkeepers' family, who live here are becoming very anxious about his welfare, fearing he may be ill. Scoffers of a political turn of mind assert that it is a bonfire and ratification meeting of the Saginaw Bay whitefish, herring and pickerel over the late fish legislation in their behalf at Lansing, and that in the deepening gloom behind the vision the rotund figure of his excellency can be seen, menacingly brandishing aloft a fiery two-edged sword in his right hand, while his left points deprecatingly at the advancing hosts of "bloated monopolistic vandals" of Saginaw bay fishermen.

BRIGHT EVENING STAR. / Venus Shines Resplendent on Cloudless Nights.

Venus is playing a star role these evenings and holds the boards in the western ~~sky~~ heavens. She is the "evening star," and shines brightly through the wind-swept March atmosphere. So brilliant is Venus as she chases around after the sun that many citizens have been puzzled and have written letters asking if a new star has found a place in the firmament, or if the star of Bethlehem has returned.

1897 March 30 (Tues) Daily Tribune (Iron Mountain, Mich), p. 3.

THERE IS NO STRING TO IT / Venus, the Evening Star, is not Controlled by St. Paul People. /

Some war started the story that the bright evening star which appears in the evening sky was an electric light hoisted two miles high over St. Paul. As a result quite a crowd collected last night to watch it and all agreed it couldn't be a star it must be a light.

"Yes" said the war "it is hoisted about five o'clock by means of a storage battery and a balloon. It goes up two miles high and can be seen all over the country. About nine o'clock they start to pull it down," and many were quite sure last evening that they could see the star slowly being drawn to terra firma.

The light which is seen is Venus, the evening star, which hangs in the sky with the brilliancy of an electric light. St. Paul people have no string to it notwithstanding the report industriously circulated, and even printed in some papers that it was hoisted every evening by the enterprising men of the saintly city.

1897 March 30 (Tues) Wichita Daily Eagle, p.5.

Was Not Seen Here. / Popular Fake That Will Not Find Favor in Wichita

As a matter of news this paper states that no airship has been seen here and more than that, no airship is expected to be seen here. Nearly every town in Kansas and Nebraska has sent out reports that it was seen there and even the steps of the Capitol at Topeka have been prostituted to the cause of faking. All these stories are fakes, pure and simple. Wichita is in no shape or ranner a party to this disreputable newspaper fabricating.

April 1, 1897 Chicago Record (Thurs.) p. 10 also March 31, 1897 p. 1

Omaha Sees an Airship
Remarkable Object Said to Hover Over the Nebraska City at Night. /Special to the Chicago Record.

Omaha, Nebraska, March 31.—During the last six months an alleged airship has been observed floating in the heavens in different sections of this state. For the last three nights it has been hovering over Omaha. The unusual occurrence has led to the opinion that the inventor of a real airship has been testing his machine in Nebraska preparatory to placing it before the public. The indications are that John O. Prest of this county is the author of the mysterious machine. Though he vigorously denies that such is the case. Prest occupies his time at his country residence near Omaha in experimenting with airships, constructing models, etc., and has been so engaged for the last ten years. Some time ago he told several persons that he would surprise the world with a working model in 1897.

There is no doubt that the ~~light~~ light seen in different parts of the state is the same, since the descriptions by the persons who ~~xxx~~ have seen it always agree. The light is about as large as a locomotive headlight and seems to be turned up, down, right or left at the will of some human agency. Sometimes it is seen rushing through the air at a very high rate of speed, and again is observed stationary or moving slowly through the heavens about half a mile high. The two times in the last week that the light has been seen at Omaha it disappeared near Prest's house.

1897 March 31 (Wed) Detroit Evening News, p. 4.

Wolverine Tidbits.
Monroeville—People in several upper penninsula cities believe they saw the electric lights sent up in balloons from St. Paul, by the government, to see whether they could not be used as signals in war. Doubting Thomases say what they really saw was the planet Venus.

1897 March 31 (Wed) Galveston, Tex., Daily News, p. 3.

Phenomena of the Heavens. / Strange Appearance and Disappearance of Three Lights.

Colmesnell, Tex., Mar. 29.—A heavy wind and rain storm visited this place last night, the rainfall being 2.76 inches. At 11 o'clock last night the storm suddenly ceased, though the heavens were overcast with angry clouds; and just above the horizon in the west was visible a continuous meteor or star, apparently larger than any of the planets seen on a clear night. To the southward and above and to the northward and below the large star were seen two smaller stars, neither visible at the same time. As one grew bright the other faded, and this continued several minutes, after which darkness prevailed in the west again. It was probably the concentration of electric forces far off that ~~caused~~ caused the central star, and the variations of the electric display on either side causing the lesser ones to show up or become dim as the lightning flashed heaviest toward the north or south from the central star.

1897 April 1 (Thurs) Beatrice (Nebr) Weekly Express, p. 8.

Fairbury Sees the Airship.

The very much discussed "airship" was in evidence Wednesday night and was closely watched by a large number of Fairbury citizens. Our attention was first called to it about 8:30 o'clock. It was then high in the heavens and slightly to the northwest. It had much the appearance of a bright star, except that it had long rays of light extending up and down from it. For several minutes at a time it would apparently stand perfectly still, then it would perceptibly move to the northwest, swaying sometimes to the right and then to the left, but keeping the same northwesterly direction. Sometimes it would nearly pass out of sight, only to reappear with greater brilliancy. At 9:30, when it was well down in the northwest, it made a rapid move directly north and passed out of sight. In a few moments it reappeared, again assuming its irregular movements until it passed out of sight beyond the northwestern horizon. The casual observer might have seen the phenomenon without noticing anything extraordinary, but those who critically watched it until it sank out of sight will probably be unable to offer any plausible explanation of its peculiar variations.—Fairbury Gazette.

April 1, 1897 Indianapolis Journal (Thurs.) p. 7 (card 1)

Aerial Navigation
Problem Believed to Have Been Solved by a Nebraska Inventor.

Omaha, Nebraska, March 31.—During the past six months an alleged airship has been observed floating in the heavens in different sections of this state. For the past three nights it has been hovering over Omaha. The unusual occurrence has created much comment, which has crystallized in the opinion that an inventor of a real airship has been testing his machine in Nebraska preparatory to placing it before the public. The indications are that John O. Prest, of this county, is the author of the mysterious machine. Prest is a unique character, occupying his time at his country residence near Omaha in experimenting with air-ships, constructing models and studying all subjects incidental to the theories of applied mechanics along the line of providing a vessel that will propel itself through the air. He has consumed the past ten years in this way, and the walls of his home are covered with drawings of queer-looking-shaped things, some resembling gigantic birds, while others look something like a big cigar, all of which he says represent models of air-ships. He is regarded as a crank by many, though being a man of superior education. He came to Omaha from Germany twenty years ago and has led the life of a recluse. [?]... Among the few who know him in Omaha he stands high. Mr. Prest refuses to admit that the airship reported in different sections of the State is his invention, but he has been away from home recently much of the time, which is very unusual for him. [He told others that he would surprise the world with a working airship model in 1897. The light seen traversing the heavens is the only part of the airship which can be seen. This is due to being impossible except on a dark night, to see the rest of the airship, and this is additional evidence for his shrewdness.... There is no doubt that the object seen in various areas is the same, since the descriptions given by all people who have seen it say the light is about as large as a railroad headlight, and that it seems to swing from the left to the right at the command of some human agency. Sometimes it speeds through the air, sometimes it moves slowly, about half a mile high. While over Omaha the light has hovered over, and disappeared near Prest's house. Persons have called on Prest, and him refusing good-naturedly to give them any information.]

1897 April 1 (Th) Daily Sentinel (Bowling Green, O.), p. 1. (See Feb. 24) p. 74

MYSTERIOUS LIGHTS. / A New Theory of Those Seen Recently by Bowling Greeners.

Some time since the Sentinel printed an item concerning the appearance of a bright waving light in the northern heavens on the evening previous. The sight was viewed by a North Main street lady of sound and firm mind, and her story was corroborated by two gentlemen who saw a similar light in the same vicinity from a point of view several miles distant. The light seemed to be gently undulating and moving forward and was located about 20 degrees from the horizon. Many of the Sentinel's incredulous readers were inclined to scoff at the story, and mildly refer to the writer as a dreamer. The other night a similar light was seen in the western heavens by a number of voracious gentlemen, all of whom we are assured were perfectly sober. This latter incident (that of the light) was accounted for by the story that a Chicago scientist had been making experiments by sending up electric lights in a balloon, which he claimed could be seen for a distance of 500 miles. But here is a brand new theory of the apparent phenomenon, which gives the incident quite a new phase and attaches to it considerable credulity. The following dispatch appeared in the Cleveland Leader, and many people will connect the Omaha "light" with that seen by Bowling Green people:

Omaha, Neb., March 29.--They mysterious "airship" was seen again last night for the third time by a number of Omaha citizens. It hove in sight about the time that church was over, and in half an hour had traversed the heavens, and had once more disappeared. It was seen by people in all parts of the city.

This time the "airship" came into view in the southeastern portion of the horizon. It was in the shape of a big bright light, too big for a balloon, and slowed steadily. It sailed over the city to the northwest, and there disappeared, behind the houses and bluffs. It moved very slowly, and seemed to be quite near the earth. Nothing but the light was visible. A big crowd at Twenty-fourth and Lake streets watched the trip of the visitor and speculated upon it.

1897 April 2 (Fri) Daily Democrat (Carrollton, Mo.), p. 3.

CARROLLTON FAVORED WITH A VISIT FROM THE AIR SHIP.

Last night about 8:30 when Miss Nell Heitz returned home from church she saw a peculiar light in the northwest and called the attention of the family to it. They all had a good look at it and they pronounced it the air ship. A field glass was used to see it but they could not make out the exact size and shape of it. A visit to the Heitz home this afternoon resulted in seeing Grandma Heitz--Mrs. Heitz and Miss Nell going away. Grandma Heitz said that the light looked to her like the electric light down on the corner, pointing to the Florence street, she said it would go out entirely and then appear again--it went in a northwesterly direction and after nine o'clock it disappeared. She said she tried to look at it through the field glass but could not get a good view of it. Miss Nell Heitz told her that it went in a zig zag direction sometimes up and again down. Several other ladies also had a look at it and Ode Cruzen had the chance of his life but it was April the first and he would not believe what his wife told him and instead of looking in the direction of the air ship he fixed his eyes on the place where the Southern Cross sheds its light and refused to move his head. This may be the same air ship that has been agitating the minds of the people of Kansas City and Kansas. If it is we will welcome a visit from the owner, if he will only come down and stop with us. Last night hundreds of people in MO saw the light supposed to be carried by the air ship, but so far no one has attempted to describe the ship.

1897 April 2 (Fri) Kansas City Times, p. 1,2.

(card 1)

DID YOU SEE THE SHIP / Thousands of City People Witness the Strange Light. / WAS IT AN APRIL FOOL JOKE? / If So It Was a Decidedly Successful Effort. / SIGHT-SEERS LINE STREETS. / Within an Hour the Light Appears at Everest, Kan. / SWEAR IT WAS AN AIR SHIP. / The Story Told at Everest Consistent With the Theory that the Light Seen Here Was From the Air Ship Witnessed in the Kansas Town. /

The correspondent of The Times at Everest, Kan., in order to substantiate the truth of his report that an air ship was seen here last night, secured this affidavit from citizens of established veracity.

"This is to certify that we, the undersigned, saw and watched for some time tonight the movements of large and brilliant lights that traveled at various heights over this city, and that we believe it to be the same as seen at various other points, and believe it to be an air ship." / (Signed): / J.E. Gunn, / Proprietor Commercial Hotel. / E.E. Mason, / Roller Mills. / A. L. Stout, / Capitalist. / Cleve McGregor / With Lyons Bros. / Thomas Ellington. /

Whatever the mysterious light in the heavens that seems to be moving from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic is--whether it is an airship or something else--it favored Kansas City with a visit last night and thousands of responsible citizens saw it who could for hours talk of nothing else.

It is possible of course that some practical joker with a big kite and a lantern got in an April fool joke. If he did he is the most successful joker who has ever done business in this vicinity. And if it was a joke the joker carried it far enough to fool people at Everest, Kan., a little town in Brown county, Kansas, about sixty miles northwest of this city. Dispatches to The Times announce that the mysterious light appeared there shortly after 9 o'clock and according to The Times' correspondent, "hove in sight from the southeast." Kansas City is southeast of Everest and the light disappeared in Kansas City near an hour before it was seen sixty miles distant. The Everest correspondent claims that hundreds of people there distinctly saw the air ship. They saw the air ship, according to his story, was canoe-shaped and appeared to be ~~about~~ about thirty feet long. It was propelled by four triangular wings, two on either side, and above the whole could be discerned a black bulb, supposed to be a large gas bag.

The thousands of people in Kansas City who saw the mysterious light last night are pretty much of one mind. It is agreed it is no more than a planet than it is that which proceeds from the moon or sun.

That it was the same light that hovered over Topeka a few nights ago and which has been seen in many other places in the West was the almost universal belief of those who saw the mysterious light last night. The light was first seen last evening about a quarter after 8 o'clock. It seemed hanging low in the Western heavens, and instead of being stationary it moved from north to south and back again, and then seemed to come closer to the earth, and then to rise again. All descriptions agree to this. Many people discovered it about that time, and instantly the news was spread. There are hundreds of people who are lamenting the fact today that they were so very clever last night, ~~was~~ however. It was the first of April and everybody was on his guard. Everybody had read of the mysterious light that had been seen at other places and had discussed the possibilities of its being an air ship. So last night when the question was asked: "Have you seen the air ship?" nine times out of ten the answer came back, "You can not April fool me," and many people refused to even look toward the heavens with every one around them watching the great aerial mystery.

"What is it?" / "What is it?" / "What is it?"
Every man, woman and child who gazed upon the floating stream of light asked everyone else the same question, and there was no one to give an answer.

The light seemed about the size of a big street electric light. It was undoubtedly floating somewhere between the earth and the stars, and it did not seem to be as high as the clouds. It shot out a beam of light very much like a search-light. Some of the time the light was white, and then it changed to a bright red. Sometimes it flickered away and died out for a minute or two, only to reappear again as bright as ever. Its general course seemed to be toward the northwest, but several times it reversed and traveled for a while in the opposite direction. There was nothing comet-like in its behavior, however, [as it] moved along with a regular motion, ~~which~~ such as it would do if it were under some guidance. Some say they watched it go out of sight over the northern horizon. Others say that the big light went out, and there was a small, red light visible for a while and that that finally disappeared, and they saw it no more.

It is no trouble to find people who saw the air ship. It will not do to tell anyone in Kansas City today that it was Venus. Many of the downtown streets were packed with people last evening watching the phenomenon. None of them could explain, but they all saw the same thing. They saw just what has been seen at Topeka and a dozen other places between Kansas City and the Pacific coast. If any clever genius put up an April fool joke on the good people of Kansas City, he must have been traveling over the country for some weeks ~~last~~ doing his great sky trick for the benefit of other places, so as to work up the appetite of Kansas City and make the joke a better one.

On West Ninth Street.

One of the greatest ~~crowds~~ crowds that watched the "ship" was on West Ninth street, between Wyandotte and Broadway. The band in front of the Ninth street theater had attracted a great crowd, and when some one discovered the strange light the news spread, and soon the people were filling the streets, with their eyes fixed on the heavens. They got on the cable tracks and almost stopped the cars. Every man had to be argued into taking his first look, however, for fear that some one was going to yell "rubberneck" at him. In the language of the small boy there was rubbering enough, but no one stopped to gey anyone else. Everyone was too busy saying:

"Well, I never."

"Now, what do you think it is?"

"Do you know I would not believe it when I read about it in the papers."

"It does look like a search light."

"It must be an air ship. That is all it could be."

Down the street in front of every store, saloon and hotel was a crowd of people watching the light. At first it could be seen from both sides of the street looking down Ninth street to the west, but ~~fix~~ finally it moved so far to the north that it was necessary for the watchers to move to the south side of the street.

This is not the only part of the city where all the people turned out to watch the mystery and to try to figure whether man or nature was trying to play them an April fool joke.

The light was seen from a dozen places in the West Side, and from many places in the eastern part of the city. It was seen from the West bottoms, and a great crowd of men went down to the river bank to enable them to get a better view of it. Not only this, but advices ~~fr~~ from neighboring towns say that their citizens were also favored with a view of the mysterious light ~~at~~ last evening.

The air ship idea was of course uppermost in the mind of everyone who watched the strange beacon, and the sharper eyes tried to discover the outline of a ship behind the beaming light. This was hard to discover, however. Now and then someone in a crowd would announce that he could discern the outlines of a great ship behind the light, but when the others failed to see the same thing, this much at least was put down as an April fool joke, and those who discovered the dark outlines they mentioned were not certain enough of their eyes to strongly back up the claim of their discovery.

In the drug store at the corner of Ninth and Central streets a great crowd collected to watch the light. A.A. Phillips, the proprietor of the drug store, was a doubting Thomas when he first heard of the light in the heavens, but today he is a pretty firm believer in the air ship theory.

"Someone came into the store last evening while I was busy and told me to come out and see the air ship," he said last night. "I have been reading all The Times has published about the air ship stories, but last night I thought that it was an April fool joke, as the boys had been playing pranks all day, and so I was afraid to appear interested. Finally I noticed a crowd on the sidewalk watching something in the sky, and while I was selling a man a cigar I glanced out of the window while no one was looking. There was the thing, right over that bill board across the street. Then you may imagine I became interested. We watched it from here for almost an hour. The store was ~~xxx~~ full of people watching it, and there was a crowd that reached almost across the street. I don't know what it was, but one thing is certain, it was not a ~~xxxx~~ star. It looked like an electric light, and it did not seem to be very far above the earth. Then no star, according to my astronomy, ever behaved as that light did tonight. It moved first in one direction and then in the other. Now it would seem to rise, and again it would seem to descend. The thing seemed to be under control. At first I thought that it might be a balloon, but the more I watched it the more convinced I became that this could not be the case. As anyone knows, while a balloon would move, it would move in only one direction; that is, with the wind, and this light would go in only one direction, and then turn right around and go in the other direction, without any change of the wind at all. I am just as well convinced that it was not a balloon as I am that it was not a star. The light was bright and white most of the time, but now and then it would change to a deep red, and now and then disappear altogether. Of course, I was busy, and could not watch it all the time. I was waiting for a friend of mine, M.C. Kelley, ex-coal oil inspector of Kansas, and when he came, about 9 o'clock, I asked him if he had seen an air ship. He laughed, and thought I was joking, and when I started to point it out to him it was not where we had seen it the last time, and we had to walk clear across the room to see it over the buildings. The crowd in front had then crossed the street to get a better view. If anyone does not think there was an air ship, or something else, up there in the sky last night, they should ask ~~Kelley~~ Kelly. I don't remember who all were in here last night watching it, for as I said, the store was crowded; but J.H.C. Rudd and Fred Pinkston were both watching it."

Explanations at Random.

C.A. Kelaer first saw the light while in front of the Savoy hotel, where a crowd was watching it. He walked on down the street, and found everybody out looking at the light. "I do not know what it was," he said, "but it looked to me like a search light. It was not a star nor a toy balloon. I saw everyone looking at it, and everyone whom I saw was as much at a loss for an explanation as I am."

Charley Purvis, the proprietor of the Dizzy saloon, was the champion of a large party who watched the light from in front of his place of business. According to Colonel Purvis, it was a star, but according to his description of what he saw, it was such a star that will make a greater sensation among scientists than any air ship. "I watched the light along with the rest of them," said Purvis, "and I observed it closely. The light seemed to be in the form of a cross. In the center it was blue, and around this it was red, but now and then it would fade up and be all white. It was nothing but a star, however. There is no need of anyone getting excited about it."

IT IS SEEN AT EVEREST.

All Doubts Regarding the Air Ship's Existence Removed. / Special to The Kansas City Times.

Everest, Kan., April 1.—Public sentiment on the air ship question underwent a great change tonight. Reports from various points that an air ship had been seen were read here with interest, but have been generally discredited, but tonight no one in this part of Brown county doubts for an instant that such an aerial visitor moves and has its ~~xxxxxx~~ being.

At 9:05 tonight a brilliant light appeared in the southeast, so brilliant that it attracted attention almost immediately. As the vessel came over the city the full power of the wonderful lamps were turned on and the city was flooded with light. This was enough for doubting Thomases, and the entire population was soon out-doors watching the aerial navigator as it neared the earth, or, with the velocity of an eagle, darted upward; and again, in an instant, would sail away into space until the lights merely twinkled; then reversing, it would sail back over the heads of the astonished spectators.

For five minutes at ~~xxx~~ one time it seemed to skirt the lowest edges of cloud that hung low down in the heavens, and it was then that the powerful lights on board were reflected on the cloud and the outlines of the ship were clearly distinguished.

The basket or car seemed to be about twenty-five or thirty feet long, shaped like an Indian canoe. Four light wings extended from the car, two on either side and placed opposite each other. At the ends these wings were triangular. A large, dark hull was discernible immediately above the car, and was generally supposed by the watchers to be an inflated gas bag. That the same power that furnished the light was used for lifting the ship was evident from the fact that the lights ~~xxx~~ grew dim as the ship went upward, and as the ship came nearer the earth, the light was as bright as the headlight of a locomotive, which at that time was standing in the railroad yards, the only difference being that the engine's light was of yellow, while the light from the air ship was of a greenish-blue color. Some claimed that they distinguished [more] lights suspended over the gunwales of the ship, but this the writer can not vouch for.

One of the amusing outcomes of the appearance of the air ship was the payment of a bet made by a good deacon in one of the churches here, who had hooted the idea of an air ship's existence. While in a heated argument over the question with a brother churchman last week he exclaimed that if ~~xxx~~ it could be proved there was really such a thing he would buy his brother church member the best hat in town. After the deacon had seen the body of the ship from the reflections of the light on the cloud he immediately hunted up his opponent in the argument, and, with tears in his eyes, said:

"This is the first bet I have made since I became a member of the church, forty-three years ago, and, by the grace of God, it will be my last. Pick out your hat, brogher." The brother picked out a good one.

When the ship was first sighted many supposed at the first glance it was the planet Venus, but as the lights came nearer the city Venus, while much brighter than the other heavenly bodies, was to the light from the ship as a candle compared with an electric light. Then, too, the ship came into view at a high altitude from the southwest and lowered to within 200 or 300 ~~xxx~~ yards of the earth and sailed over the city, ~~xxxxxx~~ settling toward the earth in a northeasterly direction until it reached the horizon, where it remained stationary for about ten minutes. It then followed along the horizon due west to a point almost out of sight, then coming back toward the city it raised in the air and passing under a cloud, took a course due north until it passed out of sight.

For one hour and twenty minutes the air ship was never out of sight, and while passing back and forth over the city, made various maneuvers, remaining stationary at different points, and at one time, while motionless, immediately and above the throng beneath, with a clear sky for a background, all light disappeared and nothing was seen but a black mass. It remained this way for about ten seconds and then the lights flashed out and the ship moved away at the right.

Although at this writing the ship has been out of sight for two hours, many are watching from their windows for its reappearance.

In order to vouch for the accuracy of the facts set forth, The Times correspondent here obtained this affidavit, signed by men of established veracity, who would not sign their names to a statement that was untrue.

"This is to certify that we, the undersigned, saw and watched for some time tonight the movements of large and brilliant lights that traveled at various heights over this city, and that we believe it to be the same as seen at various other points, and believe it to be an air ship. / J.E. CURN, / Proprietor, ~~xxxxxxx~~ Bank Commercial hotel. / E.E. MASON, / Roller Mills. / A.L. STOUT, Capitalist. / CLEVE MC-GREGAR, / With Lyons' Bros. / THOMAS ELLINGTON.

WATCHING THE LIGHT.

Scoffers and Believers at the Corner of Ninth and Broadway.

A crowd of excited people stood at the corner of Ninth and Broadway about 9:30 last night watching a bright light that seemed to be just above the Court house in Kansas City, Kan.

"Aw, it's only a star," said the man who had just arrived. "Star nothing!" came the chorus from the crowd which had watched it for fifteen minutes. "You can see it move."

"Stand right here," said a man to the skeptic, "where the top of that telegraph pole will come right close to the star as you call it. Now! Do you see her move? It's a star, is it? Ha!" That shimmering light or the telegraph pole or the stone pavement upon which the man stood moved could not be denied. There was certain motion somewhere—a slow, steady, floating movement. The light gradually approached the top of the pole, was eclipsed by it, and appeared again upon the other side. The motion was horizontal and from north to south.

"Must be a fire balloon," said the skeptic, "something left over from a Fourth of July stock of pyrotechnics."

"No, it can't be that either," said someone in the crowd, "because a little while ago it went out entirely and then appeared again, and then it changes a color. See there now! It's getting red! A little while ago it was blue!"

And so the talk ran on until finally the light disappeared behind a bank of clouds. The skeptic went away still a skeptic, but the rest of the crowd knew better.

CERTAIN IT WAS A SHIP.

An Excited Friend of The Times Tells a Strange Story. Shortly after the crowd at Ninth and Central streets had dispersed an excited individual broke into The Times office. Rushing up to an employe of the paper he said: "Are you a Times man? I like The Times I wouldn't play an April fool joke on it. I take it at my home. I talk for it. I want my neighbor to take it because it is the only paper which has published both sides of the park matter."

A reporter tried to stop the visitor by asking what he wanted. "My name is S.A. Shaw. I own the property at 707 May street. I want to tell you about the air ship. You will think it is an April fool joke. Everybody does I try to spring it on. But it wasn't. I saw it. Hundreds of people saw it. I am ready to swear it."

Mr. Shaw grew more excited as he proceeded. "Give me a reporter," cried Mr. Shaw. "I will take him to 200 men who saw the thing. You think I am either drinking or trying to April fool you, but I ain't. I tell you I am ready to swear I saw a light at an angle of 45 degrees in the northwest. It went out all at once. No use to tell me it was a star. I have looked through telescopes and I know a star. The Kansas City Star ~~ix~~ the other day says it was Venus the people have been looking at. I know Venus. I have looked through telescopes at all the planets. Does a planet zigzag and cross cross and rush backwards and forwards, down and up? Does a planet shine with a light as big as a locomotive? Give me a reporter and I'll prove what I say."

By this time the entire local force was laughing, and a reporter who had just come in quietly remarked, "April 1."

"I knew that is what you would say," broke forth Mr. Shaw once more. "I guess you think I'm drinking, too. But I don't want the Times to get left. I determined to come and tell you about this thing."

if fifty men had been here before me.

"When I asked Steve Nickel down at Seventh and May to come across the street and I would show him an air ship, he answered: 'What are you giving me?' He thought it was an April fool joke, too. But I got him to come, and he saw the light. Ain't you going to send somebody along? By this time the reporters began to drop in from their evening assignments, and the news came that the whole town was talking air ships. The persistent Mr. Shaw was elated, and he started from The Times office with three reporters on his staff to write about his discovery.

"I wouldn't have had The Times scooped in this thing for a good deal," he remarked, as he left the city editor.

"And you will have a corner all your own in my heart," replied the man who gives out the assignments.

Watchman Saw the Side Lights.

John McKinney, the night watchman at the Depot Garage and Baggage Wagon company's barn at Seventh and Broadway, says he saw the air ship, or whatever it was. He said: "It waded up and down slowly, darting from one course to another for about half an hour. The headlight with ~~xxx~~ smaller lights behind it was like that of a locomotive when it is about four miles off, but I do not think this one was half that far. Finally the headlight turned westward and the small lights faded out of sight on the horizon."

McKinney sees the Burlington trains coming in on the north side of the Missouri river every night when they are yet four miles away, and says he could not be mistaken in a headlight. It was surely one.

Many people in flats about the neighborhood of Seventh and May streets were out looking at the "flying Dutchman," and the various descriptions vary but little.

In the houses, stores and everywhere along Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Central and Broadway, and down toward the Union depot, the people were out watching the peculiar spectacle.

"I would not look," said one man, "thinking it was an April fool joke, but I saw so many more people looking that I turned to see what it was, and sure enough, I saw the headlight, and occasionally, as the flying machine turned from one side to ~~xxx~~ another, I could see red lights that looked like lanterns.

HOTEL GUESTS SAW IT.

Strange Light Creates Great Excitement--Slocum Says It's an Ad.

It seems that half a dozen or more of the guests at the Midland hotel saw the mysterious light and wondered at it. There was much speculation and finally somebody solved the mystery by declaring that it must be the air ship.

"Let's get where we can see it better," said someone, and the other members of the crowd said that was a good idea.

They immediately applied to Night Clerk Campbell for standing room on the roof, but were denied it.

"O, go along," said Campbell, "don't you fellows suppose I know this is April 1?"

At 11 o'clock so many people had talked about it and so seriously that Campbell began to wish he hadn't had such a good memory.

"Half a dozen people asked me if they could go on the roof," he said, "but I thought they were ~~xx~~ trying to work some sort of a gag, so I stood them off."

John P. Slocum declares he saw it.

"Didn't you see it?" he said to a Times reporter. "Well, you missed it, that's all. And do you know what it was? Well, it was just an advertising scheme. The advance agent for Crane worked it here, sent up a balloon with a red light tied to it. That's all. Great dodge. Everybody in town was looking at it. Yes. It didn't miss the Auditorium theater by a hundred feet."

But then, lots of people know John Slocum.

SEEN ACROSS THE KAW.

Citizens of Kansas City, Kan., Watch the Strange Light.

Residents of Kansas City, Kan., across the Kaw were all astir last night evening over what seemed to be an air ship to the northwest. Squads of citizens were to be seen everywhere gazing intently on the strange light, which showed up quite large, and shone with such brilliancy. The presence of the supposed air ship greatly interested the citizens. Families remained awake the whole night watching the body, and the streets were dotted everywhere with crowds of people gazing intently on the light, which seemed to move about from north to south.

The crowd of people watching the air ship near the Missouri Pacific depot stated that the strange light moved up and down. About 9:30 o'clock people who had been watching it stated that it had moved more to the west, and seemed to have lowered somewhat. This fact was substantiated by dozens of people who were witnessing the air ship, and the feeling that it was not an astronomical body was almost universal.

A group of people at Sixth and Minnesota avenue were reckoning the movements of the supposed air ship by means of the Husted building, a five-story structure at the northwest corner of Sixth street. At first the light was visible from the southwest corner of the building but later it became invisible to the Minnesota avenue crowd, which showed positively that the body was moving to the northwest.

The size of the light aroused the curiosity of every one in Kansas City, Kan., and some of the most prominent citizens of the town watched the movements of the strange body. There was not a portion of the city that was not aroused. While there were many who looked upon the object that was believed that a genuine air ship was hovering over the city.

1897 April 2 (Fri) Atchison, Kans., Daily Globe, p. 2. (card 1)

THE AIR SHIP.

Everest, Kansas, people claim to have seen the fake air ship last night, and J.E. Gun, proprietor of the Commercial hotel; E.E. Mason, A.L. Stout, Cleve McGregor and Thomas Ellington, all citizens of the town, have attached their names to an affidavit, which reads as follows:

"This is to certify that we, the undersigned, saw and watched for some time to-night, the movements of large and brilliant lights that traveled at various heights over the city, and that we believe it to be the same as seen at various other points, and believe it to be an airship."

A newspaper correspondent at Everest says:

"At 9:05 o'clock last night a brilliant light, so brilliant that it attracted immediate attention, appeared in the southeast. As the light came near, it threw a flood of light on the town. The entire population was soon out of doors, and for an hour and twenty minutes watched the aerial navigator as it darted about with the velocity of an eagle. At one time it seemed to skirt the lowest edges of a cloud that hung low down in the heavens, and it was then that the powerful lights on board were reflected on the cloud, and the outlines of the ship were clearly distinguished.

"The basket or car seemed to be about twenty-five or thirty feet long, shaped like an Indian canoe. Four light wings extended from the car, two on either side, and placed opposite each other. At the ends these wings were triangular. A large, dark hulk was discernible immediately above the car, and was generally supposed by the watchers to be an inflated gas bag. That the same power that furnished the light was used for lifting the ship was evident from the fact that the light grew dim as the ship went upward, and as the ship came nearer the earth the light was as bright as the headlight of a locomotive which at that time was standing in the railroad yards, the only difference being that the engine's light was of yellow, while the light from the air ship was of a green-blue color. Some claimed that they distinguished red lights suspended over the gunwales of the ship, but this the writer cannot vouch for."

At Kansas City, at 8:45 o'clock last evening, thousands of people were in the streets watching a peculiar light in the sky, and the remarkable thing about the matter is that a bigger story teller was found at Everest than at Kansas City, where they are supposed to be plentiful.

The Missouri Pacific operator at Everest called up Dispatcher Robinson, of the Atchison office, about 3 o'clock this morning, and said the "air ship" was again visible, and was traveling toward Atchison. Robinson sent Al Parker, the porter, up on the roof to watch for it. Parker returned in a few minutes and said he believed he could see it. Robinson went out and saw what appeared to him to be a very large and very brilliant star which cast a reflection ahead of it, lighting up clouds which it happened to fall upon, in a peculiar way.

Parker soon had all the night police officers and lunch house men looking at it, but nobody here claims to have seen a ship, or outlines of one.

There is absolutely nothing in the air ship story, of course. The heavens are watched every night by astronomers, with the aid of large telescopes, and nothing unusual is reported by them. If a star should glimmer in an unusual way millions of miles away, the astronomer would report it. Of course they would see an air ship floating around night after night. The men who report seeing the air ship are simply working an old joke invented by Edgar Allan Poe a long time ago.

1897 April 3 (Sat) Kansas City Times, p. 1. (card 1)

AN AIR SHIP LOCATED / G.D. Schultz Has One Locked Up in His Barn in Westport. / DECLINES TO EXHIBIT IT. / Says, However, He Has Made Several Successful Trials. / BASED ON A NEW PRINCIPLE / Expects to Sail to Chicago and Back in a Forenoon. / CHAT WITH AN AIR CAPTAIN. /

G.D. Schultz of 415 West Thirty-fifth street has been for thirty years working upon a model of an air ship. The work has been prosecuted with such secrecy that not even his nearest neighbors know his occupation, but believe ~~xx~~ him to be a retired capitalist of decidedly sedentary habits.

Schultz lives with his wife and son, the latter a young man of 18, in an unpretentious frame house somewhat isolated and upon an unfrequented street. Behind the house stands a frame barn to which light is admitted through a glazed roof.

This building contains his secret.

The single door is kept locked and still further secured against trespassers by heavy iron bars. No one has ever seen the machine it contains save Mr. Schultz. Even the men to whom he has gone for capital to carry on the work of construction have had to content themselves with pencil drawings of the invention.

During the excitement of Thursday night, when a number of reputable citizens were mystified by the movement of a strange light in the heavens, a Times reporter went out to Mr. Schultz's house to get his opinion of the ~~xxx~~ phenomenon.

He was not at home.

Though the call was made comparatively early in the evening, the house was dark and repeated rings at the door bell failed to bring a response.

Last night the reporter called again. Mr. Schultz was at home and in the best of spirits. His manner indicated exultation, and he would frequently permit the conversation to lapse while he arose and walked the floor, as one who ponders upon a weighty subject. Then he would return to the general subject of air ships and would speak with animation of the possibilities of his machine, always studiously avoiding, however, any word which might give a hint as to the principle upon which his device is constructed.

"Did you see the air ship last night?" was asked.

Mr. Schultz started.

"Air ship!" said he, "well, I saw a lot of stuff in the paper this morning about air ships, but that's all bosh. It was probably a star that the people saw. Yes, it must have been a star--couldn't have been anything else, possibly."

"Where were you last night?"
 "Here."
 "In the early part of the night?"
 "O, I may not have been here all night."
 "Did you have your machine out for a trial trip last night?"
 Mr. Shultz forced a laugh.
 "Well, now, that's a leading question," said he. "I wish you wouldn't quiz me that way. When I get ready to make a trial exhibition I will let you know all about it, but just at present I don't court publicity. To give you an idea of how carefully I guard the secret, I will say that I haven't even applied for a patent. I am going to keep working at it until I complete a few minor details which don't quite suit me, and then I will get my patents and make arrangements to place the machine upon the market."
 "How soon do you think that will be?"
 "Well, sir, if I had the necessary capital, I could have the machine completed in forty days. Three hundred dollars would do it. There are a few little things that I will have to have made in Pittsburg, because they have to be of such finely tempered steel and of such delicate workmanship that they can't be produced elsewhere. When I get them the machine will be done. But I am short of money. I squandered away—foolishly, too—my own small fortune, and since that time I have had to content myself with such outside capital as I could interest. There is some money coming to us, but it's tied up just now in litigation. If I can't get any capital elsewhere, I may have to wait for that."
 "Have you ever tested your machine?"
 "O, yes. It's been tested several times, and each test was entirely satisfactory. In less than two years, even under the least favorable circumstances, I can conceive, I shall be able to leave Kansas City at 8 o'clock in the morning, go to Chicago and transact business and return here by noon. It's a strange thing to me that no one has hit upon my idea before. Why, my machine is as simple as four wheels on two axles, yet it's a masterpiece of workmanship so far as accuracy, durability, lightness and strength are concerned. I say it is strange no one has hit upon it before. Nature is full of hints at true principle, yet here we are a lot of groveling landlubbers! She gives us more ideas of how to build an air ship, than times over, than of how to construct a telephone, or locomotive, yet scientists and inventors have for years been shooting all around the bull's eye without hitting it."
 "Take O. Chanute, for instance. You know he is still dabbling away with the aeroplane theory and until he quits it he will never succeed. I wasted ten years myself on that principle, but finally gave it up because I saw it wasn't practicable. He says all he wants for success in an engine, six pounds in weight to the horse power, and that is plenty light enough for my purposes."
 "My device is a decided departure from any of those which have been produced by inventors in the attempt to solve aerial navigation, and in its practical results dwarfs them as far as it is possible for success to dwarf failure. Yes, sir, in less than a year I will be flying among the clouds, and will then reap the benefits of a life's hard work."

Mr. Shultz is not a hair-brained enthusiast. He is a man of unquestioned genius, and his ideas are not of a chimerical sort. He is not a dreamer, but, on the contrary, intensely practical, and at all times has his wits about him. One of the interesting features of his life's work is the staunch faith which his wife, now a gray-haired woman, has in the ultimate success of his invention. She has followed him closely from the beginning, sharing in his triumphs and his disappointments, and now she confidently believes that victory is but the matter of a few dollars and a few days.

EVEREST SEES IT AGAIN.
 Brown County People Get Another Glimpse of the Air Ship. / Special to the Kansas City Times.
 Everest, Kan., April 2.—Many people watched for the air ship last evening long after the strange craft had disappeared, hoping for its return. Only those who had the patience to remain on watch until 2 26 this morning were rewarded for their long waiting, and only a few were awake when out of the north came that brilliant and powerful light that told of the approach of the aerial navigators. The ship came steadily on at a rapid rate, until it was over the city at a height of about 400 yards. Then it stopped and remained stationary for some moments, when it began to steadily rise until the light was a mere speck in the heavens.
 After some maneuvering it began a very rapid descent and was soon again within 200 or 300 yards of the earth, just south of the city. It then took a northwest course and disappeared at 2:55 a.m.
 That was the last seen of the ship until about 7:58 tonight, when she was sighted away off to the northwest, but few here saw the ship there, as it was hidden from the business portion of the city by a large grove. About this time clouds filled the west and northwest horizon.

J. A. McJohnson, a man of education, saw the light, and, while unable to distinguish the outlines, says he is satisfied it was not heavenly body, but a contrivance of man.
 Editor Johnson of the Enterprise says he is convinced the air ship is a reality.
 Ed Lyon of Lyon Bros. Hardware company says he saw the air ship. Train men from the south report having seen the air ship tonight shortly after it disappeared here. They say it was traveling toward Kansas City rapidly. As so many reputable citizens having had a good opportunity to study the movement of the (ship and) as all are agreed it settles in some out (of the way place) and it has given in its travels every evidence of being the result of nineteenth century brain and energy there is some quiet talk of organizing a party to search west and north of Omaha for its supply station, as all are agreed to it settles in some out of the way place in day and is tested at night, that it may be perfected before being given to the public and put in practical, everyday use.

WHOLE TOWN STAR-GAZING.
 Everybody Looking for the Air Ship--Venus Mistaken for It by Some. Upon every down town street corner last night there were crowds watching anxiously for the "air ship." It was a pleasant evening, and in the residence sections of the city the front porches were filled all evening with anxious watchers, who never took their eyes off the heavens. They were not favored with a view of the mysterious light however, although many of them thought that they were. Venus, the evening star, hung low in the Western heavens all the evening, a great ball of light, apparently a score of times larger than the other stars, and many people thought that that was the mysterious light of which they had heard, and watched it intently as long as it was in sight. It was impossible to convince many people that they were not gazing on a genuine air ship, and they gazed at the great star of the evening with open-mouthed amazement.

Those who had watched the strange light the evening before were not fooled with the star last night. They called the attention of their friends to the fact that the light they had seen the evening before was a moving light, while anyone could tell that the light of the heavens last night was simply the great planet.

If the "air ship" had understood the attention it was creating in Kansas City last night it would probably have favored the city with another visit, for it had the whole city star-gazing for one night, anyway. Many of the watchers did not give up hope and cease their vigil until a late hour.

LEAVENWORTH WATCHING FOR IT.
 Citizens and Soldiers Scan the Heavens for the Air Ship. / Special to the Kansas City Times.

Leavenworth, Kan., April 2.—A report is in circulation that an officer at Fort Leavenworth saw the air ship last night. The officer was told that if he continued telling the story he was liable to be ordered before a board of officers to have his mental condition inquired into, and that retirement might follow.

The people here are much interested in the mysterious craft, and almost every night parties can be seen surveying the heavens through powerful glasses.

Much talk is indulged in at Fort Leavenworth about the air ship, and an engineer who is quite a scientist in his way said today that if such a machine had been set in motion its starting place would generally be known, but it may belong to some foreign government, perhaps the French, and its place of construction and starting point kept a profound secret. He claims that it might be a fulfillment of the prophecy of Jules Verne, where he tells of the manufacture of an air ship in different parts of the world, so as to keep the plan of manufacture an entire secret.

Air ships for purposes of war are being discussed quite freely, and one officer said yesterday that it was sure to come, and when it does war will be terrible.

"Just think of it," said he, "an army corps of soldiers sailing over our large cities and shells of every size and description being dropped among the people. The slaughter would be something awful. War now as compared with war then is mere child's play."

April 3, 1897 Chicago Record (Sat.) p. 3 (Card 1)

Airship at Kansas City
 Thousands of Persons Claim to Have Seen the Machine.
 Special to the Chicago Record.

Kansas City, Missouri, April 2.—The mysterious black object casting before it a penetrating red light, which has startled the people of Kansas at intervals during the last two weeks, has at last descended on Kansas City.

Ten thousand people are ready to swear that they have seen an airship. There are scoffers and unbelievers and practical men who declare that the light is Venus, the evening star, but, according to the almanac, Venus should have set an hour before this bright light appeared in the northwest, and Venus does not loope around, fly swiftly across the horizon, swoop rapidly toward the earth, and then soar away until lost in the haze of the southern sky.

The mysterious light was first discovered in the sky at 11 5 o'clock last night, and seems to have been observed simultaneously from a score of different points.

Within ten minutes excited crowds had gathered on the street corners and before public buildings watching the movements of the strange object. At the Coates house a hundred or more men and women, among them some of the best-known people in town, stood for half an hour wondering if the object were a thing of reality or only a delusion.

At the Midland hotel, the union hall, the post office, the secret of other places hosts of people gathered to discuss the matter. Such J. McGowan, the agent of an asphalt company; G. P. Stockley, manager of the Midland hotel; J. Len Coates of the Coates house; Abraham Julius J. Wolf and hundreds of other men are fully convinced that this thing is an airship.

Many people at first thought it an April fool joke, but now they are convinced that it is not. At a late hour there are hundreds of people on the streets still watching intently for a return of the airship.

From Everest, Kansas, comes the news that the airship appeared there at 9 o'clock and the whole town saw it. It first appeared against a bank of clouds in the southwest and as so clearly outlined that a correspondent is able to describe minutely its appearance.

The ship remained there for more than half an hour at one time, coming down very close to the earth, and finally disappearing entirely in the southeast. It is believed here that the airship is the one built in Oakland, Calif., several months ago. It disappeared mysteriously shortly after its trial trip, which proved that it could fly. Special to the Chicago Record.

Everett, Kansas, April 2.—No one in this part of Brown County doubts for an instant that the airship is a success. At 9:05 o'clock last night a brilliant light appeared in the southeast, so brilliant that it attracted attention immediately. As the vessel came over the city the full power of the wonderful lamps was turned on, and the city was flooded with light. The entire population was soon outdoors watching the aerial monster as it neared the earth, or, with the velocity of an eagle, darted upward, and again, in an instant, sailed away into space until the lights merely twinkled; then, reversing, it would sail back over the heads of the astonished spectators.

For five minutes at one time it seemed to skirt the lower edges of a cloud that hung low down in the heavens, and it was then that the powerful lights were reflected on the cloud, and the outlines of the ship were clearly distinguished. (over)

The basket, or car, seemed to be about 25 or thirty feet long, shaped like an Indian canoe. Four light masts extended from the car; two on either side, and placed opposite to each other. At the ends of these masts were triangular. A large dark mass was discernible immediately above the car, and was supposed by the watchers to be an inflated gas bag.

That the same power which furnished the light was used for lifting the ship was evident from the fact that the lights grew dim as the ship went upward, and as the ship came nearer the earth the light was as bright as the headlight of a locomotive, which at that time was standing in the yards, the only difference being that the engine's light was of yellow, while the light from the airship was of a greenish-blue color. Some claimed they distinguished red lights suspended over the gunwales of the airship.

George Griswold, conductor of the Missouri Pacific train which passed through Atchison at 3 o'clock this morning, says that when he passed Everett, the air ship was plainly in sight; a band was playing quadrilles on the deck, and the passengers were dancing.

Hebe Stone: The real truth about the matter is that the only air ship visible in Atchison after dark is the courtship kind.

"I have noticed," said Doc Morrison today, "that the men who claim to have seen the air ship, have no great reputation for telling the truth."

Heavens! Think what a predicament we will be in if the inhabitants of that air ship happen to get seasick when the ship is directly over Atchison!

News and Comment: A.J. Arnold, postmaster at Topeka, a man 60 years old, says he saw the air ship; that he saw several windows lit up as if with electric light.

There is a threat for ministers in the air ship: People can go to heaven without being good.

Every kind of ship is in use in the flood district except the air ship.

Mar. 4 p.2--Globe Sights: Our idea of a hopeless fool is a man who has a stiff neck from looking up for airships.

Sat. Mar. 13 p.4--It is believed that the only solution of the Atchison bridge problem is to hire the Heb. airship to carry trains across the river, under an annual rental.

Mar. 17 p.2--We have noticed that during the moonlight period of the month, no one starts an air ship story, but as soon as it gets dark enough to let the imagination do the seeing, the air ship story is revived.

April 3, 1897 Indianapolis Journal (Sat.) p. 5

A Michigan "Fake"

Voices of People in an Air Ship Alleged to Have Been Heard. Decatur, Michigan, April 2.—Residents of the village of Galesburg, in Kalamazoo county, say an airship passed over the town last night.

The first evidence of the visitor was a brilliant white light, by means of which a huge black object, from which was emitted a sharp crackling sound, was distinguishable. It was said that human voices were distinctly heard at one point during the passage of the supposed air ship.

April 3, 1897 Chicago Record (Sat.) p. 6

Flying Machine in Michigan

People at Galesburg Hear Human Voices From the Upper Air. Special to the Chicago Record.

Niles, Michigan, April 2.—In many towns in southwestern Michigan people say that last Thursday night they saw an airship. At Galesburg about 10 o'clock that night people heard a sharp, crackling sound, and saw a brilliant white light in the sky. Several of the spectators are positive they saw a huge black object tipped with flame at a great distance above the earth and moving northward. Some declared they heard human voices coming from the object.

Fri. March 26, 1897 p. 3—Durke's Airship Did Not Fly. (An inventor works for 20 years but his test is a failure.)

Mon. March 22, 1897 p. 1—Wonderful Gravity Motor. (An Indiana genius devises a machine to run without steam or current.)

KANSAS

SHE SCOURS THE SKY / Al, Fast-Sailing, Clipper-Built Air Ship "Great Auk." / NOW AT ANCHOR IN KANSAS. / Possible Explanation of the Lights Seen in the Heavens. / AEROPLANE FROM NEW YORK. / Owners Were Planning a Dynamite Campaign in Cuba. / PASSED THROUGH KANSAS CITY /

A possible explanation of the tramp orbs that have been loafing about through the heavens, deranging astronomy of Kansas and baptizing people with showers of potato peelings and coffee grounds, has been found.

Two months ago an air ship passed through Kansas City—it was encased and in a box car—en route for Wichita. It was the purpose of the owners to leave it to J.B. McMahon, proprietor of the circus which wintered there, as an attraction for the present season. That gentleman refused to close the bargain, however, until he should be satisfied that the thing would fly. Friday night Mr. McMahon was shot and killed and whether or not he had received such satisfaction will never be known.

In the mean time the air ship and its crew have dropped out of sight. It may be cavorting about in the vicinity of Leavenworth, terrorizing the inhabitants and cheating the commonwealth out of the price of a right-of-way, but as yet reports from that quarter have been too vague to constitute a positive identification of the "Great Auk."

The ship in question was named the "Great Auk," presumably because it possessed all the attributes of a bird save the ability to fly.

Mart McKim, of 1119 Central avenue, head salesman of the Kansas City Tent and Avning company, has this to say of the "Great Auk."

"My home is in New York. I am an aeronaut by profession, but business in my line has been slack. I was called to Kansas City to attend the funeral of a brother, and finding myself short of funds, took the first job that was offered, which chanced to be with the tent and avning people. I am going back to New York in June, when I will probably charter some sort of an air craft and resume my profession.

"Shortly before I left New York I made the acquaintance of a Mr. Don Carlos of 1328 Broadway, a noted and daring aeronaut. About two months ago he, accompanied by Mr. J.B. Stoner of Lans street, Brooklyn, a gentleman who has given much time to the study of aerial navigation, came to Kansas City and called upon me at my rooms. They said they had their air ship with them; that they were preparing to go to Cuba to embarrass the Spaniards with dynamite bombs dropped from the "Great Auk," and that they wanted me to go with them. I declined because I feared the climate would not agree with me. They then inquired the way to Wichita, Kan., saying that unless they could engage the services of another experienced aeronaut they could not undertake the Cuban expedition. They would go to Wichita instead and try to do a little circus business.

"That is the last I have heard of either Carlos or Stoner, except that I was given to understand in an indirect way that McMahon requires a practical demonstration of the machine's aspirative qualities before he would consider their offer. I also understood that he demanded the tests should be made at night, that the machine might not be cheapened by a free and unseasonable exhibition, which would, as you readily see detract from its novelty. The "Great Auk" carried an electric search light, but whether or not it was this that the Kansans saw, I can't, of course, say.

"The principle upon which the Great Auk was built was that of the aeroplane, a sufficiently hackneyed theory in aerial navigation, but the principle upon which it was propelled through the air was unique. Mr. Stoner obtained his idea from watching a sheet of paper fall through a still atmosphere from a great height. He noticed /p.2/ that the tendency was to describe a zig-zag course, as a vessel takes against the wind. He at once concluded that the scooting of the paper in the direction tended to form in front of it a slightly condensed cushion of air, which repelled the sheet, driving it toward the rarer atmosphere.

"So he built the "Great Auk" to travel an undulating or wavy plane, as a sparrow flies, depending upon the downward draught to compress a cushion of air beneath and in front of the craft which would hoist it upon the crest of the next wave, and so on. It was propelled by revolving fans, fore and aft, and was raised and lowered by two twin fans, working horizontally upon the upper deck. The undulating movement was secured by a hinged plane of canvas in a steel frame, worked automatically.

"The fans and canvas plane were worked by a small engine, in which steam was generated by the burning of crude oil. The entire device was about seventy-five feet in length by twenty-five feet in width.

"The sectional aspect of the device is that of a cross, as there are really two aeroplanes, one horizontal, the other vertical. A side view suggests the hull of a yacht with centerboard attached."/ EXPLAINS THE AIR SHIP. / Minneapolis (Kan.) Man Writes That It Is an Omen of War and Blood.

A Minneapolis, Kan., man, who has great faith in omens, and is evidently the seventh son of an eleventh daughter, or something like that, has found a solution to the air ship mystery. He says it means war, and that blood will be "spilt." He is modest, however, and asks especially that his name be not printed until after the war, when very few people will be left to read it, perhaps. At any rate, he wisely chooses The Times through which to warn the people of the world.

Here is his letter:

To the Editor of the Kansas City Times.

Minneapolis, Kan., April 2, 1897.—In The Twice-a-Week Times of March 30 I read where parties at Topeka and Belleville, Kan, also at Omaha, Neb., have been seeing what they called an air ship. I have not seen it, but know what it is. The red light which those people have seen is nothing but a red lightning light, and wherever such a light is to be seen is a sure sign of bloodshed, that will take place in the near future. For God's sake, let us avoid war. Let no more blood be spilt on Kansas soil, or anywhere in the United States. I write this because I feel that I should let the people take heed, and let us not have war. But as the sign has been seen by some very good people, I am afraid that bloodshed can not be avoided. Some may laugh at this warning, but let them not forget it.

Signs of this nature are always visible before a war. Just before the war that Germany had with France, there was a red line in the heavens, instead of a ball, as in the case in this country at present. You may print this warning if you so wish, but do not publish my name until my prophecy is fulfilled.

Pic. p. 1, Air Ship "Great Auk," Now Somewhere in Kansas.
1897 April 5 (Mon) Atchison Daily Globe, p. 1.

News and Comment: It is now claimed that the air ship which created so much excitement near Stockton Thursday night last, was a toy balloon. Some of the Stockton people even went so far as to describe the supposed air ship, telling that it had wings, and how they worked. Prof. Knerr delivered a lecture at St. [Jo?] Thursday night, and the distinguished professor, with O. B. Knight, who travels for a St. Jo millinery house, went to the top of a hill after the lecture, and, as the Central Branch train pulled in, they perpetrated the practical joke. This is the air ship which J. J. Kelley saw.

p. 1--Old Fogies Are About the Best Citizens of Every Town: Old Fogies Never Believe Air Ship Stories.

p. 2--City News: As an Atchison man was walking home at 10 o'clock last night, he was hit on the head by a potato that seemed to fall from above. As no one was in sight, he is of the opinion that the cook on the air ship probably dropped one overboard when he was getting them out in readiness for the morning meal.

p. 4--Conductor Jim Kelley and his train crew saw the "air ship" at Stockton about 1 o'clock Friday morning.

Apr. 6, p. 1--Atchison Affairs: There will be a lot of candidates who would leave earth for a time if they could catch the air-ship tonight.

Wed. Apr. 7 p. 2--The air ship has made its appearance in Illinois, but the inhabitants of that state are naturally suckers.

A good many people believe that "something has been seen" to create the airship stories. Prof. Knerr, the scientist at Midland college, says nothing has been seen, except possibly an occasional toy balloon sent up by a child. The man who claims to have seen the airship are simply fibbers. People are so gullible that they will believe any story told them, and repeat it.

Mr. Kelley, the Central Branch conductor, firmly believes that he personally saw the air ship at Stockton, and is rather inclined to fight men whose doubts his statement. The Apr. 6th "I see" written by J. L. Robinson to the office, "that Prof. Knerr rushes into print with his theory of the non-existence of an arsp." In justice to Prof. Knerr, it should be stated that he did not "rush into print" the opinion he expressed was to a reporter, in answer to a question.

1897 April 6 (Tue) Kansas City Times, p. 1.

An Air Ship in Oklahoma. / A South McAlester Man Vows He Saw One Plainly. / Special to the Kansas City Times.

South McAlester, I.T., April 5.--James Coughlan, who came up from Denison last night, says at 3 o'clock this morning, while he was returning home at Grand avenue, he saw a large air ship going in a northerly direction. It was brilliantly illuminated and was going at a rate, he supposed, of about fifty miles an hour. It made a peculiar swishing sound and as nearly as he could judge was a quarter of a mile above the earth.

His attention was first directed toward the stars by the peculiar sound of the ship, or whatever it may be called, and he watched it until it passed over the hills to the north. Mr. Coughlan is a Mason, and a Knight of Pythias, and has been connected with the Fidelity Insurance company for a number of years, and his reputation for truth and veracity is beyond question.

Mon. Mar. 29 p. 4--All Topeka got up at 2 o'clock Sun. morning to look at an illuminated air ship passing over the city. (Celu?) us! It is sad to think how that blind tiger managed to bite so many people in a temperance town.

Mar. 30 p. 4--The people of Belleville, Kans., are, like Gene Field's little boy, still "seein' things."

Fri. Apr. 2 p. 4--The ar sp may be regarded as the double of the old sea arsp.

Apr. 3 p. 4--If that arsp is prosperity it is a very light article.

5/p. 4--Topeka had a genuine cyclone yester.--or was it an airship?

--At the present rate people will soon be asking each other if they have "got tre air ships."

--If Grover Cleveland had waited a while longer he might have taken his outing in a government airship.

The Denver Post thinks the strange luminous object which has been sailing over Neb & Kans may be one of Ingalls' pugilistic pasagrics going home to roost. It couldn't be an iridescent dream, bec. too many vice-wake people saw it.

Last Apr. 6 p. 4--Kans hens must have been sound asleep when the arsp passed over them. None of the fresh laid eggs in the State have so far been found w headlights, wings or inflated bags marked on their shells.

1897 April 9 (Fri) Kansas City Times, p. 1.

Asx An Air Ship seen at Troy. / One Is Seen Maneuvering Over the Brown County Town. / Special to the Kansas City Times.

Troy, Kans., April 8.--Sol Miller, in this week's issue of the Troy Chief, adds his testimony to the reality of the much talked of air ship. He says:
"We have read a good deal, for the past few days, about a mysterious air ship, and supposed it was some trick or sensational story. But last Sunday night, about half past 9 o'clock, about a dozen of our citizens had a sight of it. It was directly over town, and somewhat resembled the headlight of a locomotive. After slowly moving westward, maneuvering as it went, it sank below the horizon. Whether there is a trick to this matter or not, there is something mysterious about it."
1897 April 9 (Fri) Atchison (Kans) Daily Globe, p. 8[47].

Somebody is working the "air ship" fake in Atchison. At 11 o'clock last night a peculiar light hump over South Atchison, moving about in a peculiar manner. P. D. Bonebrake, who watched it several minutes, says it had the appearance of a Japanese lantern on the tail of a kite.

p. 4--Speaking of the intelligence of man as compared with that of woman, it may not be out of place to remark that of all the crows that have claimed to have seen the air ship, not one was a woman.

The St. Jo Herald goes too far: it prints a picture of the air ship that is said to have been wrecked at Bethany, Mo.

Sat. April 10, p. 2--The airship was seen last night in Kansas City, Leavenworth, St. Joe, Topeka, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco, Kalamazoo, Nashville, Atlanta, Minneapolis, Baltimore, Washington, El Paso, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Roanoke, and a great many other cities whose names we are unable to recall, because of the many years that have elapsed since we looked into a geography.

Mon. Apr. 12--p. 1--The Newspaper Readers Are Tired of the Flood and the War, and Are Not Satisfied With the Air Ship Story.

p. 1--Oaha crank writes letter that he's the inventor--Trans-Viss Expo. p. 4--A girl went into a book store today, and asked for a book entitled "Ships that Pass in the Night," saying that she wanted to thoroughly post herself on air ships.

1897 April 9 (Fri) Star and Kansan (Independence), p. 4.

A Sycamore gentleman asked us yesterday whether we had heard of any strange sight being seen in the sky, east or ~~north-east~~ north-east of this city, Monday evening. Some Sycamore young men plowing in the field at about 5:30 p.m. saw off in the south-east about eighteen degrees above the horizon a strange sight over which they were much excited. At first they thought it was a great white kite, then that it was a compact flock of birds and while they gazed in open mouthed wonder the thing disappeared, apparently in a cloud of smoke and steam. It was thought that possibly the famous air ship had blown up and the details of the tragedy would come along in due time. We are always ready to help science soar higher and higher and when we get hold of air ship stories we dress up with proper frills, as in duty bound.

The story published above about the young fellows up in Sycamore seeing an air-ship off in the east is, unfortunately, totally ruined by subsequent returns. It seems that a young farmer over near Cherryvale is an amateur aeronaut and has been practicing for some time preparatory to launching forth in a more pretentious manner. He was advertised for an ascension at Cherryvale Saturday but his balloon was old and leaky and he failed to make a "go." He tried again, Monday, however, and this time everything worked all right. The young man rose to quite a dizzy height and then came down with a parachute, landing about half a mile from the city safe and sound. It is a great disappointment and makes a good story sound very flat, but this is undoubtedly the astonishing object which floated in to the startled vision of the Sycamore fellows.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Emporia (Kans) Daily Gazette, p. 1.

The air ship was seen by Willie Puffer and his father, by Dennis Madden and family and by Engineer McKenzie and family Saturday night.

Apr. 9 p. 3--Moon Creek--and now it is Burt Carey who carried his head at an angle of 45 degrees.

Apr. 10--Ar Sp in Burlington, Ia.

Apr. 15--Wp. 1--When a man tells you he has seen the airship, dodge or his breath may make your head whirl.

Apr. 17, p. 3--"Arsp" Making Regular Trips.

Appleton, Wis., April 16.--This vicinity seems to be a favored spot for the famous "arsp," for letters have been found describing the machine, with dates two days apart. One announces that the ship is making regular trips of three days each from Lafayette, Tenn., to Yankton, S.D., and that the machine was constructed at Lafayette. Apr. 19, p. 4 & 20, p. 1: The air ship passed through Hardcastle and Kenyon's store last Sat. Night, laden with a lot of young people from Saturn. A Miss Morning Star, one of the brightest of the company remarked that she had not seen such a display of fine furniture... since she left her native clime about 72,000 years ago.

Fri. Apr. 23, p. 2: The latest about the air ship is that during the storm last night, when everybody was indoors and it was very dark, the ship came down to the Emporia Electric Light Company's plant and was recharged with electricity. The night man at the plant knows all about it.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Kansas City Times, p. 3. (card 1)

HOW MANY OF THEM ARE THERE? / Air Ship Seen at Emporia When It Was Hovering Over Chicago. / Special to the Max Kansas City Times.

Emporia, Kan., April 13.--What was supposed to be the mysterious air ship passed over Emporia Saturday night about 9 o'clock. It was first seen by Willie Puffer, a boy who was returning from choir practice at the Episcopal church. He ran home and called his parents to the door to see the "air ship."

89

William Puffer, his father, who is one of the best known citizens of Emporia, laughed at the boy, but went to the door, when he was surprised to see, almost overhead, but very high, either a cluster of lights or one large light in the shape of a letter A, which was moving rapidly in an almost westerly direction, almost in the teeth of a very strong northwest wind. Mr. Puffer is positive that the light, or lights, were not such as could have been made by any large toy paper balloon or by a lantern fastened to a kite. He is also positive it was neither a planet nor a meteor. He says the peculiar shape of the light and the fact that it moved against the wind at quite a rapid rate satisfies him that navigation of the air has become an accomplished fact.

Mr. Puffer sent word to a number of his neighbors, who also saw the aerial visitor. Among them, besides the members of his own family, were the families of Mr. McKenzie, one of the best known engineers on the Santa Fe road, and Dennis Madden, brother and law partner of John Madden, lat candidate for Congress against Charles Curtis.

Mr. Madden corroborated what Mr. Puffer said, except that by the time he had been called the light was so far away that he could distinguish no particular shape to it. He described its movements as somewhat irregular, seeming to drop a short distance and then move on in a straight line until it disappeared seeming beyond the firmament or being some trees very far away. He is also satisfied that what he saw was not a planet, a meteor, a star or an illuminated toy balloon.

G.C. Clemens Sees the Air Ship.

Special to the Kansas City Times.

Topeka, Kan., April 13.--G.C. Clemens, Supreme court reporter, has seen the air ship. He said today in an interview: "I have always been just a little too late when there was a ghost around, but I saw something last night about 8:30 that surprised me and set me to thinking. I have been laughing at people who claimed to see a strange light in the west. I took now stock in the stories. However, last night, as I was coming down stairs, I saw something bobbing around in the west. It looked like an electric light and had a movement such as one would expect to see if a lantern was tied to the tail of a kite. I called my wife and some of the neighbors and we watched the thing for about ten minutes, when it disappeared. The theory of the Chicago astronomer that it is a star does not hold good, for it was very cloudy last night and so a star would not have been seen. The light was below the clouds; I do not pretend to say what it is, and neither do I theorize about this strange light appearing simultaneously in so many different places; but there is something very strange about it, that is certain."

1897 April 17 (Sat) Atchison (Kans) Daily Globe, p. 1.

News and Comment.

The story comes from Highland Station that the airship passed over that town Thursday night, and that owing to an explosion of chemicals, the ship sank to the ground. Underneath the mass of debris, a man was found groaning, and unconscious. When sufficiently restored to talk, he said that his name was Pedro Sanchez of Cuba. He refused to tell anything further, and the next morning collected his wrecked air vessel together, shipped it to St. Joe and then went to Omaha. The author of the story says that a scrap of paper was found under the car bearing the name of Captain General Weyler.

p. 4e If ever the air ship stops at Atchison, it will be for the purpose of loading up with Superb hard wheat flour.

13, p1 N&C Chicago astronomers have seen the peculiar light supposed to be fastened to the front of an airship, to keep other ships from colliding with it, and say it is a fast moving star called A.O. (Greenote). It has never before been known to be as brilliant as of late, and it gives out a colored light. There is no backing down from the opinion of the astronomers. Atchison people are not at all surprised to learn that it has the title "Alpha" to it. [local flour?]

Apr. 14, p.2 Was it a star of unusual magnitude and brilliancy that guided the shepherds to the manger where the infant Christ lay, or an air ship? Late developments would prove it was an air ship.

April 16 p.1 N&C. The newspapers lead the people to believe that Omaha is practically under water. The facts are that Omaha is high and dry, except that shanties on the lowlands are surrounded. All the news of the flood is greatly exaggerated. The newspaper correspondents are becoming more unreliable than ever before, and the newspaper publishers have less sense than ever before in paying for what the correspondents send out. The Chicago papers lately printed a great airship story. Every line printed about the airship has been invention, plain and simple.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Kansas City Times, p. 1.

PAYS THE CAPITAL A VISIT. / Air Ship Plainly Seen in the Early Morning at Jefferson City. / Special to the Kansas City Times.

Jefferson City, Mo., April 16.--According to the story of Al Miller, a well-known and reliable citizen of this city, the air ship that has been attracting so much attention in Kansas and elsewhere passed over Jefferson City at an early hour this morning. Mr. Miller's story is that he had been sitting up with a sick friend in the southern part of the city and left to go home at 1:30 a.m.

It was a beautiful night and his attention was first directed to the aerial vessel by a light of unusual brilliancy. He looked up into the heavens and was startled to see the outlines of a dark, moving body, from which sparkled the light that had first attracted his attention. It was a search-light, and was fitted flitted from point to point of the city, as though the navigators of the craft were endeavoring to get their bearings. The ship was traveling from southeast to northwest, and was, when first seen by Mr. Miller, not over 200 feet from the earth. At one time it stood still, suspended in space, while the occupants seemed to be leisurely taking a survey of the landscape below them.

Seemingly they were satisfied in a few moments, for the vessel rose gracefully far up in the air and shot to the northwest, going directly over the dome of the State house, and was soon out of sight, although Mr. Miller, who stood and looked after it for ten minutes after it disappeared, says he caught several glimpses of the light far above the Callaway bluffs.

So far no one has been found who saw the ship to corroborate the story. It has created much interest here, and it is very likely that a number of people will keep a close lookout for the air ship for several nights to come.

1897 April 23 Fort Scott (Kans) Daily Monitor (Fri) p. 4.

The Airship Mystery. / As Told by a Crank the World Is Coming to an End.

The old man has done nothing in the past few weeks but attract attention on the streets by his predictions and who claims to be a second Jesus Christ, has solved the air ship mystery to the utter satisfaction of himself only. Yesterday afternoon he had a small crowd corralled on the corner of Wall street and Scott avenue, pouring forth words that were unreasonable and ridiculous in their nature.

He says that the air ship stories are all fakes, that the lights which are detected in skies are signals of approaching danger, that the world would soon come to an end. The congregation gave his words no credence and he told them it was too much for their wisdom. The fellow whose name is not known is making himself quite obnoxious to some of the business men by attracting large crowds in front of their places of business.

Sun. Apr. 11 p2 (eds)--The Atchison Globe says it is a sign of the superior intelligence of woman that none of them have seen the air ship.

Tues Apr. 13 p.2--One of the hardest blows the air ship story has received is the fact that whenever any one is reported to have seen it his church and social standing is given to bolster up his story. Sat. Apr 17 p2--The report that the air ship has been seen at Fort Scott will cast a suspicion upon the claim that the joints are closed. Fri Apr 23 p.2--Edison says there is no airship. The joke is on Edison. He ought to be able to discover a joke without its being labelled.

Wed Apr 28 p.2--The joints must be wide open at Yates Center. A man in that vicinity has not only seen the air ship but insists that he saw it steal a 3 year old heifer, and he has the affidavit of the populist coal oil inspector and 2 druggists to the effect that he is not crazy.

Fri May 7 p2--The airship at Topeka turns out to be an immense kite that a man and his boy had been flying. // 8, 1 Bernard
Sun May 9 p2--The airship fake (St. Louis Republic)

"The airship sighted in Wash & NY & Chi." This fake has given birth to a new saying. Instead of charging a man with having wheels in his head it is now the proper palaver to accuse him of having "arps in his garrett."

They have a real airship at the Nashville exposition; one that even the strictest prohibitionist may see and tell about without having his sobriety questioned.

May 10 p.2--Only flying machine ever to fly is Langley's.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Atchison (Kans) Daily Globe, p. 1

News & Comment

All people of Hiawatha who wish to be classed by the newspaper correspondents as "leading and reputable citizens," are on record as having seen the air ship over that town last evening.

Apr. 20, 4b Atchison railroad men call the pay car the air ship.

28, 2b Since the outbreak of war between Turkey and Greece, not a word has been heard from the air ship.

2e "I have found a man who has seen the air ship," said Prof. Knerr today, "and a few evening ago he pointed it out to me; but this air ship was nothing more than the planet Venus, which has been such a conspicuous star in the evening sky now for several months. After the 28th Venus will be a morning star, and then doubtless some early risers will revive the air ship story."

27, 2a A special dispatch from Yates Centre, Kans., says that an air ship passed over that place recently, and swooped down and stole a calf. An affidavit accompanies the story, signed by the leading citizens of Yates Centre, who answer that the story is true. These air ship stories give "the leading citizens" of the town where the ship is seen, a chance to come forward.

2b. Instead of saying a man has wheels in his head, say he sees air ships.

2d Atchison will exhibit the air ship as a Corn Carnival attraction.

1897 April 25 (Sun) Kansas City Times, p. 7.

AGAIN THE AIRSHIP. / Seen Over Kansas City--Constable Brennan Among the Observers.

Again the air ship has been seen. A number of people who were waiting for a car at Fifteenth and Olive about 9 o'clock last night saw two bright lights in a northeasterly direction, apparently about half a mile above the city. They seemed to be about seventy-five feet apart and dark shadows could be seen between them. They looked like electric lights shining through reddish glass and were not the color of stars. The lights were also very much larger than stars. Though the wind was in the south, the lights moved from west to east, always remaining the same distance apart.

At one time these lights were seen to give a series of spasmodic upward leaps, as if ballast were being thrown off. They continued to move eastward until finally they disappeared.

Constable Jeff Brennan of Joyce's court was among those who saw the lights, and he vouches for the truth of this story.
1897 April 25 (Sun) Kansas City Times, p. 1.

PATENT FOR AN AIR SHIP. / South Dakota Man Invents One That He Thinks Will Fly. / Special to the Kansas City Times.

[O'Connell], Neb., April 24.—In the office of G. W. Sues, an Omaha patent solicitor, may be seen the plans of an airship which may solve the problem of aerial navigation. The inventor is Henry Heintz, of Elkton, S.D. In this connection it would not be strange if it turned out that the people in Nebraska reported to have seen an airship had really seen the Heintz airship, as Elkton is a little more than 200 miles from Omaha.

The invention embodies an elongated aerial car entirely enclosed, provided with a steam engine to drive a shaft provided with a buoyant propeller. Extending upward from this aerial car are ten hollow posts, which are secured at their upper ends to a cigar shaped balloon which is propelled point forward. Upon these ten posts are ten parachutes. They are in belt connection with a driving shaft within the car and are made to operate alternately. A buoyant propeller and steering apparatus extend from the car, and is so arranged that it can be heated if necessary. The buoyant power of the balloon is simply sufficient to carry the entire apparatus just above the earth. The apparatus would not rise, however, without the help of the parachutes, which have to be operated in order to raise the ship.

The parachutes are so arranged that as one set descends in raising the car the other set ascends in a closed condition, preparatory, in turn, to descend and open. Then, in order to propel the ship forward, the inventor has provided a suitable propeller, so that by his combined instrumentalities the ship can be carried upward, downward or forward at the will of the operator.
1897 April 27 (Mon) Atchison (Kans) Daily Globe, p. 4d.

The peculiar light which has caused all the air ship talk was seen by half a dozen persons from the west porch of Miss Berenan's boarding house at 10 o'clock last night. In the heavens to the northwest they saw a large yellowish light, which ascended to a height of several thousand feet, and then moved rapidly away in a northwesterly direction growing smaller and smaller until it finally disappeared. It was seen for about three minutes, and looked exactly like a toy balloon carrying a strong light, and moving upward until carried away by an upper current of air.

April 28, p. 1: N & C. The airship was seen by a party of sweet lieutenants at Ft. Leavenworth last night. The lieutenants are usually in position to see airships every night.

Atchison Affairs: Answer to correspondent: The air ship story originated with Edgar Allan Poe a great many years ago. All the stories of air ships printed in the newspapers are fables of course. The latest lot of stories originated with Missouri Pacific night operators between Atchison and Omaha.

p.2: We have quit keeping a wharf in repair for our ship when it finally comes in, and are fixing a soft place for it to light (Globe Sight).

4b Dick Selty did not think of the air ship story first, so he is going around telling that yesterday he saw a catfish in the river big as a man, and that it stood on its tail, and looked around.

4d Mrs. C.W. Postlethwaite saw the strange light in the sky Monday night, and says it was a toy balloon; she saw its outlines distinctly. It was also known that a West Atchison man sent up a toy balloon Monday night. Another air ship bursted.

April 29 p. 1 (top) It is proposed, if the floods continue, to revive reminiscences of Noah, and inaugurate a Noah craze.
1897 April 27 (Tues) Kansas City Times, p. 1. (card 1)

AIR SHIP STEALS A CALF / SWOOPS DOWN LIKE BIRD OF PREY, GRABS THE MEAT AND GETS AWAY. / Hamilton, Who Owned the Veal, Stands Trembling by and Sees the Steal—His Truthfulness Is Put to Dispute; 'Tis Vouched for by Men of Repute—Peruse the Story; It's a "Beaut." / Special to the Kansas City Times.

Topeka, Kan., April 26.—Millions have laughed at the Kansas air ship, but the thing is no joke to Farmer Alexander Hamilton, who resides near Yates Center, Woodson county. The air ship not only appeared in plain view of Hamilton and his family and frightened them out of their wits, but the captain of the "vessel" had the nerve to swoop down upon the cow-lot and steal a 3-year old heifer. At any rate that is what Hamilton says, and the Yates Center Advocate, which publishes the story, vouches for his honesty and great love of truth. In addition, a dozen well-known citizens, including State Oil Inspector E.V. Wharton, Sheriff M.E. Hunt and Banker E.H. Winter, testify that Hamilton's reputation for truth and veracity has never been questioned.

Hamilton claims that the air ship visited his place a week ago tonight. He told the country people about it, but the report did not reach Yates Center till Saturday, when Hamilton related it to Hudson & Faught, the Advocate men, who proceeded to get out an "extra."

"Last Monday night about half past 10 o'clock," Hamilton said, "we were awakened by a noise among the cattle. I rose, thinking perhaps my bull dog was performing some of his pranks, but upon going to the door saw, to my utter astonishment, an air ship slowly descending over my cow lot about forty rods from the house.

"Calling Gid Heslip, my tenant, and my son Wall, we seized some axes and ran to the corral. Meantime the ship had been gently descending until it was not more than thirty feet above the ground, and we came up to within fifty yards of it.

"It consisted of a great cigar-shaped portion, possibly 300 feet long, with a carriage underneath. The carriage was made of panels of glass or other transparent substance, alternating with a narrow strip of some material. It was brilliantly lighted within and everything was clearly visible. There were three lights, one light an immense search light and two smaller, one red and the other green. The large one was susceptible of being turned in any direction.

"It was occupied by six of the strangest beings I ever saw. There were two men, a woman, and three children. They were jabbering together, but we could not understand a syllable they said.

"Every part of the vessel which was not transparent was of a dark reddish color. We stood mute in wonder and fright, when some noise attracted their attention and they turned their light directly upon us.

"Immediately upon catching sight of us, they turned on some unknown power, and a great turbine wheel about thirty feet in diameter, which was slowly revolving below the craft, began to buzz, sounding precisely like the cylinder of a separator, and the vessel rose as lightly as a bird.

"When about 300 feet above us it seemed to pause and hover directly over a 3-year-old heifer, which was bawling and jumping, apparently fast in the fence. Going to her we found a cable about half an inch in thickness, made of the same red material, fastened in a slip knot around her neck, one end passing up to the vessel and tangled in the wire. We tried to get it off, but could not, so we cut the wire loose and stood in amazement to see ship, cow and all rise slowly and sail off, disappearing in the northwest.

"We went home, but I was so frightened I could not sleep. Rising early Tuesday morning, I mounted my horse and started out, hoping to find some trace of my cow.

This I failed to do, but coming back to Leroy in the evening, found that Lank Thomas, who lives in Coffey county, about three or four miles west of Leroy, had found the hide, legs and head in his field that day. He, thinking someone had butchered a stolen beast and thrown the hide away, had brought it to town for identification, but was greatly mystified in not being able to find a track of any kind on the soft ground.

"After identifying the hide by my brand, I went home, but every time I would drop to sleep I would see the cursed thing, with its big lights and hideous people. I don't know whether they are devils or angels, or what, but we all saw them, and my whole family saw the ship, and I don't want any more to do with them."

The Advocate said, Hamilton looked as if he had not recovered from the shock, and everyone who heard him was convinced that he was sincere in every word he uttered.

Hamilton has long been a resident of Kansas, and is known all over Woodson, Allen, Coffey and Anderson counties. He was a member of the House of Representatives early in the seventies. He staked his sacred honor upon the truthfulness of his story.

The following affidavit is given in support of Hamilton's reputation as a truthful man:

AFFIDAVIT.

State of Kansas, County of Woodson—[cs].

As there are now, always have been and always will be, skeptics and unbelievers whenever the truth or anything bordering on the improbable is presented, and knowing that some ignorant or suspicious people will doubt the truthfulness of the above statement, now,

Therefore, We, the undersigned, do hereby make the following affidavit:

That we have known Alex Hamilton from fifteen to thirty years, and that for truth and veracity we have never heard his word questioned, and that we do verily believe his statement to be true and correct:

E.V. WHARTON, State Oil Inspector.	/	M.E. HUNT, Sheriff.
W. LAUBER, Deputy Sheriff.	/	E. H. WINTER, Banker.
E.K. KELLEBERGER, M. D.	/	E.S. JOHNSON, Pharmacist.
J.H. STITCHER, Attorney.	/	ALEX STEWART, Justice of the Peace.

H. WAYMIRE, Druggist.	/	F.W. BUTLER, Druggist.
JAMES L. MARTIN, Register of Deeds.	/	H.C. ROLLINS, Postmaster.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this ~~21st~~ 21st day of April, 1897. / W. C. WILLE, Notary Public. / It is in Missouri Now. / Special to the Kansas City Times.

Marshall, Mo., April 26.—Quite a sensation was created here last night about 9 o'clock by the passage directly over the city of a strange looking aerial apparatus. It came from the southwest and when over town went east. Several colors of lights were about it and the movement was rapid.
1897 April 30 (Fri) Hutchinson, Kans., Daily News, p. 6.

SAW THE AIR SHIP. / A Reno County Farmer Tells a Good Story Which Sounds Like the Truth.

"Hello, Pete," said a reporter to an old friend from the northwest part of the county last evening. "How do the rains we have been having suit you farmers?"

"First class," was the reply. "With warm weather, which is sure to come there will be an immense corn crop in old Reno this year, provided the hot winds do not come, and they are not likely to as the buffalo wallows and the ponds are all full of water, and when that is the case at this time of the year, I have never known of hot winds."

"But by the way," he continued, "I had an experience on Monday evening when I was going home from the Odd Fellow celebration. It was about 11 o'clock. I was tired and sleepy for I had had a good time, and was letting Old Bay go along pretty much as he pleased, knowing he would take me right up to my gate. I rather guess I was more than three-quarters asleep. All at once I awoke with a start and found Old Bay standing still and shivering with fear. I heard a sound as of some night bird rushing through the air. Looking in a northwesterly direction I saw a large dark object, with small lights in the fore and after part of it. It was about half a mile high and was going in a northeasterly direction. I pulled out my "glass" and taking a long look at the object I made out something that looked like an immense three-masted schooner, with all its sails and jibs set. By the light of the binnacle lamp I could see a man standing at the wheel steering the craft. The rudder was shaped like the vane on my windmill but many times larger. Following the vessel there were five lines of geese or brant, you know how they fly when migrating, at least a mile long, the schooner forming the head of the column. It was the strangest and most beautiful sight I ever saw, and I am convinced that I saw the great air ship that has been seen in this part of the state so often lately."

Heretofore there has been a little doubt as to whether an air ship had ever been invented, much less seen. But this gentleman's reputation for truth and veracity is well beyond question. Every man, woman and child in the township in which he lives considers his word just as good as his bond, and when they read his story will be convinced that there is an airship--somewhere. The reporter also wishes to stake his reputation for truth that his friend is strictly temperate.

1897 May 6 (Thurs) Kansas City Times, p. 8.

Again Soars the Air Ship. / Mysterious Aerial Creature Pays Emporia a Twilight Call. / As Usual, Numbers of Reputable Citizens See the Strange Visitant--It Was Traveling 60 Miles an Hour at a Height of One Mile and Possessed Both Lights and Wings. / Special to KCT.

Emporia, Kans., May 5.--This city has had her air ship. It happened early this evening between 7:10 and 7:20, in the plain view of hundreds who congregated on the streets.

At the time darkness was just beginning to fall, yet everything could be plainly seen when the strange craft first appeared southeast of the city. It soared about a mile high. Those who saw it first state that it carried a bright light, which could not be seen after it had partially passed the city. The vessel was going at a rate of not less than 60 miles an hour, as it was not more than ten minutes in coming within and passing out of range of vision at Emporia.

Among those who first saw the queer visitor was Prof. Eli Payne of the State Normal school, who with his wife and Prof. John Schurr, superintendent of schools at Howard, Kans., were out riding. They all agreed that a large headlight of some kind was in the aerial navigator, and that it was going at a rapid rate in a direct line north; that there was no perceptible wind, and that portions of the object in the air could distinctly be seen to have motion of some kind, which was similar to that of the wings of a large vulture or turkey buzzard, though at a distance too great to make out distinctly. The object was also plainly seen to have a wavy motion, at times ascending and then descending.

Among the well-known citizens who saw the sight, and who agree on the above statement, are: Judge J.W. Malloy, Prof. J. Edward Malloy, John Henning, John L. Eskridge, W.L. Prothero and hundreds of others.

1897 May 7 (Sat) Emporia (Kans) Daily Gazette, p. 4.

The Air Ship.

Emporia had a good look at the air ship last night. About 7:30 people in the eastern part of town saw it. It was high in the heavens and only a black object in the dome. Charley Harris said he saw it wave a dip. Other agree with him. It first appeared to be going west and then turned and traveled directly north. Probably 1,000 Emporia people saw the object. It may have been a toy balloon. It may have been a kite. But it certainly looked unfamiliar and strange. Charley Harris says that it had a headlight and that many people saw it, before the "ship" turned north. Many conservative citizens believe it really was an air ship.

Two young farmers who came in on East 6th ave while the people were rubbernecking at the "air ship" from the M,K&T depot, said the "ship" was a big paper balloon, and passed over their heads about a mile east, so close that they could've shied a stone at it and knocked a hole through it.

Barnard 7/1 & 15/1

May 10 p.4: Emporia people are being pestered by letters from scientists who wish to know about the air ship.

Nov 23/96 Floating through the atmosphere (SF arsp)
Mar. 25/97 Belleville; 30 Omaha; April 2, KC & Everest.

1897 May 14 (Sat) Atchison (Kans) Daily Globe, p. 1c.

News and Comment: St. Joe had an attack of air ship last night. At 8 o'clock the streets were filled with people gazing at a large looking object, with four colored lights attached, that sailed across the sky. The rubbernecks afterwards learned that it was a kite, with four small lanterns attached, sent up by a railroad man in St. Joe, as a joke on the people.

May 1, 4c: Since a certain aerial experience, a well known boarding house in Atchison is called the Airship, and people living in that vicinity refer to the neighborhood as the Wharf.

3, 2d: Erie Aerial Fleeters

4, 1: Atchison Affairs: One Missouri Pacific operator who saw the air ship has lost his job.

6, 1F: M&C: It will be remembered that on Sat. night a few was ago, a dispatch was sent out from Topeka stating that the arsp had been seen there, and that Ed. C. Little, who runs Gov. Leedy, and Harold M. Chase, of the Topeka Capital, had given their affidavits that they saw it, and that it was an air ship. The secret has leaked out. It was a government experimental kite, with 2 lanterns attached, and was sent up by Manager Joseph M. Patton of the Topeka railway co., and with no intentions of perpetrating a joke.

11, 4a: It is reported that the airship make a flying trap to Atchison a few nights ago, and took on a supply of Alpha flour
4d: Gas Co. ad, "written aboard arsp."

12, 1e: Dispatch from Topeka abt 50' snake--eds should be ashamed to print such stuff (comment).

2c: Globe Sights: What has become of the old fashioned people who used to see ar sps?

NEBRASKA

1897 April 10 (Sat) Omaha World Herald, p. 4.

MYSTERY OF THE AIRSHIP.

A number of newspapers that are now making merry over the foolishness of the people who have mistaken Venus for an airship may soon be called upon to announce that they knew all the time that an airship had been perfected. In this day and age it is not the part of wisdom to decry an alleged invention. Folk called Cyrus McCormack a fool when they learned that he was trying to invent a machine that would bind grain as fast as cut. Stevenson was jeered at by his neighbors when he said he could make steam haul great load across the country. Samuel Morse was at one time in danger of being sent to an asylum because he insisted that he could send messages over the electric wire. The man who invented the telephone was laughed at when he said he had a machine that would carry articulation over hundreds of miles of wire, and the world stopped whirling when Edison invented the phonograph. Now we have the kinetoscope, the telautograph, the electric motor and a hundred other things that our forebears would have thought impossible or of the devil.

And why not an airship? Of course, Maxim, the great inventor, has failed to make a successful one, but our greatest inventions were not made by skilled inventors. That mysterious light may be the long sought for navigator of the air. If it is, the fact is not surprising. It is true that Venus is unusually brilliant at this season, but Venus, despite what the poets say of her, is a staid and respectable body and not given to cutting didoes in the upper ether or in the habit of swooping around from one place to another. Venus stays right there, but the mysterious light that is hailed as an airship moves with great rapidity. Some staid and respectable citizens who look not upon the wine when it is red nor daily with the corn when it is in its liquid form have seen the great light moving swiftly athwart the heavens. What is it? It may be an optical illusion, of course, but would anyone be greatly surprised if it did turn out to be a successful airship, capable of moving at a great speed treble that of our fastest express trains? This is an age of wonders, and the humorsists of our esteemed contemporaries would do well to remain quiet until we learn something more of this mysterious light called an airship.

1897 April 10 (Sat.) Nebraska State Journal (Lincoln), p.5. (card 1)

CENTRAL CITY SIGHTS IT. / Mysterious Air Ship Hovering Over Merrick County.

CENTRAL CITY, Neb., April 9.--(Special.)--The so-called airship put in an appearance at this place about 9 o'clock last night, but did not stop to take on any passengers. It was first seen by C. Jacobson while on his way home from his place of business about fifteen minutes before 9 o'clock. He says that when he first saw the light it was almost directly west from him, and appeared to be about a mile high, as near as he could tell. He first took it to be the evening star, but upon looking at it, it seemed to be moving. To make sure he was not mistaken he got behind a tree and sighted along the trunk which convinced him that the light was moving in a northerly direction. At the time Mr. Jacobson was near his home, and upon arriving there he went in the house to tell his son Henry to come out and see the light, the other members of the family being at church. While he was in the house the light seems to have disappeared, as it could not be seen for a few minutes afterwards, but suddenly put in an appearance almost due northwest of them. Desiring to have other witnesses Mr. Jacobson called neighbors, C. Larsen and family, and together they watched the strange spectre floating through the heavens until it disappeared rather suddenly about five minutes afterwards, almost due north of them.

The light is described as having been very bright and of a greenish color, resembling an electric light. At times it seemed to be moving like a search light in the hands of an operator. Nothing besides the light could be seen. The most curious part of the occurrence is that the witnesses say the light was beneath the clouds, which were quite numerous at that time and which were being driven rapidly by the wind in a southerly direction.

All of these witnesses are among the very best citizens and no one here doubts their truthfulness. Mr. Jacobson says he is willing to make an affidavit to the effect that the report as sent to The Journal, which was read to him, is correct.

ST. EDWARD IN ITS PATH.

ST. EDWARD, Neb., April 9.--(Special.)--Last night about 9 o'clock a party of citizens composed of C. A. & K. Gibson and others, noticed a very bright light appear in the east, which seemed to be moving swiftly toward the west and just after passing over the town disappeared. About a half hour later people coming from church again saw the light, which seemed to be about a mile away. While watching it, it quickly disappeared, but soon after appeared again further south and seemed to be coming toward town. It, however, went from sight and was not seen again. When first seen by Mr. Gibson and others it was taken for a shooting star, though they thought it was most too large, but took no further thought of it till their attention was called to it by Pell A. Barrows, who was one of the party who had seen it later in the evening. The Journal correspondent interviewed the gentlemen and was informed by Mr. Gibson that it took the light about fifteen minutes to cross the sky. Mr. Barrows said that his attention was called to the light soon after leaving church by one of the ladies in the crowd, and that they stood for several minutes watching it. The light appeared dazzlingly bright and was about half as large as the moon. Other persons who saw it were Mr. and Mrs. S. Crouch, Mrs. Gunterman and son, Mrs. Barrows and daughter and Oliver Wilson, who also saw it from another point. These persons all unite in pronouncing it the famous flying machine which has been seen in different parts of the state.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Omaha Daily Bee, p. 3.

Bulletins from the Airship. / Appears Saturday at Decatur and Sunday in the Black Hills.

DEADWOOD, S.D., April 13.--(Special Telegram.)--Last night Albert Savre, while returning to his home from a social call at a late hour, distinctly saw mysterious lights floating in the air above him and the dim outline of a mysterious something sailing slowly over the city. It moved in a leisurely manner and was in sight for at least 20 minutes. It was also observed by George Wilson, John Ryan, Max Pawley and Ray Sharpe, each of whom gives a different account of its appearance. The gentlemen named are personally unacquainted with one another.

DECATUR, Neb., April 13.--(Special.)--The same or a similar mysterious light that was seen here a few nights ago again appeared here on Saturday evening. Its course was south but instead of going down on the Nebraska side of the river this time it followed the Iowa line.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Omaha Daily Bee, p. 5.

Hears the Airship's Machinery. / Prominent Business Man of Oak Tells of His Experiences.

OAK, Neb., April 13.--(Special Telegram.)--This morning L. R. Young, a prominent business man of this place, reports that after locking up and going home from his place of business last evening, about 11 o'clock, he saw a very bright light coming from the southwest and moving in a northeasterly direction. He beheld it, he says, until the monster passed the spot where he stood. He asserts that he could clearly outline the airship as it passed over and could hear the muffled sound of its machinery.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Kearney (Neb) Hub, p. 2.

Tales of the Town

Chief Julian has pulled so many people that have seen queer things that he confidently expects to pull people before long who have airships in their vision. Not long ago the chief pulled a man who asked him the next morning how many officers it took to take him. Mr. Julian told him that one man was all that the exigencies of the occasion demanded. "Well I declare," remarked the fellow. "I thought I saw 3 or 4." When people begin to see arspis regularly, Mr. Julian will present them with a chromo card containing the following verse of his own composition:

There are arspis in the sky / Rock and rye. / Don't you see them as they fly? / Rock and rye. / Do not take this for a guy, / You can see them up on high, / If you don't believe it try / Rock and rye.

p. 3--arap inventor writes exposition.

28, p. 2--In Grand Island the ar-sp is the sole topic of conversation. Wed Apr 28 p. 3--Spice/ Grand Island Independent: The "airship" or whatever it is, was seen Mon. night by a number of citizens. It seemed to have been in the same direction and to have travelled about the same course, as on the night previous. It appeared about the same hour that it appeared Sunday night, between 10 and 11 o'clock. Th. Apr. 29 p. 3--Spice/ Grand Island is getting excited over it. The Independent says: "It has been suggested that the next time any one sees the 'airship' or whatever that apparition is, which has for about 2 months been seen in Nebraska and has been taken for an airship, he be authorized to telephone to the waterworks station and that the engineer blow 3 long whistles, to notify the people to take a look at the thing.

May 12 p. 3--Spice/ In many Neb cities where the ar-sp has been making nightly visits the people have discovered that they have been imposed on by kite flyers who have attached candles and lanterns to the kites sent up after night.

Mar. 24 p. 2--Wish (Stub) would stop talking about arspis in favor of snow plows. Felt like a flying machine once at Democratic convent when Bryan nominated, but came down with a thud.

1897 April 15 (Th) Omaha Daily Bee, p. 1

Airship Is Seen by Moonlight. / Appears to Be Propelled by Huge Horizontal Wind Mills.

CANTON, S. D., April 14.--(Special Telegram.)--Last night the airship passed high above this city, headed due north. In the light of the moon it was plainly seen and appeared as large as a good-sized tent. It had a red light at its head and a green one at its stern. It seemed to be propelled by huge wings or fans, which look like wind mills with the sails placed horizontally, and to rise and fall in the air by changing the angles of the fan. The ship was seen by Mayor Seely, ex-Mayor Laxson, Dr. Lewis, Dr. O'Neil and Colonel Stanley.

WOONSOCKET, S. D., April 14.--(Special Telegram.)--The airship passed over this city last night at 9 o'clock, displaying white and green lights. It was moving westward, but not rapidly. It was witnessed by a large number of reliable business men.

RED CLOUD, Neb., April 14.--(Special.)--Monday evening several citizens saw a bright light, which was supposed to proceed from the much talked-of airship. Dick Ferris discovered it at 10:30 p.m. It was seen directly above him, and almost stationary, emitting a light equal to an arc lamp. It soon moved upwards and took a swift southwest course, with the wind; and after moving about for some time the light changed color and disappeared in the west. The phenomenon was also witnessed by Postmaster Cowden and his wife and T. C. Backer.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Omaha Daily Bee, p. 1.

Airship Looks Like a Canoe. / Passes Over Underwood, Iowa, Traveling to the Northeast.

UNDERWOOD, Ia., April 15.--(Special.)--The airship was seen to pass slowly over this city at about 9 o'clock last night. It was headed in a northeasterly direction and seemed to move slowly over the city, rising slowly as it passed over and then going down lower after it passed. It seemed to have some sort of a headlight which emitted a very bright light, as it could easily be distinguished from the stars. At least two reputable citizens of this place saw the "machine" and it was watched with considerable interest. Just after it passed here it came much nearer to the ground than when directly over the city. It appeared to be shaped like a canoe, with wings of considerable length at each side.

1897 April 16 (Sat) Omaha Daily Bee, p. 8.

Airship Has Been Sidetracked. / Voyager Through the Heavens Postpones His Visit.

The hopes of the Exposition officials that the identity of the airship man would be revealed Saturday of this week when he had notified the management that he would appear and perfect the details of an arrangement whereby his invention was to become a feature of the exposition, were rudely shattered yesterday, when Secretary Wakefield received a second letter from the party postponing his visit for the present. This letter, like the first one, was written on a piece of plain note paper. It was dated at Omaha, April 14, and reads as follows:

"Owing to repairs necessitated by our recent Milwaukee voyage it will be impossible for me to call on you Saturday, but I will call after making a voyage to New York, where they seem to doubt my invention. I regret that practical jokers are sending up small balloons to deceive the people."

Like the first letter, this one was signed "A.C. Clinton."

1897 April 17 Omaha Daily Bee (Sat), p. 2. (card 1)

See It Often in Piatte County. / Airship Has Been a Frequent Visitor During the Past Month.

CLARKS, Neb., April 16 (Special.)--The strange light in the heavens made its appearance for the third time in this county last night. It was noticed here first about four weeks ago. Last week it appeared near Central City, 12 miles from here, and was watched by at least a half dozen people for over an hour. Last night it was seen at Silver Creek. The Bee correspondent and Charles Dee stood on the depot platform at Silver Creek and watched the light for fully fifteen minutes. It seemed to be a long way off, traveling eastward. It was almost straight overhead when first seen, but disappeared beyond the horizon fifteen minutes later. The same light was seen at Columbus, ten [30] miles away, by James Breedlove, a Union Pacific brakeman, who was coming out on the Kearney local, which reaches Silver Creek at 9:15 p.m. He says he saw the light plainly at Columbus, also that he saw the same light several nights ago, but beyond Lexington, and that he saw some thirty passengers watched it for ten or fifteen minutes when it disappeared to the southward. He describes it as a large kite-shaped light, pretty much the color of an arc electric light. To those who saw it at Silver Creek it appeared much redder than an electric light, more ablaze.

CLAY CENTER, Neb., April 16 (Special Telegram.)--A number of reliable citizens, among them several women, have lately seen what is supposed to be the airship. Although not close enough to discern its shape, the light appears to be very strong and travels from the south to the north in the sky west of here in the locality of Hastings.

VILLISCA, Iowa, April 16.--(Special.)--The airship was seen here Wednesday night at 10 o'clock in the southwest and it traveled in a westerly direction. It had a large red and white light, but was too far up in the air for the shape to be seen. F. J. Taylor, a prominent groceryman, and several other people claim to have seen it. Thursday night J. A. Day, landlord of the Central house, saw it in the same place at about the same time.

JEFFERSON, Iowa, April 16.--(Special Telegram.)--A local newspaper this morning printed a lurid story concerning the airship which was alleged to have plunged to the earth north of town. Before noon a number of people had actually visited the place to "see the hole."

PIERRE, S. D., April 16.--(Special Telegram.)--A number of citizens of this city, East Pierre and Fort Pierre are certain they saw the mysterious airship about 9 o'clock last night passing rapidly toward the west, several hundred feet in the air and traveling at a rapid speed. Most of them only claim to have seen a bright light, resembling a locomotive headlight, but others are just as certain they saw a long dark wavy object, supplied with long arms extending from each side. George Strong of East Pierre is certain of seeing the dark object below the light, as was James Seals of this city. Fire Chief Monkhouse saw the light as well as J. B. McCloud and a number of other residents of Fort Pierre.

1897 April 18 (Sun) Omaha World-Herald, p. 10.

(card 1)

VAGARING OF THE AIRSHIP. / Harrison Man Recognizes Crawford Fugitive as Its Pilot. / Special Dispatch to the World-Herald.

Harrison, Neb., April 17.--An airship of gigantic dimensions was seen here Tuesday night by a number of lawyers, jurors and witnesses who are here attending the regular spring term of the district court. It was sailing when first discovered in a southeasterly direction at what seemed an extraordinary rate of speed, when suddenly, to the astonishment of all, it seemed to slacken its speed and careened around in a circle, and then came to a stop and hung motionless as if suspended by a rope for several minutes.

Several who saw it claim to have seen different colored lights, which changed alternately from white to red, blue and green, which seemed to be manipulated by objects on the ship, and after signaling in this way several times, one eye witness says, that an extremely bright light shot from either side of the huge monster, and that it then gradually moved off and disappeared.

It could be plainly seen for a space of fully thirty minutes and caused great consternation among the legal luminaries, who, for the time being, exchanged jurisprudence for astronomy.

Among those claiming to have witnessed the wonderful phenomenon are Judge Bartow and A. J. Habbiger of Chadron, B. F. White of Omaha, E. W. Daily and J. E. Porter of Crawford, A. W. Agee of Aurora, John Linnin of Georgetown, Tex., and others. These gentlemen observed the spectacle from different portions of the city, some from house tops, box cars, wind mills and barns. John Linnin scrambled up on top of a chicken house to get a good view and fell through the roof of the house astride of a chicken lifting coop. Neither one was severely injured, but were bruised somewhat, while several chickens were killed.

Charles T. Coffee took observations from his wind mill and was so amazed and highly pleased with the spectacle that his wife could hardly persuade him to come down. Several incidents of this kind occurred which are too numerous to mention.

When these gentlemen were interviewed regarding what they saw they all seemed to agree that some kind of a luminous body passed over this place but no two can agree on the same description.

Some insist it was a meteor or comet while others who claim to be well acquainted with flirtations of the sun, moon, stars, planets, asteroids, satellites, comets and other wonders of the aerial regions are ready to swear on a stack of bibles that never before did they witness or read of anything which pertains to the heavenly bodies that resembled this great and beautiful monster.

When Mr. Habbiger was asked about the matter, he said that it appeared to be a large ellipso shaped body entirely illuminated by variegated lights, resembling in shape the whaleback sterns that plied the great lakes. He also insisted that he saw several objects moving around on the ship and believes that he heard voices, but said he might be mistaken. He is, however, confident he saw moving objects on board.

E. W. Daily of Crawford gave a minute description and was confident two persons were on board, who, he claims, seemed to be guiding the ship. He said it resembled a large box, with oval shape. At the stern he says, there was an apparatus resembling a propeller and attached to the main body by a large iron or wooden beam. Suspended from the box was another box-like structure. Starting from the upper end it gradually tapered to a point. Mr. Daily is positive two persons were in the large oval shaped box, who were working with machinery of some kind. He is also positive that the motions of the persons would indicate they were working hard. Fortunately he had a small field glass with him and insists that one of the gentlemen looked very much like Albert Whipple, who, it may be remembered, disappeared from Crawford two years ago, after robbing the Crawford Banking company. Mr. Daily was dumbfounded by the wonderful phenomenon and particularly the appearance of a man on the ship who resembled Whipple. Whipple, it is said, while in Crawford told a friend of his that he was working on an airship, and that someday he would startle the world. Many believe this solves the mystery; that it is really an airship, and that the inventor, Whipple, being a fugitive from justice, is afraid to land in daylight and make his wonderful invention known.

Mr. Linnin said it resembled a big man with wings. He also insists that he heard voices.

It has caused much excitement and some of those who saw it are determined to investigate the matter fully, as many believe it to be a meteor, and a part of...

1897 April 18 (Sun) Nebraska State Journal (Lincoln), p. 12.

(Ed.) The picture of the Chicago airship as it appears in the papers looks like a boat with a big cigar-shaped cylinder lying upon its back. The "wings" that the Nebraska seers describe do not appear in evidence in the alleged photo. But evidently there are about a hundred varieties of airships flying about us and as none of them appear to land they probably come from Mars. The next time they see one in broad daylight they should hang out a white flag and make signs of peace and perhaps it will sail down and put off some of its almost insuperable bashfulness.

People and Events: "I know all about the airship," writes Charles Rief of Grand Island; "I have seen it; I had a ride on it; I dined upon its deck, three miles above the earth. The captain of it, a man named Gearon, took me over the course pursued by the cow as she jumped over the moon, and I had a good view of that planet. The airship was built in a remote corner of the sandhills, where the sounds of the hammers and saws were deadened, and where no stray passers ever chanced. The long lost Charlie Ross is engineer and the man who struck Billy Patterson is second officer. The ship is run by wind, which was collected by following Mr. Bryan during his campaign tour. It is a very interesting vessel, but I am not at liberty to give away the facts concerning it just yet. I may write a book or deliver a series of lectures before long."

Apr. 16 p. 4--The air ship has evidently started on an eastern tour as it has been seen in Chicago. It is doubtless on its way to an Atlantic watering place to get ready for its engagement for the coming season as the sea serpent.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Omaha Daily Bee, p. 5.

Airship's Lamp Is Lighted. / Juniata People See the Big Headlight Placed in Position.

JUNIATA, Neb., April 19.--(Special.)--The airship was seen here last night about 8:30. It was just northwest of the town. The large white light appeared to have been just lighted and was being placed in position for the night's use. It was put out soon after being lighted probably for trimming, then it appeared again very bright. Then the ship started at a rapid gait to the northwest and disappeared in the direction of North Platte in about half an hour.

LYONS, Neb., April 19.--(Special.)--The airship was witnessed by a number of people in this vicinity last evening. It was first observed southeast of Lyons about 9:30 p.m. It was estimated to be about eight miles from town and about one mile and a half to two miles high. There were a head and a rear light, with outlines between resembling the fans of a large wind mill. It passed between here and Oakland and seemed to travel in a northwestern direction. A party of young folks, returning from a sociable, say it went at a rate of four to six miles per hour. When the ship was south of Bancroft about six miles it made a large circuit two or three times, and then proceeded in the direction of West Point. Many farmers watched it till almost midnight.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Omaha Daily Bee, p. 8.

Airship Is at Portal.

The airship that has been infesting these and neighboring parts is a nightly visitor at Portal whenever the weather is fine. The residents of that little place, which is but a few miles from this city, would be unable to sleep if the airy monster did not put in a regular appearance. So says Mrs. John McCarthy, who lives there and who has friends in this city. The ship appears on every night when it is clear. It seems to come invariably from the direction of Seymour Park. It zigzags across the heavens and shoots up or down with equal facility. According to the people who have viewed it through glasses it is long and oblong, and is provided with huge wings. Lights are hung front and aft.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Nebraska State Journal (Lincoln), p. 2.

AIRSHIP SIGHTED AT BRADSHAW / Appears for the Third Time to Mystify Inhabitants.

BRADSHAW, Neb., April 19.--(Special.)--One of those unaccounted for lights, presumably an airship, was sighted near the northwest horizon by several citizens of this place last night. It moved gently toward the northwest in the face of a strong wind, which is rather hard on the advertising balloon theory, and it had none of the characteristics of a meteor. This is the third time it has been seen from here, but never by so many people.

TABLE ROCK, April 19.--(Special.)--A few minutes before 8 o'clock last night about a dozen more citizens, including the Journal correspondent, discovered a strange light a short distance above the eastern horizon, a little north of east. It looked like a large illuminated balloon, with a light similar to an electric light. It hovered a time, then wavered, arose again and finally passed out of sight. The phenomenon was seen for fifteen minutes or more.

JUNIATA, Neb., April 19.--(Special.)--That famous "airship" was seen here last evening about 8:30. The large white light suddenly appeared just northwest of town, and afterwards was put out, probably for trimming, when it again appeared, very large and bright. Then the ship started at a rapid gait in the direction of North Platte, and disappeared in the distance in about half an hour.

1897 April 21 (Wed) Kearney Daily Hub, p. 2.

THE SECRET DIVULGED. / The Wonderful Air-Ship Modelled by a North Platte Mechanical Genius.

The air ship ran on the North Platte Telegraph is the last to report. Red and green lights have been floating around promiscuously of late over the city where the Platte forks and Col. Cody irrigates, and the occasion called for investigation. So the joyful journalists went out and investigated. After searching for evidence a long time he finally found a local mechanic who had made a model for the air ship some time ago. That is, it was supposed to have been an air-ship model because the two strangers who had it made did not ask to have the model labelled, and in fact were rather reticent as what it was a model of. The paper, in describing the completed model, which was put together behind locked doors after the mechanic had been sworn to secrecy, says: "The main part is a box 3 1/2 inches square, with four windows, one on each side, of red, green, white and amber colored glass. Over each window an arm 6 inches long projected, to which was attached a fan or wing-like attachment. The men were much pleased with the model, which was made of walnut and sheet brass, saying that they had had five different men work on it without being able to complete it."

Now that the home of the air-ship has been found, that the man who made it is definitely located, and all the facts as to its size and necessary flying and propelling machinery has been divulged, people will not need to guess at its strange and apparently flippant and insignificant actions any longer.

1897 April 21 (Wed) Nebraska State Journal (Lincoln), p. 4.

IT RAINED AIRSHIPS. (ed)

Monday evening was prolific in airships in Nebraska. One was seen in the east at Table Rock, Pawnee county, another at Juniata, Clay county, in the northwest, and a third at Bradshaw, York county, at about the same hour. Three of these heavenly messengers at once do pretty well and it is possible that there are about ninety counties where one was seen but not reported on account of the bashfulness of the beholders. It fairly rains airships these days. And yet a half dozen or so have evidently shaken out their main sails and struck for the east.

It is time the government weather bureau got a rove on it and it should at once direct all its agents to keep a lookout for airships. It will be interesting to have a census of them published as soon as possible. Perhaps there are a thousand of them all told.

The airship has been making a great sensation in Texas, where the people are supposed to have acquired immunity from any serious visual disorders arising from the current beverage. A solemn churchman of Dallas saw the ship and describes it minutely: "It was shaped like a Mexican cigar, with great wings resembling those of an enormous butterfly. It was brilliantly illuminated by two great searchlights, and was sailing in a southeasterly direction with the velocity of the wind, presenting a magnificent spectacle."

What have the scoffers to say to that? Will any of them deny now that there are airships?

1897 April 22 (Th) Nebraska State Journal (Lincoln), p. 3.

Airship Seen at Franklin.

FRANKLIN, Neb, April 21.--(Special.)--The airship, or a very good counterfeit, made its appearance in the heavens southwest of here to-night and was watched for 30 minutes or more by quite a number of citizens, and they declared it to be the identical airship that has been seen in the eastern part of the state so often lately. When at first seen it resembled a large star falling, or a comet in motion, with a bright tail. It was very bright at first, and much larger than any star, and it seemed to travel in a straight course from north to south, but in a southwesterly direction, until it disappeared about 10:30.

Sat. April 24, p. 3--They Saw the Airship./New Book Review Club Banquets Handsomely. / ...Lincoln, NEB.

As the guests left the house they all exclaimed that they saw the airship, but no two described the same thing. Some said it had large green eyes and a long tail and others said that its eyes were red. The ship was headed toward Plattsmouth. It may be well to say that the refreshments were of the mildest sort, nothing stronger than cherry juice being allowed.

April 21 p. 4--Neb. Notes. Another week has passed, says the Hartington Herald, and no air ship has been sighted. The question is, are the Hartington people too wide awake to be humbugged or too unlucky to live even on a stub branch of the air ship line.

April 24, p. 4--Said In Fun. / The Air Ship. Twinkle, twinkle little ship, / How you gave us all the slip! Sailing nightly everywhere-- / Delirium Tremens in the air.--Times Herald Mon. Apr. 26, p.4--Black Hills Budget. The air ship idiosyncrasy has struck the Hills, a lady of Deadwood having seen the monster moving majestically above the towering hills west of town.

Daily Drift.--Do not mistake a fleecy cloud for an airship. If you do, thinking people will have a right to question your sanity or sobriety, one or both.

28, 4--Omaha is working the airship idea for a vast amount of free advertising, such as it is.

1897 April 23 (Fri) Nebraska State Journal (Lincoln), p. 4.

AT LEAST FOUR (ed)

One-half of the citizens of Cochransville, O., have signed an affidavit to the effect that an airship floated over that town on Monday night. It was cone shaped, 180 feet long and flashed red, white and green lights from the bow. It came along about 9 o'clock. This is the same hour of the same evening that three separate airships were seen in as many Nebraska counties. So we have evidence that there were four airships afloat over America at the same time. The Journal would be glad to hear of any other airships seen on Monday night by any of its readers. It is only by rounding 'em up on some particular night that a census can be taken. There certainly must be a good many more than four.

There is no reason why the airships should not sail by day, but it is evident that the one photographed at Chicago is the only exception so far. That was quite early in the morning and had perhaps been belated. It is certainly greatly to the credit of Nebraska that she has turned out more airships in a single night than any other state in the union. The Journal would be delighted to announce that several more were discovered on that Monday night within the bounds of the state.

94
1897 April 25 (Sun) Omaha World-Herald, p. 12

(card 1)

STORIES OF THE AIRSHIP. / Some Omaha People of Repute Take Stock in the Peculiar Phenomenon. / Believe That Clinton A. Case Has Carried Out His Ideas to a Successful Conclusion.

There are several practical and scientific men in Omaha who are not at all surprised by the almost daily reports of citizens having seen some sort of aerial monster sailing between earth and heaven, showing its course by night by vivid flashes of light. These gentlemen are confident that this aerial traveler is the invention of a former Omaha man, who, about two years ago, submitted for their consideration plans of a most remarkable engine designed for aerial navigation. The inventor of this machine was Clinton A. Case, inventor by nature, violin maker by necessity. Of the ability shown by Mr. Case in his chosen profession the violinists of Omaha can testify; certainly it is that they sincerely regretted his departure from this city.

Some time before leaving Omaha Mr. Case exhibited to Alva J. Grover, the civil engineer, plans of a vehicle designed for navigating the air, together with drawings of a propelling engine the like of which the engineer had never before seen.

After a careful study of the blueprints of Mr. Case's machine Mr. Grover declared himself of the opinion that an air ship or aeroplane built upon these lines would be able to navigate the air, providing resistance to air currents and steering gear were in relative proportion to the lifting capacity of the plane.

PROPELLING ENGINE.

A remarkable feature of this air navigator was the propelling engine, which, owing to the construction of the plane, must of necessity combine great power within small space. Case's plans showed that after the first 300 pounds of weight every horse power could be secured by each additional three-pound weight of engine; the whole power for carrying 1,800 pounds could be secured within the space of an ordinary office desk. Naptha was to be used instead of coal--being easily carried in tanks at the bottom of the plane.

The plane itself, of an entirely original design, was the result of many years' experimenting. Its framework was to be of bamboo, which the inventor had found to be the strongest as well as lightest material known. Thirty-foot wings of bamboo (covered) with silk extended outward and downward on each side of the body of the ship, the latter having somewhat the appearance of a boat's keel, tapering upward toward the front. The propeller at the rear was like an ordinary steamship's screw, with the exception that the blades were very long and tapering, and made of aluminum. At the bottom of the ship, on each side, wheels were placed, which assisted in starting the plane, and they were also to be utilized when alighting.

CAPITALISTS WARY.

Mr. Case tried to interest Omaha capital in his invention, but at a time of great financial depression, and moneyed men were very careful how they placed investments, so the inventor left the city with the avowed purpose of building his airship himself in his native Missouri.

Speaking of the invention of Mr. Case, Engineer Grover said: "When he first came to see me I had an idea he was one of these visionary persons whose theories are based on the amount of a busy man's time they can consume, but as I looked ~~max~~ into his plans I became convinced that Case was a man of no ordinary caliber. I advised him to make duplicate drawings and send them, with explanations, to Prof. Roland of Johns Hopkins university. Maxia, the well-known experimenter in aerial navigation, and the chief of the balloon corps of the United States army. He did so and received replies from all three.

"Maxia claimed Case's invention to be nothing new in principle, while the replies of the others were of a most encouraging nature. Especially so was that of Prof. Roland, who is the highest authority on aerial navigation on this side of the Atlantic.

"While I have not taken any stock in the local ~~air~~ airship excitement, I will say that if there is any reality in the thing Case's aeroplane would come nearer the descriptions given ~~max~~ than any other I have heard of.

"It would be just like Case to sign his name backward to a communication. My opinion of him is the highest. He is without question a genius and one of the brightest mechanics I ever saw."

In the minds of a number of personal friends of Clinton A. Case the signature attached to the communication received by secretary Wakefield of "A.C. Clinton" is but a transformation of his name, for purposes best known to himself, and they are quietly rejoicing that their old friend has been able to substantiate his former claims in so satisfactory a manner, and that the airship reported almost nightly is his invention. /

PLANS OF THE AIRSHIP. / Invention of Henry Heintz on Exhibition in Omaha.

In the office of G.W. Sues, the Omaha patent solicitor, may be seen the plans of an airship which it would seem very nearly solves the problem of aerial navigation. The invention is that of Henry Heintz of Elkton, S.D.

In this connection it would not be at all strange if it turned out that the people in Nebraska reported to have seen an airship had ~~max~~ really seen the Heintz airship, as Elkton is a little more than 200 miles from Omaha. The invention, as described by Mr. Sues, it is thought, very nearly duplicates, through mechanical means, the flight of a bird. The invention embodies an elongated aerial car entirely enclosed, provided with a steam engine to drive a shaft provided with a buoyant propeller. ... (broken off)

It would not be at all surprising if Inventor Heintz had ~~max~~ constructed an airship which could be made commercially profitable.

He Tells of the Great Airship. / How It Came to Be Constructed and the Journeys Made in It.

Omaha, April 24. To the Editor of the Bee:
Down east they tapped their foreheads in a knowing way and smiled slyly at each other when I told them I was on the point of commencing a journey through the air. But it seemed so difficult to get the last cog to dovetail exactly, and to get the power to operate on the precise point, that I did not feel justified in resenting the many sarcastic remarks and direct sneers with which my neighbors honored me.

My brother Zeb, however, never lost faith in my mechanical skill, and he assisted me with his purse, his advice and his labor.

One day we packed up our belongings, especially those parts of our aero-motor which I had completed, and left the home of our childhood in [New] York state to establish a new home on the prairies, where we would be unknown, and where we could labor undisturbed and bring to perfection the apparatus which was destined so soon to mystify the entire world.

Years ago, while yet a youth, I had been fascinated by experiments in electricity and had constructed a papier mache cylinder, which I had carefully wired, and discovered to my great delight that when connected with a dynamo in my father's mill I could easily cause it to revolve or move along the smooth surface, guiding its course and changing same at will by touching sundry buttons on the dynamic traveler, which I had invented. I foresaw then that I merely: to add a power to lift the apparatus and itself from the surface of the earth to revolutionize all modes of locomotion and immortalize myself. It was so this end that Zeb and I located in Adams County, Nebraska, where we bought a small farm, and in our little log cabin prosecuted our labors, which have at last come to fruition and brought us such success that the mind of man recoils when we contemplate the wonderful changes our simple invention is bound to cause in the everyday affairs of this globe. Think, sir, of taking a seat in a pleasant coach this evening and breakfasting in New York early tomorrow!

I shall pass over our many disappointments--they are common to all inventors.

I shall not attempt to describe the anxiety and suspense that threatened to consume us but, at last! at last! one grand and glorious day our apparatus was complete, was perfect, and we had it under absolute control; we could soar above the clouds or skim along the earth, like the birds of the air.

I shall not make public, at this time, the precise manner in which the power is applied to my airship. Suffice it to say that it is raised and propelled by a system of gasoline explosions which is becoming familiar to those who study the modern motor cycle.

One evening recently Zeb and I took our first aerial trip in our wonderful, yet simple, aero-motor. With a red light at the one end of our ship, and a green light at the other, and our ingenious searchlight easily accessible, we traveled about, and sometimes high above the clouds, sometime so near to the earth that we could understand the words of amazement and awe which were uttered with bated breath by the few fortunate mortals who happened to be belated and thus got a glimpse of our great and wonderful invention.

Since then we have roved about this country almost nightly, now in the north, now south, now east, now west, everywhere causing amazement, if not consternation.

It has been no small matter of delight to us to read the many learned and ingenious theories that have been published as to the identity of my airship, my darling--my pet invention. Most of these theories are far from the facts, but some have come wonderfully close. All the world will know it soon, for I am not selfish enough to keep the secret longer.

You will not see us for the next few nights, for while traveling above the clouds on the night of April 22 during the terrible rain storm the armature in the little dynamo in the left wing of my aero-motor was suddenly burned out, and this caused us to travel with a very decidedly rolling motion, we determined to turn in for repairs, and so we conveyed our airship and stored it, to--where I am now writing this letter--my air castle.

1897 April 26 (Mon) Kearney (Neb) Daily Hub, p. 3.

Takes His Pen in Hand.

Reports from the various parts of the country are conflicting in minor respects, only, as to the airship. It still holds the attention of a great many people and the fertile imagination of the country newspaper correspondent has not neglected it. Word comes from Fremont that the other day it soared o'er a farm house near the capitol of Dodge and a good view was secured of it. It was inhabited by a sole individual, who dropped down a snare and picked up one of the farmer's chickens. In return therefor he dropped a note reading somewhat after this fashion: "This dod gasted airship business is not what some people might crack it up to be. My vehicle is out of order and will not down. A goose-hunter shot the flim-flam off my flying jib and a Kansas cyclone took me in its warm embrace and didn't do a thing to this blamed machine. I can't come down. The machine won't work. I have grown gray-headed in the business. Excuse haste and poor writing and search for my remains." From which it may appear that the aerial navigator is a jovial cuss after all.

1897 April 27 (Tues) Kearney (Neb) Daily Hub, p. 3.

Seen at Grand Island.

Sunday night between ten and eleven o'clock two lights were observed in the southwestern sky, say the Grand Island Independent. The man who first observed them thought they moved. He rubbed his eyes and looked again. Of course they moved and moved swiftly. They were going in a southerly direction, each keeping pace with the other. When they were just about to disappear in the southwestern horizon the lights made a turn and came back. It did not take them very long to make the entire trip from over Sand Krog [?] to beyond the soldier's home, and away out in the latter direction they disappeared. The man, who first observed the phenomenon, immediately telephoned to the Knehler hotel and many of the guests there saw it. They won't say that it was a ship, don't believe that it was a balloon and admit that they don't know enough about astronomy to declare that it was--or they were--such and such stars. They only know that there was a white and red red light and that these lights traveled southward in the direction of Hastings.

1897 May 1 (Sat) Nebraska State Journal, p. 4

State Press.

A new theory of the airship comes from an Arkansas preacher, who says it is the temple of the ~~maxillary~~ tabernacle of the testimony, and that the third angel is now pouring out from his vial upon rivers and fountains of water. This has the merit of explaining the Mississippi and Missouri floods as well as the airship itself, but somehow the reported behavior of the vessel's crew does not fit in very well with so lofty a hypothesis. Even a third angel would not be likely to drop bottles overboard as he sailed along and it is with as little ease to believe that he would use sandbags for ballast.--Nebraska City News.

May 5 p. 4--Neb. Notes.--Nelson elected a license town council this year and almost before it began operations the good citizens up there began to sight airships.

Th May 19, p. 4--Neb. Notes.

Shortly after sunset Wednesday and before dark a meteor was seen passing over the north part of Orleans. It was exceedingly bright, looking in the twilight like a red hot iron, and it travelled with great velocity.

May 14 p. 4--Neb. Notes.

The latest Nebraska airship was brought to earth recently near Stromsburg in Polk county. Some farmers went after it with a shotgun and when it landed only a kite with a Chinese lantern was all they captured. The boys with half a mile of string, who were manipulating the ship escaped.

1897 May 6 (Th.) Beatrice Weekly Express, p. 1.

That Air Ship.

An Illinois editor thus describes his vision of the air ship: "Wednesday night as we were busily engaged in counting the cash taken in during the day for subscriptions, preparatory to putting it away in our three-decker, Swiss movement, earthquake proof, time lock safe, our attention was attracted by the frantic yells of Arthur Paddock and Joe Harkey. Hastily dumping our money into the safe and wadding up a ream of United States bonds and showing them in the vault, we rushed out in a state of qui vive bordering onto fanatods, for we knew something unusual was happening.

We found Harkey and Paddock with their large liquid eyes turned heavenward. We followed their gaze and what should we see but an airship careening around in the western sky and warbling a merry roundelay! It would flit and twit and shoot up into the air, darting hither and thither and yon, but principally yon. It minded us of a lark with the dew on its breast, or a horsefly with a pin in the bosom of its pants. I would skim along awhile like a swallow, then it would alleance left and join hands and circle to the right and balance all and plouette. Once it lit on top of the court house and crew like a cock, after which it spread its wings and skam athwart the cerulian heavens, taking an upward course, and heading toward the milky way after a drink.

MISSOURI

1897 April 8 (Th) St. Joseph, Mo., Daily Herald, p. 5.

THAT STRANDED AIRSHIP. / "Truthful W Jones" Tells What He Knows of the Monster.

Bethany, Mo., April 7.--Jitor Herald.--The stranded air ship, reported in yesterday's Herald, is evidently one of the greatest wonders of this century. It is surely the same ship that was first seen at Lincoln, Neb., and since reported as seen in several states, going east.

Coroner just in. Verdict, died of congestion of the brain from an overflow of gas, the motive power of the ship. The man evidently died happy as there was a wonderful smile about his mouth. He must have died talking about his great discovery of the purity of the golden crown by gas displacement, as he named his ship "Furets."

The ship was spherical in form, patterned after the cupola of the capitol at Washington, surrounded by a ballustrade [?], all made of wicker-work wound and protected by asbestos. Small balloons filled with gas were anchored to the ballustrade. These held the ship on an even keel. It was sailing with ballast of silver for the redemption of silver certificates after 1900. The mast, standing erect in the center of the ship, served as an anchor to a huge balloon, below which was a simple apparatus for manufacturing its own gas. It is thought that the man lost to his life in tinkering with this new discovery.

TRUTHFUL JONES, Reporter.

1897 April 8 (Th) Sedalia (Mo) Evening Democrat, p. 1.

Airship Takes a ~~Rock~~ Tumble. / Reported to Have Fallen on a Farm near Bethany.

St. Joseph, Mo., April 8.--This airship story comes from Bethany, Mo. It is accompanied by affidavits of prominent citizens.

1897 April 9 (Fri) St. Joseph Daily Herald (Mo), p.2.

At midnight Sunday night an airship was seen coming from the south-west at the rate of 35 miles an hour. It appeared to be about a mile high. It stopped a few seconds over the court house and then moved on in space.

THE WRECKED SHIP. / MR. A.T. XXXX FAKIR TELLS OF THE QUEER TRAVELERS. / Produces no Sworn Affidavit, But the Pen Picture Herewith Given He Considers Ample Evidence--"Pipe" Stories and the Visions of Jules Verne Have no Counterpart With the Secrets Locked in the Breasts of the Two Dead Men Who Expired With the Ship. /

Tuesday morning two reputable farmers--John Leib and Ira Davis--came to town and reported that the airship had fallen on the farm of J.D. Sims, six miles from town, and that a dead man was lying in the field.

Bethany, Mo., April 8.--(Editor Herald.)--Dear Sir: The excitement here over the disabled air ship is intense, and continues to grow hourly. People are flocking to the scene in great numbers. The news of the affair has spread like wild-fire and it seems that all who can are determined to get a view of the strange machine.

April 16, p. 2: That airship may possibly be the free silver wing of the democratic party looking for a soft place in which to light without jerking out the tail feather on the splinters of the Chicago platform--Springfield Republican.

Both men accompanying the car were killed outright, and so badly bruised and mutilated that identification is next to impossible.

Or, perhaps it may be merely a contrivance which some credulous voter is using to sail over the country in search of some evidence of the presence or coming of the Marc Hanna "wave of prosperity."

From letters found in the pockets of each it is believed that the man originally came either from San Francisco or Omaha. Telegrams have been sent to the names and addresses found on the bodies with the hope that friends of the unfortunate men may be found. But as yet no answer has been received. The direct cause of the disaster was due to a tall flag pole standing in Sims' front yard. It was discovered that the pole was broken at the top, and the supposition is that they attempted to descend when the pole became tangled in the rigging and the lamentable calamity resulted.

April 18, p. 10: No airship...but only the light from the Silver Moon restaurant.

The bodies are under the care of an experienced embalmer, but it is feared from the mutilated condition that early interment will be necessary, and that shipment will be impossible if friends send for them.

19, p. 2: The Democrat does not vouch for the correctness of the "airship" story in its Sunday issue. Our correspondent may have become unweary excited or his imagination may have run away with his judgment. But the story is as credible, as reasonable, as well authenticated and infinitely more interesting than most of those that have been inflicted on a long-suffering public.

The mechanical construction of the ship seems to excite more curiosity than the mutilated men. The ship resembles a cigar in shape, and has three propellers on either side, all of which were broken in the fall. A large hole was torn in the lower side, which revealed a large number of cells or for the gask[?].

May 6, p. 1: Airship carrier in Ark. legislature. 1897 April 9 (Fri.) Carrollton Daily Democrat (Mo.), p. 3.

The whole affair was gathered into a hay rack and placed in Sims' barn where it will remain until the proper persons call for it. The two dark spots on the right of accompanying cut show blood from one of the bodies. The above illustration was made about one-half hour after bodies had been removed.

Jno. Warner and his wife may not have seen the air ship last night, but Mr. Warner says he saw one of the prettiest stars imaginable, and that it was very restless and couldn't stay in one place very long. They first saw the light in the west. It gradually climbed up until directly overhead and then passed slowly eastward. Mr. Warner says he could see it move and sometimes it would jump up and down. It took something more than an hour for the light to pass from where he first saw it in the west to the point he last saw it in the east.

LATER--The ship has been brought to Bethany and is now in a large ware-room, where a curious throng continuously gazes at it.

Mar. 27, 1. Belleville arsp. Arpl. 2,p.3, p4. KC arsp. 10,4. Arsp in Ia.

(Illus.: THE WRECKED AIR SHIP.) 1897 April 10 (Sat eve) St. Louis Post-Dispatch, pp. 1, 2. (card 1)

Mon. April 19, p. 3. The residents of S. Locust St. say they saw the airship Sunday night. They say it looked like it was down on Bowdry lake or in that neighborhood.

Airship in the Heavens / Scientists Wonder If the Problem is Solved / Observations at St. Louis. / Washington University Profs Puzzled and Will Watch the Sky To-Night.

May 1, 4. daylight meteors. 7, 2. The Arsp Story Not in It with This (life in crystals) 7,2, 15, 1. Barnard.

Telescopes at Washington and at St. Louis Universities will sweep the sky from zenith to horizon in a northwesterly direction Saturday night and the professors at these institutions will endeavor to solve the mystery that is now puzzling the Central West.

1897 April 9 (Fri.) Liberty (Mo.) Tribune (wkly), p. 1.

It is general belief that an air ship is floating over the states of Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, and Kansas. This belief is entertained by men of scientific attainments as well as those not so well versed in the field of natural philosophy.

Saw the "Airship" From Here. Billie George says that he and a number of others beheld the light of the mysterious airship that has been creating such a furor, as they were on their way home last Friday night.

The rumor that a strange aerial body had been seen became current a fortnight ago and was laughed at. It was repeated and wise men said the nocturnal observers were suffering from optical illusions due to excessive libations, or that the light from a brilliant star had been magnified by the imagination.

Mr. George, his father and brother were going home when they first noticed the light. They could see it was moving and after reaching home the other members of the family were called out to watch it. The light moved off the the northwest and finally disappeared. It was nine o'clock when they first saw it. They are positive it was not a star.

Within the last three days the evidence that something unusual is moving midst the clouds has become so conclusive and has so much corroboration that wisecracks have ceased to jibe, and while wondering what the mystery can be, they are doing their utmost to solve it.

Aprl. 2, p.4. Kans. arsp. 9, 1. Local News. The Lathrop night watchman "April fooled" a number of the natives into sighting for that mysterious airship that has been creating such excitement throughout the West.

Telegrams were received by the Post-Dispatch Saturday morning from correspondents in four Central States stating that a luminous body had been seen moving in a northwesterly direction Friday night. Different colored lights were seen flashing from the object, and its lines were easily distinguished.

That mysterious airship is reported to have been seen by KC people last week. People who never drink anything say it was the evening star, shining with unusual brilliancy.

It was viewed by thousands in Chicago, and was declared by Hix L. Rosmar, secretary of the Chicago Aeronautical Association, to be an air ship. He averred moreover that he knew one of the men in the aerial craft. Prof. Hough of Northwestern University said it must have been a star that was seen, but thousands of Chicagoans ridicule the idea.

16, 3. The report is that the airship hovered over Flatte City Saturday night. It appeared to be only about 300 feet high. A glaring light flashed over the town, and listen to this, as told by the Kansas City World: After a stay of about three minutes, rattling, creaking, snapping sounds, mingled with what appeared to be the escaping of steam or hot air, together with sharp and well-defined explosions resembling the discharge of firearms, signaled the preparation for departure, and the Titanic traveler of the air sped away to the north-east and was lost to view in the clouds.

A Post-Dispatch reporter visited Union Station Saturday and interviewed train hands and passengers arriving from the west and northwest. They all said the air-ship was the one topic of conversation in the region through which they passed. Hundreds had seen the object and all were mystified.

23, 1. Local News. A Texas Negro who saw the "airship" declared that it was Noah's ark, on its way to save the colored people from the Mississipi river flood.

Visits were then paid Washington and St. Louis Universities. At the former Prof. Henry S. Pritchett was found in the laboratory.

Weekly Democrat-News (Marshall, Mo.) Sat. April 17, p. 1. Arsp over Chicago.

"I know what you wish to speak with me about," he said when the reporter entered, "and I will frankly tell you I am as mystified as anyone."

24, 1. The airship may be laden with McKinley prosperity, which being lighter and less materialistic than ether, renders making a landing in the U.S. wholly impossible. At least we know it does not land and prosperity does not come.

"Can it be possible that it is an airship?" "Why, of course it can. This is an age of wonderful inventions. Suppose a man had solved the great problem of the century--aerial navigation--what more probable than that he would float around over cities in just such a manner. He would thus be the talk of the civilized world and it is the nature of man to mystify his fellow creatures.

May 1, p.2. The airship seems to have gone back to Chicago to be re-illuminated with air, or else to have hidden itself away until cock beer day arrives. Anyway it has not been seen for three nights and the moonshine whiskey dealers have become alarmed at the loss of hallucinating powers of their remunerative commodity. / The recent airship liars have folded their tents & gone out of the business.--Ham's cow.

"When I first read the stories regarding an airship I laughed and thought the yarn a good one. But to-day I am inclined to treat the matter seriously and am convinced something unusual has been seen in the heavens.

"There is too much corroborative evidence and it comes from too many quarters to treat the matter any other way. I was looking through the telescope for a time in that direction last night, but it was cloudy and the range of observation was limited. To-night I shall make careful observations until 12, and I believe many other St. Louisians will do the same."

Prof. Pritchett was asked what he thought of the statement of Prof. Hough of Northwestern University, Chicago, to the effect that a brilliant star had caused the comment.

"That is not possible," he replied. "In the first place Venus is a brilliant star at present and everybody knows Venus. Then she is not in that part of the heavens where these lights have been seen. Again, it has been cloudy in the localities where the mysterious object has been observed, so the star must have been obscured, and this light, whatever it is, was between the clouds and the earth."

"What is your solution of the mystery, Professor?"
"I have none to offer. I am as much puzzled as anyone. Something unusual has been seen, and that is as far as I know. When I first read the many telegrams this morning I thought some practical joker might have sent up a hot-air balloon, but after thought I concluded that not possible. No hot-air balloon would float so long, nor could it have hovered over so many points."

"A balloon such as has been made for a trip to the North Pole might be wafted back and forth over the Central States for several days and it could be so arranged as to keep a fixed altitude. But it is impossible for a balloon of such size and expense to have been launched without people knowing it. The same might be said of an airship, only there would be more to gain by keeping the launching of an airship secret than of a balloon."

"It would, indeed, be wonderful if the great problem is solved at last, and in the face of such testimony I can not gainsay it has. The matter has now become a matter for investigation by scientific men and the professors of Washington University will do their utmost to solve it to-night."

The opinion expressed by Prof. Pritchett was that of other scientific men of St. Louis. The matter has caused great excitement in St. Louis, and was the subject of general comment down town Saturday.

In connection with these remarkable observations it may be stated that three weeks ago a letter was received by a prominent St. Louis man stating that positive information had been obtained by the writer—a Chicagoan—to the effect that an airship was about to be launched and it was believed the aerial craft would start from the vicinity of St. Louis, hover over the Central States until the curiosity of the civilized world was excited, then drop to the ground at Chicago. The letter was laughed at then, but is being thoroughly investigated now.

Reference was made above to the corroborative evidence that had been received from many points regarding observations made Friday night. The statements, condensed from the telegraphic dispatches, are here given:

Max L. Bombar, secretary Chicago Aeronautical Association: "It was an air ship. I know one of the three men who are in it. The ship is the customary inflated gas reservoir, but the inventors have discovered the secret of practical propulsion. They can steer the vessel in any direction. Word reached me several weeks ago that the craft had started from San Francisco and would stop here for the purpose of registration. The object of all the mystery is to arouse great interest in aerial navigation and demonstrate its practicability. The trip is to end at Washington."

Press dispatch from Chicago: The only thing visible about the air-fair was what appeared to be a powerful electric light, sometimes a cluster of them, some green. Gradually the whole city turned out to gaze at the mysterious object that floated far above the lake off the north shore. Sometimes it seemed to move rapidly a short distance, then retrace its steps and then remain stationary for a time. Then it would apparently move slowly in some other direction. The light became intensely brilliant at times, then almost died away. The sight-seers who covered the roofs of the high buildings downtown were certain the strange creation was the airship that has astonished people in Kansas and Iowa.

Press dispatch from Omaha: Several hundred persons in Omaha are prepared to swear that an airship of gigantic proportions has been hovering over their city at night for some time. It has been seen repeatedly. Six months ago it was heard from in the interior of the state, and since that time it has been seen in various parts of Nebraska. During the past two weeks it has appeared almost nightly over this city. Invariably its description has been the same. Still, more persons have observed the great headlight of the machine than have seen the outlines of the vessel, though a great many claim to have caught glimpses of its workings. The general description is this: a long steel body shaped like a cigar, fifty feet long and six to ten feet in diameter, with wing-like attachments on the sides, while fore and aft appear wheel-like connections similar to the steering apparatus of a steamship. The top is capped by a balloon-like bag, though oblong, and seemingly attached to the cigar-shaped vessel by ropes, as the upper part has been observed to sway violently.

Richard Butler, of Wolf Creek Township, Iowa—I was driving home Wednesday night when I observed a light in a field close to the road. I knew no house was there and stopped to investigate. The light had a glow more like that of an electric lamp than the kerosene burners usually employed by the residents of the Wolf Creek district. I was anxious to see a dark mass, through the windows of which the lights shone. It was a long, narrow car, resembling a corset box in shape, but perhaps 30 or 35 feet in length and six or seven feet in width and height. Over the car floated a cigar-shaped bag, horizontally placed, of about the same length as the car and eight or ten feet thick at its greatest diameter. At this moment my horse caught sight of the ship, bolted precipitately for the opposite side of the road and tumbled me into the ditch. By the time I had crawled from the wreck the machine was moving briskly in a southerly direction, and at the same time ascending at an angle of about 45 degrees.

April 11, 1897 St. Louis Post-Dispatch (Sun. morn) p. 2 (card 1)

A Merry Jest

The Moon-Talked-Of Airship Was an April Day Joke of Two Omaha Lads. / Special to the Post-Dispatch.
Omaha, Nebraska, April 10.—The air ship seen Monday night, which created such a sensation here, was a balloon and the guilty men who sent it up were Roy Arnold and Jack Rogers. They are practical jokers and they bought the balloon to send up April First, but it rained that night and so they held it off for a later fly.

They took the balloon Monday night and went over in the hollow back of the State Institute for the Deaf, where they inflated it. Suspended from the balloon was a wicker basket filled with a composition resembling shavings, which they touched off just as it ascended, and this was the light. The balloon struck a current of air that carried it directly over the central portion of the city, and Mr. Arnold says that when they came back everybody was talking of the "air ship."

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

Galesburg, Ill., April 10.—Much excitement was caused here to-night by the mysterious airship sailing over the city. Hundreds of people saw it. It sailed toward Iowa, showed a bright light, and was in sight an hour. It wobbled in its flight.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

Houaquia, Ill., April 10.—Last night between 9 and 10 o'clock the so-called airship was distinctly visible in the northwest from this place. This is no dream or the result of a diseased mind. The color was flaming red and it moved in a westerly direction. V. Snyder, Jr., a leading banker of this city, and several other prominent citizens witnessed this wonderful phenomena and will vouch for these statements.

Red and Green Lights

So It Could Not Have Been a Star, Says a Chicago Witness. Special to the Post-Dispatch.

Chicago, April 10.—It is the people against the scientists in the matter of the air-ship which, it is reported, was visible shortly after 8 o'clock last evening.

On the roof of the Hartford building, in the downtown district, were gathered John Monroe, Night Engineer M. J. Meyer, the elevator man, W. Strain, J. F. McGrath, day engineer and family, together with a number of reporters and tenants.

Miss McGrath says she looked at the object through a strong opera glass, and that it could not have been a star on account of its swaying motion and bright red and green lights. On the other hand, leading Chicago scientists, including Prof. Garrott of the Weather Bureau, are firm in their statement that the phenomenon could not have been an air-ship. M. J. Meyer and others support Miss McGrath's statement. The attention of Chicago people was first called to the matter by numerous telegrams from Evanston, the university suburb.

April 12, 1897 St. Louis Post-Dispatch (Mon. eve) pp. 1, 2 (card 1)

The Airship as it Appears to Some People (cartoon—giant insect watched by people using liquor bottles and glasses as telescopes).

Aerial Wonder Seen in St. Louis.

Crowds in the Extreme West End Watch the Mystery. Moved Steadily Southwest. Skeptics Forced to Believe the Evidence of Their Own Senses and Admit It Was Not a Star.

The mysterious aerial wonder which has been exciting comment all over the Middle West for the past week was seen by a number of St. Louisians Saturday night.

It skirted lazily along the western horizon for half an hour and then disappeared from view as suddenly as it had appeared.

People living in the extreme West End saw it plainly and many of them are ready to agree with observers elsewhere that the mystic bluish white light was not that of a heavenly body, but a signal from some kind of aerial craft.

Most of the observers believe that they saw an airship. They are certain that the light was not that of an ordinary balloon and that the craft to which it was attached was under perfect control.

The first observer of what has been conceded by thousands to be an airship was William Mulhall, a young man living at 504 Minerva ave. Mr. Mulhall was standing at King's highway and Easton avenue about 10 o'clock, when he saw a bright light near the horizon in a south-westerly direction.

He thought at first it was the evening star, but looking a few degrees farther north and higher in the heavens he saw that Venus was still doing business at the same old stand.

His curiosity was aroused and he watched the mystic light closely. It was moving slowly north, apparently in a straight line.

Mr. Mulhall watched the light until he felt certain that he was looking at something out of the ordinary.

He went to R. H. Pardee's drug store at 4966 Easton avenue, and called the attention of George A. Hiles, the Clerk, to the strange light.

The two stood on the pavement looking at the heavenly mystery, and were joined a few minutes later by Druggist Pardee.

The light had been seen by scores of people, and soon there was a crowd on the corner. The peculiar motion of the light, its peculiar color, unlike anything known to astronomy, and its unswerving flight along the horizon caused a great deal of excited comment.

The crowd of wonderers was constantly augmented and all sorts of theories were advanced. Those who at first argued that the light was that of a fixed star were forced to recede from their position by the indisputable evidence of their senses. There were others who thought for a while that the light was that of an ordinary balloon, but before they had watched it long they acknowledged their mistake, for the light was absolutely steady and retained its brightness up to the instant when it suddenly disappeared.

The light was seen not only by the crowd at Easton avenue and King's highway, but by people of undoubted veracity all over the extreme West End.

Children at play saw it, and the cry "balloon, balloon," drew attention of scores of older people to the airship.

John H. Glassmeyer of 4966 Easton Avenue had his attention called to the light by a little girl.

Mrs. Charles Jobb of 5060 Weller avenue saw the light and pointed it out to several of her neighbors.

R. H. Parrier, the druggist at 4998 Easton avenue, said Monday morning that he was confident that he had seen the airship.

"When I first saw the light," he said, "it was southwest of here. It was visible for half an hour and at the end of that time disappeared suddenly, though apparently no farther away than when I first saw it. While visible the lights never varied for an instant. It appeared to me very much like an arc light of great power."

"The airship must have been a great distance away, for we could not distinguish the outlines.

Mr. Mulhall and others in the crowd were certain that the light at times assumed a deep blue tint.

"It was very difficult to tell how fast the light travelled. During the half hour it covered an arc of about 45 degrees. If it was so far away as it seemed to be it must have travelled extremely fast, though apparently it moved along slowly and with absolute precision."

Fifteen workmen at the Lindell Railway /p.2/ car shops, at Park and Vandeventer avenues, also saw the mysterious light Saturday night.

Conductors on the Citizens' line say the light was plainly visible from the western end of the line Saturday night, though it did not make its appearance Sunday night.

Prof. H. P. Pritchett, astronomer of Washington University, was at his telescope Saturday night, but did not see the airship.

Alex told that it had been seen in the West End he said: "Of course I can't question the veracity of the people who say they saw a mysterious light Saturday night. I have seen nothing brighter than Venus. I will keep a sharp lookout, however. It would be possible for such a light to float along close to the horizon without being seen by our telescope, as our observatory is very low and the smoky atmosphere prevents us from making observations below an elevation of 30 degrees."

There is no doubt from the testimony of all the witnesses that the mysterious light was below the 30 degree elevation. The country in that part of the city from which the views were obtained is open and favorable to such observations.

Passed Over Chillicothe. Chillicothe, Mo., April 12.—Many Chillicothe people last night saw what is supposed to have been a mysterious airship. A bright white light, apparently about the size of a headlight passed over the north part of the city and went west. The hull of the ship was not visible.

1897 April 13 (Tues) St. Louis Post-Dispatch, p. 1,2 (card 1)

AIR SHIP SEEN / Thousands of St. Louisians Excited Over the Aerial Visitor. / SEARCHLIGHT FLASHED TOWARD THE EARTH FOR AN HOUR MONDAY NIGHT. / Noise of Machinery Heard and Outlines of the Craft Visible. / TESTIMONY OF MANY CITIZENS REGARDING THE MYSTERIOUS VISITOR. / University Professors Confess They Are Puzzled by the Appearance. / Outpouring of Men, Women and Children Expected Tuesday Night When the Heavens Will be Watched From Points of Vantage. /

The airship has arrived at St. Louis and is supposed to be anchored or drifting somewhere above the clouds in this vicinity. This statement is vouched for by thousands who saw the mysterious visitor Monday evening.

If not an airship, what is it? Everybody asks and there is no answer.

At 7:30 o'clock Monday evening persons looking in a northwest direction saw a peculiar-shaped object push through the clouds at an elevation of about 25 degrees. From the point or bow of this object emanated a strong light that greatly resembled a powerful electric searchlight. This wave of brilliancy swayed back and forth; it was as if aerial navigators were sweeping the earth's surface with the xxx rays much as men-of-war throw the revolving lights from on board ships to every point of the compass in order to sight any torpedo boats that might be lurking in their vicinity.

This light shone forth for fully ten minutes, then suddenly disappeared as if an electric current had been turned off. It was not an obscuration by clouds. Many of those who witnessed the phenomenon for the nonce no better word can be used—aver they saw the shadowy form of what appeared to be a peculiarly shaped ship. One man described it as resembling a whaleback; others said it was more perfectly cigar-shaped.

The above description is given after conversation with scores of men who witnessed the strange sight.

Manager Weaver entertained a party on the roof of the Planters'. Most of them were commercial travelers. They at once suggested it was some advertising scheme, but how it was worked mystified them. They recalled the talk of a year ago, when a prominent manufacturer tried to throw the names of his goods by a powerful stereopticon on the clouds. These Planters' Hotel observers admit the light came from above and not from below.

H.C. Frankenfield, local forecast official, saw the bright light while walking home. Looking at it with his practical eye he soliloquized: "It is Venus; that is the light all have seen."

Tuesday morning when Mr. Frankenfield opened his xxx books and ascertained the exact position of Venus he admitted he might have been mistaken.

"It is no joking matter," said he to a Post-Dispatch reporter. "Science has taken such strides of late that nothing should surprise us. There is some mystery afloat, and I am as much puzzled as any one."

The light was observed from the Century building and from the Union Trust; it was seen by thousands who gathered in groups on street corners.

The negroes are much excited by the strange aerial apparition. They say it portends dire disaster and hundreds of them could be heard discussing the strange visitor as they gathered on lower Morgan street Monday night.

The bright light which first aroused attention was seen xxx at 7:30 o'clock, and was observed for 10 minutes. Half an hour later it reappeared, but was further distant from the earth. Passengers on a Lindell Railway car had a good view at the hour just before the car reached the Eighteenth street bridge. The conductor, P.E. Cleary, thus describes the phenomenon: "The light was in the west, and moved toward the north. It resembled a street car headlight. At times it disappeared behind the clouds."

Several persons employed at Forest Park Station, of the Lindell Railway saw the object. Charles Snyder, one of them, said it passed over the park about 8 o'clock. The outlines of the craft were not distinctly, but the light was brilliant.

There were a number of observers at Union station and from an altitude above the carshed a good view was obtained. From this point the effect of red and green lights was distinctly visible. H.E. King, commercial agent of the Mexican Central Railway, vouches for this statement. Station Master Coakley also was a witness of the phenomenon. At the same time it was seen in a different part of the city by V.S. Simpson, President of the Christopher-Simpson Iron Company, from the vicinity of Lafayette Park.

This description of different colored lights tallies with what was seen in many states of the Central West, as reported by telegraph in Saturday's Post-Dispatch.

It would seem from this the aerial visitor is familiar with maritime law. This code of the high seas provides that all steamships and sailing vessels shall carry three lights, one of white on the forestay, 100 feet from the water line, one of red on the starboard side, and one of green on the port.

Close observers of the airship declare her lights to be similarly arranged.

Prof. Henry S. Pritchett, astronomer of Washington University, Tuesday questioned a number of persons who had seen the light.

"I cannot account for the strange appearance," he said. "I intended making observations last night, but was deterred by the heavy rain."

"Do I think it was an airship? I would rather not answer that question. I simply do not know what to think. The testimony comes from too many xxx persons and from too many different points to be discredited. I shall be on watch to-night at the observatory, St. Charles and Eighteenth street, from 7:30 until 10 o'clock and if the strange visitor makes its appearance again we will see what a powerful telescope will reveal."

Prof. Pritchett was asked what point aerial navigation has reached "The best apparatus so far created," he replied, "has been made by Prof. Langley of the Smithsonian Institution. He has been able to carry a man several hundred feet in air by means of a flying machine."

"If reports of this aerial visitor are correct the airship that now hovers xxx above St. Louis is under perfect control."

"Would it not be wonderful," he continued, "if this great problem had been solved, and the man who has been fortunate enough to overcome the laws of gravitation is mythifying the entire world before he makes public his secret? As I said last Saturday it would be human nature for him to do so."

There is a man of science, an electrician, recently from New York, who believes the aerial visitor to be an airship that was launched near Oakland, Cal. He is Prof. M.S. Koenig, of 2622 1/2 Olive street.

"I do not wish to give names," said Prof. Koenig Tuesday morning, "but a year ago I heard from several electricians that a workman in one of Edison's laboratories had discovered a process by which the laws of gravitation could be overcome. This man subsequently left Edison's employ and experimented for himself. Later I heard of him as being in San Francisco, and it was said that he was working on an airship."

"So far as I could learn he had discovered a new electrical current. The study of electricity, you know, is in its infancy, and new elements are being met every day. As I understand it, this man found that by passing a certain current through a plate of sheet iron, the attraction of gravitation was neutralized. Therefore, should this electrolyzed plate be suspended beneath any object, such object would float as it is ether."

"Of course this sounds remarkable, but if there is an airship proving above the clouds, I firmly believe it is engineered in some such manner."

To say that all St. Louis is excited at what has been seen and at the many stories that are current is using a mild expression and through the entire United States the subject is more discussed to-day than the gathering of war hosts in Macedonia.

Many remember the stories current about the attempt to signal Mars and the question often asked is: "Can it be possible that this airship is a visitor from that planet?"

There will be crowds at Forest Park Tuesday night and other crowds at points of elevation in and about St. Louis. Small telescopes and opera glasses will be in demand, and between 7 and 10 o'clock a hundred thousand eyes will watch the western and ~~xxx~~ northern sky from zenith to horizon in an effort to solve the mystery.

At the same time university professors will bring their telescopes to bear. Not only will this be the case in St. Louis, but in nearby towns as well, and operators in Western Union and ~~xxx~~ Postal telegraph offices have been asked by the St. Louis chiefs to report anything unusual observed in the heavens.

As the hours of Tuesday morning passed Post-Dispatch reporters obtained further corroboration of the mysterious sight that caused such excitement Monday night.

The most startling testimony is that given by Ed Dillon, a conductor on the Union Depot line.

"When west of Tower Grove Park on Arsenal street Monday night at 8 o'clock," said Dillon, "I saw a great light above me that resembled a falling meteor. It was coming directly toward me, so I thought, and you can bet I was frightened. But after dipping down it rose again and disappeared behind the clouds. I saw distinctly the outlines of what appeared to be a small vessel and I heard the rustle of machinery."

Dillon's story is corroborated by John Rice, motormeer of the car. William Alexander, John McFarland and John Bell, employees of the Union Depot line, also saw the ship.

Chief of Detectives Desmond is another person who viewed the mysterious light.

About 8:30 Monday evening a great many people in Belleville saw a moving light in the western sky, which they are positive was the mysterious airship. It moved in a northerly direction, rising and falling. After being in sight about twenty minutes it disappeared as suddenly as if it had been snuffed out. A number of persons about the public square saw it, and are certain it was not a star. Considerable excitement was caused by the appearance of the strange visitor.

The mysterious light was watched by a Post-Dispatch reporter. With him at the time was Frank Benish, 3320 A California avenue, and the observation was made from that house. This is what was seen:

Above 7:30 o'clock while the clouds were still ~~xxxxx~~ heavy, a luminous spot, like the glow of a light behind the clouds, appeared a little north of west, and about 30 degrees above the horizon.

The spot was stationary for nearly five minutes, then moved slowly southward and ~~xxxxx~~ upwards.

Five minutes after it first appeared the spot grew larger, as if the light behind the clouds was approaching the observers rapidly.

Suddenly rays like those of an arc light in a fog shot through the cloud and a second later what appeared to be a powerful search light was visible.

It was not a mere point of light like that of a star. Its circular shape was plainly discernible. For four minutes there was no evidence of motion. Then the light swerved to the south about ten degrees traveling apparently very rapidly. The motion of the searchlight as it was turned from side to side was easily followed. The light would be turned full on toward the observer, then it would be turned away, growing fainter as the angle was increased. Once, for an instant, the light disappeared, but its reflection could be seen on the clouds in the west.

Not a star was visible for fifteen minutes after the ~~x~~ light appeared. When the clouds ~~x~~ cleared it was seen that Venus the evening star, was about ten degrees south and fifteen degrees east of the mysterious light.

The aerial mystery, after traveling south for awhile, turned north and descended rapidly, disappearing behind a house opposite the observers.

Salisbury Sees It. / Special to the Post-Dispatch.

SALISBURY, Mo., April 13.--Until 8 o'clock last night people in this vicinity were skeptical in regard to the much talked of air ship, but at that hour it was seen by a number of citizens. It appeared to be a few miles northwest of town and, after apparently striving to go against the wind for a few miles, it turned abruptly and shot into space in a northeastern direction. There was a large light below and a small one above the front end and a black band was plainly visible around the central part.

Had White and Green Lights. / Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CARLINVILLE, Ill., April 13.--Much consternation was caused in the northern part of this (Macoupin) county by a floating aerial object early last night. The object seemed to be ~~xxxxx~~ about 10,000 feet in the air and was moving at a very rapid rate. It carried white and green lights and many declared it to be the much talked of air ship.

1897 April 13 (Tues) St. Joseph, Mo., Daily Herald, p. 5.

NAVIGATOR OF THE AIRSHIP / Alights at Maysville, But Becomes Disgusted, and Sails Away.

Maysville, Mo., April 12.--(Special to The Herald.)--At 10:30 p.m. those of our citizens who had any doubts as to the reality of the airship had them removed in a very short time. If the fake story from Bethany had any truth in it there are, or were, two of these mysterious craft.

At about 10 p.m. a faint gleaming light appeared on the northeastern horizon. It swept rapidly forward, pursuing a direct southwesterly course directly over the town. When near the city's northern limits the ship seemed about 300 feet from the earth, and after reaching a point nearly over the court house began to descend rapidly, and came to the ground in a vacant lot north of United States Marshall Crenshaw's home. The machine floated easily to the ground and was soon surrounded by nearly the whole population of our little city.

There was only one man on board, who appeared to be a Norwegian, from the appearance of the equipment of the ship and from the earnestness and veneration of the Scandinavian oaths which fairly poured from his lips as he hammered at a peculiar little contrivance on one of the long gill like flanges on top of the rear portion of the ship.

The air navigator seemed to be utterly disgusted with having to alight and was not in a conversational mood and nothing was learned from him.

All that could be seen about the ~~x~~ little air vessel was an apparently Danish inscription—no one here being able to translate it.

In thirty minutes everything seemed to be repaired and the mysterious visitor was gone. The crowd is dispersing. Great excitement prevails. 11 p.m.

1897 April 14 (Wed) St. Louis Post-Dispatch, p. 7. (card 1)

GIRARD VIEWS THE AIRSHIP. / SEVERAL MEN CLAIM IT ALIGHTED NEAR THAT PLACE. / ST. LOUISIANS DISAPPOINTED. / Thousands Gazed Anxiously Skyward Last Night, but Saw Naught Save Clouds. /

Probably half the inhabitants of St. Louis glanced skyward, north, south, east and west Tuesday night hoping to see the strange light that has mystified the denizens of the Central West for a fortnight. But they saw nothing save dull heavy clouds that obscured the moon and stars and through this canopy of moisture no aerial visitor thrust its prow.

Men of science were on the alert also, and at Washington University Observatory the large telescope was ready to turn to that part of the heavens where any phenomenon might be seen.

The mystery deepens. Thought the majority ridicule the idea that anything beyond the natural has been seen, yet the thousands who viewed that strange light Monday night are as strong as ever in their faith that something has happened above the clouds that man has not yet accounted for, and they become indignant when their word is questioned.

There is hardly an establishment down town but has one or two employes who witnessed the aerial visitor Monday. They were all on the lookout Tuesday night and saw nothing. Perhaps this non-appearance is explained by the following special dispatch received Wednesday morning from Girard, Ill.:

"The airship was distinctly seen here last night by P.E. McCraner, William Street, Frank Metcalf and Ed Steeples. McCraner is night operator at this place and when he came on duty at 6 o'clock the operator at Carlinville called him up, said the airship had passed over Carlinville in the direction of Girard and ~~x~~ advised him to be on the lookout.

"McCraner stepped outside and fifteen minutes later saw what he believed was the airship passing over this town in the direction of Norwood. It was rapidly approaching the ground. McCraner asked the day operator to hold the wire for him and calling to Street, Metcalf and Steeples, who were standing near, he started on the run down the railroad track, they following. As they went they saw the strange craft drop to the ground behind a clump of trees about a quarter of a mile distant. Before they could reach the spot the ship was seen to rise, ascend to a great height and disappear to the north. They were so near where it rose they could see persons in the boat and could also distinguish a large letter 'M' on the side. All the men agree the craft was cigar shaped and had oars or wings extended.

"They continued on to the spot where it had alighted, and saw distinctly the imprint of a man's feet. Their footprints did not lead anywhere and it was evident they were made by someone who had jumped out of the ship to repair some of the machinery on the outside.

"McCraner says he is willing to make affidavit to the above statements. When he returned to the wire he told operators up and down the line what he had seen.

"He repeated the story in full this morning to the Post-Dispatch correspondent."

A reporter for the Post-Dispatch called at the Western Union telegraph office in St. Louis Wednesday morning and asked Day Chief ~~xxx~~ Spencer about McCraner.

"He is our night operator at Girard," Mr. Spencer replied, "and is thoroughly reliable. He has worked for us some time. Yes, we have heard what he saw yesterday evening and it is the talk of the office. The matter is beyond my comprehension."

A dispatch from Carlinville says the airship passed over that place Tuesday evening and was seen by hundreds. It was also seen at Sherman and Williamsville.

Samuel Marsden thinks the strange light is that shed by Venus. He writes the Post-Dispatch under date of April 13:

"My attention was called to the 'flying machine' last evening. At first I concluded that it was the planet Venus, shining brilliantly through a rift in the clouds, but it changed its apparent size so I ran to get a view with my telescope, and found, without a question of a ~~xxxx~~ doubt, it to be as I had anticipated. I also noticed beyond the heavy clouds through the rift a number of fleecy clouds in rapid motion. They not only distorted the image of Venus, but caused the appearance of Venus in motion in the same manner that a number of Small clouds passing rapidly over the moon causes her to appear in motion." /

Had People on It. / Special to the Post-Dispatch. PERRY, O.T., April 14.--The airship, which has created so much excitement and concern in Nebraska, has made its appearance in Oklahoma. Hundreds of people declare that they have seen it in the past few days. It has been seen here by fifty people in the past two nights and is creating no little excitement. Five days ago it was seen by a dozen men at Guthrie, and two days before at South McAlester.

Col. Yates, a newspaper editor of this place says he saw it, and it seemed to be nearly a hundred feet long and about one-fourth (?) as wide. He said it went through the air toward the north, and the light, which would shine and disappear, resembled a flashlight or a lightning bug. He also says he saw persons inside the machine. Four others were with Editor Yates at the time.

1897 April 14 (Sat) St. Joseph Daily Herald, p. 7.

AIRSHIPS ARE NOT PERFECTED. / That They Will be in Time is Not Doubted Editor Herald:

Sir--I have been much amused in reading accounts of airships in different parts of my own state and in Nebraska, as reported by correspondents of local journals. At one time it is flying over Omaha, at another over Lincoln, and many times it is seen at different places at about the same time. It is always in the night. Have we scores of inventors among us who have invented an airship--even on a small scale--that is really capable of sailing in, or through, the air, and no one knows who, or where they are? There are scores of smart Alects living in the above places, who will smile as they read this, knowing how completely they have fooled the people with a little horse-made "gas" and more greased silk. Everyone knows, or ought to know, that an airship is too difficult to construct to be made in such vast numbers, and no one knows anything about it. That an airship will be made that will navigate the air successfully as ships navigate the water, I have not the least doubt. But it is not yet. Gas is lighter than air. The balloon is the result of this fact; this will lead some ingenious person to apply other qualities--such as locomotion, air guiding, ascending and descending, which will nearly prove successful. Another will add the finishing touch, and then they will be able to answer the prophet's question: "Who are those that fly as the clouds and as the doves to their windows?" They will not be able to start, loaded, from the ground, but their stations will be elevated to meet the demands of the law of gravitation. They will be built so that a high rate of speed will tend to bear them up, and this will, in a measure, overcome the weight of the car and its passengers. I think that wings, worked by heated air, or ~~xxx~~ electricity, will be the propelling power. Wings made upon the principal of a feather, stiff at the points, but very pliable at the ends, curving downward, so that an upward stroke will give momentum, and a downward stroke will give both momentum and a lifting power, which will also keep the ship aloft. These principles are as essential to the successful airship--that will be--as impenetrability and extension are to matter. Anything in motion veers, relatively, less, but absolutely the same, for motion does not destroy gravity, it simply overcomes it. This is proven by the gyroscope, which, when made to revolve on an axis fastened at opposite ends from the wheel, the axis taking a horizontal position, while the wheel moves around the frame; when the motion is diminished to a certain number of revolutions the wheel is drawn toward the earth. While this is rotary motion, yet, it proves that motion does overcome gravity, and, when philosophically applied to an airship, will lessen the force of gravitation.

A.B. ALLESTON.

1897 April 15 (Th) Moberly, Mo., Daily Monitor, p. 2.

THE AIRSHIP DELUSION.

The air ship or mysterious light at night has been seen in reality or in hallucination by above a hundred persons in Moberly, all of them cannot be carrying out a hoax to have a little fame, neither can all of them be fuddled or mistaken in vision. It is not an airship, or balloon it is a light, all agree, but what kind of a light, there's the rub. One man who saw it last night says its a red light like a ball of hot iron, and claims it is the old time Jack-o-Lantern, told of to children by the negroes fifty years ago. Jack-o-Lanterns were supposed to come out of low, damp grounds, creek or river bottom, in the shape of a ball of fire and move along ahead of the observer, bouncing over low bushes and under the lower limbs of the trees, not passing swiftly, but would always elude the pursuer, if he traveled rapidly so would the light. Negroes would not follow one of the lights, as it was supposed to lure the victim to an inextricable jungle ~~xxx~~ where he would either drown in the bog or perish in the fastness of the undergrowth.

1897 April 15 (Th) Moberly, Mo., Daily Monitor, p. 4. (card 1)

A PHENOMENAL WONDER. / As Seen Here Last Night.--The Air-Ship a Reality. Our People Saw It. / (picture of an aerostat balloon)

We have read in the metropolitan and other papers of the West that an Air Ship was sailing over that section of the country. We were some what doubtful of the existence of such an occurrence at the time, but recent developments has convinced us that wonders are not yet at an end.

Last night about 11:30 it was seen to pass over this city. The sky was perfectly clear, stars shining brightly and a brilliant moon in the southern heavens to help to illustrate our subject to the best advantage. It appeared to be about one mile high and judging from that altitude it was about fifty feet long, looked like a ship and appeared to have lights in every window like a railway car, with a very strong light in front probably electric; it was rigged with an enormous rudder and equally large steering apparatus, made of canvas or other light material, and was headed in a Southerly direction.

At least twenty people saw the phenomenon as it vere and vere spell-bound with astonishment. Among the lucky and bewildered spectators were Sam Lehman, Gus Vromholt, George Gutekunst, Officers Charley & Quayle and Ed. Reggsdale, John Alderson of the Florence Hotel, Ed. Short Engineer Wm. Ross saw it for twenty-five miles while on his engine, J. W. Brooks, Julius Lotter, Geo. Miller, D.W. Newton, Chas. Forsley and other well known gentlemen of undoubted veracity also saw it.

The vessel appeared to be encompassed in a luminous vapor or halo and glided with the ease of a bird and made some graceful evolutions in the air without getting out of its Southern course--to say the beholders were astonished is putting it mildly. All this hush about visitors from other planets will only bewilder the minds of those who are not posted or initiated into the mysteries of cause and effects, natural philosophy or planetary influence. Anybody who knows anything about astronomy knows that anything coming within the earths attraction will hit it with the force of a cannon ball and will get red hot before it ~~strikes~~ hits the earths surface. Such as in the case of meteor aerolites, etc.,--even melting iron and other mineral substances they are composed of. No! You can bet all your friends money that Air Ship belongs to this terrestrial planet and the occupants ingenious, intelligent and mortal.

The idea of aerial navigation is not new, there are patents in the Washington patent office now to the amount of at least 1,000 in that direction. You will say, why are they not put into practical use? because the inventors being mostly poor were not able to build a full sized machine and the general public did not think such a thing was practicable, and the inventor possibly a crank. Oh! yes, all men of new theories are called "cranks." So was Gillileo, who was beheaded and was called a crank when he said the earth was round. Franklin was called a crank when he was flying a kite when he discovered electricity. Morse was called a crank when he was experimenting on electricity by wire. Fulton no doubt was called a crank when he was trying to build a steamboat. Even the famous wizard, Edison, might have been called a crank in the earlier part of his struggles for recognition. I know when Mr. Westinghouse tried his hardest to borrow $500 from Mr. Keene, the actor, to put his air brake before the railway magnets. Others without number can be mentioned that I cannot at present recall

K. F. ELI.

1897 April 16 (Fri eve) St. Louis Post-Dispatch, p. 1, 2. (card 1)

AIRSHIP VIEWED BY TELESCOPE. / DR. LEO CHAPLAN WATCHED THE AERIAL VISITOR. / DISTINCTLY SAW THE CAR. / Thousand of St. Louisans Observed the Mysterious Light Again Thursday Night.

The airship visited St. Louis again Thursday night. This time the bright searchlight was not only seen by thousands but the object was observed through a telescope and the outlines of the craft were seen.

The person who caught this excellent view of the strange visitor and brought it near the earth by means of a powerful lens is Dr. Leo Chaplan, the throat, eye and ear specialist, residence 1194 Washington avenue and office at 500 North Jefferson avenue.

Dr. Chaplan is one of the leading men in his profession. He is respected by all who know him and his word is to be implicitly relied on.

Dr. Chaplan is a dabbler in astronomy and frequently gazes at the heavenly bodies. He knows that he did not see a star. What he did see was thus related by him to a Post-Dispatch reporter Friday morning:

"I was walking to my home on Washington avenue last night about 7:45, and had just turned from Garrison avenue, when I saw a bright light almost overhead. It was northwest of the zenith. I had read the various stories in the Post-Dispatch concerning the airship, and although I was astonished at the mass of evidence that had been adduced, yet I believed the persons had labored under an optical illusion.

"But the moment I saw this light I realized it was something unusual and I hastened home, ran to the roof and brought my telescope to bear on the object. Before taking a sight I noticed the light was swaying from side to side. The effect was exactly that of a searchlight that was being manipulated.

"The moment I looked through the glass I discovered a long black body behind the light. It was exactly the cigar shape that has been described.

"I thought something must be the matter with the lens and I turned the ~~xxx~~ telescope on different stars and planets. There was no unusual effect evident and I brought the glass to bear again on the mysterious visitor. At first I could not locate the light, then I found that it had moved several degrees to the north. When I caught it again I once more made out the cigar-shaped craft.

"The airship--for I am now convinced it was such--moved over considerable space in five minutes, and I followed it all the time. It took a northwesterly course, then veered to West and finally to North. Then it darted off in that direction and was lost to sight. I had the light in view fully ten minutes from the time I first saw it on the street."

"Are you certain it was an airship?" the physician was asked. "Yes sir, positive. As positive as I can be of anything in this world."

"It could not have been a star?" "No sir. I looked at Venus, at Sirius and other bright stars several time, then back /p.2/ at the mysterious object. Besides, through my glass the object behind the light was distinctly visible."

Dr. Chaplan told his remarkable experience to several acquaintances Thursday night and Friday morning his home was besieged by callers. Among them were a number of scientific men who closely questioned him and all left the Washington avenue residence wondering what the strange visitor could be and convinced there is something unusual hovering among the clouds.

The light was not only seen by the physician but by thousands of St. Louis, Mo., who were gazing upward at that time, but he was the only one so far as has been heard who was fortunate enough to have had a telescope at hand.

A column of the Post-Dispatch could be filled with names of persons who viewed the phenomenon. All say it is no longer a laughing matter and all are anxious for an explanation.

SEEN AT BISMARCK.

This Airship Had Beautiful Lights and Moved Rapidly. / Special to the Post-Dispatch.

BISMARCK, Mo., April 16.--From 8:10 until 8:35 o'clock last evening the airship was seen from this point. It appeared, when first seen by Mr. George Clarkson, to be about 2,000 feet high in a direct western direction, traveling in a northern direction, passing below the horizon about 15 degrees west of north. The lights were large and beautiful, showing quite as large as an engine headlight, with about one-eighth of the luminous body showing red. Its course was oscillating at times showing a rapid descent, followed by a quick rise. Many prominent people assembled on the streets and viewed the great puzzle in wonderment.

In Tennessee and Kentucky.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., April 16.--Three dispatches received by the ~~xxxx~~ Banner this morning from Clarksville, Tenn., Allensville, Ky., and Russellville, Ky., all report that the mysterious airship passed over those places last night. In each instance the wonder is said to have been ~~xxxx~~ witnessed by reputable citizens. The ship is described as a huge, long, dark object, with a headlight.

This One a Fake.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WATERLOO, Ia., April 16.--This city has been worked up to-day by the ~~xxxx~~ arrival of an airship, which anchored outside of town. It is a cleverly constructed fake about 40 feet long and 20 feet wide and 12 feet high, built up by a practical joker during the past week and brought out last night, a man from town 100 miles distant attending it. Ninety per cent of the people believe it real. Fully 5,000 people have ~~xxxx~~ visited it to-day.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Noberly, Mo., Daily Monitor, p. 4.

Let Us Have a Telescope.

The popular wave of excitement created by the mythical "air ship" discloses the fact that our people, even the best informed and the most intelligent of us, are lamentably ignorant of even the rudiments of astronomy. There is likely no other community of ten thousand people who know as little of the planetary system as this. It is not because we are not well informed generally and mentally capable, but simply because ~~we xxx~~ our attention has not been directed to the heavenly bodies, and because we have no facilities for their study. It was amusing to hear the comments made upon the brilliant planet seen in the west last night. To some it was undoubtedly the "air ship"--others said it was an advertising scheme, while the wiseacres said it was Mars Jupiter or the Major Urea, &c. As a matter of fact the brilliant visitor was Venus, now close to the earth, very brilliant and soon passing below the horizon, thus creating the impression of an artificial body.

The Monitor has a suggestion to make. Let the High School take the matter up, and by a series of entertainments raise a fund for the purchase of a telescope. Many educational institutions have purchased new telescopes, and their old ones are for sale cheap. In looking over a scientific journal we may find many good instruments offered for sale ~~xxxxxxx~~ very cheap. Then, with the aid of a telescope, let the study of astronomy be taken up. A new world will be opened up to us, and the heavens will no longer be a beautiful mystery.

1897 April 16 (Sun) Sedalia (Mo.) Sunday Democrat, p. 1. (card 1)

UP IN THE CLOUDS. / An Airship Story for Your Whiskers, This One Is. / It Wins the Blue Ribbon. / A Trip from Maine to the Pacific Ocean in the Interest of Setting Cuba Free. /

Of all the airship stories that have appeared in the public prints in the past few days the following sent to the Democrat through the Sedalia postoffice is entitled to the blue ribbon as it is probably as well authenticated as the others. The communication entire follows. To the Editor of the Democrat.

Passing along the M.K.&T. railroad track, just north of Sedalia, I picked up a piece of thin, gauzy paper which I had observed falling from a vast height. I send you a copy of its contents for what it is worth. John Jacobsen. /

Above the Clouds, April 16, 1897.--Unknown Senator: Glory to God in the highest! Peace and liberty to Cuba. The grand test has been made. It proves the most glorious success of the century. Our great airship is to the heavens what a great steamship is on the sea. Specific gravity is a misnomer. Gravitation is unknown ten miles above this earth. The force there is repellant, otherwise all living things would be in a single day destroyed by the vast fall of indubious matter.

We have sailed from the woods of Maine to the Pacific and back in three days. We have been 500 miles above the earth. Our room is impervious to heat or cold. We make our own oxygen.

Now, I, the inventor, am a Cuban. My ship is devoted to her cause. Loaded with dynamite and the deadliest explosives known, very soon we will anchor over Havana. Weyler must surrender or die. Havana will be ours or there will be no Havana.

Cuba free, then accursed Spain, we will pour upon you, like the wrath of God, the contents of this ship. We will avenge a thousandfold every murder you have gloried in. The name of Spain shall be blotted out. In the name of four hundred years of bloody despotism we hereby devote you to the infernal gods. / Don Alvarado Ouevada.

101
B.B.--Let the cold blooded tyrants of all the earth rage! France, the United States, the base, cowardly "great republic" who slew and sees his neighbors murdered in silence, we defy you. We can crush you in a day. Next to Jehovah, I am the earth's destiny, the arbiter of its fate! Glorious Greece! Land of gods and godlike men. The glories of your past illumine still your Olympus. Once more shall you lead the world to glory. A compatriot greater than all Europe will soon be with you. We will repudiate a religion that aids its foes to destroy us. Musselman robber, fly to your Christian or Tartar allies. The city of Constantine shall once more be the capital of Greece. Once more Jupiter shall thunder from Olympus and love and happiness take the place of deathheads and crossbones. / A. 1897 April 19 (Mon.) St. Louis Post-Dispatch, p. 1. (card 1)

GOLDEN HAired GIRL IS IN IT. / THE AIRSHIP DISCOVERED IN SOUTHWEST MISSOURI. / WHAT HOPKINS SAYS HE SAW. / He is an Elderly Christian Gentleman and His Friends Say He is Perfectly Reliable. /

In the mass of evidence which has reached the Post-Dispatch concerning the ~~xxx~~ existence of an airship that is said to be floating over the Central West, the most astonishing is that furnished by Mr. W.H. Hopkins, general traveling agent for the Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company.

Mr. Hopkins writes the Post-Dispatch that on Friday he saw the airship a few miles away from Springfield, Mo. Not only did he see the craft, but he saw the aerial navigators, and conversed with them.

The letter is not a hoax. It is in Mr. Hopkins' handwriting, so those employed at the headquarters of the Hartford company, 517 Security Building, aver. It was also identified by his wife, who lives at 5028 Minerva avenue. Mr. Hopkins is 50 years of age, and is well-known in the West End. He is a prominent church member, and everybody spoken to vouches for his veracity. The letter is here given:

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Till yesterday I had supposed the numerous reports of the appearance of a mysterious airship in the different parts of the country (in many instances widely separated) at nearly the same hour, were but the result of very vivid imaginations.

I thought the first report of an airship was started by some Munchausen of the press to gratify some mischievous whim and to see how many imaginative people would fall in line and claim--honestly of course--that they had seen it also. My impression was strengthened by my own experience a few days ago, when in Kansas City a friend and myself thought we saw a bright light in the heavens, which frequently disappeared and then reappeared again, but which we afterwards found was the evening star, which was intensely bright, but which was occasionally obscured by light clouds of steam, which were not visible to us in the darkness.

But after my adventure of yesterday my doubts of the reality of the air ship have been dispelled. I was wandering through hills east of Springfield, Mo., and coming to the brow of a hill overlooking a small clearing in the valley a short distance below me I saw a light that rooted me to the spot with amazement for some time. I could not believe my eyes at first, and shook myself to see if I was not dreaming. There in the clearing reared a vessel similar in outline to the air ship shown in the Post-Dispatch of a few days ago, and said to have been taken in Illinois.

As the sun shone upon it the rays were reflected as from burnished aluminum. It rested upon four legs or supports, which raised it from the ground sufficiently to give room for two wheels like the propeller of a ship lying horizontally; one at the bow and one near the stern. Another at the stern lying perpendicularly was evidently for the purpose of propelling the vessel ahead, while the ~~xxxx~~ other two raised the vessel. The vessel itself was about twenty feet long and eight feet in diameter and the propellers about six feet in diameter.

Near the vessel was the most beautiful being I ever beheld. She was rather under medium size, but of the most exquisite form and features such as would put to shame the forms as sculptured by the ancient Greeks. She was dressed in anature's garb and her golden hair, wavy and glossy, hung to her waist, unconfined excepting by a band of glittering jewels that bound it back from her forehead. The jewels threw out rays of light as she moved her head. She was plucking the little flowers that were just blossoming from the sod, with exclamations of delight and in a language I could not understand. Her voice was like low, silvery bells and her laughter rang out like their chimes. In one hand she carried a fan of curious design that she fanned herself vigorously with, though to me the air was not warm and I wore an overcoat.

In the shade of the vessel lay a man of noble proportions and majestic countenance. His hair of dark auburn fell to his shoulders in wavy masses and his full beard of the same color, but lighter in shade, reached to his breast. He also was fanning himself with a curious fan as if the heat oppressed him.

As I looked with astonishment on the picture, I wondered if Adam and Eve had come to earth again, or was I dreaming? After gazing for a while I moved forward, and the woman, hearing the rustle of leaves, looked around. A moment she stood looking at me with wonder and astonishment in her beautiful blue eyes, then, with a shriek of fear, she rushed to the man, who sprung to his feet, threw his arm around her and glared at me in a threatening manner.

I stopped and, taking my handkerchief from my pocket, waved it in the air. A few minutes we stood. I then spoke some words of apology for intruding, but he seemed not to understand, and replied in a threatening tone and words which I could not make out. I tried by signs to make him understand, and finally he left her, trembling and trying to hold his back, and came ~~xxxxxx~~ toward me. I extended my hand. He looked at it a moment, astonishment depicted in his dark-brown eyes, and finally he extended his own and touched mine. I took his and carried it to my lips. I tried by signs to make them understand I meant no harm. Finally his face lighted up with pleasure, and he turned and spoke to the woman. She came hesitatingly forward, her form undulating with exquisite grace. I took her hand and kissed it fervently. The color rose to her cheeks and she drew it hastily away. I asked them by signs where they came from, but it was difficult to make them understand. Finally they seemed to do so and smiling they gazed upwards for a moment, as if looking for some particular point, and then pointed upwards, pronouncing a word which, to my imagination, sounded like Mara.

I pointed to the ship and expressed my wonder in my countenance. He took me by the hand and led me towards it. In the side was a small door. I looked in. There was a luxurious couch covered with robes of most beautiful stuff and texture, such as I had never seen before. From the ceiling was suspended a curious ball, from which extended a strip of metal, which he struck to make it vibrate. Instantly the ball was illuminated with a soft, white light, which lit up the whole interior. It was most beautifully decorated with scenes such as I had never seen before.

At the stern was another large ball of metal, supported in a strong frame-work and connected to the shaft of the propeller at the stern was (a) similar mechanism attached to each propeller and smaller balls attached to a point of metal that extended from each side of the vessel and from the prow. And connected to each ball was a thin strip of metal similar to the one attached to the lamp. He struck each one and when they vibrated the balls commenced to revolve with intense rapidity, and did not cease till he stopped them with a kind of brake. As they revolved intense lights, stronger than any sunlight I ever saw, shone out from the points at the sides and at the prow, but they were of different colors. The one at the prow was an intense white light. On one side was green and the other red.

The two had been examining me with the greatest curiosity in the meantime. They felt of my clothing, looked at my gray hair with surprise and examined my watch with the greatest wonder. Signs are poor medium to exchange ideas and therefore we could express but little.

I pointed to the balls attached to the propellers. He gave each of the strips of metal a rap, those attached to the propellers under the vessel first. The balls began to revolve rapidly, and I felt the vessel begin to rise, and I sprang out, and none too soon, for the vessel rose as lightly as a bird, and shot away like an arrow, and in a few minutes was out of sight. The two stood laughing and waving their hands to me, a vision of loveliness and he of manly vigor.

Probably people will ask as they did of the farmer in Iowa: "Where did you get your whisky?" But I can say if I ever drank liquor I would go immediately and get some more of the whisky.

If you wish to learn anything more particularly regarding my experience my address is 517 Security Building, St. Louis.

W.H. HOPKINS / Muskogee, I.T., April 17, 1897.

The above letter was taken to 517 Security Building, which proved to be the St. Louis office of the Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance Co., and was shown to C.C. Gardner, the manager. He read it through carefully.

"This is wonderful," he said. "That is /p.2/ Mr. Hopkins' handwriting and he is now in that territory. He was also at Springfield on the day named. He is travelling agent for the Company."

"Do you believe what he says?"

"Indeed I do. Strange as it seems I am compelled to believe it. Mr. Hopkins is not a romancer. He never courts notoriety. What he writes he has seen and he believes it his duty to make the facts public. He does not drink a drop. He has been connected with this Company for a long time and is most reliable. What he writes you can publish as being absolutely true."

While Mr. Gardner was talking several clerks examined the letter. They compared the writing with that of letters received recently from the agent, and it was conclusively proven the same hand penned all. They added their testimony regarding Mr. Hopkins with that given by Mr. Gardner.

The reporter for the Post-Dispatch then visited Mr. Hopkins' residence, 5028 Minerva Avenue. His wife and two daughters were told of the strange letter that had been received.

"It's the true. If he wrote it," said Mrs. Hopkins, "and I believe every word."

The daughters chimed in to the same effect.

"The last letter I received from Mr. Hopkins," continued the wife, "was dated Springfield, Mo., April 15. This was apparently the day before he saw the airship. I will probably receive a letter this afternoon telling me all about it."

Mrs. Hopkins showed the reporter the letter. The handwriting was identical with that of the letter published above.

"Would Mr. Hopkins have any reason for perpetrating a hoax? Is he given to jesting?" was asked.

"Quite the contrary. He is most serious. What a man fifty years of age writing such a letter without it being true! No sir; every line of it is true. Mr. Hopkins is a member of the Maple Ave. M.E. Church, and has many friends in the West End. He undoubtedly wishes to acquaint his friends with the marvel he has seen, and so uses the Post-Dispatch as the medium of communication."

"Mr. Hopkins left home a week ago. Before he left home he ridiculed the idea of an airship having been seen. But now I suppose he is convinced it is not a myth. Truly, it is wonderful."

Fri. April 23, p. 4 (letters).

The "Airship". / To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

The people of this part of the Indian Territory are anxious to know if there is any truth in the airship story? What is your honest opinion? Do you believe Mr. Hopkins' story written from Muskogee, I.T.? / LEE CLINTON. / Tulsa, I.T. April 21.

(The Post-Dispatch does not believe there is an airship in existence at present. The unusual brilliance of Venus, the "evening star," has doubtless been the basis for several of the airship stories. Others are mere yarns.---Ed. The Post-Dispatch.)

1897 April 19 (Mon) St. Louis Post-Dispatch, p. 4.

A Corking Explanation

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

The mystery of the air ship has been solved. Carl Browne gave it away last night, ~~xxx~~ not to a reporter, but a representative of the press obtained it from unquestioned authority:

The inventor is an anarchist. Perhaps you have noticed the inactivity of the Anarchists for several years. Well, all their funds have been centered on the creation of the airship to obtain their ends. I learned this secret by telepathy. There are to be six of them; two are already completed; they were made in California, where the other four are being constructed. There will be no patents applied for, as the design of the originators and operators is to use them to destroy all governments and begin a new era. The fulfillment of prophecy is near at hand of the destruction of the world by fire.

When the other four are completed and tested with these two that are being seen nightly in the West, and improved upon as they are found needed, the warning will be given to the faithful to flee to the mountains. One will operate in North America, one in South America, two in England and Europe, one in Russia and Asia and one in Australia and the islands of the sea. It is not believed that the warnings will be heeded by the selfish people, but simply looked upon as the workings of cranks. Hence, when they are destroyed, as the people of Salsu and Gooorrah, in the terrible storm of brimstone and fire (boats and chemicals) that will be thrown out of the airships. It will be an easy matter for the principles advanced by the Anarchists to be put into practice, of no government, no rulers. As there will be no selfishness, there will be no need of officials.

Each would do unto the other as they would be done by, and the new era be ushered in of a new heaven and new earth.

MEMO

No Man's Land, Undated.

1897 April 19 (Mon) St. Louis Post-Dispatch, p. 4. (letters).

Saw the Airship

Mr. Editor: Last night as me and my nabor, Mr. Huston, the dairyman, was coming home from a liker party about half-past 11, we saw the much-talked-of air ship. It had out red and green lites and had something running up over it with a bright point like a lightening rod.

One man who saw it said it was about as high as the assessments in Winstanley park. The only thing we had been drinking was a little hard cider and I tell you we air devilish lucky to get that since the Makinley wave of prosperity struck the country. Your constant reader,
Henry Drummon

Winstanley Park, East St. Louis, April 18.

1897 April 20 (Tues) St. Louis Post-Dispatch, p. 4 (letters) (card 1)

The Airship Problem. / To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Here are a few reasons the much-talked-of airship so far as man being aboard is a hoax:

The planet Venus, which changes from white to red as it falls below the horizon, and toy tissue-paper balloons fed by a ball of cotton saturated with alcohol, are responsible for all the excitement and talk. Five months ago when Venus disappeared below the horizon at about 6 o'clock p.m. as much southwest apparently of St. Louis as it does now northwest, it was taken by many to be an electric balloon and so called.

There is no power known that is sufficient to lift itself, car and occupants, and propel it without the aid of gas or hot air reservoir, and one of these sufficiently large could not be concealed long and it would need refilling often. Second reason--An airship travelling at the rate of speed this myth has been making would, if exposed as has been stated, freeze a man beyond thawing in half an hour. Third reason--A car hanging below a reservoir as the cigar-shaped concern is represented in some papers, would meet with such resistance as to compel the ship to go straight up, and it could not be guided on a plane or in a straight line. What then? It would be either above the stars all the time or in some cornfield probably up in Iowa scaring some other poor farmer's horses so they would run away.

The airship problem is as far from being solved as is perpetual motion. About the time it was becoming a force for future usefulness every cross-roader in the country had a perfect model working exact. Where are they to-day? On the shelf. This will be the termination of the airship unless some unknown power is discovered to propel it.

If reports are true, three or four of these airships have been seen. Where do they "hang up at" in the air? We never hear of them putting up at any place where there can be real evidence procured of their existence.

Suppose some one should solve aerial navigation, what would the farmers do if these airship became numerous, dropping around destroying grain fields after night while tightening up a loose belt or putting a new feather in a wing which may be broken while running against time? The ship would be hundreds of miles away when morning came. Who would pay these damages? There would be no railroads to jump on for losses.

caused by an airship.

Concluding we hope we may see the time one can travel from town to town through the air, but let's have more proof than there is as yet.

Tower Hill, Ill. April 16 Ed. McLean

p. 4--The latest description of the airship says it has two wheels lying horizontally and one lying perpendicularly. Some writers have several wheels lying both horizontally and perpendicularly, and every other way in which lying can be done.

1897 April 20 (Tues) St. Louis Post-Dispatch, p. 10.

Air Ship at Belleville / Several Sober and Veracious People Say They Saw It.

What is supposed to be an airship was seen in Belleville Monday night. It appeared in the northeast about 9:30 and was visible about an hour. It was seen by several citizens of unquestioned sobriety and veracity.

Postmaster Irwin Wangelin was walking home with Mrs. Curt Helffelden when he noticed a bright red light in the heavens and called her attention to it. It was travelling at great speed alternately rising and falling.

Otto Kuschkoib, Fred Marsh, Lorenz Kassius and Officer William Letter also saw it.

From Swansea, the village north of town on the ridge, the light was plainly visible. Its motion was not that of a balloon.

1897 April 23 (Fri.) St. Louis Post-Dispatch, p. 3.

Tax on Airships. / Texas Proposes a New Way to Raise the Wind.

Austin, Tex., April 23.--A resolution was introduced in the House of the Texas Legislature this morning setting forth that, inasmuch as it has been generally current that an airship was flying around Texas carrying passengers and freight, and inasmuch as said airship is operating without paying any taxes or ~~is~~ complying with the rates established by the Texas commission, that said commission be instructed to establish special rates for the airship and see that its management comply with said rates.

Th. April 29, 4. There is not the slightest reason for apprehension of a Cleveland third term. The air will be full of flying ships long before Mr. Cleveland sits in the White House again.

1897 April 25 (Sun morn) St. Louis Post-Dispatch, p. 9.

THAT AIRSHIP. / It is Out of Order and is Now Resting for Repairs in the Tennessee Mountains. / Special to the Post-Dispatch.

Chattanooga, Tenn., April 24.--The airship reported daily for the past three weeks as having been seen in different parts of the country is said to have been seen at this place. It is said that the machine met with an accident to its working gear last night, and the navigator was compelled to descend for repairs.

Instead of being cigar or balloon shaped it is said to be the exact shape of a shad, minus head and tail. The metal is aluminum, bound around with thin strips of steel. On each side of this are two large wings, which are fixed to the knuckle and socket joints. The wings can be moved up or down, back or forward, or in any direction. This makes the ship rise or fall without any loss of gas.

Two motors, one electric and the other naphtha, give the motive power. It is said that from the stern there is a propeller at least nine feet in diameter, which has a maximum revolution of 900 turns a minute. The shad shaped portion is filled with hydrogen gas, having a pressure of 27 pounds, and a lifting capacity of 1,800 ~~thousand~~ pounds.

The passenger car underneath the ship is nine feet long, four feet wide and three feet deep, and is made of bamboo and aluminum strips, which combine strength and lightness. The navigator is said to carry provisions in the shape of canned goods and compressed ~~waixxx~~ biscuits. Aluminum vessels comprise the culinary utensils.

Several presumably truthful citizens of this city have given the foregoing account of the vessel. They say that they came upon the vessel resting on the spur of a mountain near this city. Two men were at work on it and explained that they had been compelled to return to earth because the machinery was out of order. One of these men said his name was "Professor Charles Davidson." He is alleged to have said that the vessel left Sacramento a month ago and has ~~be~~ since been sailing all over the country.

25, 20 (editorials) As to the Airship. / From Cincinnati Enquirer.

"The only certain thing about the airship," said the red-nosed man "is that it is shaped like a cigar."

"And," said the thin-faced young man with the waxen complexion, "still it sounds like a pipe."

26, 4 (eds.) The discovery that the airship is shad-shaped adds to the fishiness of the airship stories.

1897 April 26 (Mon eve) Sedalia (Mo) Democrat, p. 5.

St. Joseph, Mo., April 26.--The airship mystery has been solved. What thousands of people have mistaken for an airship is a kind of a cross between a kite and a balloon. John Corter, a telegraph operator in the employ of the St. Joseph and Grand Island Railroad Co., is, according to a story told by Police Officer C.S. Scott and a number of residents of the southern part of the city, the man who is responsible for the strange sights seen in the heavens during the last few weeks.

The discovery of the bogus airship was made by mere accident yesterday afternoon, when officer Scott was patrolling his beat as usual in that part of the city known as South park.

About 4 o'clock in the afternoon he happened to look heavenward and beheld what numbers of other persons had seen before--the airship. The object in midair moved back and forth in the manner ascribed to the airship which has been seen so frequently.

Presently the "airship" descended. The policeman then began an investigation. He went to the place where it struck terra firma and found to his surprise that it had been made to descend, not of its own accord, but by the winding up of the string to which it had been attached by Corter, who had been managing the thing from the ground as any boy does when flying his favorite kite.

It was not an airship, by any means. It was a kite with balloon attachments. It looked more like a very large red mattress than anything else that surprised people could think of. An investigation developed that it was 20 feet square and one foot in thickness, and that it was inflated. The sides were fastened together after the fashion of a baseball catcher's breast protector.

The strange kite had steel ribs running in all directions, and by means of these it was rigged out with strong cords, one-eighth of an inch in thickness, very much like any other kite.

By the peculiarity of the construction of the thing it will, when skillfully managed, ascend from the earth in the same manner as a smaller kite, being inflated on very much the same principle as a hot air balloon it will remain at a high altitude until hauled down by the strong cord to which it is attached.

The inventor has made several of these kites, and by way of experiment has cut them loose after they had made a successful ascent. They were all supplied with railroad men's lanterns of different colors and these are the multi-colored lights that have caused so much amazement to the people who thought they saw an air ship.

When cut loose the kites will soar off through space in the same manner as a balloon, but as the gas does not escape they do not descend so readily. They will travel for hundreds of miles.

1897 April 28 (Wed) Moberly, Mo., Daily Monitor, p. 4. (card 1)

THAT AIR SHIP / Caused Much Excitement in Denver, Colo. / A Former Moberly Man Tells of the Mysterious Battle in the Air. /

Editor Monitor--Since the first of this month I have been reading about an air ship which has been floating about the heavens at will. On the night of April 24 I learn by the Monitor that one of the mysterious ships were reported by Mr. K.I. Eli as floating over the Magic City on the 21st. I think M.R. Eli is mistaken in regard to the night he saw the ship, or else there are more than one of those mysterious ships floating at will through space.

On the night of the 15th inst., one was seen floating over the dome of Pike's Peak and on the 18th it appeared over Cripple Creek, and then again on the 21st (the same night Mr. Eli reports seeing his) it was seen playing around in close proximity to the top of the peak.

This aroused a strong suspicion in the mind of the boys at the Peak that perhaps it was some syndicate who had been driven by the Populist party or some insane Knights of Labor organization from the face of the earth, and was prowling around the Peak and Cripple Creek with the intention of bringing a whole colony of air ship to the place and capture the cog-wheel railway, at the Peak and the gold field of Cripple Creek. On the night of the 21st the boys at Cripple Creek made an ascension with a balloon in order to capture the so called "ship".

They soon found the great air ship to be nothing less than an unusual large two-seated chair with the lepa attached to the back of four large trained birds which are of the variety of those we read about in the seventh voyage of Sinbad the Sailor.

Our boys found sitting in the chair two small, well dressed, educated men, and demanded of them what their business was.

They said they were out on a kind of a pleasure trip. "Well you will just go to Denver with us," remarked one of our boys. But they refused to obey, and a fight ensued. This I reckon was the first and perhaps the last battle with fire arms ever fought in the heavens: for they found the air was so light that it would not hold up a bullet long enough for it to reach the contending parties.

Our boys finally succeeded in throwing a lead over one of the birds heads, and then let the gas out of the balloon. This brought the little strangers to time, and they soon made an unconditional surrender. Our boys climbed into the chair and it was not long until the little fellows were headed for Denver.

At 4 o'clock p.m. on the 22nd of this month they landed at City park in this place amidst the greatest excitement ever known in Denver.

They are what might be properly called red men, and belong to a race inhabiting an island situated in the south Pacific ocean called Damoly. Their names are, well, I will not tell you now, for fear you will take lock-jaw trying to pronounce them. Their skins are as red as blood and their hair hangs down their backs and looks like a great sheet of blood. Their eyes shine like electric light and they can see by night as well as by day. No wonder that the ship is lighted up by night.

Now I shall not try to describe the birds, for I know you will all come out and see the great wonder. They will stay here as long as the excitement lasts and the people's curiosity is growing every day. Over ten thousand persons came in on the trains today to see the red men and their birds sailing around over the city.

If you should see anyone who is contemplating coming to the exhibition, tell them to bring a few barrels of coconuts and also a few crates of bananas to feed the birds. You can pay your way with them, as they are in great demand.

I shall close for the present in hope of seeing you all at our exhibition. Yours Respectfully,
R. Suppe.

An Air Ship Lie.

A Chillicothe school teacher requested her small pupils to write of an imaginary trip in an air ship. The result in one case was as follows: "A man came to this town and wanted me to go up in an air ship with him. It was very large, it was up above the clouds when I went out on deck it made me so dizzy I fell off I fell on a house and went through in lit in a bed the children was just getting up they they screamed and mite a near defended me. I will tell you a nother story I went up in a balloon with a man and fell out and I lit on a church steeple and run in throug me I am stickin' here yet I can't tell any more stories because I am dead." This boy's chances for becoming a great lawyer are good.

May 4, 1897 St. Louis Post-Dispatch (Mon.) p. 7 (card 1)

Another Vision of the Airship.

Jenny Lind Ark., Citizens Tell What They Saw.
One Man Took a Ride
Several Conversd with the Occupant of the Craft, Who Gave Their Names.

The good citizens of Jenny Lind, Arkansas, have seen the airship. At least that is what two of the inhabitants write the Post-Dispatch, and they delve thoroughly into particulars, rivalling, though differing from, Mr. Hopkins, who related his wonderful experience near Springfield, Missouri.

The Jenny Lind letter is here given:

Jenny Lind, Ark., May 5.—Editor Post-Dispatch: We of Jenny Lind are no longer skeptical. The airship has come and gone. About 7:30 last night our citizens were aroused by the cry from a dozen places in town, "Airship! Airship!" The whole town turned out to see the long-looked-for wonder. It appeared from the northeast, moving in a south-westerly direction. It came directly over the town, and as it approached the office of the Western Coal and Mining Company it veered to the right and took a northwesterly direction, passing directly over the Christian Church, where Rev. Mann is holding a serious of meetings. His subject was Elijah's translation. Just as he was telling of the magnificent illumination that surrounded Elijah the congregation heard the cry of airship. In the rush to get out of the church Mrs. Berry, Mrs. Stout and two other ladies were seriously injured.

The ship came down near a spring at the foot of the mountain, near Old Town, and Mr. Elijah Holenbeck, Assistant Superintendent of the Mines, Prof. Phelps and James Davis got on their bikes and followed it. At the Spring they conversed with the occupants. The manager and owner of the queer vessel gave his name as George Autzerlitz. The gentleman with him he introduced as Joseph Eddleman. Now here is the only fishy part of the story. They had a swan with them which they said they had caught in flight.

Mr. Eddleman told Mr. Holenbeck that they could move at a speed one third faster than the fastest flight of birds and that they subsisted a great deal on birds taken in flight. They seem to have perfect control of the monster, for such it seems to us.

Last night's excitement will long be remembered by the people of Jenny Lind. Groups of men and women remained on the streets discussing the matter and awaiting the return of Mr. James Davis, who accompanied them to Huntington. They offered anyone a free ride with them and Mr. Davis was the only one who would take the seeming risk, and then only after they had assured him they would land him at any place he desired. On this assurance Mr. Davis entered the car and took passage for Huntington, fifteen miles away. They made the flight of fifteen miles in ten minutes. Mr. I. Jamison, our liveryman, sent a team to bring Mr. Davis back, but up to the time of writing they have not returned, although Mr. Davis telephoned Mrs. James Davis that he had landed all right.

CLAUD H. ROSS,
JOSEPH EDDLEMAN.

Should your readers doubt this, we refer them to Elijah Holenbeck, Assistant Superintendent; James Davis, wholesale dealer in ice cream and confections; Jack Jamison, livery and sale stable; Rev. Mann, pastor Christian Church.

Now as to the veracity of these people, I refer you to Mr. R. M. McDowell, General Manager of the Western Coal and Mining Co., corner of Sixth and Locust streets, St. Louis.

Mr. McDowell was found in the offices of the Western Coal and Mining Co., Equitable Building, Tuesday morning. He read the above.

"Yes," said he, "I know all those persons. We have extensive works at Jenny Lind. I can't understand the letter, though. It is very strange."

1897 May 6 (Th) Miller County Autogram (Tuscumbia, Mo.), p. 4.

The whiskey and bock beer of the vintage of 1897 is miles ahead of the tanglefoot and barley foam on the market of our younger days. This season you drink two glasses of bock, go outside, cast your eyes heavenward and see airships navigating the air with the freedom of a lark, provided with nautical appliances and red and green lights. It has cleared the political atmosphere of Kentucky and created a multiplicity of "wheels" in the west. Snakes and sea serpents no longer inhabit your gboot-tops and green monkeys no longer sit on the bed-posts. It beats the bass drum how enterprising the modern distiller and brewer are becoming. Next season, with the same beverage we confidently expect to be able to count the number of cheese factories on the surface of the moon, and determine to a nicety, with two glasses of the right focusing beverage, the number of microbes confined in a cubic foot of the water in its canals.

THE AIR-SHIP IN KANSAS. / It Swoops Down and Carries Off a Calf. /

On the front page of the Kansas City Times, one day last week, under the flaring headlines, was a story of an air-ship and its crew swooping down on the cow lot of one Alexander Hamilton, near Yates Center, Kans., and carrying off a three-year-old heifer. The interview published in The Times made Mr. Hamilton say that at about ten o'clock one night he was awakened by a commotion in his cow-lot. Thinking his bulldog was playing pranks with his cattle, he aroused his son and hired man and together they went out to investigate. Upon coming in view of the cow-lot they were astonished upon discovering an air ship alighting therein. It was a cigar-shaped contrivance, about 300 feet long, from which was hanging a compartment of considerable proportion—plenty large enough for its occupants, two men, a woman and two children, strange looking creatures who were jabbering in an unknown tongue. The lower compartment was brilliantly lighted with what appeared to be three electric lights of different colors, one of them being a huge search-light. Upon discovering Mr. Hamilton and the others, the strange visitors sprang into the ship, turned a wheel and the ship gently arose, taking with it a bawling, struggling three-year-old heifer, which the strange visitors had secured around the neck with a cable. The owner learned nothing of the fate of his heifer until the next evening, when a neighbor, living several miles away, brought the hide of the heifer to town, stating that he had found it in the center of his field, and that he was greatly puzzled at finding no tracks in the soft ground where the hide was found. This is a synopsis of the story, and affidavits were given by lawyers, bankers, merchants, druggists, sheriffs, oil inspectors, and, in fact, all the prominent men in Mr. Hamilton's neighborhood, testifying as to his spotless reputation for truth and veracity, stating that he was an ex-member of the legislature and one of the most prominent men in the county. All these parties stated that they believed the story to be a fact.

Well, to make a long story short, we wrote Mr. Hamilton—out of curiosity, mostly, and to decide a controversy in regard to the matter. The following is the reply we received from the gentleman:

VERNON, KANSAS, MAY 3, 1897.

ED. MAIL:—Yours of the 27th came in due time, but I had so many of the same kind to answer that I have just reached your letter. And in answer to your enquiry about the air ship, will freely confess to you (as you are an editor) that I lied about it. I am sure, now, that it was a lightning bug with a cow hair in one foot and an ant crawling up the hair. I must have taken the lightening bug for the air ship, the hair for the cable and the ant for the cow. The whole thing must have been an optical illusion. Now, my dear sir, please do not say anything about this in your letter, for you are the only person that I have confessed the truth to, and I only do this because you are an editor, and I will not lie to the editor of a country newspaper, intentionally.

Yours with respect,
A. HAMILTON.

P.S. I used to live in your county about 42 years ago. I was then an honest, truthful attorney. I left old Missouri in '55, and came over here to help make Kansas a slave state. We did not do it, but it was no fault of mine. I have been right here ever since, and am now as loyal to Kansas as I was once to Missouri, and whenever I get a chance to help Kansas in any way I always do it, even if it is a little free advertisement.

1897 May 8 (Sat) St. Louis Post-Dispatch, p. 1. (card 1)

An Airship Seen in Open Daylight / This Time by George W. Lubke, A Well-Known Lawyer. / It Passes Over St. Louis. / An Intelligent Observation by a Man Who Is a Competent Witness.

George W. Lubke, Jr., has seen a real airship.

Nobody in St. Louis will question the veracity of Mr. Lubke or his ability to understand and appreciate whatever he sees.

He is a well-known attorney, in practice with his father, Judge Lubke, in the Commercial building, and this is the event he described as an eye-witness, to a reporter of the Post-Dispatch:

"Last night, at 5:45 o'clock, I had reached the corner of Easton avenue and Thomas street, when I chanced to look toward the sky in a southeasterly direction. A moving object, plainly in sight—attracted my attention. It was apparently over Garrison avenue, moving north in a slow and steady course.

"I watched the object till it hung above Thomas street. It stopped and proceeded to turn slowly about. Then I had an opportunity for viewing it more closely. It was not exactly cigar-shaped, as the deflections at the ends were not pronounced to a point, but more like the stern of a canoe. As it veered about, I observed a white object in the center of the side, though, of course, I was unable to determine its character—whether a painted wheel or a canvas.

"When the half-circle of the ship had been completed, its course changed to northwest, in which direction it travelled rapidly and finally disappeared in the direction of the Fair Grounds.

"While walking on homeward I met a newspaper carrier who knew me, and he asked if I had seen the airship. I replied in a non-committal way by asking if he had seen it. Then he told me he had viewed it through an opera glass from near Grand and Easton avenues. His description of it corresponded precisely with my own observation, even to the white object on the side."

"What do you think it was?" asked the reporter.

"An airship, certainly," replied Mr. Lubke. "The turn it made while apparently hovering over Thomas street convinced me on that point."

"Could not the turn have been caused by a shifting current of air?"

"No. Air currents don't shift in that way. Whether the aerial vessel had a passenger or not, I am unable to state. It was too quickly elevated to distinguish details with the naked eye. But, in my judgment, it was an airship."

The Airship in the East.
Special to the Post-Dispatch.

New York, May 8.--That airship has come in out of the West, and according to the solemn testimony of citizens of Harlem and Bridgeport, it was cavorting around in midair hereabouts early Friday morning. It seemed 100 feet in the air and a light shone therefrom as if through portholes.

Sun. May 9 p. 1--A real arsp at last (cartoon)--Nashville Centenn'l p. 2--picture of Nashville arsp.

Sun May 9, p. 4 (?)--eds. pt. II

The report that a phantom steamer has been seen near Natchez ought to be true. The great Mississippi is as much entitled to a phantom ship as is the great ocean to a Flying Dutchman.

p. 7--Brief repeat of Lubke story.

1897 May 14 (Fri.) St. Joseph, Mo. Daily Herald, p. 3.

IT WAS ONLY A KITE / STRANGE CRAFT APPEARS IN SOUTHERN HEAVENS. / Thousands Viewed the Mysterious Visitor--Many Believed That It Was the Long Looked For Air Ship--A Herald Reporter Investigated the Matter and Found That the Nocturnal Visitor Was Nothing More Than a Large Kite With Colored Lights Attached to It. /

St. Joseph has at last been favored with a visit from the mysterious airship. Shortly after 8 o'clock last night the citizens of South St. Joseph became aware of an unusual appearance in the eastern heavens. An aerial monster was apparently perched high above the bluffs in the clear atmosphere. The outlines of the strange visitor were scarcely discernible, but its course was clearly marked by four large brilliant lights of as many different colors.

When the strange lights were first seen the wildest kind of excitement was created. The streets in the southern portion of the city were soon filled with people, who gazed at the strange spectacle in awe and wonderment. The many stories of the mysterious airship had been read with unconcern, and even treated with derision by many of those who now beheld for the first time the nocturnal visitor. The bluffs running from Sacramento street to the southern limits were lined with curious spectators. To them the floating monster seemed but a short distance away.

It seemed to be directly above Pacific street, and moved slowly to and fro, occasionally dropping for some distance, then shooting upward until it was almost out of sight. Telephone messages were sent uptown and soon many people were looking into the eastern sky. Very few were rewarded with a sight of the strange visitor. The lights were only visible from the roofs of high buildings.

Among those who saw the strange visitor were a number of the night employes at the postoffice, several of The Herald employes and some others who viewed it from the custom house tower. It was also visible from the exposition grounds. Among those who saw it from there were Mr. and Mrs. W.A.P. McDonald, John Doyle, Eugene Zimmerman and Fred F. Schmitz. All the conductors and motormen on the Citizen's line saw the strange lights.

A Herald reporter visited South Park last night and ascertained that the supposed airship was a huge kite operated by a railroad man. The kite is about 12 feet high and 8 feet wide, and to the bottom of it were fastened four colored railroad lanterns. It is a very clever arrangement, and no doubt many people thought they had obtained a glimpse of the real airship.

IOWA

1897 April 5 (Mon) Daily Nonpareil (Council Bluffs, Ia.), p. 1.

AERIAL VISITOR SEEN / AIRSHIP VIEWED BY INDEPENDENCE, KAN., PEOPLE. / Independence, Kan., April 4.--The mysterious "airship" that has been seen at various points over Kansas and Nebraska paid southeastern Kansas a visit last night. It is said to have passed over this city at an early hour last night and many people whose veracity is unquestioned declare they saw it. The strange light appeared in the southeast about 8 o'clock.

At first the persons who saw it thought it was a star, but it gradually came nearer and increased in brilliancy. As it approached, it was observed that it did not travel in a straight line, but darted first this way, then that, but always keeping in the same course. Suddenly it veered to the south, so those who were watching it affirmed, then turned and passed directly over this city in a northwesterly direction.

When first observed, it appeared very low, but as it approached it rose higher and higher and passed over this city at a considerable height and traveling at a high rate of speed. After it had passed, it is said that it again descended and for five minutes appeared perfectly stationary.

Then it was set in motion, darting back and forth, up and down, and after a short interval continued on its journey and disappeared gradually in the northwest. It was about half an hour from the time it was first seen until it disappeared.

1897 April 7 (Wed) Marshalltown, Ia., Eve. Times-Republican, p. 3 (ed.)

A STRANGE SIGHT. / Many Persons Profess to Have Seen the Mysterious Air Ship at Omaha. / Some Prominent Business Men Vouch for the Truth of Their Statements. / The Singular Phenomenon Was Seen at Vinton, Iowa, and in Illinois. /

Omaha, Neb., April 7.--Several hundred Omaha people insist that they saw an airship Monday night. The whole town is talking about it today and the local press is devoting much space to the matter. Several crowds witnessed it. Fifty members of the Knights of Ak-Tar-Ben were treated to a sight of the airship, it being observed twice and each time for a space of from five to eight minutes. It is believed while the initiation was in progress, the attention of a few members was attracted by a bright light flashing past the west window of the den. They immediately sprang to the window and saw a luminary appearing at least eighteen inches in diameter, the reflection from which passed along what appeared to be a steel body, the length of which could only be estimated at from twelve to thirty feet.

The object was at an altitude of about three-quarters of a mile and a little over a mile west of the den. The course of the ship was watched for some five or six minutes. Its course was due south until it reached, as near as could be judged, about the southern limits of South Omaha, the distance from the den being covered in about three minutes. It then described a semi-circle to the east, following that direction for about a mile, when it turned to the north against the northeast wind, and travelled in that direction about a half a mile. It then turned east after some vacillation and was lost behind a bank of clouds.

The Knights returned to the den and after the initiation, while waiting for the cars, the ship was again seen far to the southwest, but beating rapidly up against the wind to the north, and passed out of sight to the north.

Among the various people who saw it and permitted the use of their names as witnesses were these businessmen: O.D. Ainsinger, W.T. Hawk, H.K. Burket, A. Kospe, Jr., Gould Deitz, L.P. Funkhouser and Arthur Guitous. The airship was seen by W.H. Neville, a conductor on the Harney street line, who stopped his car and called the dozen passengers on the car out to see it. /

AIRSHIP SEEN AT NASHVILLE. / Mysterious object Passes Over the Town Showing a Large Red Light.

Nashville, Ill., April 7.--What appeared to be a balloon but what most people who saw it think it was the mysterious airship of Kansas and Nebraska passed over this city about 8 o'clock last evening. It appeared in the northwest, showing a large red light, and as it approached the city a dark outline was faintly discernible. The object traveled toward the northwest while the wind was from the southeast. / The Vintonites See It.

Vinton, April 7.--The mysterious airship which has been attracting such widespread attention over the state of Kansas was seen here Saturday night by one of our prominent physicians and a several other all reputable people whose honesty is unimpeachable. It first appeared rather low down and in the northwest about 9 o'clock and could be plainly observed to travel in a swaying manner like a bird flying against a wind, darting to and fro, up and down, and was plainly visible for nearly half an hour, continuing to travel in a northwesterly direction until invisible.

1897 April 7 (Wed. eve) Waterloo, Ia., D. Courier, p. 1.

MYSTERIOUS AIR SHIP / Headed Toward Waterloo--Seen at Various Places. /

ALBIA, Iowa, April 7.--The mysterious airship seen so often in Kansas passed over this city about 10 o'clock Saturday night. (It) came from the west and then passed toward the north, moving in an erratic manner. It appeared as a brilliant reddish light, and was seen by many reliable people. /

Going South.

VINTON, Iowa, April 7, (Wed. eve) Waterloo, Ia., D. Courier, p. 1. / 1897 April 8 (Th) Waterloo, Ia., Daily Courier, p.

THE AIR SHIP. / It Was Seen Flying Over Waterloo this Morning. /

The mysterious has arrived at Waterloo. It passed over the city at 1 o'clock this morning. It was going in a southerly direction, coming here from Cedar Falls, where it is understood an application for a right-of-way franchise was dropped on the city hall and it is understood is now in the hands of the mayor.

Those who saw the mysterious traveller of the air say that it is a dark object about the size of a "Col. Rafferty" cigar, lighted at both ends. In the rear it carried a red light and in front a green lamp cast a weird shadow in the path it was taking.

The story is vouched for by Jack Casebeer and Will Ewald. They both say it. / 1897 April 9 (Fri morn) Burlington, Ia., Hawk-Eye, p. 1. (cont.)

SAW THE AIR SHIP. / Many Iovans Sure the Mysterious Craft Is a Fact. / IT HAS A HUGE HEADLIGHT / And Wing-Like Projections on Either Side--Seen Between West Liberty and Cedar Rapids. /

West Liberty, Ia., April 8.--The mysterious airship which has appeared night after night at various points in Iowa and Nebraska recently was seen to-night by hundreds of reputable citizens all along the line of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern railroad, between here and Cedar Rapids. Reports from these points show that nearly every operator and station agent along the line saw the strange craft and they all tell about the same story. It was first seen about half-past seven in the evening and the operator doubting his senses asked the man at the next station if he could see a strange object in the sky between the two towns. The other operator replied that he had been watching the thing. The ship moved off and other operators in the direction of the flight were warned of its approach and thus town after town was prepared to gaze at it when it came in sight.

It is described by reputable citizens who saw it as having a large reflecting headlight probably two feet in diameter which shed strong rays like that of a locomotive headlight, and to some extent prevented a good view of the body of the apparatus by its glare. However the glistening body of the ship could be discerned and the dim wing-like projections on either side, as described by previous observers. The strange aerial craft moved swiftly through the air, making a slight hissing sound.

At times it seemed to be within a thousand feet of the earth and at times seemed to plunge in its flight as though its occupants were taking observations of the earth below.

No sound save the low hissing noise, which was only apparent when the machine was in swift motion, came [to] the wondering observers and if there were people in the craft their conversation was carried on in low tones or else the distance was too high above the earth for the sound to carry.

The strange object was in view generally from twenty minutes to half an hour and usually disappeared in a westerly direction. At least a hundred trustworthy people declare they saw the airship, but none of them are willing to swear they were not dreaming, so strange and unreal does its appearance seem to them.

Seen at Solon, Iowa.

Solon, Ia., April 6.--(Special.)--The airship was seen north of here about 8:30 to-night. It seemed to take a westward course and was visible for about forty-five minutes, then gradually disappeared to the west. It was viewed by a number of Solon's most prominent business men whose integrity cannot be doubted.

Seen at Vinton Wednesday.

Belle Plaine, Ia., April 7.--The air ship that has been mystifying western people has been observed in this county. One of the most reputable physicians of Vinton says that all the members of his family observed the mysterious aerial machine and distinctly heard it swishing through the air. The air ship first appeared low down in the southwest about 9 o'clock and could plainly be observed to travel in a swaying manner, like a bird flying against a wind, and darting to and fro, would rise up quickly and lower itself with a gentle, easy motion and seemed under perfect control of the navigator. It was going in a northeasterly direction.

1897 April 9 (Fri) Eve Times-Republican (Marshalltown, Ia), p.3 (cd 1)

AIR SHIP AGAIN. / The Mysterious "Thing" Continues to Hover Over Iowa--Seen at Storm Lake. / Judge Lot Thomas and Wife Saw the Wonder--Several Others Saw It. / One Man Heard the Machinery Working and Another Caught It Roosting. / Special to the Times-Republican.

Storm Lake, April 9.--The Times-Republican of the 7th has a statement from Vinton stating the airship was seen there last Saturday night about 9 o'clock in the evening going northwest. It was seen by several of our prominent citizens about 10 o'clock the same night. Among those who saw it was Judge Lot Thomas and wife, George Steig, who is the proprietor of one of our meat markets, and lives just east of town and was on his way home says he could hear machinery working, and thought he could distinguish voices. It had a light, as seen by others. / CAUGHT IT ROOSTING. / Woodbury County Farmer Describes the Airship. Sioux City, April 9.--Lots of people claim to have seen the airship. It has always been on the wing, however, and the details of its form could be but imperfectly outlined. Dick Butler says he caught it "roosting." His neighbors do not very generally believe his account, but Butler treats all slurs on his veracity with scorn.

Dick Butler is the owner of a farm in Wolf Creek township, this county. A considerable part of his income he derives from the sale in Sioux City of his dairy products. For the delivery of these goods it is his custom to visit town every Saturday morning and return here at night. The drive is a long one and frequently it is late before he reaches his destination. On the last trip it was 12:15 a.m. when he turned off the section line road into the driveway leading to his door ~~xxx~~ yard. His house is not directly on the main highway, but is separated from it by a big cornfield, through which leads the road into which Butler turned.

He was perhaps half way between the public road and his own barn when he was surprised to see a light on his right hand side about a dozen rods distant in the cornfield. He knew there was no house except his own in the vicinity, and the light puzzled him. Besides, it had a glow more like that of an electric lamp than the kerosene burners usually employed by the residents of the Wolf Creek district. Butler strained his eyes, and, coming just then to an open place between last year's cornstalks, was petrified to see a dark bulk, through the windows of which the light shone. He describes it as a long, narrow car, resembling a corset box in shape, but perhaps thirty or thirty-five feet in length and six or seven in width and height. Over this car floated a cigar-shaped bag, horizontally placed, of about the same length as the car, and eight or ten feet thick at its greater diameter.

Whether there were sails or steering apparatus Butler can not say, for at this moment his horses caught sight of the same thing as they master and bolted precipitately for the opposite side of the road and tumbled wagon and driver into the ditch. By the time Butler had crawled from the wreck and regained his feet the machine was moving briskly in a southerly direction, and at the same time descending at an angle of about forty-five degrees. Butler watched it out of sight, and then continued on his way on foot.

Of course his neighbors claim he had been drinking before he left town, or perhaps on the road; that he let his horses get beyond control and capsized his wagon, and that he "faked" the airship story to account to his wife for the accident. Butler sticks manfully to his version, and maintains that "jagged" or not his experience was a strange one.

Seen at Cedar Rapids.

Cedar Rapids, April 9.--The mysterious airship which has been seen by residents of Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa floating about the heavens was seen here last night. It was first noticed about 9 o'clock, when it was seen in the northwest heavens at an angle of about forty-five degrees. It was moving north rapidly and by 10 o'clock had faded from view. At 10:30 o'clock a dispatch from Northwood, in the extreme northwest part of the state, said the mysterious visitor was due west of there. No one has been able to explain its meaning. Here it looked like an immense star, only about twice as large. With the naked eye it was easy to discern. It was swaying from side to side.

Burlington, April 9.--Specials from various points along the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern railway give reports of the mysterious airship which has been making its appearance throughout Iowa. The strange aerial craft was seen last night by every operator and station agent along the line between West Liberty and Cedar Rapids, and they all report the same conditions. A blinding headlight which reveals in some cases the smooth steel hull, dark wing-like extensions on each side, and a dull, hissing sound as the object slides through the air. The section of Iowa where the ship has been seen is fairly crazy with excitement. People through the streets of all the towns and villages in hopes of catching a glimpse of it, and the telegraph wires are hot with messages about it.

1897 April 10 (Sat. morn) Burlington, Ia., Hawk-Eye, p. 1. (card 1)

THE AIR SHIP AGAIN / Seen by People at Mt. Pleasant and Fairfield. / WATCHED WITH NIGHT GLASS. / J.W. Martin and Stanley Du Bois Both View the Mysterious Aerial Craft--Seen at Other Points. /

Mt. Pleasant, Ia., April 9.--(Special.)--Several people in this city claim to have seen the famous air-ship last evening as it floated along calmly and serenely on its way to fame and, perhaps, fortune. W.J. Martin was going home last night about 9 o'clock when, at the corner of Jefferson and Henry street, he saw a bright light in the northwest about midway between the zenith and horizon. The light was a brilliant white as it appeared to him, about like the incandescent street lights, only perhaps larger and more than 800 candle power. It swayed around somewhat from side to side, and the general bearing of it for a time was a little to the southwest. He called the attention of several others to the sight, and together they walked down Henry street to the bridge north of the gas works, when it was lost sight of for a time. Mr. Martin went on up the hill and saw the light fast disappearing in the west. It was apparently going directly west, for it did not appear to be moving, only as it grew dimmer and finally went from sight. Once while he was watching it, it changed in color from the bright white to a red, but soon changed back again. On account of the distance away, it was impossible to see whether or not there was any hull or ship to the light, or hear whether it was making any noise or not. Pearl Martin also saw the light from the Presbyterian church corner about the same time, and his statement is about the same as the above. W.J. Martin says he is willing to make an affidavit to the statement and that he has no explanation to make of the peculiar sight. Seen at Fairfield.

Fairfield, Ia., April 9.--(Special.)--The mysterious airship which has been before the public of late passed over this city last evening a few minutes before 9 o'clock, and fully one hundred reputable citizens had the pleasure of witnessing the strange wonder of the nineteenth century. It was first noticed coming from a southeasterly direction, and had passed over the center portion of the city before it was noticed. It was fully twenty minutes before it disappeared in the western horizon. It carried a very large headlight, which, at the distance, seemed to be about the size of a man's hat, and moved along with a vacillating motion. Stanley Dubois, who saw the mysterious wonder, went to his home and secured a good night glass, through which he discovered two smaller lights which were of a yellowish green, but the object was too far away to discern the outlines, except that it was a long, dark object. When our citizens who were upon the street at the time of the appearance of this airship passed the word around, it caused considerable excitement, and many availed themselves of the opportunity of seeing the sight. According to reports received, this makes the third appearance of this mysterious airship this week, but as only a few people saw this wonder on former occasions, they were not credited as stating the truth, but the sight of last night is duly credited and will not be forgotten soon by those who saw it. There will be quite a number who have not as yet seen it that will spend a few hours each evening from now on until they do see it, before pronouncing it a fake.

Ottumwa People Claim to Have Seen It.

Ottumwa, Ia., April 9.--Last night a dozen different persons claim to have seen the same air ship in Ottumwa. Most of them claim to have seen it at 9:30, going directly in a westerly direction, but very high up. Ten young fellows stood on McLean street, near the Rock Island track, and watched it.

The morning Chicago papers' special dispatches from Cedar Rapids state that it was seen there about 9 o'clock. Other dispatches state that it was seen at various points and the only way these dispatches could be true would be in case there was one airship that could skip around at the rate of some 150 or 200 miles an hour, or else a whole bevy of air ships are disporting themselves in the atmosphere each night. The plot thickens, and this air-ship business is getting interesting.

Viewed at Cedar Rapids.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., April 9.--The mysterious air-ship, or whatever it may be, which has been floating around in the heavens for the past two or three weeks and which has been seen by hundreds of people in Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa, took a run across Iowa Thursday night. It was visible from this city for more than an hour and was seen by more than a score of people with more than usual interest.

It was shortly after 8 o'clock that the R. O. R. operator at Vinton flashed the startling news over the wires into the dispatcher's office in this city that the air ship was to be seen in the northwestern heavens. A reporter was notified of this fact and in company with

When first seen the mysterious object was at an angle of 35 or 40 degrees from the horizon and seemed to be about twice the size of the largest and brightest star. In fact it did not look different from an immense star. With the naked eye it could easily be seen that the mysterious stranger was swaying from side to side and that it was rapidly traveling in a northerly direction. It sank lower and lower and at 10 o'clock had disappeared behind the horizon.

The mysterious visitor was followed at the dispatcher's offices even after it had disappeared from view. Night operators along the line were notified to be on the lookout for it. At 10:30 o'clock a wire from the operator at Northwood said that the air ship was then directly west of that city and apparently was traveling in a northwesterly direction.

What this mysterious object is must remain a matter of conjecture. It was first seen by people in Kansas about two weeks ago. Since then it has been seen from a number of different places. There has been considerable in the newspapers in regard to it. But a large number of people have regarded the stories as mere fakes, so improbable did it all seem. There are scores of people in Cedar Rapids and many more all along the line of the B., C. & N. north of here who saw the object Thursday night who are willing to take their oath that it is a reality. At 1:15 o'clock Friday morning further reports had been received at the dispatcher's office regarding the mysterious air ship. It was followed as far as Waseca, Minn., over B., C. & N. and M. & St. L. wires, where it was lost on account of clouds. At 1 o'clock it was visible at Madison, S.D., which is on the Milwaukee road. At that time the strange object was traveling west.

Whether this is really an air ship, which some genius has constructed in some out of the way place, stored with provisions for a long voyage and then suspending from it an immense beacon light and started out to amaze the people and keep them in a state of excitement; whether it is some heavenly body floating recklessly around in space or whether it is a visitor on its way from some of the other planets to the earth can only be surmised. It's something, that is certain.

Many stories have been told regarding this mysterious floater. One is to the effect that from one place the form of the air ship could be easily seen. From another place comes the story that the air ship was so close that snorts and laughter of the occupants could be heard. But from here it simply appeared like an immense star, moving through the heavens.

Clearly Observed at Vinton.

Vinton, Ia., April 9.—(Special).—The mysterious airship that was seen by several of our prominent people last Thursday night made its appearance again last night, and was seen by hundreds from various points of view in our city. In fact, the walks were almost lined with people who watched the mysterious movements of this strange visitor, or whatever it is, for half an hour. It was first observed in a southwesterly direction, and was observed to be traveling last night, ~~as before~~ as before, to the northwest, appearing as a very brilliant reddish light at times, and again much the same as a brilliant arc-light. It appeared both evenings at an angle of about 40 degrees altitude, and was estimated to be perhaps eight to ten miles away, traveling to and fro, and varying in altitude from 20 to 40 degrees, being all the time clearly visible to the naked eye. Just what this strange object is remains to all here a wonderful mystery and conjecture. It seems to be the general opinion of those who witnessed the strange phenomenon that it is really an airship which some inventive genius has constructed, and in which he is traversing the globe. Again there are some who are inclined to be superstitious and who think it some heavenly body or visitation from on high floating recklessly around in space, or visitors traveling from one planet to another. To those who had regarded the stories of this mysterious object as fakes above all the gloom and doubts of their mind dispelled by this second appearance last night.

1917 April 10 (Sat.) Burlington Hawk-Eye, p. 2.

NEARBY RUMOR AND Gossip.

The Gossiper fears the air-ship is a great fake. It has been seen in various Iowa towns by "reputable and trustworthy citizens" who are willing to swear to its genuineness, but who for some strange reason fail to give their names or do any swearing on the subject. The reports of the presence of the mysterious craft serve, however, as a diversion to the mud-bound people of Iowa, and they are all thinking how convenient it would be in this present condition of fathomless roads to have a machine that would carry them and their produce to town without getting stuck in the mud, running off the track or being blocked by a landslide.

A great deal of speculation has been indulged in on the subject of the mysterious aerial vessel, and already the Gossiper has received several suggestions regarding it. One correspondent from Dallas City, Illinois, suggests that the thing might be lassoed by firing a line attached to a bomb from a mortar, as the wreckers do their life lines, and haul the craft to terra firma. What he would do with it after he had captured the strange bird he does not say. Another correspondent is puzzled to know where the thing stays during the day time. He is quite sure it could not light in any portion of Iowa without someone seeing it and at once reporting the discovery, and he is loath to believe that it retires every night to its original den ever in California, where it was first seen. He is very anxious to know about this, and any information as to the daytime loafing place of the air-ship will be gratefully received.

HAVE YOU SEEN IT YET? / Mysterious Airship Passes Over the Eastern Section of Iowa. / Large Number of People Say They Saw It Whose Veracity is Unquestioned. / No Doubt in Most Minds That It is a Veritable Airship, Though Some Are Inclined to Scoff. / Its Movements and Shape Accurately Described by Those Who Witnessed Its Flight. / Moves at a Rapid Rate, Outstripping the Fastest Railway Train—Seen in Minnesota and Dakota—Interesting Accounts. / MANY SAW MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP. / Multitude of Testimony Ought to Be Conclusive Evidence.

Cedar Rapids, April 9.—Special: There is the greatest excitement here over the appearance on Thursday night of what has been termed the air ship, which was first seen in Kansas some two or three weeks ago. The people here have heretofore regarded the many stories published in regard to the mysterious object as fakes of the first water. But now all doubts which have existed have been swept away. Hundreds of people know for a certainty that some mysterious object is sweeping through the heavens, but whether it is an air ship, carrying an immense beacon, or what it is, they do not know.

It was first discovered at Vinton about 8 o'clock in the evening. The Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern operator at that place notified the dispatcher at the general offices in this city, and more than a score of people here watched the mysterious object until it sank behind the horizon. When first seen here it was in the north-west heavens at an angle of about 40 degrees. It was soon noticeable that it was moving in a northerly direction and evidently at a rapid rate. It was like an immense star, only it was twice as large as the largest and brightest star in the firmament. With the naked eye it could be seen without trouble that it was swaying out of its direct course, first a little to the right and then a little to the left. For the larger part of the time it gave a clear white light like a star; but at times the color would change and it would become a bright red. At 10 o'clock it had sunk behind the horizon.

Operators along the line of the Burlington Cedar Rapids & Northern and other railways were notified, and track was kept of the mysterious airship until along after midnight. At 10:30 o'clock, after it had disappeared from view in this city, it was visible at Northwood, a town in the northern tier of Iowa counties, near the Minnesota state line. At that time it was directly west, it evidently having changed its course a slightly after leaving here. At Waseca it was seen about midnight, and at that time was traveling west. Further communication along the Minneapolis & St. Louis road was then abandoned, as the sky north of there was overcast with clouds. The dispatchers at the general offices of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern did not give up the chase, however, and at 1 o'clock were rewarded by having it reported from Madison, S.D., and the air ship, or whatever it may be, had changed its course from almost due north, when it was seen here, to directly westward.

No one here can offer any explanation whatever. They know that some mysterious object is floating through the heavens in a rather reckless, haphazard manner, quite out of the ordinary, but further than this it is all conjecture. There is positively no fake about it, but a reality, a fact which can be attested to by hundreds.

ALL ALONG THE LINE.

Davenport Republican, April 9: "What is it?" "Where was it seen?" "Who saw it?" And a hundred other questions about the mysterious thing seen, or claimed to have been seen in the heavens, were asked among those who were around Iowa last night after 10 o'clock. It was all about this unknown something which has filled newspapers at widely scattered points in at least two states during the past two months. "It" was first reported to have been seen in Nebraska, from whence it was described as a great airship or balloon, swinging through the heavens at night, always going through the air as though it had urgent business. Great search lights are said to have been thrown toward the earth with a piercing power that would rive men's souls. At first it was laughed at, then lost sight of, only to appear again. Next it came into the full view of some trainmen near Sioux City, but before anybody could put salt on its tail it was gone. The Tribune of that city swore through a column of fine type that it was a sure thing. Some people thought that the editor of that paper, being a government inspector of collector in the department of certain fiery liquids, had something to do with the story. Next it was reported at other places in the northern part of the state, then disappeared again. Like the ghost of Hamlet's father, it will not down, but keeps high up in the air where no one can get near it. It does not need the storm, like the "Flying Dutchman," of the Southern ocean, to bring the phantom of the night before the gaze of men. Last night, when all was still and calm, it suddenly appeared again. The first shiver that ran along the telegraph line and down the vertebra of the operator said it had just appeared at Rockford. The mysterious thing was described as a huge airship, lit up as with electricity, and traveling northward. It must have gone chugging through the air at a great rate, for the last heard of it was 200 miles from where first seen. It kept its great eye of fire on the rails of the B. & N. railway most of the time, being reported successively from Solon, Nichols, Cedar Rapids, West Branch and Tiffin. Some people at the latter place are reported badly scared. A man sitting in the waiting room at Grinnell will make oath that he saw it. It is reported to have hovered over Cedar Rapids for fully thirty minutes. It was also seen at Waterloo and Albert Lea, Minn., at which latter place it arrived on schedule time at 10:50. When it reached Waseca, Minn., about midnight, its curfew was heard to ring and shortly after the show was declared off for the night.

Fairfield, April 9.—The much talked of airship with its mysterious passenger, passed over this city last evening about 8:50, going in a northwesterly direction. The streets were well crowded with people at the time, and the cry went up that an airship was passing over us, which brought out every merchant from his store, and fully 500 people witnessed this mysterious ship of the air. It appeared very close to the earth, but as the sky was not very clear, it prevented anyone from getting a good look at it. It carried a light which was thrown earthwards, and which appeared much larger than the moon and also brighter. It was a splendid evening for such an experiment, as the wind was very light.

West Liberty, April 9.—The mysterious airship which has appeared night after night at various points in Iowa and Nebraska was seen last night by hundreds of reputable citizens all along the line of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern railroad, between here and Cedar Rapids. Reports from these points show that nearly every operator and station agent along the line saw the strange craft, and they tell about the same story; it was first seen about 7:30 in the evening, and the operators, doubting his senses, asked the man at the next station if he could see a strange object in the sky between the two towns. The other operator replied that he had been watching the thing. The ship moved off, and other operators in the direction of the flight were warned of its approach, and thus town after town was prepared to gaze at it when it came in sight. It is described by reputable citizens who saw it as having a large reflecting headlight, probably two feet in diameter, which shed strong rays, like that of a locomotive headlight, and to some extent prevented a good view of the body of the apparatus by its glare. However, the glistening body of the ship could be discerned, and the dim wing-like projections on either side, as described by previous observers. The strange aerial craft moved swiftly through the air, making a slight hissing sound. At times it seemed to be within a thousand feet of the earth, and at times seemed to pause in flight, as though its occupants were taking observations of the earth below. No sound, save the low, hissing noise, which was only apparent when the machine was in swift motion, came to the wondering observers, and if there were people in the craft their conversation was carried on in low tones or else the distance was too high above the earth for the sounds to carry. The strange object was in view generally from twenty minutes to half an hour, and usually disappeared in a westerly direction. At least a hundred trustworthy people declare that they saw the airship, but none of them are willing to swear they were not dreaming, so strange and unreal does its appearance seem to them.

Solon, April 9.—Special: The airship appeared to the people of this locality last night. There are a large number of reputable citizens in this place who will vouch for it, it is the topic of conversation to-day, and everybody is on the outlook for a reappearance of the strange craft to-night.

Storm Lake, April 9.—The statement comes from Vinton that the mysterious airship was seen there last Saturday night about 9 o'clock in the evening, going northwest. It was seen by several of our prominent citizens about 10 o'clock the same night. Among those who saw it was Judge Lot Thomas and his wife. George Steig, who is the proprietor of one of our meat markets, and who lives just east of town, and was on his way home, says he could hear machinery working, and thought he could distinguish voices. It had a light, as seen by others.

Fairfield, April 9.—Special: Stanley Dubois, of this city, a reputable citizen, claims that he saw the airship last night about 9 o'clock. He ran to the house and procured a field glass, by means of which he distinguished two smaller lights of yellowish green on either side of the large light which first attracted his attention. The object swayed slightly from side to side, but not much of the body of the craft could be distinguished on account of the great distance from the ground. It disappeared slowly in the west.

Mt. Pleasant, April 9.—Special: The airship was seen by a number of citizens in this place last night about 9 o'clock. C.J. Martin says he is willing to make affidavit that about that time he saw a white light slowly moving through the air in a westerly direction. While he watched it the light turned to a dull red and then back to white again.

SEEN AGAIN LAST NIGHT.

Boone, April 9.—Special: The mysterious airship was seen by quite a number of reputable people here to-night, though not close enough to fully identify it with the descriptions heretofore published.

1897 April 10 (Sat) Iowa State Register, p. 5 (card 1)

THE AIRSHIP IN DES MOINES / Large Number of Des Moines Citizens Swear That They Saw the Ship Over This City. / Was Passing Toward the Northwest and Going With the Speed of a Whirlwind. / A Number of Legislators and Policemen Among Those Who Saw the Mysterious Light. /

Well, the air ship has struck Des Moines. At least there are a great many Des Moines citizens who will swear that they saw a mysterious light pass over the city on Friday night between the hours of 8 and 9 o'clock. About that time the telephone at The Register office was kept busy for a time answering calls from people who wanted to know "What is that mysterious light? Is it on the airship?" and all sorts of questions like that. Certain it is that something unusual transpired in the heavens Friday night for people would not telephone from all parts of the city at the same time and ask questions about something that has no existence. Whether it was an air ship or a paper balloon sent up by some joker it is certain that something unusual was afoot.

The first man to see the air ship or the mysterious light was Al Nichols, a veteran switchman, employed by the Rock Island, and a man to whom sobriety is second nature. He was coming toward Des Moines from home when his attention was attracted to a peculiar light in the heavens which seemed to be moving along at a rapid gait. It did not have the appearance of a star and the light was more like that of a huge lantern.

The next report of the phenomenon came in on a hot wire from the police station, when Sergeant Burns and Hayes called up The Register by telephone and excitedly claimed to have seen the air ship away off. All denied, some of them in a tone of pained indignation, having passed upon that cheer, and, with one acclaim, declared they were collectively and severally in a condition of beasty sobriety. "This is no fairy tale," exclaimed Sergeant Burns to a reporter who hurried to the station, where the officers were found standing in the police court room looking intently toward the Northwest at a light which seemed diminished to a speck on the remote horizon and a few minutes later wholly disappeared. "This is no fake," repeated Burns, his face the picture of sober earnestness. "We have been watching the light and a dark object that seemed to be above it for fifteen minutes. The light was much brighter than the most conspicuous star that blazes in the firmament. It appeared to raise and fall in gentle undulations as though sailing on rolling billows of the upper atmosphere. At times it would disappear only to reappear two or three seconds afterward. It also seemed to raise and fall, moving upward and gently descending as it sailed on in its trackless course on the ocean of the boundless atmosphere."

Detectives McNutt and Jones have been inclined to take the newspaper reports of the air ship in other places as a huge joke, but when they saw the mysterious light on Friday night their manner immediately changed. They even went up on the fourteenth floor of the Van Ginkel to watch the movement of the supposed air ship. From there they could get a better view of the affair, although it was then too far away to make out anything by the light. The light seemed to rise and fall gently and then for a few seconds to go out entirely as though the people on board the air ship were trying to attract the attention of everyone on the earth below them.

Dr. Howell, the veterinary surgeon; William Wells, the liverman; John Flannery, a city employe; Detective Jones, Detective Hardin, Detective McNutt, Al Nichols, of the Rock Island; Sergeant Burns and Sergeant Hayes, together with a number of representatives and senators who saw the light, are willing to testify as to the appearance in Des Moines of the airship and the whole affair is certainly very strange.

The chief train dispatcher of the Rock Island received telegrams from [Pella] and Monroe Friday evening that the air ship had been seen during the evening and as news was received from Boone that it had been seen there it is evident that this air ship or whatever it is, is crossing the state diagonally.

1897 April 10 (Sat) Marshalltown (Ia) Eve. Times-Republican, p. 3 (ed. 1)

AIRSHIP IN CHICAGO. / It Was Seen at Evanston and Pronounced Genuine.

Chicago, April 10.—"It" is here. "It" must be here because it was seen again last night at Evanston. This time it was seen by persons within the four mile limit. "It" is the airship which has been disturbing the inhabitants of western states for the last three weeks. The airship is supposed to have started from California. It is conjectured that it is on its way to Dwight, but that the strong wind of yesterday blew it out of its course. Several persons had seen the airship through strong cocktail glasses out west, but the fact that it was seen twice within the four mile limit of Evanston sets all such theories at rest forever.

Several persons in Chicago saw strange lights in the heavens about 9 o'clock. The lights traveled and it was at first thought they were shooting stars. Professor James Carter seized a glass and gazed at the celestial phenomenon. He declared it must be the airship.

Mount Carroll, April 10.—Hundreds of persons on the streets last night—persons whose honesty and truthfulness are beyond dispute—viewed the airship about 8:40 o'clock. It came from the northeast, and when opposite this city changed its course and went due west at a terrific speed. It was in sight at least ten minutes. It appeared oblong in shape and carried a great red light. In length it did not appear to be over eight or ten feet, and two or three feet high. So many people saw it there is no disputing the fact that something unusual appeared.

[Mount Carroll is 128 miles west of Chicago, and while the airship was passing over that town it was seen in this city from the direction of the Soldiers' Home.]

Egg-Shaped in Wisconsin.

Wausau, Wis., April 10.—The airship made its appearance in Wausau Thursday night about 10 o'clock and was viewed by at least 100 citizens. It came from the southeast, passing over the city going northwest. Lights could be seen attached to the ship, which appeared to be shaped like an egg.

Nebraska City, Neb., April 10.—At 9:30 o'clock Thursday night several persons observed the lights of the supposed airship approaching from the southeast, and after passing over the city it disappeared, going due northwest when last seen.

From the above it will be observed that the airship made its way from Nebraska City, Neb., to Wausau, Wis., in thirty minutes, and so far as indicated it showed no signs of distress. It was not even breathing hard.

SAW THE AIRSHIP. / Last Night It Was Headed for Des Moines.

Pella, April 10.—The airship passed through this city at about 10:30 o'clock last night, headed in the direction of Des Moines. It was observed by a number of people, including the Western Union operator, who distinctly located its line of flight. The descriptions given by those who saw the aerial monster agree with previously published accounts. Against the blackness of the sky its outline could be dimly made out, although it was sailing far above the earth. Unusual excitement was created by the strange visitation, and some of the more superstitious are inclined to view it with horror as something more than natural.

Arrives at Des Moines.

Des Moines, April 10.--The airship struck Des Moines between the hours of 8 and 9 o'clock last evening about the same time it was seen in Chicago, Evanston, etc. Dr. Howell, the veterinary surgeon; William Wells, the liveryman; John Flannery, a city employe; Detective Jones, Detective Hardin, Detective McNutt, Al Nichols, of the Rock Island; Sergeant Burns and Sergeant Hayes, together with a number of representatives and senators who saw the light, are willing to testify as to the appearance in Des Moines of the airship and the whole affair is certainly very strange.

The chief train dispatcher of the Rock Island received telegrams from Pella and Monroe Friday evening that the airship had been seen during the evening and as news was received from Boone that it had been seen there it is evident that this airship or whatever it is is crossing the state diagonally.

The Airship at Britt./Spec'd to the Times-Rep
Britt, April 10.--Our people are discussing the airship this morning. It passed here last night, coming from the southwest about 9 o'clock and disappeared in a northwesterly direction about two hours later. It traveled in an undulating course, sometimes slow and sometimes as fast as a railroad train, and changed its course as if guided by a rudder. Several hundred people saw it. When first seen it was about the size of an electric arc light, and when it disappeared, probably twenty-five miles distant, it was about the size of a wax taper.

1897 April 10 (Sat) Eve. Times-Republican (Marshalltown, Ia), p. 1 (cd. 1)

DID YOU SEE IT? / That "Airship" Seen by Numerous People in Marshalltown Friday Night. / Also Seen Thursday Night--Probability That It Is a Planet Making Regular Trips.

That bright moving light that has been seen bobbing around over the states of Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa for the past two weeks, called an airship by many, was seen in Marshalltown last night. A large number of well known and reliable citizens viewed the stranger and opinion is divided as to what it is, although the general belief is that it is one of the planets on its regular trips.

The mysterious visitor, if it may be called such, was first seen shortly before 8 o'clock. It attracted the attention of some one, who telephoned up town and a large crowd congregated along North Center street, as it could be seen from there best, other views being shut off by buildings. Officer Jones, George Sieg and scores of others who happened to be up town saw it. A bright light was seen a little north of west. It was of a much deeper red than an ordinary star, and the crowd watched it until it had disappeared in the northwest behind the buildings and trees. Mr. Sieg says the object looked to him very much like one of the planets. Officer Jones viewed it through different eyes, and says it was too red for a star. Varying views were expressed. One man drew heavily on his imagination and was heard to say: "See it sway!"

The belief that the so-called mysterious object is a planet is strengthened by the fact that the same thing was seen here on Thursday night. Mr. A.S. Richards, foreman of the Times-Republican composing room, was on his way home about 9 p.m. Mr. Richards lives in the western part of the city and was going towards home on Main street. Through the tree tops he saw a bright light, which attracted his attention for some time. When he emerged from under the trees that lined the street he looked again to get a better view, but the object had disappeared from view--probably behind the clouds that were gathering. Mr. Richards thought nothing more of the matter until late Friday, when he read the telegraphic accounts coming to the Times-Republican, and from the reports sent from other places he knew that he had seen the same thing.

He was on the lookout again last night, and saw the same object. About 8 o'clock he saw what appeared to be a bright star--much brighter than the rest--in the northwest. He watched it for an hour, the view from his place being unobscured by either trees or buildings. The object seemed to be moving slowly to the northwest, and about 9 o'clock disappeared beyond the horizon. The lover it went towards the horizon the deeper was the red assumed, the appearance being the same as that of the sun when it sets on a hazy evening. He thinks the object is undoubtedly a planet and that its deep red is caused by the same atmospheric conditions that make the sun appear like a ball of fire on a hazy evening.

Many stories have been told regarding this mysterious floater. One is to the effect that from one place the form of an airship could be easily seen; from another place comes the story that the airship was so close that shouts and laughter of the occupants could be heard. But from here it simply appeared like an immense star, moving through the heavens, and this is probably what it really is.

Among those who saw it Friday night were K.C. Cooley and Charles Drum and family, who watched it until it had disappeared from view behind the trees and buildings.

It is very probable, if the sky is clear, that the same airship--one of nature's own--can be seen tonight shortly after 7 o'clock.

On the other hand some of the citizens who are more or less familiar with astronomy do not believe the object is a planet for the reason that it seems to move too fast. Uncle David Farrett, who knows as much about the movement of the planets as any one in Marshalltown, says it can not be Venus, because that planet is not so bright. He thinks perhaps some one is sending up a balloon, and that it is possible that the machinery is out of order and the valve can not be opened to let the gas escape and allow the balloon to settle.

Some hold to the belief that the bright light is from a balloon that some one is sending up for advertising purposes. The question arises, if it is a balloon, how does it happen that it is seen in various parts of the state almost at the same time? Again, why does it seem to be traveling to the northwest all of the time?

1897 April 10 (Sat) eve. Waterloo Daily Courier, P. 1 (cd. 1)

WAS IT THE AIR SHIP? / COMOTION ON B.C.R. & N. / Story of a Veracious Traveling Man. Is it a Fake or Is it a Reality? /

C.H. Schroder, traveling salesman for the Murray Iron Works, at Burlington, says he never saw so much comotion on a train as was caused by the appearance of the supposed airship while on his way to this city. When seen this morning Mr. Schroder said that he did not take any stock in airships, but the sight was surely a mysterious one. "Soon after leaving Burlington," said Mr. Schroder, "a couple of fellows boarded the train and said they had seen the much-talked-of airship. The announcement rapidly spread and there was a scramble for good view-points. The excitement grew intense when the passengers saw a large red light in the sky towards the west. It seemed to have a sort of quivering motion. I could see nothing but a bright light."

Mr. Schroder went on further to say that in his opinion the light was nothing more or less than the evening star, Venus, which is so plainly visible in the west at this time. But there are hundreds of people along the line of the B.C.R.&N. who claim to have seen the mysterious aerial navigator. The Cedar Rapids Republican says it was visible from that city for more than an hour one evening last week, and was seen by more than a score of people with more than usual interest. It was shortly after 8 o'clock that the B.C.R.&N. operator at Vinton flashed the startling news over the wires into the dispatcher's office in Cedar Rapids, that the air ship was to be seen in the northwestern heavens. A reporter for the Republican was notified of this fact and in company with several gentlemen went to the dispatcher's offices where several others were already gazing into the northwest.

When first seen the mysterious object was at an angle of 35 or 40 degrees from the horizon and seemed to be about twice the size of the largest and brightest star. In fact it did not look different from an immense star. With the naked eye it could be easily seen that the mysterious stranger was swaying from side to side and that it was rapidly traveling in a northerly direction. It sank lower and lower and at 10 o'clock had disappeared behind the horizon.

The mysterious visitor was followed at the dispatcher's offices even after it had disappeared from view. Night operators along the line were notified to be on the lookout for it. At 10:30 o'clock a wire from the operator at Northwood said that the air ship was seen directly west of that city and apparently was traveling in a northwesterly direction.

What this mysterious object is must remain a matter of conjecture. It was first seen by people in Kansas about two weeks ago. Since then it has been seen from a number of different places. There has been considerable in the newspapers in regard to it. But a large number of people have regarded the stories as ~~were~~ fakes, so improbable did it all seem. There are scores of people in Cedar Rapids and many more all along the line of the B.C.R.&N. north of there who saw the object Thursday night who are willing to take their oath that it is a reality.

At 1:15 o'clock Friday morning further reports had been received regarding the mysterious air ship.

It was followed as far as Waseca, Minn., over B.C.R.&N. and M. & St. L. wires, where it was lost on account of clouds.

Whether this is really an air ship, which some genius has constructed in some out of the way place, stored it with provisions for a long voyage and then suspending from it an immense beacon light and started out to amaze the people and keep them in a state of excitement; whether it is some heavenly body floating recklessly around in space or whether it is a visitor on its way from some of the other planets to the earth, can only be surmised. It's something, that is certain.

Many stories have been told regarding this mysterious floater. One is to the effect that from one place the form of the airship could easily be seen; from another place comes the story that the airship was so close that shouts and laughter could be heard.

Seen at Evanston.

Today's Chicago papers tell of the appearance of the air ship at Evanston, Ill., as follows:

"The airship caused considerable excitement among a party of nearly 200 residents, who assembled on Davis street, Evanston, to watch its movements through a powerful field glass. It was first observed by Robert Loven of No. 1926 Sherran avenue, who is employed in the jewelry store of L. Frikson at No. 552 Davis street. The jeweler was standing in the store door when his attention was attracted by a moving light in the heavens. The light appeared to be over the lake, but a short way out, and was moving in a westerly direction. The object was at first mistaken for a falling star, but as it traveled across the heavens and held an even course Loven became curious and secured a strong field glass from the store through which to watch it.

At first the light was hidden by the clouds, but when it emerged into the clear sky Loven was able to discern four lights, located but a short distance apart and moving in unison. The first was a bright, ~~white~~ white light and appeared to have the swing of a search light, throwing its rays first to one side and then the other. Directly back of it was a smaller green light and further to the rear were a white and green light set closely together. Loven was unable to believe the existence of the colors and thought that they were due to an illusion. He called several passers-by to look at the lights through the glass and all pronounced them of the colors green and white.

JOE SAW IT. / J.K. Joder Gets Within Talking Distance of the Air Ship Sailors. /

... side bluff, was going here about 1 o'clock this morning and when near the corner of Washington and West Fourth streets was filled with wonder and awe on beholding what seemed to be a monstrous bat gliding through the air, and coming toward him from the east.

For a moment all that he could see was an immense black object with what seemed to be eyes of fire, but as it approached and glided down into the road, he remembered what he had heard of and read of the mysterious airship and at once decided to investigate. He was too frightened to make accurate observations, but tells a very plausible story of what followed.

"I succeeded in approaching within about a hundred feet of the airship," said Mr. Joder today, "and would have had quite a story to tell you, but for one thing--the sailors were all foreigners. I am quite sure they were Poles, for they were small in stature and dressed in furs. They talked fluently I suppose, but I couldn't understand a word. I could understand from their actions that they had stopped for repairs. It was also apparent that they were very hungry, but they said by the use of signs, that they thought it would be of no use to ask for a hand-out in Waterloo, because Jack Casbeer didn't come down proper when they went over town a few nights since. The necessary repairs were soon made and they were up and off."

See April 21 (last) Burlington, Ia., Hawk-Eye, p. 1. (para 1)

THE AIR-SHIP. / Burlington People Have Imaginations as Vivid as Others / A Balloon Went Up Last Night Produces All the Details Noted Elsewhere--Imagination Does It. /

Day after day reports have been received from points in California, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Wisconsin and Illinois, concerning a mysterious light which has appeared, traversed the heavens and disappeared in a most puzzling manner. Someone suggested that it might be an airship and that the inventor was making his tests at night. Forthwith came reports of people seeing signals flashed back and forth across the heavens and some went so far as to distinguish voices, music, laughter and singing. Paddles, rotary screws and wings were being seen by so many and the descriptions given by them were so complete that the metropolitan papers began to publish drawings purporting to be accurate in all the essential details. Of course The Hawk-Eye, like all the other leading papers, has given a great deal of space to the dispatches and reproduced learned editorials on the subject. Yesterday, however, The Hawk-Eye decided to make a test and see if it were not possible to produce results identical with those following or attending the appearance of the alleged airship.

Three hot-air balloons, made of red, white and blue paper, were purchased of Reynolds & Rollason, at the enormous expense of 25 cents each. Three balloons were secured so that if one should take fire while heating the air, the reserve supply of the men who were to launch the "air ship" might be drawn upon.

The wind was blowing from the northeast when at exactly 8 o'clock two members of the Hawk-Eye force took the package of balloons and started north along the B. & C.R. M. R.R. tracks and proceeded till they reached the basket factory. It was the intention to send up the balloon from the long stairs on the North Hill bluff so that the wind would carry it directly above the crowded streets.

A young man and his girl were sitting on the steps holding on to each other as if each was afraid the other would fall off, so a change of plan was made, as it was desired that the experiment be known only to the few actually engaged in it. Just north of the basket factory was another flight of stairs and at the foot of the stairs on the road the package was untied. The first balloon unrolled was over 20 feet in circumference and six feet in height. It closely resembled in shape the inverted bulb of an incandescent light. The balloon had three stripes running vertically, one of red, one of white and one of blue. These stripes or sections were six feet in width at the widest part and extended from top to bottom. The opening at the bottom was distended by a wire about a foot in circumference and running across was another wire in the middle of which was a bunch of some inflammable composition. While one held the sides of the balloon outward from the base, the other Hawk-Eye representative lighted the fuse and in an instant the composition was burning fiercely. As the air became heated it rushed upward and in about a minute the sides were bulging and nearly every wrinkle was cut of the paper. Another minute passed and the now bulky but flimsy balloon began to sway and appeared anxious to ascend. At 8:20 it was released and shot upward with great rapidity. As soon as it had reached the top of the bluff the strong northeasterly wind caught it and sent it in a southwesterly direction at a rate of perhaps twenty miles an hour. The Hawk-Eye representatives ran up the steps, but when they reached the street the balloon was at such a height and had passed so far southward that its appearance was that of a red ball. The unsteady currents of air caused it to sway gently from side to side and partially turn it. Sometimes the light shining through the red paper gave it a red appearance. Then the blue or white side would appear and the color would of course, change.

Hurrying down Fourth street the reporters followed as fast as their wearied limbs would allow. All the way down the street crowds of people could be seen on door steps and street corners, gazing eagerly as the fast disappearing light.

"It had a reflector as big as a bushel basket," said a woman in a group on a door step. "Say, kids, I'm going ter stay here all night and see the airship when it comes back," said a boy in a crowd on the North Hill park. "It was as big as a house," said another party near the site of the new library building.

On Jefferson street the excitement was intense. Everybody was discussing it. Some claimed it had a red light, some that it had a green light and some that it had two lights. The whirling motion caused by air currents had evidently caused the various sides and colors to appear and disappear. Where two lights were seen it was evident that the white side had been turned toward the spectator and a part of the blue and a part of the red would be visible on opposite sides of the white light.

About the time the balloon reached a point above Division street it ~~took~~ took a more westerly direction. Its height had gradually increased until it was about seven hundred feet above the city, although excited spectators variously estimated its height at from 2,000 to 3,000 feet. The vest bound extra which takes the through freight from here to points between Mt. Pleasant to Ottumwa, had just pulled out. Shields was conductor and from Mt. Pleasant to Rome he claims to have raced with it. /

At the corner of Third and Washington streets a great crowd gathered to see the supposed wonder. The report was brought there that people in Hibernia had been watching the "airship" since the hour of half-past six, or nearly two hours before the balloon went up. Possibly the Hibernia brand is of a character that leads its participants to see what is going to happen. /

Deckmann's barber shop under the Merchants' National Bank was full of customers when the aerial was visitor was announced and in an instant the shop was emptied of both barbers and customers; even those in the chairs rushed out with lather on their faces and shampoo on their heads. /

One observer telephoned to The Hawk-Eye office that he saw the "headlight" change from white to red. This may be accounted for by the rotation of the balloon which had white and red stripes alternating. But this observer added that he could discern the green light in the "rear." Here is where the play of the imagination came in. He averred also that the "ship" was moving westward at the rate of forty miles an hour and the closeness of his calculation was verified shortly after by a telephone message from Mt. Pleasant, where the "ship" was sighted just forty minutes after its appearance here. /

Among the group of observers at the corner of Third and Washington streets one was found who described the movement of the ship in this way: "It came directly down Third street from the north and at Washington street it turned due west, then gradually veered off to the southwest and was lost sight of behind the Congregational church. It sailed along steadily, occasionally oscillating up and down." /

Yesterday the Hawk-Eye discovered a man who saw the airship Wednesday night. Mr. James Dunn, who has been long in the employ of Bond & Co. He lives on South Marshall street. At 9 o'clock his son and a neighbor's son came in from the street and told him there was a moving light in the sky. He went out and saw it himself. The boys said it had passed from south to north but when Mr. Dunn himself saw it it was receding to the west, in which /p.2/ direction it disappeared. Wednesday night was the night when the spectre ship of the air was seen in so many places to the north along the line of the B. & C.R.M. Mr. Dunn never claimed that what he saw was an airship, he only maintains that he saw the moving light in the sky. /

Among the reports received last night was one from Mt. Pleasant. The crew on a special freight going west caught sight of the airship at Middletown and passed directly under it nearing Mt. Pleasant. They got a good view but owing to its height could see nothing but the lights. One says he saw one huge light which at times disappeared. Another claims to have distinctly seen two lights, one red and the other green, and that the ship was traveling southwestward. /

A report from Evans, a town on the Rock Island road, about 100 miles from Burlington, says the airship passed that place at exactly 9:10. It having passed Burlington at 8:30 it is beyond doubt ~~that~~ traveling at the terrific speed of 100 miles in forty minutes and going in two directions at once. /

Quite a number of those who saw the balloon at once pronounced it a "toy balloon," but declared that its lighting arrangement and the manner of regulating the colored lights was something they could not understand. Some who had been directly beneath it when it passed over declared that the flickering light at once disclosed its true character. /

One of the most amusing incidents occurred at the Union Depot. A train had arrived and a night hackman had opened the door of his vehicle, preparatory to soliciting patronage when his eye caught the rapidly moving light above. "Air ship!" he yelled. "There it is right up there, say boys I was born lucky, sure. I wouldn't have missed this for $4,000. Jizminy! If I had a spy-glass." Travelers, hackmen, and depot loungers ran to the west side of the building and watched the light till it disappeared. The crowd had all gone when the hackman remembered his calling. "I may have lost a 50-cent fare," said one hackman, "but I wouldn't ~~have~~ have missed seeing that airship. Why that's something to remember as long as you live." /

Two things are noticeable in the various reports received by telephone and otherwise. The disparity in time and the speed. Many claim that the "airship" traveled at a rate of forty miles an hour and others at half that figure. The time has varied from 6:30 to 8:30. It is barely possible that some joker sent up one at half-past six which a few claim to have seen, but The Hawk-Eye balloon which caused the excitement was sent up at 8:20 p.m. /

One man, a reputable citizen, claimed to have heard a hissing sound. Another thought he saw the light being reflected in different directions. /

Only one observer, of a scientific turn of mind, tried to measure the "air ship." He estimated that if it was 2,000 feet above the city, it could not be less than eighty feet in length to make such a showing as it did. /

One railroad man met a reporter of the Hawk-Eye about 9 p.m., and stated that he was willing to make an affidavit that it was some kind of an "air ship." /

In the restaurants, cigar stores, barber shops and other places of business there was only one subject for conversation after the balloon passed over. /

The object of The Hawk-eye in sending up the balloon was not to deceive anyone, either as a hoax or to create a sensation, but to demonstrate that such a simple thing is the explanation of the "air ship" craze now passing over the country. How easy it would be, for instance, for a traveling man to carry a dozen of these air ships in his trunk and, at the end of each long jump on his route, go to some quiet spot and set one adrift to puzzle and excite the people who saw it. The fact that The Hawk-eye balloon was seen as far west as Rome, Iowa, proves its adaptability for such a purpose. It would be fair to assure that the "air ship" about which so much has been written is identical in kind with that which was sent up last evening by The Hawk-eye. /

On Monday evening The Hawk-eye will send up another balloon similar to the one sent up last night. The ascension will be made from the roof of The Hawk-eye building and the people of the city are invited to witness the ascension, which will take place at 8:30 sharp, unless stormy weather causes a postponement. / LAUGH AT AIRSHIP STORY. / Professor Hough, of Chicago, Believes It But a Star.

Chicago, April 10.--(Special).--The average person--untutored in the mysteries of science--who saw the vari-colored moving lights in the sky last evening, firmly believes they shone from an air ship. The scientist--wise in his knowledge of the movements of the heavenly bodies--believes the lights came from the star, Alpha Orionis of the constellation Orion. Thus the matter stands--the opinion of the masses launched against the learned minority.

Old men declared they had never seen the like before; mothers gathered their children about them half fearfully; the little ones gazed heavenward in open-eyed wonder, and old toppers rubbed their eyes and took the pledge.

Prof. G.W. Hough of the Dearborn observatory was the first to advance the star solution of the mystery. Entrenched behind his books and charts he laughed at the flying ship story. He failed, however, to catch the object with his telescope.

Prof. S.W. Burnham, the astronomer, agrees with this explanation. He did not see the moving lights, but his explanation sounds plausible. He said:

"Alpha Orionis is a star of the first magnitude. Its position in the northern sky, its parti-colored lights, make a striking object, shining through misty clouds, and aided by refraction it would give the appearance of a rapidly moving body. One's imagination could easily give strange form to it. This star, too, looks to be but a comparatively short distance above the earth."

Burlington's Airship at Danville.

Danville, Ia., April 10.--(Correspondence).--The mysterious air ship was seen passing over this place this afternoon at 6:30 by Wm. Speelman, section foreman. It came from an easterly direction, but was quite high and looked very small. Was not much larger in appearance than a large star. This town is strictly a prohibition town and as Mr. Speelman is also an abstainer we have no reasons for questioning the matter, but accept it for a fact.

1897 April 11 (Sun morn) Burlington Hawk-eye, p. 2. (card 1)

NEARBY NOTES AND GOSSIP

The Fairfield Daily Journal did not believe much in the airship. Referring to the report that the aerial craft had been seen in that city it says: "The air ship is the main topic of conversation on the streets to-day. It is estimated that at least a hundred people watched Venus last night for nearly an hour under the supposition that it was an evidence that some man had successfully solved the problem of aerial navigation. We believe that air ships are only a question of a very short time but the man who makes the first ship will not stab around in the dark with it." /

The first heard of the air ship was in Kansas some three weeks ago. St. Louis and Kansas City papers devoted a great deal of space to it having been seen at different points by reputable people. Then Nebraska, after considerable chaffing, got down to business and the Omaha Bee published a serious article, stating that some machine of elliptical form which went through the air at a high rate of speed with an immense & bright search light in front and colored lantern in the rear, had been seen in the air, rising, falling and changing its course and otherwise conducting aerial evolutions. While Kansas and Nebraska were puzzling over the strange phenomena, Iowa and Illinois papers were scoffing at the idea, but now they are busy speculating on the reality of it. The first seen of the air ship in Iowa was at Vinton several days ago. Then Belle Plaine saw it, and it was afterwards seen at Albia and other points mentioned in The Hawk-eye. /

Now Chicago has seen it. The wise journalists of that city have been uttering all sorts of nonpareil jokes about it, one even suggesting that Dr. Keeley should start a few branch institutes in Iowa (evidently forgetting that we have a dozen or so already). Now they are bursting with accounts of the strange aerial vessel which many people of that city, "renowned for sobriety and truthfulness," solemnly declare to have seen Friday night. It was first seen by a man in the Hartford building, who with a companion, ascended to the roof and gazed upon it. According to the testimony of these gentlemen the thing, airship, or whatever it may be, answered all the specifications and descriptions of the monster that has disturbed the worthy citizens of Nebraska, Iowa and Kansas for the last three weeks. It carried a red light to port and a green light to starboard, which is eminently proper in aerial circles, and the only course of action which a respectable and well-regulated air ship would think of pursuing. It wobbled and wiggled, which was also down in air ship tactics, and seemed to oscillate as if breasting the billowy swells of the blue cerulean. Likewise it took the form of a cross [!] and flamed out at rare intervals in other abstruse mathematical symbols. This course of action is to be particularly noted as being entirely original. From data heretofore gathered, such actions have never before been observed. But Chicago wouldn't be Chicago if she couldn't have things a little different from the rest of the country. /

Classical Evanston also saw the thing. The Chicago Record says: "Evanston men, women and children stood out on Davis field last night, and, with mouth agape, gazed into the heavens. Men, renowned for sobriety, looked aloft through strong telescopes and field glasses, and people who had passed successful examinations for color-blindness looked alos. All said they saw the same quartet of lights--two white, two green--sailing from the lake toward the west. And, as unanimously all agreed that the strange lights were the beacon signals of the Kansas air ship."

After the strange craft had passed Chicago, "going west," it was seen at Miles Center, Ill.

Now comes a puzzler. The Chicago and Evanston observations were made about 9 o'clock when the vessel was seen coming from over the lake and moving "in a westerly direction." Now comes testimony from Mount Carroll, Illinois, that "hundreds of people on our streets to-night, who honestly and truthfulness are beyond dispute, viewed the airship about 8:40 o'clock. It came from the northwest, and when opposite this city changed its course and went due west at a terrific speed. It was in sight at least ten minutes. It appeared oblong in shape and carried a great red light. In length it did not appear to be over eight or ten feet and two or three feet high. So many people saw it that there is no disputing the fact that something unusual appeared."

Now if the Mount Carroll people saw it at 8:40 "going west," it must be an extraordinary monster of be able to jump about at so lively a gait as to appear "going west" over Chicago at 9:15 a hundred miles east; or else there must be a flock of airships disporting themselves in various portions of the cerulean vault.

This last supposition would explain the remarkable fact that the air ship was seen at Fairfield, Mt. Pleasant, Solon, West Liberty, Vinton, Cedar Rapids and on the Minnesota line Thursday night all between the hours of 8:30 and 10:30, and in each case going either "west" or "northwest," it being obviously impossible for one airship to cover such a wide stretch of territory within the two hours named. /

The fact that one man claims to have seen the airship passing over Burlington has given a rise to much discussion among many scientific people here as to its identity. One gentleman says it is possible that a remarkable series of practical jokes is being played on the people of the country, suggested to natural practical jokers throughout the land by a species of mental telegraphy which suggests to each that he shall secretly send up a paper balloon or kite hung with red lanterns and allow it to float with the breeze over the city.

That this mental suggestion would not be unlikely is realized by the gossipier who was walking along the street the other evening with a friend and talking about the airship. Both pause in the conversation for a short while, evidently thinking over the phenomenon, when both said "Say," and then stopped. The Gossiper's friend said, "Well; what?"

"Why, I was just thinking," said the Gossiper, "what a good joke it would be to get one of those paper--"

"Hold on!" exclaimed the Friend, "you were going to say paper balloons--the hot air kind. Well, I was just about to suggest a small silk balloon, when you spoke."

"Wait," said the Gossiper. "What are you going to do with your balloon?"

"Just what you were!"

"Why, I was going to say it would be fun to find out the direction of the wind--"

"Exactly; and send up you balloon secretly and let it sail over the city."

"Yes, and I'll wager you every soul who saw it would swear it was the air ship."

"And they would all be sober, truthful people and would swear they saw a shining hull, colored lights; and two wing-like extensions on either side, and heard a hissing sound!"

Now if that identical idea could enter the minds of the Gossiper and his friend at the same moment, why could it not enter the minds of various persons at widely distributed points and be acted upon with complete satisfaction to their joke-loving souls?

...
Since the above relative to balloons was written, the Gossiper has more cause than ever to believe in mental telegraphy. While he was writing that matter yesterday afternoon three other gentlemen in the city were concocting this scheme to send up the hot air balloon which caused so much air ship excitement last night, and the Gossiper was utterly ignorant of the fact till after the above was in type. From this date the Gossiper swears off on air ships.

1897 April 11 (Sun) Burlington, Ia., Daily Hawk-eye, p. 4. (card 1)

THE AIRSHIP.

Science, as usual, comes to the rescue. Given the opportunity, it always penetrates the mists of credulity and superstition; and if the opportunity does not present itself, science forces the fighting and eventually wins.

Our readers may have noticed and commented upon the omnipresent character of the reputed "air ship" that has been seen in various western states for several days, or nights, past. By some unaccountable legerdemain, the air-ship with its varied colored lights, which passed a town in western Iowa or in Nebraska, would be seen at the same hour passing over towns and cities in eastern Iowa, and Illinois and Wisconsin. This persistent universality of the aerial visitor puzzled those who were disposed to regard the phenomenon as a human device and led to the shifty conclusion that a fleet of air-ships were hovering over the United States.

But while astronomers like Flammarion and Schiaparelli are addicted to the vivid imagination habit, they nevertheless generally fortify themselves with a phalanx of facts and reasonable probabilities to sustain their theories. Astronomers, as a class, are hard-headed fellows and are not fond of seeing "as through a glass darkly." They want a square view, many times repeated, before they reach conclusions.

Prof. Hough, of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, turned his gaze on the alleged air-ship. He did not let his imagination run riot with visions of "a locomotive headlight," the dim outline of a steel-frame air-ship, nor did his ear catch the "hissing sound" of the strange vessel when speeding through the air. Prof. Hough, the matter-of-fact astronomer, thought it was the erratic Alpha Orionis, a star of the first magnitude, a noted fast traveler, with a job lot of vari-colored lights in its repertoire, which, in certain atmospheric conditions play fantastic tricks with imaginative sightseers. As seen with and without the use of glasses, the white light was the more brilliant and appeared to be oscillating as if it were a search light being swung back and forth. The red and green lights, it was said, were like the ordinary side lights required under the navigation law. The lights moved westward and soon disappeared.

Alpha Orionis comes on the stage early in the evening, and its course across the heavens is about the same as that of the moon. The star is usually bright in a clear atmosphere and appears to be close to the earth, but we don't believe it was so close to the globe that our friends in Iowa could hear the "awish" of its passage through the air, as one correspondent averred. What he heard was the wheels in his head. He ought always to make the distinction. This is essential in scientific investigation.

The "airship" seen at various points appears simultaneously at all of them in the same longitude, and displays the same characteristics of lights: brilliant white, green and red, and gradually disappearing. The illusion was perfect, and it is not surprising that many people were led to believe it a veritable airship, especially as many experiments are being made with flying machines, some of which have attained to an encouraging degree of success justifying the belief that in the near future aerial navigation, to a limited extent, and under favoring meteorological conditions will be practicable.

Since writing the foregoing, the "airship" has passed by Burlington, as a "ship in the night," and has been seen by hundreds of our citizens. A full account of the event will be found in our local columns. This indisputable fact, (in the language of the old-time printer), "knocks Galley west," our learned exposition of the mystery founded upon Professor Hough's statement. For the nonce, science retires to its roost and awaits developments. Science has often done that and is an adept at retreat. That which has passed as a scientific truth in one generation has been renounced as heresy in the next. An exact science is unknown, perhaps unknowable. That is why the general public of Iowa has so little patience with the state board of health and its pet medical practice bill. Not only the physicians of this age repudiate many of the theories, teachings and practice of their predecessors, but shut up a round dozen of them in a room to diagnose and prescribe for a patient and they would not agree. And yet they insist that all who heal diseases must be cast in the same mould as themselves! So also in geology and other departments of science--the exact truth is an object of exploitation.

If the hundreds of citizens of Burlington who saw the "airship" last night and went to bed thoroughly convinced that it was an established fact, because they had seen it with their own eyes, as had the people of many other cities and towns, will carefully study the local columns of The Hawk-Eye this morning, they will discover how unreliable is the evidence of the human senses. The airship was an illuminated balloon, sent up by The Hawk-Eye to determine whether the reputed scenes in other places could be reproduced in Burlington so as to be as convincing to those who saw it here as it has been to all who have seen the alleged airship elsewhere. The experiment was a success and a complete demonstration that the airships seen at other points in Iowa and adjoining states were similar devices. The Hawk-Eye's expose of the mystery now rings down the curtain on a sensation that, strangely enough, has held the attention of the public for several weeks.

"Kitch your wagon to a star," but don't imagine it is an airship.

TO THE AIRSHIP / (After Byron.)
Oh, thou beautiful / And unapproachable flyer! and / Ye multiplying masses of increased / And still increasing lights! What are ye? What is this blue wilderness of interminable / Air, where ye roll along, as I have seen / The leaves along the limpid streams of Eden? /
Is your course measur'd for ye? Or do ye / Sweep on in your unbounded revelry / Through an aerial universe of endless / Air line tracks--at which my soul aches to think-- / With your red, green and white signals?
1897 April 11 (Sun) Des Moines Leader, p. 23 (card 1)

INTERESTED IN THE "AIRSHIP." /
Lake City, Iowa, April 10.--Ed. Register: Your Register giving the several observations of the strange phenomenon of April 19 [?], 1897 was read with great interest. Even the communications of the Absurd gave light upon the subject. The same phenomenon being observed by different ~~many~~ persons far distant from each other and at about the same time of evening, to-wit 8(?) or 9 o'clock, certainly sets aside the theory of an airship. No energy of light producing power could be visible at Ade, Penora [?], Lake City and Sioux City and points in southwestern Minnesota within an hour of the same time.

Permit me to advance a theory with a view of arriving at some correct conclusion about the stranger of April 10, 1897, viewed from above named places about the same time. We do not hear of this strange visitor, so far as I have been able to learn, east of the state of Michigan, and we must remember that, commencing with the state of Michigan and comprising the northern valley of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, there has been the great rainfall and ~~wet~~ weather for last of March and middle of April, 1897. The atmosphere has been heavily charged with moisture, and in such a case the vapor of different densities, and that, too, in bodies floating, shirting and of different forms. All the stars of April 10, 1897, shone more brilliantly than normal because of the condition of the atmosphere. Most persons have seen a ~~piece~~ piece of money or some solid object placed by an empty vessel, and standing at a given point could not see it, but fill the vessel with clear water and the object can plainly be seen. This is caused by the refraction of the rays of light. Often in summer, morning or during the day, houses or towns or objects below the view are brought into plain sight by the condition of the atmosphere, and we call it a mirage. On the ocean ships entirely hidden from view are for a while distinctly seen and then as suddenly go out of sight. Did any of you ever stop to calculate the angle of the refracted rays of light? Did you ever stop to think, as on the coast, the ship passed through this strange condition of the air or that it flowed by?

The angle of reflection and the angle of refraction are very different, refraction being the greater. Refraction is not always the same. The density has much to do with making the angle of refraction, and the curvature and angle of light passing ~~in~~ in any direction has much more to do with it. Take an equilateral triangle and the refraction is greater than a quadrangle. The first outline being directed away from the point of view and the other perpendicular to the point of view. Now, consider the air having floating bodies of this different densities in it of different forms so that the angle in its direction ~~of~~ towards a star would pass through this unnatural atmosphere (as we call it for explanation), it would give the star a position not true. Then let a space come which is not charged with this peculiar density fitted for the phenomena of a mirage, and quietly come to ~~another~~ another body of same density while looking at the same star, the star to the person would seem to move quickly across that space, and if the refraction was towards opposite points in the different bodies, the star would seem to move very rapidly, and the same would make eccentricities and dodging movements to the eye. Take a tank of water, say twelve feet long by two feet high and two feet wide, having a glass bottom, and have the box divided into different departments, some fitted with clear water and others empty, and then draw a piece of money along under this glass bottom on the further ~~side~~ side from the person watching it, and it could be seen and not seen as it passed the filled spaces and empty spaces in the box, and the piece of money then would seem to dodge up and down, according to its position on the bottom of the glass. Not wishing to contradict any one about what they saw or heard the evening of April 10, 1897, but so far as I am concerned I now believe, for all my caution, that the strange light passing ~~west~~ [] northwest by Lake City, Iowa, the evening of April 10, 1897, was the star Venus. The condition of the atmosphere did cause to the eye the evening star Venus to present sudden flights and to pass in ~~the~~ its courses fixed stars far beyond it. From some places there seems to be no explanation of what parties really saw, unless we permit strange [] conditions in the air which floats an "C []". Should this floating substance present to us its triangular surface and floating just above the horizon, the star would be ~~for~~ for some time, and then when the sight left this atmosphere, so the clearer sky below the star would ~~as~~ suddenly drop out of sight. Now, remember this same phenomenon could not very probably be seen by all the different observers from different points, no more than a cloud would intervene between different places between them and the (sun). / M. F. MCCREARY,
1897 April 11 (Sun) Iowa State Register, p. 3. (card 1)

THE MYSTERIOUS "AIRSHIP." / Opinions Differ as to What It Can Really Be.

Winton, April 9.--The mysterious airship that was seen by several of our prominent people last Thursday night made its appearance again last night, and was seen by hundreds from various points of view in our city. In fact, the walks were almost lined with people who watched the movements of this strange visitor, or whatever it is, for half an hour. It was first observed in a southwesterly direction, and was observed to be traveling last night as before, to the northwest, appearing as a brilliant arc light. It appeared both evenings at an angle of forty degrees altitude, and was estimated to be perhaps eight to ten miles away, travelling to and fro and varying in altitude from twenty to forty degrees, being all the time clearly visible to the naked eye. Just what this strange object is remains to all here a wonderful mystery and conjecture. It seems to be the general opinion of those who witnessed the strange phenomenon that it is really an airship which some inventive genius has constructed, and in which he is traversing the globe. Again there are some who think it some heavenly body or visitation from on high floating recklessly around in space, or visitors traveling from one planet to another. To those who had regarded the stories of this mysterious object as fakes have all the gloom and doubts of their mind dispelled by this second appearance last night.

Cedar Rapids, April 10.--Special: The mysterious airship was seen in Iowa again to-night. Shortly after 7 o'clock this evening the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern agent at Shell Rock, in the northern part of the state, reported to the general offices in this city that the airship was visible from there. He said that he could see a quarter of an hour. Then the excitement in the down-town districts became intense. It was reported that attempts were being made to anchor the machine.

A Mr. Mayer, a traveling man, had a field glass ranged on the machine and said he distinctly saw four men in it. Stationkeeper Harry Moore, of the Central police station, saw it distinctly and was one of the few who did not at the same time lose his head. He says:

"The machine or whatever it was, anchored or stopped directly over the city hall. The light which I saw was suspended from a large, dark oval-shaped object, the shadow of which could be distinctly seen. In fact, it could be seen so plainly that I could discern the wheels working. I did not see any one in it, but any one who claims that the thing I saw floating over the city hall is a star simply don't know what he is talking about. I saw it too distinctly to be fooled. It was, I should judge, about 1,000 feet above the city hall.

After hovering about for fifteen minutes it went back and disappeared in the northeast.

AIRSHIP INVENTOR WRITES. / Offers to Exhibit the Ship at Omaha Exposition.

Omaha, Neb., April 12.--The mysterious airship, which has caused the veracity of many reputable citizens to be questioned, promises to be cleared up within a few days through the medium of the trans-Mississippi exposition. Either this is a fact or a stupendous hoax is to be perpetrated on the exposition authorities. In the mail Secretary Wakefield received a letter dated at Omaha and bearing the postmark Omaha. The letter was signed "A.C. Clinton," and read as follows:

"To the Exposition Directors: My identity up to date has been unknown, but I will come to the front now, if you guarantee me 870,000 square feet of space. I am the famous airship constructor and will guarantee you positively of this fact in a week. The airship is my own invention, and as I am an Omaha man I wish it to be held as an Omaha invention. It will carry safely twenty people to the height of from 10,000 to 20,000 feet. I truly believe I have the greatest invention and discovery ever made. Will see you April 17, 1897, at the headquarters."

The writer gave no address. The amount of space asked for by the writer of this letter is nearly thirty-five acres.

Dubuque, April 12.--The mysterious airship passed over Dubuque after midnight Saturday night. It was seen at Green Island at 10 o'clock, and at Bellevue at 11.

Bloomington, Ill., April 12.--An object believed to be the mysterious airship which has been sailing over Illinois was seen at noon Sunday floating over Bloomington. It was going in a northeasterly direction at a great altitude. It was yellow in color and seemed to be rectangular in form. / Photographed It.

Chicago, April 12.--A news dealer of Rogers Park, claims to have photographed the mysterious airship early Sunday morning. The negatives have been examined by experts and pronounced genuine and had not been "fixed." Two companions vouch for the genuineness of the pictures and state that they plainly saw the mysterious object. Speaking about the wonder the news dealer said:

"E.L. Osborne and William Hoodless also saw the ~~xxxx~~ airship. I am no longer a skeptic. I distinctly saw the outlines of a man in the rear of the machine. He pulled a revolving rudder or some sort of contrivance which steered the course of the airship. This strange invention came within 600 feet of the earth as near as I could estimate it."

"The lower portion of the airship was thin, and made of some light white material like aluminum. The upper portion was dark and long like a big cigar, pointed in front and with some kind of arrangement in the rear to which cables are attached. The pilot pulled these and steered the course from south to northwest. We watched the flight of the airship until it went east and disappeared from view. I returned to the store with the plates, attended to my morning papers, and, with Overacker, finished proofs as soon as possible. I refused an offer from a Chicago newspaper for the negatives. I think time will prove that this is no fake. I've lived here too long to try and fool people. I have no desire for notoriety. It's an airship and if you don't believe it look and the picture and be convinced. I can swear that I saw the airship. So can three other men here, whose word stands well in this community."

VENUS OR A METEOR. / A Somewhat Plausible Theory of the "Airship." / Special to the Times-Republican.

Brooklyn, April 12.--The noted "airship" star was seen here Saturday evening about 9 o'clock by quite a number of our soberest citizens. They all seem to be in doubt as to what it is. While we did not see it, to our mind the weight of evidence is in favor of the star or meteoric theory. From the fact that it appears each evening at about the same hour, or a little earlier, and travels northwestward and is seen by observers located at a long distance apart at or near the same time, shuts out the theory of its being an airship. If it is a fixed star it would not change its position in relation to other fixed stars. If it is a planet of our solar system as Venus it would not change its position in relation to the fixed stars, but not so rapidly as most of the observers claim. It is not unreasonable or improbable that it is Venus, which has been a very bright star in that locality for some months. The jostling or wobble motion could be caused by small clouds passing over the disc of the star.

The meteoric theory would make it possible for a meteor to approach so near the earth as to cause its orbicular motion to cease or change and temporarily become a satellite to the earth. If so it is much nearer the earth than our moon. We are surprised that astronomers have not settled this question several days ago. From the fact that they have reported nothing strange is against the meteoric theory, and in favor of mistaking Venus for an airship.

114

Sheriff Bennett received a telegram from Des Moines that his excited convicts were seen in the airship when it passed there, which is as reasonable a story as those of hearing the noise of machinery and voices. Our people here are all anxiously awaiting a satisfactory explanation of the phenomenon.

At Bayard. / Special to the Times-Republican.

Bayard, April 12.--The sensation of the season occurred here when some of our citizens discovered the celebrated airship. Panora telephoned about a quarter to 9 Saturday evening to look out for it as it was passing over there and a few minutes after it was seen rapidly coming this way and then to pass over by your correspondent with numerous others, among whom were Dr. Thompson and wife, Professor Boggs, Mrs. Smith and others too numerous to mention. The light was passing rapidly in a northwesterly direction and when it could be seen no longer we found the time to be 9 o'clock. We learn this morning that it passed over Sioux City about a quarter after 9 o'clock. Its appearance was about like you describe it in your's of the 10th, being a bright light, some larger than the evening star with a bright twinkle. Everybody is talking of the airship this morning. If it is a star it certainly moves in a mysterious and rapid way, and the wonder is that some of our noted astronomers have nothing to say in regard to it, and if an airship why it should be moving about in such a provoking mystery. / Rescued at Grundy Center. / Special to the Times-Republican.

Grundy Center, April 12.--Great excitement was caused here Saturday evening at 9:30. The alarm was given by two small girls that a great light was to be seen northwest of the city. The news soon spread. Business houses were closed up and nearly 2,000 people assembled north of the B., C., R., & N. pond, north of here. Field glasses of every description were brought into use; also smoked glass. It was soon learned that it was the much talked of airship. It sailed over the city three or four times and the crowd went wild with excitement. It alighted south of the city in the fair grounds at 10:15 p.m. A large crowd gathered. It was a monster and caused several runaways. An inspector came out and oiled it up and it was also tested. When the gate was opened two ladies and gentlemen stepped out and shook hands with the excited crowd. The manager enquired where they could get a good supper and were escorted to the hotel. After a bountiful repast the parties departed in a northwesterly direction by the sweet strains of Professor DeWied's band.

OUR GRINNELL CRIST. / Citizens of That Prohibition Town See "It"--The Airship. / Special to the Times-Republican.

Grinnell, April 12.--Saturday evening a large number of Grinnell people claim they saw the supposed airship passing over Grinnell. The "thing" came from the southwest, passing over to the northwest about 9 o'clock. It was seen from different parts of town at the same time and many claim that it kept swaying continually. Some say that it would plunge down and then go up again, claiming that if it was a meteor that it would go in a straight course. The light was of a bright red color and above the light there was a dark bulk of some kind. One curious thing about it is that everybody sees it going toward the northwest.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Evening Times-Republican (Marshalltown, Ia.) p.4.

Topics of the Times: "Hitch your wagon to a star," but don't imagine it is an airship, says the Hawkeye.

The Chicago Times-Herald's cartoon of the airship represents a strange looking "bird" with fiery eyes sailing serenely in the heavens, with all the excited denizens of earth looking at it through telescopes made of inverted beer bottles, demijohns and other spirituous mugs. Hence, all the various descriptions of the bird of passage.

Iowa Press Notes: THAT AIR SHIP.

Cedar Falls Gazette: The mysterious air ship that has been floating over Kansas and Nebraska for the past few weeks, was seen by several of our citizens last evening traveling northward; it seemed about three-quarters of a mile from the earth, and just west of town. The lights only could be seen and they were very bright at times, and then would almost go out: [it] was in sight about half an hour.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Evening Times-Republican (Marshalltown, Ia.) p7 (cdl)

IT'S ALPHA ORIONIS. / Scientists Come Forward and Explain the Presence of the Much-Advertised "Airship." / A Star of the Constellation Orion--Practical Jokers Send up a Kite and Lantern.

The practical jokers now have a large and attractive field for operations, and is taking advantage of it. All kinds of "airships" are being constructed and exhibited to the gaze of a gullible people.

The airship" was seen again in Marshalltown Sunday night. It was viewed by a great many people. On this occasion the theory that it is a planet was knocked higher than Gilroy's kite, for the night was cloudy. A bright light was first observed soaring higher and higher directly over the southwest section of the city. The light swung back and forth and then again would lower and rise, as if seeking a more favorable current of air in which to navigate. Once the light darted suddenly and then disappeared. Some of the gazers thought a catastrophe had ensued and ~~xxxx~~ that the wreckage would be found when daylight came. Pretty soon, however, the light again appeared, this time further to the north. It soared higher and higher, and from the city looked to be directly south of the Soldiers' Home. There was nothing new, however, about this airship. It was the same kind that all of the present generation of males when boys, constructed with more or less success. A five-cent ball of twine sufficed to keep the aerial navigator within our possession, unless it happened to get caught in a tree or on a telegraph wire. It was one of these that the people of this city saw Sunday night. Several youngsters in the vicinity of Sixth street built a big kite, attached a lantern to it--and the rest was easy. Twice the light in the lantern went out and the kite had to be hauled down. The boys had lots of fun, nevertheless, and while a majority of those who saw the kite knew what it was by its unsteady movements a few really thought it was an airship.

The strange body seen by the members of the Omaha lodge was the property of some practical jokers also, and they have admitted their "guilt." On the night in question they sent up a large balloon. The theory advanced in these columns that the light had been attracting so much attention was a planet or star is undoubtedly correct. Chicago scientists come forward with an explanation of the whole matter. The Chicago Chronicle offers the following interview with two scientific gentlemen of that city:

"Professor Hough chuckled audibly when the airship question was again broached to him last night. He was sitting in his private office at Dearborn observatory, in Evanston, and before him was an outline of the course of the star Alpha Orionis. 'This is the airship,' he said, as he pointed to Orionis. 'It has been roaming through its regular course in the firmament these 10,000,000 years, and why it should have been settled upon in the last three weeks and pointed out as the headlight of a mysterious aerial vessel is a thing hard to explain. Alpha Orionis appears on the meridian at 5 o'clock and becomes visible at 8 o'clock. At that time it resembles a strong white electric light. It first becomes noticeable in the central southwest portion of the sky. At an unusually rapid rate for a star it takes its course toward the northwest, finally disappearing in that corner. As the star begins to sink the atmospheric conditions cause it to appear to be of a reddish hue on the under side and a green on the upper portion when seen through a glass. The center of the body is white. Another star which has an unusually bright appearance is Sirius, which is visible toward 10 o'clock in the southwest portion of the firmament.'"

"No credence is placed in the 'airship' theory respecting the bright glow in the heavens Friday night by Professor S.W. Burnham, the astronomer. 'I did not see it,' said Mr. Burnham, 'and if I had I do not suppose I would have given it a second glance. I think Professor Hough is right in his assertion that it was Alpha Orionis, of the constellation Orion. It is a bright star and in its position in the northern sky its parti-colored light makes it a striking object. Shining through misty clouds, and aided by refraction, it would give the appearance of a body in motion, and one's imagination could easily give strange form to it. I am inclined to think the 'airship' seen in Kansas and Nebraska is a simple delusion growing out of the appearance of Alpha Orionis. In fact, all of the reports about the alleged airship agree that it has been seen in the same direction and about the same time that Alpha Orionis was above the horizon.'"

1897 April 13 (Waterloo Daily Courier, p. 5). (cont.)

LATEST AIRSHIP STORIES. / MYSTERIOUS LIGHTS SEEN. / Waterloosans Mystified by Strange Objects--Shell Rock Sees the Aerial Monster. /

As Saturday evening deepened into night the people of Waterloo, chiefly those of the west side, were astonished to see the alleged wonderful airship hovering over the city. In the blackness of the night nothing could be discerned except two flickering white lights which moved slowly over the west side, going northward. Every field-glass in that part of the city was brought into use. There was much running about to get a better view of the mysterious lights, and it is said that Councilman Hallowell was the liveliest individual on the street. He called the attention of all the people of his neighborhood and there was much excitement, it is said, until five young men who were flying a kite in Camp's pasture, wound up their kite string and pulled down the "aerial monster." The kite was of ordinary size and had a long tail. To the end of this tail was fastened a long fish pole at each end of which was tied a Chinese lantern. Of course the boys when they lifted the kite into the cloudless sky had no intention of deceiving the people. Of course not. If they wanted to confuse an inoffensive little kite with a hideous explorer of the skies, that was no odds of theirs. Of course some of the boys came uptown occasionally to see how the kite looked and didn't undecieve the awe-stricken people who were gazing at the object in open-mouthed wonder. The identity of the boys who had hold of the lower end of the string may be interesting to know, as their names will probably go down in history as the champion practical jokers of the west side. Perhaps these aren't the fellows but at any rate they can tell you all about it: Charley Bickley, Harvey Zeising, Charley Foster, Ed. Carey and Emerson Foster.

They Saw It, Too.

Two men named Watson and McIntyre, who work at H.B. Allen's farm saw the airship Saturday night, at about 10:30. It was down very low, and looked as though resting in the air just over Fairview cemetery. It had green and red lights. Neighbors were aroused and a start was made to catch the mysterious thing. They caught it, but it proved to be only a switch light on the Illinois Central belt line.

J. Westfall thinks if he didn't see the airship Saturday night, there is a screw loose up in the blue vaulted dome, somewhere. The object that attracted his attention was visible about 9 o'clock in the northwest. It cast a red and blue light, was quite high and seemed to be traveling to the north. Mr. Westfall is sure it was larger and brighter than any star. Mr. McFarlane, father of the Illinois Central agent, and Mrs. Ruhel saw the same light in the heavens. /

Scores of people stood on the Fourth street bridge Saturday night from 8:00 to 9:00 o'clock and watched the queer antics of the evening star. It is very bright now, and moves apparently rapidly toward the horizon. Its motion is of an undulating character, and it seems to loose (sic) and increase in brilliancy alternately. Many people looking at it could distinguish different colored lights, and some could see it rising and moving directly toward the city and then away. Imagination is full of pranks.

Joe's Troubles.

J.R. Joder is having all sorts of afflictions. Ever since our Saturday's issue he has been receiving inquiries about where he purchased the article which enabled him to see the airship so plainly Friday night. Today he received from one of his friends a postal card on which was pasted a clipping reading as follows: "The Iowa people ought to be forgiven, for the airship is really such a tempting thing to lie about." One of Mr. Joder's friends says he thinks these airship sailors were not Polanders, but school ma'ams in disguise looking for a place in the west side schools.

It is said that J.J. Budd is the only man on the west side who flatly denies having seen anything that resembled an airship. / East Siders Saw It.

A. Hollnasek, 313 Argyle street, saw a brilliant moving light in the sky Saturday night, and called out all his neighbors to see the sight. The light was of the color of the stars but seemed much brighter than any of the stars then visible in the cloudless sky. It passed rapidly toward the northwest and disappeared below the horizon.

J.C. Westfall and family and Mrs. Nuelson, living at the corner of Argyle street and Logan avenue, saw the same strange light.

Shell Rock Sees It.

Shell Rock is not behind with airship stories. On Saturday evening a mysterious flickering light, sometimes red, now blue and now white, passed over that town going toward the north. It was seen by the whole town and there is not a man, woman nor child in that place who will not stake his word and his honor that the moving object was not a star but a moving light but a few hundred feet above the earth. It passed over town, then turned about and came toward Waterloo. The excited people immediately sent word that the object was headed in this direction and the citizens of Cedar Falls were notified to get out their spyglasses and telescopes, which they did, but the airship sailors seemed to have decided upon another course for it sailed clear of Cedar Falls and hasn't been seen since.

And now comes a story from Cedar Falls which spoils the effect of the whole phenomena. It seems that three or four of the citizens of that burg, each possessing an ambition to help along the airship story, chipped in a few cents each and purchased a 25-cent paper balls balloon with red, white and blue stripes down the sides. It was carried to a secluded spot, inflated and sent up. In a few minutes Cedar Falls was the most excited spot in the state and the balloon for some time. A strong wind caught it and carried it rapidly toward Shell Rock, where the unsuspecting residents of that town decided it was the much talked of airship and the town was turned upside down with excitement. One man reported that he saw the "head-light" change from red to white and then to blue. Others could see wings and paddles galore. One man declared that he could plainly discern two cigar-shaped bodies with vipers at the sides and propellers at the rear. The stories being sent out from that usually quiet town are hair-raising in the extreme. The boys at Cedar Falls declare they never had so much fun for 25 cents before in their lives and are of the opinion that they are not the only ones in this quarter of the globe who have been spending their hard-earned cash in Fourth of July balloons. And their suspicions are correct, according to the Burlington Hawkeye of yesterday, which tells of an experiment which two members of its reportorial staff made with satisfactory results Saturday evening.

Burlingtonians Mystified.

The Hawkeye decided to make a test and see if it were possible to produce results identical with those following or attending the appearance of the alleged air-ship. Three hot air paper balloons made of red, white and blue paper were purchased. One of them was inflated and at 8:20 it was released and shot upward with great rapidity. A strong northeasterly wind caught it and sent it in a southerly direction at a rate of perhaps twenty miles an hour. The unsteady currents of air caused it to sway gently from side to side a partially turn it. Sometimes the light shining through the red paper gave it a red appearance. Then the blue or white side would appear and the color would of course, change.

The reporters followed as fast as their wearied limbs would allow. All the way down the street crowds of people could be seen on door steps and street corners, gazing eagerly at the fast disappearing light.

"It had a reflector as big as a tushel basket," said a woman in a group on a door step. "Say, kids, I'm going to stay here all night and see the airship when it comes back," said a boy in a crowd on the North Hill park. "It was as big as a house," said another party near the site of the new library building.

Everybody was discussing it. Some claimed it had a red light, some that it had a green light and some that it had two lights. The whirling motion caused by air currents had evidently caused the various sides and colors to appear and disappear. Where two lights were seen it was evident that the white side had been turned toward the spectator and a part of the blue and a part of the red would be visible on opposite sides of the white light.

Its height gradually increased until it was about seven hundred feet above the city, although excited spectators variously estimated its height at from 2,000 to 3,000 feet. The west bound extra which takes the through freight from Burlington to points between Mt. Pleasant and Ottumwa, had just pulled out. Shields was conductor and from Mt. Pleasant to Sore he claims to have raced with it.

The Hawkeye says its object in sending up the balloon was not to deceive anyone either as a hoax or to create a sensation, but to demonstrate that such a simple thing is the explanation of the airship.

craze now ~~xxx~~ sweeping over the country.

Thinks it is Alpha Orionis.

Prof. George Hough, of Chicago, thinks that the strange light in the heavens is Alpha Orionis of the constellation Orion. When asked to give his opinion of the phenomenon he said: "Alpha Orionis has been ~~xxx~~ racing through its regular course in the firmament 10,000,000 years, and why it should have been settled upon in the last three weeks and pointed out as the headlight of a mysterious aerial vessel is a thing hard to explain."

Prof. G.W. Burman, the Chicago astronomer, did not see anything unusual in the sky on Friday evening, but he is inclined to side with Prof. Hough, of Northwestern University, in holding that the appearance was Alpha Orionis.

But Joseph Pierson, a tailor in Davis street, Evanston, declares he not only saw red, green and white lights, but that he heard a hissing noise and could discern the outline of two cigar-shaped bodies. This phenomenon, he says, took a course entirely out of the rout of Alpha Orionis. At times the lights would rise and then fall, and would occasionally veer from side to side.

What's the Matter with Venus?

Still others hold to the opinion that the mysterious light is the evening star Venus, which is visible in the west shortly after sundown and remains above the horizon about three hours. It is very brilliant and travels rapidly from the west to northwest.

The Latest.

The following telegram was received in Waterloo this morning: Lanark, Ill., April 12.--The airship came down here last night. Two of the occupants are dead. All were foreigners. The Chicago & Northwestern has run a special from Freeport loaded with night-shirts 107, April 12 (Des), Burlington Hawk-Eye, p. 6. (card 1)

AIRSHIP IS PLAINLY SEEN. / Hovers Over Court House at Milwaukee Fifteen Minutes.

Milwaukee, Wis., April 12.--Prof. Hough and his theory that the supposed airship is the star "Alpha Orionis" don't stand as high in the minds of thousands of citizens of this city to-night. They have seen the wonder and are convinced that it is a machine which navigates the air, and not a star which has been wandering around for 10,000,000 or more years through space without an object or a destination. The strange machine made its first appearance in the wee small hours yesterday morning. It was not seen by many at that time, but the few who did see it are convinced that it is a machine. The lights which appeared on it seemed to move backwards and forwards toward each other, as if signalling to the earth.

It was first seen on the northern horizon, and about the only persons who were up at the time and who were not seeing things double, were a few newspaper men, police officers, and a guard at the house of correction. All of these are willing to make oath they saw an airship come from the north a little before the break of daylight and that it disappeared again, reversing itself and fading from view in the north.

Last night the stranger made its appearance again in the heavens about 9 o'clock. It came from the northeast from out over the lake. There was no possibility of a mistake this time. Thousands of people saw it, and in a few minutes they were following the machine as it floated over the city. It traveled towards the southwest until it reached a point directly over the City hall, where it stopped for a quarter of an hour. Then the excitement in the down-town districts became intense. It was reported that attempts were being made to anchor the machine.

A Mr. Mayor, a traveling man, had a field glass ranged on the machine and said he distinctly saw four men in it. Stationkeeper Harry Moore of the Central police station saw it distinctly and was one of the few who did not at the same time lose his head. He says:

"The machine, or whatever it was, anchored or stopped directly over the city hall. The light which I saw was suspended from a large, dark oval-shaped object, the shadow of which could be distinctly seen. In fact it could be seen so plainly that I could discern the wheels working. I did not see any one in it, but any one who claims that the thing I saw floating over the city hall is a star simply don't know what he is talking about. I saw it too distinctly to be fooled. It was, I should judge, about 1,000 feet above the city hall."

After hovering about for fifteen minutes, it went back and disappeared in the northeast.

Maker of Airship Reveals Himself (Omaha, A.C. Clinton)...

Dubuque, Ia., April 12.--The mysterious airship passed over Dubuque after midnight Sunday night. It was seen at Green(?) Island at 10 o'clock, and at Bellevue(?) at 11.

Bloomington, Ill., April 12.--An object believed to be the mysterious airship which has been sailing over Illinois was seen at noon Sunday floating over Bloomington. It was going in a northeasterly direction at a great altitude. It was yellow in color and seemed to be rectangular in form.

Airship in Keokuk County.

Hassau, Ia., April 10.--Ed. Hawk-Eye: A singular sight was witnessed here last night between the hours of nine and ten o'clock, and created an unusual excitement in our quiet little village. Dr. J.D. Travis was the first person to discover this peculiar light and he was not slow in making the discovery known. Everyone in town was on the street in a short time and beheld a sight that was astonishing in the northern heavens and moving at a wonderful rate of speed in a south-westerly direction; it appeared to be about (250) yards from the earth. The first thing that attracted attention were three lights of intense brilliancy and appeared in size similar to a locomotive engine headlight. As this strange object drew near and approached the city at a terrific ~~xxx~~ speed the faint outline of the strange object were barely visible; the heavens were overcast with dark clouds, rendering a good view an impossibility.

116

The spectators were unable to make out what the phenomenon was. The strange object, owing to the marvelous speed it attained in its graceful flight soon disappeared and left the astonished spectators to recover from their surprise. Several of our most reputable citizens and others of undoubted truthfulness and veracity witnessed this sight and are willing to swear to the truthfulness of this statement.

A great deal of speculation and theorizing was indulged in as to whether the object was an airship, but in the minds of our more advanced thinkers and observers, of this place, notably J.D. Travis and T.C. Hezrell there remains very little room for doubt that the strange visitor was the much talked of airship seen near Omaha, Nebraska and several other places. / A Reader.

Some Saw the Hawk-Eye Balloon.

Rome, Ia., April 12.--(Correspondence.)--The many reports that our citizens have been reading about the airship recently have caused them all to keep a close watch every evening for the past few days, and we think that a few of them saw the balloon Saturday evening, which was sent up by The Hawk-Eye Co., at Burlington, and reported to have passed over this place. Several men had just commenced to tell about it Sunday morning when the mail arrived and would have probably told about seeing the airship if some one had not got the Hawk-Eye and read about the balloon. There was a slipping away of those that were talking about airships and in a few minutes all felt sure that they had not seen the airship, but had seen the balloon. The Hawk-Eye is to be congratulated for the way it took to prove that most people would call any light seen after night an airship and that their imagination made things larger than they were. This will probably put an end to the airship story for a while at least.

Airship a "Fake."

St. Louis, Mo., April 12.--It is amusing to read the dispatches of the appearance of an airship in various places east of the Rockies. This aerial mystery is described "as a long steel body, shaped like a cigar, about 40 feet long and 7 feet in diameter, with wing-like attachments on the sides, while fore and aft appear wheel-like devices similar to the steering apparatus of a steamship. The top is capped with a balloon-like bag, oblong and seemingly attached to the vessel by ropes. The headlight is similar to that of a locomotive."

The so-called "air-ship" appears to have started on its mysterious way at Denver. It has worked east at the rate of 500 miles a day and made a jump, according to the published reports, of nearly 1,000 miles over night, from the plains of Nebraska to Lake Michigan. Farmers and other persons are said to have been greatly mystified and in some instances, badly frightened by the appearance of the stranger in the skies at night, with its ominous body and glaring headlight. It is generally agreed that the "airship" is a night worker, at least in the lengthy accounts printed no mention is made of its appearance by day.

Now, in order that no one may be scared to death by this strange vision, it may be proper to say that the "airship" sighted in the west is a "fake." The aerial monster was manufactured originally in New York, of papier mache and ordinary balloon material to advertise a certain brand of cigarettes. When it was set free at Denver some wind merchants and other mercantile gentlemen infringed the patent and made papier mache airships for their own use. That is why the "airship" has been seen at so many places at one and the same time. There is more than one of them in the sky, and the cigarette balloon is not the only light in the heavens by any means. The whole thing is a clever advertising dodge invented jointly by parties in New York and Chicago.

The St. Louis scientists who were yesterday mystified at the appearance of the so-called airship did not wait to look for a solution of the problem in the darkened heavens last night. At one of the institutions visited by a reporter the professor of science was just getting ready to make some observations. "Oh, you want my opinion about the air-ship, do you?" he asked of the newspaper man. And then he started out to express great doubts, but said he was about to take a peep at the heavens through his telescope. He was saved the trouble and told that the whole thing was a well-planned cigarette advertisement.

"Well, well, well," he laughed, "and here I've been worrying my astronomical brains out looking for some explanation of this wonderful aerial body. But you know, I did not place much confidence in the reports I heard, and I accept your corroborative evidence with much pleasure," and he heaved a sigh of relief, as he removed his instruments and postponed his investigation.

Several other scientists laughed heartily when they found out that it was all a huge joke--on them--but they didn't like the idea of having talked so seriously for publication on the subject. "That aeronautical crank in Chicago," said one of the scientists, "is right; badly fooled, ain't he? I suppose he'll think now that the 'object of the mystery' is to arouse great interest in a certain brand of cigarettes. Don't you know, most astronomers and aeronauts, too, like their little smoke, and maybe that fellow indulges in the 'coffin tax.' Yes, yes, it's a mighty big 'ad,' and the airship really seems to have gone up in smoke."

Saw the Airship in a Field.

Omaha, April 12.--The first case reported in which the airship has been seen on the ground comes from Wolf Creek township, Iowa, just across the river. Richard Butler, a very well-to-do farmer, gives this version:

"I was driving home Wednesday night, when I ~~xxx~~ observed a light in a field close to the road. I knew no house was there, and stopped to investigate. The light had a glow more like that of an electric lamp than the kerosene burners usually employed by the residents of the Wolf Creek district."

Butler strained his eyes and was astonished to see a dark mass, through the windows of which the lights shone. He describes it as a long, narrow car, resembling a corset box in shape, but perhaps 30 or 35 feet in length and 6 or 7 feet in width and height. Over this car floated a cigar-shaped bar, horizontally placed, of about the same length as the car and 6 or 10 feet thick at its greatest diameter. Whether there were sails or steering apparatus Butler can not say, for at this moment his horses caught sight of the ship, bolted precipitately for the opposite side of the road and tumbled wagon and driver into the ditch. By the time Butler had crawled from the wreck and regained his feet, the machine was moving briskly in a southerly direction, and at the same time ascending at an angle of about 45 degrees. Butley watched it out of sight and continued his way on foot. Several hundred Omaha persons can easily be found who saw the ship Wednesday.

Danville Saw the Balloon.

Danville, Ia., April 12.--(Correspondence.)--Citizens here saw The Hawkeye balloon about 9 o'clock Saturday night and several thought it was the airship sure.

Hawkeye's Balloon at Fairfield.

Fairfield, Ia., April 12.--(Special.)--The balloon which was sent up by The Hawkeye last Saturday evening, passed a little towards the northwest of this city last Saturday evening a little after 9 o'clock. There was quite a number of citizens who saw it and a large number of these claim that it was the airship.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Council Bluffs, Ia., Globe, p. 4.

The Air Ship Craze.

In these days of marvelous discovery aton that hasn't seen the airship isn't in the procession at all. Making its debut in Kansas, this ethereal performer has played to big audiences every night in the week. And the most wonderful fact about these performances is that they have been witnessed on the same evening at the same hour, by deluged audiences in Chicago and Omaha, notwithstanding the air ship was only 600 or 1,000 feet high. Possibly the following special from Burlington may throw some light on the subject:

"Burlington has seen the air ship. It passed over the city at 8:30. The town is talking of nothing else. The newspaper telephones have been hot with messages about it all evening. There are one or two people in the city, however, who are quietly enjoying the excitement, and they feel well repaid for the trouble and expense they went to to secure a paper balloon and sent it up outside the city, so that the breeze would carry it over the business portion. These gentlemen, believing there was more imagination than anything else about the air ship, concluded to try an experiment. They secured a paper balloon and sent it up at 8:30. The streets happened to be full of people and hundreds of them saw it sailing over their heads. The cry of "The air ship," "The air ship," went up, and intense excitement followed. The returns began to come in from outlying towns, telegraphed or telephoned, about the air ship. The descriptions were identical with those sent out from other cities--green, red and white lights, wings, etc., all included. Even people in Burlington swear they saw colored lights accompanying the white light. The experiment was a blooming success."

At Dubuque a prominent citizen was out scanning the cerulean vaults of heaven in search of the monster when, like a ravenous vulture, it swooped down upon him, and he barely had time to crawl into a scuttle hole.

As usual, though, Chicago is ahead, claiming to have kodaked the star actor during its last performance before the admiring multitudes of that city.

1897 April 13 (Tues morn) Des Moines Leader, p. 4. (card 1)

ANOTHER WONDERFUL TALE. / Sweet Strains of Music Proceeded From the Airship at Fontanelle.

Fontanelle, April 12.--The people of this locality have been incredulous as to the news of the now famous airship until tonight, when the most incredulous stood in awe before the apparent fact. At exactly 8:30 this wonderful aerial visitor put in an appearance and created consternation among the people. It came from the southeast, having been sighted at Bedford at 5:30. It was not more than 200 feet above the tree tops; the headlight an olive green and the whole machine could be distinctly seen. It was about sixty feet long and the vibrations of its wings could be plainly seen as well as the working of its machinery heard. Sweet strains of music could be heard, indicating that there was an orchestra on board. All efforts to hail the ship were futile. It passed here at ten miles an hour, but seemed to increase the rate as it went toward the northwest. There is no longer doubt in this locality that the airship is the real thing and all stand in awe of this wonderful phenomenon. It was witnessed by many of the most prominent citizens, including J.H. Hulbert, S. Shoemaker, J.I. McCasbell, ex-Mayor Dr. C. B. Scott, W.F. Johnston, L.W. Wood and others.

HAWARDEN HAS 'EM TOO.

Airship Seen and Voices and Laughter of Occupants Heard.

Hawarden, April 12.--Hawarden citizens viewed the airship early Sunday morning. About half an hour after midnight Saturday night the much talked of airship passed over Hawarden in a northerly direction. Seven or eight reputable citizens will make affidavit to having seen this monster of the clouds while it was so close to the earth that they could hear plainly the working of machinery and the sound of human voices. Among those who saw the airship were Landlord Moody of the Hawarden eating house, Dr. John Peterson, B.T. French, William Swearingen, H.R. Rowley and John Gehan, sr.

Dr. Peterson and Conductor Rowley describe the airship as being of conical shape, about sixty feet long, with four sets of wings, plainly discernible. These wings apparently were located about ten feet apart and looked to be about fifteen feet in length. Two red lights were located about the stern of the ship and a large searchlight was placed in the bow. The men who saw the wonder say the light was turned upon the town for a moment. Conductor Rowley says he is confident the ship came within 600 feet of the earth, and he distinctly heard voices, among which was mingled the laughter of women. The object was in sight about three minutes. It disappeared to the north.

Guthrie Center Taken In.

Guthrie Center, April 12.--The airship fake struck Guthrie Center Saturday night about 10 o'clock. The people were all astir, straining their eyes and hunting for glasses to get a good view of the monster ship as it passed directly over town, a mile or more high. Before it was out of sight another came following up directly in the line of the first, and when the excitement was at fever heat it leaked out that they were large paper balloons fixed for the occasion and taken out of town and sent up by some young men for a bit of fun.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Iowa State Register (DesH.) p. 1, 2. (card 1)

STRANGER THAN FICTION / Read the Following Accounts of the "Air Ship" and Take Your Choice. / Difficult to Determine Between Truthful Correspondence and Fake Stories. / A Rhodes Man Who Says the Mysterious Aerial Visitor Was Drowned in a Pond. / A Fast Mail Engineer Who Traveled Seventy Miles an Hour and Was Left Far Behind. / Quite a Number of the Scientifically Inclined Who Give Good Reasons for It Being a Star. / CAN THIS BE THE AIRSHIP? / Alleged Aerial Monster Rkmw Plunges Into a Reservoir.

Rhodes, April 10.--Ed. Register: We have noticed for some days the account of the appearance of a singular object in the air, supposed by some to be an airship. It will probably be seen no more. Last night about 11 o'clock our citizens were startled by the appearance of a very bright light in the heavens, rapidly approaching from the southwest. A large crowd was soon on the streets, and as the object approached it seemed to come nearer the earth. It soon came so near that the sound of machinery could be heard, which soon became as loud as a heavy train of cars. All at once the aerial monster took a sudden plunge downward and was immersed in the reservoir of the C.M. & St. Paul railway, which is almost a lake, covering about eight acres of land. No pen can describe what followed. The boiling lava from Vesuvius pouring into the sea could only equal it. The light was so large and hot that it created so much heat that the horrible hissing which occurred when the monster plunged into the lake, could be heard for miles, and the water of the reservoir was so hot that the naked hand could not be held in it. As soon as the wreck is raised out of the water a full description of the machine will be sent. / JOHN BUTLER.

Maxwell, April 10.--Ed. Register: The airship was seen here about 8 o'clock last night. When first seen it was traveling in an easterly direction. When directly over the town it suddenly changed its course to a northerly one and rapidly passed out of sight. Men here whose veracity cannot be doubted, claim that there is no doubt but that this is a reality, as its appearance here was convincing proof. E.H. ALVERSON.

Earlham, April 12.--Special: The airship craze has broken out at Earlham in its most violent form. At about 9 o'clock last Saturday night a bright light was seen in the northwest by about thirty of our citizens, including many of our most reputable business men. The accounts given by those witnessing it agree substantially with the report already given in The Register. All contend that it could not have been a star, as it was distinctly seen to move and finally vanish out of sight, and several persons noticed clouds to pass between the light and the clear sky. The body of the "ship" was not seen, nor was any rumbling of machinery heard. This is a strictly temperance town.

Burlington, April 12.--Special: Engineer F.L. Bullard, on engine No. 950 of the fast mail, saw the airship. The popular railroad man states that when he left Chicago this morning, and when he reached Western avenue, he saw a huge spectacle in the sky moving along in the same direction as his train. He watched it for a few minutes, and then was compelled to give his undivided attention to his engine for five or ten minutes, and when he again looked out the monster was some distance ahead. He stated that the train was going at the rate of seventy miles an hour at the time, and when they reached Lisle, Ills., the ship was lost sight of, being many miles ahead. Mr. Bullard thought that this aerial schooner must have been traveling at the rate of 100 to 150 miles per hour.

Fort Dodge, Iowa, April 11.--The alleged airship was plainly visible here last night between 8 and 9 o'clock, and while in sight was viewed by many citizens. The light resembled that of a strong electric light, and was whiter, brighter and larger than ordinary starlight. It was first sighted in the northern sky and moved rapidly north, and then took an extreme northwest course until it disappeared. Several old-country Germans contend that the mystery is a return of the phenomenon that worried residents of Germany over thirty years ago, and created the impression at that time that the end of the world was near at hand. The light claimed to have been visible in Germany at that time was called the "devil's army," and when it was visible brought the superstitious to their knees.

RESTED AT GRUNDY CENTER.

Grundy Center, April 12.--Great excitement was caused here Saturday evening at 9:30. The alarm was given by two small girls that a great light was to be seen northwest of the city. The news soon spread. Business houses were closed up and nearly 2,000 people assembled north of the B., C. R. & N. pond, north of here. Field glasses of every description were brought into use, also smoked glass. It was soon learned that it was the installation of airship. It sailed over the city three or four times and the crowd went wild with excitement. It alighted south of the city in the fair grounds at 10:15 p.m. A large crowd gathered. It was a monster and caused several runaways. An inspector came out and oiled it up and it was also tested. When the gate was opened two ladies and gentlemen stepped out and shook hands with the excited crowd. The manager inquired where they could get a good supper and were escorted to the hotel. After a bountiful repast the parties departed in a northwesterly direction by the sweet strains of Prof. DeWied's band.

Brooklyn, April 12.--The noted "airship" star was seen here Saturday evening about 9 o'clock by quite a number of our soberest citizens. They all seem to be in doubt as to what it is; to our mind the weight of evidence is in favor of the star or meteoric theory. From the fact that it appears each evening at about the same hour, or a little earlier, and travels northward and is seen by observers located at a long distance apart at or near the same time, shuts out the theory of its being an airship. If it is a fixed star it would not change its position in relation to other fixed stars. If it is a planet of our solar system as Venus, it would change its position, but not so rapidly as most of the observers claim. It is not unreasonable or improbable that it is Venus, which has been a very bright star in that locality for some months. The jostling or wavy motion could be caused by small clouds passing over the disc of the star. The meteoric theory would make it possible for a meteor to approach so near the earth as to cause its orbital motion to cease to change and temporarily become a satellite to the earth. If so, it is much nearer the earth than our moon. We are surprised that astronomers have not settled this question several days ago. From the fact that they have reported nothing strange is against the meteoric theory, and in favor of mistaking Venus for an airship.

Bayard, April 12.--The sensation of the season occurred here when some of our citizens discovered the celebrated airship. Panora telephoned about 8:45 Saturday evening to look out for it, as it was passing over there, and a few minutes after it was seen rapidly coming this way, and then to pass over by your correspondent with numerous others, among whom were Dr. Thomson and wife, Prof. Boggs, Mrs. Smith and other[s] too numerous to mention. The light was passing rapidly in a northwesterly direction, and when it could be seen no longer we found the time to be 9 o'clock. We learn this morning that it passed over Sioux City about 7:15 o'clock. Its appearance was about like you describe it in yours of the 10th, being a bright light, some larger than the evening star, with a bright twinkle. Everybody is taking of the airship this morning. If it is a star, it certainly moves in a mysterious and rapid way, and the wonder is that some of our noted astronomers have nothing to say in regard to it, and if an airship, why should it be moving about in such a provoking mystery [?]

Grinnell, April 12.--Saturday evening a large number of Grinnell people claim they saw the supposed airship passing over Grinnell. The "thing" came from the southwest, passing over to the northwest about 9 o'clock. It was seen from different parts of town at the same time and many claim that it kept swaying continually. Some say that it would plunge down and then go up again, claiming that if it was a meteor it would go in a straight course. The light was of a bright red color and above the light there was a dark bulk of some kind. One curious thing about it is that everybody sees it going toward the northwest.

Cedar Rapids Republican: Everybody is deeply interested and all lost in wonderment. One of the most interested men in the city is Prof. C.D. Bates, of Coe College. Yesterday he said: "I am as yet deeply puzzled, as well as greatly interested over this mystery, but intend following it out until I can arrive at some definite conclusion. The idea of the mysterious visitor being a heavenly body is absurd. No celestial body could possibly act as the airship, or whatever it may be, is reported to do. I should rather incline to the belief that it is some kind of a balloon sent up by some person with the intention of getting up a sensation, but the exceeding brightness of the light together with its long continuance, seems to militate against that idea. No, I don't think it is an electric light. Such a light would require the presence of a generator and an accumulator, cumbersome machinery that could not be carried by any form of airship, so far as I can see."

Eagle Grove Times: But there seems to be no doubt that it was none other than the planet Venus. Eugene Schaefer has been watching the course of this star for some weeks, and his explanation clearly indicates that Venus was, in this instance at least, mistaken for the conception of some human brain flying through space. Venus is now the evening star; it closely follows the course of the moon. The latter body has for some time been approaching the north, until having reached its zenith in June, it will again begin to decline. Venus follows the same course further north, while also approaching laterally the sun, and in the course of a few weeks will disappear as the evening and become the morning star. Now as the star approaches the horizon, it appears to move more rapidly, while not doing so. The refraction of light caused by its passing through the earth's atmosphere is responsible for this apparent increase in motion, while actually moving no faster than before. This explains the apparent swift motion of the "air ship" and also the delusion that it was not over five miles from the earth.

Lake City, April 12.--Ed. Register: That strange aerial phenomenon that has excited the interest of so many people in Iowa and Nebraska for the few months last past made its appearance to the people of Lake City, Iowa, a few minutes before 8 o'clock last Saturday evening, April 10, 1897. When I first saw it from my office window, it was a little north of west of Lake City, and was a white bright light, very high.

Its course was due northwest. Many people here saw it, and were not excited or sensational about it. Among those that I know who saw the stranger floating in the air were: J.D. McVay, A.B. Loese, J.Q. McCrarr, F.D. Williams, George Davies, Jack Zane and C. Shuster, of this place. One man on the street told me at the time, while we were looking at it, that it was only a star, for he had noticed it for several evenings in the same place, and it was not moving; then he soon said it was a light hung to a large kite by some boys in the northwest part of town; then, as it reached farther west, he suggested it was a balloon with a light in it, as we sometimes see it on a Fourth of July fire exhibition, and think he would have had more wise reasons had we waited to hear him. It certainly was not an airship, because the white brilliancy of the light, when first seen by us, would have lighted up the apartments in which it was placed, to have given to us the outlines of the same. No fire balloon exhibition that I have ever witnessed was so bright and nothing like so high. The sky was without a cloud and very light. The stranger's movements were sometimes eccentric, and dodged out of its general line, at time.

I watched carefully, and it passed clusters of stars in its course. I was fearful of an optical delusion on my part. Other parties here could and did think they saw three or four like it. While I am not unmindful of the fact that should a person watch any bright star intently for awhile and a suggestion made that it move to one side, that appearance comes to the person who is watching it. But the visitor did move to one side now and then without a doubt, because I guarded against that optical delusion. As it receded further away from us its light became redder, but still very bright, and at last it seemed to reach the horizon.

There was another smaller light, so I was told, cut the path of the larger light and went south from Lake City. It was dim, then bright. There is no mistake about these lights. The bright one could not be a star, for it went out of sight from the time I first saw it within half or three-quarters of an hour, and at first seemed to be nearly over the west part of town. I give these observations so that a better understanding of this stranger can be had by all. There was a short, bright streak of light pointing upwards after it was some distance away, and came to view when it was in its red light place. This attended it so long as I could see it. So that I could not make a mistake, I went away from the window three times after this phase made its appearance so that my eyes accepted or created no optical illusion to the mind. The prompt of light was not great, but enough to be seen distinctly. H.R. MERCURY.

IT IS MERCURY.
Buffalo Center, April 12.--Special: The wonderful "airship" Mercury sailed gracefully through the heavens over Buffalo Center Saturday evening on schedule time and disappeared (to the gazing eye of a score of citizens who were viewing its curious antics from house tops, etc.), in a northwesterly direction, probably in the vicinity of Elmore, about 9:30 p.m. As viewed by our citizens, it displayed the regulation red and white flash lights and was a wonder to behold. The evening being clear all over northern Iowa, it was easily seen, and Swea City, LeMay, Bancroft, Armstrong, Emmetsburg, and Elmon, Minn. report beholding it. It is interesting to notice that so many people all over the Mississippi valley are taking astronomical observations the past week or two, and have seen the magical appearance and disappearance of this ship of the universe, as on this evening. It will be in Perihelion with the sun, and must a few days henceforth be seen in the morning in the northeast before the average star gazer is out of bed. Owing to the sky being cloudy last evening, "it" was not seen at this point, but "it" probably arrived on time, however, just the same, which was quite a disappointment to the writer, as his almanac scheduled "it" to throw its beacon light with greater brilliancy than at any time this spring. When first noticed Saturday night it was about 15 degrees high and in a northwesterly direction, and was viewed for about twenty or thirty minutes before it sank gracefully from view behind the horizon, and as seen through the evening mirage, it was about five or six times as large as any star seen at the time, alternately appearing to be red and then white, and to have a vibrating and swinging motion from north to south of two or three degrees, and at times would disappear altogether for a second or two and then reappear. To the writer it did not seem to disappear behind the horizon but to have faded from sight about five degrees from the earth's surface.

Burlington Hawkeye: Prof. Hough, of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, turned his gaze on the alleged airship. He did not let his imagination run riot with visions of "a locomotive headlight," the "dim outline of a steel frame airship," nor did his ear catch the "hissing sound" of the strange vessel when speeding through the air. Prof. Hough, the matter-of-fact astronomer, thought it was the erratic Alpha Orionis, a star of the first magnitude, a noted fast traveler, with a job lot of vari colored lights in its repertoire, which, in certain atmospheric conditions play fantastic tricks with imaginative sightseers. As seen without the use of glasses, the white light was the more brilliant and appeared to be oscillating as if it were a search light being swung back and forth. The red and green lights, it was said, were like the ordinary side lights required under the navigation law. The lights moved westward and soon disappeared. Alpha Orionis comes on the stage early in the evening, and its course across the heavens at about the same as that of the moon. The star is usually bright in a clear atmosphere and appears to be close to the earth, but we don't believe it was so close to the globe that our friends in Iowa could hear the "swish" of its passage through the air, as one correspondent averred. What he heard was the wheels in his head. He ought always to make the distinction. This is essential in scientific investigation. The "airship" seen at various points appears simultaneous at all of them in the same longitude, and displays the same characteristics of lights, brilliant white, green and red, and gradually disappearing. The illusion was perfect, and it is not surprising that many people were led to believe it a veritable airship, especially as many experiments are being made with flying machines, some of which have attained to an encouraging degree of success justifying the belief that in the near future aerial navigation, to a limited extent, and under favoring meteorological conditions, will be practicable.

Since writing the foregoing, the "airship" has passed by Burlington, as a "ship in the night," and has been seen by hundreds of our citizens. A full account of the event will be found in our local columns. This indisputable fact (in the language of the old-time printer), "knocks galley west," our learned exposition of the mystery founded on Prof. Hough's statement. For the nonce, science retires to its roost and awaits developments. Science has often done that and is an adept at retreat. That which has passed as a scientific truth in one generation has been renounced as heresy in the next. An exact science is unknown, perhaps unknowable.

Marshfield, Wis.

Milwaukee, Wis.

Dubuque, Iowa, April 11.--An object believed to be the mysterious airship passed over Dubuque after midnight last night. It was seen at Green Island at 10 o'clock and at Bellevue at 11.

Bloomington, Ill. (Daylight sighting)

Kinmundy, Ill., April 11.--The famous airship passed over this city at about 8 p.m. to-night, carrying a headlight with two red lights in the rear. It looked to be about 100 feet between head and rear lights.

THE REAL THING.

Fontanelle, April 12.--Special: The people of this locality have been incredulous as to the news of the now famous air ship until to-night, when the most incredulous stand in awe before the apparent fact. At exactly 8:30 this wonderful aerial visitor put in an appearance and created consternation among the people. It came from the southeast, having been sighted at Bedford at 5:30. It was not more than 200 feet above the treetops, the headlight an olive green and the whole machine could be distinctly seen. It was about sixty feet long, and the vibrations of its wings could be plainly seen as well as hearing the working of its machinery. Sweet strains of music could be heard, indicating that there was an orchestra on board. It looked as though there might be room for another set but all efforts to hail were futile. It passed here at ten miles an hour, but seemed to increase the rate as it steamed toward the northwest. There is no longer doubt in this locality that the air ship is the real thing, and all stand in awe of this wonderful phenomenon. It was witnessed by many of our most prominent citizens including J.H. Hulbert, S. Shoemaker, J.I. McCampbell, ex-Mayor Dr. C.W. Scott, W.F. Johnston, L.W. Wood and others.

SAYS HE IS THE AIRSHIP MAN.

(Offers to buy)

1897 April 13 (Tue) Iowa State Register (Des M.), p. 3. (card 1)

HAD AN AIRSHIP OF THEIR OWN / Some Practical Jokers Sent Up a Fake Airship and Fooled Hundreds of People. / It Was Cleverly Made and Created Much Excitement--It Finally Caught Afire. / Part of the Mystery Surrounding the Sights Which Have Been Seen Here Explained--An Aerial Torpedo Got Loose.

Some practical jokers who live on the east side had a great deal of fun at the expense of the public on Sunday night and by a cleverly executed trick they made hundreds of people believe that a full sized and rigged airship was whirling over Des Moines.

The men who perpetrated the joke obtained three large paper balloons about five feet in diameter. They fastened them on a light board so that the balloons were supported by several feet and then when all was in readiness they inflated the balloon down in the seclusion of Coon river bottoms and started it on the journey.

The balloons, or rather the airship, rose very rapidly and was soon some 200 yards above the earth. When it reached that height it struck a current of air bearing northeast and leading directly across the east side. This was just what was wanted to make the joke complete. The current of air was a strong one and in less time than it takes to tell it the airship was sailing down upon Des Moines at a terrific rate of speed. Hundreds of people saw it coming and watched it very closely and hundreds of people were converted to the idea that there really was an airship sailing over our heads. But unfortunately the little airship caught fire and in a few minutes came down to the earth. If it had not caught fire there would have always been hundreds of people in Des Moines who would have sworn to their dying day that they had seen an airship.

THE AIRSHIP MYSTERY SOLVED.

One of Rich's Aerial Torpedoes Broke Away During the Experiments.

It has just been discovered that one of the mysterious airships that has been seen for the several weeks past in different parts of the state belongs by rights to Des Moines. During the latter part of February last a field trial or test of the Rich aerial torpedo balloon was given by the promoters of the enterprise, a full description of the test and trial of which was given in the columns of The Register at the time.

It now appears that an accident occurred that was not mentioned by the men in charge at the time, they feeling rather chagrined in having the accident. It is now learned that out of the number of aerial torpedoes made, there was one of unusual size, the intention of the promoters being to have this one ascend in as near a perpendicular line as possible for the purpose of ascertaining the depth of the lower strata of air current, and in order to obtain this result a balloon of strong ascending power was required, which was regulated by a ballast of sand.

The accident occurred on the first day of the field trial, the day being cloudy and a moderate breeze blowing from the northeast. The balloon part of the torpedo, after being inflated, was held in the usual manner by a couple of farmers who lived in the vicinity. The torpedo case holding its ballast of sand had been adjusted to the balloon part and the electrical igniting device which explodes the gas in the balloon at the proper time was about to be inserted in its metallic case in the lower end or neck of the balloon when one of the young farmers holding the guy rope accidentally released his hold, and in a flash the balloon with its charge of sand was ascending skyward and in a few seconds was among the clouds, sailing in a southwesterly direction.

The aerial torpedoes with their explosive case and equipment are painted a jet black and highly varnished, and a strong light reflecting upon its surface would naturally throw out a light of various colors similar to those of a large prism around a gas shade. This would account for the many different colored lights seen by the citizens in the various cities and towns over which the aerial torpedo with its ballast of sand passed in its aimless wanderings. Being confined to the lower air current and controlled solely by the ever changing air stream no doubt it will continue to appear and disappear in different parts of the country until the heat of the summer sun expands the confined gas to the extent of bursting the huge envelope, which will result in furnishing some lucky citizen with enough material to construct an outing tent or an awning for his premises.

1897 April 13 (Tue) Evening Times-Republican (Marshalltown, Ia) (card 1)

SWIFT IN FLIGHT. / The Airship Runs a Race With the Burlington Fast Mail Train. / Wins With "Wings Down" and Didn't Half Try--Was Seen by Many. / A Rhodes Man Claims It Was Wrecked in a Pond There--The Latest. / Special to the Times-Republican.

Bancroft, April 13.--The mysterious airship was seen, or rather it lights were seen, Saturday evening. It was first noticed northwest of Bancroft by the citizens, who watched it growing dimmer, which it did rapidly. As its course was for Sioux City, two miles away, the telephone operator was notified. He dropped his phone as soon as airship was mentioned, but soon returned to say that it was south of town. He notified the operator at Armstrong, who is twelve miles west of Sioux City. By the time that gentleman got out it was south of that town, having taken but three or four minutes to go the twelve miles. Algona was called up and discovered it in the northwest. Estherville, twenty miles west of Armstrong, soon sighted it and reported to Bancroft. It had now passed by Estherville and was apparently heading for Spirit Lake, twenty miles further. Having lost sight of it now we in Bancroft went to bed, but Armstrong and Svea City reported it as having passed back by them at about 1 o'clock. There was great excitement.

WILL INVESTIGATE. / Holstein Correspondent Thinks Airship Theory Possible, but Not Plausible. / Special to the Times-Republican.

Holstein, April 13.--Is it prudent to say anything about the airship? We had a little experience Saturday night that may add to the current news about it. About 8:15 I was reading the accounts in the Times-Republican to some ladies at home and went out of doors to see if it was visible. There it was in the northwest about one-third of the way up from the horizon to the zenith. It was a bright light of a reddish color, resembling lamp light, about six inches along the bottom and of nearly the same height, only projecting upwards at the upper right hand corner. It in no way resembled the light of a the different stars either in size, color or brilliancy. The ladies came out to see it, also our station agent, Mr. Woodburn, and his family. We were all of the opinion it could not be starlight. It remained stationary fully half an hour. I then started down town to get others to look at it. It gradually descended and moved northwest.

Dr. Smith and C.L. Wilson, druggist, came out and we watched it sink and disappear in the west. I am not prepared to say it was or was not artificial light, but all of us who saw it incline strongly to the belief that it was. I shall carefully watch the same point each clear night, and if it appears again at or near the same place in the heavens it will establish the fact it was a peculiar star. If it does not, or appears at some other point, it will strengthen the belief that it was artificial light and the airship theory receive material support here. It was seen from Calva, the next station east, at the same time and place. In this age of freaks and folks it is not wise to swallow things of this nature too readily. Still we must not too rashly turn our backs on and sneer at scientific possibilities. Too much has been accomplished once thought impossible. Jules Verne's Nautilus, once jeered and hooted at, is now verified and in practical operation in submarine navigation. Why not aerial navigation? DROWNED AT RHODES. / A Man from that Town Says the Strange Ship Was Wrecked There.

Rhodes, April 13.--We have noticed for some days the account of the appearance of a singular object in the air, supposed by some to be an airship. It will probably be seen no more. Saturday night about 11 o'clock our citizens were startled by the appearance of a very bright light in the heavens, rapidly approaching from the southwest. A large crowd was soon on the streets, and as the object approached it seemed to come nearer the earth. It soon came so near that the sound of machinery could be heard, which soon became as loud as a heavy train of cars. All at once the aerial monster took a sudden plunge downward and was immersed in the reservoir of the C., M. & St. P. railway, which is almost a lake, covering about eight acres of land. No pen can describe what followed. The boiling lava from Vesuvius pouring into the sea could only equal it. The light was so large and had created so much heat that the horrible hissing which occurred when the monster plunged into the lake could be heard for miles and the water of the reservoir was so hot that the naked hand could not be held in it. As soon as the wreck can be raised out of the water a full description of the machine will be sent. JOHN BUTLER. / Saw it at Wesley. / Special to the Times-Republican.

Wesley, April 13.--The wonderful airship we have been reading about being seen in different parts of the state of late has been seen twice in the vicinity of Wesley during the past week. On Friday evening about 5 p.m., a couple of our prominent ladies, on their way to a cottage prayer meeting, noticed something flying along in the sky and as it came nearer they saw that it was what is supposed to be an airship. They described it as being about twenty or thirty feet long, with a window in the side showing a red colored light. They watched it for a few minutes as it moved in a northwesterly direction as it passed by their view, and it showed a large round red light at the rear end. Last night at 8:30 p.m. our railroad agent received a message from the agent at Garner to look out for the airship. It was coming west. He came into the hotel at about 9 o'clock and told the proprietor of the Sherman House about it. They went out to look for it, and it was not long until they were rewarded for their trouble. It was seen east of the town and moved off in a southwesterly direction out of sight. Those who saw it are very enthusiastic over it and are sure that it is a real airship.

At a Terrific Rate. Burlington, Ia., April 13.--Engineer F.L. Bullard.... Saw it at Melbourne. / Special to the Times-Republican.

Melbourne, April 13.--A number of our citizens claim to have seen the air ship. At 9 o'clock Saturday night A.H. Miller, lumber merchant, had just entered the house when his son Ed called him to the door to see what they seem to think was the airship. A large, blood red light was plainly visible, bearing to the northwest. It was not over 200 feet high, and was moving rapidly and was soon lost to sight. Quite a number can testify to seeing it. Says It's Venus.

Clinton, April 13.--There was considerable excitement here last night when a thousand people were looking at the airship. Professor Freeman, an astronomer here of much note, put his large glass on it and found it to be the planet Venus, which is very brilliant just now. The sky at the time was very favorable for a view of it, also of Jupiter and three of its moons, which were directly overhead.

~~For Home and Special to the Times-Republican.~~ ~~Corner of the ...~~ Saw the Airship. / Special to the Times-Republican.

Algona, April 13.--Algona people saw what is called the "airship" Saturday night. It created considerable interest. 1897 April 14 (Wed) Burlington, Ia., Hawk-Eye, p. 7. (card 1)

AIRSHIP LOG / Reflections and Comment From Near and Distant Points. / People Concede That One Cannot Believe All One Sees--Press Comment on the Hawk-Eye's Demonstration of a Fake. /

"Although I had read in the Hawk-Eye that a balloon was to be sent up from the Hawk-Eye building last evening, I was astonished to see now easy it would be to believe that the balloon was an airship," said a North Hill man yesterday. "The second balloon sent up on Monday evening continued to rise higher and higher until, when it passed over Bonn's Garden, it looked to be 1,000 feet from the earth. The alternate streaks of red, white and blue caused it to look as if there were at least two lights and the oscillating movement gave it the appearance of being guided by some one. No wonder the people were deceived Saturday night."

Waterloo Courier: The boys at Cedar Falls having sent up an air balloon declare they never had so much fun for 25 cents before in their lives, and are of the opinion that they are not the only ones in this quarter of the globe who have been spending their hard-earned cash in Fourth of July balloons. And their suspicions are correct, according to the Burlington Hawk-Eye of yesterday, which tells of an experiment which to members of its reportorial staff made with satisfactory results Saturday evening. /

Mt. Pleasant News: The people of Mt. Pleasant and Henry county in common with other people in Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Wisconsin and Illinois, have been much excited over the now famous "airship" that has persistently sailed across the heavens in plain view of the gaping multitudes. The phenomena has been attributed to snake bite, indigestion, or weak mind, by some, others of a scientific turn of mind have speculated upon anything from a meteor, to a new world just created, while some, a very few, have actually and seriously regarded it as the triumph of the aeronaut, and that the airship [is] at least a practical reality. Mt. Pleasant people have seen the "airship" twice the past week, once on Thursday night and again on Saturday night. It is also due again to-night about 9 o'clock.

Sunday's Hawk-Eye explains the situation, exonerates prohibitionists puts scientist to rout [sic], and gives the laugh to those whose imaginations ran riot with their senses. /

Keokuk Constitution-Democrat: In order to demonstrate how easily the people may be deceived in a matter of this kind, The Burlington Hawk-Eye made a test Saturday night, which in every way proved a success. A twenty-five cent paper balloon was purchased and two reporters were sent up a hill north of the city to send it off. The balloon rose gracefully and sailed over the city in plain sight. Crowds of people watched it in its course, and some of the explanations and exclamations were amusing indeed. Different features of the air ship were explained in such detail as could come only from a vivid imagination. The Hawk-Eye explains now easy it would be for traveling man to carry a dozen of these airships in his trunk and at the end of each long jump on his route go to some quiet spot and set one adrift to puzzle and excite the people who saw it. The fact that The Hawk-Eye ~~balloon was seen as far west as Home, Iowa, proves its adaptability for such a purpose. /~~

Monmouth Review: The "air-ship neck" will have to be counted a modern malady as much as the "bicycle face" and kindred ills, if these mysterious heavenly visitors keep scaring about by day and night. Whatever it is, the airship makes an interesting theme of conversation. Of course, the fake that was perpetrated Saturday night in Burlington when The Hawk-Eye folks sent up a paper balloon and had everybody guessing, will shake the faith of some. /

Galesburg Mail: In Burlington the efforts of the residents were rewarded by seeing a dull red light pass to the north. Then it was found that ~~some~~ some youngsters had been sending up balloons, and they declared the ship was a fake. Galesburg people say that the light seen here could not come from such a source, and also ask an explanation for the green lights. /

Dubuque Telegraph: Burlington has seen the air-ship. It passed over the city at 8:30. The town is talking of nothing else. The newspaper telephones have been hot with messages about it all evening. There are one or two people in the city, however, who are quietly enjoying the excitement, and they feel well repaid for the trouble and expense they went to to secure a paper balloon and send it up outside the city, so that the breeze would carry it over the business portion. These gentlemen, believing there was more imagination than anything else about the airship, concluded to try an experiment. They secured a paper balloon and sent it up at 8:30. The streets happened to be full of people, and hundreds of them saw it sailing over their heads. The cry of "The air ship! The air ship," went up, and intense excitement followed. Then returns began to come in from outlying towns, telegraphed or telephoned, about the air-ship. The descriptions were identical with those sent out from other cities--green, red and white lights, wings, etc., all included. Even people in Burlington swear they saw colored lights accompanying the white light. The experiment was made to test the credulity of the people, and was eminently successful. /

Green Bay Airship a "Fake." Green Bay, Wis., April 13.--The wonderful airship seen above this city Saturday night proves to have been simply a huge practical joke worked on the unsuspecting public. It consisted of a large hot-air balloon with a rod across the bottom, to which were attached two Japanese lanterns. It was sent up about 9:30 o'clock by several well-known residents, and to those who were not "on the inside" it looked like a veritable airship. Many claimed they could see the body of the thing, with rudder and wings. It caused intense excitement. A suburban resident now has the remnants which landed in his yard about 10:30 o'clock.

Photographed the Airship.

Chicago, April 12.-- 1897 April 14 (Wed) Iowa State Register, p. 8.

THE "AIRSHIP" IS SEEN AGAIN. / Spectators Heard the Wheels Go Round and Saw Persons.

Jewell, Iowa, April 13.--Special: The people of this place were greatly excited last night by the appearance of the so-called airship. It made its appearance in a westerly direction at about 10:30 o'clock. Its course was directly over the town. The whirr of wheels was distinctly heard and sounded like the spinning of a top. Two persons were distinctly seen aboard the ship. It appeared to be constructed of a white metal with several propellers working horizontally and two large ones on either end working perpendicularly. It changed its course several times, and when about three miles northwest of here it circled around Mud Lake several times and disappeared in the northwest.

A BEMIGHTED COMMUNITY. Stanhope, April 13.--Special: The wonderful airship which has shaken this state from center to circumference, has not only not appeared in this vicinity, but none of our prominent citizens even claim to have seen it. Stanhope, we believe, stands absolutely alone in this respect.

Apropos the Air Mystery. Sutherland, W Iowa, April 13.--Ed. Register: Does the enclosed quotation refer to the air mystery over Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa? How is it that the Ft. Dodge Coffin is closed when the mystery is hovered over us? This verse says: "Our hopes, like towering falcons aim / At objects in an airy height. / The little pleasure of the gaze / Is from afar to view the flight."

Maybe this refers to the tax payers and tax eaters contest now red hot in Des Moines. We think no ulcer or leech can be either a good partisan or a patriot. / A READER. 1897 April 14 (Wed) Waterloo Daily Courier, p. 5. (card 1)

THAT 'ERE AIR SHIP. / THE LATEST PRODUCTION / Of a Wild Imagination Concerning the Wanderer Lies at the Bottom of Iowa River. / The Latest Stories.

Considerable excitement was created in Cedar Rapids yesterday by the report that the mysterious airship had landed in the yard of A.R. Foote, the rental traveling auditor of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern. Many people visited the place and viewed the wonder. This is no joke.

But it seems that Mr. Foote has not captured the only one of these aerial wonders, which have heretofore shown their liking to the popular Cedar Rapids route, for about 9 o'clock last evening the Postal Telegram received at Clinton wired Manager Albert as follows: "That we all suppose to be the airship has just passed overhead with three brilliant lights about 1,000 feet above us. One light is green, one red and one a bright white. It is going west and you may get a glimpse of it. This burp is wild." Just after the receipt of this message the rain began to pour down here and it is supposed the navigator of the air changed his course, for he was not seen here.

First Visions of It. The first airship seen--and one that seemed actually to fly and appeared to be under the control of its pilot--within the last six months was near Sacramento, Cal., many of the inhabitants of that city declaring that about 1 o'clock on the morning of Monday, Nov. 16, they saw an airship passing rapidly over the city. Some merely declared they saw a bright light and nothing else, while others went so far as to assert they saw a cigar-shaped flying machine and heard voices from it. Some residents of Oakland, across the bay from San Francisco, declared also they saw the same sight a few nights previously. According to George D. Collins, a lawyer of San Francisco, it was (an) aerial airship and made a journey.

On Dec. 1, John A. Heron, an electrician of San Jose, CAL., in an interview, said he had been to Honolulu and back in an airship, but refused to say anything as to the inventor or the model of his machine. Heron is the patentee of a platinum apparatus.

Nothing more was heard from either of these ventures, and the public had ceased to interest itself until Jan. 2, a month later, a dispatch came from San Francisco saying that it would soon be sent up from there. This statement was made by authority of Dr. C.A. Smith, president of the Atlantic & Pacific Aerial Navigation company. The propelling power was to be a Maxim engine of 180 horse power, weighing complete 140 pounds.

The reason for the mysterious visitor sailing around so long is accounted for, as follows: It is said that years ago a ruling was made, preventing the patent office at Washington from issuing patents to inventors of airships, until the airship had been perfected and it had been demonstrated that it was practical. The reason for this ruling was that so many people were securing patents on flying machines that were worthless, that it was felt the money of these people was being taken for nothing.

IOWA FALLS, April 14.--Many people here are confident that the airship of the later-day notoriety lies at the bottom of the Iowa river a short distance above this city. Shortly after dusk last evening several people were attracted by a meteoric like flash across the heavens and attended by a whirring noise that the passage of a heavy body through the air at a rapid rate might make. The light and the dark form which seemed to follow it approached the earth at a terrific speed and parties living near the river declare that it struck the water and immediately sunk out of sight. Those who reached the point of the object's disappearance first claim that the water was churned into a whirlpool and that for a long distance the water was seething and boiling. The theory advanced by many is that the airship while passing over this section became unmanageable and in the efforts of the people aboard to land shot downwards and plunged headlong into the river and after striking the bottom the propelling power of the ship dashed the waters into a foam. Nothing can be seen from the surface and nothing has come to the surface that might indicate the nature of the ship or its occupants, and the supposition is that the occupants were killed or drowned and with them the secret of the ship. Searching parties are now being organized to search the river and if possible raise the wreck. Thousands are expected here every hour by special trains from all parts of the compass and the whole matter has caused a big sensation. The field is a green one for enterprising entrepreneurs and the advance phalanx is expected in the morning.

1897 April 15 (Thu) Burlington, Ia., Hawk-Eye, p. 7.

LaHarpe Sees the Airship. LaHarpe, Ill., April 14.--(Correspondence.)--About 8:30 o'clock Saturday evening your correspondent, with other citizens who were on the streets, saw a mysterious light floating over the city which was promptly pronounced by those versed in aerial mechanics to be the far-reaching or sailing airship. When first noticed it was directly over the city, but gradually passed to the south and after fifteen or twenty minutes disappeared from view. The light which at times became brighter, then dimmer, gave rise to much speculation. Some believed it to be a veritable airship, of which there seems to be, judging from the press, a "school" disputing themselves among the inhabitants of cerulean depths. Or, perchance, it was the wanderer Orion digressing his parabolic path through the azure blue; or, perhaps, it was an advertising scheme in the shape of a balloon sent out by the enterprising Hawk-Eye to show which way the wind blows. I. P. to The Hawk-Eye.

1897 April 15 (Thu) Des Moines Leader, p. 3.

A Balloon at Washington. Washington, April 14--An object was seen here in the sky last night which is supposed to have been the airship. City Night Watch E. C. Norton saw it and so did W. C. Chilcote, Jr., a reliable merchant. When the night watch first saw it it was hovering over the earth, south-east of this city and seemed headed in a westerly or southerly direction. The headlight looked to be about the size of a big lantern. Various rumors in reference to it are afloat. Frank Brinton, airship inventor, has been missing from his home near here for about ten days and many think he has completed his craft and is plowing the atmosphere over his native country. He is a very peculiar man, and had been working at his airship for nearly two years, and he may be perfecting his machine before exhibiting it to the world. There has been much speculation over the mysterious craft today.

1897 April 15 (Thu) Des Moines Register, p.

The "Airship" a Reality. Winterset, April 14.--Ed. Register: The airship, which has been the center of interest to the greater part of the Iowa population for the past week, had up until last night treated Winterset people with contempt, not even casting a single red or green flicker which the most distorted imagination could form into the aerial monster. But the motorman of the machine evidently became conscious of the eagerness with which many eyes in this ~~town~~ town scanned the northwestern heavens, for last night it appeared on schedule time, 8:30 o'clock, and before it had disappeared from sight hundreds of responsible citizens had had a good view of the machine. It was traveling very slowly and very near the ground, barely clearing the dome of the court house, directly over which it passed. The construction of the mysterious machine, as nearly as it is possible to describe it, considering its not remaining long enough for an exhaustive examination to be made, is as follows: In appearance it was a veritable ship such as sail the water, but was of rather small dimensions, being not more than 150 or 200 feet in length. The hull of the vessel was composed of a dense cloud, the mast and ropes were sprays of mist, while the sails of light fog flaunted gayly to the breeze. It was of the most modern and approved pattern, capable of a speed of from fifty to sixty knots per hour, and stated by some to be even greater. It was manned by Charon and a son of Noah, who seemed to have it well in hand, and to be thoroughly ~~acquainted~~ acquainted with its workings, probably on account of their long experience in the science of navigation. It had the appearance of being a passenger boat rather than a man-of-war, and quite likely belonged to the line of which the "Flying Dutchman" is the most noted example. I have now given as complete a description as the bounds of truth and veracity will circumscribe. The people here no longer doubt the reality of the airship of which the papers have recently ~~mentioned~~ mentioned said so much, and which up to last night had been received only as an immense joke by them.

TEETH LOVING CITIZEN.

1897 April 15 (Thu) Iowa State Register, p. 2d.

Captured at Audubon. Audubon, April 14.--Special:--At [10:59] last night, as our city marshal (Nate [C]arper) was going home (we don't know where he had been), he was hailed by Mr. "Clinton" Sreinsman, of the Omaha invention. Thus: "Say, pard, can you tell me where I can get an empty building I can get in the balance of the night?" "Yes, the C.R.I. & P. Co. has an empty engine house here you can get in." Our marshal opened the door and it suited Mr. "Clinton." Our marshal had a long talk with Mr. "Clinton" in regard to the free advertising he is getting. He said that John Bucler, from Rhodes, had either been drinking or else he wanted to hurt his reputation in what he said about going down in the C.M. & St. Paul reservoir. He says, "Of course, I stopped there to get water." Anyone wanting to see this machine can see it by going to Audubon to-day. Mr. "Clinton" will ~~be~~ descend at 6 p.m. today. Or any inquiries will be cheerfully answered by addressing City Marshal, Audubon, Iowa.

Maxwell, April 1[2].--Ed. Register:--In the small hours of Saturday morning, when the village was sleeping in sweet repose, down by the cheese foundry might have been seen a crowd of boys busily engaged in putting a fire into a balloon. Soon the monster of the clouds went up into space and sailed away in a northwesterly direction. As Chas. Bartlett was returning from his nightly visit to the grog shop, the sole possessor of a huge rectangular jag, he espied the fiery monster and set up a howl that started the whole village. Men, women, and children scantily dressed rushed into the street and demanded the cause of the disturbance, but before he could explain to them that "he had seen the airship, it had disappeared. He was so excited over the thing that he at once reported it to The Register, but in his excitement forgot to sign his own name. E. H. ALVERSON.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Burlington, Ia., Hawk-Eye, p. 2.

AIRSHIP POSITIVELY SEEN. / ~~XXXXX~~ Makes a Short Stop Near Birmingham, Iowa. Birmingham, Ia., April 15.--(Special.)--Between seven and eight o'clock last night a monster object was seen approaching in the distance from a southerly direction. When first seen it was descending very rapidly from a great height, but on nearing the earth, descended more slowly, and alighted in a meadow lot three-quarters of a mile west of this place. A large crowd of men and ~~many~~ boys started for the scene, but when within about a hundred yards from the ship it slowly rose, with a very loud whirring sound, as if of fast revolving wheels or fans, and sailed slowly away in a northwesterly direction. It was quite moonlight, and two men could be distinctly seen. The structure looked to be nearly 100 feet long by about twenty feet high in the center, tapering down at each end, and was lighted in colors. There were two smaller lights, one red and one green, and the larger one or headlight, which hung suspended from the end, about eight feet below the prow of the ship. One of the men carried a lantern which he waved as the ship ascended, but which disappeared soon afterward. It was watched by many people here till it went out of ~~axign~~ sight, who will testify to the truth of the statement. / WM. H. WALTERS. / SAW THE AIRSHIP, B'GOSH. / Two Illinois Farmers Make Affidavit to the Fact.

Springfield, Ill., April 15.--Adolph Winkle and John Hulle, farm hands, have made an affidavit that the air ship landed two miles north of here at noon to-day. They visited the ship and conversed with the inmates--two men and one woman. They repaired the electric apparatus and the searchlight and machinery. They said they came here from Quincy in thirty minutes, will make a report to the government when Cuba is declared free. The ship and its occupants left for the south at 1 o'clock this afternoon. Their farmers' description is similar to the description heretofore given. /

Looking for the Airship.

Morning Sun, Ia., April 15.--(Correspondence.)--Word came from Keithsburg last evening that the airship had been seen, and it was headed toward Morning Sun. Everybody had his best girl, and was on the watch. Some even went to Wapello, thinking they might have a better view of the monster, but, alas, no airship appeared.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Cedar Rapids (Ia) Evening Gazette, p. 1.

IS A CLEVER FAKE. / Airship Comes Down at Waterloo with One Passenger--His Companion Drowned in the Cedar. / Damage to Machinery Brings the Mysterious Voyager to Earth--Is Visited by Thousands. / Thousands Were Hoaxed.

Waterloo, Iowa, April 16.--The mysterious airship landed at Waterloo at 3:59 o'clock this morning. There was a break in its compressor machinery. It lies now on the river bank on the old circus ground near the B.C.R. & N. track.

One man came down with it. He gave his name as Jourgensen. He said he had a companion, Prof. Stormout, when the ship started from San Francisco March 25.

Prof. Stormout fell overboard just before the ship landed, and is lost in the Cedar river.

The ship is in the shape of two large cones, with cabin and operating machinery between them. It encountered severe storms, but stood them well. Jourgensen is a tall, thin man 55 years old.

Thousands of people are visiting the spot where the mysterious thing lies.

The following telegram was immediately sent out by The Gazette, addressed to the Courier:

TELEGRAM.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., April 16, 1897.
To the Courier, Waterloo, Iowa:

Are you all drunk up there, or was that airship carried out to the fair grounds for exhibition purposes at so much per head? Wire us quick special giving personal opinion. We want 500 words of news, but no rot. / THE GAZETTE COMPANY.

To this an answer was returned as follows: / Waterloo, Ia., April 16, 1897. / Gazette, Cedar Rapids, Iowa:

The airship has two cigar-shaped cylinders, canvas-covered, thirty-six feet long and seven feet in diameter at the largest part. It has also a screw propeller and fins along the sides. It is now being viewed by thousands. It lies on the river bank and there is no charge to see it. It is a most excellently executed fake. / COURIER.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Council Bluffs (Ia) Daily Nonpareil, p. 2.

Saw the Airship. / Citizens at Underwood View the Machine That Flies. / Special to the Daily Nonpareil.

Underwood, Ia., April 15.--A very peculiar and brilliant light was seen to pass over this city last night about 9 o'clock. It came down quite low to within a few miles or so of here and then it ascended and when it was directly over the city it was quite high. After it had passed over it went down ~~xxxx~~ much lower and the shape of the machine could be seen distinctly. It was like a boat and had something on each side which seemed to be wings. It was brilliantly lighted and could be easily distinguished from the stars, even at its greatest height. At least two reputable citizens saw it and it was watched until it disappeared in a northeasterly direction.

p.3--If that airship cannot be controlled by any other way why not try the interstate commerce law on it?
17,2 aights at Waterloo / 17,3--Is there any bottom to that airship?
18,3--Tom Collins would be a perfectly good name for that airship.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Daily Nonpareil (Council Bluffs, Ia.), p.5. (cd. 1)

AIR SHIP APPEARS / CROWD VIEWED IT OVER THE OPERA HOUSE LAST EVENING. / RED AND GREEN LIGHTS ORNAMENTED THE "CRITTER" AND THERE WAS MUCH WONDERMENT AMONG THE STAR-GAZERS--STRANGE AND MYSTERIOUS MESSAGE DROPS FROM THE VESSEL, IN WHICH MANY PEOPLE FAMILIAR TO COUNCIL BLUFFS ARE KNOWINGLY REFERRED TO. /

A large crowd enjoyed the gyrations of the air ship in the region above the opera house last evening. From twenty-five to 100 persons enjoyed the sublime spectacle and a field glass procured by one of the more fortunate members of the assemblage was passed along from one pair of eyes to another with eager curiosity and keep enjoyment plainly written on the faces of the company in the same manner that a physiognomy changes in one of the "before and after" advertisements. The ship had the appearance given it by the paragraphs and, in addition to the outlines commonly credited to it, indulged in a pair of peculiarly beautiful lights, one red, the other green. Of course this feature held a great deal of attention and many were certain that it was none of the ordinary sort of airships, but was a new evening star or something. This idea met with ill favor, however, and by far the greater part of the congregation was convinced it was nothing else than the real thing.

A reporter for the Nonpareil was on the ground, being in that respect similar to the remainder of the crowd, but in addition to this, while peering through the strong glasses, he had thoughtfully borrowed from the horse race critic, he noticed a small package drop from the corner of the ship in which the green light was located, and fall rapidly and in almost a straight line to the ground. Noting the location of the point where the object ~~xxx~~ appeared to land and getting its astronomical position as related to the various constellations above, he carefully vended his way to the north end of the Eighth street bridge over Indian creek, where, as had been expected, the parcel was found, tied in manilla paper with a piece of red and white string, similar to that used by earthly druggists.

Since it was addressed to no one in particular, the reporter opened the package and perused with considerable interest its contents, the whole being written on a rare old parchment in a laboriously exact hand, and the greater part of it relating to people known to Council Bluffs. The mystery was, of course, deepened by this discovery, and there has ever since been in the receptive mind of the reporter a feeling of dread uncertainty not unminged with fear and akin to that which seizes the editor when the "bad man" of the town sends up a note that he will call in an hour.

WRITER KNEW HLEN.

The fact that the first paragraph stated Mrs. Helon O. Wheeler-Peterman-etc.-Pryor was at present located in Chippewa Falls, Wis., may give the reader some key to the mystery of the package, and again it may not. Mr. Pryor was well and happy, the parchment declared, and was casting about to see if there were not more husbands and towns she could conquer in that easy manner which has characterized her conquests of the past. Her late fall out of Des Moines, where she had spent the comfortable bank account of a drug clerk, or was alleged to have done so, at least, was sketched briefly, and it was said that there was some prospect of her making up with one of her numerous ex-husbands and rebuilding a ruined home in Minnesota.

Tom Dawson's name was noticed, in the next paragraph, and, on wading through its rather wordy depth, it was found that he was in Washington and had the secretaryship of the Paris legation on one end of a string and was holding fast the other end. This, the parchment averred, was the reason he had not returned home yet. He was something like the boy following the calf around the barnyard, holding its tail, who couldn't let go because it was all he could do to hold on.

Frank Compton's whiskers, said the historian of the airship, further on in his scoll (scroll), had last been sighted in New York, where they were being woven into a rug by a progressive furrier, who had found it (much) cheaper to manufacture rugs of gunnysacking in this manner than to make them of genuine animal skins, the public being even better pleased with the new than the old product because of the lessening of the tendency of the hair to pull out. The peculiarly stiff curl at the end of each whisker from Compton's beard, it was stated, seemed calculated to make an especially desirable rug so far as this question was concerned. Their very rich and glossy black was also greatly admired.

"Local Health Officer McCrary's new show polish has been introduced in Chicago, but owing to the peculiar shape and extraordinary size of the pedal extremities of the residents of that metropolis or from some other cause it has not been a great success," proceeded from the veracious parchment. It will be remembered that McCrary did not make a great success of his first venture with the new polish, but that was undoubtedly from "some other cause."

NOT A SUCCESS.

After disposing of this subject, which he dilated on at considerable length, the historian proceeded: "Cocking mains are now being held at an obscure point across the river from Council Bluffs, owing to the recent action of the police in your city, and they are enjoying a wonderful attendance. On a recent evening one of the largest crowds of the season turned out and enjoyed fifteen or twenty rounds of fierce and rapid fighting, but still the show in general was not esteemed a success, as Jack Whittaker was unable to be present."

"Your old friend, Lady Fitzgerald, is in Kansas City and her dapper little lordship is close 'by her side'--in fact, she never lets him get out of sight nowadays, for fear some other widow will abezzle him. He still tells in mournful tones, it is said, how he was robbed within a few hours of his marriage of all the ready cash he possessed, something like $400, in Omaha, and they have been obliged to defer their voyage homeward to the estate of Glendalough, county Wicklow, Ireland, until they can save enough to pay the freight, which, of course, will be no small item."

"The circulation end of the New York Journal is anxious to have an interview with Capt. Fraser, now sojourning in your city, and though the department is organized for circulation it, in this instance, desires to stop circulation. The captain is advised to solicit subscriptions for some other paper hereafter."

THOSE STOCKINGS.

"The petition of Mrs. Mynster for an order of court compelling her husband to allow her more stockings, has been placed on file by the celestial council of which the writer of this is the secretary. It is thought the request cannot be acted on here because of lack of jurisdiction and that Judge Smith of your city will probably have to pass on the matter."

"The various hats of Ed. Rogers who, we are informed, runs a wet goods emporium on Broadway, Council Bluffs, was to have won if the manufacture bill had not passed, are still on hand, and will be delivered to the other fellows on request."

Seeing that the parchment was still slowly unrolling and gave no signs of nearing the end, the reporter, noticing that the hour was getting late and fearing that two moons would soon appear behind the postoffice clock tower, where there should be but one, beat a hasty retreat for the office and turned in his scopol.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Des Moines Register, p. 3. (card 1)

AROUND THE WORLD IN AN HOUR / Forest City Man Writes an Interesting Account of the "Airship" / Was Picked Up by the Aerial Visitor and Take. Completely Around the World. / Entire Trip Occupied But an Hour-- Scientific Description of Vessel That Goes at Lightening Speed. / TALK A RIDE IN AN AIRSHIP. / An Iowa Man Demonstrates the Possibilities of Aerial Navigation.

Forest City, Iowa, April 12.--Ed. Register: It is not often that an ordinary human being could expect to be so fortunate as to successfully ride, sail, glide or fly through the air at the rate of about 100 miles per minute, safely, pleasantly and without the least impression that we were like meteors crossing and recrossing the continent in an hour.

The all absorbing thought of the possibility of human genius being able to construct a device that would overcome gravitation, friction, and the many obstacles in the way of navigating the air was consuming me as I was leisurely walking through the streets of our quiet city at a late hour last evening.

It was very far from my mind at that time, that in less than an hour I would have crossed the continent in the great airship, and again be returned to the very spot where I embarked upon the most thrilling and eventful voyage ever vouchsafed to a human being subject to all the natural laws of our present environment.

About 11 o'clock p.m., April 10, I beheld what at first appeared to be a blinding meteor flying through the sky apparently coming from the southeast. At once I thought of the many and unauthenticated stories of airships, flying machines, etc., but in an instant it was out of sight, and the beating of my heart in anticipation of being able to verify the many rumors was very discouraging truly.

But in a moment a rushing sound as of a swiftly passing train high up in the heavens convinced me that there was something unusual near at hand; yet not a light of any kind was to be seen where only a few seconds before was a blaze like the glaring sun.

In an instant more the wonderful airship shot past me not more than twenty feet above my head; not a sound or a speck of light; then I for the first time realized that it was returning directly toward me, but very slowly as though floating on the current of a river.

When within ten feet of where I stood, some one stepped out on the stern of the ship, as I will call it, although little resembling an ordinary sailing vessel, and spoke to me, saying: "Well, what do you think of it?"

I was for a moment almost too surprised to answer, but finally said: "From all the data at hand I am unable to form any definite ideas, only of surprise and wonder."

"Well, sir, if you are not particularly superstitious and will step aboard, we will guarantee you perfect safety to both mind and body and allow you to investigate our home, and when you are satisfied we will see that you depart at your earliest pleasure."

At the same time the ship settled off and touched the earth, and a pleasant gentleman stepped off and extended his hand in such an ordinary human manner that I had no hesitancy in grasping in it all the confidence of truly human friendship.

He said: "This is a flying machine in the ordinary language of our people. It is perfectly safe and we have been testing it for nearly two years and so far not an accident or disappointment has befallen us. If you like, you are welcome to step in and judge for yourself."

At the same time opening a door, I beheld a comfortable apartment dimly lighted, and heard what appeared to be pleasant conversation. As soon as we were both inside the door closed and the room was beautifully lit up as light as day, but by what method I know not, as I could see no lamps or burners of any kind.

It will not be necessary for me to give in detail the descriptions of my companion as he appeared to me. He was simply an American citizen to all appearances, dressed as we all dress, talked as we talk; for that is just what he is--an ordinary American citizen, one who, with others, after many years of close study and experiment, has been able to construct a device by which they were able to navigate the air.

At first I thought I felt a slight quiver of the ship, but that was all, for I supposed it was firmly resting on the ground at the very spot where I stepped aboard.

After offering me a seat, he said, "My name is B----. Whom do I have the pleasure to entertain?"

I rose up and said my name is Volmer, of Forest City, Iowa.

"Mr. Volmer, allow me to present some of my friends."

At this same moment the curtains were drawn, and several ladies and gentlemen stepped forward. All were pleasant, unassuming people after the formality of introduction.

Mr. B. (for by that will our friend be known) proceeded to show me around and explain the principle upon which the ship was constructed, a brief report of which I will attempt to make, but hope to be soon able to say something more definite.

"Mr. Volmer, it has been ten minutes since you stepped aboard our ship; we are now passing over Denver, if you look out this way you will see the city, as we will show you for a moment."

Sure enough there lay below us some city, the lights and glimmering of a city in the night were right beneath our feet. I remarked "This may be Denver for aught I know. I am sure it is if you say so," I said with a faint smile, "but I supposed we were at Forest City."

"We will be in a short time, but I thought I would give you a little ride before you return for the night."

Then a little quiver as before, and the lights of the city disappeared in a twinkling.

"The principle upon which this ship is built is simply this: It is always kept level. Here you see in this glass is a tube partly filled with quick silver. Upon every turn you will see little tubes. This is the real secret of our device. As the ship inclines these levels automatically adjust the () ing compressed air, which keeps her () and always right side up with care; the electric meters compress the air, which furnish part of the motive power similar to the method of a sky rocket. As the compressed air escapes it has a tendency to drive us ahead. If we wish to change our course we use this or that lever which only changes the relation of the bow of the ship to the levels. If we all walk over to one side of the ship it makes no difference, as the levels open just that much more escape for the compressed air, which always keeps her in due form. Now we are over San Francisco, and out over the Pacific. We will return via Mexico, New Orleans, Des Moines, and safely land you within the hour at the very spot where we found you. The nature and construction of the ship will be the subject of another chapter; how we overcome friction, supply ourselves with air, etc., we hope to give up to the public in the near future when it will be practicable for general use. The search lights with which they are supplied alone would be a subject for a volume. Magnetic attraction," he said upon leaving, "is of such vast importance in the velocity which we attain, that it cannot be explained in so short a time. Well, here we are at Des Moines in a little less than an hour. The dial will show the altitude and distance traveled. We are now at Forest City, and will bid you good night, but hope to entertain you on a more extensive trip in the near future."

The door opened and I stepped out at the very spot where I started on this most wonderful and interesting trip, a detailed account of which I hope to give as soon as I recover from my surprise. VOLMER. 1897 April 16 (Fri) Des Moines, p. 10.

THE AIRSHIP IN PARIS.

The airship is still in the air. This creature of the imagination has found its way across the ocean. The Figaro, one of the leading publications of Paris, has been discussing it seriously and the discussions have been cabled back to the New York papers. The Parisian journal takes a great deal of interest in the American invention. It says that at least a dozen prominent men of science in Europe are working on the problem of aerial navigation. Some of them have made more progress than others, but none as yet has solved the problem. The Figaro holds that the news which comes from "western America" may be reliable.

The confidence in aerial navigation is a little startling. In western America we are not so ready to believe. Hundreds of men have sworn in the statements that they have seen the airship, but most of us continue in a nebulous state of doubt. We will not believe it until we have thrust our hands, or our bodies, into the wonderful ship. Of course there is no airship of the kind supposed in existence. The whole thing is a hallucination. Men think they see it, but they didn't. Imagination works wonders on sensitive optic nerves. The public mind has become sensitive to such manifestations, and the sensitive retina of the mind records films of vapor as substantial things. The whole theory of the airship may be resolved into this manifestation of the supersensitive retina.

Of course, a real airship is among the possibilities. Before this generation has lived out its years men and women may sail in the atmosphere as really as they now sail on the ocean and ten times as fast. And again they may not. Anyone who has ridden even a bicycle against the wind has a faint idea of the strength and wilfulness of the atmosphere in motion. The airship which can be made to sail against a 'northwester' in winter, or a 'souther' in summer time will be a wonderful craft. Away from the wind it will be easy sailing, but against it, it will be another matter. The problem is not merely one of getting a machine that will go up and up and up. It is one of direction and control. The air is a sensitive medium and it is a wilful one. One man of scientific mind has suggested the pneumatic tube as the most probable means of fast locomotion. Some day we may be put into a pipe and whizzed to Chicago as fast as now whizzed from New York city to Brooklyn. That will be aerial navigation with a vengeance. In that day space will be annihilated. But the air ship will be a wind blown, unsafe and uncertain means of locomotion. 1897 April 16 (Fri) Waterloo Daily Courier, p. 1. (card 1)

THE AIRSHIP ALIGHTS. / ALL WATERLOO EXCITED. / Thrilling Story of Survivor of Perilous Voyage--It is a Wonderful Machine. / (Pic-- THE AIR-SHIP CAPTURED. / As it looked when discovered this morning. Perspective view of the monster on the wing.)

It is here. The airship has been captured. Waterloo is all excitement today, and thousands of people have thrown aside their customary duties to view the monster which, it is supposed, has been the cause of so much agitation all over the country. Accompanying it is a weather-beaten navigator who gives his name as Prof. Jourgensen, and tells a wonderful story of his thrilling experiences among the clouds.

The ship was discovered shortly after daylight this morning on the circus ground below the cheese factory, by several residents of the neighborhood, and the alarm was soon spread to all portions of the city. All day long crowds of the curious flocked to the spot and it is safe to say that 6,000 people have already seen the aerialist and his ship. The monster is visible from the east side for half a mile, and the people residing along the Illinois Central track were among the first to pay their respects to Prof. Jourgensen. Early in the forenoon it was necessary to stretch a rope to keep the surging crowd from interfering (sic) with Prof. Jourgensen's work.

The ship is a curious contrivance of cigar-shaped bodies, fans, propellers, wheels, etc., and closely resembles illustrations of the airship which have been published in the papers of late. Two cigar-shaped sections about 40 feet in length and tapering in from a diameter of seven feet to four feet at the end and a point at the other, are placed side by side with a car between. At the rear is a propeller similar to those in use on steamships, and at the side of each of the large bodies is a set of wings or fans.

A Courier reporter was on the ground at an early hour this morning and was fortunate in securing an interesting interview with the man who is the center of attraction today, second only to the wonderful piece of mechanism which has turned the country upside-down with wonderment during the past few weeks. Prof. Jourgensen was busily occupied making repairs whenever the curious crowd did not interfere with his work, but paused when greeted by the Courier representative, and seemed willing to be interviewed concerning his wonderful experiences. Prof. Jourgensen is a man of perhaps 55 years, thin featured with gray mustache and hair. He was attired in a full waterproof suit.

"I am not accustomed to this sort of thing," he said with a smile "but we knew it would come sooner or later, and it is perhaps well that things happened as they have."

"Who are you and how do you happen to be here?"
"Well, it's a long story, but I suppose that's what you're after and so I will tell you all you care to know. My name is Jourgensen and my home for the past seventeen years has been in San Francisco. Several years ago I met a man named Stormout--a genius he was, too--and together we have studied this question of aerial navigation until we have gotten a machine which has fully solved the problem. But it has been the death of my friend Stormout. He was taken severely ill during the latter part of this trip and early this morning fell from the cabin and disappeared in the darkness below."

"I would like to know something of your aerial voyage if you can spare the time to give me some notes."

Prof. Jourgensen drew from an inner pocket a few crumpled sheets of paper and handed it to the reporter saying, "Here is a brief outline of our trip. I anticipated that when we landed you newspaper men would be after us without delay and so I have noted some things on these pages which you might neglect to ask about."

While the reporter was reading Prof. Jourgensen's account of his thrilling adventures above the clouds, the aerialist resumed his work of repairing the machinery within the cabin. The professor's account of the voyage read as follows:

"Left San Francisco March 25th. Passed over Los Angeles at 3 p.m. on the 26th; heavy atmosphere, light rain. Crossed over into Arizona 2:30 p.m., 27th; heavy head wind. We concluded that we were carrying too much ballast. We passed numerous cities in Colorado and struck a heavy snowstorm the 5th of April near Pueblo.

"We turned south and passed into Kansas where we struck high and variable winds which carried us over the state for many days.

"We passed into the Indian territory and landed 60 miles north of Oklahoma City where we foraged for supplies and repaired our compressor and rested for one day, renewing our voyage on the 6th of April. On the night of the 8th we struck a brisk wind and passed over Omaha, and a sudden change of the wind carried us south over St. Joe and Kansas City. From there we followed the Chicago & Alton road into Illinois where we struck variable winds and our compressor failed to work satisfactorily until we succeeded in repairing the piston rod. Weather warm and atmosphere heavy. We have been compelled to sail high during the daytime to get into lighter currents of atmosphere. We shifted our course on the night of the 10th and drifted north into southern Wisconsin where a heavy east wind changed our course and we were compelled to drift back into Illinois again. Weather clear and cold. On the night of the 13th we broke our rudder and were very much alarmed as it was impossible to guide the ship. So we put on double pressure and sailed high, but were entirely at the mercy of the wind. We decided to land at 8 p.m. on the night of the 15th to repair the rudder and purchase supplies. So we were on the lookout for a large town. Prof. Stormout, while looking for a place to land, became badly nauseated and complained of a severe pain in the abdomen. We sighted a large city at 3:47 a.m., and while shifting the rudder, the professor lost his balance and fell, shrieking to me at the top of his voice, "For God's sake, partner, save the ship!" And I landed at 3:59.

"I am very much discouraged because of the sad disaster that has resulted in the death of a man, who I believe, was the first to solve the problem of aerial navigation. Prof. Stormout was a great man, and when we started out I little dreamed that I would be the sole survivor of the first successful voyage in the clouds.

"I shall, however, make an attempt to ascend again as soon as I can make the necessary repairs in the generators, and when the atmospheric conditions are favorable. I am, fortunately, not without means and offer $500 reward for the recovery of the remains of my lamented companion. I did not know until this morning that people had been seeing the ship, but the stories are so conflicting that many of them are doubtless canards.

"This ship is the only one that has ever made a continuous and successful journey across the country."

After the document was copied in full the reporter, thrilled with its contents, was about to step into the cabin to further ply his questions to the aerialist but was stopped suddenly by that individual stepping to the door and barring his passage.

"I'm sorry, sir," said the navigator, "but I cannot allow you inside the cabin."

"Why?"

"There," was the reply, "centers the secret of our success this far. And still I am unsatisfied. All our experiments have dealt with the question of power alone. We have failed until this last experiment to secure power which did not carry too much weight to be of practical use. But we found it at last although our machinery is crude compared with that which will be hereafter used. I cannot allow you to question me concerning this point. I have referred to the 'compressor' and you may draw your own inferences therefrom."

"What are the dimensions of the ship?"

"Each of these cigar-shaped bodies is 36 feet long, and 7 feet in diameter at the largest point. The rear ends are about four feet in diameter. They taper to a point in front. They are hollow and are constructed of light material so they weigh but a few pounds each. The cabin is 5x6 feet square and 7 feet high. The propeller at the rear governs the rate of speed and the position of those 24 wings--12 at each side governs the upward and downward direction. The headlight is nearly like those in use on locomotives. We had but little use for it as we didn't meet anyone while we were on our perilous journey," said Prof. Jourgensen with a laugh.

"You said perilous; did it seem like a hazardous undertaking to prove about among the clouds?"

"During the first few hours we both wished we were on solid ground again and held on like grim death, but we soon became accustomed to it and although the fate of my partner is uppermost in my mind, I do not fear starting out again. A fellow feels pretty cold sometimes but then he has the advantage of rising above such a seige of darkness as you have had lately. It is quite a sight to watch the clouds below you emptying their moisture upon the mist obscured earth beneath."

"Were you ever fearful that your power would become exhausted and you would be dashed to earth?"

"Why, my dear sir, such a thing as that could not happen. You see by proper setting of these wings at the sides we can glide gracefully to earth and land on about the spot we select. However, this morning, although the moon was shining brightly and the electric lights glittered here and there, I came near making a bad move. I guess I must have been a little agitated over the loss of my partner because I came dangerously near landing in the river, didn't I? But a miss is as good as a mile and this is as good a landing place as any. By the way, have you any 'Battle Axe' about you? Thanks. Curious lot of people you have here, eh?"

"Your log book says that you started from San Francisco. How did you manage to do this unobserved?"

"We didn't start from the city, but from an island a short way out from the Golden Gate, on the night of March 25th. We carried no headlight and were probably unobserved for several nights out."

"How fast can you travel, professor?"

"It is impossible to state as we had nothing with which to determine our speed. Sometimes, however, we watched the shadow of the ship as it sped through the air and calculated that we were going at the rate of a little over 100 miles an hour."

"What do you intend doing now?"

"I have not definitely decided although my plan is to build a platform about my ship, raise it up about twelve or fifteen feet, and resume my voyage as soon as I can. I need a man to accompany me, and by the way, is there a gentleman living here in Waterloo by the name of ---, can't just recall it, but he's much talked of out in California. When I learned what city this is, this morning, I thought of this man and decided to make a proposition to him to take the place of Prof. Stormout. Let's see--Raf--Raffer--Rafferty, that's the man--know him?"

"O, yes; everybody knows the colonel."

"Think he'd like the job?"

"Well, I really can't say. We'd dislike very much to lose the colonel, but--say, here he is now."

Col. Rafferty, whose smiling countenance loomed up among the multitude of faces about the ship, came forward when he was called and when the reporter left was in conference with the noted aerialist.

It is not known whether they arrived at any agreement or not.

Notes of the Day.
Neighboring towns have kept the telephone wires hot all day inquiring about the airship, and several are arranging excursion parties to this city. Webster City people are planning to arrive this evening. The Cedar Rapids Gazette learned the story of the airship in some way and sent the following telegram to the Courier: "Are you all drunk up there, or was that airship carried out to the circus grounds for exhibition purposes at so much per head? Wire us quick special, giving personal opinion. We want five hundred words of news."

Prof. Jourgensen said today that his next trip would probably be in the direction of Cuba.

A couple of young ladies who visited the airship today, looked in vain for the ticket office.

Col. Rafferty tells us that had he known Prof. Jourgensen was intending to land in Waterloo, he would have induced him to stop at Cedar Rapids River park. "Why," said the Colonel, "there would have been millions in it."

The hackmen at the depots today have varied their cry and passengers were astonished to hear "Ten-cent back here. Logan house, Irving or the airship!"

Soon after landing this morning, Prof. Jourgensen sent a telegram to his wife in San Francisco, announcing his safe landing and requesting her to kiss the baby for him.

A number of reputable citizens saw a moving light in the heavens about 9 p.m. above Reed's ice house. It moved north along (the) river and disappeared.

Delegations of sight-seers from Hudson and Cedar Falls came in on today's trains.

The Davis Gasoline Engine Co. is today making some new fixtures for Prof. Jourgensen's ship.

Late this afternoon an enterprising restaurant firm issued hard-bills saying that "the airship crew and passengers who arrived this morning" will take supper at their cafe.

Prof. Jourgensen announces that he will probably resume his journey at 9 o'clock tonight.

Dr. Hathaway, of Reinbeck, is one of the out-of-town sight-seers. Both telephone lines report a rushing business with their toll stations. At 2:30 o'clock one had received over 200 calls from this source and the other reports about twice the usual amount of business. All the telegraph lines have been rushed all day.

People along the line of the Illinois Central have sent word that they would be in on No. 4. Many inquiries have been sent in to know how long the ship will remain here as it is proposed to run an excursion.

When the Chicago Great Western, No. 6, came in this morning, the brakeman espied the air ship and the alarm was sent throughout the train. The passengers crowded onto the platforms to get a better view of it. On No. 5 going south at 9 o'clock the passengers were wild with excitement. A majority wanted the conductor to hold the train a half hour, but the request was denied and several threatened to stop off for the day.

Advertisers are making use of the airship, as will be seen by a perusal of the columns of the Courier today.

Trainmen on the various trains over the B. C. R. & N. today petitioned the dispatcher to allow them to stop long enough to view the machine.

The local B. C. R. & N. agent this forenoon received a telegram from the dispatcher at Cedar Rapids, asking him to examine the airship and wire him a complete detailed description of it.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Burlington, Ia., Hawk-Eye, p. 1 (card 1)

DELIRIUM TREMENS / The Only Explanation for Numerous Airships on View / COPPACK HAS A BAD CASE. / Wm. H. Walters and His Airship Story in Bad Repute in Birmingham--Ravings from Other Points. /

Coppack, Ia., April 16.--(Special.)--The people of Coppack may now tell their children and their children's children of the wonderful aerial visitation of April 16, 1897. The rectangular monster first appeared low in the southwest about nine o'clock a.m. and seemed to be just above the trees across the river. It came across the Hill farm with terrific speed and seemed to want to anchor on the sand hill southeast of the B. and W. depot, but so great was its momentum that the hull of the ship plowed a ditch across the top of the hill five rods long and about three feet deep. The ship then began to rise at an angle of about 30 degrees, and was soon lost to sight. After the sand dust and excitement had subsided, a curious implement or piece of machinery was found, which is on exhibition at the B. & W. depot. It is indescribable, and the best machinists of this section do not venture an opinion as to its probable use. The business men have decided that it had best be submerged in the river, as it may be an infernal machine from Mars. The trench on the hill and the machine are visited daily by hundreds of people. Our veteran hotel keeper describes the ship as rectangular in shape, of a dull yellow color, with broad spreading, immovable wings having numerous turbine wheels on the under side, which give forth a humming sound like that of a bee only much louder. /

Mr. Walters Denounced.

Birmingham, Ia., April 16.--(Special.)--We notice upon reading your issue of the 16th instant an article headed, "Airship Positively Seen." If there was any such thing seen in this locality it must have been by visitors within our city, as we are unable to find even one who will venture to say they have seen anything other than a moving star. In the first place there is no such person as Wm. H. Walters living in this city (or so far as we are able to know, anywhere near it). If inquiry had been made whether we had such a person here who would write such an infamous letter, we certainly would have said so, as we did not think we had a man in our city who would desire to place his fellow citizens before the public as a people desirous of deceiving their neighbors, and to say the least, we would not have supposed such a person could be found with a cloak of Christian religion around him, a leader of the Epworth League, a teacher of a young ladies' Sunday school class. God forbid such hypocrisy. A CITIZEN. /

Another Conductor Goes Wrong.

Quincy, Ill., April 16.--Conductor Chas. P. Malley, who brought in the Wabash passenger train last night, reports that his train raced with the alleged airship from Versailles to Herman, a distance of fifteen miles. The train was going forty miles an hour, but the strange thing in the sky kept ahead of them, and finally left them and disappeared. It was half a mile from the train, and all they could see was the light. It varied in its course, and at times was close to the earth, occasionally rising several hundred feet in the air. Conductor Malley says he is confident it was not a star. The object was seen by all the passengers, among them being Henry C. Cupp and Myron E. Lusk, both reputable business men of this city. /

Sigourney's Horrible Condition.

Sigourney, April 16.--The airship hovered over this city last night and was viewed by a large number of our citizens. It appeared to have a double headlight, similar to eyes, with a brilliancy too great for observation except with a smoked glass. There were two flag-staffs, or horns. The appearance of the head was most hideous. It had two wings. The bellows hung out behind like a tail. In short, its whole appearance was like one of those messengers from below. It seemed to have come from the direction of Hedrick, but why it approaches this highly moral town is beyond our comprehension, unless it be that we have thirteen divorce cases at this term of court; and, by the way, Judge McCoy yesterday adjourned until next Monday, perhaps that he might see that his own home was secure. We don't think there ought to be any strictness on these divorces, for some of them are only waiting the action of the court to marry again, and thus prove that marriage is not a failure; and we have a society of old maids, known as "The Antiques," anxiously watching the outcome of these cases. / Disco Sees the Airship.

125

Disco, Ill., April 16.--(Special.)--The wonderful and mysterious ~~xxxxxx~~ machine they call the airship was seen by all Disco people and community last evening about 8:30 o'clock, so you see you folks are not alone when it comes to sight seeing.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Cedar Rapids Gazette, p. 6. (card 1)

THE SKY CRAFT / The Courier Tells About Wonderful Aerial Navigator Wrecked There Yesterday. / Jeopardizes Its Reputation in Interview With Chief Engineer of the Mysterious Craft. / Pictures of the Ship, Its Crew and Man who First Discovered This Brand of Intoxicants. / The Story Complete.

It is here. The airship has been captured. Waterloo is all excitement today, and thousands of people have thrown aside their customary duties to view the monster which, it is supposed, has been the cause of so much agitation all over the country. Accompanying it is a weather-beaten navigator who gives his name as Prof. Jourgensen, and tells a wonderful story of thrilling experiences among the clouds, writes the snake editor on the Courier concerning the fake machine discovered there yesterday.

The ship was discovered shortly after daylight this morning on the circus ground below the cheese factory, by several residents of the neighborhood, and the alarm soon spread to all portions of the city. All day long crowds of the curious flocked to the spot and it is safe to say that 6,000 people have already seen the aerialist and his ship. The monster is visible from the east side for a half a mile, and the people residing along the Illinois Central track were among the first to pay their respects to Prof. Jourgensen. Early in the forenoon it was necessary to stretch a rope to keep the surging crowd from interfering with Prof. Jourgensen's work.

The ship is a curious contrivance of cigar-shaped bodies, fans, propellers, wheels, etc., and closely resembles illustrations of the airship which have been published in the papers late. Two cigar-shaped sections about 40 feet in length and tapering from a diameter of seven feet to four feet, at the end and a point at the other, are placed side by side, with a car between. At the rear is a propeller similar to those in use on steamships, and at the side of each of the large bodies is a set of wings or fans.

A Courier reporter was on the ground at an early hour this morning and was fortunate in securing an interesting interview with the man who is the center of attraction today, second only to the wonderful piece of mechanism which has turned the country upside-down with wonderment during the past few weeks. Prof. Jourgensen was busily occupied in making repairs whenever the curious crowd did not interfere with his work, but paused when greeted by the Courier representative and seemed willing to be interviewed concerning his wonderful experiences. Prof. Jourgensen is a man of perhaps 55 years, thin featured with gray mustache and hair. He was attired in a full waterproof suit.

"I am not accustomed to this sort of thing," he said with a smile "but we knew it would come sooner or later, and it is perhaps well that things have happened as they have."

"Who are you and how do you happen to be here?"

"Well, it's a long story, but I suppose that's what you're after and so I will tell you all you care to know. My name is Jourgensen and me home for the past seventeen years has been in San Francisco. Several years ago I met a man named Stormout--a genius he was, too--and together we have studied the question of aerial navigation, until we have gotten a machine which has fully solved the problem. But it has been the death of my friend Stormout. He was taken severely ill during the latter part of this trip and early this morning fell from the cabin and disappeared in the darkness below."

"I would like to know something of your aerial voyage if you can spare the time to give me some notes."

Prof. Jourgensen drew from an inner pocket a few crumpled sheets of paper and handed it to the reporter saying: "Here is a brief outline of our trip. In anticipation that when we landed you newspaper men would be after us without delay and so I have noted some things on these pages which you might neglect to ask about."

While the reporter was reading Prof. Jourgensen's account of their thrilling adventures above the clouds, the aerialist resumed his work of repairing the machinery within the cabin. The professor's account of the voyage reads as follows:

"Left San Francisco March 25th, passed over Los Angeles at 3 p.m. on the 26th; heavy atmosphere, light rain; crossed over into Arizona 2:30 p.m. 27th; heavy head wind. We concluded that we were carrying too much ballast. We passed numerous cities in Colorado and struck a heavy snow storm the 5th of April near Pueblo.

"We turned south and passed into Kansas, where we struck high and variable winds which carried us over the state for many days.

"We passed into the Indian territory and landed 60 miles north of Oklahoma [sic] City where we foraged for supplies and repaired our compressor and rested for one day, renewing our voyage on the 6th of April. On the night of the 8th we struck a brisk wind and passed over Omaha, and a sudden change of the wind carried us south over St. Joe and Kansas City. From there we followed the Chicago and Alton road into Illinois where we struck variable winds and our compressor failed to work satisfactory until we succeeded in repairing the piston rod. Weather warm and atmosphere heavy. We have been compelled to sail high during the day time to get into lighter currents of atmosphere. We shifted our course on the night of the 10th and drifted north into southern Wisconsin where a heavy east wind changed our course and we were compelled to drift back into Illinois again. Weather clear and cold. On the night of the 13th we broke our rudder and were very much alarmed as it was impossible to guide the ship. So we put on double pressure and sailed high, but were entirely at the mercy of the wind. We decided to land at 8 p.m. on the night of the 15th to repair the rudder and purchase supplies. So we were on the lookout for a large town. Prof Stormout, while looking for a place to land, became badly nauseated and complained of a severe pain in the abdomen. We sighted a large city at 3:47 a.m., and while shifting the rudder, the professor lost his balance and fell, shrieking to me at the top of his voice, "For God's sake, partner, save the ship!" And I landed at 3:59.

"I am very much discouraged because of the sad disaster that has resulted in the death of a man, who I believe, was the first to solve the problem of aerial navigation. Prof. Stormout was a great man, and when we started out I little dreamed that I would be the sole survivor of the first successful voyage in the clouds.

"I shall, however, make an attempt to ascend again as soon as I can make the necessary repairs in the generators, and when the atmospheric conditions are favorable; I am, fortunately, not without means, and offer $500 reward for the recovery of the remains of my lamented companion. I did not know until this morning that people had been seeing the ship, but the stories are so conflicting that many of them are doubtless canards.

"This ship is the only one that has ever made a continuous and successful journey across the country."

After the document was copied in full the reporter, thrilled with its contents, was about to step into the cabin to further ply his questions to the aerialist but was stopped suddenly by that individual stepping to the door and barring his passage.

"I'm sorry, sir," said the navigator, "but I cannot allow you inside the cabin."

"Why?"

"There," was the reply, "centers the secret of our success thus far. And still I am unsatisfied. All our experiments have dealt with the question of power alone. We have failed until this last experiment to secure power which did not carry too much weight to be of practical use. But we found it at last although our machinery is crude as compared with that which will be hereafter used. I cannot allow you to question me concerning this point. I have referred to the 'compressor' and you may draw your own inferences therefrom."

"What are the dimensions of the ship?"

"Each of these cigar-shaped bodies is 36 feet long, and 7 feet in diameter at the largest point. The rear ends are about four feet in diameter. They ~~are~~ taper to a point in front. They are hollow and are constructed of light material so they weigh but a few pounds each. The cabin is 5x6 feet square and 7 feet high. The propeller at the rear governs the rate of speed and the position of those 24 wings—12 at each side govern the upward and downward direction. The headlight is nearly like those in use on locomotives. We had but little use for it as we didn't meet anyone while we were on our perilous journey," said Prof. Jourgensen with a laugh.

"You said perious: did it seem like a hazardous undertaking to prowl about among the clouds?"

"During the first few hours we both wished we were on solid ground again and held on like grim death, but we soon became accustomed to it and although the fate of my partner is uppermost in my mind, I do not fear starting out again. A fellow feels pretty cold sometimes, but then he has the advantage of rising above such a seige of dampness as you have had lately. It is quite a sight to watch the clouds below you emptying their moisture upon the mist-obscured earth beneath."

"Were you ever fearful that your power would become exhausted and you would become dashed to earth?"

"Why, my dear sir, such a thing as that could not happen. You see by proper setting of these wings at the sides we can glide gracefully to earth and land on about the spot we select. However, this morning, although the moon was shining brightly and the electric lights glittered here and there, I came near making a bad move. I guess I must have been a little agitated over the loss of my partner because I came dangerously ~~near~~ near landing in the river, didn't I? But a mile is as good as a mile and this is as good a landing place as any."

"Your log-book says that you started from San Francisco. How did you manage to do this unobserved?"

"We didn't start from the city, but from an island a short way out from the Golden Gate, on the night of March 25. We carried no headlight and were probably unobserved for several nights out."

"How fast can you travel, professor?"

"It is impossible to state as we had nothing with which to determine our speed. Sometimes, however, we watched the shadow of the ship as it sped through the air and calculated that we were going at the rate of a little over 100 miles an hour."

"What do you intend ~~to~~ doing now?"

"I have not definitely decided although my plan is to build a platform about my ship, raise it up about twelve or fifteen feet, and resume my voyage as soon as I can."

From photographs secured by The Courier from the professor The Gazette artist has prepared the accompanying pictures of the ship, its crew and the man who first discovered the mysterious--fake.

[pics.--Jug Jourgensen, the navigator who ran the Juggernaut from Jupiter which landed at Waterloo. / Prof. Stormout, the navigator who played second fiddle to Jug Jourgensen in the airship. He fell from the ship into the Cedar river before landing yesterday and his body was found this forenoon three and one-half miles above Vinton. / Ole Danlyreson, the fellow who first reported seeing the airship in Iowa. / THE AIRSHIP THAT LANDED AT WATERLOO YESTERDAY MORNING.

TELLS A FAIRLY GOOD STORY. / A Correspondent Whose Neighbor Saw an Airship.

Hoyt, April 16.--Special: The airship made its first appearance in our midst about 2 o'clock yesterday morning. It was at a time when the grave yards yawn and ghost walk abroad. This ship was seen by a prominent citizen, who has made and unmade county officers at his pleasure. This gentleman, who is sometimes afflicted with neuralgia of the stomach, was suddenly taken ill at 1:30 in the morning. He decided that a walk and a little fresh air would relieve him, and he stepped out in the yard to fill his lungs with the invigorating ozone and to roam around where fancy might lead him. He says that he had been in the yard about thirty minutes, when he saw rapidly approaching from the southeast a bright light that he presumed to be a meteor. But in a few seconds it hovered overhead. He had one of the best views of the ship that has yet been recorded. It was built like the modern whalebacks. It had screw propellers and was buoyed up by two sets of powerful shutters that kept striking the air like mighty wings of some great bird. A geologist might have imagined it to be some great beast of the silurian age, half reptile and half bird.

Persons could be heard talking on board and seemed to be enjoying their journey. It seemed to be lighted with electricity and had all the conveniences of a modern ship.

It stopped just a few seconds, when it suddenly started on its way northwest.

With curiosity aroused within him, this gentleman quickly mounted one of his blooded horses that are noted for their speed, but owing to the fences and extra start of the ship, he was unable to keep up with it.

Our citizen returned home and did not see anything more of the air visitors, but says that he can not be mistaken as to the reality, nor as to its fleetness, for his swiftest steed could not overtake it.

As far as yet interviewed, none of the neighbors were enabled to view the visitation, but a neighbor near by heard the crowing of his cocks and the cackling of his geese at about that time of night, and two farmers to the northwest in the course of its flight noticed that their fattening cattle were restless and uneasy and did not eat well this morning. The writer was under the influence of Morpheus, totally unconscious of the wonders going on in this neighborhood.

Jefferson, April 16.--Special: A local paper this morning, printed a lurid story concerning an airship which was alleged to have plunged into the earth north of town. Before noon a number of people had actually visited the place to see the hole.

Waterloo, April 16.--Special: A huge airship manufactured by local parties and put on exhibition here early this morning caused a sensation in this vicinity. Telegrams from St. Louis and New York have been received asking for description of the airship. The thing is a hoax, and no airship has been seen in this section of the country.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Evening Times-Republican (Marshalltown, Ia), p. 1.

AIRSHIP FAKES. / Waterloo Jokers Construct a Machine--Other Liars Let Loose.

The Times-Republican is in receipt of a choice and variegated collection of air-ship lies. Among the batch, to print which would take a page or two of white paper, is a vivid description by our Waterloo correspondent of a machine constructed to fulfill the requirements of printed descriptions. It rests on the banks of the Cedar, roped off from the crowds that visit it, in charge of a mysterious personage. The practical jokers who had it constructed may have in mind some novel denouement, but the fake is too tangible to answer even sensational purposes.

Postmaster A.H. Rudd, Agent J.T. Shearman and Liverman J.B. Holliday, of Dow City, whose names were used by a conscienceless forger of our correspondent's name as eye-witness to the ship in that quarter, write to state that they were all in bed and asleep and wouldn't get up at the hour named to see a dozen air-ships.

C.B. Wallace, of Schaller, sends a photograph and verbal description. It is a fine looking bird, with a top fin like a quill back. The artist is entitled to congratulations.

Earl Ward, and "our station agent, Robert Flynn," at Rowley, had a ride in the thing the other night, and consume five sheets of Iowa Central stationery in commendable descriptive.

A usually mild-mannered correspondent at Geneva calls upon the Methodist parson to testify that the concern, after an obliging rest over the heads of the populace there within conversational distance, was compelled to throw out 200 casks of the California vintage in order to lighten up. The account seems credible up to that point where a guard was placed over the wine.

At Dows the ballast dropped was not wine, but sand, which filled the eyes of the populace. This is still more likely.

Sheldon, Hospers and Sutherland heard the machinery rattle and know that they saw the genuine article.

Sven City heard that the concern was captured at Linn Grove today and anxiously wired for particulars. There were none.

A cold-blooded contributor at Estherville sends word that a Chicago drummer who passed the previous night at Emmetsburg, saw it. This is undoubtedly true.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Marshalltown, Ia., Evening Times-Republican, p. 3.

BELMOND SEES IT. / Special to the Times-Republican.

Belmond, April 17.--Well, we have seen "it," and no joking, but what "it" is is a matter of much speculation. Butterfield, of the Iowa Valley Press, says: "It is only Venus gone frisky." Lon Wolcott of the Sabre, says it is "Arcturus" out of her "Bootes" and other visacres say "Bootes" has gone on a tear (Altair). However, nearly all agree that it is a strange phenomenon, and not as is generally thought an airship. It was seen last evening in the region of Venus or just above, and traveled very rapidly in a southeasterly direction until it disappeared below the horizon. Your correspondent thinks that Venus has simply astonished the natives by her unusual brilliancy and all will be "quiet on the Potomac" in a few days. Hicks told us so.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Waterloo Daily Courier, p. 1.

THE FAKE IS FAMOUS / NEW YORK TO CALIFORNIA. / Story of the Airship's Inception and Construction--Captain "Jourgensen's" Clever Part. /

If the American people love one thing more than anything else, it is to be humbugged. Barnum demonstrated this truth many times, and his latest humbuzs were just as popular as was the initial hoax of the Cardiff giant.

The "airship" which was seen by nine-tenths of the people of Waterloo yesterday was another clever humbug, and a successful one, too.

The idea originated with a couple of west side young business men a few days ago, after discerning that the press dispatches concerning some strange monster of the air had wrought the public to the right pitch of curiosity.

In the building on Commercial street built long ago for a skating rink, but now used as a storage house, the planning and building of the aerial flyer was completed. In the office of a well known business man, on Bridge street, the think tanks of several of the inventors were tapped for ideas and the result was the "log book" which was given to the press detailing the voyage of the thing.

In the early hours of Friday morning, with all, and more than the secrecy which Darius Green is said to have displayed in his noted workshop in his father's barn the contrivance was dragged from the storage house piecemeal and located back of the building on the river bank.

Then the noted aerial navigator, "Jourgensen," was put on watch. This "Jourgensen" is a Nashua man named Feathers. He was imported to help along the hoax. No one knew him. He is a great deal of a practical joker, a sort of rejuvenated Munchausen, and has been a wide traveler. In his head he carries a little smattering of several languages, some of which are dead and others that will die when they learn of the base uses of deception to which they have been put.

Feathers carried himself well, even going so far as to remove an inch or two of cuticle from his nose, to uphold his story of the loss of Captain Stormout, and his struggle in the rigging with the compressor when the ship was lighting.

As an advertisement the fake ship is a success. From the New York World to the San Francisco Chronicle, all the great papers in the country have specials concerning it today.

The fake ship represented an actual cash outlay of $60.

1897 April 18 (Sun) Council Bluffs (Ia) Daily Nonpareil, p. 4.

LOOKING FOR THE AIRSHIP. / Insane Man Found Near the Police Station Last Night.

William Miller, a laboring man living in the southwest part of the city, was taken in charge by the police yesterday evening, as being insane. For several days past he would stand for an hour at a time gazing at the sky as if looking for the famous airship. Yesterday evening he planted himself in the middle of the street near the police station and repeated the performance. When questioned as to what he was looking at he replied in a way that left no doubt but that his mind was wandering, and Officer Ward placed him under arrest. A few months ago Miller reported to Mayor Carson that some people were continually shooting at him. Investigation by the police showed that it was the hallucination of a deranged mind. He is about 25 years of age and has a wife and three children.

Apr. 8 p. 3: Those who are troubled by the airship microbe will be glad to know that bromides are found to be about the best thing to take for it.

9 p. 3: The arsp is still spoken of as simply "it."

11, 3: The airship should be pulled in under the vagrant act.

14, 3: The airship at least furnishes a new excuse for the belated husband.

Th April 15, p. 3: Look for Airship in Vain. / Special to D. Nonpareil

Creston, Ia., April 14.--There has been considerable excitement among the inhabitants of this city since the airship stories have been chronicled and while the optical powers of the people of this community will average with other localities not even the tail of the airship has been sighted. Every night people can be seen gazing heavenward watching for the much talked of ship, but they have not been gratified. The stories are accepted here--as fakes.

20, 3: Some of those things dropped from the arsp must have hit the fellows who saw them right on the head.

21, 3: Numerous instances are being reported in which the airship has caused insanity. As insanity has caused numerous airships, it is only a fair turnabout.

Those who wonder how the passengers in that airship manage to get along without landing occasionally to get something to eat and drink forget that they can get a horn of the moon, feast off the Milky Way and have all of the cream of the joke on the fellows who are down below watching.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Waterloo Daily Courier, p. 1.

CRAZE IS KILLED. / Waterloo Airship Story Stops the People Seein' Things. /

There is considerable evidence extant that the Waterloo "airship" fake, which was worked to such a superb finish on the country last Friday, will end the wholesale lying that has filled the press the past two weeks in regard to this mysterious aerial wanderer. There is evidence also that several beautiful half-blown imaginations have been cut down in their prime, and that people will quit "seein' thin," when they gaze at the heavens now.

If the Waterloo fake really accomplished this much, it is a "good thing" in more ways than one.

The descriptive article given by the Courier on Friday has been copied and commented on by the press in many places.

The Cedar Rapids Gazette reproduces the cut of the ship as the Courier gave it and copies of the article in entirety. It also adds several new illustrations:

One is a bespectacled freak designated as "Ole Damllyreson, the fellow who first reported seeing the airship in Iowa."

Another is the true and awful likeness of "Jug Jourgensen, the navigator who ran the juggernaut from Jupiter which landed at Waterloo."

And a third represents the only portrait ever printed without breaking the press of "Prof. Stormout, the navigator who played second fiddle to Jug Jourgensen in the airship." The Gazette adds: "He fell from the ship into the Cedar river before landing yesterday and his body was found this forenoon three and one half miles above Vinton."

The Marshalltown Statesman-Press displays a bit of jealous feeling toward Waterloo and endeavors to still claim the honor of being the original airship Munchausen. It says:

"Waterloo thinks it also has the genuine article and the papers teem with wonderful 'accounts' of experiences and conversations with 'Professor Jourgensen,' the aerial navigator. The 'ship' at Waterloo landed in the circus grounds, a convenient place, evidence that the navigator knows his ground and where to land."

"The Courier gives a description drawn from imagination of the strange visitor.

"Of course nobody believes what the Waterloo papers say about their airship. It is believed to be an advertisement scheme for the hotels and bus lines of that city, and is working like a charm. Hundreds of people are flocking there to see the fake and pay a hotel bill and 'bus fare.'"

1897 April 20 (Tues) Cedar Rapids (Ia) Evening Gazette, p. 5. (card 1)

CITY IN BRIEF / HEADLIGHT OF THE AIRSHIP NEAR THE CITY. / Committee

Appointed to Make Investigation--highs Reached in the Matter ...

Charley Petrovitsky, Peter Rafferty and Milvoj Hasek are three citizens and voters of Cedar Rapids who have hitherto borne good reputations and whose records of truth and veracity have stood unquestioned. But it is different now.

Charley has for a number of years been a trusted employe of John R. Baker, and it was while out on business connected with their trade that he made a discovery which brought [illus.] WHAT CHARLEY FOUND NEAR THE PALISADES. / him into no little prominence last evening. But let him tell his own tale.

"You see it was this way," Charley said to a Gazette reporter, "I was out south of the city yesterday, and driving near to the Palisades I concluded I would go over to the river and see if I could not gather a few wild strawberries. I was wandering up and down the rocks, meeting very little success in my search for the luscious native fruit, when I heard a great noise almost directly over my head. The noise increased rapidly and the air took on the colors and tints generally imagined to be reflected upon the walls of hades." My eyes were dazzled and my brain was in a whirl. (Poor Charley, and so young, too.) Suddenly a great object fell upon the earth about forty feet from where I was standing. It plowed up the ground for several feet and finally sank into the earth full five feet, like a great meteor. From the hole which it made was emitted a great cloud of smoke of several colors and full of the most poisonous gases. The earth became hot and I was compelled to retreat several feet from my original position. I waited perhaps an hour for the ground to cool, then summoned up my courage and upon my hands and knees crawled to the spot where the mysterious object had lodged. The sand was yet so hot that I was tempted to abandon the investigation and my hands becoming so blistered that I was compelled to take off my shoes and put them on the other extremities. After two hours of hard digging I finally unearthed the object, being obliged to take it out of the hole by means of a long hooked pole. I was at an utter loss to understand what I had discovered. I took it down and cooled it off in the river before loading it into my buggy, and drove at once to the city. I have only shown it to two persons, except yourself, and they are Rafferty and Hasek. Both being qualified to pass upon such matters, they have decided it to be nothing but the headlight of the airship which was wrecked at Waterloo. Their theory is that the ship was run up so high when it lost the light that the detached article only reached the ground yesterday. I have written Prof. Jourgenson at Waterloo and expect to return to him the machine, the loss of which has caused him so much trouble."

John R. Baker is inclined to look upon Charley's story as a sort of "pipe dream." He says that about March 15 his rendering plant at Otis was blown up by the explosion of one of the tanks; that a brass valve was and is still missing, and that this is undoubtedly what Charley found. Mr. Baker, however, is at a loss to understand how the object could have remained among the clouds for so long a time. The mystery (?) will probably be explained later, as a scientific committee consisting of Frank Pitkin, George Peck, Lew Benedict and John Pichner has been appointed to hold a post-mortem examination and report.

1897 April 21 (Wed) Waterloo Daily Courier, p. 5. (card 1)

THE FINAL ROUND-UP / OF AIRSHIP IMAGININGS. / Cedar Rapids Gazette Finds Headlight for the Waterloo Fake--Fort Dodge's Fomentings. /

Patti has made several farewell tours and is thinking of making another. The airship is in the same class of "farewelling," but the following from the Cedar Rapids Gazette is announced as positively its last appearance:

12-8

"Charley Petrovitsky, Peter Rafferty and Milvoj Hasek are three citizens and voters of Cedar Rapids who have hitherto borne good reputations and whose records of truth and veracity have stood unquestioned. But it is different now."

Charley has for a number of years been a trusted employe of John R. Baker, and it was while out on business connected with their trade that he made a discovery which brought him into no little prominence last evening. But let him tell his own tale.

"You see it was this way," Charley said to a Gazette reporter, "I was out south of the city yesterday, and driving near to the Palisades I concluded I would go over to the river and see if I could not gather a few wild strawberries. I was wandering up and down the rocky meeting with very little success in my search for the luscious native fruit, when I heard a great noise almost directly over my head. The noise increased rapidly and the air took on the colors and tints generally imagined to be reflected upon the walls of hades. My eyes were dazzled and my brain was in a whirl. (Poor Charley, and so young too!) Suddenly a great object fell upon the earth about forty feet from where I was standing. It ploved up the ground for several feet and finally sank into the earth full five feet, like a great meteor. From the hole which it made was emitted a great cloud of smoke of several colors and full of the most poisonous gases. The earth became hot and I was compelled to retreat several feet from my original position. I waited perhaps an hour for the ground to cool, then summoned up my courage and upon my hands and knees crawled to the spot where the mysterious object had lodged. The sand was yet so hot that I was tempted to abandon the investigation and my hands becoming so blistered that I was compelled to take off my shoes and put them on the other extremities. After two hours of hard digging I finally unearthed the object, being obliged to take it out of the hole by means of a long hooked pole. I was at an utter loss to understand what I had discovered. I took it down and cooled it off in the river before loading it into my buggy, and drove at once to the city. I have only shown it to two persons, except yourself, and they are Rafferty and Hasek. Both being qualified to pass upon such matters, they have decided it to be nothing but the headlight off the airship which was wrecked at Waterloo. Their theory is that the ship was up so high when it lost the light that the detached article only reached the ground yesterday. I have written Prof. Jourgensen at Waterloo and expect to return to him the machine, the loss of which has caused him so much trouble."

John R. Baker is inclined to look upon Charley's story as a sort of "pipe dream." He says that about March 15 his rendering plant at Otis was blown up by the explosion of one of the tanks, that a brass valve was and is still missing, and that this is undoubtedly what Charley found. Mr. Baker, however, is at a loss to understand how the object could have remained among the clouds for so long a time. The mystery (?) will probably be explained later, as a scientific committee consisting of Exx Frank Pitkin, George Peck, Lev Benedict and John Pichner has been appointed to hold a post mortem examination and report.

In the Courier's mail last night the following was found:

Oleveine, Ia., April 20, 1897.
Mister Iditor from Paper what got airship in: I should like to no what kind ~~marong~~ norveigen was in that ship! Tink he was my Brothe from Old country, ~~like to see he was fly norveigen~~ Please tell him if Ole come to, I would like to see he was fly norveigen in Old country and tink he come in airship. Please tell him come to Oleveine to see me he can have lot fun and planty vind to run airship. Ole Jourgensen.

Ft. Dodge Messenger:--To Waterloo is due the credit of one of the biggest humbugs ever perpetrated upon an unsuspecting public outside of Barnum & Bailey's circus. Heretofore they have held the monopoly, but now comes Waterloo--that little town which has recently been put upon the map--with the biggest, yet best joke of all. It seems that her people, who have not had the advantage of mingling with the outside world, in some way got hold of the airship story. Just how they heard of it is not known, but suffice it to say that they must have got hold of a Ft. Dodge paper containing an account that there was such a thing existing in the minds of the American people. At any rate they started out to get a ship of their own. And like the Cardiff Giant, it drew spectators by the thousand. American people delight in being humbugged, and in Waterloo last week they got it right. To "Captain Jourgensen," who played a prominent part in the humbug, Waterloo should vote a pension for life and build for him a home on the highest pinnacle of the proposed Y.M.C.A. building, where he ~~mix~~ might pose as a monument of science and inventive genius to the young America of her people, where the coming generations may look up and point to him with pride as being the biggest joker in the biggest fake ~~xxx~~ in the aerial story of the year 1897, and with this blessing, ~~requiescat in pace~~, tacked to his door.

A description of the fake as given by the Courier follows, and the Messenger says:

It was not long before the affair became noised about that the air ship had come to earth and that President Fish, of the Central, was among the passengers who had stopped the ship to ascertain the advisability of removing the Central shops from Waterloo to Fort Dodge. Of course this had a draving effect upon the people. They wanted to see the ship, but that was of secondary importance, their main object being to assassinate the man who would attempt such an undertaking.

They swarmed around the president of the road like buzzards about the prey, and for a time threatened to tear him limb from limb. It was only by the efficient work of the police that the crowd was prevented from carrying out its intention. The people were finally pacified by being assured by the president that should the shops be removed--as they surely will be--Col. Rafferty could secure the right of way to run his cars to Fort Dodge, and thus Waterloo might be connected as a suburb. In this way she would gain intercourse with the rest of the world and the scales would fall from off her eyes." /

J.B. Stewart who is visiting friends in Pennsylvania, writes the Courier, ordering a change of address for his apaper and says:

Am pleased to know you have something new in the airship line. It makes a great ad. for Waterloo. I will send you a paper showing one order for aluminum and if you continue in the airship business, you will profit by corresponding with the Pittsburg Reduction Co.

1897 April 23 (Fri) Burlington Hawk-Eye, p. 8.

THE AIRSHIP AGAIN. / New London Street Commissioner Finds a Communication From the Unknown.

New London, Ia., April 22.--(Correspondence.)--Yesterday the street commissioner, while scraping the streets in the vicinity of the M.P. church, observed a piece of heavy brown paper rolled in a cylindrical shape and securely tied with a piece of heavy twine to which was attached a piece of iron resembling the burr of a bolt. The paper was partially embedded in the mud and on being opened proved to be nothing less than a missile from one of the airships that have been recently observed in many sections of the country. The news of the find created a big excitement and crowds have been eagerly awaiting a chance to see and read the communication of which the following is an exact copy:

From Airship Ian Chang. If this message is found send to Mrs. John Rudolph, 2203 Vine street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Dear Mother:--I have been taken prisoner by Japanese officers from near Wahiow plantation near Honolulu. The republic of Hawaii is doomed. The Japanese have several thousand soldiers on island as laborers. It has remained for the Japs to solve the air navigation. Five have been made by the government. Three are carrying troops from Japan to Hawaii. Two are carrying arms from United States. We are west-bound with load from M near Hartford. Communicate with government. Haste, your son,

J. Rudolph.

1897 April 26 (Mon) Waterloo Daily Courier, p. 1.

More Airship Queries. /

If airship letters keep coming in the Courier is afraid it will find it necessary to employ an extra corps of clerks to keep up its correspondence. In the mail today was one letter which shows that Chicago is still struggling with the mystery.

The letter is from Dr. Shaffer, No. 90, 23d street, and he wants to know whether the airship has made a voyage or not. He says further he desires to know the facts in the case as he has a bet on the subject. It would be interesting to know how the doctor was betting. He is informed, however, that the airship was simply a fake and that it has long ago gone up--in smoke.

1897 April 29 (Th) Waterloo Daily Courier, p. 5.

THEY GO UP IN SMOKE. / Waterloo Airship Cigars are Latest Thing Out. /

The fame of the wonderful Waterloo airship is to be perpetuated and in a way that will convince the most skeptical that it will go up.

A.I. Hene, the cigar manufacturer, has seen to this by making a cigar called "The Airship" and bearing the inspiring label, "These Airships Go." The first box of these cigars was put on sale at the Columbia cafe this morning. The box is decorated with a photographic label of the "Waterloo airship, reproduced from the photograph taken by Tritt.

MINNESOTA

1897 April 9 (Fri) Minneapolis Tribune, p. 1.

The Wonder Crows / Iowa's Mysterious Airship Makes Its Appearance / Special Telegram to the Tribune.

ALBERT LEA, Minn., April 8.--At 8:30 p.m. this evening the night telegraph operator at Solon, Iowa, called the attention of the general office of the Burlington road at Cedar Rapids to what appeared to be an airship sailing through the air at a high rate of speed. It was witnessed by all the night men along the whole line.

When seen at Albert Lea, Minn., at 11 p.m., it looked to be no larger than a star, and was moving in a northerly direction, displaying white and red lights, and seemed to be under perfect control of those handling it. It was seen at Waseca, Minn., at 11:10 p.m., and west at Madison, N.D. about 1 a.m. No one seems to know where it started from or where it is going.

1897 April 10 (Sat) St. Paul (Minn) Pioneer Press, p. 2.

"License Fluid." / Was It This That Enabled Them to See an Air Ship?

Albert Lea, Minn., Special, April 9.--The town is all wrought up over what is claimed passed over the city late last night. The object seen is said to be the much heralded air ship and in the night appeared when last seen, to be like two stars and moving in a westerly direction or north of west. It was seen between 10 and 11 o'clock last night and was watched by several until it was no longer visible. All seeing the phenomenon speculated as to what it was and how many claim those seeing the object had been indulging in license fluid. The two stars which the light resembled appeared, one to be red and the other white.

Tues. April 20 p. 4--Voice of the State Press.

Delano Espley: That airship is a myth. It must have been Corisley, the St. Paul baseball manager, out looking for players. The shape of the airship seems to have been that of a goose egg, and St. Paul knows what shape that is.

Austin Replater: (Description of sugar beet cartoon.)

Apr. 24 p.4--The airship got in its work just in time to clear the way for the sun's retreat and the sun or girl.

11, April--That arsp is seen by Minneapolitans
12, April--The alleged arsp spends several hours in the skies above Maple and Lake Minnetonka.
13, April--Everybody sees the arsp.
14, April--Everett J. Corbridge says that the arsp lights are not for but a star. The "arsp" are in a line with the sun.
1897 April 11 (Mon) Minneapolis Tribune, p. 1.

man's ingenuity or the workings of nature. /
Special Telegram to the Tribune.
MINNETONKA, Minn., April 10.--Hundreds of people crowded the streets tonight to see the famous air ship. It appeared just after sundown, rising like a huge meteor in the sky. At first it was mistaken for the planet Venus, but after a few minutes' careful observation it was found to be something entirely different, [taking on] various hues and going at a good pace through the heavens. It was about five miles west and did not present the farous red color until sinking far into the northwest. With glasses it shows up cone shaped with very bright highlight. It is the supposition that it had rested in the dense woods near the town all day.
1897 April 12 (Mon) Minneapolis Tribune, p. 4 (eds).

15, April / The Mysterious Airship Hovers About Minneapolis. / Seen From the Roof of the Guaranty Loan Last Night. / Was Traveling Westward at a Rapid Rate of Speed. / No Longer Any Doubt of the Truth of Recent Stories. /

The air ship has come and gone. It was the same air ship that has been floating about the western states for the last three weeks. It is not a "ball" but a genuine moving aeronautical conveyance.

A square shaped reddish light that looked half as large as the moon was seen by a number of persons from the Guaranty Loan restaurant window at 9:25 o'clock last night. It was first seen in the direction of Hopkins, the crowd in the restaurant being congregated by J.J. Barrett the St. Louis dispatch agent on the eleventh floor, whose attention was called to it by the operator at Hopkins who saw it moving west. James Gibbs, proprietor of the restaurant, saw the light first: it was then blazing red, but it gradually lost its redness, and suddenly again brightened like a flash light. It was moving in a diagonal line away from Minneapolis, and slowly commenced to sink over []

A half hour later, however, it was again seen to be rising in the place in which it was last seen and was moving in an opposite direction. Its lights were more varving this time than at the first sight from a pale red and a flash red, it now changed to a greenish color, and with each change of color, there was a perceptible alteration of its course.

The air ship was probably at least nine miles distant from the city and looked as though it might be a quarter of a mile in the air. Its movement was rapid and the change of lights sudden. Indications pointed unmistakably to the fact that the aerial car contained a person or persons. All sorts of theories were advanced by spectators who watched the lights for a couple of hours.

The descriptions of this light agree exactly with those of the air ship lights that were followed from Cedar Rapids, Ia., to [Muscatel, Minn.], Thursday night.

Rev. Chas. E. Brown, of the Union Mission, and R.J. Dornberg, of the State Elevator company, saw the light from the roof garden of the Guaranty Loan for about an hour, and will testify to seeing it moving eastward and to the change of colors. It appeared larger to observers at Merriam Junction, than at Hopkins, which shows that it passed near the former place.

The rapid transit of the air ship can be realized by the fact that it was seen at Albia, Ia., at 7:25, at Albia, from 8:10 to 9 o'clock, and at Minneapolis at 9:25. Half the population of many of the [towns in] Iowa saw the vascillating red light moving westward.

This strange air transient is supposed to have started from California and its destination was for a time thought to be Dwight, but its strange maneuvers last night do not point towards any definite destination or a object. It seemed to be taking a far distant prospectus of Minneapolis by making a slightly circular route about it.

It was thought by some that it might be a balloon sent up by some person in accordance with the predicted lights, but the movement of the lights are not consistent with any such theory, since their motion was in a horizontal direction and seemed to be directed by an electrical power, and further, no balloon has ever been invented with a speed attained by this air ship.

IT IS UBIQUITOUS.
Air Ship Seen at Various Points in Iowa and Wisconsin.
Special Telegram to the Tribune.

OTTUMWA, Iowa, April 10.--An Eldon operator discovered the famous "air ship" at 7:25 tonight. Ottumwa was prepared by wire for its appearance, and it was seen here by half the population. All agree that it appeared as a red light moving up and down and traveling northwest. Albia caught sight of it at 8:10 and at 9 o'clock it was still visible there, though fast going out of sight. This is the third time it has been seen in Albia, its appearance there a week ago being the first heard of the ship in Iowa. There is no doubt that a vascillating red light was seen here tonight.
Special Telegram to the Tribune.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, April 10.--The mysterious air ship was seen in Iowa again tonight. Shortly after 7 o'clock a dark object, evidently about twenty feet long, with a large searchlight in front, and a red light in the rear, with green and white lights on either side was visible from [Shell] Rock. It was moving south. An hour later the lights could be seen from Waterloo and at 9 o'clock Reinbeck saw the mysterious visitor. Reinbeck gave exactly the same description sent from Shell Rock. At Reinbeck the air ship turned towards the northwest. /
Special Telegram to the Tribune.

ALBERT LEA, Minn., April 10.--The air ship was again seen about 9 p.m., hovering over this city. It remained visible about twenty-five minutes, then disappearing northwest, going at a terrific rate of speed. It seemed to be about a mile high, displaying a brilliant white light that continually kept moving in different directions. Its course was northwest and was witnessed by many people living along the course in which it traveled and owing to the fact that people whose honesty and truthfulness is beyond dispute have viewed this mystery, it is evident that something unusual is transpiring whether it be the hand of

That Air Ship.
"Where there is so much smoke there must be some fire." The persistent reports of the sighting of a queer craft sailing about in the sky, apparently under perfect control of some intelligent power, suggest a possibility, that at last the problem of aerial navigation has been solved, and that the world may be astonished with the most wonderful invention of this or any other age when the occupants and navigators of the strange flying monster see fit to come to earth and reveal themselves.

Some time ago the news was flashed from California that a successful airship had been perfected and that the inventor had been sailing about in it. This at the time was supposed to be merely the yarn of an imaginary newspaper reporter, or a vision evoked by the exhilarating beverages native to that section. The theory now is that this California flying machine has made its way across the Rockies and is engaged in astonishing and mystifying the people of the central region of the continent.

At all events there appears to be something unusual in the sky. It may be a succession of meteors, it may be an optical illusion, it may be a wandering balloon that has broken from its moorings. But numerous people who have seen it aver that it is like none of these things. Curiosity to know what it is will go on increasing in intensity until the mystery is solved.

Apr. 14 p.4--It seems rather queer that none of the weather observers have seen the alleged airship through their powerful glasses, and none of the astronomers at the observatories have seen it through their telescopes. They would naturally be on the lookout for it. The scientific opinion is that the mysterious light seen wandering about the heavens is simply the star "Alpha Orionis," which has been wandering about the heavens for ten million years, and which is now visible at evening in the skies of this latitude.
1897 April 12 (Mon) St. Paul (Minn.) Dispatch, p. 4.

Anoka See the Airship. / Special to the Dispatch.
Anoka, Minn., April 12.--The airship was seen last night by many Anoka people, between 9:30 and 10 o'clock. It came from the southeast and then changed to due north. It was described by several who saw it before any dailies arrived this morning, and the descriptions tally. It changed lights here, being first red, then green. Quite a crowd collected on top of the Commercial hotel to view it, and it was traveling fast.
25, 6 ghost.
1897 April 12 (Mon) St. Paul Pioneer Press, p. 4. (card 1)

DOES HE HAIL FROM MARS? / NAVIGATOR OF THE AIR SHIP. / Minneapolis and Minnetonka People See the Strange Object Through Glasses, Field Glasses. /

Good morning, have you seen the airship? If not you are unlucky. It was sighted by at least a thousand people last night who kept the Pioneer Press telephone in Minneapolis hot from 8 o'clock till midnight. Flying along in his long, low, rakish craft, the inhabitant from Mars executed more maneuvers in the heavens over toward Minnetonka last night than could the substance of ten thousand Fourth of July rockets. It is idle to ask why Mr. Mars does not deign to light. The plain fact remains that all's not well in the sky of Minnesota.

Last night about 8 o'clock R.C. Adams, of 3126 Fourth avenue south, who is in business at Lake street and Nicollet avenue, caught sight of the strange craft flying low in the heavens in the direction of Minnetonka. He called his father and mother to witness the phenomenon and, with the aid of a field glass, was able to see the outlines of the ship.

"It was about 8 o'clock," said Mr. Adams last night, "when I saw the thing. Through the glass I saw an object that appeared to be about 18 or 20 feet long. It was shaped like a cigar and in the middle and on top of it was a square light. This light was alternately white, green and red, as the navigator cut through the sky. He was going at a high rate of speed when I saw him. He would dip and shoot down for, say a half-mile with a green light, and then mount with the speed of a rocket showing a white light. As he floated he changed his light to red or green. The light looked as big as a plate through the glass, but to the naked eye appeared about the size of an orange. I could distinctly see the vague outlines of the craft. The lights were clearly defined in the middle and on top of the thing in a square box that looked about as large as a locomotive headlight."

Mr. Adams was found at Lake street and Nicollet avenue with an excited crowd of men and boys a few of whom had seen the flying machine. Among those who saw the ship were B.K. Melville and L.S. Davis, to whom the light looked about the size of an orange. They say it changed color as described by Adams and observed it waters in an uncertain way. The strange apparition did not leave the Minneapolis horizon until nearly midnight, and was seen from several other places in the city. The best test of the veracity of all these witnesses is that their descriptions agree. Next the light appeared over Lake Minnetonka. Druggist Nevell of Excelsior phoned that he had seen it, giving the following description: "It seems to be coming towards Excelsior from the direction of Hotel St. Louis. We can see a green and a white light. Sometimes it takes a shoot down and we can see the green light plainly. Then it rises slowly up. It dodges around and sometimes seems to go almost in a circle." About half an hour later, at 9:20, Mr. Nevell again reported this time saying the light was receding in the northeast. Both the green and red lights had been seen at different times. Mrs. Dr. Small looked at it through a field glass, and through the hazy atmosphere was able to discern a dark body which moved with the light. It would move very erratically, shooting downward and to one side, and then rising with a succession of jerky motions. It was then rapidly fading from view, and at no time did the light look larger than an orange from Excelsior.

Hovering Over Minnetonka

The light was again seen from the corner of Lake and Nicollet at 10:20. H. Webb Chamberlain, who lives at 3020 Motor avenue telephoned that it was in plain sight about due west, and its motions were being watched by a number of people. It was exhibiting a white light, but occasionally would flash red immediately followed by green. /

KEEPS THEM WONDERING. / That Airship Again Seen by Albert Lea Citizens. Albert Lea, Minn., Special, April 11.--The so-called airship was seen by a large number here last night and was watched for some time. Ex-mayor Gillrup says he saw the light about 10:30 and that it appeared to move up and down, then sideways and at last disappeared far in the northwest. There is much talk about the strange sight and all are wondering what the phenomenon really is. The suggestion that it is from the planet Mars is not generally believed, but those seeing the strange sight declare it is no illusion.

Cumberland, Wis., April 11.--The attention of people on the street of this city was called to a large, red light in the sky at 9:30 o'clock to-night. It was first seen in the southwest and traveled swiftly to the northeast, with a dipping motion. It was in sight some thirty minutes and is supposed to be an airship.

Merillon, Wis., April 11.--The airship was discovered here about 10:30 o'clock to-night by the night operator of the Omaha road. All that was visible was a red light, which turned to white and back to red again at intervals. It was moving rapidly towards the northwest when first seen, but after a time it turned and went southwest. Then it turned again and moved rapidly in various directions over the town. The light seemed to be quite high and looked much like a star, but no one in these parts ever before saw a star travel about the heavens in such an erratic way, and the only solution is that it was the airship.

(1917 April 13 (Sun) Minneapolis Tribune, p. 1. (card 1))

WONDER! / Mysterious Airship Seen by Stuart Mackroth. / Was But a Short Distance From the Earth. / Manned and Guided by One or More Living Beings. /

The already mystery still remains unsolved. Its visit to Minneapolis Saturday night was repeated Sunday night, and reputable citizens claim to have seen it in its rapid flight through the heavens. By all the same description of the phenomena is given, except in the case of Stuart Mackroth, of the Flour City National Bank, who claims to have witnessed it, and clearly discerned its most prominent features.

Mr. Mackroth is one of those who saw it Sunday night. He was riding in from Minnetonka on his bicycle, between 10:30 o'clock and midnight, when he saw a clear light moving about a quarter of a mile in the air above and toward him. In an instant it was immediately above his head, and in another instant speeding rapidly away from him toward the north.

According to Mr. Mackroth, the flying machine, or whatever it might have been, was shaped like an ordinary boat. In the bow was a large bright light, on either side a red and green light, and in the stern a pale light. The light in front appeared to Mr. Mackroth as an electric light of great power, while the others were of ordinary brilliancy. Further than this Mr. Mackroth solemnly asserts that he saw in the machine living persons, men women and children. They were moving about as if very busy.

Mr. Mackroth is a reputable young man and could have no good reason for telling such a story unless it were true. His description of this mysterious vehicle coincides with descriptions given by those who have seen it, or claim to have seen it, in other portions of the Northwest and Southwest. In many instances reputable business men have told stories not unlike that told by Mr. Mackroth, and until they are proven false they must be accepted as true.

On Sunday night the airship confined its flights to points within a radius of 50 or 60 miles of Minneapolis, have been seen at Eau Claire, Wis., Anoka, Excelsior, and Rice Lake, Wis. The most startling tale in connection with it up to date comes from Rice Lake. A special to THE TRIBUNE last night from that place says:

A THRILLING STORY.

"The mysterious and very much talked of airship came to anchor in the mill pond here at 8:45 last night, and signaled for a physician. One of our eminent physicians, Dr. J.P. Walby, went on board and prescribed for the captain, whom he found suffering with an acute attack of la grippe. He spent about two hours with his distinguished patient, who refused to give his name. About 10:15 the captain decided to resume his journey, taking Dr. Walby along. To this the doctor objected. The captain presented a rifle at his breast and threatened to shoot if he refused to accompany him. They scuffled for the rifle, and the doctor possessed himself of the weapon, and the ship being then under way about 100 feet above the water, the doctor leaped overboard, lighting upon a snag log in the pond, from which he was rescued soon after by Dr. D.C. McClintch, J. Bassett, P. Fournier and F. Miller. The doctor has the rifle, and the captain has the doctor's prescription case and instruments. The city has gone stark crazy over the event."

The above is the first story attempting to describe a visit of the aerial mystery to either earth. The reference to the attempt to carry away a physician sounds rather "fishy," and may be the result of an overworked imagination. If the doctor dropped 40 feet with a heavy rifle in his hands, landed on a log in a mill pond, and stayed there until a boat went after him, he must be a little on the mysterious order himself.

A dispatch from Milwaukee, however, in a more serious vein, tells of the second visit of the ship to that city Sunday night. It was seen by thousands of people, and stopped for a quarter of an hour directly above the city hall. Station Keeper [redacted], of the [redacted] station, saw it distinctly, and was one of the few who did not at the same time lose his head. Mr. Moore says:

"The machine, or whatever it was anchored and stopped directly over the city hall. The light which I saw was suspended from a large, dark oval-shaped object, the shadow of which could be distinctly seen. In fact, it could be seen so plainly that I could discern the wheels working. I did not see any one in it, but any one who claims that the thing I saw floating over the city hall is a star simply don't know what he is talking about. I saw it too distinctly to be fooled. It was, I would judge, about 1,000 feet above the city hall."

1897 April 13 (Sun) St. Paul Pioneer Press, p. 2. (card 1)

WHOLE FLEET OF AIRSHIPS / WITNESSED BY DULUTHIANS. / The Most Scientific Observation of All Yet Made Is Reported From the Head of the Lakes.

Duluth, Special, April 12.--Several Duluth people with the mysterious airship in mind perched on top of a business block to-night with night glasses and light refreshments and cigars to pass the time as pleasantly as possible. They settled in their seats of observation at dusk and it was 9:30 before they discovered the airship. Meantime they had found it necessary to replenish their refreshments several times. The observers were gratified, they said, to suddenly see several lights to the west moving rapidly north. There is much diversity of opinion as to the number, but one of the observers says that with one eye closed he could see at least three distinct airships in outline, spread out like a flock of geese. The night was too thick for good observation, but if there is a fleet of airships it may be that all the places that have reported seeing the same airship may have seen different ones. /

Deadwood, S.D., Special, April 12.--People have gazed upon the airship and noted its flight in the skies. Last night one young man, while returning to his home from a social call at a late hour, distinctly saw queer lights floating in the air above him and the dim outline of a mysterious something sailing slowly over the city. It moved in a leisurely manner and was in sight for at least twenty minutes. The same thing was observed by four other gentlemen, and each gives a different account of its appearance. The gentlemen are personally unacquainted with one another, which would seem to give their statements a semblance of truth! /

Eau Claire, Wis., Special, April 12.--One hundred and fifty people were assembled at the Omaha depot about midnight last night by a report received there from Merillon that the airship was coming. The telegraph operator and others saw it through field glasses and vividly described it to the crowd, several of whom saw it also. There was considerable excitement. /

Negaunee, Mich., Special, April 12.--An object that cannot be likened to anything but an airship was sighted over this place between 7 and 8 o'clock last evening. It was witnessed by George W. Hall, formerly of the St. Paul inspection bureau, and several other reputable citizens. It disappeared suddenly toward the south before the attention of others could be called. /

Grand Rapids, Wis., Special, April 12.--The mysterious airship passed over here at 9 o'clock last evening and was watched by one hundred reputable citizens. The peculiar red light was clearly visible, moving rapidly in the western heavens. A few excited persons claimed to discern plainly a framework of some sort surrounding the red light, which shone with flickering luster. It set everybody wondering and then disappeared quickly. The whole town will watch for this western stranger to-night. /

Faribault, Minn., Special, April 12.--A number of people witnessed the peculiar light in the sky, called by some the airship, last night. It was going north.

(Note--The Pioneer Press at this point notified its correspondents at other places that they need not discover the airship.) / IS IT A STAR? / Illinois Savant Pronounces It Alpha Orionis.

Milwaukee, April 12.--While the people of conservative Milwaukee are not as a rule inclined to purchase stock in the Aerial Circumnavigation company, says the Sentinel, there are several persons who believe they have seen an airship scudding away over the city, notwithstanding the statement of Prof. Houghton, of the observatory at Evanston, Ill., that the heavenly visitor that has caused all this excitement is the star Alpha Orionis, that has been navigating space in an eccentric manner for ten million years.

According to Prof. Houghton, Alpha Orionis appears on the meridian at 5 o'clock and becomes visible at 8 o'clock. At that time it resembles a strong white electric light. If first becomes noticeable in the central southwest portion of the sky. At an unusually rapid rate for a star it takes its course toward the northwest, finally disappearing in that corner. As the star begins to sink the atmospheric conditions cause it to appear to be a reddish hue on the under side and green on the upper portion when seen through a glass. The center of the body is white. Another star which has an unusually bright appearance is Sirius, which is visible toward 10 o'clock in the southwest portion of the firmament.

As seen in Milwaukee last night there was a perceptible undulation in its motion, and the dips succeeded one another at about the rhythm of the pulse beat. It moved rapidly and disappeared off toward the northwest, near the horizon, vanishing by degrees. The colors, red, white and green, which it exhibited, were the result of an atmospheric refraction. When first noticed the object was almost overhead, only a narrow arc intervening between it and the zenith. It bore away at a rate unmistakable for the ordinary movement of stars.

1897 April 13 (Tues) St. Paul Dispatch, p. 4. (card 1)

Air-Ship in St. Paul / The Mystery is Cleared Up In Court House Square.....

At 9:05 this morning the wonderful air ship which has been seen hovering over Wisconsin and Minnesota for the past several days, appeared suddenly in the sky directly over St. Paul and attracted the attention of thousands of eyes and, of course, created a profound sensation.

Business was suspended and [135,472] people collected in the streets and gazed in wonderment on the curious-looking creature in the sky. It was easily several feet--perhaps more than that--in the sky and still it could be easily distinguished with the aid of a telescope.

The peculiar object circles slowly around like a great bird, then suddenly took a shoot downward and in an incredibly short space of time landed on court house square, where it was immediately surrounded by an immense crowd of curious citizens.

It was built in the shape of a huge cigar with immense wings floating off from the side and a great wheel at the rear. It was constructed of some peculiar white metal which was recognized by many as free silver, but which others claimed was something entirely new in this section of the country. No sign of life appeared on the strange vehicle for at least three minutes and a quarter, when a hidden door in the center pushed outward and three strange-looking persons stepped out on the prow and gazed in and about them.

They were fashioned for the most part like ordinary men, save that there was no line of demarcation between the nose and the mouth, and they were furnished with immense gills on the sides of their heads, which resembled the fan-shaped ear of the elephant, and moved in and out with the regular respiration of the owners. The mouth was immense and stretched from gill to gill, while sticking out from their backs was something resembling a huge fin. Their feet were as pointed as tacks, and every time they stepped the feet stuck in the ship. These feet were made in ~~xxxxxxx~~ this fashion they said in order to prevent them from slipping off the planet on which they lived. If they started to slip they stuck their feet in the planet several feet, and they stood no more show than a telegraph pole of slipping off into space. Concerning the fin they said it was used to guide them to where they wanted to go in case they did slip off. Their eyes looked like boiled eggs, and their hands were simply claws. This was essential, because in some places the air got so heavy that it was hard to dir their way out with the aid of ordinary fingers. So they had claws made instead.

The first man to speak was Mayor Doran, who extended his strange guests the freedom and welcome of the city. When he had finished his speech he asked the trio hither they had come.

"From Mars," one of them answered.

This stumped his honor, and pulling a ward map from his pocket he hastily scanned it, then shook his head.

"He means he Mars, Iowa," suggested a bystander, but the leader with the big flaps shook his head dispartedly and pointed into the sky.

"From Mars," he said.

Somebody brought the mayor a picture of the planets, and he immediately asked:

"How many votes have you up there?"

To which the strange man replied that things on Mars were not as base as they were here, and rulers were born, not made.

"Up there," said the queer-looking creature, "we are all appreciated at our true worth. We are elevated as we deserve, and there is no such thing as internal dissention, no throwing down of trusted men, no striking in the back and no ill-natured joshing. They all see us as we are and honor us as we deserve."

The mayor gazed curiously at the speaker for an instant, then jumping upon the prow of the airship, exclaimed delightedly:

"Why Eddie Hinebaugh, as I live!"

The creature smiled happily and extended his claw.

"At last," said he, "I have found a place where I am appreciated and satisfied."

"Allow me," he said, stepping aside and revealing one of his companions, "to introduce you to one of my ~~xxxx~~ trusted lieutenants, who accompanies me on all my dreamy flights. This, Mr. Mayor, is my pal P. Fortune. The other needs no introduction. He only lives in the Eighth ward."

The crowd broke into delighted applause, to which Eddie responded with his usual gallantry and patronizing air. He had more air with him than anything else, for he needed it to run his air ship. He invited the people aboard to see his new craft, but no one responded. He despaired [sic] of having his invention accepted at all, when suddenly there was a commotion on the edge of the crowd and Judge Nelson pushed himself to the front. There was a cordial embrace between the two and in a few remarks Judge Nelson exclaimed:

"Ho you haf chanjet."

Suddenly there was another commotion and Fat Scamell rushed hurriedly to the side of the erstwhile leader, who is now one of the objects in the sky. Praver than all the rest, he accepted the invitation and stepped aboard. There was a shrill whistle. The first lieutenant pulled the lever and the ship shot off in the air. Fat looked helplessly over the rail, and it was seen that his face had changed and his mouth and nose had come together. His hands were claws and he had [ears] like a circus tent. The ship was last seen hovering over South St. Paul.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Minneapolis Tribune, p. 5.

(card 1)

IT IS STILL ALOFT / MYSTERY OF THE AIRSHIP YET TO BE SOLVED. / Reports From Different Parts of the State Show That the People Are Alive to the Situation, Whatever It Is--Reputable Citizens Claim to Have Seen the Weird Object With the Naked Eye--All Sorts of Theories Advanced Regarding the Aerial Stranger.

According to reports, the air ship lingers over the state, loth to take farewell of its climate and its people. Again last evening it soared aloft in its deviating flight, seemingly regardless of natural laws, starting and stopping at will. Many who saw it as it passed in its aerial flight, but as usual the passengers aboard the monstrosity ignored their wondering fellows, who were absorbed in rant inspection of the contrivance. Ready testimony is volunteered by the eye-witnesses if their accuracy should be questioned.

The ship passed over the city last evening at a comparatively early hour. The employes at the North Side pumping station saw it shortly after 9 o'clock in the southeast at a high rate of speed, finally disappearing. There were different colored lights displayed as it cavorted before their gaze. Nor were they alone in their declarations. From the policemen of the southern end of the city was received word that the mysterious affair had been sighted in the west, displaying singular uncertain actions, as though characterized by temporary indecision. There were different colored lights, all handled in a scientific manner.

A number of people who had collected at the top of the Guaranty Loan building claim to have seen it for a short time about the hour mentioned by the police of the south end. The direction it was taking indicated a northwesterly course, slightly beyond Lake Harriett. That it passed near there was ascertained by telephone, the information to that effect coming from residents who beheld the wonder of the heavens as it whizzed past at a great altitude. The description given corresponds to that of a number of people at Stillwater Junction at an earlier hour. According to their statements it was equipped with colored lights, and was traveling southward. The operator at North Wisconsin Junction says he obtained a good view of it. He stated that it was cigar-shaped and that a red globe was dropped from it.

There were no conflicting descriptions of the monster by those who witnessed it last evening. The different colored lights were present in each instance. In this respect corroborative evidence was received from Grantsburg, Wis., where, it is said, the ship was seen by a score of people moving northwest over the St. Croix river, disappearing in the distance. A red light marked its course. Similar reports were received from St. Paul, where the ship was reported tied up to a bank of ~~low~~ clouds at the northwestern part of the city, remaining in view a sufficient length of time to assure men and women and children of a possible trip to Mars in the near future.

The people of Douglas county say they saw the ship at an early hour yesterday morning, and a number of policemen in Duluth made a special report of the fact to the department. They spoke of it as [60] feet in length and stated that it glowed with the effervescence of a lightning bug on a summer's evening.

Thousands of people gathered at convenient points throughout the city last night awaiting the appearance of the monster. The heavens were cloudless, affording an excellent opportunity for observation. Little groups were at every street corner; passengers awaiting electric cars scanned the heavens for the mysterious visitor, and children speculated upon its probable appearance and meaning. At Nicollet and Washington avenues nearly 200 people were gathered at one time, many sure that they saw the object of their curiosity. One block distant, at Hennepin avenue, a similar crowd was to be seen. Men near the three-score-and-ten limit stared and twisted about, ever and anon brushing the dust from their spectacles. Far to the north Venus was slowly sinking to the horizon, brilliant in the illumination of this season. Gray heads declared it was no planet; they contended it was giving out a different light from what they supposed issued from that source, and some accepted the belief that it represented the air ship seen so frequently of late.

Cartoon! Two drunks look at clock tower w. light in it--And the Clock Struck Three. "Shay, Freddie, it's poin', hic, to come down and take us aboard. Don'r you hear the bell!"

1897 April 14 (Wed.) St. Paul Dispatch, p. 4.

SCHWEITZER SAW IT. / Latest Testimony Respecting the Airship.

Chief of Detectives Schweitzer is among those who saw the "airship" last night. He witnessed the different colored lights from his home on Charles street. The "ship" hovered around in the vicinity of the fair grounds for some time, but it was apparently so far away that nothing but the lights could be distinguished.

Samuel A. Smart, general baggage agent of the Great Northern road, who lives at 835 Holly avenue, also says he saw it.

17.7. Budd Reeve of North Dakota came to town:

"I want to say that we have found out all about the airship in North Dakota. It is the advance agent of prosperity sailing around looking for the best place to light, or rather to see where prosperity is needed most. ["]

OF COURSE THEY SAW IT. / Everybody Knows All About What He Thinks of the Airship.

Stillwater, Minn., Special, April 13.--Telegraph operators along the Omaha line in this vicinity of this city saw the airship to-night. At Stillwater Junction lights only were seen, but at North Wisconsin Junction the operators claim they saw the outlines of the ship, which was cigar-shaped. As yet no signs of it have been seen in Stillwater. /
 Replatton, Minn., Special, April 13.--The airship was sighted to-night a little before 9 o'clock and was watched by fifty people for fully ~~more~~ twenty minutes. The outlines of ~~the~~ the craft could not be distinguished, but the colored lights were plainly visible. It moved rapidly in a northwesterly direction. /

Clayton, Wis., Special, April 13.--What is supposed to be the airship was seen by people on the streets here at 8:40 p.m. It appeared to be moving in a northwesterly direction and showed red, green and white lights. /

Winona, Minn., Special, April 13.--Harry Friday and several ~~other~~ other Winonans have seen the "soap bubble" airship, but take no stock in the many stories which are told about it. It is thought here to be a star. It is seen by Winonans to show both red and green lights, and seemingly to sway back and forth. It appeared just southwest of the evening star, and back behind the western hills by 9:30. /

1897 April 14 (Wed) St. Paul Pioneer-Press, p. 4. (Card 1)

STORY OF THE AIRSHIP / IS SEEN CLEARLY NEAR NEW ULM. / What It Really Is--How It Is Constructed--How It Runs--And Why It Is Built and Operated. /

New Ulm, Minn., Special, April 13.--The airship, after making nightly flights over the cities of the Northwest, after mystifying the people of half a dozen states and arousing the curiosity of the entire civilized world, has not only appeared in this city but it has left a message explaining in part its strange actions.

The news of the airship has aroused the curiosity of the people of this city and for several nights those on the streets have been on the lookout for the red, green and white lights among the stars. About 10 o'clock to-night the moving light of the airship was discovered in the Northeast. It seemed to be moving rapidly in a generally south-west direction, but its course was not direct. It appeared to be approaching the city, but while it was still some distance away it veered to the west and then, circling around toward the south, it came nearer again, and when it was directly overhead it seemed to stop. But while the light seemed to be stationary it was noticed that it kept growing brighter and brighter until it was evident that the airship was coming down. Just as the curiosity of the spectators was at its height the light app made a sudden shoot for the east and its appearance indicated that the mysterious visitor was rising as it traveled almost due east.

The crowd was still watching the disappearing light, wondering whether it would return, when a loud thud on the sidewalk only a few feet away attracted attention. A small package had struck the walk. The wrapper was a copy of the Sundry Pioneer Press. On the inside was a bar of type metal and tied to this was a folded piece of paper. This was hurriedly taken to the hotel across the street and examined. It was covered with typewritten matter which was as follows:

"Appreciating the interest that the airship has aroused and the curiosity of the entire world regarding its construction, its operation and its mission I have decided to make this statement. I can safely do this now since enough trials have been made to show that the machine is a success so that I am no longer afraid of the public derision which has been meted out to all my predecessors who have tried to emulate the birds to fly through space from the time of Darius Green. That is why I have operated only at night and that is the cause for the mystery of my flights.

"I have been on the wing now for several days, off and on, almost weeks in fact, for it was a considerable time before my lights were first discovered and I was flying about unknown to those below. I started from the Pioneer Press building in St. Paul. My machine is so constructed that it is necessary for me to start from a high place. I selected the Pioneer Press building because of its height and its central location in the city. Since then I have been flying about having fun with folks.

"My machine is of peculiar construction and it embodies several new principles in aerial navigation, but I have solved the problem. The basis of my airship is a good-sized aluminum cylinder, hollow and open at both ends. On this is a platform and about ten feet above the platform is a big bag, as long as the cylinder and with larger diameter. This is filled with gas and serves as the agent of voyaging for the ship. At the sides of the cylinder are large wings and at the stern is a large fan-shaped rudder.

"The machinery and what would be the cabin on a ship is on the platform. The machinery is operated by a storage battery motor. One of the principal machines is a fan that operated in the cylinder. This is like the ordinary blow-fan used for ventilating buildings. It exhausts the air in the cylinder in front and blows it out in the rear. It revolves very rapidly and exhausts the air so fast that the atmospheric pressure drives the boat ahead. The speed that can be attained by this means is almost incredible until it is tried.

"Although this is the main means of propulsion the motor also operates the fan wings at the side. They can be stretched out horizontally to sail as a bird sails on the wind, or they can be moved to act as large fans to fan the craft forwards. They can ~~also~~ also be elevated above the machine, and this is their most effective use when it is possible, to act as sails, just as the sails of a ship operate.

They can be folded over the machine to form a parachute to drop down straight, or they can be folded up so that they offer no resistance to the wind in going against it or in diving. The machinery that operates them is somewhat complicated, but its operation is simple and they can be used in any of these ways since their only purpose is to help the machine go. They are not needed to steady it, because the gas bag looks after that business. The lights which have made all the fuss have no special use. Their purpose, when aerial navigation becomes common, as it certainly will, in view of the success of this ship, is the same as the lights on a ship on the sea. I have put them now because I wanted to test the machine in its complete form. I am not afraid of collisions at present.

On the platform is also a small cabin fitted out comfortably. I am writing this on my typewriter 2,000 feet above the earth's surface. I have in this cabin everything I need on a trip of several days. The cabin is airtight and in it is an oxygen generator, so that I can go as high as I please and make my air to order as I go. I am going to drop this at the first town I strike."

There was a signature to the letter, but it could not be made out. But the letter caused the greatest excitement in the town.

Now that this much of the secret is out the Pioneer Press might as well "acknowledge the corn." As the Pioneer is always at the fore not only with news, but with methods, as it was the first in the Northwest to employ advertising agencies, so it is the first in the field with an airship to carry the gospel of "The oldest and the best newspaper in the Northwest."

1897 April 15 (Th) St. Paul Pioneer Press, p.

MORE OF 'EM. / Additional Airship Returns Are Received.

Winona, Minn., Special, April 14.--Last evening the residents of Fountain City were astonished to see sailing directly over the city, several thousand feet from the ground, a bright light, which was nearly as large as the moon. The light was a bluish white and looked like an electric light. The light was at once recognized as very likely being from the now famous and mysterious airship, which many people heretofore in this vicinity have taken very little stock in. The craft was going with the wind and at a good rate of speed. Being so high in the air the form of the vessel could not be made out. Yet those who saw the light swear it could have come from no star, as it was too low and too large, also that the light had the appearance of being electric and coming from a vessel. Among those who will swear to the statement and saw the light are Messrs. F. Gerlich, Sterling Smith, A. Dressendorpher, Hugo Heck and Joseph Schuster. The red and green lights seen at other points were not noticeable last night. The airship was watched until it sank beyond the hills in the west.

Canton, S. D., Special, April 14.--Late last night an airship, headed due north, passed over Canton. It was going at a rapid rate and was seen by Mayor C.M. Sealey, ex-Mayor Laxson, Dr. Lewis, Dr. C'Neil and G. W. Stanley, all leading citizens. It appeared quite large in the light of the moon and carried red and green lights. It was propelled by 4 huge wings or fans and was going against the wind.

1897 April 15 (Th) St. Paul Pioneer Press, p. 5. (card 1)

ADAM SAW THE AIRSHIP LIGHT / IT IS AS OLD AS CREATION, SAY THE ASTRONOMERS. / Severinus J. Corrigan Explains That the Light Is Alpha Orion--Its Apparent Peculiar Motion and Change of Color Due to Atmospheric Conditions and Purely an Optical Illusion--The Light in the East is the Star Alpha Bootes--Description of the Stars. /

While it is possible that an airship or two may be cruising about in the heavens, the light that so many people have been watching have nothing to do with those airships if astronomers are to be believed. What has been reported to be the highlight of an airship is only an ordinary first magnitude star, say the astronomers, filling its regular place in the sky at the place it has filled since long before airships were ever thought of. As reported from various points in the Northwest and as seen at St. Paul the past two or three evenings the glittering object has been seen in the Western sky, at first half way from zenith to horizon, at about 8 o'clock in the evening. At apparently a remarkable speed it has taken a course toward the northwest, gradually descending until it disappeared in the murky atmosphere of the horizon.

Prof. Hough, of the Northwestern university, of Evanston, Ill., in an interview in Tuesday's Pioneer Press, said that the alleged strange celestial visitant was the star well known to astronomers as Alpha Orionis, which, says the professor, "has been navigating space in an eccentric manner for ten million years."

Mr. Severinus J. Corrigan, the well known astronomer and scientist of St. Paul, corroborated the assertion of Prof. Hough, except that he denies that there ever has been, is now, or ever can be, anything "eccentric" about the "navigation" or motions of this star or any other star. The characteristics of all stellar bodies, he maintains, are natural and regular and have been regular since their creation.

"The star that has caused all this talk is always seen in its present position at this time of the year," he said yesterday. "It is the largest star in the constellation of Orion--the 'mighty hunter' of mythology--the constellation, which, with its three stars in line forming the 'belt' and three others making the 'sword,' is every evening to be seen 'slowly sloping to the west,' as described in 'Locksley Hall.' Every schoolboy knows that astronomers name the stars in a constellation in their order of brightness by the letters of the Greek alphabet--Alpha, Beta, Gamma, etc. The hunter,' is, therefore, called Alpha Orion, or, when Latinized, Alpha Orionis. The name given it by Oriental astronomers is Betelgeuse. Orion has another star of the first magnitude, Beta Orionis, or Rigel, which is in his foot.

Brightest Star in Orion, which on the sidereal maps is placed in the shoulder of the 'mighty

"The apparently wavering or dancing motion of Betelgeuse is peculiar to all stars in similar positions in the sky, and is caused by the irregular refraction of the rays of light, and is only an optical illusion. It is ridiculous to suppose that there is really such a motion of the star. The change of colors is also due solely to atmospheric influences. People have noticed these things for all time, but only the ignorant have ever been disturbed by them, and it is singular that they are not better and more generally understood at this day.

"But while some observers thought they were sighting the airship in the west, others were excitedly gazing at another glaring object, at about the same altitude from the horizon, in the east, which they declared must also be an airship or its headlight. But this is also a star, well known to every student of the geography of the heavens as Alpha Bootes, or the first magnitude star Arcturus in the constellation of Bootes, the mythological 'herdsman'--the same Arcturus mentioned, with 'his sons,' in the Book of Job.

"I was inclined to believe," continued Mr. Corrigan, "when the first reports were published, that certain inventors had possibly succeeded in constructing an airship and might be testing it somewhere, but when it was said to have been seen at the same moment in different parts of the country, I realized that the stars must be confusing some people. It is quite possible that some craft adapted to aerial navigation will be constructed and used within the present generation. Such an invention is not opposed to scientific principles, but rather in accord with them. But an airship will be likely to disappoint its inventors, in the amount of great results, at least. It will certainly not drive railroads out of existence nor supplant existing methods of transportation to any important extent. But as long as people see only the objects they have seen within the past few days, they will never see an airship or even its headlight."

AIRSHIP'S FOOTPRINTS.

Two Truthful Citizens Come Upon the Mystery on Land. The road to Hudson, Wis., has long been the road to blissful realizations. And it was upon the road to Hudson that Frederick Chamberlain realized Tuesday night what this community and the Northwest have been anxiously awaiting. Frederick Chamberlain's hopes were then and there realized, and the hopes of O.L. Jones. For at 11:15, or maybe 11:20, Tuesday night, upon the road to Hudson, one mile this side of Lake Elmo, Frederick Chamberlain and O.L. Jones survived an encounter with the famous airship. Messrs. Chamberlain and Jones saw the airship in the air and the airship in the mud. To convince themselves that they were not sleeping, nor the victims of too hearty a supper, they pointed out to each other the footprints of the Martian monster in the palpable Minnesota mud. Fourteen footprints were readily discernible, each two feet in length, six inches wide, arranged seven on each side, and in an oblong pattern--the massy supports, manifestly, whereon the gruesome contrivance rested when folding its canvas wings. Premising this firm foundation for Fred Chamberlain's airship--and O.L. Jones' as well--the marvelous adventure can be related in detail. The circumstance that Mr. Chamberlain is himself a resident of Hudson, a locality synonymous, to many trusting souls, with the celestial paradise, the circumstance that O.L. Jones dwells customarily at New Sweden Nicollet county, the further circumstance that both are traveling men now at the Clarendon hotel--these features give but "local habitation" and several "names" to the following disclosure:

"Jones and I," said Mr. Chamberlain yesterday, "were driving in last night ~~xxxxxx~~ from Lakeland, Washington county. Soon after 11 o'clock we were about a mile this side of Lake Elmo when, looking off one side of the road and into an opening in the woods, we saw a man walking about with a lantern. He walked around and around, as if he was looking for something. There was no house near. The moon, you recollect, was shining brightly last night. We could see quite distinctly except for the shadows from the trees. So we thought something had gone wrong to keep man busy with a lantern in so lonely a spot. Jones said, 'Let's drive in there.' 'All right,' says I, and we turned our team--it was a two-horse buggy we had--off towards the clearing about two blocks distant. We hadn't gone five rods before the lantern suddenly disappeared. We heard a crackling of twigs and brush from the clearing. Then a rushing noise--irregular, more like wind blowing around the eaves of a house than like escaping steam. A second later and we distinguished a long, high object of a gray white color. The thing struck me as resembling most of the top of a 'prairie schooner' or immigrant wagon covered with canvas. At the same instant we saw two rows of lights--four lights in two pairs--one each pair including a red and a green light. The thing rose quickly at a sharp angle, so as to just clear the tree tops. As it passed over the trees to the south we saw several more white lights. But we could make out no machinery or wings or wheels or rudders or human figures, or even the exact outline of the affair. Fact was, it went up all in a jiffy, and we were too surprised to get a good view. Almost immediately after we saw the entire object it vanished behind the trees. The timber was right alongside us, and cut off our view. Jones said then, 'Why, man, that must be the airship!' I hadn't even thought of such a possibility although, of course, I've heard of the mystery. Anyway, we drove over to the clearing. It was rather wet ground and in the mud were the ~~xxxx~~ fourteen marks I described to you. But there was nothing else around that we could see in the bad light, although we looked for something accidentally left behind. Yes, we could hear the rushing noise for perhaps a minute after the thing disappeared."

A local citizen, or the party at the Clarendon, added that he has seen Adam Thielen, a Washington county farmer, yesterday morning. Thielen lives two miles this side of Elmo. Thielen told the St. Paul man a story of hearing a buzzing in the air about 11 o'clock the night before. This was while Thielen was walking home from a neighboring farmhouse. Looking up, he saw a dark object high in the sky and bearing red and green lights. The farmer was puzzled. 1897 April 16 (Fri) Minneapolis Tribune, p. 3.

News of the Northwest (North Dakota). Still in the Air. / Special Telegram to the Tribune.

Wheatland, N.D., April 15.--The peculiar aerial phenomenon known as the California airship was witnessed here last night by numbers of citizens. It was traveling in a northwesterly direction and was of a yellowish color, changing to red and blue at intervals and gradually lowering until lost from sight below the horizon. The same light was witnessed at different points along the Northern Pacific Railway the past two evenings and appears to be the same at all points.

The Tribune trusts that all of its Northwestern correspondents will not find it necessary to see the air ship by wire; but if they insist on discovering it, all that is necessary is to telegraph the place and date, which will be inserted in the stereotyping form used for this class of news. 1897 April 16 (Fri) Minneapolis Tribune, p. 5.

Is Wandering Still / The Airship Visits Portions of Minnesota Yesterday and Created the Usual Sensation.

The air ship still keeps up its wanderings. It was reported as having passed Glencoe, Minn., at about 8 o'clock last night. To the citizens of that village it appeared as an oblong object about the size of a full moon. It was traveling very fast and was seen for only about fifteen minutes.

From Howard Lake, Minn., also comes news of the aerial vehicles, Drs. Chilton and E. C. Tuttle claim to have plainly seen it. They describe it as being of the shape of a whale, apparently changing in its shape as it journeyed through the air. Four distinct and varying light they say were discernible.

p. 4--It is now pretty generally believed that the airship which has created so much excitement in several Western states was an optical illusion induced either by an unusually bright evening star or toy balloons sent up by practical jokers. The light was actually seen by several hundred people, and imagination added the corroborative details such as the outline of a cigar-shaped craft, people on board, etc.

Sun Apr. 18 p. 3--News of the Northwest (The Tribune trusts all of its northwestern correspondents will not find it necessary to see the airship; but if they insist on discovering it, all that is necessary is to telegraph the place and date. The airship editor will do the rest. 1897 April 17 (Sat) Duluth Weekly News-Tribune, p. 4 (eds).

That Airship.

The airship has struck the northwest circuit and is playing one-night stands in more or less close proximity to Duluth. No serious attention is paid to the report from Milwaukee, where observations made through beer glasses have always been discredited, but the testimony from Minneapolis fixes the airship as a fact and not an adjunct of the dreaded D.T.

The airship hove in sight of Minneapolis about half-past 9 Saturday night, and was promptly located by J.J. Barrett, Jasper Gibbs and Rev. M. Brown, all of whom were in or on top of the Guaranty Loan restaurant a hashery noted for its prohibition principles. All three of the gentlemen mentioned were sober, a statement easily accepted, as none of them claimed to have seen more than one airship.

The aerial navigators should give Duluth a call, as we have unusually excellent terminal facilities to offer. In case of accident the bay will be found much softer to drop on than the country around Minneapolis.

When you see an airship--try bromides. 1897 April 17 (Sat) Duluth, Minn. (Wkly) News-Tribune, p. 6. (card 1)

SEE THE AIR SHIP / Party of Young Men Scan the Heavens at Night. / NOT ONLY ONE SHIP BUT THREE / Hard Times in Duluth Do Not Deny This City the Privilege of Seeing Unusual Spectacles / (From Tues.'s Daily)

A half score of young men that have been very much interested in the movements of the mysterious airship that has been reported from scores of places, and which Saturday night was seen in Minneapolis, concluded the aerial machine was about due to arrive off Duluth last evening and so they determined to miss the opera and see the visitor if it should pass this way.

The party provided plenty of wraps, for the night was thick and the atmosphere was cold and damp. Refreshments were provided also in liberal quantities for the air ship does not appear to move on fixed schedule time and refreshments would help to pass the time. The observers were provided with night glasses and went into camp on top of a West Superior street skyscraper. Between the partaking of refreshments and cigars and casting lots to see who would go for fresh supplies, the time passed as merrily as could be expected under the circumstances. The heavens were scanned at frequent intervals.

It was about 11:15 when one of the observers suddenly exclaimed, "There she goes, by the great horn spoon."

The announcement caused such a commotion that some of the refreshments were spilled. The observer that had produced the excitement was staring through his glass, first with both eyes open and then with one.

eye closed. With one eye closed he could see three air ships sailing northward and about three miles west of Duluth, in the shape of a letter V, or like a flock of wild geese. With both eyes open he could see simply a confused mass of green and blue lights.

"Talk about air ships," said the discoverer, "there is a whole fleet of them."

One of the air ships appeared to be making signals and it is supposed they were intended for the hydrographic office in the board of trade building. Any reports of air ships seen to the south of Minneapolis and St. Paul last evening are probably the result of imagination. The real air ships abroad last evening were those seen by the party on top of the Duluth business block.

One member of the party that did not have a glass to favor his observations with tried the plan of closing one eye and says that if there were not more than three air ships in the fleet his vision is not to be trusted. The airships did not perform any of the tactics attributed to the lonesome air ship that came into view at Minneapolis and other places but appeared to be holding a steady course for the North star.

There was considerable conjecture among the young men that exposed themselves to pneumonia for the sake of getting a look at the air ship, as to where the fleet could be bound for. It is presumed it is headed for the gold fields or the north pole.

One of the observers holds to the theory that it is an air ship race around the world and that the people to the south have seen at different times all three of the aerial machines and that during that time the ships were merely jockeying for a start. It had been supposed that strong drink comes so high in Duluth that this city would be denied the privilege of seeing the air ship and it will be a matter of public gratification that Duluth has been favored even more than other places in spite of the hard times.

1897 April 20 (Tues) St. Paul Dispatch, p. 4.

It was...Scott's...Air Ship. /

The Dispatch has exerted itself--and it flatters itself with a fair degree of success--to properly portray the many-sided genius of our gifted impresario, Louis Napoleon Scott. His charmed circle of remunerative play houses, his wide-reaching and deep value-giving medium, his players' hotel and his dramatic railroad have all been duly exploited, but it appears that, like the Queen of Sheba, the half has not been told. Quod erat demonstrandum.

The most casual reader and observer must have had his attention attracted by the recent stories of the airship which has been making flitting about the heavens, demoralizing communities and wrecking the church standing of more than one theretofore truthful citizen. Hundreds saw it and hundreds were denounced either as Munchausens or as having looked upon the wine when it was red, or as having viewed the airship through a (beer) glass darkly.

But it was all Scott. On his head be all the anathemas. It is his airship and when driven in a corner, he could not deny it. He is the St. Paul [] of the cycle show, and it was to his Protean genius that the airship owed its actual existence. It was real, it was earnest, and to advertise the cycle show was its goal and now Scott can do no more than to stroke his amber mustache and acknowledge the soft impeachment. What he has done with the great machine, what he proposes next to do with it, whether he steered it through the empyrean himself or by proxy, what will be the next exemplification of his massive brain--these are secrets which he may tell to the night wind, but which for the present repose in undisturbed serenity behind the rhinestone which guards his breast.

DAKOTAS

1897 April 14 (Wed eveg) Fargo (R.D.) Forum and Daily Republican, p. 1.

The Airship.

Reports from Jamestown, Dawson, Steele, Bismarck, Mandan and Dickinson are that the airship passed west last night along the line of the Northern Pacific. It was seen at Jamestown by Druggist Avis' wife and the Western Union operator. Other towns west were called up and viewed the wanderer through glasses, Bismarck getting an especially fine view. This is the report from the west today, for what it is worth.

April 16 p.1--N.D. Kernels.

The Grafton? Tribune thinks the airship reported seen over that city was a flock of geese.

April 17 p. 2--It is hoped the airship fake has reached its pinnacle of agitation (?). Judging from the amount of space used, genuine space must be scarce in some quarters.

Mon. Apr. 19 p. 1 ND Kernels--Editor Richter of Larimore claims that he and 200 others saw the airship on Friday night--while attending a spelling bee.

May 7 Bernard

1897 April 16 Ward County Reporter (Minot, S.D.) (wkly) (Fri) p. 4

Local and Personal Items.

There has been considerable discussion of late over a strange aerial traveler that has been visible to residents of our city for the past three evenings. The statement that this visitor is an air ship and that it has aboard living human beings might easily be disbelieved by one not having seen and conversed with them. Last night about 10:30 as a R.E. Porter representative was looking around in search of the fleeting local, an exceeding bright light was seen in the direction of Clevens' coal shed, upon approaching, an air ship was seen in the act of coaling up with Mouse River Lignite coal. The ship is constructed out of some kind of material never before seen on this planet, and has several different colored lights which shine from a sort of dome rising from nearly the center of the machine. The people who own the machine are strange appearing creatures with blue hair, red eyes and small appetites. The captain of this strange craft can not speak English but could make motions, and from [him], we learned that he had signed a contract with Mr. Clevens to use lignite [coal for] the entire fleet of air ships now [flying] over this country, and that a [] of the ships would make regular [trips] between here and the planet Mars [] [in order] to bring over a large colony of [that planet's] inhabitants. And the air ship sailed [away] [] we see the lights yet [] once [] .

Fri Apr 23, p. 4--Velvy

The air ship was observed here last Saturday between 1 and 2 o'clock in the morning, from the roof of Ole Nelson's "pig" [saloon?], steering in ~~southeasterly~~ a southeasterly direction.

Fri May 7 p. 4--Norman.

Last Sunday evening the settlers of this locality were aroused by seeing an object coming rapidly towards us off in a northeasterly direction, something like an air ship, coming with the speed of lightning. But as it got nearer we could see something like a human body on a wheel. It was Olaf Clevens on his bicycle.

1897 April 17 (Sat.) Argus-Leader, Sioux Falls, S.D., p. 1.

The Air Ship at Pierre.

Pierre, April 17.--The air ship visited this place last night. At least two men in this city and a number of residents of Fort Pierre say they are willing to take oaths to seeing it. It passed over the city several hundred feet high, going west, and showed the usual red and green lights. Fire chief Monkhouse and James Seals saw it here and J.B. McLeod saw it at Fort Pierre. Seals says, beside the light, he saw a dark body hanging below with long arms extending on each side. The moon was shining brightly and all are certain there could have been no mistake.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Argus-Leader, Sioux Falls, S.D., p. 2.

The Air Ship Was at Vermillion. / Many Persons See Its Lights--A Grocerman's Son with a Kite.

Vermillion, April 17.--(Special to the Argus-Leader)--The much talked of air ship has crossed the border near this state and has been seen on several occasions near this city. Curiosity has caused many to watch for the appearance of the delusion over this city. Last night at about 11 o'clock, a sudden brightness appeared in the sky which slowly approached the city from the northeast and made a complete circuit of the business portion of the city. The image was seen by about twenty men who were on the street at the time. The descriptions are many and varied but all seem to agree that there was a bright red light which moved slowly in the sky. Some of the more thoughtful spectators hastened to the home of the professor of astronomy of the university to get a sight at it through the large telescope. Unfortunately the image disappeared before the instrument could be gotten in place. Stories were rife on the streets this morning and no doubt before night would have developed into an image with two lights and men's and women's voices as the general description given. It leaked out however, that a certain grocer's son had made a kite the day before and the tail thereof needed a lantern to give it proper ballast. The story somehow lacks the confidence at night that it had in the morning.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Argus-Leader, Sioux Falls, S.D., p. 8.

See the Airships. / Train Men See the Lights of the Airship--Are Very Positive.

Madison Sentinel: Trainmen on the west bound train Thursday evening saw the famous airship. It was visible to them all the way from Howard to Artesian. It was after dark and starlight when the mysterious object first appeared. It seemed very bright at first and could be seen from the interior of the coach by looking through the very top of the coach window. Conductor Joe Wright stated to the reporter that the red and white lights were plainly visible and seemed to change position as the object varied in its course. When the train reached Artesian the object was much nearer the ground and seemed to be rapidly descending and passed out of view in the form of a big red light. Mr. Wright says they saw a mysterious something and thinks it could not have been a meteoric phenomenon for the double lights were very distinct.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Argus-Leader, Sioux Falls, S.D., p. 6.

State Notes in General.

The festive air ship has put in appearance in Brookings county. The state, county or city that doesn't have an air ship pretty soon will be away behind the times.

Deadwood Pioneer: C. A. Peckinpugh who was on shift at the Welcome hoist Thursday night, and a companion, say they saw an air ship light on Terry Peak. It is said that it was also seen by fifteen or twenty others, some of whom started up to investigate but before they reached it, it rose and flew away. It was cigar shaped with enormous wings.

Sat. April 24 (State Notes)--The white and green lights from an airship were noted by telegraph operators this week along lines of railroad from St. Louis to Minneapolis. Tuesday evening a number of citizens of Woonsocket saw the light passing west of the city and disappearing over the Wessington hills. Among the observers were Al. Strub, Gib Dzize, H. DeCamp and Mayor Wilde.

21, 6 It is suspected that the airship stories are really a disguised advertisement for a new brand of whiskey.
22, 1--Hudson on airships.
22, 6--Ships That Pass in the Night / NYHerald--From the many different descriptions of that western airship it is evident that many who have seen it have used different phrases--contents unknown.

1897 April 26 (Mon) Argus-Leader, Sioux Falls, S.D., p. 1.

Had an Air Ship. / The People of Pierre See an Air Ship Which Alights in the Locke Grounds.

Pierre, April 26.--A great deal of talk was occasioned last week by the rumored flight over the city one evening of the noted (?) air ship so many have reported from various parts of the country. Whether the visions of those who discerned it were clouded by any unusual inward libations of prohibition water is not known for certain. Anyhow, the night following its reported passage some joker sent up two large tissue balloons connected by poles, with a rigging in between which resembled a car. This craft slowly sailed over the city, and crowds gathered on the streets straining eyes out to make out the details of the object in the moonlit sky. Some were yelling for it to come down, believing it was verily the great mysterious airship of legend and associated press report. It descended slowly and majestically in the rear of the Locke hotel, and then a lot of fellows felt foolish.

1897 April 28 (Wed) Argus-Leader, Sioux Falls, S. D., p. 3.

He Saw the Airship. / A Doctor of Alpena Makes Affidavit That He Saw the Airship.

Alpena, April 28.--(Special to the Argus-Leader.)--Dr. E. W. Ferge, formerly of W Hawarden, but now located here, is willing to make affidavit that he saw the flight of the much talked of airship. The doctor is a pretty level-headed fellow.

MANITOBA

1897 May 3 (Mon) Manitoba Morning Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 5.

WHERE WAS IT GOING? / AND WHERE DID IT COME FROM. / A Mysterious Aerial Visitor Passed Over the City on Saturday Evening.

The "What-is-it?" has been seen in Winnipeg. The famous flying machine or airship which has careened all over Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois and North Dakota, has at least visited Manitoba. Saturday night was the date chosen for the appearance of the airship and the lights of the mysterious machine were in full view of many citizens for full fifteen minutes. The light of the strange aerial vessel came into view about 9 o'clock on the eastern horizon, near the St. Boniface hospital. Gradually it neared and quickly crossed over the city disappearing in the northwestern horizon in the direction of Stony Mountain. Those who watched the flight up in the starry heavens state that the light first approached directly westward, then when just beyond the city it veered suddenly northward and was soon lost to view. Only the bare outline of some dark object could be seen besides the strong beacon light, evidently shown from the "masthead" of the aerial craft. There can be no doubt about the presence of a strange visitor on Saturday night, as its transit was witnessed by many reputable citizens. In the north end a small crowd gathered near Howard's drug store were mystified by the strange vision; another group of citizens watched it from the Leland house corner as it faded from view in the west. Many were the conjectures made as to the shape of the airship the method of propulsion, where bound, and whither from. The visitor of Saturday night is supposed to be the famous California flying machine, which it is alleged was launched at Oakland, California, nearly four months ago. Since that time the mysterious "Machine" is reported to have appeared to view, chiefly during the night, at points in Minnesota, Illinois, Iowa, North Dakota, Nebraska and elsewhere. The last point reported from was North Portal, xxxxx N.W.T., where about two weeks ago a strange object was noticed in the air, and passed over the town quite as rapidly as the "machine" noticed here on Saturday night. Several citizens interviewed last evening were of the opinion that the "airship" seen in Winnipeg was not of sufficient size for comparison with the California "flyer." They were inclined to the belief that it was merely a toy fire balloon sent up by some young men from the southern portion of the city.

1897 May 4 (Tues) Manitoba Morning Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 4.

THAT AIR SHIP. / People Still Talking About the Strange Object in Saturday Night's Sky.

Winnipeggers have not yet given themselves over entirely to the airship excitement, as have the citizens of many cities in the States. But still they talk of it, and yesterday the strange visitation of Saturday night was a somewhat fruitful theme of conversation. There were theories and theories, but the one most generally accepted was that the "thing" was a toy balloon. "That is ridiculous," said a gentleman yesterday--one who is credited with having a generous quantity of good horse sense--when a reporter meekly advanced the theory. "The ship was not going in the direction in which the wind was blowing, and anyway it was going faster than the wind. A letter was received here the other day which stated that the airship was heading this way, and I looked out for it. I tell you that was the airship, and there is no doubt about it." There are a great many people who are fully in accord with the views expressed by the gentleman quoted. "I was out by the hospital on Saturday night," said Mr. James Fisher, last evening, "and I saw the object plainly. It was a toy balloon, and was going in the direction in which the wind was blowing. It moved rapidly, which can be accounted for by the probability that the wind which was carrying it along was faster than the current of air below. There is no doubt in my mind about it being a toy balloon."

The latter is the theory most generally accepted, but "there are others," and these are now anxiously watching for the return of the "airship."

Meanwhile it might be well to explain the mystery, so as to save the "airship" adherents many sleepless nights. It was a toy balloon, and it was put up from the rear of the Manitoba hotel. It reached a considerable height before starting its journey across the city, going north as soon as it encountered a current of air just up high enough to make its outlines indistinct.

WISCONSIN

1897 April 6 (Tue) Milwaukee Journal, p. 4.

VENUS MALIGNED (ed.)

Some quid nunc in one of the northern towns of this state pointed to the blazing evening star, Venus, recently, and remarked that it was an electric light sent up in a balloon at St. Paul for the purposes of some government observation. The story took and spread like the Indiana scare of 1862 with that marvelous rapidity to which the truth can never attain. No one of the victims stopped for an hour to see that it moved towards the west like other stars and finally set like them. No one observed whether St. Paul lay in the direction of the light pointed at, nor did the question what observations it might subserve. They one and all swallowed the story whole. No blizzard, another form of error, ever swept over the country with greater rapidity or more thoroughly. None were so ignorant or so unread as to escape hearing and believing it. No truth ever published could reach so many people of all classes in ten or a hundred times the period this took to spread. No doubts were admitted, even by those having them, lest they should show their ignorance. It never seems to have entered their noddles that every man is entitled to his honest doubts as well as his honest beliefs. Doubt is the forerunner of truth in all investigations. Without doubt, there would be no investigation. Not one in a hundred of those sold by this fake but could have disproved it by his own knowledge applied to observation, had honest doubt been allowed to exercise its proper function in his intellectuality. (Political notions spread in the same way, and if this fake makes people think, it) will have done immeasurable good after all, besides furnishing a laugh.

1897 April 9 (Fri) Daily Commonwealth (Fond du Lac, Wis.), p. 3.

Social Brevities / A Mysterious Light.

Capt. Lee of the cyclometer works, who resides at Lucco, and Mr. Mast, the toll gate keeper at that point, report having seen a mysterious light, of large dimensions, floating over Lake Winnetago, the past few nights. The light has also been seen by east shore residents, floating in the air toward the northwest, and has caused much comment.

12.4 One of the queer things about the airship is that it is never seen except at night.--Sentinel.

Balloons always make a better appearance in the dark. That is why the airship made such a fine display at Ripon Saturday night.

1897 April 9 (Fri) Milwaukee Journal, p. 2.

That Airship Comes North. / Or Else the Citizens of Wausau Have Been Imbibing Strong Drinks.

WAUSAU, Wis., April 9.--The object that has appeared in different parts of the United States, day after day, commonly called the airship, made its appearance in Wausau last night about 10 o'clock, and was viewed by at least fifty citizens. It came from the southeast, passing over the city going northwest. Lights could be seen attached to the ship. A dim outline of it could be seen which appeared to be shaped like an egg. The main talk of the city today is about the airship. And it is safe to say that should the strange visitor put in an appearance again tonight, it will be seen by nearly every resident of Wausau.

1897 April 10 (Sat.) Evening News (Kenosha, Wis.), p. 3.

People abroad last night about 12 witnessed a sight well worth seeing. A star was seen traveling through the heavens with lightening rapidity, its beautiful green light showing to the best advantage against the clear sky. Some people mistook it at first for the airship. Mon. April 12, 3. Why is it the air ship has not been seen during the day light?

If they were not deceived by a kite or a tissue balloon Sunday evening, several people of Kenosha and vicinity saw the famed airship. Tues. April 13, 3. Evidently the airship hasn't made much progress. It was seen here again Monday evening. After a good, fair wind all day it ought to have reached Oshkosh by this time.

Rxxx Fri. April 16, 5. In spite of wind and clouds the airship was seen here again Thursday night. Its lights reigned alone in the stormy sky for the space of half an hour.

3.1 Flying Mach. In Mich. (Niles.)
14.2. County News. Of course you had a glimpse of the air ship; at least you will admit that you did in order to be in line with a world of star-gazers. / 15.5. The arsp came to earth in Lake Mich Wed night 17.5. The ar sp was forgotten Fri night in the interest awakened by the grounded schooner.
30. 1. Wonder what has become of the airship?

1897 April 10 (Sat. afternoon) Wisconsin State Journal (Madison), p.1.

SAW THE AIRSHIP. / Lake Mills People Watched It Ten Minutes--Coming West.

Lake Mills correspondence: Thursday night at 9 o'clock a number of reliable people of xxxxx this village saw what they supposed to be the airship of which so much has been heard lately. W.P. Myers, the foreman of the Lake Mills Leader, and Mr. George Lusted first saw it in the vest as a great red light, moving up and down as if on wings and traveling westward. They called their families and their neighbors, and at least a dozen people saw it and watched it until it disappeared in the vest. It was a great curiosity at least, whether an airship or not. It was in view nearly ten minutes and was then lost to sight behind the woods on the west shore of Rock lake.

13,2: Every bird that essays the zenith these days incurs the imputation of being an airship.

14,2: It is possible Wash Hensing fell from the airship. He has received a shock from some quarter that renders him speechless.

15,2: It will be well to give the sea serpent lots of room these days. He's angry since this airship agitation is said to be something awful.

1897 April 10 (Sat) Racine, Wis., Daily Journal, p. 5.

SEEN IN OSAGE CO. / The Kansas Airship Claimed to Have Been Seen by Two Citizens.

Two Kansas people affirm that they have seen the Kansas airship. The thing, be it an airship or terrific aerial monster, as some would have it, showed all specifications and descriptions of the monster that had disturbed the citizens of Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa for the last six weeks. At least John C. Thompson and C.D. Cleveland, Jr., say it did. It carried a red light to port and a green light to starboard, which it occasionally proper in aerial circles, and the only course of action which a temperable and well regulated airship would think of pursuing. It wobbled and wiggled, which was also down in airship tactics, and seemed to oscillate as if breathing the hallowing spirit of the blue cerulean. Likewise it took the form of a cross and flashed out at these intervals in other astral mathematical symbols. This course of action is to be particularly noted as being entirely unaccountable. From data heretofore gathered such actions have never before been observed. But gentlemen generally acknowledge that they do not dream nor were the "black snake." Their story is that while walking on Washington street toward Main at 8:30 p.m. last evening, they situated an object moving swiftly across the western heavens, apparently it was two or three miles outside of the city limits and a mile from the surface of the ground. According to Mr. Thompson the outlines of the ship could be plainly seen, the forward portion being cigar-shaped and the rear part square or box-shaped. The center portion of the ship was sunk below the other two portions and was probably the well or the air in which the occupants were seated. When last seen the boat was heading in the direction of Lake Poyvon. Col. Archibald stated to a Northwestern reporter this morning that Messrs. Donnelly and Harner, two well known Ashland gentlemen who were in the city last evening, also claimed to have seen the ship.

pl: Arsp over Chi. ...

Wausau, Wis., April 10.--The airship made its appearance in Wausau last night about 10 o'clock and was viewed by at least one hundred citizens. It came from the SE, passing over the city going NW. Lights could be seen attached to the ship. A dim outline of it could be seen, which appeared to be shaped like an egg.

Grand Du Lac, Wis., April 10.--Capt. Lee ... 135
1897 April 10 (Sat) Racine, Wis., Daily Journal, p. 5 (card 1)

The Mysterious Airship.

Are all the people going crazy, have they been drinking too much, or is there some wild hallucination sweeping over the country? One might seriously ask himself this question when he reads the sensational accounts in the newspapers about the supposed airship that has been reported as sweeping through the heavens in about half a dozen places at the same time. The report started down in Kansas, somewhere, where many people of "undoubted veracity" claimed positively to have seen some strange object high in the air, flying along at a rapid rate, illuminated with various colored lights. It was an airship, everybody supposed who claimed to have seen it. Then the threads of the discovery was taken up in Iowa, and Thursday night reports came from the northern part of that state that the mysterious aerial stranger was seen exactly as described in Kansas, sailing northward in the xxxxxxxx direction toward the Minnesota boundary. This morning's papers contain accounts of great excitement among the people of northern Illinois who claim to have seen the monstrous ship and the flashing lights last night. But their accounts do not agree as to the direction of the mysterious night bird was taking. Reports from Mount Carroll say it came from the northeast and suddenly changed direction and disappeared, going west at a rapid rate. But the people of Evanston and other places around Chicago were thrown into great excitement at about that very hour by seeing the supposed airship sailing northward along the Lake Michigan shore in the direction of Milwaukee. Thousands of people claim to have seen it and their descriptions of it tally pretty closely with those given elsewhere. Up to an early hour this morning nothing had been seen of the stranger in Milwaukee, and yet dispatches from both the Lake and Wausau claim that it passed over those cities about the same hour that the residents of Evanston were set wild by the identical apparition. That there must be some fake somewhere is unmistakable. To be seen over Iowa going north one night and over Chicago going north the next night, and at the same hour to be going west, to say nothing of its appearance at Grand Du Lac and Wausau at that very time, is sufficient to discredit the reports. Moreover if anyone has indeed seen a mysterious airship he would not be foolishly enough to be traveling around in the multitude of experimental trips, when aerial navigation is so much in its infancy as to make daylight experiments sufficiently hazardous. And yet, to say the least, it seems hardly strange that so much excitement has been created over this strange case, and stranger yet that so many reputable and credible witnesses testify that they distinctly saw this aerial flyer. It is enough to make one ask whether some epidemic of hallucination is not sweeping over the Northwest, a sort of optical grippe, as it were.

1897 April 10 (Sat) Racine, Wis., Daily Journal, p. 5.

CLAIMS HE SAW IT. / Reputable Resident of Twelfth Street Claims to Have Seen the Air Ship.

That the now famous "air ship" passed in the vicinity of Racine there is no shadow of doubt. A reputable citizen of Racine says that last night he saw the M "air ship" and had a distinct view of it, or not so much a view of the craft itself as upon the lights upon it.

He said he was going home a little after midnight and was within a couple of blocks of his own domicile when his attention was attracted to his own shadow upon the ground which became suddenly black. He was surprised at this for the sky was heavily overcast without a break in the clouds for the moon or stars to shine through, and no electric light anywhere near. At first he supposed it must be a locomotive headlight, but there was not a locomotive within ten miles. On looking upward, to his astonishment he described several moving lights at an altitude of about 45 degrees from the horizon (his own words were, "about half way up the sky."); that these lights were of a several different colors, red, blue and yellow, some of them being fixed, while others whirled about with an eccentric motion throwing off sparks like a Fourth of July fire wheel; all the lights were attached to some apparatus or machine of dim and uncertain outline, and the whole affair slowly faded away from sight passing away in a north by northwest direction that would carry it over Franksville. Our informant was so amazed he had to hold on to the fence to keep from falling. As soon as he had somewhat recovered his self possession, he retraced his steps to call others to view the wonder. He found, however, that Mr. Sawyer's place, where he had spent the evening, had been closed, it being a few minutes past midnight, and he could find no one else astir before the thing passed out of sight.

He says he is confident it was the famous "airship" that has created so much of a stir throughout the country, and he even goes so far as to say he heard voices, but could not discern what they were talking about though they seemed to be uttered in authoritative and commanding tones, as of a captain giving orders to sailors, but that he heard what sounded at intervals like: "hic, hick, ugh," with a hissing, gurgling sound, and they must have come from the "air ship," as there was no one else anywhere near him to make a noise.

Our informant is Mr. Silas Bilderback of No. 2965 Twelfth street, a reliable citizen who has lived in Racine many years, and every word of his statement is entitled to all the credit it deserves.
1897 April 11 (Sun) Milwaukee Sentinel, p. 1 (card 1)

THEY SAW THE AIRSHIP / VERACIOUS MEN TESTIFY TO THE FACT. / EMINENT GREEN BAY CITIZENS WILLING TO MAKE OATH. / A Lonely Guard at the Milwaukee house of Correction Also Discovers the Traveler in the Heavens and People Who Didn't Go to Bed Early Are Soon Able to Corroborate the Fact. /

The airship which, it is said, was seen by people in Chicago Friday night, moving in the direction of Milwaukee, made its appearance in Northern Wisconsin last night, if people who say they saw it can be credited. Such reputable men as Judge S.D. Hastings, Jr., and W.E. Kellogg of Green Bay are reported in a dispatch to The Sentinel from that city, last night, as having seen the ship at 10 o'clock southeast of Green Bay, and going in a southerly direction. A red light was indistinctly seen, as well as the outlines of the framework. From a southeasterly course the ship was noticed to change suddenly to the northeast, when it disappeared toward Lake Michigan.

Reports come from Manitowish that the ship was also seen there about a mile and a half southeast and going rapidly in a northeasterly direction. Milwaukee seems to be delighted. The airship has now been reported both north and south of this city, which it seems to have avoided. /

The following dispatch was received by The Sentinel from Marsh field:

"Hundreds of people filled the streets to-night to see the famous airship. It appeared just after sundown rising like a huge meteor. It seemed to assume different colors, and moved at good speed. It was about five miles west and did not present the red color until sinking far in the northwest. With a glass it showed up cone shape[d] with a bright headlight. It is supposed it was anchored in the dense woods south of town all day and early evening. It will probably reach the Minnesota border by Sunday, unless its course is changed." /

Here is the report from Green Bay:

Green Bay, Wis., April 10.--Residents of this city are intensely excited over the appearance, to-night, of what is supposed to be the airship which has been seen near Chicago and elsewhere. Many prominent people of the city saw it distinctly, among them being Attorney H.C. Fairchild, Clerk E.J. Carroll of the Hotel Straubel, and many others citizens whose veracity is beyond question. It was first seen high up in the heavens, the light shown being of a reddish color, and larger than a star. It descended and then moved rapidly to the northward, passing to the eastward and disappearing behind the horizon.

News of its appearance spread rapidly over the city, and it was watched by many people. Night glasses were used by several to observe its movements. Those who saw it through them say that two smaller lights could be seen below and on each side of the large light. Several claimed that a large cigar-shaped body could be seen projecting back out of the large xxx light, which was on the forward end of the machine. There is no doubt that the light was seen, and that it could not have been a star. It was distinctly red in color, and flickered more than a star. Its movement through the sky was rapid. It first appeared at 10 o'clock, and was visible for half an hour. /

Early this morning The Sentinel began to receive reports that the airship was clearly visible in the northern sky. A lonely guard at the House of Correction was the first discoverer, and he at once telephoned the news to The Sentinel. Half an hour later loiterers about the hotels and belated individuals at various down-town resorts were discussing the discovery and commenting on the phenomenon, which was plainly distinguishable by all.

"It is the airship sure," said some one.

"No mistake about it," replied his companion.

That appeared to be the general verdict until The Sentinel astronomer, from a ninth-story window in the office, after a glance at the "ship," declared that it wasn't an airship at all, even if Judge Hastings and other distinguished citizens of Green Bay thought it was. He admitted that it looked a little as if it might be an airship and he said that it apparently moved very rapidly. It was very bright and it had an appearance of elongation that made it look different from other stars—but it certainly wasn't an airship. It may be as Prof. Hough of Northwestern university has informed Chicago people, that it is "Alpha Orionis," a star of first magnitude, which is a fast traveler and gives out a colored light.

1897 April 11 (Sun) Milwaukee Sentinel, p. 11.

SAYS HE SAW THE AIRSHIP. / Lake Mills Man Describes the Aerial Conveyance.

Fort Atkinson, Wis., April 10.—Lynn Mills, the well-known baseball player, was here to-day on his way to umpire a game of ball at Beloit. He described to the writer the appearance of the airship seen at Lake Mills Thursday evening. About 9 o'clock a bright white light was seen moving rapidly up from the southwest, and crossed the western horizon, apparently going northwest. The white light was ahead and a red light at the rear made the affair look like a machine about 50 feet long and flying about 500 feet above the earth. He gave the names of George Crump, George Everson, William Myers, George Lusted and other reputable citizens who saw the lights. The flight of the machine was in waves, up and down.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Daily Commonwealth (Fond du Lac, Wis.), p. 3.

THE FIERY AIRSHIP. / Fond du Lacers Have Visions of the "Airship."

Once when the distinguished Francis Wayland was explaining to a number of students the mysteries of miracles, a young man, skeptical about such things, said: "Suppose I should say I was walking home and saw lampposts dancing, what would you say?" The professor instantly answered, "I should ask you where you had been."

A number of people of Fond du Lac claim to have seen the airship on Saturday and Sunday nights. Their visions were so acute that they clearly distinguished the stern light which was green, from the fore light which was red. They also saw the guy ropes or network, which were made fast to the ship. These persons speak with a good deal of definiteness as to the architectural construction of the mystery which sails so majestically through the night air. The only point on which they seem mixed, is the course of the ship, and the time of night the discovery was made. On the latter points they vary all the way from ten o'clock to three in the morning.

A couple down in South Byron say they also saw the airship. They were sitting on the front porch, experiencing no doubt, the same devotedness to each other which marked the early career of Artinus Ward and Betsy Jane when, after a dreamy silence, Jane broke the spell by exclaiming, "Isn't it moonly!" But the South Byron couple aver that the ~~max~~ airship was not like the castles which lovers sometimes build in the air, but was a reality, horizontal in form, and had a headlight to keep it from bumping against obstructions in its nocturnal journey.

One of the subscribers to the Commonwealth, who can always give a good account of "where he has been," and therefore has no wheels in his head, says the mysterious light which is called the airship, is the star known as Alpha Orion, which is an old visitor, but brighter this spring than usual.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Green Bay (Wis) Gazette, pp. 1, 2. (card 1)

WERE LOOKING FOR AIRSHIPS / AND GREEN BAY ALWAYS GETS WHAT SHE WANTS. / Story of the Wonderful Scene in the Heavens Saturday Evening--Another Scene at the Baseball Park That Was Not so Well Witnessed--City Made the Victim of a Practical Joke. /

Hundreds of Green Bay people were excited Saturday evening by the appearance in the heavens southeast of this city of what seemed for certain to be the wonderful airship of which so much has been said in the newspapers of late. Such prominent citizens as Judge S. D. Hastings, Attorney H. O. Fairchild, J. P. Bertles, W. E. Kellogg and many others saw it plainly and their testimony as to its presence could not be doubted.

Going Towards Marinette.

It put in its appearance within a few minutes of 10 o'clock and those who saw it first say it came from the southward, passing to the north over the eastern portion of the city, evidently headed for Marinette. The reputed airship consisted of a reddish colored light, plainly distinguishable from a star, and there could be no doubt but that it was moving through the heavens at a rapid rate of speed.

Looked Through Glasses.

News of the wonderful sight spread rapidly and soon hundreds of people in all parts of the city were intently watching the strange sight. Glasses were used by many and with their aid it was declared 137 that two smaller lights could be plainly seen below and at each side of the large, red light, which flashed up brightly at intervals, then growing more dim. It was asserted that back of this headlight a large cone-like structure could be dimly seen, it having a framework similar to the ordinary conception of airships.

Its Speed Very Rapid.

When east of the city the light stopped its journey northward and began to go up. Higher and higher it mounted, at the same time returning to the southward, until it became a mere speck in the southern sky, but still distinguishable from the stars. Then it descended lower and again started northward. Its speed became wonderful to those watching it from the main part of the city it descended below the horizon traveling at the rate of several miles a minute.

Scenes at the Cemetery.

If a person had been standing on the street railway track a short distance south of the entrance to Woodlawn cemetery shortly before 10 o'clock Saturday evening, four people would have been seen approaching from the direction of the city. They traveled in twos, one couple considerably in advance of the others. One of the men carried under his arm a package that might have been a new suit of clothes or his last week's laundry.

At the southern boundary of the baseball park the quartette halted in the shadow of a tree and after a brief consultation all four hastily crossed the road and disappeared among the trees. Had they been followed these four conspirators might have been seen to walk along the fence on the south side of the ball park and finally turn the corner at the rear of the fence. A few rods from the corner they halted. The package was carefully undone, disclosing a hot-air balloon fully 12 feet high, made from tissue paper.

How the Ship Was Launched.

One of the persons clambered to the top of the fence and the top end of the balloon was handed up to him. Down below a long wire was fastened across the hoop at the bottom of the balloon and at each end of the wire a Japanese lantern was fastened. The bunch of kerosene-soaked material used for inflating the embry airship was ignited. Rapidly the balloon filled with hot air until it was able to sustain its own weight and even to require something of an effort to hold it down. Another bunch of inflammable stuff was added to the blaze, the word was given and the "ship" started up into the air.

Another Story of Its Trip.

It rose rapidly and within a few seconds of its departure was several hundred feet high. The balloon became indistinguishable and only the large light could be seen, this blazing up at intervals and making indeed a strange sight in the heavens. A southerly breeze carried the balloon over the eastern part of the city quite rapidly. Higher up, however, it passed through this strata of air and encountered a current moving in the opposite direction but very slowly. It went higher and higher and gradually drifted southerly until it might easily have been seen by observers in Manitowoc. Then the supply of hot air diminished and it began to drop. As it fell the strata of southerly wind was again encountered / p. 5/ and as it neared the earth the light moved rapidly northward, finally reaching the ground somewhere to the eastward of the city.

Story May be Verified.

Some people may be inclined to doubt this story but it will be corroborated in every detail by M. J. Corbett, the popular west side grocer, who is something of a practical joker himself.

"Airship" Is Found.

Fred. Reschke, who lives at 1336 Portier street, near a East river also knows something about the "airship." It landed in his barnyard Saturday evening and he now has the remains of it. The fire was still burning when it descended and two Japanese lanterns were suspended from an iron wire hung across the bottom of a big tissue paper balloon. He saved the lanterns and they can be seen by the incredulous.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Evening News (Kenosha, Wis.), p. 3.

THE AIRSHIP SEEN. / A Certain County Official Says He Saw It Sunday Evening.

The airship was actually seen here Sunday evening at about 7:15 o'clock. Those who report having seen such a ship are of a kind to be trusted for calmness of judgment and integrity. A large white light with a smaller green one on either side was sighted moving in a southeasterly direction across the heavens about midway of the zenith. Its progress was slow and hardly discernible unless observed with relation to a given stationary object. The center light resembled a star except for its movement and size, which was considerably larger in appearance than any of our planets. The green side lights were much smaller and kept moving steadily with the larger one in the same relative position. About two hours after it was first seen here it was entirely lost sight of. It was reported this morning that it was discovered in Milwaukee a little after 9 o'clock Sunday evening.

A certain county official affirms that he saw the airship Sunday evening and some good friends of his resent the inference that he must have been celebrating his recent victory.

1897 April 12 (Mon) (Milwaukee) Evening Wisconsin, p. 4.

The Airship Mystery.

When all the land is matted in summer, and perspiring humanity seeks the watering-places, the sighting of the sea-serpent at any one of these resorts is the signal for reports from everywhere else along the shore that he has been seen there, too. The sea-serpent always looms biggest to the man who sees him last, and by the end of the season he gets so big that if he didn't keep himself varped both ends of him would be out of water, on account of the curvature of the earth. Perhaps it is because of his monstrous size that the sea-serpent is contemporaneously described off so many places along the coast. There is no convenient theory like this to account for the multitudinous reports of the sighting of the air-ship. Two conflicting theories instantly present themselves to the philosophic mind attempting to trace the phenomenon to its cause. One is that all the air is full of airships. The other is that a good many people are lying.

The Wisconsin declines to accept either of these conclusions as correct, although there is much that may be advanced in favor of the latter. The coincidence of the multifold sighting of the air-ship with the opening of the bock beer season suggests another solution which, now that attention is directed to it, will be recognized as too obvious to be ignored.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Milwaukee Journal, p. 2.

SECRET OF AN AIR SHIP. / IT WAS A BIG HOT AIR BALLOON THAT DECEIVED ALL GREEN BAY. / APPLETON SAW ONLY A STAR / They Thought It Was an Air Ship but Underwood Observatory Telescope Disclosed its Real Identity. GREEN BAY, Wis., April 12.--The wonderful air ship seen above this city Saturday night proves to have been simply a huge practical joke worked on the unsuspecting public. It consisted of a large hot air balloon with a rod across the bottom, to which was attached two Japanese lanterns. It was sent up about 9:30 o'clock by several well known residents, and to those who were not on the inside it looked like a veritable air ship. Many claimed they could see the body of the thing with rudder and wings. It caused intense excitement. A suburban resident now has the remnants which landed in his yard about 10:30 o'clock.

APPLETON, Wis., April 12.--The much-talked-of air ship was plainly visible last night in this city. It appeared about 9:30 o'clock coming from the northeast and traveling in a southwesterly direction, seemingly following the course of the river. It was about a half-mile above the earth and at times gave out a glaring white light changing to red and green. It would raise and lower and at times come apparently to almost a dead stop. It was visible about twenty minutes and during that time hundreds of people viewed it. At Lawrence university the great telescope in Underwood university [sic] was turned on the object and those in charge declare it to be a star, Alpha Orionis [sic], saying that every movement tended to a confirmation of this theory.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Milwaukee Sentinel, p. 1.

(card 1)

AIRSHIP IS SEEN AGAIN / VISIBLE TO THOUSANDS IN THE WESTERN SKY. / MYSTERIOUSLY APPEARS AND DISAPPEARS LAST NIGHT. / It Attracts the Attention of People All the Way From Lincoln, Neb., to Oshkosh--Atmosphere Apparently Full of Flying Machines. Towns in the State at Which the Mysterious Visitor Is Observed. Lieut. Miller Says It Is a Big Kite and a Big Joke. /

Every adult citizen of Milwaukee, in common with the adult population of the great Northwest, swept the "infinite meadow of heaven" last night in search for the mysterious airship that is reported to be sailing like a vagrant through space. A little group of men clustered about the intersection of Broadway and Biddle street at 8:30 o'clock were positive they had caught a sight of the wonderful traveler sailing southward over the northwestern section of the city. Stationkeeper Moore of the Central was among the stargazers, and says that he caught a good view of the stranger. "It was too large for a star--about as big as four ordinary stars," he declared. "And besides this, it bobbed up and down, and skipped off southward," he added. While he was describing the ship, Patrick Shea came into the station and reported that many people in the upper seventh ward had seen the heavenly visitor. Patrick was skeptical. "You take a trip up to the club house on the lake shore, and if you don't find a fellow standing on the bank holding a kite string, then it was the airship, and no mistake."

There Are Airships to Burn.

"Have you seen the airship?" took the place of the conventional "Good evening," when two friends met upon the street, and they immediately took a look at the star bespangled dome in hopes of discovering the aerial navigator; they even made their way about through the center of the streets in order to extend the line of vision to better advantage, and mentally berated the enterprises that had run up the skyscraping buildings that interposed an obstacle. People coming out of the churches lost the inspiration of the prayer and the praise service as they sought out the invention of the man amid the handiwork of the Creator out in space. Audiences coming from the theaters halted upon the street to cast aloft a searching glance, and then discussed the craze that is sweeping over the country. Meanwhile the airship goes on annihilating space, making the distance from Lincoln, Neb., to Oshkosh, Wis., with a rapidity that beats the magnetic telegraph, else the atmosphere must be surcharged with airships.

A Hypnotic Star Gazer.

One gentleman with an aromatic breath, came out of a brilliantly illuminated sample room on Grand avenue wiping his mouth, and in response to the inquiry, "Have you seen the airship?" discovered two lights playing a game that resembled "leap-frog" up in the vaulted blue. He pointed it out to all comers as the airship, and became indignant when some one of the many who were only able to see a single star, suggested that he had been hypnotized by the man in the sample room until he saw double.

While the people of conservative Milwaukee are not as a rule inclined to purchase stock in the Aerial Circumnavigation company, there are several persons who believe they have seen an airship scudding way over the city, notwithstanding the statement of Prof. Houghton of the observatory at Evanston, Ill., that the heavenly visitor that has caused all this excitement is the star Alpha Orionis, that has been navigating space in an eccentric manner for 10,000,000 years.

Is It Alpha Orionis?

According to Prof. Houghton, Alpha Orionis appears on the meridian at 5 o'clock and becomes visible at 8 o'clock. At that time it resembles a strong white electric light. It first becomes noticeable in the central southwest portion of the sky. At an unusually rapid rate for a star it takes its course toward the northwest, finally disappearing in that corner. As the star begins to sink the atmospheric conditions cause it to appear to be a reddish hue on the under side and green on the upper portion when seen through a glass. The center of the body is white. Another star which has an unusually bright appearance is Sirius, which is visible toward 10 o'clock in the southwest portion of the firmament.

Its Perceptible Motion.

As seen in Milwaukee last night there was a perceptible undulation in its motion, and the dips succeeded one another at about the rhythm of a pulse beat. It moved rapidly and disappeared off toward the north west, near the horizon, vanishing by degrees. The colors, red, white and green, which it exhibited, were too distinct, many thought, to have been the result of atmospheric refraction. When first noticed the object was almost overhead, only a narrow arc intervening between it and the zenith. It bore away at a rate unmistakable for the ordinary movement of stars.

Lieut. Miller's Story.

Up to 11 o'clock last night Lieut. M Frank D. Miller of the Central Police station was a firm believer in the airship theory. At that hour an officer from the Eighteenth ward submitted a report to him that made stock in the Aerial Circumnavigation company drop out of sight. Lieut. Miller refuses to say how he got his information, but early this morning gave the following explanation of the supposed airship that sailed over Milwaukee early in the evening: "You can't talk airship to me," said Miller. "I know all about it. If anybody tells you he saw an airship passing over the city tell him he's got wheels. Send him down to Mahn-a-Wauk Canoe club boat house and tell him to ask some of the members where they had that big tailless kite, which they have been flying about the city for months. I'll tell you what they did to-night They heard so much about airships that they made up their minds that Milwaukee was being sighted. So they took their kite up to North point, tied a light to it, and let it fly over the city. You know what that kite will do. You recall several months ago when they flew it one Sunday afternoon and everybody got the airship-craze then. They fooled the people then and they did it again last night. That is the whole secret of the airship."

How the Kite Was Operated.

"But how do you account for it traveling so far?" "Now don't ask questions, but I am giving it to you straight. The kite that the club members have can be let out over tow miles. They have a reel with which they can wind it up and let it out, just as they please. You know what a kite will do when you let the string out fast. It'll sink and about downward in a hurry. That is just what this one did over the city hall, and everybody thought that the airship captain was going to anchor his machine on the tower. But the boys knew about how much string they could let out, and when they got the kite as low as they dared to have it without giving the snap away, they operated it so it sailed higher and they gradually moved off to the other part of the city. Two miles of string to a kite will send it up pretty high, you know, and that accounts for it going away. As for the lights, why they fixed them so that they would only burn a certain length of time. When the kite got as high as they could let it with the string, the lights began to burn lower and finally went out. Everybody thought the airship was moving further away, but it wasn't. When the light went out they pulled in the kite and went down town and found out the town had gone wild. It's a good joke on everybody, and, what is more, Milwaukee has also an airship."

Thinks It a Big Joke.

"Did you or any officers see the members of the club let out the kite?" "Now, I am not going to say what we saw or did not see. I am telling you on the quiet what took place, and know what I am telling you is straight. Don't get me mixed up in this business if you can help it, but don't let anybody 'stuff' you with airships or soaring stars. I know the names of some of the fellows who let up that kite, and I think they did their work well and deserve credit for the joke. It's the best one that has been sprung on the town for a long time. Who ever heard of an airship, anyway?" And with this final remark Lieut. Miller turned on his heel and gave orders to an officer who was assigned to special duty.

Passes Over Sheboygan.

A dispatch from Sheboygan says: "The airship passed Sheboygan at 3 o'clock this morning, going toward Milwaukee. Jacob Schlicht and Frank Eberhardt, two reliable citizens, saw the light in the west over the lake moving rapidly south. It was too far away to distinguish the object which carried the light and the latter was much too large to be a star." 1897 April 12 (Mon aftern) Racine, Wis., Daily Journal, p. 2.

KEEPS ON SAILING. / The Famous Air Ship Continues Its Journey Through the Air.

Ships continue to float about in the air. Milwaukee men saw the wonder at 1 o'clock this morning. The members of the Racine baseball club went to the Cream City with numerous friends. Several of them candidly admit that they saw schooners, but no ship. Surging up from the bow of some schooners was white foam. Green Bay men became excited by an object seen in the air and will swear good and hard that they saw a ship with green and red lights and that four men were visible. Great excitement prevailed at the town of Norway. A small boy swore he saw the ship come down on the farm of John Johnson for water. He talked to one of the men, who said the ship came from Cuba and had been up sixty-two days and got lost and desired to get the direction to Key West. The boiler was filled with water and the ship arose and sailed toward the city of Milwaukee, where it was seen hovering over the city hall for several hours. The boy was taken down cellar and spanked by his mother and said he would never again tell a lie on Sunday. At last accounts the ship was staggering around through the air and men on terra firma who also stagger can look skyward almost any time and see the ship and some of them can see a dozen or more. 1897 April 13 (Wed eve) Milwaukee Journal, p. 2.

Fake Airship at Lancaster.

LANCASTER, Wis., April 13.--At 8:30 p.m. last Saturday a cry of air ship was heard in the street and a bright light very high in the air was seen moving northward quite rapidly. The airship turned out to be an immense hot air balloon, sent up by some one in the town. Apr. 17 p.4--Why not subsidize the air ship to stay with us? As an infant industry it is a great success. Apr. 30 p.4--The airship has taken to throwing over cases of empty beer bottles in Iowa. Perhaps the full bottles threw the airship. 1897 April 13 (Tue) Milwaukee Sentinel, p. (card 1)

IDENTITY OF "AIRSHIP" / ASTRONOMER AT LAWRENCE SOLVES THE MYSTERY. / THE STAR BETELGEUSE IN THE CONSTELLATION ORION. / The Position of the Light in the Heavens and the Hour of Its Setting Coincide With Those of Betelgeuse--Atmospheric Disturbances and Peculiar Light of the Star Explain the Bobbing Movement. /

Appleton, Wis., April 12.--Arthur C. Lunn of Lawrence University watched the supposed airship carefully, last night, and, after calculation, has proven beyond a doubt that the supposed ship is the star Betelgeuse in the constellation Orion. There was some excitement in the streets, last night, when a peculiar light was seen in the West. The light was no larger than a large star, but changed color from red to a piercing white, closely resembling an electric search light at several miles distance. What was even more peculiar the "air ship" seemed to bob up and down with at times a lateral motion. When still some degrees above the horizon, it disappeared, reappearing again in an instant, and finally became invisible. Students of Lawrence university who saw the phenomenon called up A. C. Lunn, recognized as an expert in astronomy by all of the members of the faculty, and he took close observations of the star, as he termed it. The star finally set at 10:40 and Mr. Lunn recorded the angular distance from the west point, together with the time of the apparent setting of the star over the sensible horizon. This forenoon, Mr. Lunn calculated the angular position and setting time of the real star, taking the mean of the atmospheric refraction. The two calculations, the one on the airship and the star Betelgeuse, coincided within the possible limit of error in the eye estimate, which is very low.

Mr. Lunn made a very comprehensive explanation of the illusion, saying that Betelgeuse is a red star with a light of a quality that greatly exaggerates the twinkle of all stars when it is near the horizon. Atmospheric disturbances easily occur and in a moment's time will make the atmosphere much more dense, causing a greater refraction of some of the light rays. When, for example, two red rays near together in the spectrum are refracted so that at a given point there is a certain difference in the wave length, interference occurs and neither ray is visible. This, with other phenomena of refraction, explains the different colors manifested by the star and the same principle of refraction also explains the apparent vertical vibration of the star which last night Mr. Lunn gave as being at least 35 minutes. A lateral vibration was also noticed and though not so evident, was still present. This vibration is now being studied by astronomers at Yale.

Mr. Lunn explained the movement stated from southeast to northwest in the following manner: The first appearance in the southeast might be due to the rising of Antares, a red star of the same magnitude of Alpha Orionis; and after it has risen, the wester star is seen going down through the same movement in the northwest. While rising in the east, the stars pass the meridian considerably to the south of this latitude.

Swear It's an Airship.

Ripon, Wis., April 12.--Claim is made that fully one-twentieth of Ripon's entire population saw the now celebrated airship last night. It is positively impossible to get them to gulp down the Orionis planet theory. The aerial wanderer put in an appearance just about the time the pastors had dismissed their Sunday night congregations and many of the people, homeward bound, saw the ship--or what they thought a ship. The object moved in a northwesterly direction. It is reported to-day by citizens of undoubted veracity that the ship passed over the city at a late hour going in the opposite direction. At any rate, the object has created much talk to-day and the ship is generally described as being about the size of a bushel basket in appearance.

Excites People of Eau Claire.

Eau Claire, Wis., April 12.--About 150 persons were assembled at the Omaha depot about midnight last night by a report received there from Merrillan that the airship was coming. The telegraph operator and others saw it through field glasses and vividly described it to the crowd, several of whom saw it also. The strange visitor caused considerable excitement.

Rio, Wis., April 12.--The airship was seen passing over this place at 8:45 a last night evening. Several persons saw a white and red light apparently about 300 feet above the earth, moving swiftly in a northwesterly direction.

West Superior, Wis., April 12.--The airship is reported to have been seen here, circling about the head of the lakes.

Darlington, Wis., April 12.--The airship was seen passing over west of here this evening. It appeared to be a large, bright light and moved in off in a northwesterly direction.

What Prof. Constock Says.

Madison, Wis., April 12.--Prof. G. C. Constock of Washburn observatory does not take the "air-ship" in a very serious way. He does not, however, attempt to account for the various reports of the so-called creditable "observers" going the rounds of the newspapers. He says the brightest stars at present are Jupiter, Venus and Sirius (sic) They have color decorations and might ~~xxxx~~ possibly be taken for an air-ship, or even a house and lot. These stars do not jiggle up and down to any extent. A great many Madison persons are confident that they saw the "air-ship" last night.

Elgin People See It.

Elgin, Ill., April 12.--The airship was plainly visible from Elgin to-night, in the southeast. It moved as a light would attached to a kite, and was not at a great altitude. Many saw it.

Green Bay, Wis., April 12.--The "airship" seen here Saturday night by several citizens proves to have been nothing but a hot air balloon sent up a short distance from the city by a few practical jokers.

Lodi, Wis., April 12.--James Wilson and many others say they saw the airship here to-night between 10:20 and 11 o'clock. It seemed quite low and was passing from a southeasterly to a northwesterly direction.

Think It a Circus Advertisement.

Madison, Wis., April 12.--There is an addition to-day to the already large number of unsolicited solutions of the airship mystery. According to this the "airship" is not a star, but a circus advertisement. Railroad men who reached Madison tonight report that the much talked aerial object was seen at Baraboo to-night, and that as the sky was thoroughly overcast with clouds there was no Alpha Orionis about it. If first appeared over the east end of the city and after drifting westward a mile, sailed back again and hovered over the winter quarters of a circus. Suspicion was at once aroused, that the "airship" was nothing other than a clever, well devised and better-executed advertising scheme of the circus men. It was recalled then that a circus man had been to Baraboo Sunday and had taken some large and mysterious bundles from the train to the winter quarters. It was further recalled that he was seen about the city ~~xxxx~~ little in the day, and that more than usual life was manifested in the big buildings down on the river front. It was then remembered that the ship of the air had made its appearance in Chicago almost simultaneously with the advent to that city of the circus men, and that Omaha, Des Moines and other points where it had been seen are already marked out for the circus next summer.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Daily Register (Portage, Wis.), p. 6.

SAW THE AIRSHIP FIRST. / Portage People See the Ship Before Bock Beer Season Begins.

Portage saw this airship long ago. It was way back in March--to be exact on the 27th, that the airship was seen calmly sailing over the city hall in the direction of the Ender House; it was in broad daylight and there is no doubt about its having been seen.

Two of the most eminent citizens of Portage saw it at three o'clock in the afternoon, with the sun shining from a clear sky. They did not see it through a glass either--for they are not that kind of people, and probably neither of them ever drank a glass of bock beer in their lives. They state that the airship was first discovered by them at a position approximately over the city hall and about three miles over it; that it sailed with a graceful motion--like a girl first learning to waltz--toward the Ender House, and that the sun shone full upon it causing it to appear white. It seemed to be as large as a bushel basket, and apparently was operated by steam for every once in a while or oftener, the ship would vobble and a cloud of smoke would belch forth from one end of it. As far as the two reputable citizens could discover there were no occupants of the machine--but as neither of them had glasses and as they state that the ship was three miles high--it is not surprising that occupants of the flyer, if there were any, were not discovered. Their point of vantage was the roof of the ex-postoffice building and they had an uninterrupted view for a number of minutes. The reason no report of this was made in the newspapers at the time is said to be that they feared to excite the ridicule of their fellow citizens and only the fact that the airship now being so widely reported in the papers has been seen at so many different places and only at night--and more especially after the opening of the bock beer season--has tempted them to unseal their lips at this time.

This later airship has been reported at different places in this county--Rio and Lodi, and this also had a bearing on the two gentlemen who first discovered the aerial navigator.

In conjunction with the above it should be stated that a large-sized hot-air balloon was liberated near the high school on the same date the discovery of the airship was made here and that this took the same direction the airship did, but it must never be supposed for a moment that any person could by any possibility stretch a toy balloon out sufficiently to make an airship of it--unless they had dilled with the festive bock--and this, we are certain, neither Mr. Ridgway nor Mr. Pilcher did.

BY A RACINE BOY. / Arthur C. Lunn of this City Solves the Alleged Air Ship Mystery. / IT IS NOTHING BUT A STAR. / The Young Man Watches the Star for Hours--Gives it Careful Study--Intelligent Explanation of the Learned Astronomer at Lawrence University. /

The whole western country has been excited during the past week in regard to an airship alleged to be sailing about the country. Hundreds of men have advanced ideas in regard to the mystery and scientists have been busy studying on the subject. One man down in Ravenswood, Ill., sprung into fame by producing what he claimed was a photograph of the ship and it was published in a Chicago paper. But it remained for a Racine boy to solve the mystery. Arthur C. Lunn, son of John C. Lunn, the well-known piano tuner, is the gentleman who tells the world that the supposed airship is nothing more than a star. Young Lunn is an astronomer at the Lawrence University, at Appleton, Wis. The following telegram gives his idea of the ship or star:

APPLETON, Wis., April 12.--Arthur C. Lunn of Lawrence University watched the supposed airship carefully last night, and, after calculation, has proven beyond a doubt that the supposed airship is the star.
1897 April 14 (Wed) D. Commonwealth (Fond du Lac, Wis.), p. 3.

The Nocturnal Mystery.

Persons who were out as late as seven thirty last night, could have seen in the western heavens, an object fashioned very much like the airship which has been seen in Milwaukee, Chicago, Omaha, Ripon, and other big towns. It was very bright, and when first discovered was moving with a majestic motion toward the north. In its aerial flight it rose higher and higher, and then would rock and reel like a ship in a storm. Finally, in the dim distance, when it seemed as if its purpose was to keep company with the evening star, there came a flash, and the thing was lost to human gaze. It was a counterpart of the "airship" which had thrown other cities into consternation. Some rogues on the west side had sent up a balloon.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Evening News (Kenosha, Wis.), p. 47

Now that the air ship idea has struck the town it must run its course. The last report is to the effect that it was seen to come to earth a short distance west of the city very early this morning. Now, will somebody kindly pick up a fragment of the wrecked flyer and we will be up with the rest of them?

Despite the fact that the air ship has gone to pieces, and that fragments of it have been picked up in various parts, which go to show that the much talked about peculiarity was only an advertisement used by the Ringling Bros., the same strange lights were sighted here again on Tuesday evening and in several other parts of Wisconsin and Illinois. It is reported that one party in town now asserts that the whole thing, framework and all, were seen by him Tuesday night--the cigar shaped body and the wings protruding from each side. The plot seems to thicken.

While walking up Prairie avenue at 10:30 Tuesday evening Henry McKenna was attacked by two strange looking animals about the size of dogs. He had just reached Thomas Bond's when he was startled by a rustling very near him. He had scarcely time to turn around when one of the animals darted out from the shadow and flew at him. As he had no arms of any kind and was unacquainted with the character of the animal that was after him, Mr. McKenna was for some time quite at a loss. He soon recovered himself, however, and after a little struggle succeeded in freeing himself from the mysterious assailant. It was not, however, until the animal had taken an ugly bite out of his leg just above the knee. Mr. McKenna went to the doctor's at once and had the wound dressed. It is still a perplexing question to him, what it could have been that attacked him.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Daily Register (Portage, Wis.), p. 6.

CITY AFFAIRS. ...

The "airship" which is giving the astronomers and many others so much trouble just now was seen over this city last night by a number of people whose reports tally almost exactly. At 8 o'clock last evening Portage people saw what appeared to them to be a large body in the sky with two lights attached, one above the other, and which were of different colors. The lower light seemed to be like the light from a fire while the upper light was a bright white light; the whole seemed to give out a glare much like a conflagration. One lady had a pair of opera glasses and is certain that there was a body-like a balloon--above the lights. The "ship" moved quite rapidly in a southerly direction and disappeared from the vision in about ten minutes. Sam Graham says the descriptions given are quite accurate and match the facts very well. He states that the hot air balloon he sent up at 8 o'clock last night contained a large Chinese lantern below and the alcohol flame above and that it looked very pretty in the air. He fails to understand, though, how the reports can differ so widely in the direction the balloon took, as he watched it all the time and it went in only one direction.

1897 April 14 (15)

LETTERS FROM AIRSHIP. / Fastened to Arrows, They Are Found by Farmers. / VESSEL ON ITS SEVENTH TRIP FROM LA FAYETTE, TENN. / Bound for the Prairies of South Dakota, the Writer of the Letter Says, and the Strange Craft Has Proved Its Ability to Travel in All Ordinary Weather. / Appleton, Wis., April 14.--The doubts about the identity of the airship which were dispelled by A. C. Lunn last Monday, were revived, to-day, upon the finding of letters, purporting to have been dropped from the craft, which appear to disprove the Alpha Orionis explanation.

The first letter was found by N. B. Clark, a well-known farmer, and local newspaper offices soon received a number of copies of the letter brought in by farmers from Clifton and Seymour. The letters were all attached to iron rods which were rusted by recent rains. The first letter was dated April 9, but a second, dated the 12th, was found this afternoon near a Seymour in the middle of a ploughed field, with no foot marks near the spot.

The suspicion that the letters were "planted" was not apparently well founded, for no hardware dealers in this vicinity have sold any such rods as the letters were wired to. The latest letter was fastened to an iron arrow with the initials R. B. S. stamped on the flat portion. It reads substantially as follows:

On board airship Pegasus, April 12.

This vessel is now making its seventh trip from La Fayette, Tenn., to the prairies of South Dakota. We have proved the undoubted ability of our machine to travel in all ordinary weather, but are still a little timid about encountering sudden strong winds. Only one attempt has been made to cross the Rockies, and that attempt resulted in a tie-up near the White river in Northwestern Colorado. Nevertheless, the finder may rest assured this invention will in a few weeks surmount present difficulties and will revolutionize all present methods of locomotion. The Pegasus is propelled by steam, is constructed on the parallel plane plan and will carry (1,000) pounds besides its own weight. The finder will please retain this letter until called for by a representative of R. B. S. and B. W. C. The man whom we shall send is a member of the Masonic fraternity. Give the communication to no one who does not fully satisfy you that he is our agent.

The first letters were found in an air line, but the second series is a south of this line.

Explosion of an Airship.

Pavilion, Mich., April 14.--This morning, it is claimed an airship, while passing over the town, exploded. Not only was the flash of an explosion seen, but the noise resulting was heard by a large number of reputable citizens.

The airship was traveling at a rapid rate, when there was a loud report, and the lights that had been visible at each end were extinguished. The machine disappeared, and, it is expected, was blown into atoms. Carpenters engaged in shingling a house beneath the point at which the ship was seen to explode assert that when they resumed work this morning, the roof was covered with innumerable particles that looked as though they had fallen from above during the night.

Will Not Allow Inspection.

Chicago, Ill., April 14.--Reports from Macoupin county, Ill., say an airship has been seen at several points in the county, alighted at two places and resumed its journey when delegations started in the direction of the point where it alighted in order to inspect it. The ship traveled at the rate of thirty miles an hour and it seemed to be under complete control of those in charge of it. Other points at which the airship has been seen are Emporia, Kan., Wabash and Muncie, Ind., and Perry, Okla.

Policeman Thomas Martin of the West Thirteenth street station is of the opinion he has solved the airship mystery. At 1 o'clock this morning he found a large tissue paper balloon on the prairie at Washburne avenue and M Robey street. It was made of red, white, and blue paper, and the lower portion had been burned.

Fond du Lac, Wis., April 14.--Persons who were out as late as 7:30 o'clock last night could have seen in the western heavens an object fashioned very much like an airship. Finally in the dim distance there came a flash and the thing was lost to human gaze. Some boys on the west side had sent up a toy balloon.

Portage, Wis., April 14.--The streets of this city were crowded with people last evening gazing at what they supposed to be the much talked of airship. A very bright light was seen traveling in a northwesterly direction. A few minutes before 8 o'clock the lights disappeared entirely. The light was doubtless the star Alpha Orionis. Earlier in the evening much excitement was occasioned by the appearance in the sky of a large paper balloon to which a light was attached. It proved to be the work of some practical joker.

1897 April 15 (Th) Racine (Wis) Daily Journal, p. 1.

AIR SHIP LANDS AT LAST / Mysterious Aerial Navigator Alights Near Springfield, Ill.--Talk With the Occupants. /

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., April 15.--Adolph Winkle and John Hulle, farm hands, made affidavit that the airship landed two miles north of here at noon today. They visited the ship, conversed with its inmates, two men and one woman, as they were repairing the electric apparatus and search light machinery. They said they came here from Quincy in thirty minutes, and will make a report to the government when Cuba is declared free. The ship and occupants left for the south at 1 o'clock this afternoon. The farmers' description is similar to the description heretofore given.

THEY SAW THE AIR SHIP. / Hundreds of West Siders Taken in by Pranks of College Boys.

Hundreds of west siders came to the front this morning with the startling information that they had seen the light of the much-talked of airship, hovering over that portion of the city last night. The first time the light was noticed was about 8 o'clock and it was moving toward the northwest. It did not take long for the news to spread and soon hundreds of eyes were cast skyward. About 10 o'clock light was seen again and it attracted as much attention as the light earlier in the evening.

Some of the most enthusiastic declared they could see the outline of the mysterious ship and some even went so far as to state that they could hear voices. The last light disappeared in the same direction as the first, and although many staid (sic) up over half the night watching for more lights, they did not appear.

It was learned this morning that toy balloons containing lighted candles were sent up from the southern part of the city, in the vicinity of Racine college, and floated over the west side. They were sent up by students of Racine college.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Racine, Wis., Daily Journal, p. 1.

THE GREAT AIR SHIP. / The Imagination of Some People Is Remarkable.

Airship stories are still in circulation. There are dozens of people in Racine who will make affidavit that they saw the airship, and one woman is confident she saw the head of a man looking over the side. This morning, however, a lady capped the climax by rushing into the Journal office. She carried a wooden arrow and excitedly exclaimed that she had found it on the street. On the end was attached a note which read "Airship S. & G, dropped from a distance of two miles in the air." She was positive it came from the famous airship. Investigation proved that the firm of Silber & Griswold had distributed one hundred wooden arrows about the city and this one happened to be one of the lot. It was a novel scheme, and only the enterprising firm of Silber & Griswold would think of it.

1897 April 22 (Th) Beloit (Wis) Weekly Free Press, p. J.

SAW THE "AIR SHIP."

Recorder: The much talked of "air ship" was seen last Sunday night about 8 o'clock by a number of persons at the county poor farm by (?) Superintendent Peter Allen and wife, Mr. and Mrs. A.P. Allen and a number of others. It was in the northwest apparently about a mile north of Crystal Springs Park and moved with great rapidity, finally sinking out of sight. They are satisfied that what they saw was not a star, whatever else it might have been, and there was no "air ship booze" out there either.

April 15, p. 3: Abbreviated Telegrams: The mysterious airship passed over Dubuque, Ia., after midnight yesterday and was seen at Grand Island ~~xxxxx~~ at 10 o'clock and Bellevue at 11.

May 20, p. 4: A FIRE BALL. / Rocket from the Sky Whizzes Over Beloit. / A Blazing Sphere Flies from the Zenith towards the Moon Leaving a Trail of Fire in Its Wake. / An Unusual Sight.

At ten minutes to 10 o'clock Monday night a number of people in this city beheld a ball of fire drop from the zenith and fly in a southeasterly direction towards the moon. It appeared to be pear shaped, the center was very bright like a () light and the outer sides were of a bluish tinted light. It (sped) noiselessly with great rapidity, being in sight four or five seconds and left a trail far in its wake, presenting a scend of splendor seldom witnessed.

The celestial marvel was probably a bolide and very different from a shooting star or meteor
July 29, p. 1: Supposed meteor struck the street during the night and made a large hole.

MICHIGAN

1897 April 6 (Tues) Detroit Evening News, p. 4.

Wolverine Tidbits.

Lec--Between 10 and 11 o'clock the other night, a bright light was seen emerging from the river. On first sight it was thought to be a lantern, but ~~xxxxx~~ further investigation proved it to be a ball of light about as large as a large hen's egg, floating through the air about ten feet from the ground, with whizzing sound and zigzag motion. It soon disappeared.

April 15, Niles--howls from lake--Indian legend of wind from a god blowing a village into the water.

May 3, p. 2--Phoast horse, Indiana wildman.

Apr. 26, 4--Daniel Gray near Flint sees arsp in daylight, rets newspaper from it.

27--Arsp for Cuba, w dynamite / 30 daylight meteors.

1897 April 9 (Fri) Detroit Free Press, p. J

State Items.

Rodney Heddon lives on a farm in Byron, the farm adjoining the Argentine and Byron line. About nine years ago his father was shot and killed, the murderer serving his term in prison at the present time. On night last winter while there was snow on the ground a light was seen moving down the lane towards one of the barns and Mr. Heddon was informed and made search, but no trace of the light or of footprints could be seen. Since then the light has been seen often at night by the family and neighbors and the alleged manifestations have stirred up much excitement as almost all those who have seen the light believe that it is caused by the old man's ghost.--Fenton Courier.
1897 April 11 (Sun) Saranav Courier-Herald, p. 4.

STRANGE AERIAL CRAFT.

For several weeks, the people in many sections of Iowa and Missouri have become excited by the appearance of an air ship which has conveniently exhibited itself under cover of moonlight and starlight. Reports from all along the line of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern railroad in Iowa, say that the mysterious aerial craft was seen by every operator and station agent on Thursday night. It was also discovered at Cedar Rapids about 9 o'clock the same evening. It was moving slowly, and by 10 o'clock had faded from view. It is described as having a bright, glaring headlight, revealing a glistening steel hull, dim windlike projections on each side, and producing a hissing sound as it glides through the air. Naturally it has caused intense excitement in that section of country. It is to be hoped that the navigator of this unknown craft will become more neighborly and afford people on terra firma an opportunity to satisfy their curiosity as to its construction and capability for successfully navigating the skies.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Benton Harbor Evening News (Mich), p. 1.

Air Ship Seen Here. / It was Moving in a Northwesterly Direction. The Kansas air-ship has visited Benton Harbor. The distinction of seeing the aerial wonder does not now alone belong to Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin and Kansas towns.

The ship made its flight across the heavens over this city last night seen exclusively by residents on Horton Hill. John Lee, residing on Territorial street, "among those who were so fortunate as to get a glimpse of the marvelous vessel.

It came in sight about 7:45 and traveled rapidly north-northwest. It was in view for fully 15 minutes. To Mr. Lee it had the appearance of a huge ball of fire when viewed with the naked eye but with opera glasses leveled upon it Mr. Lee claims its aspect greatly changed. It threw off a variety of colored lights of soft yellow lustre.

The outline of the ship could not be seen. All that was visible were the lights.

One of the Neimeyer boys claims to have seen the wonder Saturday night. It then appeared to have lost its equilibrium and was tumbling over and over.

Is Seen at Holland.

Holland, April 12.--An airship was seen at 8:35 o'clock last night floating over Black lake. It was a large dark mass lit up with colored electric lights, after remaining stationary for several minutes it darted northwest and was soon lost to sight. The machine moved in zigzag style and seemed under perfect control. Hundreds of people saw the machine here, it being first discovered by Dr. J. D. Wetmore and C. L. King, manager of the large King basket factory.

Detroit Free Press, Apr. 14 p. 3--It Bore Colored Lights. / Benton Harbor People Claim They Saw the Airship.

Benton Harbor, Mich., April 13 (Special.)--The airship has been plainly seen by several reliable citizens of this city and St. Joseph, who declare that there is no fake about it. It was seen about 8 o'clock last night, with blue, red and green lights, and was moving rapidly in a northwesterly direction. The outlines could not be discerned owing to the lights it bore and its great altitude over Lake Michigan.
1897 April 12 (Mon) Grand Haven, Mich., Daily Tribune, p. 1.

One of our citizens is said to have seen the air ship floating over this city early one morning last week.

13, 1. The airship which is startling the entire country was in Holland Sunday night. Dr. Wetmore was one of the observers of the strange sight. When last seen it was heading moving toward the north about 9 o'clock.

Fri. April 9, p. 1. Mysterious lights have been seen over different Western cities recently and are attributed to an airship, which it is believed some inventor is trying.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Niles, Mich., Daily Star, p. 2.

QUEER OBJECT. / Seen in the Skies Last Evening--Might Have Been Air-ship.

While W.H. Snyder of this city and Henry Wilbur of Chicago were driving home from South Bend last evening the latter espied an illuminated object moving in the skies. He called Mr. Snyder's attention to it and together they watched it glide across the sky quite rapidly.

While this might have been the much talked of airship it was not of the same shape. Mr. Snyder says the object was bright, at times red and at times white; three or four times larger than a star and seemed like a bunch of lights. It was first seen near Notre Dame but it soon disappeared and was not seen until near Niles, but in an entirely different part of the firmament.

While Mr. Snyder does not believe it to be an air ship, some people think it was. However, the object may be the same one that has been seen in Chicago and elsewhere.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Battle Creek Daily Moon, p. 4.

THE AIR SHIP. / It Was Seen to Pass Over Battle Creek Last Night. /

The air ship which is supposed to be in Michigan, was seen by some 20 reputable citizens at 8:55 o'clock last night, apparently from one to two miles west of the city and traveling in a southeasterly direction. When first observed, it was almost a mile high. Suddenly an explosion took place which sounded at the distance like the report of a gun. Sparks flew forth and the ship began to slowly settle to within about half a mile from the earth. It remained down but a few moments, when a buzzing sound was heard. Again the sparks flew out as if from an emery wheel and the machine began to rise slowly in a perpendicular position again. Suddenly the lights went out, after which it was impossible to see anything of the ship. It was observed by persons from several points of the city widely separated. Among those who witnessed the strange sight were L.E. Clawson, W.A. Cady, Dr. McGuffin, Dr. McNeil, J.H. Dorsey, ex-Ald. Thomas Barry. The machine is described as about 25 or 30 feet long. It was only visible about five minutes. The sky was perfectly clear. /

Niles, April 12.--
Holland, April 12.--

HIGH IN THE AIR / AIRSHIP TAKING A SPIN OVER MICHIGAN. / IF THE TESTIMONY OF SOBER MEN IS ACCEPTED, / DID IT GO TO SMASH IN KALAMAZOO COUNTY? /

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., April 13.--Twenty reputable citizens claim to have seen the mysterious airship last night, hovering above the sanitarium. Some claim it was a hot air balloon, but others insist it was an airship, because they heard voices.

L. E. Clawson, a prominent attorney, and Mr. Dixon, a leading clothier, claim the ship was all one blaze of lights, as if covered with electric lights. Says Mr. Dixon:

"The upper part was in the form of a cone, from which was suspended a large object, cylindrical in form. At the rear end of the lower object was some kind of a wheel, which made a buzzing noise that was distinctly heard."

When first observed it was almost a mile high. Suddenly there was an explosion, sparks flew forth and the ship began to ~~move~~ slowly settle to within about half a mile from the earth. Again the sparks flew out as if from an emery wheel, and the machine began to rise slowly in a perpendicular position again. Suddenly the lights went ~~out~~ out, after which it was impossible to see anything of the ship.

Chas. F. [Bock], the defeated candidate for mayor on the republican ticket, is reported as saying that it was the republican balloon that went up when Mr. Metcalf was inaugurated last night.

Ex-Sheriff Powell, who wanted to be justice of the peace, says: "Nonsense, these silver people were looking through beer bottles last night."

Yet many respectable citizens are ready to insist that they were sober and that the airship did pass over the city last night.

NILES, Mich., April 13.--The airship is reported to have been seen here also, moving northwest.

KALAMAZOO, Mich., April 13.--About a dozen people saw what they believe was the airship last night. It came from a southeasterly direction and was going about [40] miles an hour in a northwesterly direction. It seemed then to be about half a mile high. It looked like an immense ball of fire. Although the night was clear, the ship's outlines were not visible. Editor A. J. Shakespeare, of the Gazette, is among those who saw it.

SEEN AT LANSING.

Various Descriptions of the Airship From the Capitol.

LANSING, Mich., April 13.--The mysterious airship which has created so much excitement throughout Iowa, Illinois and section of Michigan, was plainly visible here last night. Senator William C. Thompson, who was in the back yard of the Orphans' home assisting the family cat to tree a ground mole, saw the airship plainly. While he could give no detailed description of the ship, he asserts that it was headed toward Caro, and was officered by a tall, fleshy individual who bore a remarkable resemblance to Svbrant [?] Wesselius.

Gov. Pingree was leaving the capitol and his attention was called to the midnight visitor. The governor says the ship had eight arms, like a squid or octopus, and that the initials H. C. R. R. were plainly visible under the bow anchor. The governor is of the opinion that some of the railroad bills now pending contemplate the granting of exclusive aerial privileges in the state to the Michigan Central, and that the ship contained Henry Russel, the company's Detroit attorney, who was making a secret call on Sky Olds.

On the other hand, Mr. Olds, who saw the ship, denies the statement that the Michigan Central owns it, or that the company is seeking aerial franchises. "So far as that is concerned no special legislation is required," said Mr. Olds. "The right to the exclusive control of the air in this state was given to the Michigan Central in its special charter." Mr. Olds believes the airship is operated by John W. Blodgett, of Grand Rapids, in the interests of Julius Caesar Burrows, of Kalamazoo, who is seeking a second term, and is convinced that the ship is now on its way to certain legislative districts in the upper peninsula.

The Hon. William A. French described the midnight visitor as a queerly constructed piece of apparatus in the form of a shrimp. He refuses to say anything more about it, but O. C. Tompkins declares that Mr. French might tell more about the ship. He thinks French owns it, that Al Albert [Pack] had it constructed for Mr. French to use in getting from Presque Isle, from where he holds office to Dundee, Monroe county, where he lives.

Perhaps the most plausible explanation comes from Rep. W. R. Bates, who was at one time Senator McMillan's political secretary. Mr. Bates, who is a deep student of theosophy, declares that the so-called airship is the astral body of the governor's Detroit machine, and that in accordance with the common practice of all astral bodies it is loafing in the vicinity of the Presence, awaiting an opportunity to reincarnate itself. Mr. Bates' explanation has created great excitement in the senate late this afternoon and William C. Thompson has called a caucus in Pioneer hall tonight. Moore, Blakeslee, Robinson and other Pingree members will be excluded.

WENT TO SMASH.

Airship Said to Be Scattered Over Kalamazoo County.

CALLSBURG, Mich., April 13.--If reports from Pavillion township are true, then the much-talked-of airship was not only a reality but is now a thing of the past.

George W. Somers and William Chadburn, old soldiers, claim to have seen the ship on Sunday evening when they remained up until a late hour, in attendance upon a sickhorse. The descriptions given by the parties are somewhat at variance but agree in the assertion that the apparition was illuminated at both ends and plowed through space with wonderful rapidity. They had scarcely time for the above observations when a dull explosion was heard and the object disappeared. They declare the report to have been like that of heavy ordnance and to have been immediately succeeded by a distant sound of projectiles flying through the air.

Wondering greatly, they proceeded to the house where they passed an excited and sleepless night. While these two men are the only ones who claim to have witnessed the phenomenon there are many corroboratory circumstances, as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace say they heard the explosion distinctly, but thought it was thunder. But the discoveries of the morning were sufficient to establish the veracity of the two actual observers. In one place, two miles from Scotts, there was found part of some electric appliance. At another point a propeller blade of some very light material was discovered, in a partially fused condition.

Three men engaged in shingling a barn in Corstock township affirm that, upon resuming work on the morning following the occurrence, they found their completed work strewn with minute fragments which had in some instances penetrated the shingles and entered the boards beneath.

Whatever may be the theories, there is scarcely a doubt that the aerial stranger is gone forever and that its origin and the experience of its crew are to remain forever a mystery.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Evening Press (Grand Rapids, Mich.), p. 1.

THE AIR SHIP. / A Dream of the Future Modernized. / Chicago Not the Only Windy City Where Air Ships Sail and Up-to-Date Firms Do Business.

Last night about four hundred people saw what is thought to be the mysterious air ship that is prowling about the higher altitudes in the vicinity of Michigan. It is supposed to be the same flying machine that was seen at Chicago last Sunday and at Holland, Mich., yesterday. It looked like a speck of black in the sky, with a sort of search light upon the front and green and white lights in the middle and at the end. It traveled with enormous speed and its course seemed to be toward the moon, wherever that was. Suspended from the side was a large banner upon which was a large advertisement calling attention to the fact that the Bodenstein Clothing Company had a great trouser sale on 200 pair of fine hairline worsted pants made to sell for $5.00, only $3.50. The firm was interviewed this morning and it was learned that they had supplied the air ship crew with bicycle caps, sweaters and belts in consideration of the advertisement in question.

1897 April 13 (Tues eve) Grand Rapids Evening Press, p. 3.

SHOWER OF SPARKS / Marks the Air Ship's Path in Michigan. / AGAIN LAST NIGHT / The Heavenly X Invader Was Plainly Observed. / It Dodged and Sizzled Over Battle Creek and Finally Faded into Space. /

Battle Creek, Mich., April 13.--An air ship was seen to pass west of the city last evening about 8:45 o'clock. The object seemed to be about a half mile high when first seen. There appeared to be something that burst, and thousands of sparks flew from it and dropped toward the ground as from a sky-rocket. Then it began to settle toward the ground.

When within about a quarter of a mile from the ground it seemed to stop and made a sizzling sound that could be distinctly heard. Then it began to rise rapidly and almost perpendicularly, when the lights went out. It had two lights, one red in front and a light blue one behind. The distance between the lights appeared to be about thirty feet.

When seen by twenty-five or more people in various parts of the city it ~~was~~ was moving in a southerly or southwesterly direction.

Among those who witnessed the strange craft were L. E. Clawson, a prominent attorney; W. A. Cady, jeweler; Dr. McCuffin, Dr. McNeil, J. H. Dorsey, manager of the Western Union Telegraph Co.'s office; ex-Alderman Thomas Barry and M. J. Loomis, photographer.

Niles, Mich., April 13.--The mysterious object which has been invading ~~the~~ the heavens for the past several weeks, was visible from this city last night, and those who saw it are positive that the object they gazed at was not a star.

No outlines could be distinguished, but in the lead was a bright electric light. Following it were two lights, one red and the other green. Reports from nearby points state that the same object was viewed.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Kalamazoo Gazette, p. 1.

SAW THE AIR SHIP. / Several Reputable Persons Say They Saw the Aerial Marvel.

Word was received over the telephone at the Gazette office last evening at 8:10 that a strange object was seen floating over the western part of the city. It came from the southeast and was moving in a northwesterly ~~direction~~ course. It looked to be about half a mile up in the air and was traveling at about the rate of 40 miles an hour. The Gazette made a further investigation; went on the street, said nothing of what had come over the phone and eagerly listened for the report of others who might have seen the same thing. About the first words ~~was~~ heard ~~was~~ a man talking about the ~~big~~ flock of geese that had just passed over the city. Although the people who claimed to have seen the now famous wanderer of ethereal spaces have always been considered of sound mind and good judgement, we fear they were in some mysterious manner Trilbyized by a strong hypnotic power, and believed they saw a real live air ship instead of a flock of innocent geese seeking other climes.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Saginaw Evening News, p. 2.

THE AIRSHIP WITH US / It Was Seen by Responsible Citizens in a Number of Cities. / SETTLED WITHIN HALF A MILE / Of Earth at Battle Creek--Red and Green Lights Were Seen and the Buzz of Machinery Was Heard. /

Battle Creek--The airship, which is supposed to be in Michigan, was seen by some 20 reputable citizens in widely separated points of the city, at 8:55 o'clock last night, apparently from one to two miles west of the city and traveling in a southeasterly course, almost a mile high. Suddenly an explosion took place which sounded like the report of a gun. Sparks flew and the ship began to slowly settle to within half a mile from the earth. It remained down but a few moments when a buzzing sound was heard. Again the sparks flew out, as if from an emery wheel, and the machine began to rise slowly in a perpendicular position again. Suddenly the light went out, after which it was impossible to see anything of the ship. The machine is described as about 25 or 30 feet long. It was only visible about five minutes. The sky was perfectly clear. /

Miles--The mysterious object which has been inhabiting the heavens for the last two weeks, and which is believed to be an airship, was visible from this city Sunday night, and those who saw it are positive that the object they gazed at was not a star. It was rapidly moving northwest. No outlines could be distinguished, but in the lead was a bright electric light. Following it were two lights, one red and the other green. The mysterious aerial visitor was watched until it disappeared from view. Reports from near-by points state that the same object was seen. /

Holland--A large black mass hovered over Black Lake for a few moments Sunday night, and then started off toward the northwest. Bright colored lights streamed out from in front and behind the object. People here think it was an airship.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Detroit Free Press, p. 4 (eds)

MYSTERY IN THE AIR.

Scudd's Slide, April 13.--A peculiar-looking object was discovered high in the heavens directly over the pressed-brick school house this morning. It was shaped like a tortoise and ever and anon would run out a hideous head and emit a terrific shriek, such as is often heard in dentist's chair. It seemed to have wings, oars, sails, and other things suggestive of a ship. But the most startling thing about the object was the dozens of fierce red eyes all over its body. The uncanny navigator of the air was seen by a party of young men on their way home from an evening at the Scudd's Slide tavern.

Murky Marsh, April 13.--Upon going home from the postoffice, where they had been reading about the airship seen in Iowa, Nebraska and Wisconsin, two highly reputable farmers made out a most unusual sight about 2,190 feet in the air. The queer object, which was circular in shape, and with teeth on the edge like a huge saw, revolved rapidly and buzzed furiously as it moved in a northeasterly direction. Ropes and life-preservers were attached to the body of the object, giving a rather shippy appearance to the same. Several people say they heard a most unusual sound about that time.

Sarah Center, April 13.--Surprising Story, a retired sailor, was called into his poultry yard by the loud screeching of the feathery bipeds, indicating the proximity of hawks. The ex-tar found the yard overshadowed by what he thought was a cloud, but upon lifting up his eyes he saw a huge and ugly shape passing over the place about seventy-seven rods in the air, and making for the Ohio line. The form seemed to be that of a great centipede, and many of the feet were plainly discernible as they paddled the atmosphere. A row of electric lights was arranged along the back of the curious contrivance, and a hidden orchestra played exquisite music. The mysterious craft carried a compass such as used on all ships. Great excitement has been caused by Mr. Surprising Story's discovery, and his record of sea-serpent discoveries makes him an authority upon all occurrences out of the ordinary.

Sandbank Section, April 13.--The airship, or what was supposed to be it, was seen by over 100 voters of this town who gathered at a hard cider social to-night to celebrate the election of the new supervisor. To the majority of the party it looked like a great barrel with wheels attached, and with three sheets fluttering in the wind at the faucet end of the immense cask. The barrel seemed to leak badly, as airships often do, but it kept on going. No little hilarity was occasioned by the joke of the retiring supervisor, who remarked that the mysterious object seemed to be a whopper, but he didn't think it could carry more than the newly elected supervisor did on election day. While the party were shouting over this sally, the airship disappeared.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Kalamazoo Gazette, p. 1.

NOT AN AIR SHIP. / Just a Reflection in the Sky of the Light from a Burning Barn.

About 9 o'clock last night a very bright light was noticed in the south. In these times of mysterious aerial wanderers some were quick to declare that it was the light from an airship, but the Gazette upon investigation, found that Thomas Moore's barn on South Burdick street was burning down. The fire department at the paper mill responded to a call and did all in their power to extinguish the flames, and finally succeeded in saving the residence, but the barn was a total loss, including hay and grain, the live stock, buggies and harnesses being saved. The barn was a new one and the loss severe.

Tues Apr. 23 p. 4: Toward the latter days, according to the Bible, signs shall appear in the heavens. The air ship, which is seen all over the country, is the new star, the Star of Bethlehem. Awake you sinners, repent, put on your white robes, for the day of judgment draws near.

May 2 "Above Clouds" story.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Kalamazoo Gazette, p. 2.

(card 1)

CLAIMS IT IS A STAR. / Astronomer Says He Has Solved Airship Mystery. THE BOBBING MOTION EXPLAINED. / Position of the Light in the Heavens and the Hour of Setting Coincide with Those of the Star Betelgeuse--Engineer Says He Saw the Airship in Daylight Traveling at the Rate of 150 Miles an Hour--Seen by Others.

Appleton, Wis., April 13.--Arthur C. Lunn... south of this latitude. See Milwaukee Sentinel 4/13, p.

AIRSHIP SEEN IN DAY TIME.

An Engineer Estimates That It Travels 150 Miles an Hour. Burlington, Ia., April 13.--Engineer F.L. Bullard, on engine No. 950 of the fast rail, says he saw the airship. He states that when he left Chicago Monday morning he saw a huge machine in the sky moving along in the same direction as his train. He watched it for a few minutes and then was compelled to give his undivided attention to his engine for five or ten minutes. When he again looked out the ship was some distance ahead. He said that the train was going at the rate of seventy miles an hour at the time and that when he reached Lisle, Ill. the ship was lost sight of, being many miles ahead. Mr. Bullard thought that this aerial schooner must have been traveling at the rate of 150 miles per hour.

Seen at New Carlisle, Ind.

New Carlisle, Ind., April 13.--Fully 100 residents of this place saw what they call an airship going in a northwesterly direction at 8:30 o'clock Monday night. The vessel was probably 500 feet above the earth and was moving rapidly. At one time the craft rose slowly and afterward seemed to drop a long distance. In addition to the headlight smaller lights of blue, green and red were seen at the ship's stern. The ship was in sight at least ten minutes. So many people saw it that there is no disputing the fact.

Moline People See It Twice.

Moline, Ills., April 13.--The so-called airship has been twice seen within two days by reputable citizens of Moline and vicinity. Saturday night the thing hovered over this city and finally disappeared to the northward. Monday morning about 8:30 the craft itself was seen by farmers living on the Rock river bottom, three miles south of here. They describe it as having a cigar-shaped body with broad wing-like attachments.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Kalamazoo Gazette, p. 4.

AIR SHIP OR NO.

The strange body that passed over the city Monday evening and that was taken by many for an air ship was seen by the proprietor of the Gazette, as well as many other citizens. It came from the southeast and passed to the northwest, nearly over the centre of the city at a rate of speed that must have been from forty to sixty miles an hour. When about two miles northwest of the city the object seemed to change its course from northwest to due north. All that could be distinguished was a reddish-green light a great brilliancy that threw out rays on all sides and was six times as large as any star in the heavens. Air ship, or whatever it may be, there is some strange body skylarking about the heavens and has been seen by thousands and thousands of people in different portions of the country. What it is, astronomers ought to be getting on to it by this time. The object was first heard of several weeks ago in western Nebraska, then at different points in Kansas, then in Iowa and Illinois and now in Michigan. Sunday evening an object of the same description passed over South Bend and Miles.

The object when it passed over Kalamazoo appeared to be about half a mile high. It is more likely that it was fifty and perhaps three times times that many miles from the earth and is some wandering body not on the charts. One thing is certain, it goes through space like a rocket.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Miles, Mich., Daily Star, p.2.

It Bore Colored Lights. / Benton Harbor People Claim They Saw the Airship.

The airship has been plainly seen by several reliable citizens of Benton Harbor and St. Ann Joseph, who declare there is no fake about it. It was seen about 8 o'clock Monday night, with blue, red and green lights, and was moving rapidly in a northwesterly direction. The outlines could not be discerned, owing to the lights it bore and its great altitude over Lake Michigan.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Saginaw Courier-Herald, p. 3.

(card 1)

MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP. / 20 Reputable Battle Creek Citizens Claim to Have Seen It. / SEEN AT MILLS AND KALAMAZOO. / And in Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa--The Strange (Crate) Finally Distanced an Engine Doing 70 Miles an Hour. / See 4/3 Eve. News (Detroit), p. 1A2

Battle Creek, Mich., April 13.--Twenty reputable citizens claim... Editor A.J. Shakespeare, of the Gazette, is among those who saw it.

Alma, Mich., April 13.--J.N. Ford, proprietor of the Wrist house, and Claude Chatwick, a leading silver politician of this village, became very much excited over a supposed airship seen in the western sky Saturday evening. They hitched up a livery rig and drove to the college hill, when they were dismayed to find it was only a brilliant sunset. /

Engineer Bullard...

Waukegan, Ill., April 13.--An airship, or what is believed to be such, was seen here at midnight by several persons who had their attention attracted by the strange moving light in the sky. Edward Wheeler watched it for about an hour, and describes it as a brilliant red light very high, and pursuing a varying course toward the north. /

Moline, Ill., April 13.--The airship was seen passing south over Rock river a few miles south of this city at about 8:30 o'clock yesterday morning by a number of farmers, Benjamin Carr, a prominent citizen, says he saw it distinctly. He describes it as having a cigar-shaped body or hull apparently about 15 feet long, with large wing-like projections on each side. It was at a great height and was moving rapidly. The mysterious lights were seen distinctly by a number of citizens about midnight Saturday, hovering over the three cities and then passing to the northward. /

Rock Island, Ill., April 13.--Hundreds of people stood on the streets for half an hour last night and gazed at an object in the northwest which appeared to be moving and which they believed was the airship. /

Eau Claire, Wis., April 13.--One hundred and fifty persons were assembled at the Omaha depot about midnight by a report received there from Merrillan that the airship was coming. The telegraph operator and others saw it through field glasses, and vividly described it to the crowd, several of whom saw it also. /

Green Bay, Wis., April 13.--The wonderful airship seen above this city Saturday night proves to have been simply a huge practical joke worked on the unsuspecting public. It consisted of a large hot-air balloon with a red across the bottom, to which were attached two Japanese lanterns. It was sent up about 9:30 o'clock by several well-known residents, and to those who were not "on the inside" it looked like a veritable airship. Many exclaimed they could see the body of the thing with rudder and wings. It caused intense excitement. A suburban resident now has the remnants which landed in his yard about 10:30 o'clock. /

1897 April 15 (Th) Niles, Mich., Daily Star, p. 2.

Saw the Air Ship. / That Wonderful Phenomenon Again in Evidence. / A Twinkling Light Resembling a Star Seen in the Heavens. /

About 9 o'clock last evening, Nightwatchman ~~xxxx~~ Carrett and various other reputable citizens witnessed what most of them thought to be the much-talked of airship. It is described as a light, the size of an ordinary ~~xxx~~ star, moving westward quite rapidly, taking an occasional downward shoot; the light at times being red, then green and again white. It was not quite as bright as some of the stars, excepting when it twinkled and flashed. Whatever it was, there is something peculiar about it. /

The airship craze is said to be an advertisement for Sells Bros. circus. /

16,2: Another Solution
There have been many different solutions in regard to that "airship" as most people choose to call it, but the one brought from South Bend yesterday by a traveling man seemed a little more plausible than others. He stated that he saw it in the hands of police. It was a simple toy balloon with attachments to throw three different colored lights, thus answering the descriptions given by those who happened to see the wonder. It was seen falling and hunted up, the finder turning it over to the authorities. If this story is true, some one has been having a great deal of ~~xxx~~ sport at the expense of others' time. /

A Different Airship--red, white and orange lights, zigzagging across the sky at night, beheld [?] by gentlemen who see through a glass darkly.--Chicago Dispatch. /

The airship stirred up very disagreeable weather. 14,2 Observations have become so common that now gentlemen at the theater go out between the acts to look at the airship. /

May 14 p.3. St. Elmo's Fire in S.D. snowstorm. 1897 April 15 (Th) Evening News (Detroit), p. 4.

Airship Again. / Broken Wheel Dug Up Near Battle Creek. BATTLE CREEK, Mich., April 15.--A well-to-do farmer who resides five miles northeast of this city claims to have found the wheel of the alleged airship that passed over lower Michigan last Tuesday evening. /

George Parks, of Pennfield, and his wife were crossing a field, when their attention was drawn to a very bright object that appeared to be about 100 feet above the earth and swiftly approaching. Mr. Parks thought from the light and humming sound it made that it was a meteor. As it passed over them, a little to their left, a part of it fell to the earth, and buried itself in the ground. /

Mrs. Parks, who was somewhat frightened, would not let her husband go near the place where it fell. The next morning Mr. Parks and his brother, Benjamin, dug it up and found it to be a large wheel made of aluminum, about three feet in diameter, and a turbine in shape. /

Mr. Parks says it is the first time he has ever heard of a meteor having wheels. He will keep the wheel as a memento, and it may be seen at any time at his farm in Pennfield. /

That Saucy "Airship."
CONSTANTINE, Mich., April 15.--A brilliant light was sighted northeast of here last night by many prominent citizens, moving in an easterly direction with a zigzag course. It was about one-fourth as large as the full moon. It kept in sight nearly an hour, then disappeared below the horizon. /

All Sorts
Mendon--Three Mendonites, George E. Sanford, ~~xxxx~~ Mrs. Sanford and Mrs. Carper, declare that they saw the wonderful ship Sunday night about 10 o'clock, going at a terrific rate. /

p.2 & The real secret of the airship business doubtless is that the foreigners has finally discovered a scheme to evade the tax. April 14 p. 2: Men may go to the newspapers with airship stories, but they wouldn't dare give any such yarns to their wives. 1897 April 15 (Th) Kalamazoo Gazette, p. 1. /

AIR NAVIGATION / Strange Moving Lights in the Heavens. / A TOY BALLOON Said to Have Been One of the Objects Which Created Much Comment-- Reputed Air Ship Seen at Kendallville, Ind. and Sturgis. /

These must be interesting times for astronomers, as not a night passes that some new moving object does not make its appearance in the heavens. Even right here in Kalamazoo last night there were two airships, comets, balloons, or some other light carrying object, bobbing around in the heavens. The Gazette telescope man is away on a vacation or this story would state which one of the aereal floaters was the toy balloon sent up by the Evening News editors as their newly discovered airship. Between 8 and 9 o'clock it is reported that this mysterious ship was sent floating heavenward from the bluff on the west side of the city. It went north and a little west and nearly disappeared from sight and then seemed to return and appeared much larger. As it turned around it displayed different colors. Hundreds of people saw it and wondered what it was. Those who knew that it was a toy balloon were silent listeners to the remarks of the sky gazers. It was expected. 1897 April 16 (Fri) Battle Creek Daily Moon, p. 5. /

Dropped from the Clouds. / A Message from the Air Ship Picked Up on Maple Street. /

This morning as Frank VanDusen of Union street, a Moon carrier boy, was on his way to the 5 o'clock newspaper train to deliver his morning Free Presses, he discovered something sticking up in the street in front of the Merritt residence on Maple street. Upon investigation he discovered that it was some kind of a peculiar instrument to which was attached a note written upon a half sheet of note paper. It read thus: /

On the Air Ship, April 13, 1897.
We have dropped many messages but have made but two landings since we left San Francisco owing to the danger. Have now lost our anchor wire and will not attempt another landing until we land at Washington. Expect to do great damage to ship in landing. Should this be found please request San Francisco papers to copy. /

Robert has been sick; is all right now. All the rest well. Have some good views of many cities. / Hastily, / Dan. A/Air Ship, R.F.N. /

Should this note be found please hand to any daily paper. The above note and implement can be seen at the Moon office, that the same object which was seen Monday evening at about 8 o'clock would appear again last night. It probably did, but not until about 11 o'clock when it was noticed in the southwest and seemed to be moving in a wavering route nearly westward. The Gazette man saw it and watched it for half an hour. A number of Odd Fellows who were at Burr Oak hall also saw it and watched it disappear in the west at 11:00 o'clock. It bobbed about but kept in the same general course. This may have been a toy balloon but dispatches from Kendallville, Ind., and Sturgis, Mich., state that the same object was seen there between 9 and 10 o'clock moving in a northwesterly direction. Its color ~~xxxx~~ varied and would entirely disappear for a brief period of time and then appear brighter than ever in a slightly different place. 1897 April 16 (Fri) Evening News (Detroit), p. 4. /

LETTER FROM AIRSHIP / RECEIVED BY A PAPER IN BATTLE CREEK. / Ship on Its Way Back to San Francisco--Latest Airship Notes. /

Battle Creek, April 16.--The Daily Moon has received a letter from the airship, which passed over this city again last night. When the employes came to the office early this morning, they found a large sailor's needle in front of the office, to which was attached the ~~xxxx~~ letter. /

The writer said the ship had started from San Francisco, had made the great lakes in one day and was now on the ~~xxx~~ return trip. HUDSON, Mich., April 16.--The supposed airship was seen last night about 11 o'clock, by a large number of people. It appeared in the western heavens, slowly wending its way to the north and east, apparently about 500 feet high. Prof. Tripp, a local astronomer, scouted the idea that it was a star. The object was in plain view for an hour and gradually faded away. /

PONTIAC, Mich., April 16.--Hundreds of citizens declare an air ship passed over Pontiac last night. They saw lights at an elevation of 200 or 300 feet above Saginaw street, but were disgusted when they learned that enterprising students had hauled lanterns up on the flagstaff of the Grove school. /

CHARLOTTE, Mich., April 16.--The mysterious air ship was seen by many people last night. Charlotte is a dry town. 1897 April 16 (Fri) Evening News (Detroit), p. 4. /

Odds and Ends.
Shelby.--Airship seen. Looked like big balloon with two lights. Temperance town, too.
Grand Rapids.--Naughty boys fooled a copper into believing he saw the airship. Toy balloons.
Lansing.--About 200 Lansing people, most of them sober, claim they saw the airship last night. It's believed they saw a paper balloon. /

p. 2 (eds), Michigan Stories. / The Secret Is Out--
Battle Creek.--The secret is out. The airship, it is said, is the work of an ingenious Battle Creek mechanic, and after sailing around several nights, is now securely hidden from public view. It is built like a huge bicycle, with five wheels instead of two and four immense wings, which are worked like the wings of a bird and regulated by weights. Two green and two blue lights are suspended. /

Barnum's What Is It? / Many More Michigan Citizens Report Having Seen It. / Caused Excitement at Hart, Olivest and Middleville.

Hart, Mich., April 15.—(Special.)—At about 9 o'clock last night a large dark object was seen floating over Shelby which was supposed to have been the much talked of airship. As described it was about like a large balloon with two lights, one white and one green. It was witnessed by a large crowd.

Olivet, Mich., April 15.—The airship was observed in this place last night about 11 o'clock by a large number of responsible persons, including a number of students. It appeared from the northeast and was headed in the direction of Albion. Only three red lights could be distinguished and it was at too great a height to make out its outline. It was moving very rapidly and disappeared in a short time. No explanation could be given at the college this morning.

Middleville, Mich., April 15.—A sensation was caused in our village last evening by what those who saw it called an airship. When first discovered, about 9 p.m., it was southwest of town but it was moving northward and downward. But for its moving and changing lights, red, blue, green, it might have been taken for a star. At about 10:30 p.m. another one rose east of the village and floated up and southwest. A car attachment had colored lights and scattered sparks and what was supposed to be sparks.

14, p. 4—Do we understand that the airship takes the place of the ruined peach crop as a spring sensation?
15, 4—We can hardly blame those airships for not staying with us. With 12 Michigan congressmen at Washington, it would seem as if a bill to subsidize them should have been introduced before this.
17, 4—After being up so much nightly, the airship could hardly be expected to put in an appearance in the daytime.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Grand Haven, Mich., Daily Tribune, p. 1.

The other evening the wonderful airship, which is creating so much excitement in this section of the country, was seen about 9:30 o'clock from the residence of D.A. Lane. The red and green lights were very distinct. No telescope was needed to see them. This is no hoax and anyone doubting this statement can find out the particulars of the matter by inquiring of D.A. Lane, A.L. Thomas or Rev. Richardson, three prominent spectators of the wonderful airship.

17, 1. In regard to the airship notice that appeared in last night's Tribune it is reported that John A. Crawford and Silas Wright not only saw this aerial monster, but were the first to observe what appeared to be their port light, and in justice to these gentlemen we make this explanation.

1897 April 18 (Fri) Kalamazoo Gazette, p. 6.

DEATH'S RED LIGHT. / It Waved at an Engineer, Betokening His Mother's Demise.

"The most peculiar case I ever heard of," said a telegraph operator, "occurred in our family. My father was an engineer on the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, running into Richmond. One night while quite a distance from the latter city and nearing his run he saw a bright red light on the track several hundred yards ahead. The signal was also seen by his fireman and the front brakeman. The train was at once stopped, but not a trace of the signalman or light could be found, and the track was all right. Father looked at his watch and noted that the time was 8 o'clock. The train pulled out, proceeding cautiously for some distance without meeting any obstruction. Several miles farther the light was again seen. Once more stopping, another search was made, with no more success than before. This happened at 8:28. Father was never superstitious, but this was inexplicable. Much mystified, he proceeded on the way, only to be stopped a third time by the red light at 8:51 o'clock. Another search by the crew failed to disclose the slightest trace of the mysterious signalman. Finally, giving up the search, the men returned to their posts, and the train at last pulled up into Richmond without further mishap.

"When father alighted from the cab, a telegram was handed him announcing the death of his mother. Without delay he went to her home, which was several miles out of the city, on the railroad. Soon after his arrival he learned that a telegram had been sent to him while he was out on duty, summoning him to grandmother's bedside. The time at which father had seen the mysterious red lights was indelibly impressed on his memory, and he learned upon inquiry that at precisely the minute at which the first red light was seen she had asked if he had come. She then repeated the question at the time he saw the second light, and the appearance of the third light was simultaneous with her death.—Richmond Times.

1897 April 16 (Fri) State Republican (Lansing), p. 4.

THE AERIAL CRAFT

Now it is said that the air ship, whose search-light has startled the susceptible inhabitants of the West as well as of the Wolverine state, is nothing but the planet Venus, with her broadest smile on her face. To think that at her age Venus should be mistaken for such a High Roller as the papers describe! Populism apparently unfits its devotees for acquaintance with the heavenly bodies. But there is certainly something very mysterious about the celestial visitors, which thousands of persons declare they have seen sailing through the skies. They have sailed over Omaha, Chicago, and points in this state. The facts that the reports are credited by so many persons, and that even those who assert their unbelief are at least interested in the matter, goes to show that the public is looking forward to the time when the navigation of the air will become an established fact. Darius Green failed, but it does not follow that man will never be able to fly, or at least to make progress through the air in whatever direction he wills, and regardless of the direction of the air currents. The science of aeronautics has been neglected except by a few, and the capital which has been furnished so lavishly for the development of means of travel by land, has been denied to the aerial inventors and investigators, who are regarded as wild visionaries.

So far as the air ship story is concerned, there are some things about it which are plausible, and others which make it incredible. All of the numerous "eye-witnesses" agree that the air ship is a balloon of some sort, with a basket attached to it. This is plausible. If it were said to be a flying machine with aeroplanes, wings and similar attachments, the report could be set down as a canard. Much has already been accomplished in moving balloons through the air, even against the wind. In 1895 John La Mountain, of Laingsburg, N.Y., made experiments with a propeller, which by means of fans acting upon the air, was made to propel a boat across the Hudson river. Afterward Tissandier, a French balloonist, used a similar device with considerable success. There would be no occasion for great surprise if a practical navigating balloon had been devised.

But there are quite a number of reasons for believing that this air ship story is not true. This air ship has too wide a habit. It has been seen the same night at points far apart. There might be of course two airships, ~~any~~ but if the existence of even one is doubtful, the idea that there are two in the field is absurd. One of the proofs furnished of the existence of an air ship is supplied by a Chicagoan, who exhibits two photographs of the mysterious visitor. They are said to be "snap shots" taken shortly after 5 o'clock in the morning, but the story of this photographic feat seems almost as much of a fairy tale as that of the air ship itself. The world has waited a long time for the coming of a practical air ship, and it can afford to wait much longer! There is no need of becoming excited over these western visitations. Sooner or later we will know all about it, and we should possess our souls in patience until data of a reliable character shall be forthcoming. In the meantime it is unreasonable to declare that practical aerial navigation is impossible. Because the newspapers have had so much to say about the air ships, it does not follow that they are trying to perpetrate upon the public a "balloon hoax," such as Edgar Allan Poe described, or that they themselves are innocent victims of cruel practical jokers. They have simply told the tales as related to them.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Saginaw Courier-Herald, p. 1.

THAT AIRSHIP / A Well-to-do Battle Creek Farmer Claims to Have Found a Wheel From / THE MYSTERIOUS CRAFT. / ...

Battle Creek, Mich., April 15.—A well-to-do farmer who resides five miles northeast of this city claims to have found the wheel of the alleged airship that passed over lower Michigan last Tuesday evening.

George Parks, of Pennfield, and his wife were crossing a field, when their attention was drawn to a very bright object that appeared to be about 100 feet above the earth and swiftly approaching. Mr. Parks thought from its light and the humming sound it made that it was a meteor. As it passed over them, a little to their left, a part of it fell to the earth and buried itself in the ground.

Mrs. Parks, who was somewhat frightened, would not let her husband go near the place where it fell. The next morning Mr. Parks and his brother Benjamin dug it up and found it to be a large wheel made of aluminum, about three feet in diameter, and a turbine in shape.

Mr. Parks says it is the first time he has ever heard of a meteor having wheels, and it may be seen at any time at his farm in Pennfield. /

SEEN AT CONSTANTINE.

Constantine, Mich., April 15.—A brilliant light was sighted northeast of here last night by many prominent citizens, moving in an easterly direction with a zig-zag course. It was about one-fourth as large as the full moon. It kept in sight nearly an hour, then disappeared below the horizon.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Saginaw Courier-Herald, p. 1.

AIR SHIP A REALITY. / Passed Over the Valley at an Early Hour This Morning. / SEEN BOTH HERE AND IN BAY CITY. / Believed to Have Come Down Near Essexville—Of a Conical Shape and Having Red Lights. /

Bay City, April 16.—Special.—At about 12:30 this morning while several residents of Bay City were returning from a lodge meeting in West Bay City, they noticed a large object approaching from the south, high up in the air. At first it looked like a flying cloud, but as the sky was overcast by a dull, thick haze, it was soon apparent that the floating body was not a cloud but a substantial thing of material existence. As it approached it appeared to gradually lower itself toward the ground and when it reached Center street, it did not seem to be over 50 feet high. There was a red light at either end. It seemed to be traveling at a rapid rate when first seen, but slowed up gradually as it neared Bay City. From the descriptions given, the airship was from 50 to 75 feet long, perhaps on-third as wide. It shone with a dull red glow, as if there were lights on the upper side. In shape it was conical and no mode of propulsion was visible to the terrestrial observers.

As the ship passed on toward Essexville it seemed to suddenly sink towards the ground and from all appearances it descended to the earth but very far north of Bay City. It was too late in the morning to send messengers in that direction to find out whether the airship landed or not. /

The airship seen in Bay City passed over Saginaw shortly after midnight this morning, and the description as given by those who saw it is substantially the same as that received from Bay City. It had the appearance of a cloud when first seen here and was not very bright. While passing Saginaw it kept a course due north, though it seemed to approach this city from a southwesterly direction and then ~~and~~ change its course as it neared Saginaw.

The sources from which the information comes are entirely authentic and there can be no doubt that the mysterious object, whatever it is, passed over the city. It was going at a terrific rate of speed and soon disappeared from sight to the north.

According to late reports from different parts of the country, the strange messenger is a real airship, operated by some of its inventor who are simply making a trial trip and who have already made applications for patents. The principle on which it is constructed is that of the parallel plane and it is operated by steam.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Saginaw Evening News, p. 1. (card 1)

SAGINAW'S HAD IT TOO / That Mysterious Airship Monkeying Around in This Vicinity. / AND IS STILL AT LARGE / The Omaha Man's Experience Has Not Been Repeated in This Vicinity--Bay City Had It Too. /

Sombody says that that western apparition called an air ship or something else has been bobbing around in this vicinity. Some Bay City people got their eyes on it for a time and it is claimed that some people in this city saw it but so far as it was possible to learn today it was only the morning newspaper men who were favored with a view of the thing. It might have been a nightmare or it might have been a reality. It is hard to tell which. Some people think that it is Dave Hill trying to find a place to come down where it will be safe. Others have the idea that it is the advance agent of prosperity trying to find the best place in the state to have his show appear first. So far as known no one in this vicinity has had the experience or imagination of the Omaha man who was taken by the seat of the trousers on the hook suspended from the airship some distance before the cloth gave away and he awoke. In Grand Rapids some boys sent up a toy balloon with lights attached and a policeman rang in an alarm and stated that the air ship was in sight. Battle Creek had it again Thursday night and Marshal, Lansing, Olive, Owosso and other places report the thing. It would seem that the people who are favored with the views should shoot the xix thing on sight. It may be dangerous. / SHAKESPEARE SAW IT. / The Kalamazoo Editor Gives His Version of the Air Ship.

The News has several times described the mysterious air ship which has been seen in different parts of the country but we have at last secured the evidence of a genuine editor who saw the "affair" himself. Andrew Jackson Shakespeare, of the Kalamazoo Gazette, says he saw the strange body as it passed over Kalamazoo the other evening: Mr. Shakespeare says:

"It came from the southeast and passed to the northwest, nearly over the centre of the city at a rate of speed that must have been from forty to sixty miles an hour. When about two miles northwest of the city the object seemed to change its course from northwest to due north. All that could be distinguished was a reddish-green light of great brilliancy that threw out rays on all sides and was six times as large as any star in the heavens. Air ship, or whatever it may be, there is some strange body skylarking about the heavens that has been seen by thousands and thousands of people in different portions of the country. What it is, astronomers ought to be getting on to it by this time.

"The object when it passed over Kalamazoo appeared to be about half a mile high. It is more likely that it was fifty and perhaps three times that many miles from the earth and is some wandering body not down on the charts. One thing is certain, it goes through space like a rocket.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Adrian, Mich., Evening Telegraph, p. 2. (card 1)

THAT AIR SHIP / Various Phases of Its Appearance in Hudson. / JUST HOW THE THING LOOKED / To Some of the Citizens of that Interesting City.

A special from Hudson to this paper Friday, conveyed the intelligence that the famous air ship had been seen there Thursday night by sundry reputable citizens of that burg. We clip from the Hudson Gazette of this week some private opinions on the matter:

"It's no hoax about the air ship," said Gene Knapp, porter at the Comstock house. "We had just drove down to the depot when some of the boys called my attention to the bright red light which seemed to be sailing into town from the west. It looked like a shooting star at first, but when it got down opposite us, on West Main street, we saw a green light about 25 feet from it, and sure, right there before our eyes we saw the outlines of a dark object against the sky, and some of 'em thought they could see several men aboard. It looked as if one of 'em was trying to wave his hat at us."

Charlie Lane, proprietor of the Hudson house, was one of the party at the depot and corroborates the story. "This is no mariner's yarn," said Mr. Lane to the Gazette. "As sure as I live I saw the air ship last night. How high was it? About 400 feet from the ground I should say. Shape? Cigar shaped and covered with a canvas canopy. It sailed right along rapidly and easily against the wind, which did not seem to have any effect upon it."

"It was near the Lake Shore," said Mr. Roy Bean, "and can say that the air ship, or whatever it was, is an actuality."

Mr. Harvey Loyster was upon West Main street and while he does not furnish particulars to the Gazette, says that the aerial visitor is O.K.

Ed Southworth and Al Beach had just started for home when the exciting object came into view. Mr. Southworth ~~xxxx~~

~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ pointed it out to his companion. When asked how large it was, they thought it was about the size of "Doc" Clement's busted boom. "It was quite a bit larger than the Republican majority in Hudson," said Plin Gilman, who had just started down Main street.

"Yes sir," said Sid Lawrence, who had just left the lodge for home "it was certainly 25 feet long, had a rudder, was quite a curiosity. We ought to have it for our next street fair." Chas. Kefuss was leaving his milling office while the air vessel was disappearing over the Main street bridge. "It is no fisherman's yarn," quoth he. "I saw it, and I know it from the published accounts in all the papers."

"Pardy" Deems was just rising the hill on the st walk opposite the Baptist church. "What does it mean?" says Pardy. "Perhaps it was the long lost and overdue advance agent of prosperity, an individual who started out on the road a long time ago and hasn't got here yet."

"I've been in most every state in the Union," said Jim Peck, "but I never saw an air ship before. Ours was the original and only."

Prof. Geo. J. Tripp, scientist and superintendent of the East Side schools, was questioned concerning the alleged nocturnal visitor. "How do I account for it?" queried he. "I don't try to. I think it was a star that the people saw. I would liked to have trailed my telescope on it, anyway, that would have settled it. Of course I didn't see it at all, but how do I account for its moving so fast? Hallucination; some men's mind move swifter than others."

Lee Wolcott, Bert Chandler, W.N. Derbyshire and Will Sweetey, a party of duck hunters returning from Mallory lake, saw the visitor. They say it resembled a whole flock of ducks, but they had no field glass, and were unable to make it out clearly.

Pittsford--The operator here says that the air ship sailed over this place at 9:56 last night.

Clayton--J.B. Kessler and Arthur Hawkins both say that they are positive they saw an air ship pass over Clayton last evening.

Cadmus--This town is excited over the appearance of the air ship last night. It was going due east. One excited individual fired a shot at it as it passed, thinking it was a flying dragon.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Evening News, (Detroit), p. 4.

Odds and Ends. Ann Arbor--Airship seen here--going toward Ypsilanti supposed to have been manned by sky-larking students.

Manistique--Several hundred people were sure they saw the air ship, especially when they read a message from the "Jupiter," to the effect that the passengers were well and hearty. It transpires the air ship was a balloon, ingeniously constructed by two boys and the note was in their handwriting.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Detroit Free Press, p. 3.

Seems to Be Catching. / Stories Told About an Airship in Michigan.

Saginaw, Mich., April 16.--Several of Saginaw's reputable citizens are very positive in their assertions that they saw the reputed airship shortly after midnight and their descriptions of the aerial monster tallied with that given from other places.

Ann Arbor, April 16.--(Special).--A hot air balloon or airship was seen to pass over the southern part of this town to-night. It was seen from the campus by a large number of students. It was traveling in an easterly direction.

Lansing, Mich., April 16.--Several hundred Lansing citizens thought they saw an airship last night, but it turned out to be nothing more than a paper balloon sent up by some boys which floated majestically over the city with a bright light attached to it.

April 17 p. 3 (State Items)--It is believed that many practical jokers in different parts of the state are sending up hot-air balloons thereby causing the stories that are being sent out by enterprising correspondents about the mysterious airship that is being reported to have been seen at so many places.

18, 4--It will be perfectly safe for delinquents to agree to settle when their airship comes in.

It is worthy of note that no member of the W.C.T.U. has seen the airship.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Grand Rapids (Mich) Evening Press, p. 2.

AN AIRSHIP MESSAGE / Dropped Upon Expectant Grand Rapids Last Night. / BEER STOPPER USED / Very Appropriately in Bringing the Missile to Earth. / Aerial Travelers Unable to Control Their Engine and It Is Feared the Beer Had Given Out. /

That the airship is a wonderful reality is now assured, and that it passed through the startled atmosphere of the Valley City in the vicinity of the corner of South Division and Williams street is a fact that is founded upon the most irrefragable proof.

To state the matter briefly, C.T. Smith, an employe of the Winesap Furniture company, who has always been considered honorable and truthful, stumbled over something at 6:15 this morning while on his way to the store, which upon examination proved to be a letter from the clouds, or more precisely, from the crew of the flying machine. The envelope was endorsed on the outside, "From the Airship Travelers," and read as follows:

"To whoever finds this, 2,500 feet above the level of the sea, headed north at this writing, testing the airship. Afraid we are lost we are unable to control our engine. please notify our people. think we are somewhere over Michigan."

"Arthur R. Cotts, Laurel, Miss./C.C. Hester, Gulfport, Miss. / "C.W. Rich, Richburg, Miss." / "April 16th, '97. 9 p.m."

The letter was written on note paper with a purple indelible pencil, and was attached to a piece of stiff wire about five inches long, at the other end of which was fastened, as a weight, one of the iron combination stoppers and bottle openers commonly used to open beer bottles. Just what the latter thing would indicate is a matter of uncertainty. It might be that the aerial stevard's refrigerator is so well supplied with these things that they can be thrown around promiscuously, or again, it may be possible that the total supply of bottled beverages has been consumed and the crew has no further use for the useful instrument.

Mr. Smith, who found the letter, positively avers that he is not a drinking man, and never owned a beer stopper in his life and moreover, as stated previously, the thing was discovered at 6:15 this morning.

As an example to the children of the city, however, it is unfortunate that great inventors should not be able to spell better.

Three of the night men employed by the Wallin Leather company are very sure that they saw the airship last night. At least they saw a strange white light in the western heavens very much like an arc electric light. The men observed it at intervals from 11:30 p.m. until 3 o'clock this morning. The light was traveling slowly northward.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Manistee (Mich) Daily News, p. 5.

THAT AIR SHIP. / The Cigar Shaped Body Gives us a Call. Mr. Proctor of this city claims to be one of the fortunates, in beholding the "air ship." He alleges that last night he had an unobstructed view of this aerial monster for fully thirty minutes, during which time he was enabled to note many interesting points in regard to the ship's general appearance.

This is his story. "About 11:30 o'clock last evening, as I was returning from a professional call, I suddenly beheld a very bright light in the western sky. Meeting a friend, I inquired what that light was but he seemed as much at loss for an explanation as myself. At first we were inclined to think it was a star, but on further investigation we saw that it was moving very slowly in a southwest direction. For the first time, the thought struck me that this must be the light carried by the much talked of aeronautic monster, because suddenly the bright light grew dim, and small colored lights appeared answering the description to those which were seen near Battle Creek.

"Rushing home, my companion and I secured our wheels and a pair of strong field glasses. Rapidly we made our way towards Seeley's farm on the outskirts of the city. Here we could get an excellent view of the ship from the high bluff overlooking the lake.

The first thing that attracted our attention was the queer shaped body beneath the lights. It was nearly the shape of a cigar and seemed to be covered with small incandescent lights of different colors. We could distinctly hear a swishing noise like wings passing through the air, and the regular beat of the piston rod of a steam engine. We also observed that the body had a queer motion which resembled the rise and dip of a chip on the water. By and by we were able to recognize the sound as the queer whirr of a propeller wheel.

"Suddenly a shower of sparks appeared, and the huge body forged ahead, at the same time all of the noises increasing in proportion. Seizing the field glasses my companion made out a sign near the forward end of the huge body. By straining his eyes, he was able to read the name, and turning to me he said 'yes, that's the Maggie Marshall, salt in the hold and timber on deck.'"

1897 April 17 (Sat) Saginaw Courier-Herald, p. 5. (card 1)

TRIP OF THE AIRSHIP / Seems to Be More Than a Vision of the Night. / ITS FLIGHT WITNESSED BY SEVERAL. / Seen at Different Points Throughout the State as Well as in Other Parts of the Country. /

Additional particulars of the visit of the mysterious airship to this part of the country were received yesterday. The ship approached from the southwest and after passing over both Saginaw and Bay City appeared to sink almost to the earth in the vicinity of Essexville. This was about 12:30. The ship moved with great speed when on its voyage north, but slowed up as it approached Bay City.

Just before 2 o'clock yesterday morning the uncanny visitor was seen returning to the southeast. Roundsman Halsey and Officer Foley, who were on Potter street, near the P. & P.M. depot, at that time, first noticed it as it approached the city from the north. They were attracted by a whirring noise, which increased rapidly in volume and looking up into the sky they beheld a long cigar shaped vessel sailing swiftly through the air. It was not very high above the earth and there was a light aboard that illuminated the whole vessel.

The noise which they heard resembled that made by a snare drum being played rapidly, and was evidently caused by the movement of machinery aboard the airship. It was going in a southeasterly direction and passed so quickly out of sight that a good description of the vessel could not be obtained. From the lower side, however, a long basket-shaped object hung down, apparently a boat to be used in case the ship settled down over a body of water.

Reports are coming from all over the country, which indicate that there must certainly be some truth in the many stories that are being told of the airship. One is to the effect that it is owned by Binsley Bros.' circus and is being used as an advertising scheme.

That there is some strange object floating about the country is beyond doubt, but what it is no one has been able to ascertain. The following dispatches from various points about the country show that the airship has traveled over a great deal of territory in the past few days:

Corroboration of the visit of the flying air-ship to this city yesterday morning has been received from many sources. Among those who vouch for its appearance is V.A. Goddard, who witnessed its flight northward at about midnight, in company with A.W. Field. The night was cloudy and therefore they were unable to see the ship plainly but they distinctly heard the humming noise, which they describe as resembling the noise of an electric dynamo. There were three lights visible, one at either end and one suspended above the vessel, apparently on a mast. The forward light was white and the others were red. It was impossible to tell anything as to the size or shape of the vessel from the view obtained by these gentlemen. /

Reynolds, Mich., April 16.—About 4:30 Wednesday morning at a point about a half mile south and west of this point and about three miles northwest of Howard City, a balloon or flying machine alighted. The airship was seen about an hour before it alighted by a dozen farmers or more, who had been watching it. On its attempt to alight they gathered around, but a good many of them did not remain long after the landing of the ship. A strange man, if man he might be called, was in charge of the ship. While he seemed to have plenty of heavy clothes which look like the pelts of polar bears, he seemed to have no use for them, as he was almost naked and seemed to be suffering from the heat. He is about 6-1-2 feet tall, and his talk, while somewhat musical, is not talk at all, but seems to be repetition of bellowing. One of the farmers who was somewhat braver, attempted to go near him, and got a kick that will last him for some time, having got his hip broken. Great excitement prevails here, and lots of people are flocking here from Morley and Howard City to view the strange being at a distance, as no one dares to go near. He seems to be trying to talk to the people. The people here are incredulous, and those that have not seen refuse to believe the report, although six of the best people in that locality are here and affirm it is the truth. From their excited manners we are led to believe that no hoax exists. His balloon seems to be out of repair. At 8:10 last evening the airship passed south and a little west of Howard City. Hundreds of people watched its flight. /

Battle Creek, April 16.—The Daily Moon has received a letter from the airship, which passed over this city again last night. When the employes came to the office early this morning they found a large sailor's needle in front of the office, to which was attached the letter. /

The writer said the ship had started from San Francisco, and had made the Great Lakes in one day and was now on the return trip. /

Pontiac, Mich., April 16.—Hundreds of citizens declare an airship passed over Pontiac last night. They saw lights at an elevation of 200 or 300 feet, above Saginaw street, but were disgusted when they learned that enterprising students had hauled lanterns up on the flag-staff of the Grove school. /

Charlotte, Mich., April 16.—The mysterious air ship was seen by many people last night. Charlotte is a dry town. /

Hudson, April 16.—This morning's Hudson Gazette contains a detailed account of the passage of the airship over this city at 1 o'clock last night. It says that it was also seen at Pittsford, Clayton and Cadmus. The Gazette has interviews with Eugene Knapp, Charles J. Lane, Roy Bean, Harvey Lyster, E.J. Southworth, R.A. Beach, Plim Gilman, Charles Deems, J.I. Peck, B.D. Chandler, Lee Wolcott, W.N. Derbyshire, Will Swezey and others, who give graphic accounts corresponding with the description of the heavenly visitor as seen elsewhere. /

Hart, April 16.—A large crowd witnessed a strange sight Wednesday night. Something floated over Shelby which carried two lights, white and green, and is supposed to have been the airship. /

Olivet, April 16.—The airship was observed here Wednesday night by a large crowd of persons, including several students. It was headed for Albion. It was at a great height, displayed three red lights, and, moving rapidly, was soon out of sight. /

Battle Creek, April 16.—The aerial phenomenon, construed by some to be an airship, was seen by many persons here Wednesday evening. It was traveling west at a rapid rate and was visible but a short time. /

Middleville, April 16.—This village takes the cake in regard to airships. Several responsible residents claim to have seen two of them Wednesday evening. The first was discovered at about 9 p.m. moving northward, and downwards, and carrying changing lights—red, blue and green. At about 10:20 p.m. another ship rose east of the village and floated up and southwestward. A car attachment had six colored lights and scattered sparks, and what was supposed to be smoke. /

Lansing, April 16.—Many citizens of Lansing are willing to swear that they saw the airship last evening. A phenomenon was discovered in the heavens that traveled rapidly, and was visible for half an hour. /

Belle Plaine, Ia., April 16.—The citizens of Linn Grove declare there is no longer any doubt among them of the existence of an airship. Yesterday morning a large object was seen slowly moving in the heavens in a northerly direction, and seemed to be making preparations to alight. James Evans, liveryman, F.G. Ellis, harness dealer, Ben Buland, stock dealer, David Evans and Joe Croaskey jumped into a rig and started in pursuit. They found the air ship had alighted four miles north of town, and when within 700 yards, it spread its four monstrous wings and flew off toward the north. Its occupants threw out two large boulders of unknown composition, which were taken into the village, and are now on exhibition.

There were two queer looking persons on board, who made desperate efforts to conceal themselves. Evans and Croaskey say they had the longest whiskers they ever saw in their lives. Nearly every citizen in Linn Grove saw the air ship as it sailed over the town, and the excitement is intense. /

Mount Vernon, Ill., April 16.—What is thought to have been the mysterious air ship was seen here by more than 100 persons Wednesday night. It was first observed about 8:30 o'clock and continued in sight for half an hour. Mayor Wells, who had an excellent view of the mysterious visitor from the observatory attached to his residence, says it resembled the body of a huge man swimming through the air with an electric light at his back. /

Carlyle, Ill., April 16.--The air ship has made its appearance in this vicinity. Citizens of Shattuck, nine miles east of this city, observed it last night at 8 o'clock, going in a northwesterly ~~direction~~ ~~course~~. It carried red lights. /

Hillsboro, Ill., April 16.--What is supposed to be the air ship was seen by a number of reputable citizens here about 10:30 o'clock Wednesday night. Bright moving red lights were plainly visible. /

Appleton, Wis., April 16.--(Letter from the Pegasus. /
Carlinville, Ill., April 16.--The mysterious air ship which is the talk of the country has been seen in the northern part of this (Macopin) country. About 2:30 o'clock Monday afternoon it alighted on the farm of Z. Thacker, one mile north of Hillwood. It was seen by Wm. Street, Ed Teeples and Frank Metcalf. It remained about 15 minutes and continued north. At 6 o'clock it was seen gracefully alighting in a grove two miles south of Girard and a mile north of the mining camp of Green Ridge. A large crowd of miners from the latter place started to inspect the strange apparition. As they approached within half a mile it arose and sped north. The Chicago & Alton operators wired ahead to be on the watch, and at 8 o'clock it passed over Sherman, 32 miles north of Girard, at the apparent rate of 30 miles an hour. It was last sighted at Williamsville, about 8:45 o'clock, headed for Peoria. Those who saw it say it had a boat which was cigar-shaped, with cars or wings extending from the side, and a canopy ~~top~~ on top similar to that of a picnic stand. Near Green Ridge an operator, who was hunting, avers that he saw a man working about it, apparently fixing the machinery. The fact of its alighting twice and remaining such a long time in the same locality leads to the conclusion that the machinery was injured in some manner.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Saginaw Evening News, p. 7.

PEOPLE WHO SAW IT / Three Citizens of Saginaw Claim to Have Been Favored. / OTHERS DENY THE HONOR. / Speculation Continues to Be Rife Concerning the Thing and the Reason It Doesn't Quit Pooling. /

The air ship or whatever it is which has been bobbing all around the country and acting in a most mysterious manner is attracting much speculation. Many people are inclined to treat it as a fake or a good joke while others are firm believers in the existence of the machine and that its course is directed by human brains. However that may be the thing which is kicking up such a fuss has not been examined in this state by a reliable authority and the identity of the person or persons running the thing if indeed there is a person on board of it has not been established.

1 Roundsman Halsey and Patrolman Foley of the police force are sure that they saw the machine. They were standing at the corner of Astor and Jefferson avenue yesterday morning about 2:45 o'clock and were attracted by a noise which sounded like the rattle of a drum. Looking in the direction from which the noise came the officers saw something which is described by Roundsman Halsey as a cigar shaped affair about 30 feet long with nothing above it and something hanging about ten feet below the main body of the thing and carrying a red and yellow light which seemed to be shining through canvass. The affair was travelling about 25 miles per hour in a southerly direction.

Thomas S. Prentice, connected with the telephone company, reports having seen the machine the same night from the west side of the river.

A report was circulated that Asa W. Field and V.A. Goddard had seen the machine but Mr. Field said that it was simply a report concocted by Mr. Goddard to stuff a newspaper man with.

1897 April 18 (Sun) Flint (Mich) Daily News, p. 9.

SAW THE AIRSHIP. / Bock Beer Season Has Opened in Wyandotte.

The bock beer season opened in Wyandotte Friday night. At about 10:30, while Joseph Hoersch, William Gordon, E. Walter Murphy, Tony Roehrig, John Marx and George Melody were on their way home, they allege they saw the much talked of airship. They could see a dark mass making its way slowly toward Canada. They could, however plainly distinguish lights of green, red and blue, and occasionally could hear a sputtering sound the same as given out by an electric machine.

Apr. 18, p. 2: An American citizen has not the same right to see airships that he has to see pink-winged elephants and man-eating cockroaches.

Apr. 26 p. 2: Venus Out Late (Chicago Record story).

1897 April 19 (Mon) Flint (Mich) Daily News, p. 3.

ARE ADRIPT IN THE AIR. / Air Ship Sailors in a Pretty Plight. / Davison Comes to the Front With the Latest Bit of News About the Strange Aerial Craft.

Davison, April 19.--Great excitement was caused here last night by the appearance at 10:30 of a strange light directly north of Davison sailing through the air. As it came nearer it was discovered to be an air ship. It made a whizzing sound as it passed through the air and it looked about 30 feet long, turning toward the southwest after it left Davison.

After it had gone a few minutes the watchers saw a piece of paper floating down and upon getting it found the following written upon it: ~~Text~~ "This paper is written by occupants of the air ship. We started from the shores of China last November and have been sailing ever since in a gale which occurred shortly after we left China we lost the cord to the air valve and being unable to reach it, we are unable to come to the earth. Pray for us."

This story can be vouched for by such reliable men as James Styke, Proprietor of the Hamilton Hotel; John Whipple, owner of the Davison pump factory; Henry Sickle, owner of the Central drug store, and Harry Daniel, owner of the Davison wholesale clothing house.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Port Huron, Mich, Daily Times, p. 5.

THE AIRSHIP / Ed J. Kendall Discovered It on Saturday Night--Notified the Whole Town.

The Sunday Free Press published a long account of an airship passing over Port Huron Saturday night. According to the Free Press thousands of people held their breath and gazed at the aerial monster. It is said that Ed. J. Kendall was the first to discover it. He got out his marine glasses and found that it was over 800 feet long. He could distinctly see an army of men moving around on the deck. Mr. Kendall rushed to the telephone and notified nearly every member of the Bell telephone exchange that the monster was coming from the west and passing in a zig zag course. Col. Peter Neasley could distinctly recognize the members of the Michigan legislature aboard. As the ship passed over The Harrington, Clerk Chas. Baad, who was on the roof, watching, discovered Representative Green in the bow. Baad says Green threw overboard a note, which read "Just tell them that you saw me on the airship. Give my love to Doc McGregor and Henry Rose." The ship then passed into Canada.

It was a great night for soda water or something stronger.

1897 April 19 (Mon.) Saginaw Globe (eve), p. 2.

Michigan News

Some citizens of Three Rivers are positive the airship passed over that place Saturday night.

Wed. Apr. 14, p. 2. Mich. News.

The airship has been plainly seen by several reliable citizens of Benton Harbor and St. Joseph, who declare that there is no fake about it. It was seen about 8 o'clock Monday night with blue, red and green lights, and was moving rapidly in a northwesterly direction. The outlines could not be discerned, owing to the lights it bore and its great altitude over Lake Michigan.

Fri. April 16, p. 4. Saw the "Airship." / Unsubstantiated Statement of Two Bay City Men.

Two residents of Bay city claim that they saw the mysterious "airship" floating over that city at an early hour this morning. They were about two miles from the city when the celestial visitor went sailing across the sky. So far as is known no one in Saginaw saw the ship and the Bay City men may have drawn largely upon their imagination.

19.2. If that mysterious arap does't come down to earth pretty soon the whole western country will be afflicted with one gigantic crack in the neck.

21.2. It is evident that the airship is not an American vessel of war. It positively refuses to strike solid ground. (ref. to several naval vessels having run aground recently)

23.3. Mich News. One of the numerous "araps" which have been seen in Mich. descended to the earth near Allegan, and closer investigation showed it to be a large kite with three Japanese lanterns attached.

23.2. What will the Saginaw council do when serial navigation becomes a certainty and there are no street railway franchises to wrangle over?

26.2. Future historians should keep in mind the fact that the arap is always seen on Sat. night, when a large portion of the population are in a proper mood to see strange things.

27.2. There are some who believe that thing up in the air may be Coxey's party, which got off the earth as soon as the grass began to sprout.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Saginaw D(Mich) Globe, p. 4.

THAT AIRSHIP AGAIN. / James G. Macpherson, the Lumberman, Claims to Have Seen It.

James G. Macpherson, while coming to Saginaw from Duluth last Wednesday night, says he saw the mysterious airship which has caused so much excitement throughout the country during the past few days and was reported to have passed over Saginaw. He related his experience to the Globe this morning saying that the train stopped for supper at Spooner, Wis., while partaking of supper some one came rushing into the dining car and announced that the airship was in sight. He went outside and beheld the wonderful phenomena with his own eyes. He says he was amazed at the spectacle and is sure that with the aid of a good field glass he could have distinguished the outlines of the ~~air~~ ~~ship~~ machine without difficulty. He said a colored light appeared ~~to~~ to him just as has been reported. It had a ruddy glow, as if made with oil or gas. When he first saw it he says it seemed fully 10 miles away, but after waiting about 15 minutes it approached to a distance of apparently half a mile, when it seemed suddenly to dip and then resume its course.

Prof. John Fiske of Cambridge, Mass., the well-known scientific writer and author of "The American Revolution" and other works, was on the train and said it was not a star. Some one appealed to Prof. Fiske and told him that if they went home and said that they had seen the airship they would be accused of having been drinking. He said that if they needed any substantiation to have the inquiries directed to him.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Detroit Evening News, p. 4

Queer Things.

Saline--Credulous denizens claim to have seen the airship in broad daylight. There was a dark object in the air, there was an explosion, and the ship was seen moving toward the west in the face of a strong wind.

Wed. April 21 p. 1--Is This the Airship?

ALLEGAN, Mich., April 21.--G. L. Huntley, living one mile south, found in his yard a large kite with three lanterns attached. The kite was inscribed: "Airship from Tennessee."

1897 April 20 (Tues) Detroit Free Press, p. 3.

Beats Any Fish Story. / Saline Claims to Have Seen the Air Ship in Day Time.

Saline, Mich., April 19.--(Special.)--The residents of this village were startled this afternoon by a severe explosion coming apparently from mid-air. Several persons working a short way north of town were attracted by the noise and say they made out a large dark object high in the air moving rapidly to the west against a strong wind. All agree that we had a visit from the air ship.

1897 April 20 (Th.) Marquette, Mich., Daily Advocate, p. 1.

Was It an Air Ship?

Residents on the north side felt very confident at an early hour this morning that the air ship had at last reached this place. One observer of the strange machine stated that at first glance it appeared as if the machine was making desperate attempts to rise from the earth, but could not on account of some accident to its mechanism. In the dim, frosty air the operator seemed like a giant in proportions with long spider-like legs. Later reports are to the effect that a certain Fifth Avenue man arose at 3 a.m. and began his first lessons at riding a wheel, and it may be that his erratic motions may have given rise to the sensational reports quoted above.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Muskegon (Mich) Daily Chronicle, p. 2.

THAT RAPID AIRSHIP. / Now the Citizens of Grant, Newaygo County, Claim to Have Spied It.

Baily, April 19.--The people of Grant station say they saw the famous airship pass over the town Saturday evening. It was just ahead of the northbound evening train, so it was supposed the airship was racing with the train. It was seen by many citizens of that place. It was supposed to have been nearly one mile from the earth and the length was about 200 feet. You have this as cheap as we got it.

22 Evanston, Ill. # kite flyer trying to send messages by kxxx kite --releases kites in Mich.
29 They want to soar.

April 7 p. 4 Around the State.

At Lee between 10 and 11 o'clock the other night a bright light was seen emerging from the river. On the first sight it was thought to be a lantern, but further investigation proved it to be about as large as a large hen's egg, floating through the air about ten feet from the ground, with whizzing sound and zigzag motion. It soon disappeared.

10 Chicago arsp is AO / Mirage at New Haven

14 The sea serp is fairly turning green with envy over the notoriety being enjoyed just now by it rival the airship

Social events: It's about time Musk. was discovering that air ship. Other cities have had wonderful success in that line.

16 That ar sp, being a modern invention, will (probably) stop at the most modern xxx drug store--Union Pharmacy.

Too many people have been seeing airships lately. There is reason to believe that the air is mostly in the yarns told and the ship floating nebulously in the imagination of the narrators. People see xxx such things best through inverted glasses from which red liquor has been carefully drained. The arsp is evidently belated and should have appeared April 1.

Local Events: Have you seen the arsp?

19 Local Events: Too many arsp nowadays

Schooner pushed by fast winds moved like arsp

1897 April 21 (Wed) Saginaw Courier-Herald, p.5. (card 1)

THAT AIR SHIP AGAIN. / Saginaw Has an Attraction for the Terrestrial Traveler.

Several parties claim to have seen the much talked of air ship, which they say passed over this city Monday evening between 8 and 9 o'clock, moving rapidly in a northerly direction. Two ladies claim to have witnessed the xxx phenomenon, as well as several young men who are of strictly temperate habits.

In connection with the air ship stories coming from all parts of the country, the story of the reception of a terrestrial air ship on its first visit to Mars, as reported in the "Mars Gazette," may prove of interest:

"Since the occurrence of the memorable Marsquake in the year 17897 we have not been called upon to record such startling and exciting news as that which appears in our columns today. Yesterday afternoon we dispatched our reporter to write up the 936th annual jag festival of the Jupiter Pluvius Association for the Advancement of Martian Incomes, which was being held at Big Dipper grove. Shortly after his arrival & upon the scene, the innocent garbols of the participants were interrupted by a fearful and wonderful portent in the heavens. A strange and enormous body came sailing through the circumambient ether, and finally lit upon the summit of Mount Lucullus. The erstwhile gay and merry picnickers fled in great trepidation, but a few, among them our fearless reporter, were transfixed with surprise and beheld the most wonderful sight ever seen in Mars. From this oblong phenomenon emerged a singular being, god or devil, the inhabitant of another world. He was totally unlike the people of our planet in appearance, figure and dress. Strange to say, his massive head was firmly fixed between his shoulders, hair grew under his nose, as well as upon the top of his head. His clothing, especially that which encased his nether limbs, was of exceeding noisiness, and served to explain the whirring sounds which were heard before this wonderful being was visible to the eye. His height was prodigious and his speech resounding and unintelligible. To add to this fearful and terrific appearance he held in his cavernous mouth a large brown stick which was actually on fire, emitting at intervals clouds of dense smoke. To those who were too frightened to twirl away he made signs of peace, and by means of an enormous searchlight upon the prow of his strange airship and with his forefinger pointed to the distinct earth glimmering in the realms of space. Then it dawned upon the minds of the people that this strange being had journeyed nitherward from that far away sphere, whereat they buzzed in amazement and invited him to alight, and when they had timidly thouched him without harm to themselves, lead the way to the palace of his most malignant martian majesty, King Flammarion, the supreme and mighty ruler of the Red Planet. When the court attendants saw him some incontinently fled and others toppled over with fear. But the king called about him the wise men, the seers, and seersuckers and said unto them: "Turn the current of your think spots, get a move on, your abbreviated intelled and tell me whence came this strange and elongated being and for what purpose, and see to it that you anger him not, for if he exile you from above I opine your shoelets will be filled with a choice secretion of much mixed Martian anatomy." Then the wise men conversed with the stranger by signs and sounds until they could understand his speech, which, being freely interpreted, was as follows: 'O most rotund and many articulated monarch, I am a physician from a far away world. C.B. Hustler, M.D., is my name, which in your language may be interpreted, 'Get there.' At the peril of my life I have visited all the physicians on earth, and, having made converts of them, am now prepared to do business at a new stand. I observe that some of your courtiers are fearful and afraid of me. Convey to them the assurance of my most distinguished consideration and tell them I am as harmless and innocuous as the gay and gladsome trooley car. I am a social and convivial being, and after business hours will introduce you to the festive Manhattan cocktail, the jovial gin rickry and the gay and gregarious sherry cobbler. In the meantime kindly permit me to lightly share your bill of fare, for verily have I eaten nothing for many how save what I unconsciously absorbed while coming through the risky way. After I have suitably decorated(?) my department of the interior we will proceed to get more intimately acquainted.' After this remarkable speech the King Flammarion had food placed before the stranger-- sea water soup, toads eyes with truffles, snails eggs with bilfe water sauce, bee stingers rolled in sawdust, and other epicurian delicacies-- eyeing which, the man from the earth sipped and sadly shook his head. April 16, p.3. Battle Creekites have again been gulled by a toy balloon.

17,3. It being cloudy, the airship was invisible last night.

20,3. An exchange claims that the airship of which so much has been heard lately, turns out to be an ingenious contrivance many tires duplicate, from Colorado to Michigan to advertise certain brands of cigarettes and wines. It is really a toy balloon, carrying a papier mache car shaped like a cigar, from which the lights which have attracted so much attention are suspended.

1897 April 22 (Th) (Benton Harbor, Mich) Evening News, pt.2,p.1 (CO

AIR SHIP. / Sailed Over This City Last Night. / Seen by Hundreds of Excited People. / A Kite, a Lantern and Naughty Boys.

Residents of the southern part of the city to the number of several hundred saw the air ship last night. They were sure of it and there could be no mistake about it at all.

Immediately over the city about 8:30 o'clock a light was noticed high in the heavens not high enough to look like a star and appearing very much like a comet save that it lacked the comet's fiery tail. The wonder moved northward and then suddenly in a zigzag style it wandered back to the place where it first appeared.

People who had laughed at the story of the air ship and xxx clas ed its visions in the same category with sea serpent appearances now believed that the air ship was a reality and that with their own eyes they had seen the wonder of the closing hours of the century.

For half an hour the mysterious appearance kept the anxious watch company and then came the denouement which but few witnessed.

In a dooryard on Bishop avenue were a company of young ladies and gentlemen whose sides were splitting with their fun.

It was a large kit, four feet high, made of flour sacks and sticks of wood. The kite had a long tail and to it was attached a lantern, a common, everyday white globe lantern which looked like an air ship when 400 or 500 feet above the earth.

The kite was made by Lew Stretch and Bert [Parsall] and it was a success as an airship. /

Among those who today reported at The News office thrilling stories of the maneuvers of last night's "air ship" was G.R. Goodsell. He was very much excited and declared that hundreds of his neighbors had seen the marvelous machine.

"It wasn't a star," declared Mr. Goodsell. "It must have been a genuine air ship. We watched it for three quarters of an hour and it was still cavorting about in the heavens when we went to bed."

"How high in the heavens did it appear to be, Mr. Goodsell," was asked.

"Oh I don't know. That's a hard question to answer. We could see the light plainly. It was a red light and once in a while sparks from it would descend. It moved in a circle and made three or four circuits while we watched it. It soared around like a great bird and some of us thought we could see the form of the machine which resembled very much the shape of a cigar. It was a wonderful sight and I am glad I saw it. It couldn't have been a great way off because we could see the lights flicker in the wind.

"Oh yes, it was an air ship all right. What else could it have been. I wish some of these people who laugh at the airship stories could have seen it. We're going to watch for it again tonight. There will be a crowd to see it. Everybody whom I have told about it are excited and they want to get a glimpse of it."

There were many other thrilling stories told about the appearance of the air ship and all the accounts slightly differed. St. Joseph people enjoyed a glimpse of the wonder.

Pics: As Seen By a St. Joseph Man Who Returned Home At 1 A.M. (Jug). The Air Ship As She Was (kite w. lantern) The Air Ship As Seen By Mr. Goodsell. People Watching the Aerial Wonder. 1897 April 22 (Th) Saginaw Courier-Herald, p. 6. (card 1)

'TWAS HERE. / Mysterious Airship Said to Have Been Here Friday Night. / Coaled Up at the Minc. / A Charming Widow Lady is the Campaigner-- Engineer and Fireman Her Only Crew. /

Lumberman Quinnin sat awaiting his chance in Snyder's tonsorial parlors the other day and after reading what Officers Halsey and Foley had said about the airship in Saturday's Courier-Herald remarked:

"Well, as sly as they keep it, that airship was in this city during that night. I received word from a Bay City lumberman and coal dealer over the 'phone in the morning that he had received a call from a lady who said she needed between 250,000 or 300,000 tons of coal at once to fuel her airship for its return trip to the north pole, and as they did not have quite enough on hand there, that he had advised her to come to the coal mines at Saginaw to fill out the cargo."

Accordingly an employe of the night force of the coal miners was interviewed on the subject with this result:

"Yes, we heard a whirring noise approaching from the north. Sounded like the hoofbeat of fastly running horses on an asphalt pavement. Next we noticed a red and green light in the air moving along so fast that it seemed a stream of red and green fire. It came so rapidly that before we could exchange a dozen words, a boat-shaped machine was directly over our heads and was being lowered to the xxam ground. Some of the colored men working in the mine are very superstitious, and the velocity with which they got away from that machine could be equalled in speed only by the machine itself. The hoist boss had been reading about the mysterious airship, however, and he realized at once that that was the object now before us. In a minute a feminine voice from somewhere in the ship asked to speak with the mine boss. She said this was the aerial ship "Pegasus," that her husband had spent 15 years inventing it, that he suddenly expired the day the last intricate piece of machinery had been adjusted in its place for the successful maiden trip of the first and only airship in the world, that she in company with the two men now in her employ had been the constant companions of the inventor, and that after his death near the north pole, she had decided to make the initial trip. She had made but two stops—one in the Pennsylvania xxax coal fields and the other here. She wanted to purchase 300,000 tons of coal. An electric shovel connected with the ship was set in motion and in less than thirty minutes the immense coal bin was filled with xxax. She endeavored to get sufficiently near the ship to see the xxax machinery, but invisible currents of electricity completely shocked and paralyzed all who volunteered within 100 feet of the thing and the lady cautioned all to keep away, saying that no one on this earth would learn her secret.

She asked for copies of the daily papers and one of the boys gave her a copy of the Battle Creek Moon containing a notice to the effect that in passing over that city a few nights previous, a letter had been attached to a huge sailor's needle and dropped in front of the Moon office. The lady laughed heartily upon reading the same and said the next time she tried to correspond with the man in the Moon, she would use something beside a sailor's needle, and intimated that the editor of the Moon had lied. Now the writer was acquainted personally with Charlie Barnes, city editor of the Moon, and knows that he was a man of truth and veracity. Charlie never took a drink of anything in his life stronger than milk, being so strictly temperate that he would not use either tea or coffee. Charlie might have been imposed upon by the employees who discovered the needle and letter, but he would never intentionally lie about it.

Suddenly two bells were sounded, the ship went straight into the air, circled around a few moments, eagle like, to get its bearings, and headed direct for Reynolds, Mich., at which place the lady said she must stop to inquire how the farmer was whom her 9 1-2 foot engine had kicked and broken his hip. She said while anchored there for repairs to the electric machinery, the crowd became so curious that it was necessary to use force to keep them away. If the man is seriously hurt she will give him $100,000 as she is immensely wealthy. From Reynolds, the ship was scheduled to return to the north pole by way of Chicago.

1897 April 23 (Fri) Bay City, Mich., Times-Press, p. 2.

THAT AIRSHIP.

Dr. Mitchell, a colored evangelist of Chicago, has solved the airship problem to his own satisfaction at least. He says:

"No sir! that ain't no airship. It's Jesus Christ coming in the clouds, as the bible says, to take possession of this world. The Savior's feet will first touch the ground at Jerusalem, on the top of the Mount of Olives. The earth will smoke; the Mount of Olives will split open; and a great river will flow from it to the Mediterranean sea, making Jerusalem the principal seaport of the world. Just when this will happen I cannot say; but it will be in either three weeks, three months, or three years; for I was shown in the spirit three white horses, which signified the time. It will probably be three years, for there are to be several great wars before the time. Then, Christ is coming to bring peace to the nations of the earth, and to reign a thousand years."

1897 April 23 (Fri) Evening Press, Grand Rapids, Mich., p. 3.

Stories of the State.

Near Galesburg a hunter came upon a hole in the ground and peering down into it he saw the outlines of some iron instrument. Visions of airships and grappling hooks arose before him and he made all speed to town to report his discovery. A correspondent jumped at conclusions and that day the papers told of the anchor that had been dropped by the ship of space and the hole it had made in the earth by the force of its fall. The next day a party walked four miles to the scene of war and found a steel trap in the entrance of a skunk's dwelling place. 1897 April 23 (Fri morn) Daily Mining Journal (Marquette, Mich), p. 8.

AIR SHIP PASSED OVER. / Strange Craft Goes Through the Air Laboring in the Evening Gale. / ITS LIGHT AND BODY SEEN BY FIFTY PEOPLE. / Inter-xxax Account of Upper Peninsula .../ FIFTY PEOPLE SAW IT PLAINLY. Marquette has been visited by the airship.

It passed over the city at a quarter to nine last night, running northeast before a gale of wind which was blowing at the time. The ship was seen by at least fifty persons, part of whom were on Lake street and part on Washington. None of them estimate its speed at less than sixty miles an hour, and some of them insist it was travelling double that rate.

Those who saw it saw not only the light but also the outline of a black body. It showed only one light, a large white one in the bow. Reports from other places where it has been almost all say that it displayed three lights, one white, and the others red and green. It crossed over the bay and over the lighthouse, going in that direction till it disappeared from view. It was evidently laboring heavily in the gale, as it would shoot along almost on a level, then dive like a kite which was short of tail.

A lesser number of people report that half an hour later it was seen over the lake going east.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Flint (Mich) Daily News, p. 3.

OUT IN BROAD DAYLIGHT / Dan Gray Has a New Story on the Airship. / He Offers in Evidence a Toronto Newspaper Which He Claims to Have Received From the Clouds. /

A report reached the city this morning to the effect that Dan Gray, who lives about three and a half miles east of the city on the Lapeer road, had seen the now celebrated but rather mythical airship in broad daylight about noon yesterday. A News representative drove out to the Gray place this afternoon and upon interviewing Mr. Gray found that the story attributed to him had some foundation. He said he was at work in a field near his house xxax yesterday about the noon hour when he heard a whizzing sound overhead and looking up dialy saw or thought he saw something dart with the swiftness of an express train across an opening in the clouds. A moment later he saw a paper fluttering earthward, and on going to the spot where it alighted and picking it up he found it to be a copy of a Toronto (Canada) newspaper bearing the date of October 5, 1896. He saw nothing further of the strange aerial visitor, but he has the newspaper which he says he received from the clouds to offer as evidence that his remarkable experience was not all a dream.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Daily Mining Journal (Marquette, Mich), p. 8.

Fooled by a Reflection. Tom Broderick scouts the idea that there is such a thing as an air ship, or that if there is one it was seen passing over here Thursday night, as reported by several persons who claim to have seen it. Tom has an explanation of what they saw which, if true, clears up the mystery and puts the laugh on the persons who thought they had seen the aerial craft. He says that there are red, white and green lights on the new railroad's ore dock at the mouth of Dead river, and when the atmospheric conditions are right these are reflected on the clouds above. The conditions were favorable Thursday night, he claims, and the reflection of these lights was what the "rubbernecks" saw and took to be the lights of the wandering air ship. Tom further asserts that there are several persons living out that way who have frequently noticed these lights so reflected on the clouds but they never were fooled into believing that they were the fore and aft lights of an air ship. There are no saloons out there. Another and perhaps more plausible theory which is advanced is that the air ship was nothing more or less than a large box kite, of which several are owned in the city. Kites of this character are speedy flyers and quite strong enough to carry a light that would be plainly seen while passing a few hundred feet above the city. The Mining Journal has a pretty straight tip that a box kite was run up night before last from Burt's peak. It carried a railroad torch. 1897 April 24 (Sat) Saginaw Evening News, p. 2.

THAT AIR SHIP. / The Star Alpha Orion Causes Excitement Among Saginawians.

Officer Murphy was walking along Germania avenue last night about 7:45 o'clock, when he observed something in the northwestern portions of the heavens that excited his curiosity and which he made up his mind was the much talked of airship. He set H.E. C him, calling out at the same time to several other firemen, "Come on, all ye unbelievers, and see the only and genuine airship." It was not long before groups collected at different corners and many eyes were focused on the mysterious object in the sky, which was causing so much speculation.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Saginaw Evening News, p. 2.

THAT AIR SHIP. / The Star Alpha Orion Causes Excitement Among Saginawians.

Officer Murphy was walking along Germania avenue last night about 7:45 o'clock, when he observed something in the northwestern portions of the heavens that excited his curiosity and which he made up his mind was the much talked of airship. He set H.E. C him, calling out at the same time to several other firemen, "Come on, all ye unbelievers, and see the only and genuine airship." It was not long before groups collected at different corners and many eyes were focused on the mysterious object in the sky, which was causing so much speculation.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Saginaw Evening News, p. 2.

THAT AIR SHIP. / The Star Alpha Orion Causes Excitement Among Saginawians.

Officer Murphy was walking along Germania avenue last night about 7:45 o'clock, when he observed something in the northwestern portions of the heavens that excited his curiosity and which he made up his mind was the much talked of airship. He set H.E. C him, calling out at the same time to several other firemen, "Come on, all ye unbelievers, and see the only and genuine airship." It was not long before groups collected at different corners and many eyes were focused on the mysterious object in the sky, which was causing so much speculation.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Saginaw Evening News, p. 2.

THAT AIR SHIP. / The Star Alpha Orion Causes Excitement Among Saginawians.

Officer Murphy was walking along Germania avenue last night about 7:45 o'clock, when he observed something in the northwestern portions of the heavens that excited his curiosity and which he made up his mind was the much talked of airship. He set H.E. C him, calling out at the same time to several other firemen, "Come on, all ye unbelievers, and see the only and genuine airship." It was not long before groups collected at different corners and many eyes were focused on the mysterious object in the sky, which was causing so much speculation.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Saginaw Evening News, p. 2.

Mr. McHally said to a News reporter this morning that it looked like a brilliant electric light with a somewhat flickering motion, and he soon made up his mind that it was a star, only something out of the ordinary size, as far as his observation went. Many were inclined to think that it was the veritable airship, but as a matter of fact it is likely that the light was the star Alpha Orionis or Betelgeuse, which had not been observed since its appearance before on account of the cloudy sky. The star is the largest in the constellation Orion and is now slowly sloping toward the west. Prof. Corrigan, of St. Paul, attributes to this star the many reports about the airship. It moves at an apparently rapid rate of speed and with its three stars in line has a peculiar appearance.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Saginaw Courier Herald, p. 5.

THE AIRSHIP CRAZE. / Hundreds Witness a Strange Light in the Heavens. / AN ALLEGED CELESTIAL VISITANT / Explained as Nothing But the Star Alpha Orionis, Said to Have Been in Business for 10,000,000 Years. / ~~At~~ About 8 o'clock last evening a great commotion was caused on the streets by the announcement that the air ship was again visible and hundreds hurried to the open air to get a glimpse of the strange object which has caused so much discussion within the past few weeks. The thing which attracted the gaze of the curious was not an air ship, but only a bright light in the sky, that twinkled like an immense star, and seemed to have an unsteady, flickering motion as it pursued its weird way through the infinite space of the heavens.

Among those who first noticed the light was H.E. McHally, of house No. 3, and he gives a very accurate description of the mysterious visitor. It appeared first in the zenith of the heavens, and gradually passed towards the southwest, growing dimmer all the time until finally it faded away. It resembled a star, except that it was much larger and brighter than any ordinary star. It seemed to be moving at an unusually fast rate, and was watched by a large number of people, who made all sorts of guesses as to its nature.

It is probable that the light was nothing else than the star Alpha Orionis or Betelgeuse. This star is visible every evening in the western horizon, moving at an apparently remarkable rate of speed, and finally disappearing in the murky atmosphere of the horizon. Professor S.J. Corrigan, of St. Paul, was one of the first to attribute to this star the many reports about the air ship.

"The star that has caused all this talk is always seen in the present position at this time of the year," he says. "It is the largest star in the constellation of Orion—the mighty hunter' of mythology—the constellation which with its three stars in line forming the 'belt,' and three others making the 'sword,' is every evening to be seen slowly sloping down to the west," as described in 'Locksley Hall.' Every schoolboy knows that astronomers name the stars in a constellation in their order of brightness by the letters of the Greek alphabet—Alpha, Beta, Gamma, etc. The brightest star in Orion which on the sidereal maps is placed in the shoulder of the 'mighty hunter,' is therefore, called Alpha Orion, or when Latinized, Alpha Orionis. The name given it by Oriental astronomers is 'Betelgeuse.' Orion has ~~another~~ another star of the first magnitude, Beta Orionis, or Rigel, which is in his foot.

"The apparently wavering or dancing motion of Betelgeuse is peculiar to all stars in similar positions in the sky, and is caused by the irregular refraction of the rays of light, and is only an optical illusion. It is ridiculous to suppose that there is really such a motion of the star. The change of colors is also due solely to atmospheric influences. People have noticed these things for all time, but only the ignorant have ever been disturbed by them, and it is singular that they are not better and more generally understood at this day.

1897 April 24 (Sat. eve.) Saginaw Globe, p. 6.

WATCHING AN "AIRSHIP." / Interested Crowds Gaze Upon a Bright Twinkling Star.

A large number of people saw, or thought they saw, the mysterious "airship" last evening. Away off in the southwestern sky was a light that twinkled in the hazy atmosphere. Germania avenue and Franklin. Some one saw it and imagined that it moved. A crowd gathered at the corner of Germania avenue and Franklin street and sized it up. Many were certain they saw the light move and it twinkled peculiarly as the smoke from the street railway tower house floated in between it and the ~~many~~ beholders. One old gentleman on Park street detected red and green lights and became considerably exercised over the affair. But it was only a star and acted no differently than a one a few degrees further up in the sky.

Wed. Apr. 21, 8. Saw a Red Light. / But It Was Not the Airship and Quickly Disappeared.

A prominent west side merchant repeated to the Globe the following story and sequel: "I went to the club a few nights ago and while awaiting the arrival of some friends with whom I had an appointment, was drawn into a game of pool. My friends arriving meanwhile, started a game of pool at the next table and I took a cue in that game also, playing in the two games alternately. This got me very much excited and as I left the club to go home, I saw a red light ahead of me which I was ~~unable~~ unable to overtake. I thought of the airship and tried to dispel the vision, but only succeeded when I closed my eyes for a moment. On opening them again there would be that fatal red light. As I opened my front door ~~and~~ it proceeded me into the house, I got desperate and espied a bottle of beer. When I had drunk the last drop, presto, the red light had gone. I advise any who wish to avoid seeing airships, red and green lights and other things to drink one bottle of beer—no more."

1897 April 25 (Sun) Detroit Free Press, p. 3.

Still They Come. / Farmer Vows He Saw the Airship in Daytime.

Flint, Mich., April 24—(Special)—News reached here this morning that the much-talked-of airship was hovering between the earth and about three miles east of this city, in the township of Burton, and that farmers had caught a glimpse of the phantom ship. A Free Press correspondent at once began a tour of investigation and reached the residence of Daniel Gray, who resides upon the King farm on the Lapeer road, in the township of Burton about three miles east of the city. Here a clew was struck which threw some light upon the much-talked-of but rather mythical air ship. To the correspondent Farmer Gray related that yesterday and while working in the field, he heard a terrible rumbling and whirring sound directly over his head. He looked up and saw a dark object flying through the air with lightning-like rapidity. For a moment he was dazed, but when he again looked up the ghost-like object had passed beyond his vision, but he saw a paper flying to the earth which he immediately picked up, and upon investigation it proved to be a newspaper published at Toronto, Canada, bearing date October 5, 1896. The newspaper in question was shown and examined by your correspondent. The paper was dry and well preserved, and suffered little, if any, injury in its flight from the heavens. The fine state of preservation of the newspaper taken in connection with other facts in the story would indicate that Mr. Gray was not dreaming when he heard the rumbling noise.

1897 April 26 (Mon) Flint (Mich) Daily News, p. 3.

STICKS TO HIS AIRSHIP STORY / A Correspondent Who Declines to Be Bluffed Out by Newspaper Criticism.

Editor News:—As I believe that I have been maliciously and ungenerously abused and my spotless character damaged by the articles appearing in the two Davison papers last Friday, I beg a little space in your paper to set myself aright again before a deceived public. It seems that they both doubt my articles about the airship simply because they are not acquainted with the referees given and because they did not see it. I see that the index man calls me such hard names that he can't spell them right. Now, I can excuse them for not being up at 10:30 p.m., because I expect they both fill the offices of editor, typesetter, reporter, devil, generalissimo, chore boy, correspondent, etc., and of course need rest. But perhaps they thought there was not wind enough abroad to float an airship after they had retired; well, it is true it did have to fall back on the small supply of nature as to the people mentioned, they probably think that simply because they don't advertise in their papers that there are no such men living but there are; they live on Liberty street. Besides, Mr. Editor, if I should want to lower myself so low as to lie I believe there are more than two licenses out to lie. Now, I suppose our Davison editors will think that the name signed to this article is fictitious, but they mustn't think that they know everone, even if they do think they have a monopoly of the wind and wisdom of Davison.

JACKSON HANLEY.

Davison, April 26, 1897.

1897 April 27 (Tues) Daily Chronicle, Marshall, Mich., p. 3.

Two Marshall ladies claim to have seen the airship the other night. The airship which residents of Lacey claimed to have seen turned out to be a cross-cut saw suspended from an apple tree in an orchard, with the moon shining on it.

15,3. Of course the arsp is a Battle Creek invention, at least so claims the Moon. May 1, p.3. Homerites are taking on airs because not one of them have seen the airship—an argument, they contend, in favor of their temperance proclivities.

May 4, p. 3. Mars is trying to communicate—a 30 lb. aerolite with hieroglyphs fell in Belgium and flash lights have been seen on planet.

April 13, p.3. Brevities / Battle Creek people are the nerviest set on the face of the earth. Their assertion that they have seen the airship proves the truth of this statement. Their claim might appear more reasonable were it not that yesterday's paper exposed the fake [Hawkeye fake, Apr. 12, p.1], and furthermore were an airship gyrating around in the vicinity of Battle Creek, it goes without saying that the people of that aspiring burg would have lassoed it without hesitation, and had it on exhibition long before now, for the purposes of attracting admiring crowds from the surrounding country.

1897 April 28 (Wed. eve) Flint, Mich., Daily News, p. 2.

The Airship at Geneseville (Around the State).

A gentleman who came down from Geneseville this morning reported that that phantom of aerial navigation, the airship, had been seen at that place last night. Several persons claim to have seen the ship and say it displayed three different colors of light—red, blue and green. It first appeared in the west and after sailing some distance to the south retraced its course and then went up out of sight. As having a possible bearing upon the credibility of the witnesses to the alleged spectacle, the fact might incidentally be mentioned that Geneseville is strictly a prohibition town.

28, p.3—While the Airship / is sailing round and about us we are doing the same thing—at least our wagons are—gathering laundry from all parts of the city, and it's no myth, either. We mean the laundry work. Home Steam Laundry ad.

Airship Seen at Sidnaw.

A correspondent at Sidnaw, "who will not subscribe his name for fear people will say he had taken a glass too much," sends a story of the airship which he claims to have seen on the night of the 26th. According to his account he had a better view than most of those who claim to have seen the strange craft have been favored with. He says "Last night (Monday) I was taking a short walk before retiring for the night. As a rule I am a person who retires early, but this night I happened to be out late. It was about 11 o'clock.

"I happened to cast my eyes upward, and to my astonishment I saw three large lights, red, green and white. When I first noticed the strange object it seemed to be about over Booth's mill, and was sailing in a southeasterly direction. It was going, perhaps, sixty miles an hour. I was near the Nester estate warehouse at the time, and before I could get up town and call the attention of anyone else to the sight the ship had disappeared from view.

"It was a bright night, and I could plainly discern a cigar shaped object and a basket below, somewhat resembling a street car. I should judge it was ~~xxx~~ about 2,000 feet from the ground."

1897 May 1 (Sat) Detroit Free Press, p. 3

State Items

The airship, balloon or whatever it is was seen by two residents of Dayton, Tuscola County, at 2 o'clock Thursday morning as they were returning home from sitting up with a sick neighbor. They said the object which they saw looked like a big cigar with a basket hanging under it. There were lights around the basket, and the forms of three persons were distinctly seen. The airship was traveling southward at a rapid rate.

Mon. May 3, p. 3--State Items.

It can be said to the credit of Stanton that none of the citizens have seen the wonderful airship that has been the subject of so many newspaper dispatches of late. * Stanton is certainly gaining a reputation as a temperance town.--Stanton Clipper. May 3, p. 4--A 3-days' rain is not without its compensations. During the downpour nobody claims to have seen the airship. 7,7--Barnard; ditto 15, 1

Sun. May 9, p. 1xx 16(eds)--The mounted policeman in Omaha who chased a girl scorcher [bicycle speedster] without success, came back to headquarters and reported that he was mistaken. Said it was an air ship that he saw.

Sun May 9 p. 32--Beautiful Mirage. / Nature's Treat to Citizens of Petoskey.

Petoskey, Mich., May 8.--(Special.)--Petoskey witnessed this afternoon the most beautiful mirage ever seen in this region and the first for many years. Beaver Islands, forty miles distant, and Seven Mile Point, about fifteen miles away, hung suspended over the bay between here and Harbor Springs for several minutes, then gradually faded away, being visible in part for more than an hour. The day has been warm.

15, 4--The Nashville airship is all right if you don't mind walking back. 1897 May 1 (Sat) Flint, Mich., Daily News, p. 3.

Fragments of Flint--The airship, balloon or whatever it is, was seen by two residents of Dayton, Tuscola county, at 2 o'clock Thursday morning as they were returning home from sitting up with a sick neighbor. They said the object which they saw looked like a big cigar with a basket hanging under it. There were lights around the basket and the forms of three persons were distinctly seen. The airship was traveling southward at a rapid rate.

May 5 p. 4--Edison debunks arap.

Tues May 11 p. 3--The Airship in Flint. / One of Flint's prominent citizens is willing to make affidavit that while on his way home last evening about 9:30 he saw the much-talked-of airship, in which were seated three men smoking Royal Banker 5c cigars made by Chaser, Street and Co.

ILLINOIS

April 6, 1897 Chicago Record (Wed.), p. 1

Airship Gets into Illinois.

Nashville Citizens See a Strange Sight at 8 O'Clock at Night. / Special to the Chicago Record.

Nashville, Illinois, April 5.--What appeared to be a balloon, but what ~~xxx~~ ~~xxxx~~ many who saw it think was the mysterious airship of Kansas and Nebraska, passed over this city about 8 o'clock to-night. It was first seen in the northwest, a large red light, and as it approached the city a dark outline was faintly discerned. The fact that the object travelled against the wind is considered proof that it was not a balloon.

1897 April 7 (Wed) Chicago Record p. 3.

(card 1)

Airship Visits Omaha / People Have a Good View of It / Knights of Ak-Sar-Ben Suspend an Initiation Long Enough to Make Out the Form of the Flying Machine--Seen by Street-Car Men.

Omaha, Neb., April 6.--The supposed airship that has visited this section repeatedly of late was seen here again last night. It was the first time the outlines of the vessel could be clearly seen. It was gazed upon for a long time in various parts of the city by crowds. The people are much excited and the airship is the leading topic of conversation. A list of 100 names of prominent persons who saw the vessel might be secured. Among those who saw it and permitted the use of their names as witnesses were these business men: O.D. Kiplinger, W.I. Hawks, H.K. Burkett, A. Hoase, Jr., Gould Dietz, L.P. Funkhauser and Arthur Guion [Guion?].

About fifty members of the Knights of Ak-Sar-Ben were treated to a sight of the airship, the aerial object being observed twice and each time for a space of from five to eight minutes.

About 9 o'clock, while an initiation was in progress, the attention of a few members was attracted by a bright light flashing past the west windows of the "den." They immediately sprang to the window and saw a light which ~~xxxxxxx~~ appeared to be at least eighteen inches in diameter. The reflection from this light passed along what appeared to be a steel body, the length of which was estimated at from twelve to thirty feet. The object was about three quarters of a mile high and a little over a mile west of the "den."

Watch the Flying Machine.

The airship was watched for some five or six minutes. Its course was due south until it reached, so near as could be judged, about the southern limits of South Omaha, the distance from the "den" being covered in about three minutes. It then described a semi-circle to the east, following that direction for about a mile, when it turned to the north, against the northeast wind, and travelled in that direction about half a mile. It then turned east, and was lost behind a bank of clouds.

The knights returned to the "den," and after the initiation, while waiting for cars, the airship was again seen far to the southwest, but beating rapidly up against the wind to the north and passed out of sight.

Scores of people who were out at 9:30 o'clock assert positively that they saw the mechanical bird as it floated over the city in a direction from northeast to southwest.

Describes the Strange Object.

A motorman on the Sherman avenue streetcar line gives the best description of the ship. His name is W.H. Newville, and his words are verified by a dozen people who were aboard the car. He got his first view of the curiosity near Sherman avenue and Binney street. He was so surprised that he stopped his motor and rang his bell for the conductor to come forward. They both stood on the front platform, and assert that they secured a good view of the airship.

According to the motorman's description, the ship was about 600 feet in the air, and was almost directly over the car when he first saw it. It appeared in the gloom to be about 90 feet in length, and was elliptical in form. Forward and aft on the sides were large projections which seemed to be large wings, and at the forward end there was a bright headlight. At the rear was carried a red lantern. The ship, for a few seconds, appeared to slow down, and was almost stationary in the air, and then, gathering speed once more, sailed away. It disappeared in the direction of Hanawa.

A number of people in the downtown streets aver that they also saw the ship. All descriptions of the ship tally in regard to the lights, for all who were fortunate enough to get a glimpse of the "thing" which is causing so much conjecture say that it carried two of them, and that they were red and white.

Seen at Kearney, Neb. / Special to Chi. Record.

Kearney, Neb., April 6.--The airship that has been seen recently in Kansas hovered over western Nebraska several weeks ago and was seen at Hastings, Grand Island, York, Quovale and Kearney by reputable citizens. At this place it was never seen excepting after night, and then nothing but a large, fierce light was ever seen. When visible it was always too far away to get any idea of its mechanism. Its motions, as described by those who saw it, were identical with the motions described by the Kansas dispatches. A great many people here who did not see it argued that those who had were deceived by the brilliant appearance of Venus. This, however, could hardly be, judging from the many accurate descriptions of the motion and movement of the strange light by many people who are not given to sensational stories.

April 9, 1897 Chicago Record (Fri.), p. 1.

Airship Appears in Iowa

Seen at Many Points Between West Liberty and Cedar Rapids. Special to the Chicago Record.

Burlington, Iowa, April 8.--The airship, which has frequently made its appearance in neighboring states, has been seen by hundreds of people in eastern Iowa to-night. Reports from all along the line of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern railroad say that the mysterious aerial craft has been seen by every operator and station agent between West Liberty and Cedar Rapids. They all describe it about the same way. A bright glaring headlight, revealing a glistening steel hull, dim winglike projections on either side and a hissing sound as it glides through the air. Excitement exists at all the above-mentioned points, and people crowd the streets of the towns and cities in hope of catching sight of the object.

Special to the Chicago Record.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, April 8.--The airship was seen here to-night. It was first noticed about 9 o'clock, when it was seen in the north-west heavens at an angle of about forty-five degrees. It was moving slowly, and by 10 o'clock had faded from view. At 10:30 o'clock a dispatch from Northwood, in the extreme northern part of the state, said the mysterious ship was due west of there. Here it looked like an immense star, swaying from side to side.

1897 April 9 (Fri) Evening Telegraph (Dixon, Ill.), p. 4.

Mysterious Airship Is Said to Be Cruising Around.

The mysterious airship, which has been sighted at various points in Kansas and southern Nebraska during the past month, has been seen on numerous occasions within a week by a number of Belleville (Kans.)

people. More than fifty persons had a plain view of it the other night about 10 o'clock as it was going south and three or four more saw it the next morning at 5 o'clock as it was returning north. It has been seen on at least four successive nights, and so plainly that there can be no possible mistake. It was also seen at Lincoln and Beatrice, Mo., and at Marysville, Washington and Haddam, Kan., by several persons at each place. The airship seems to be under perfect control of the navigator--rising, lowering and changing direction and speed in prompt obedience to the steering gear. The ship has a brilliant electric headlight, which appears to be larger than the headlight of a locomotive, and by which the movement of the airship may be watched long after the ship is lost in darkness. The speed of the airship is estimated by those who have seen it to be from sixty to seventy-five miles an hour. On one occasion this week, when it passed over Belleville, it moved so close to the ground that the headlight made the city ~~xxxx~~ almost as light as day. The ship seemed to stop a few miles northeast of the city, remaining stationary for twenty or thirty minutes. Then it sailed up and down, north, south, east, west, now rapidly, now slowly, as if the navigator were testing the possibilities of his machine. It rose at one time far above some scattering clouds, and then sailed away to the north and was lost to view. At 2 o'clock in the morning it was seen going south again, and three hours later was seen on its way north.--Ex.

1897 April 9 (Fri) Arcus (Rock Island, Ill.), p. 5. (card 1)

SAW THE AIRSHIP. / Vision Presented to a Rock Island Star Gazer. / MYSTERIOUS TRAVELER PASSES / Reports from Other Places Where the "Mystery Body Was Discovered in Midair--A Chance for Vanquished Local Politicians.

The air ship has been seen in Rock Island. And a member of Andy Etzel's force of star gazers claims to have been the modern Christopher Columbus. The blue coat declares that while patrolling his beat in the east end of town last night, he heard a rattle in the atmosphere, and gazing skyward was astounded by the appearance of a swift moving mass that seemed to have an eye like a ball of fire. It was not more than half a mile overhead, the copper asserts, and was traveling north of east. It was in the early hours of morning, and its passage broke the still air of night like the distant whiz of an electric rotor car. There seemed to be a glittering steel hull, with dim wing-like projections on either side, and it swayed gently in its flight. The policeman did not speak to the strange traveler. He was too amazed to give utterance to sound, and before he fully realized what had happened he awoke to a realization of what had happened, or had not happened about him.

The Chicago papers of this morning contain dispatches from various cities in Iowa stating that the mysterious heavenly visitor was seen at different places in the eastern part of the state. Between 9 o'clock and midnight it seems to have followed the tracer of the main line of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern railroad from Burlington to West Liberty. At Cedar Rapids there appears to be apparently indisputable evidence of the ship having been observed. Reports from train dispatchers along the Northwestern road indicate that the celestial traveler had been visible at intervals along the company's line in northern and eastern Iowa, and those brought it back as far as West Liberty, when trace of it was lost about midnight. Still later, or rather at an early hour this morning, the ship is claimed to have been seen at Rockford--that was probably after the vision of the Rock Island policeman.

The flight of the air ship has been a subject of newspaper comment in the west for several weeks. First it was heard of in Nebraska, then at Sioux City and then further east in Iowa. At Grinnell a number of people were badly scared, and a man strolling in the railway waiting room will make out that he saw it. Then the next information came last night. Whether or not the ship will hover over Rock Island again with a view to catching the same policeman on the lookout remains to be seen--but the temptation is great.

Chance for Vanquished Politicians. The appearance of the air ship offers a chance for the vanquished republican politicians in Rock Island. They may induce the mysterious ethereal visitor to make a landing here on its next passage, and thus take them on such a voyage as would give their troubles ample opportunity to air. Ed Wilcox might vary the monotony of aerial travel by relating stirring war reminiscences: Billy Baker could sing "Up in a Balloon," John Scott, "The letter that Come too late," Dr. Holcomb might be induced to warble to the twinkling star about those being other nebulae on the sky, etc, while all might join in one swelling chorus, "Way Ah Boyah, but not Cool Eye," "Water Chief to the Ship, Boys," "Again We'll Gather Round the Corner," etc.

At all events we may expect a more steadfast lookout in Rock Island hereafter for "Sains that Pass in the Night."

April 10, 1897 Chicago Record (Sat.) p. 5 (Letters)

That Mysteri-ous Airship.--It was reported in a recent dispatch to a Chicago paper that the mysterious airship had been seen at this place by hundreds in the early evening of Saturday, April 3. I took it upon myself to hunt down the report, and for several days I have been busy in doing so; but I have not found a person who saw it or thought he saw it. I have not found a person who had seen another who claimed to have seen it or any mysterious object of any kind "hover in the air. This is a small town and such an occurrence could not be concealed from the general public, and it could not be concealed if it could. The excitement produced by the so-called airship was not a subject for the whole town; it is no doubt a "fake" from the beginning. It certainly is a fake as regards this place.

Rock Island, Illinois, April 6.

Weather in April 1897 in Chicago--often rainy, floods in the lake; dust, wind, often cold--highly variable spring.
April 10, 1897 Chicago Tribune (Sat.) pp. 1, 2 (card 1)

See Airship or a Star

Vagrant of the Night Sky Startles All but Prof. Hough. Appears All Along from Evanston to South Chicago--Some Observers Declare They See Wings--Astronomer Says It Is Alpha Orionis--Secretary of Aeronautical Association Says He Expected the Travellers from 'Frisco Sunday, but They're Ahead of Time.

Either the long-expected airship from the Pacific coast reached Chicago at 8:30 o'clock last evening or the fixed star, Alpha Orionis, shone with unusual brilliancy, which was augmented by the tricks of refraction. Hundreds of persons in Evanston, Niles Center, Schererville, South Chicago, and even in Chicago looked at the strange phenomenon off in the eastern sky and were convinced it was the storied vehicle of the heavens that has been worrying the inhabitants of Podunk and Squab Corners for a fortnight.

At 2 a.m. the ship, or star, or meteor, or what-not appeared over the western horizon, to spectators in Chicago looking out on Madison street, as of the size and color of an orange. It hung in the sky for a time, and bore more of the appearance of the full moon than a star. Its nature is somewhat of a mystery.

Prof. G. W. Hough of Dearborn Observatory, Evanston, was one person in the classic suburb who refused to be hypnotized by the spectacle. He persisted it was a plain star of the first magnitude, had been in the sky for some years, and carried none of the present population of San Francisco, as the "airship" is known to do.

Some of the Witnesses.

Thorne and Libberton of the Evanston life-saving crew and Captain Lawson and his wife stake their fortunes with the airship side of the proposition. J. W. Donnell, once president of the Chicago Aeronautical Society, a resident of Evanston, is with them. H. D. Wright, editor of the Index, is an airship partisan, and scoffs at the star in Orion. George D. Corson, H. P. Williams, L. J. Conkey, Robert Milne, Charles Burkett, and G. W. Hill, all of Evanston, are ready to testify that the spectacle was an airship.

In numbers they are weightier than Prof. Hough, but he turned a telescope on the heavenly visitor and they had only field glasses.

Various descriptions were given of the strange object that set the above citizens and nearly 800 others agape in Davis street, Evanston, but the descriptions agreed on points of major interest. The object described sweeping through the heavens bore vari-colored lights, according to all accounts. All declare the brightest light was white, and seemed to be backed by a reflector that could be turned, swinging its searchlight rays from side to side through the night air.

Behind this some discerned a small red light, which others failed to observe; but again all agreed that still farther behind the big white headlight could be seen a smaller white light and a green light, side by side, and Evanston is a prohibition town.

Position in Sky.

According to the reports from different points the course of the heavenly vagrant was erratic enough to satisfy the highest requirements of aerial navigation. At Evanston, the object was first observed in the east, over the lake and low in the sky. It came nearer and nearer, being watched in its flight by a small crowd that grew up to a multitude before the vision had disappeared. Evanston observers say the moving object seemed to be about 650 feet above the earth, and that it held a practical true course westward. It was during this period of its flight that the same phenomena were observed by residents in Niles Center and Schererville, though at a greater distance.

A little more than half an hour later similar lights were described over the lake, east of the city and bound southward, the red, or starboard, light being plainly seen.

Disappears Over South Chicago.

The latest glimpse of the traveler of the darkness was caught by South Chicagoans at about 9:30 o'clock, when numerous persons state they saw an object like that already described approach the land from out over the lake, and, after reaching a point some distance inland, turn slowly to the northwest and fade away into the night and darkness. These persons offer affidavits and previously good reputations.

At several points the moving wonder was observed by persons equipped with small telescopes or powerful field-glasses, and these persons claim to have described the outlines of a structure bearing the light. The consensus of judgment, on the uncertain basis for estimating the dimensions of bodies moving through the air at unknown distances, is that the main body of the night-flyer was about 70 feet in length, of slender proportions, and fragile construction. To this body, it is reported, were attached the movable headlight and the other lights described. A few observers claim they also saw, a short distance above the body, lateral structures resembling wings or sails. These appeared to be about 20 feet in width, and, as they were seen from one side, their length could not be accurately estimated.

But there is general interest in what Prof. J. P. 2/ Hough says. He turned his telescope on the object at 10 o'clock. After noting the time and declination of the light he announced that it was a fixed star in the constellation Orion. Alpha Orionis is its scientific name, it being a star of the first magnitude.

He said the star is simply following its regular course in the heavens and can be seen any evening with the naked eye when the sky is clear. It rises early in the evening and is discernible at 7:45 o'clock.

At its highest and on a clear night resembles a ball of fire. The effect of the atmosphere on the star's rays makes it appear to change from white to red and then to green. The constellation of Orion in the northwest portion of the firmament. At about 10:47, setting a few minutes later each night until it becomes a day star.

Late last night some of the believers in the airship theory were willing to accept Prof. Hough's explanation, as it agreed with their observations. Prof. Hough will make further observations tonight.

Hough Thinks It Is the Ship.
In Chicago there is a general disposition to laugh at the "airship" theory, but Attorney Max L. Hamaar, Secretary of the Chicago Aeronautical Association, does not smile at it. To him the fact of the airship moving over the country was not a surprise.

"There is only one thing that surprises me in the presence of the airship tonight," said Mr. Hamaar. "We expected it Sunday and it is hard for me to believe the vessel arrived here so soon unless the conditions were exceptionally favorable. Yes, I have a good idea concerning all this mystery. I know one of the men who is in the airship. The car contains three people, but the exaggerated stories concerning the ship are laughable.

"Spectators have announced it as their belief that the ship was composed of steel. This is a mistake. It is paper. There is the customary inflated reservoir, but the inventors have discovered the secret of practical propulsion. They can steer the vessel in any direction they desire.

"Word was received here several weeks ago that the party had started from San Francisco, and that the ship would stop here for the purpose of registration. The end of the trip is to be at Washington City, where the ship will be brought to earth and given up for inspection.

Reception Set for Sunday.
"We had intended to give the party a reception here next Sunday. It must be very cold travelling at this season of the year, but I understand the inmates of the car are well bundled up. The only new feature applied to the propulsion is the fact that the posterior of the propeller is flexible and elastic, while the anterior is rigid. The fans have a peculiar twisting motion. President Octave Chanute, of the Chicago Society, has full information concerning the ship. He, with a number of other wealthy men interested in the problem, has furnished the money for the venture. Mr. Chanute is in California at the present time. I would not care to furnish full details as to the experiment, as it could be unfair to the inventors and would take off the edge of public interest."

The Aeronautical Society's secretary was serious, but the Hough idea of this heavenly apparition found favor with the masses and the joke seemed to lie in Davis street, Evanston.

Looked Oblong at Mt. Carroll, Ill.
"Airship at That Point Was Moving West at a Terrific Rate of Speed."

Mount Carroll, Ill., April 9.--(Special.)--Hundreds of persons on the street tonight--persons whose honesty and truthfulness are beyond dispute--saw the airship about 8:40 o'clock. It came from the north east, and then opposite the city changed its course and went due west in a terrific speed. It was in sight at least ten minutes. It appeared oblong in shape and carried a great red light. In length it did not appear to be over eight or ten feet, and two or three feet high. So many people saw it there is no disputing the fact that something unusual appeared.

Egg-Shaped Men Seen in Wisconsin.
"Mysterious Aerial Visitor Appears in Two States Within a Period of Half an Hour."

Wausau, Wisconsin, April 9.--(Special.)--The airship made its appearance in Wausau last night about 10 o'clock and was viewed by at least one hundred citizens. It came from the southeast, passing over the city going northwest. Lights could be seen attached to the ship. A dim outline of it could be seen, which appeared to be snaped like an egg.

Nebraska City, Neb., April 9.--(Special.)--At 9:30 o'clock last night several persons observed the lights of the supposed airship approaching from the southeast, and after passing over the city it disappeared, going due northeast when last seen.

1897 April 10 (Sat) Evening Telegraph (Dixon, Ill.), p. 1. (card 1)

THAT AIR SHIP. / It Visited Dixon--Was Seen to Pass Nearly Over Our City. /

To speak of that air ship is good diction. It looked for awhile as though Dixon was destined to be left out in the cold and not enjoy a visit from the now famous airship that has been sailing over the plains of Nebraska and Iowa; but Thursday night the machine took a trip east and on its return passed nearly over the western portion of our city. James H. Clark Thursday evening just before nine o'clock saw the nightly wanderer in the sky. He was coming home from Amboy on his Standard Oil wagon and when on the Chicago road southeast of Dixon, a half mile or so from the Northwestern railroad crossing, that passes over the wagon road, he saw in the south-west sky what first appeared to be a bright star, but observing that it was moving very rapidly, he was naturally very much astonished. It appeared, when he first saw it, to be nearly a mile south of the North-western depot, passing rapidly in a northwesterly direction. The same night--wanderer was seen about the same hour by the people of Mt. Carroll hovering near that city, as we learn from Chicago papers. As the thing

Mr. Clark saw was passing in the direction of Mt. Carroll near the time it was seen there, it was undoubtedly the same air ship. However, it did not pass near enough to Mr. Clark for him to see anything except a bright light, which, at times, flashed out as brilliant as an electric street lamp only a few blocks distant, and then disappeared so that there could only be seen the reflection of the light upon the clouds. It was a cloudy night. This fact of disappearance and brightness alternating would correspond with the statements that the air ship has a search-light which sweeps from one side to the other, and, therefore, it could not be seen by Mr. Clark when trained in an opposite direction. He believes that it was flying at the rate of about seventy-five miles an hour. It was in view several minutes, and passed out of sight over the hills in the direction of Palmyra, as he drove down into the hollow near the railroad crossing, in the suburbs of Dixon.

Several boys--Joseph Cook of this office, and Alf Rickard--saw a bright moving star in the west last night, so they report.

Groceryman Condon was in Storm Lake, Iowa, Friday, where great excitement prevails on account of the air ship. It was distinctly seen by him and many others from the top of a hotel, through a glass. It was not very high, and not only the light, but the outlines of the vehicle could be plainly observed.

1897 April 10 (Sat eve) Galena, Ill., Gazette, p. 3.

THAT AERIAL VISITOR. / Mysterious Airship Probably a Natural Phenomenon.

That mysterious "airship" which was first discovered in Nebraska--the home of Bryan and populism, by the way--has become as much in evidence that it attracts some attention even from astronomers. If it is a "fake" it is the largest joke perpetrated since the immortal Tom Collins episode. If the ~~xxxxx~~ aerial mystery existed originally only in the imagination of some Nebraskan newspaper man he must ere this be convinced that he will not be the only Munchausen on the griddle when retribution comes. The airship has been seen in a score or more of places, and what is more, in every place a "large number of persons whose veracity is above question," did the seeing. Now, Galena people consider themselves as veracious as anyone else, and it must be confessed that no airship has been seen here.

A Gazette reporter interviewed Mr. John Westwick, who has on his residence premises the most perfect observatory in Illinois. Mr. Westwick said curiosity had impelled him to keep a watch for the mysterious visitor, but he had failed to discover it. The airship theory he laughed at, saying that "if such a wonderful invention had been perfected the inventor would let the world know of it before going to flirt with the clouds. Mr. Westwick thinks the phenomenon can be explained by reflections from electric lights thrown on the sky, the atmospheric conditions the last two weeks being favorable to such illusions.

1897 April 10 (Sat.) Morris, Ill. Daily Herald, p. 3.

About the City.
The much-talked of airship was seen going over Morris last night by a number of people, which proved to be a very novel sight, and immensely interesting to ~~xxxx~~ those who have read descriptions of the flying machines recently invented.

12.1. Hawkeye Fake.
Th. April 15, p. 2. Wauponsee Station.

B.J. Green thinks he saw the much talked of airship last Saturday night while going home from the camp of the M.W.A. But the goat was a little unruly that night, not having had much to do during the mad blockade, and probably that accounts for it. A.R. Newport says he might have seen the flying machine had he another optic to bring to bear on it.

1897 April 10 (Sat) Quincy, Ill., Daily Journal, p. 7.

That Mysterious Air Ship.
Isn't it about time that someone in Quincy was getting sight of the air ship which has been disturbing the inhabitants of Western states for the last three weeks?

The air ship is supposed to have started from California and has been seen in Kansas, Iowa and last night the people of Evanston, Illinois, say they saw it. To them it looked like an immense star, only it ~~was~~ [seemed] twice as large as the largest and brightest star in the skies. Some say that it gave a clear white light but others say that the color would change to a bright red and then to a green.

Columns and columns of stuff have been written about this mysterious object which is floating through the heavens in a rather reckless, haphazard manner, and it therefore behooves the snake editor of the ~~Hanna-Herald~~ to keep his eye open for the signals of the mysterious air ship.

P.S.--A Chicago says that the air ship is on its way to Dwight, but that the strong wind of yesterday blew it out of its course.

1897 April 10 (Sat) Quincy, Ill., Morning Whip, p. 11 (card 1)

THE AIR-SHIP OVER IOWA. / Many Iovans Claim to Have Seen It. / IT HAS A HUGE HEADLIGHT / And Wire-line Projections on Either Side--The Mysterious Craft Seen in Towns All Along the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern Railroad. /

West Liberty, Ia., April 9.--The mysterious air-ship which has appeared night after night at various points in Iowa and Nebraska recently, was seen last night by hundreds of reputable citizens all along the line of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern railroad, between here and Cedar Rapids. Reports from these points show that nearly every operator and station agent along the line saw the strange craft, and the pilot told about the same story: it was first seen about 7:30 in the evening, and the operator mounting his senses, asked the man at the next station if he could see a strange object in the sky between the two towns. The other operator realized that he had been watching a ship. The ship moved off, and other operators in the direction of the flight were warned of its approach, and thus town after town was prepared to gaze at it when it came in sight.

It is described by reputable citizens, who saw it, as having a large reflecting headlight probably two feet in diameter which sheds strong rays like that of a locomotive headlight, and to some extent prevented a good view of the body of the apparatus by its glare. However the glistening body of the ship could be discerned and the diamond-like projections on either side, as described by previous observers. The strange aerial craft moved swiftly through the air, making a slight hissing sound.

At times it seemed to be within 1,000 feet of the earth and at times seemed to pause in its flight as though its occupants were taking observations of the earth below.

No sound save the low hissing noise, which was only apparent when the machine was in swift motion, came to the wondering observers and if there were people in the craft their conversation was carried on in low tones or else the distance was too high above the earth for the sound to carry.

The strange object was in view generally from twenty minutes to half an hour and usually disappeared in a westerly direction. At least a hundred trustworthy people declare they saw the air-ship, but none of them are willing to swear they were not dreaming, so strange and unreal does its appearance seem to them.

SOLOM, Ia., April 9.--The airship was seen north of here about 8:30 last night. It seemed to take a westward course, and was visible for about forty-five minutes, then gradually disappeared to the west. It was viewed by a number of Solom's most prominent business men whose integrity cannot be doubted.

WELLS BLAIR, Ia., April 9.--The airship that has been mystifying western people has been observed in this county. One of the most reputable physicians of Clinton says that all the members of his family observed the mysterious aerial machine and distinctly heard it swishing through the air. The air ship first appeared low down in the southwest about 9 o'clock and could plainly be observed to travel in a swaying manner like a bird flying against a wind, and darting to and fro, would rise up quickly and lower itself with a gentle, easy motion and remain under perfect control of the navigator. It was going in a northerly direction.

CLARKE, Ia., April 9.--The air ship was seen here last night. It was first noticed about 9 o'clock, when it was seen in the northwest heaven at an angle of about 45 degrees. It was moving slowly, and by 10 o'clock had faded from view. At 10:30 o'clock a dispatch from Northwood, in the extreme northern part of the state, said the mysterious ship was due west of there. Here it looked like an airplane, but coming from side to side.

1897 April 10 (Sat) Springfield (Ill) News (Telegraph), p.1.

THE KANSAS AIRSHIP. / Seen Sailing Through the Heavens Over Rockford Last Night. / Captain Elisha Thayer and Frank Thayer Witnessed the Strange Nocturnal Visitor as With Bright Green and White Glints It Scooted Through the Etheral. /

The mysterious aerial, which has been creating such a commotion in Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas for the past fortnight, has at last struck Illinois and was seen in a number of the towns in the state last night, not far from two but by scores of people, and Rockford was fortunate enough to be included in the itinerary of this strange and eerie nocturnal visitor.

By two persons at least, whose word can be relied upon, this weird thing was seen sailing over the city last evening. Captain Elisha Thayer and his brother, Frank Thayer, have the honor of having seen this queer pilgrim of the night on its journey athwart the etheral that lies above Rockford.

It was about 8:30 when Elish and Frank wandered here to seek repose upon their downy couches. Elish had just thrown the far end of a fragrant Havana away as he was about to enter the house. Being something of a star gazer himself he casually cast his eye across the diamond studded dome of heaven. As he did so he noticed a strange, moving light, or lights, moving towards the southwest. There seemed to be a quartet of the swiftly moving glims, two green and two of a whitish color. He called Frank's attention to the phenomenon and it didn't take them longer than three jerks of a spring lark's tail, with green feet on the side, to decide that the strange lights were the illuminating arrangement of the Kansas airship. It sailed very low and several times before it disappeared from sight they were almost positive they could hear the sound of human voices coming from the terrestrial (sic) regions in the direction of the airship. They xxx watched the light as it slowly grew more distant and dimmer and finally faded from view.

The boys will bank their last sou that the object they saw was no illusion. They even took turns in pinching each other and to make assurance doubly sure, Elish had Frank run a pin through the lobe of his left ear to make sure he was not in a trance. He carries the mark of the pin today as evidence that he was not dreaming.

In Iowa the past week the airship has been cutting up all sorts of doings and has been seen in scores of towns in different parts of the Hawkeye state by people whose reliability, veracity and sobriety never has been questioned.

Last evening early it was seen at Evanston and later at night people at Mount Carroll declare they saw the airship. The tire it was seen here would about bring it due in its trip from Evanston to Mount Carroll.

It is safe to say that for the next few nights many Rockford people will keep on the lookout for the--air ships that pass in the night.

He Calls It a Star.

On top of all these proofs comes the following contradictory telegram, received by the Republic this afternoon:

Chicago, April 10.--The air ship which people claim to have seen for many nights past, is declared by Prof. Hough of the Dearborn observatory to be the star Alpha Orionis.

And there you are--

1897 April 10 (Sat) Springfield (Ill) News (Telegraph), p.1.

A MYSTIC AIRSHIP / IS VISIBLE AT MANY POINTS. / MANY PEOPLE IN ILLINOIS / WISCONSIN AND IOWA GET A SIGHT OF THE STRANGE AERIAL VISITOR--EXCITES CURIOSITY. /

Kankakee, Ill., April 10.--About 100 prominent citizens of Kankakee saw an air ship going in a northeasterly direction at 9 o'clock last night. The vessel was probably 1,000 feet above the earth and moving very rapidly at this distance. The headlight appeared as large as an ordinary electric arc light. At one time the vessel rose very rapidly and afterward seemed to drop a long distance. In addition to the headlight, spectators claimed to have noticed smaller lights behind, indicating that the vessel is of considerable size. It was apparently headed towards Chicago and traveled very rapidly, after hovering over Kankakee about ten minutes. Among the prominent citizens who watched the progress of the machine were ex-United States Marshal R.D. Sherman, Trainmaster Coopman, of the Illinois Central Railway, and Attorney William R. Hunter.

Mount Carroll, Ill., April 10.--Hundreds of people whose honesty and truthfulness are beyond dispute saw an air ship about 8:40 last night evening. It came from the northeast and when opposite this city changed its course and went due west at a terrific speed. It was in sight at least ten minutes. It appeared oblong in shape and carried a great red light. So many people saw it that there is no disputing the fact that something unusual appeared. The people who saw it were in various parts of the city.

Marion, Ia., April 10.--An air ship passed in a southerly direction over this town at 2:05 o'clock yesterday morning. It was seen by the night operators of the Western Union Telegraph company and others. It appeared to be about 500 feet above the ground. The outlines were distinctly visible against the sky. The ship gave out two bright lights of an electric glow.

Wausau, Wis., April 10.--What was supposed to be an air ship was seen passing over this city Thursday night about 10 o'clock. Lights could be distinguished from a dark object far up in the heavens, which had the appearance of being shaped like an egg. It was viewed here by at least fifty persons.

Emetsburg, Ia., April 10.--Thursday evening a large reddish light was seen passing westward from this city and also from Redman. It resembled a locomotive light and was perhaps about 1,000 feet above the earth. The editor of the West Bend Journal saw it while waiting for a train and has a long account of it in his paper. It is thought to have been a balloon or an air ship. The persons who saw it are thoroughly responsible.

1897 April 10 (Sat) Sterling, Ill., Evening Gazette, p. 2. (card 1)

SHIP OF THE AIR. / "LIKE A DIAMOND IN THE KKY SKY." / Was Seen Over Sterling Last Night by Hundreds Who Say It "Do Move."

The mysterious air ship which has been sighted at various points in Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa, is claimed to have been seen by Sterling people last night.

The sky was cloudless when at 8:30 the ship was seen moving in a northwesterly direction. It was thousands of feet in the air and appeared like a large star. The working of wings or side propellers could be plainly seen and the vessel seemed to be making rapid progress. Other parties claim to have seen the ship here Thursday night, also. A dispatch from one of the towns where the ship was more plainly seen, says: The airship seems to be under perfect control of the navigator--rising, lowering and changing direction and speed in prompt obedience to the steering gear. The ship has a brilliant electric headlight, which appears to be larger than the headlight of a locomotive, and by which the movement of the airship may be watched long after the ship is lost in darkness.

The speed of the airship is estimated by those who have seen it to be from sixty to seventy-five miles an hour.

On one occasion this week, when it passed over Bellville, it moved so close to the ground that the headlight made the city almost as light as day. The ship seemed to stop a few miles northeast of the city, remaining stationary for twenty or thirty minutes. Then it sailed up and down, north, south, east, west, now rapidly, now slowly, as if the navigator were testing the possibilities of his machine. It rose at one time far above some scattering clouds, and then was lost to view. At 2 o'clock in the morning it was seen going south again, and three hours later was seen on its way north.

A Mt. Carroll dispatch says: Hundreds of people on our streets tonight, whose honesty and truthfulness are beyond dispute, viewed the airship about 8:30 o'clock. It came from the northeast, and when opposite this city changed its course and went due west at a terrific speed. It was in sight at least ten minutes. It appeared oblong in shape and carried a great red light. In length it did not appear to be over eight or ten feet and two or three feet high. So many people saw it that there is no disputing the fact that something unusual appeared. The people who saw it were in various parts of the city.

Oven McGinnis of Fernberg's and Charlie Johnson, the market man, viewed the airship through a powerful field glass. It was so far "distant they could not distinguish such regarding its form other than it was oblong. Part of the time the machine emitted a red light, then at times the light would be green and sometimes white. S. S. Crocker saw the vessel Thursday evening, at which time it seemed to be on its way eastward as if toward Chicago. Last evening when he saw it, it was headed toward the west. He estimated its velocity at about sixty-five miles an hour.

The present trip has been planned to arouse curiosity, but not to demonstrate the feasibility of aerial navigation. Prof. George Hough said again yesterday, as he smiled, "Alpha Orionis has been roaming through its regular course in the firmament for 10,000,000 years, and why it should have been settled upon in the last three weeks and pointed out as the headlight of a mysterious aerial vessel is a thing hard to explain."

1897 April 10 (Sat) Sterling, Ill., Ave. Gazette, p. 5.
"SEEN" THINGS AT NIGHT.
Did you see the air ship?
Three hundred and seven people and a boy saw it above Sterling last night.
They talked about it all day long.
Bob Hill said it was the "advance agent of prosperity" looking for a place to light.
Another man suggested that it was a heavenly visitant looking for a good corner lot.
"Manager H. C. Ward thought it was the advance man for "Alabama" as it came from that direction.
"Strange that it flew over before the saloons closed," said a man, but the taint of whiskey was on his breath when he spoke thus sarcastically, while most of those who saw it were never known to swallow anything worse than an air ship story.
"What is this air ship business?" said a lunch counter friend. "Is there anything to it?" "Yes," said another the other fellow, "it's supposed there's a man in it."
"Isn't it a beauty!" cried a first ward lady. "Oh yes, it's a regular star!" replied her sceptical husband.
It is said a Luxon man has smoked a lot of glass and will be prepared to examine the wonder if it flies over again tonight.
"Here's looking at you?" yelled the man in front of Feigley's, who was looking through a telescope. A dispatch from Mt. Carroll says that the man in the air ship replied "Rubber Neck."
The girl who saw the new Easter bonnet was heard singing
My mouth afloat the man in that ship
I'll carry and with him I'll skip
While a'float in the air
All the people will stare
And see my hat!!

The Airship Passes Over Chicago.

The airship which is enjoying a jaunt across the country arrived over Chicago fortunately at a time when an ample explanation was at hand to relieve the spectacular night errand of much of its mystery. It would be more exact perhaps to say that several ample explanations are extant, any one of which doesn't give mystery the ghost of a chance. The Secretary of the Aeronautical Association, of course, ought to be best posted on these ships that cavort in the night, and he explains the whole affair in a way that should satisfy the most exacting. The aerial craft is on its way to Washington--probably looking for a job. It has flown all the way from the western coast, and is distinctly a high flyer in every sense of the word. There are only three occupants of the craft instead of a regiment, as some have declared, and it is not surprising therefore that this aeronautical expert should regard the "exaggerated stories concerning the ship laughable." The plain, unvarnished narrative of the aforesaid expert goes on to say that it was the intention of the three people who are taking such a lofty view of the world to drop off at Chicago and hold a reception, but owing to the uncertainty of finding anything to receive and the hazard attending taking these long drops in windy cities, they determined to anchor on a propitious cloud, as it were, and resume their journey in the morning. The aeronautical expert does not explain his telephonic method of obtaining these later data, but no-one will be sufficiently skeptical as to require an explanation.

1897 April 10 (Sat) Sterling, Ill., Daily Free Press, p. 5

For the benefit of those persons who may not be of an aeronautical turn of mind, an inspired ornithologist, tinged somewhat with aerial tendencies, offers the opposing suggestion that the thing is not an airship but a bird. This man in a moment of mental diversion went on a literary debauch to the extent of refreshing his recollection of the Arabian Nights' tales, and therein supplemented his scientific researches by reading of some further phenomena regarding the habits of a certain immense member of the feathered kingdom which we perhaps would call a roc. The fact that the "airship" is described as having a flexible tail and a rigid frame, together with other circumstances related by the observers, lends this authority that it was in fact an animated representative of the roc family. This explanation of the character of the visitation will not find favor doubtless with the masses who are not particularly well up on rocs, and who, being of a severely practical turn, will insist doubtless on some explanation of how the roc managed to get and carry his lanterns, but it ought to be quite as popular as the declaration of Astronomer Hough that the airship was nothing more extraordinary than a certain fixed star known as Alpha Orionis. Prof. Hough appears to be on terms of some intimacy with this luminary, and explains that at certain periods of the night, while it is traversing the heavens, it looks like a ball of fire and is minutely calculated to deceive observers with well-developed imaginations or of otherwise trusting disposition. The statement of Prof. Hough is open to the suspicion of professional jealousy on the part of a man who does not like other people to see things in his realm that he does not see. But for the present, until other experts are heard from, Prof. Hough's statement must take its place with the other two, and from the three the people can take their pick.

Night Operator James Freeman, of the Three I, states that the operators for the same at Goodrich and Kankakee were sure that they had seen the mysterious light in the heavens between 9 and 9 o'clock last night. The American club claimed it was an airship, and that it was travelling in a westerly direction when he saw it. The same object seems to have appeared in several other places during the night.
Notices have appeared in the daily papers recently about an airship being seen in various parts of the country. William Kirk, the engineer at the Cathedral Glassworks, could explain this matter if he wanted to. He is the gentleman who was mentioned in the Free Press some months ago for being engaged in the construction of such a "flier" as has been away from here several nights lately.

1897 April 11 (Sun) Jacksonville Ill., Daily Journal, p. 4.

April 11, 1897 Chicago Tribune (Sun.) p. 1 (card 1)

Illinois Airship on the Wing
Aeronautical Society Expects It to Light on the Indiana and Ohio in a Few Days.

The hue and cry of red, green and orange light which startled residents of every village and township between Niles Center and South Chicago on Friday evening may not have been an airship after all. Only the most imaginative of those who viewed it are willing to take credit to seeing the outlines of hull, rigging, keel, and propellers. But if it was not the real article, do not blame the Chicago Aeronautical Society. It is doing the best it can, and promises that, in case it turns out the celestial visitor was nothing more than a common, everyday fixed star of the first magnitude, to have a genuine air-rocket in the neighborhood of Chicago before the end of this week.
The official representative of the Aeronautical Society, in the absence of President Ganute in California to witness the start, is Secretary Max L. Kasnar. Mr. Kasnar is not inclined to think the manifestation of Friday afternoon was the California airship, because he thinks that the vessel hardly has had time to travel so far.
"It has been scarcely three weeks since the journey was begun," he said, "and, unless conditions of wind and weather have been unusually favorable, I do not see how the ship could get here before to-morrow at the earliest, and I think it more probable that it will be the middle of the week before Chicagoans have an opportunity of seeing the invention. I have been expecting some communication from the California people telling me when to look for the ship. The arrangement was for the ship to stop in the sandhills of Indiana, where Mr. Ganute was experimenting last fall, and the society has been planning a quiet reception for the navigators.
"There is no doubt at all the ship started from San Francisco and is now so close between this city and the Rocky Mountains.
"The inventors do not say this ship is the final solution of the problem of aerial navigation. We hope one day to do away with the balloon feature altogether. Mr. Ganute's experiments in aeroplane coasting were made in the hope of demonstrating that a balloon is theoretically unnecessary.

The Airship Seen.

Quite a number of Jacksonville citizens are sure they saw the famous "Kansas airship" Saturday night. About 9 o'clock it was noticed sailing in the northwest heavens and all agreed that they discerned four lights, two white and two green. It was seen to be moving in a northerly direction, evidently at a rapid rate, and looked like an immense star, only seeming much larger and brighter and of several colors.

1897 April 11 (Sun) Quincy Morning Whig, p. 8. (card 1)

THE AIRSHIP OVER QUINCY. / A Strange Aerial Visitor last Night. / IT WAS SEEN BY MANY MEN / The Thing Circled Over the City Shortly After 11 o'clock and Disappeared to the South--What the Wonderful Craft Looked Like. /

The airship which has been skylarking over Kansas and Iowa for the last week, and was over Chicago Friday night, paid a visit to Quincy last night, and was seen by quite a number of reliable persons. It came down from the north over the river, circled over the city for about fifteen minutes and then disappeared to the south.
It was shortly after 11 o'clock when the strange aerial visitor was first seen, and as the night was perfectly clear, with a half moon high in the heavens, the opportunities for observation were all that could be desired outside of daylight. Hundreds of men who were on the streets at that hour saw it, or say they did, and the descriptions of it given by different persons who witnessed it from different points are remarkably similar.
The air ship was first seen by some men on the levee, and at that time it was over the river north of the city, and appeared to be a short distance north of the bridge. Their attention was first attracted by a bright white light, and they supposed it to be the search light on some steamer coming down the river, especially as there were red and green lights on either side of the white one, and it was as close to the Illinois shore, while the channel and the gray of the bridge are close to the Missouri side, that they watched it, wondering what a spectacle could be doing there. It was flying very low when first seen, but as they watched the light, which occasionally wavered from side to side, the thing rose in the air and sailed over River View Park, or thereabouts. It traveled in an easterly direction for a mile or so, then slowly circled to the south, and then headed to the west again. It hovered for several minutes at a point about over South Park. It swung around until the light from the headlight streamed to the north, and then it started in that direction as if intending to come back over the city along about Eighth street. It proceeded perhaps half a mile, when the thing appeared to change its mind, and stopped. The headlight, which seemed to be backed by powerful reflectors, was waved up and down several times, the smaller lights just back of it were whirled around in a circle several times the same way that a railroad switchman waves his lantern, and then turning suddenly about the thing started off to the south. Its speed must have been tremendous, for in a few minutes it was clear out of sight.

What it was, where it came from or where it went no one knows, but there appears to be no reason to doubt but that it was a veritable airship. Its motions were such that it was manifestly guided by human hands, and moreover it was at times so close to the earth that a tolerably fair view was had of it. At times it did not appear to be more than 400 or 500 feet above the ground, and in the bright moonlight was plainly silhouetted against the clear sky. Men who saw the thing describe it as a long, slender body shaped like a cigar, and made of some bright metal, perhaps aluminum, on which the moonlight glistened. On either side of the hull extending outwards and upwards were what appeared to be wings, and above the hull could be seen the misty outlines of some sort of superstructure, a clear view of which, however, was intercepted by the wings. In the front end of the thing was a headlight, and from the brightness and intensity of the stream of light thrown out it was apparently similar to the searchlight used on steamboats. About midway of the hull were small lights, a green light on the starboard or right hand side, and a red light on the port or left hand side, the same as on smoke stacks of steamboats. Several of the men who saw the strange craft said they thought they heard voices coming from it, and from the way the lights were manipulated there were at least three men on it. The aerial navigators certainly had their craft under perfect control, for they sailed in all directions and at varying heights.

Men who saw it agree as to the general appearance of the airship, but they differ as to the size of it. One witness said he thought it was about seventy feet long, another put it at twice that size, and still another said it was not more than fifty feet in length.

Whatever it is, Quincy people have seen it, and they want to know more about it. They will when the inventor gets tired of skydaring and decided to let the rest of the world in on his wonderful invention. SEEN AT JACKSONVILLE. / The Airship Creates Great Excitement in That City.

JACKSONVILLE, Ill., April 10.--What was undoubtedly the mysterious airship passed over this city about 10:30 o'clock to-night. It was seen by all the police officers in duty, the firemen and hundreds of citizens. The craft was first east to west. Attention was first attracted by a faint light a few hundred feet above the earth and moving swiftly. The light wavered from side to side like a big searchlight, and threw out a stream of light several hundred feet in length. It rapidly approached the city, and when it had arrived over Jacksonville the body of the mysterious visitor could be plainly distinguished. The body was long and narrow, and it reflected the rays of the moon as if made of some bright metal. Shadowy things on the sides were taken to be wings, and the ship appeared to be eighty or ninety feet long. Many reliable persons assert that they plainly distinguished human voices on the ship. The sight created the greatest excitement, and telegraph wires were ringing all over the city by citizens calling up friends to come out and see the wonderful and mysterious spectacle. The airship came from the east, and in passing over the city it stopped and turned completely around, throwing its headlight in all directions. It disappeared in a westerly direction.

This would indicate that the airship was seen in Jacksonville a little less than an hour before it appeared in Quincy. Jacksonville is some seventy miles from here. Evidently it traveled west from that city to the Mississippi river, which it struck some distance above Quincy. Then it followed the river south.

1897 April 12 (Mon. morn) Daily Pantagraph (Bloomington, Ill.), p. 5.

THE AIR SHIP. / Persons Claim That It Passed Over This City at 12:15 p.m. Yesterday.

--Dr. George R. Smith telephoned to this office last evening that a friend of his saw the air ship passing over the city at 12:15 noon yesterday. It was at a high altitude, flat shaped and looked like a big piece of yellow canvas. The air ship was reported at Moavequa Saturday, and could easily have made the distance in the time specified. The person who saw it was Mr. Gray Carlton, Jr. It was moving in a northeasterly direction at a rapid rate.

April 12, 1897 Chicago Record (Mon.) p. 2 (card 1)

Says He Is the "Airship" Man Offers to Exhibit the Invention at the Omaha Exposition. Special to the Chicago Record.

Omaha, Nebraska, April 11.--The mystery surrounding the so-called airship, which has caused the veracity of many reputable citizens to be questioned, promised to be cleared up within a few days through the medium of the Trans-Mississippi exposition. In the first mail yesterday Secretary Wakefield received a letter dated at Omaha and bearing the postmark of this date. The letter was signed "A. C. Clinton" and read as follows:

"To the Exposition Directors: My identity up to this date has been unknown, but I will come to the front now, that is, if you guarantee me 870,000 square feet of space. I am the famous airship constructor, and I will guarantee you positively of this fact in a week. The airship is my own invention, and as I am an Omaha man I wish it to be held as an Omaha invention. It will safely carry 20 people to a height of from 10,000 to 20,000 feet. I truly believe I have the greatest invention and discovery ever made. Will see you April 17, 1897 at the headquarters."

This communication was written on a sheet of plain note-paper, without printed matter of any kind which would throw any light upon the identity of the writer. He gave no address, and his name does not appear in the last city directory. The amount of space asked for by the writer of this letter is nearly thirty-five acres. The exposition authorities will await his appearance with interest. Special to the Chicago Record.

Fort Dodge, Iowa, April 11.--The alleged airship was plainly visible here last night between 8 and 9 o'clock, and while in sight was viewed by many citizens. The light resembled that of a strong electric light, and was whiter, brighter and larger than ordinary starlight. It was first sighted in the western sky and moved rapidly north, and then took an extreme northwest course until it disappeared. Several old-country Germans contended that the mystery is a return of the phenomenon that worried residents of Germany over thirty years ago and created the impression at that time that the end of the world was near at hand. The light claimed to have been visible in Germany at that time was called the "devil's army," and when it was visible brought the superstitious to their knees.

Marshfield, Wisconsin, April 11.--The famous airship was seen here last night. It appeared just after sundown in the southern skies and disappeared at 9 o'clock in the northwest, being visible one and one-quarter hours. It was at first mistaken for the planet Venus, but its rate was rapid, swinging from side to side and travelling toward Minnesota at a rate of about 75 miles an hour. Through glasses it presented a cone-shape, with a glaring headlight. Many here believe the airship spent the day in the woods south of town, where it was quite safe from curious eyes. Special to Chicago Record.

Milwaukee, Wis., April 11.--Many persons of northern Wisconsin declare they saw the airship last night. Judge S. D. Hastings and N. E. Kellogg of Green Bay, ex-Governor Upham of Marshfield and H. O. Fairchild say they saw the mysterious aerial voyager, but they saw red lights only and no green ones. It was also seen here shortly after midnight, but it was so far to the north that the observers of the opinion that it may be a star.

The mysterious ship has become tangible enough to become a part of the police records of this city. Between 8 and 9 o'clock to-night 20 policemen reported seeing a moving light over the extreme northeastern part of the city. The reports were made from the patrol boxes to the central station. The light was seen by hundreds of persons, and an especially good view was obtained by the telegraph editors of the Sentinel from their tenth-story elevation. The ship moved directly away in a northwesterly direction until it had almost faded from view. It then shifted about and returned, until the lights were very plain. The course was again changed, and finally it disappeared about 9 o'clock, moving in a northwesterly direction, and drifting slightly toward the south. It was a flickering light, and seemed to grow dim at times like a spluttering electric arc light. Thousands saw it in this city to-night, and there are many rumors about and hundreds of different descriptions.

Dubuque, Iowa, April 11.--The mysterious airship passed over Dubuque after midnight last night. It was seen at Green Island at 10 o'clock and at Bellevue at 11.

Special to Chicago Record.

Bloomington, Ill., April 11.--An object believed to be the mysterious airship that has been sailing over Illinois was seen at about noon today, floating over Bloomington. It was going in a northeasterly direction at a great altitude. It was yellow in color and seemed to be rectangular in form. GUY CARLTON, a young electrician of this city, and a party of friends, watched the mysterious object until it disappeared in the northeast.

Special to Chicago Record.

Kilmundy, Illinois, April 11.--The famous airship passed over this city at about 8 p.m. tonight, carrying a headlight with two red lights in the rear. It looked to be about one hundred feet between head and rear lights.

Had hair trimmers in Chicago (Jack the Snipper)--attack women, girls, and cut their hair.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Chicago Tribune, p. 5. (card 1)

Airship Myth Yet Soars / Headed for Dune Park and an Amusement Privilege / Alleged Photographs of the Queer Aerial Visitor Showing Its Mechanism and Its Daring Navigation Pronounced a "Fake" by an Expert--Mechanical Impossibilities in the Way of Such a Picture--Night Gazers Report Seeing the Flying Machine.

Chicago's airship romance has fallen into practical hands. If the progress made by "photographers on the spot" yesterday is carried to its legitimate and the aerial monster will be picked up soon on the shining sands of Dune Park and will be exhibited by a local amusement company as the solution of the greatest problem tackled by mankind--navigation of the air.

At Rogers Park yesterday two men exhibited pictures "taken of the airship" as it sailed over the suburb hard by Evanston at 6 a.m. A reporter for The Tribune secured one of the pictures, as did reporters for other Chicago newspapers. The prints were peddled out eagerly to all the nimble scribblers who would take them.

The picture given to The Tribune was submitted to an expert photographer for an opinion as to its genuineness. He looked at it and smiled.

Pronounces It a "Fake."

"It is a fake," he said. "It would be impossible for a camera to take such a picture, except from a doctored photograph. In my opinion a picture was taken out in Rogers Park. Then the airship was filled in. After that a picture was taken of the prepared print.

"The reason why I pronounce this bit of enterprise a 'fake' is because such a result is a perspective impossibility. With the relative proportions shown of various objects and the supposed airship no camera could have caught so much within the scope of its lenses.

"In this case a small instrument was used. It looks like a kodak's work. To have taken the airship with such a little lens the photographer would have had to point the instrument up towards the sky. He couldn't possibly get a lot of foreground and buildings in the picture."

The "fake" photograph is a gem of its kind. It is 3 1/2 by 2 1/2 inches in size. In the left foreground is a spur of the St. Paul's Evanston Division tracks. In the middle foreground are three good-sized and one small building. Well toward the front is an individual who appears to have a camera in his uplifted hands taking a picture of the aerial visitor. This suggests the thought that perhaps this wonderful kodak takes pictures of itself and its manipulator as well as of airships.

How the "Ship" Looks.

But the heavenly soarer is the great feature of this wonderful work of art. High above the roofs of the buildings, the telegraph poles, and the leafless trees, it rides in majesty. Its cigar-shaped body tips toward the "stern," where it terminates in a tail like that of a fish. Depending from the balloon part is a long, narrow cage with a propeller at the end. If a powerful glass is used one may see the outlines of the two daring navigators.

It is supposed that these aeronauts will be discovered soon nestling with their landed ship among the sandy stretches of Dune Park, around the bend of the lake in Indiana, where Chanute's experiments thrilled an expectant world last fall.

After that it would be natural for them to yield to the persuasions of the amusement concern mentioned and move into Chicago to exhibit to gaping thousands their flying machine and tell what fun they have had keeping the inhabitants of many cities guessing the last few weeks.

A number of policemen and firemen in South Chicago and Englewood reported last night that they saw the mysterious object floating about in the air which has been going by the name "airship." They described it in much the same manner as others have done.

Late yesterday afternoon the airship was seen "hovering over Lincoln Park."

As usual it was also seen elsewhere.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Chicago Tribune, p. 5.

Say It Is An Airship And Not A Star / Thousands of People in Milwaukee Observe a Monster of the Air Over the Court-House.

Milwaukee, Wis., April 11--[Special.]--Prof. Rought and his theory that the supposed airship is the star "Alpha Orionis" doesn't stand as high in the minds of thousands of citizens of this city tonight. They have seen the wonder and are convinced that it is a machine which navigates the air, and not a star which has been wandering around for ten million or more years through space without an object or a destination. The strange machine made its first appearance in the wee small hours this morning. It was not seen by many at that time, but the few who did see it are convinced that it is a machine. The lights which appeared on it seemed to move backwards and forwards toward each other, as if signalling to the earth.

It was first seen on the northern horizon, and about the only persons who were up at the time and who were not seeing things double, were a few newspaper men, police officers, and a guard at the House of Correction. All of these are willing to make oath they saw an airship come from the north a little before the break of daylight and that it disappeared again, reversing itself and fading from view in the north.

Tonight the stranger made its appearance again in the heavens about 9 o'clock. It came from the northeast from out over the lake. There was no possibility of a mistake this time. Thousands of people saw it, and in a few minutes they were following the machine as it floated over the city. It travelled toward the southwest until it reached a point directly over the City Hall, where it stopped for a quarter of an hour. Then the excitement in the downtown districts became intense. It was reported that attempts were being made to anchor the machine.

A Mr. Meyer, a travelling man, had a field glass ranged on the machine and said he distinctly saw four men in it. Stationkeeper Harry Moore of the Central Police Station saw it distinctly and was one of the few who did not at the same time lose his head. He says:

"The machine, or whatever it was, was anchored or stopped directly over the city hall. The light which I saw was suspended from a large, dark oval-shaped object, the shadow of which could be distinctly seen. In fact, it could be seen so plainly that I could discern the wheels working. I did not see any one in it, but any one who claims that the thing I saw floating over the city hall is a star simply don't know what he is talking about. I saw it too distinctly to be fooled. It was, I would judge, about 1,000 feet above the city hall."

After hovering about 15 minutes it went back & disappeared in the N.E.

1897 April 12 (Mon.) Evening Republican (Decatur, Ill.), p. 8.

Saw the Air Ship. / It Was Flying High and Going North Sunday Night. The mysterious airship seen by so many people in Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri and Illinois recently, was seen Sunday night at 11:15 passing over Decatur northward, going at a rapid rate of speed. The one party who claims to have seen the machine is a bank clerk. He said it looked like two monster cigars with three bright headlights. The clerk asserts that he could not have been mistaken. He has been a doubter on the xxx ship question, but now he is certain that the thing is a reality, and he is curious to learn all he can about a mystery that puzzles millions of people.

14, 1. Carlinville Landing. / 15, 1. Winkle & Hulle. 23, 4 (eds.) The Air Ship.

The Chicago Tribune is evidently not informed as to the adventure of the Republican correspondent in the air ship that sailed right over the Tribune office in a flight from Vandalia to Chicago and return. The following from that paper seems to indicate that it prefers sea serpents to aerial navigation: "It is remarkable to expect..."

1897 April 12 (Mon) Galena, Ill., Gazette, p. 3.

THE AIR-SHIP ARRIVES. / The Ubiquitous Mystery Passes Over Galena.

It has come!

The air-ship, the aerial what-is-it, in colors like unto the chameleon, having as many forms as the kaleidoscope can contrive and out-rivaling in ubiquity the wicked gamin has reached Galena and has been gazed at and wondered at by the usual number of people of the highest veracity and unimpaired perception.

It floated over the city at 8 o'clock Sunday evening in a south-westerly direction and was viewed with awe not only by citizens but by the passengers on a west-bound train just arrived.

It was seen in a dozen other places at about the same time, according to the voracious chroniclers, and it is asserted that one enterprising suburbanite near Chicago caught a photograph of it. It is a wonderful phenomenon, to be sure.

But as to the Galena airship, the truth must be told. It was only a parti-colored paper balloon sent up from the Grant Park, and the number of people it deceived is the best explanation of the conflicting and sometimes absurd stories about the eccentric aerial ship that are pouring in from all places.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Galesburg, Ill., Evening Mail, p. 1.

SEE THE AIRSHIP HERE. / Many People Watch a Strange Light in the Heavens Saturday Night With Wonder.

Galesburg received a visit from a so-called air ship Saturday night, and there are people who declare that there is something certainly strange and mysterious about it. All sorts of explanations are to be heard for it. Some say that it is only a small boy's balloon and that there can be nothing else to it. Others think it a star, and what not.

The first appearance of the phenomenon was about 7:30 o'clock Saturday evening. At that time O.C. Lanphear saw the light distinctly above the O.T. Johnson store. He secured a pair of field glasses at once, and commenced operations. He says that the light was white and very bright, and looked like the headlight of a locomotive. The reflection was all to the north, and the space to the south was a black as though the light was suddenly shut off.

Mr. H.L. Wilbur took the glasses and could distinctly see two green lights below the white one. Others also saw the green lights. A large crowd assembled in front of the store of Wilbur, Lanphear & Tryner and watched the curious spectacle for five minutes. Now the all-absorbing question is, "What is it?"

Quincy people are greatly excited over the air ship. It was first seen coming down the river, and they supposed it to be a steamer headlight. Presently the light was seen to rise and pass over the south part of the city. When almost out of sight it turned abruptly and came back over the course and passed out of sight to the north. Over four hundred people saw the strange sight, and they declare it to be a genuine case of mystery.

In Burlington the efforts of the residents were rewarded by seeing a dull red light pass to the north. Then it was found that some youngsters had been sending up balloons, and they declared the ship was a fake. Galesburg people say that the light seen here could not come from such a source, and also ask an explanation for the green lights.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Monmouth, Ill., Daily Review, p. 1.

THE AIR SHIP. / The Mysterious Traveler Seen in the Skies Above Monmouth. / Many People Notice a Strange Light Flying Across the Heavens Saturday Night--Is It a Balloon? /

The "airship neck" will have to be counted a modern malady as much as the "bicycle face" and kindred ills. If these mysterious heavenly visitors keep soaring about by day and night. A person can look out on the street almost any time and catch people "pikeln" (??) their heads off with furtive glances that take in every quarter of the heavens. When they are caught at it, they either look wise and pretend to be looking for signs of rain, or else guiltily admit that they have hopes of getting a peep at the flying machine.

While the folks in all these towns over the country are looking at it, Monmouth had to keep in the fashion, and when such reliable authorities as (Mr.) Doner Diffenbaugh, Dudley W. Bird, Jall, Robert D. Tresham and many others say they saw "it," this place can substantiate its claims to be fully abreast of the times. The story told by these witnesses is a straightforward tale, and no one can have the heart to cast discredit upon it. They say that while pursuing their usual walks of life Saturday evening about 8:20 o'clock their attention was drawn to a very bright light in the northwest. It was bigger and brighter than a star, and was easily seen to move. It appeared to be a long distance away, and none of the men say they saw the long cigar shaped body supposed to be peculiar to the craft. All of them watched the light till it seemed to fade away and disappear in the northwest. Other people who saw the sight say it looked like that of a paper balloon, and disappeared the same way those toys do when their supply of oil burns out.

Another story but very similar in its details is told by J.C. Irvin, J.W. Ponder(?) and others. They were talking one night last week and their attention was called to a bright light in the northern skies. It was traveling east at a fast rate and they watched it for several minutes and it was still in sight. Their opinions were divided as to whether it was a balloon or not.

Whatever it is, the air ship makes an interesting theme of conversation. Of course the fake that was perpetrated Saturday night in Burlington when the Hawkeye folks sent up a paper balloon and had everybody guessing, will shake the faith of some, but on the other hand the evidence of the young men in Rogers Park who got a picture of the machine early yesterday morning, looks like there might be something to it. There will be a difference of opinion about the machine until something entirely substantial is learned regarding the ship. 1897 April 12 (Mon) Ottawa, Ill., Journal, p. 4.

THE AIR SHIPS.

We can no longer employ the term in the singular number, for the reason that a considerable number of people have described spectacles witnessed at the same point of time, but at points of observation so remote from each other as to preclude the probability of a single object, such as a star, a meteor, the moon, or a green cheese being seen. If not for the reason of proximity to the earth, then for the reason that observers of unquestioned intelligence and reliability saw spectacles moving in opposite directions, at the same time, the unit theory is untenable.

At Chicago, one quiet evening a "ship" was observed showing down to people who occupied upper stories of sky scrapers, and was also seen by ~~xxxxxx~~ humble, but cultured people who live nearer earth in the classic precincts of Evanston, where the Northwestern University stands. The same was described by people who abide in the vicinity of Dr. Harper's Baptist school known as Chicago University, the wheels of which are greased with Standard Oil money perpetually.

This object passed over Chicago at an estimated elevation of three fourths of a mile, and scudded away in the direction of the national capital. On the same evening a similar object was observed passing over the state of Iowa, at a left oblique, in the direction of the National Park. In other sections of the country similar phenomena have been observed, and left the people in a state of befuddlement, quite similar to the effect upon the professors at Evanston and Cottage Grove.

Professor Hough, of Chicago, however has disclosed to the world that the object seen was nothing more nor less than Alpha, a star of the first magnitude, by astronomers a good many years ago located in the head of the constellation Orion, but now broke loose and swooped down within less than a mile of the wicked city. Mr. Orion was a night hunter, but his fame is now dimmed by the man who hunted up the true theory of the latest meteorological mystery.

Seriously it is a little surprising that scientists have not found a solution for these phenomena based on the known principles of electrical science, in conjunction with meteorological conditions which must have come under the observation of signal officers, or of astronomers at the seats of learning and observatories of the country. Is it something, as Sothorn would say, "no fellow can find out!"

1897 April 12 (Mon eve) Quincy Daily Herald, p. 1.

PASSER IN THE NIGHT. / The Mysterious Airship Made (Partly) Down in Hannibal. /

Everybody is talking of a mysterious airship that is perambulating the heavens with red and green sidelights and an electric search-light on her. As it has no particular opposition in aerial navigation the use of ~~xxx~~ the sidelights must be more ornamental than otherwise.

The talk of the mysterious craft recalls to the mind of Edward Ryan, driver of the police patrol wagon, a statement made to him by his brother-in-law, F.P. Smith, of Hannibal, several months ago.

Mr. Smith has a machine shop and in course of conversation during a visit in Quincy said that he had a job in making a cylinder for an engine on order of a stranger. The stranger was not communicative, but volunteered the information that the cylinder was for an airship on which he was at work.

It may be, therefore, that the ship that passes in the night and scares timorous people was made partly in Hannibal. If such is the case we'll have to take more notice of it. The fact gives to it a local interest.

1897 April 12 (Mon.) The Argus (Rock Island, Ill.), p. 5. (card 1)

SNAP SHOT AT THE SHIP.

A farmer named Kerr, living on Rock river, claims to have seen the airship following the Hennepin canal south of South Moline at 8:30 this morning. It was moving west he says at the time. Now the entire Moline police force swear to have seen it last night.

Walter McCann of Rogers Park, near Chicago, claims to have caught...

1897 April 12 (Mon) Rockford, Ill., D. Republic, p. 1.

(Card 1)

THAT BLOWING SHIP / Still Cavorting Around in the Air and Creating Excitement. / Seen in Rockford Again Saturday Night--Also Seen in Two Hundred Other Places at the Same Time--Probably There's a Whole Flock of Airships at Large. /

That Kansas Airship is certainly the most numerous and the rarest cloud scraper that ever pierced the upper strata of the ambient or came down the pike.

It can be more places at once than the liveliest flea (?) that ever flew and can assume more shapes in one night than the whole of Six Satan's repertoire.

That is, if you believe all that the papers say, and why should they be doubted?

It was seen again in Rockford Saturday night by several persons. It was also seen in about 200 other places at the same time. Therefore it must be that the spectral messenger of the heavens travels on pressed lightning schedule, or that a whole flock of airships has been turned loose.

At Bloomington yesterday at noon the strange aerial visitor was seen and last night at Milwaukee it was viewed by thousands of persons cavorting around like a huge swallow over the city. The bock beer season is on full swing in the Green City, but it is not likely that this has anything to do with the case.

At Quincy, Geneva, Beloit, Rochelle, Dixon, Rabbit Hollow and Burr Oaks it has also been seen by citizens whose veracity, sobriety and eyesight have never been questioned. Along about six months after every other town in the country has seen the strange and restless denizen of the ethereal Freeport will probably receive a visit from the airship.

It is claimed that near Heberly, Mo., the wreck of an airship has just been found and with it the mangled and unrecognizable remains of two men. It is probably one of the fleet that is now spinning around the circle and turning out the biggest crop of liars that the world has ever known.

The blindest whopper of all comes from Elburn in Kane county, where it is claimed the airship touched ground. Trainmen running through there say that the operator says that some stockmen say that some farmers say that the ship had a break down near there and came down for repairs. These farmers came across it, and found that two men accompanied it. The machine apparently weighted about 500 pounds and was made of some light substance like aluminum. They conversed with the men but learned but little. The men said they were going from the Pacific to the Atlantic coast, and were following the Northwestern railway.

It doesn't seem possible that all this airship business is a hoax. The people have seen something out of the ordinary in the heavens at night a queer sort of thing that carries more kinds of colors of lights than are seen in a Fourth of July pyrotechnical display.

Is it the moon?

Is it the star, Alpha Orionis(sic)?

Is it a meteor with a case of Jim Jams?

If not will someone please rise up and tell what it is, 'tis it, or what it is it, that it is!

We're dying to know.

1897 April 12 (Mon eve) Springfield, Ill. News, p. 1

SAW A LIGHT. / High Above the State House Last Night.

J.M. Margraves, night turnkey and Richard Schriver, foreman of the county jail, claim to have seen the air ship or something they knew not what. Mr. Margraves says that about 9 o'clock he walked outside the jail and turned his gaze heavenward. His attention was drawn to a light that was swaying back and forth above the statehouse. He called Schriver and they watched it for half an hour and got tired and went in. Mr. Margraves says all they saw was a radiating light not unlike a locomotive headlight which appeared to be at a high altitude which swayed back and forth. Mr. Margraves does not think that it was a balloon, but an air ship.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Sterling, Ill., Evening Gazette, p. 1. (card 1)

THAT AIR SHIP / IT STILL CONTINUES TO SOAR. / Walter McCann, Formerly of Sterling, Photographs it in Chicago--Many Saw it Last Night.

Walter McCann of Rogers Park, near Chicago, son-in-law of T.G. Wright of this city, claims to have photographed the famous air ship at 5:30 yesterday morning. McCann, who was formerly a member of the Chicago police force, is now a newsdealer at Rogers Park and his place of business is near the Northwestern tracks.

Mr. McCann tells his story as follows to the Times-Herald, in which is a picture of the ship as photographed.

"I had read for several days about the air ship," said he. "I laughed over it and was skeptical on the subject. This morning at 5:30, when I arose to attend to my usual work of receiving the newspapers from Chicago and making my deliveries for the day, I saw a strange looking object in the sky coming from the south. It looked like a big cigar. It came nearer and I saw at a glance that it was not a balloon. Quick as a flash I realized it was the much talked of airship. My boy won a camera not long ago in a contest for getting subscribers to a paper. It was in the store, fifty feet from where I stood gazing at the object. I ran and got it as the think approached. The sky was clear. Conditions favored a good photograph. A plate was ready. I ran to Greenleaf avenue and Market street and got a good shot at it. With G.A. Overocker, whose attention was attracted to it, I ran down the Northwestern tracks and we got a second picture a few minutes later.

"E.L. Osborne and William Hoodless also saw the air ship. I am no longer a magic. I distinctly saw the outlines of a man in the rear of the machine. He pulled a revolving rudder or some sort of contrivance which steered the course of the air ship. This strange invention came within 600 feet of the earth as near as I could estimate it.

"The lower portion of the air ship was thin, and made of some light white metal like aluminum. The upper portion was dark and long like a big cigar, pointed in front and with some kind of arrangement in the rear to which cables are attached. The pilot pulled these and steered the course from south to northwest. We watched the flight of the air ship until it went east and disappeared from view. I returned to the store with the plates, attended to my morning papers, and, with Overocker, finished proofs as soon as possible. I refused to accept an offer from a Chicago paper for the negatives. I think that time will prove that this is no fake. I've lived here too long to try and fool people I have no desire for notoriety. It's an air ship, and if you don't believe it, look at the picture and be convinced. I can swear that I saw the air ship. So can three other men here, whose word stands well in this community."

MANY PEOPLE SAW IT.

From various parts of the north side, Chicago, the strange aerial visitor was seen last night. Many people are willing to take oath that they saw it, and that it was not a star, comet, or anything of that nature. It appeared more like an electric light, changing color at times from white to red and green. Slowly it drifted across the sky, growing dim, disappearing and returning at intervals. Great crowds watched the mysterious light and marveled. At North avenue and LaSalle street a group of reputable citizens watched it for nearly an hour from the roof of Herman Fry's drug store. They are all willing to swear the light was something they never had seen before, and could not account for. When they first noticed it the thing was over toward the northwest. It gradually drifted in their direction, and appeared to rise higher and higher until it was lost to view.

STERLING CROWDS LOOK ALOFT.

In Sterling the people looked aloft Saturday night, and Sunday night many eyes were turned heavenward, though not in a spirit of devotion. The usual Saturday night gathering of people on the streets was enlivened by cries of "There she goes," and "Rubber neck." Gangs stood on street corners and looked at star eyed Venus until their eyes swam with tears, but the beautiful star twinkled serenely on and refused to move. Several people, however, say that they saw a moving light in the sky, some Saturday night and others last night. There is a good deal of room for imagination to ply along the constellations of profanity.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Streator (Ill.) Daily Free Press, p. 3.

The boys out at the Three I junction report an airship last Saturday night. They should boil their drinking water.

--That bright object seen in the sky this afternoon was not an air ship. It was the sun.

13.3. That air ship scheme is being exposed now. It appears that some jokers have been sending up paper balloons to which a pole was attached and on this pole two or three colored lights had been fastened.

14.3. The Ottawa Journal and Free Trader reporters fixed up a fake airship Saturday night, composed of a big paper balloon and a ball of cotton, the latter being set on fire and serving as a "headlight" for the ship, and started the "vessel" sailing away. Then they got to laughing over the joke and forgot to mention the great discovery and let Will (Haydy), of the Republican-Times, scoop them on their own trick. Now "Specs" is trying to show how he accomplished this fact, but the other fellows seem to have a "hoss" on him.

16.3. The indicators are growing much brighter every day for the election of the entire Republican city ticket. And this is no air ship dream, either.

1897 April 12 (Mon) Daily Record (Maysville, Ill.), p. 4.

The Air Ship.

The dispatches are filled with accounts of an air ship that has been seen at night hovering over towns in Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri and Illinois. The mysterious apparition has been seen by residents of Chicago and Kankakee and is liable at any time to visit this vicinity. It is described as a dark, cigar shaped body, 50 feet long and 6 to 10 feet in diameter, with wing-like attachments on the side. The top is capped by a balloon like bag attached to the lower part by ropes. At some points only the lights were visible, but always at least one powerful light, floating in the air below the clouds, thus dispelling the theory of many that they are stars.

Max L. Rosmar, secretary of the aeronautical association, declares that the apparition is an airship. He says that he knows one of the three men who are in it. He says that they have discovered the secret of aerial navigation and that they are adopting this method for free and unlimited advertising. He claims that he was informed several weeks ago that the craft had started from San Francisco and would end in Washington, after hovering over all the towns of any size in order to arouse public interest in aerial navigation.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Daily Pantagraph (Bloomington, Ill.), p. 5.

Discussed the Airship.

--A number of Bloomington people turned up yesterday who claimed to have seen the airship, noted in the Pantagraph yesterday morning, on Sunday. The direction it followed is not stated the same by all of the witnesses. The Chicago papers have long accounts of the appearance of the aerial visitor at Rogers Park, and also at Milwaukee and other places. At Milwaukee it is claimed the ship was seen by 1,000 people.

The matter was pretty generally discussed about town yesterday, and an agreement was reached that there was something unusual going on in the upper regions, but the exact nature of the object alleged to be attracting attention at so many points was not determined. Some people think it is an expedition from the planet Mars and that they have thus far been unable to effect a landing.

April 13, 1897 Chicago Record (Tues) p. 2

Green Bay Airship a "Fake"

Imagination of the Public Worked Upon by Some Practical Jokers. / Special to Chicago Record.

Green Bay, Wisconsin, April 12.--The wonderful airship seen above this city Saturday night proves to have been simply a huge practical joke worked on the unsuspecting public. It consisted of a large hot-air balloon with a rod across the bottom, to which were attached two Japanese lanterns. It was sent up about 9:30 o'clock by several well-known residents, and to those who were not "on the inside" it looked like a veritable airship. Many claimed they could see the body of the thing, with rudder and wings. It caused intense excitement. A suburban resident now has the remnants which landed in his yard about 10:30 o'clock.

Rock Island, Illinois, April 12.--Hundreds of people stood on the streets for half an hour to-night and gazed at an object in the northwest which appeared to be moving, and which they believed was the airship. James Kerr, a Rock Island farmer, says he saw the ship at 8:30 o'clock this morning.

Elkhart, Indiana, April 12.--A large number of persons claim to have seen an airship passing over this city between 10 o'clock and midnight last night.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Daily Republican (Decatur, Ill.), p. 1.

AIR-SHIP BEATS A TRAIN / Burlington, Ia. (Engineer Bullard...)

Observed at Moline, Ill.

Moline, Ill., April 13.--The airship was seen passing south over Rock River, a few miles south of the city, about 18:30 o'clock yesterday morning, by a number of farmers. Benjamin Carr, a prominent farmer, avers that he saw it quite distinctly. He describes it as having a cigar-shaped body or hull, apparently about 15 feet long, with large winglike projections on each side. It was at a great height and was moving rapidly. The mysterious lights were seen distinctly by a number of citizens about midnight Saturday, hovering over the tri-cities and then passing off to the northward.

Seen at Lincoln.

Lincoln, Ill., April 13.--This community was worked up to a high pitch last night about 8 o'clock by the appearance of a moving contrivance in the heavens supplied with white and green lights. It was about 2000 feet high, above the clouds, and moving northeasterly, when it changed its course, going toward St. Louis. More than 200 people saw it, and many claim it was the airship so much talked about.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Evening Telegraph (Dixon, Ill.), p. 5.

Suburban Sightings. / Harrison. / April 12.

Last Friday night in the northwest about 45 degrees above the horizon our citizens were attracted by a light which at first some thought a star, but after a time came to the conclusion that it was not, the next theory was that it was the light of an airship. There were many who saw it and watched it until it disappeared.

10.4. Chicago Reporters See Things. The Nebraska airship has made its appearance in Chicago. We have considered it very strange that Chicago newspapers should permit Omaha editors to scoop them so completely as has been the scoop by the woolly west reporters in that air ship business. However, the windy city editors have at last wakened and "got into" the air ship racket. They have [spied] it in Chicago, right over the city on the north side and west side and it, "very like a whale," such as the good Polonius saw to please Hamlet.

12.2. Hawkeye fake.

8. The aeronaut who escapes the vigilance of the people of the great northwest these night will have to keep his machine dark.

12.8. Venus low down in the northwestern sky looks like the headlight of an engine 3 miles away. Many of our citizens watched it Saturday evening thinking of the airship.

13.1. McCann has a photo.

8. They Push the Fake Along. This is bringing the fake business down to a fine point. A man in Chicago took a snap shot at the air-ship and good a good negative, and a newspaper of that city has printed a copy of what it says is the photograph. We have believed all along that Chicago newspapers and Chicago energy, cheek and gall would scoop Omaha on the airship excitement before the thing ended. We do not hesitate to prophesy that the air ship navigator, probably an aerial old skipper from the Moon, will be lecturing in Chicago on incidents connected with his trip to the earth as soon as he catches on to the dialect of that city.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Galesburg, Ill., Evening Mail, p. 1.

IT IS ALL A DELUSION. / Prof. Thwing of Knox College Has a Definite Opinion About the Supposed Airship. / There was a lot of excitement around the Santa Fe depot last night, caused by the appearance of the mysterious air ship. Bay Norton was the first to see it, about 8 o'clock, and the news spread. In a few minutes there were fifty people on the station platform to see the sight. The light was brilliantly white, and seemed to be in the sky about midway between the west and north. No colored lights were to be seen with the white light. The light moved up and down and in an irregular course, and could be seen going slowly north. Suddenly the light failed altogether, and nothing more could be seen of it.

An Evening Mail reporter this morning saw Prof. Thwing, instructor in astronomy at Knox college, with reference to the supposed air ship, which is said to have passed over this city last evening. Prof. Thwing said that in his estimation the air ship was nothing save a fire balloon which had been sent up by some practical joker. He stated that he had not seen anything, either from the observatory or from his home, which would lead him to think that an air ship was sailing about the country.

"From the reports which I have heard," he said, "there is no doubt in my mind that the object which is at present interesting the whole country is not a planet."

The theory advanced by Prof. Humefsic of Chicago, that the light seen by many is the star Alpha Orionis, Prof. Thwing seems to doubt. The only possible explanation for the phenomenon if it is a planet, is that it is a comet, but the comet has many characteristics which are absolutely lacking in this strange-appearing object.

Prof. Thwing will be at the Knox college observatory this evening, and if any strange movement takes place in the heavens he hopes to see it.

In conclusion the professor said that he believed the day was not far distant when an invention would be made by means of which people would be able to pierce the unknown regions of the air, which have not yet yielded up their secrets to the overland traveler.

A telegram from Burlington to a Chicago morning paper says: "Engineer F.L. Bullard, on engine No. 590, of the fast mail, says he saw... 1897 April 13 (Tues) Lincoln (Ill) Wkly Courier, p. 8. (card 1)

WAS IT THE AIRSHIP? A Strange Thing Seen In the Western Heavens. / A Huge Head Light Seen on a V Shaped Contrivance Moving at a Surprising Rate of Speed--Seen by Hundreds of Excited People. / The country has been excited and astounded for a week past by reports of a mysterious craft navigating the blue dome of heaven. There have been many queer stories told. The imagination of some has been stretched to the utmost tension. Scientific men have differed and been puzzled. Some claim that it is a mirage; others charge it to imagination and more than one entertain the opinion that man has invented an air ship and is navigating space between earth and the heavens. The last named explanation is disputed as the contrivance has not been known to land anywhere for fuel or supplies, nor has the starting place been discovered to establish its human origin. Such an important invention or such a hazardous voyage could not be undertaken in this country without the word being flashed over the wires and the world told of the wonder. There is another class who claim it as an expedition from Mars sent out to investigate the earth and its people, but this theory cannot be supported, for the distance from Mars to the earth is so far that according to a description of the craft it would not carry sufficient supplies to make the trip. Mars is the fourth planet in size and the claim is frequently made that it is inhabited.

At the dawn of christianity signs appeared announcing the coming of Christ. Holy scripture has said that the approaching end of the world will be told by the appearance of a blazing cross in the skies.

It may be that the mysterious air ship is notice of another achievement of man by which the air will be cleaved and distance reduced to a trifle. It has been promised that an invention was pending by which 150 miles an hour could be made. Whether human or supernatural, curiosity and interest never were so intense. The superstitious predict dire disasters and tell that it is a warning of the coming of another flood, and if the world wishes to be saved it must resort to vessels. This explanation is very plausible considering the copious rains and the prevailing floods along the great rivers.

Seen by Lincolnians.

Monday night the mysterious air ship which has been seen in Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin, paid a visit to Lincoln. The hour was eight o'clock, clouds were heavy, lightning flashing and rain pouring down. More than fifty people stood on Pulaski street and whenever the lightning flashed and the clouds separated they could see a moving light in the western heavens moving northeast.

John Fitzgerald, Fred Reinhardt and Louis Kief probably obtained a better view of it than anyone else. Mr. Fitzgerald declares it came toward Lincoln with a headlight as large as an arc electric lamp, that the headlight was in front of a V-shaped object, that the course was suddenly changed and the light became green and then disappeared behind the clouds. It was moving rapidly.

Reinhardt's hardware store was still open. The flashing light caused them to think it a fire. They ran out the back way and obtained a fine view at times when the clouds permitted. They did not see anything like a ship but are certain it moved very fast.

The C. & A. operator telegraphed from Williamsville about 8:25 to be on the lookout for it, that it was moving in a southwesterly direction, and shortly thereafter it was seen again.

A sensational report was in circulation the next morning that the airship landed near Williamsville and then suddenly ascended faster than a pigeon could fly. As Williamsville is a prohibition town the story is questioned.

Patrick Healey, S.R. Moulden, A.H. Mathoin, Adam Denger, Leo Lehrberger, George Scheid, Will Ogle, Jeff Davis and many others vouch for the appearance of the moving light so there is no doubt but what it was seen here.

Seen in Other Places.

Ferguson, Mo., April 12.--A big fire balloon, air ship or something of the kind was seen west of here at 8:30 p.m. by a number of people. It disappeared moving rapidly north.

Elgin, Ill., April 12.--The air ship was plainly visible from Elgin to-night in the southeast. It moved as a light would attached to a kite and was not at a great altitude. Many saw it.

161

Burlington, Ia. April 12.--Engineer F.L. Bullard...

Rock Island, Ill., April 12.--Hundreds of people stood on the street for half an hour tonight and gazed at an object in the northwest which appeared to be moving and which they were led to believe was the airship. Some of them are still convinced that they saw the now famous aerial navigator, but the illusion was a planet which was given the appearance of being on the move by the motion of the clouds above it. James Kerr, a Rock river farmer, says he saw the ship at 6:30 this morning.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Ottawa, Ill., Journal, p. 3.

A GREAT "SCOOP." / A Bait Thrown Out by Three Newspaper Men--Is Gobbled by a Fellow Craftsman.

GREAT SCOTT! DID we get a scoop on them at last! exclaimed the city editor of one of our contemporaries last evening when he discovered that no other paper had an article about the mysterious air ship passing over Ottawa.

The wily editor had labored hard on the article. He had no less than a dozen interviews with people who claimed to have seen the aerial wonder. All described it as passing very rapidly towards the southwest, the direction the wind was blowing on that evening. There was a little difference of opinion as to the time of seeing it and of the color of the light. This writer noted carefully and gave the alleged exact words of those interviewed.

In closing he stated that "high over the tallest buildings of the city a strange light gleamed and moved and was stared at by thousands of people in the streets and on housetops, who said it was the Kansas airship."

There were three people who the reporter avoided during the day, for fear that they might possibly be mind readers and steal his "scoop," that could have given full particulars of the mysterious aerial monster, both as to its construction and to the method of sending it from terra firma. These three gentlemen were M.J. Farrell and W.O. Dunphy of the Free Trader and W.J. Parrott of The Journal. They had secured the airship, which was a green and white paper balloon, at Gopen's drug store Saturday evening and sent it up from Columbus street between 10 and 11 o'clock. The strong wind carried it rapidly in a southward direction and those who got a glimpse of the "monster" were not able to ascertain what it was, but believed in keeping up with the procession and scattered the news broadcast that they had seen the mysterious airship.

The idea of getting "scooped" when we assisted in furnishing material for the article is hard luck.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Quincy Daily Herald, p. 3. (card 1)

A VISIT OF THE AIRSHIP. / Con. Barry Had an Encounter Last Night. / He Gains a Good View of the Interior of the Airship and Describes All He Saw--An Electric Piano Furnishes Strange Aerial Music at All Hours.

Cornelius Barry, the distinguished statesman and philosopher of Melrose, had a fine view of the airship last night. He was sitting in his library reading the works of Confucius when suddenly a light of marvelous brilliance crossed the page. Dropping his imported cigar he hastened to the conservatory, and there, through the vaulted crystal roof, he clearly beheld the lines of the aerial wonder. In the bow was a huge electric search-light and the operator held this on Prof. Barry until he thought he was in a flambeaux procession. Then a hoarse voice exclaimed: "Wie gehts bei Ihnen!" and the ship slowly rose and passed over the Bryan pole at the corners. Con grabbed his shot gun and followed. Half a mile farther on the ship let off a cloud of steam and slowly nestled to the earth. The venturesome Barry crept up and saw that the passengers consisted of two men and a beautiful girl. The cabin of the ship was brilliant with electricity and a colored man in a white duck suit was serving supper on a spotless banquet table. An electric piano furnished lively music and the car was radiant with silver and polished brass. One of the passengers was a venerable man in a Turkish costume. He had a white beard which streamed to his girdle and he amused himself by feeding whole coconuts to a huge pink baboon which sat on the piano and had large gold rings in its ears.

Then con was further surprised at seeing the girl stand up on the table and wind a large purple and white anaconda about her neck just as if it were a feather boa. She danced lightly and gracefully to the music of the piano and then tossed half a dozen bottles of champagne down the yawning jaws of the serpent. Meanwhile the other male passenger was teaching a piebald kangaroo to jump over a walking stick which he held a foot over his head.

"This must be a sideshow out on a vacation," murmured Con.

Here the baboon lighted a huge cigar and sent clouds of smoke out of its ears. The kangaroo sat down and began to read a newspaper while the snake suspended itself from the chandelier and slowly fanned the lady with an ivory fan.

Then Con crossed himself and fainted.

This morning the ship was gone, but half a dozen empty bottles were found where it rested; also a card bearing these words:

/DR. LESLIE E. KEELEY, / OPIUM HABIT CURED / IN TEN TREATMENTS. /

Conductor Malley and Napoleon Bonaparte Richardson, the Wabash baggage man, both saw the airship from their train last evening. They first saw it near Perry Springs, and it was slowly moving west. Richardson says that it was made of aluminum in the shape of a huge cigar, and that it had things on the side resembling wings. At one time it sank so low that he could distinctly hear and accordion playing "Just Tell Them That Youx Saw Me."

Al Curry and George D. Brockman, of Mt. Sterling, and a negro named E.W. Watts also saw the aerial monster at the same time. Hon. F.W. Rottger, station agent at Mt. Sterling saw the mysterious nocturnal wanderer and reported it to his headquarters. Postmaster Davis says that it grazed the Presbyterian Church as it passed over the town Hannibal, Mo., April 13.--The mysterious cloud-dweller stopped here last night to take on air. An anchor rope trailing behind ~~knocked~~ knocked off Will Watson's hat, and when he shouted a remonstrance soon one leaned over the side of the vessel and threw a beer bottle at him. The bottle is now on exhibition at the Park Hotel.

Camp Point, April 13.--Nevade Snyder's divorce suit is overshadowed by news of the airship. Deputy Sheriff Roth saw it west of town last night evening. A rope ladder was let down and a man descended it. When he came to a tree he swung off and disappeared in the darkness. An hour later Sam Wallace was seen on the streets. There's some mystery here.

Jacksonville, April 13.--Undoubtedly what is a huge airship passed over this city last night. It moved west at a deliberate pace and lowered a siphon on reaching the railway tank. It seems that they ran out of clouds on their journey. The ship looks like a regalia cigar done up in tin-foil. All the seminary girls left their windows unfastened last night.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Quincy Morning Ship, p.3. (CARD 1)

IT WAS THE AIRSHIP SURE. / Hundreds of Persons Saw It Over Quincy. / WHOLE COUNTRY EXCITED. / Scientists Looking for the Mysterious Stranger--Bloomington Sees it in Daylight--Interviews With Eminent Astronomers--More Descriptions of It. /

Any number of reliable witnesses were found Sunday and yesterday who declared they had seen the airship which passed over Quincy shortly after 11 o'clock Saturday night, and quite a number of telephone messages were received at this office from persons who desired to collaborate the story of the presence of the mysterious stranger. One man declared that he had not only witnessed the thing, but heard a distinct whirring noise as it passed over the city. A farmer in Melrose, living four miles south of the city was in town yesterday and stated that he was sitting up with a sick child Saturday night, and happening to look out of the window saw the air ship as it hovered in the air south of the city. He hurried out of the house and got a good look at it. He said it did not appear to be more than 200 feet above the earth at that time, and he could plainly distinguish its form. His description tallied exactly with that given by others who saw it and which was published in The Sunday Whig. The visit of the aerial navigator was the talk of the town, and while some were inclined to scoff, with so much corroborative evidence from reliable witnesses it is impossible to doubt that it was really an airship that was seen.

Scientists and astronomers all over the country have become deeply interested in the airship and are trying to find out more about it. A dispatch from St. Louis says:

"Telescopes at Washington and at St. Louis universities swept the sky from zenith to horizon in a northwesterly direction last night and the professors at these institutions endeavored to solve the mystery that is now puzzling the central west.

It is the general belief that an airship is floating over the states of Missouri, Illinois, Iowa and Kansas. This belief is entertained by men of scientific attainments as well as those not so well versed in the field of natural philosophy.

The rumor that a strange aerial body had been seen became current a fortnight ago and was laughed at. It was repeated and wise men...

The Trenton (Mo.) Republican says the airship was seen by a number of persons in that vicinity.

Bloomington, Ill. ...

1897 April 13 (Tues) Rock Island, Ill., Argus, p.3. (card 1)

SAW SOMETHING. / People Attracted by a Light in the Heavens. / THINK IT MYSTERIOUS AIR SHIP / A Possible Astronomical Explanation--Passengers on a Train, Including General Manager Brown, Watch it for 40 Minutes.

People who were down town last evening congregated along Second avenue and gazed for half an hour at a strange light in the northwest which many were convinced was the mysterious air ship. The object, which appeared to be much nearer the earth than any of the planets, and the light, because of its close proximity was more like an arc electric globe, seemed to sway gently the more intently it was observed, and eventually it disappeared as mysteriously as it came. Swift, fleeting clouds were moving across the sky at the time, after the lull in the storm, and were massing for the subsequent attack of thunder, lightning and rain. There were people skeptical enough to declare that the unnatural light was simply one of the larger planets--some said Venus and others Jupiter--and that the gathering clouds gave it a more piercing appearance and more than that contributed to the idea that the heavenly body was moving instead of the clouds, the illusion being the consequence of fixed stare upon the object. The same deceptive effect is produced in gazing at the moon over whose face clouds are moving, or of standing on a boat that is pushing from the shore and imagining that the bank is retreating, or of sitting in a car close to a moving train on another track and feeling that the one containing the occupant is going, too; whereas it may be stationary all the time. But this is only one theory in explanation of the aerial visitor of last night. There are others, and many of them, who are positive that they saw the outlines of the ship and perceived more than one light and that the illuminating forces were not all one color.

Passengers coming in on both the Milwaukee and Burlington roads had observed the strange object for some miles. Charles McHugh, who returned from Delavan on the C., M. & St.P., said his attention was called to it at Fulton, and that there and at Clinton the people were greatly excited. All the way down to Rock Island the light was watched with extreme interest. On the Burlington the passengers first observed it at Sterling. Among them was General Manager W.C. Brown. Mr. Brown is a reticent, conservative man. "Yes, we saw an unusual light in the northwest," he said, "and looked at it fully 40 minutes in traveling down this way, but whether it was a planet or something else I am not enough of an astronomer to explain. I do not think I ever saw it before; at least it did not impress me before. If it had a tail it might be considered a truant comet, and yet the absence of the tail might be explained in the fact that the body is coming directly toward the earth. I have formed no convictions as yet as to the existence of an air ship."

The Scientific View.

So far scientists throughout the country have added no light to that which has of late illuminated the firmament and caused so much amazement and concern. An Argus representative attempted today to find the local astronomical and meteorological authority, Prof. Richard Mansill, in order to learn if he had been giving the strange visitor any attention, but the professor was out of town.

Two young barristers planned a trick to fool the unsuspecting who have been considerably worked up over the air ship. They called at an uptown store and asked if they could look over some balloons--those kind the boys send up on Fourth of July night. But the merchant had none. The lawyers were apparently much disappointed, as they were all smiles and chuckles when they entered.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Rock Island, Ill., Union, p. 5. (card 1)

THE AIR SHIP. / Rock Islanders See the Navigator of the Skies. / The Apparition Seen by Many in this City on Monday Evening--Wm. Carr, a Rock River Farmer, Saw the Ship in Broad Daylight. /

Rock Islanders heretofore have not taken a great deal of stock in the air ship which was reported to be cavorting about the skies in various Northwestern states, but the number of skeptics was reduced by many hundred, perhaps several thousand persons, who on Monday evening saw the strange aerial visitor with their own eyes. The apparition was first noticed about 8 o'clock, and was moving from the southeast in a northwesterly direction. What attracted people's attention was a light, which compared in brightness and size with the stars which were visible, as an immense arc light would. The body of the air ship, if such it was, was not visible owing to the darkness and the high altitude at which it was sailing. Most people who saw the light, are ready to affirm that it proceeded from a machine directed by human agency. They infer this from the eccentric or oscillating course pursued by the heavenly navigator, and also from the fact that the light was not of the same intensity at all times, and finally disappeared. Several hundred were gathered along Second avenue, and for a few minutes were able to observe the light without trouble. Then as it progressed in a northwesterly direction, the buildings on the north side of the avenue obscured the view, and men raced down to the river front to obtain a point of vantage. The light was in sight about 15 minutes, and finally disappeared so suddenly as to suggest that it had been shut off by the man in the ship.

Among those who saw the strange visitor was the Hon. E.W. Hurst, and several other ladies and gentlemen residing on Sixth avenue. Mr. Hurst was armed with an opera glass, and while not prepared to say that the light proceeded from an airship he does not see how the appearance can be explained on any other hypothesis. Beside the bright light already described, Mr. Hurst says, he and others who surveyed the sky with the aid of the glass, noticed that the ship or celestial visitor to this mundane sphere, was followed by a faint trail of light.

Another confirmation of the correctness of the information coming from all directions is ~~xxx~~ furnished by General Superintendent W.C. Brown, of the Burlington system, who came in from Chicago shortly after 8 o'clock on a special train. He saw the light all the way from Denrock to Rock Island. The first person on the train to notice it was the brakeman, who called the attention of the people in the car to it. They all proceeded to the front platform of the car, and until the train reached Rock Island the gaze of everyone was riveted on it. Mr. Brown's description of the light and its peculiarities coincides with that given above. He is not quite prepared to believe that a practicable airship has been perfected, and inclines to the belief that the light emanates from some celestial body which has for some inscrutable reason been deflected from its natural orbit.

In addition to all this it remains to be said that one man saw the airship in daylight. That man is William Carr, who lives on Rock river, between the Tower and Prospect park, and ~~delivers~~ delivers milk in Moline. Mr. Carr is a reliable man, and he declares that he saw at about 8:30 on Monday morning going over his place in a southerly direction at a terrific rate of speed and at a great height. (sic). It was rectangular or funnel-shaped in its outlines and had two large ~~arms~~ arms, one on either side.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Sterling, Ill., Pve. Gazette, p. 4. (CARD 1)

"KINDER QUEER." / A TRUE STORY OF THE AIR SHIP / Which Is Not True but Gets There Just the Same--Lanark Gets Terribly Excited.

A Lanark paper says the air ship landed in that town Monday and tells the following story: The airship which has attracted such universal attention, landed at Lanark at 3:35 this morning.

The first intimation the people of this city had of its coming was when the night operator at the telegraph station was startled by a terrific noise.

At first he thought a cyclone had sprung up, but upon peering out of the window he discerned a monster object slowly descending to the ground. Its immense wings wafted gently up and down. It reached earth without a jar, save that the rudder demolished a wing on a frame house.

The operator rang the fire bells and soon every inhabitant in the city was out. At first they were terror stricken, but it soon dawned upon them that the monster object was in reality an air ship.

Soon after its landing a man not more than two feet in height came out of the ship. He wore an immense board of a pinkish hue and his head was ornamented with some ivory like substance. He was heavily clothed in robes resembling the hide of a hippopotamus. His feet were uncovered near the ankles, but lashed firmly on the soles were two immense pieces of iron ore. About his neck was a string on which were 234 diamonds.

When asked where he came from he made no reply, being apparently deaf.

He said nothing and made motions, indicating that he wanted something to eat or drink. He drank two bucketsful of water and ate three sides of bacon, after declining to take ham, which had been tendered him.

A short time after three other persons similar in stature and similarly attired came out of the air ship by means of long peculiar ropes, which reached to the ground. They could not speak or hear. One carried a staff of gold.

A CORRESPONDENT'S STORY.

A correspondent gives a most complete account and a somewhat different version of the affair, as follows:

Lanark, April 10.--This community is terrorized by the strange events of last night, which were of such a nature that your correspondent did not recover his wits sufficiently to send the particulars until this afternoon. The facts are these: This morning about 4 o'clock a terrific explosion was heard and the people hurrying to their windows saw a bright ruby light shoot up to the sky like the flame of a Broddinmarian torch. Huddling on a few clothes and hurrying through the snow storm in the direction of the light, which gradually grew dimmer until it settled to a glow about as strong as the ordinary arc light, half a hundred men, among whom was your correspondent, discovered near the home of Johann Fliegeltoub, the wreck of a ship for aerial navigation, and saw an excited individual, clad in strange raiment, shouting hysterically in an unknown language at the frightened members of the Fliegeltoub family, while nearby lay two masses of mangled flesh and broken bones that had once been human beings.

The wrecked airship was ~~xxx~~ about one-third buried in the ground. It was cigar shaped and made of aluminum, about thirty feet long by nine feet in diameter, and the steady red glow came from an immense electric lamp. There were four side and one rear propellers on the machine, with a fin-like projection above it, evidently the rudder. An immense hole was torn in the under side of the ship, showing that an explosion had occurred, caused probably by a puncture from a lightning rod on the Fliegeltoub barn, as one of them was slightly bent.

The strange creature who escaped from the wreck, is now unconscious. He or she is garbed after the fashion of the Greeks in the time of Christ, as shown by stave costumes, and the language spoken was entirely unknown to any one here, though most people are familiar with high and low Dutch, and even one or two know something of French or Spanish.

The remains of the two persons who were killed were taken to the Fliegeltoub barn and straightened out on boards. /

LANARK, April 12.--The great excitement that has prevailed here since the wreck of the airship has been intensified by subsequent events until the inhabitants are now in a state bordering on frenzy, I myself being the only one here who has a head clear enough to detail the wonderful occurrences of the last forty-eight hours.

Fortified by past experiences in reporting for the press miraculous happenings all over the world in decades gone by, I accepted the assignment here without any misgivings, and arrived on a hudd car late Saturday afternoon. I found the town almost deserted.

When I arrived at the Fliegeltoub place, I discovered that with an eye to business, Herr Fliegeltoub had posted guards all about his place and was charging an admission fee of $1 a head to the barn yard where the wrecked airship lay. I found a large crowd gathered about the odd looking craft, gazing upon it in awed silence, the powerful lamp that still burned on the stern of the ship throwing a ruby light on the rims of faces that were pale from suppressed excitement.

After looking carefully at ~~xxx~~ the wreck for a few moments, I began to feel the effect of the situation upon my nerves and just to steady them a bit I pushed up my left sleeve and with a hypodermic syringe, gave myself a grain and a half of morphine, and also swallowed three one grain cocaine tablets.

In a short time I regained my usual calmness, and made a minute inspection of the airship, examining its construction and mechanism carefully.

The general appearance of the machine and its dimensions were accurately given by our local correspondent. The hole in the underside was not large and looked as though it might easily be repaired. The interior was divided into four apartments, one large room containing the machinery of the ship, the principal part of which was a powerful electric dynamo, and there was also a tank of air compressed into a liquid. Two of the other apartments were fitted up as sleeping rooms and a third was a bath room. There were many bottles of little pills in a cabinet, evidently condensed food.

After viewing the ship I started to the house to see the surviving navigator, taking another injection of morphine and a few more cocaine pellets before entering the room where ~~xxx~~ he still lay unconscious. I found the unknown wanderer lying on a lounge. He was about medium height and of athletic build and an extremely handsome face. He wore a white tunic reaching to his knees and on his feet were sandals strapped with tin-foil wrapped braid. The tunic was embroidered with a coat of arms over the breast, a shield with a bar sinister of link sausages and bearing a ham sandwich rampant.

A few minutes after I entered the room he awoke and sat up. Immediately everyone fled from the room except myself. After looking around for a minute he said in a language that I at once knew to be Volapuk, "Where am I?" "Near Lanark on the earth," I answered, and he said he was glad to be there and asked how it happened.

I explained the circumstance to him and we had a long conversation a report of which I reserve for another dispatch, but in brief he told me that he and his companions were an exploring party from Mars, who had been flying about over this country for some weeks.

About midnight he expressed a desire to see his wrecked machine and I went with him to visit it. When he saw the hole, with his fingers he bent the torn metal into its proper position, and stepping inside brought a pot of pasty looking stuff, which he spread over where the rent had been. He then ran hastily to the barn, picked up the bodies of his companions and carried them to this ship. Stepping inside he pulled a lever which set the propellers whirring, and the machine dragged itself from the ground. The operator then reversed the machinery, and shouting a farewell to me slammed the door and the air ship rose rapidly into the air and finally disappeared into the night, though the red light was for a long time visible.

The crowd was awe-struck by the proceedings. I myself, to whom nothing is strange, returned to Lanark and securing a room at the hotel, sat up all night smoking opium and eating haasheesh to get in condition to write this dispatch.

1897 April 13 (Tues) D. Breeze (Taylorville, Ill.), p. 1.

What Is It? /

Editor Breeze--In Monday's issue mention of the air ship is made which is now attracting the attention of the public and the press. As newspaper men are largely depended upon to run down sensational rumors, will you kindly relieve the agony of minds in your readers by further explanation. A few centuries ago signs and wonders were common. Elijah went to Heaven in a chariot of fire. Balaam's ass spoke. Joshua commanded the sun to stand still. Phantom ships of passengers came down close to the earth and talked to the natives, but none of these miracles are as a drop of water in a flood as compared with this thing. It has a tail like a mad duck and wings like a stork. Signal lights against rear end collisions. The phantom ships could, by anyone with a fair sized jag and stretch of irascination, be seen in daytime, but this aerial monstrosity, 50 feet long, 10 feet through, balloon over it, Ferris wheel car under it, can hide for weeks where a wild goose can't light in daytime without being shot at. Where does this bird roost in the daytime? Is it the spirit of P.T. Barnum or the devil?

CORRIDOR ENQUIRER. /

Saw the Air Ship. /

Mrs. W.E. Andrews, wife of Prof. Andrews of the high school, enjoys the distinction of being the first person in Taylorville to see the air ship that is now attracting such wide-spread interest in central and northern Illinois. She is an enthusiast on aerial navigation and during the absence of her husband Monday evening she looked skyward for the nocturnal bird. Finally she observed the red and green lights floating in the heavens and notified the family of C.E. Evans, living next door. When the Evans appeared the air ship could not be seen, having disappeared while Mrs. Andrews was calling her neighbors to witness the latest triumph in navigation.

Today's dispatches are to effect that it was also seen at various times during the last 24 hours at Burlington, Iowa, Moline and Lincoln, Ill. Between Chicago and the former place it distanced a fast rail, and the engineer claims that it traveled 150 miles per hour.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Alton Evening Telegraph (Ill.), p. 3.

THE "AIR SHIP" / Seen in Alton Last Night. /

Altonians who happened to be awake and on the lookout for the "air-ship," which has caused so much comment the past week, had their curiosity gratified last night by a glimpse of this aerial phenomenon, whatever it may be. It made its appearance in the west at 3:30 a.m., and was visible for about 15 minutes. Mr. Peter Demuth, of Apple street, had been watching for its appearance, and arose frequently during the night to look out. At about 3:30 o'clock he saw a bright light in the western sky. He immediately awakened the remainder of the family, and it was plainly seen by all of them. It first resembled a tub in shape, and then seemed to change to an egg shape.

Rev. Irlx Hicks says the "air-ship" is nothing more than the next planet Venus, which at the present time is fast approaching the earth or overtaking it.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Canton, Ill., Daily Register, p. 8.

THAT AIRSHIP. / Many People in Canton Saw the Thing Tuesday Night.

The output of the Canton drunk factories is evidently no better than that of any other ~~xxxx~~ place. While Pekin, Galesburg, Chicago, Galena and other suburban towns have been witnessing the nightly gyrations of the famous airship, Canton people have been exempted from the mysterious influences that seem to pervade the atmosphere. That is, they were exempt until Tuesday night. Then the change came. We are no better than our neighbors. Several people saw the airship about eleven o'clock. It was going in a northerly direction, displayed yellow and red and green lights and looked like a cross between a section of pneumatic tire and an incomplete study and in black and white of a storm at sea. Some of those who saw the mysterious thing declare that there were two or ~~xxxx~~ three of him. Many assert that the thing carried with it a full assortment of burglars' ~~xxxx~~ tools and a search light, and appeared as though a desperate attempt was about ~~xxxx~~ to be made to locate Alderman Fingel's conscience. The motive power was said to resemble the pull of the "big three" councilmen with the mayor, although some thought it was not so substantial, but merely wind. Anyhow and anyway, the ship has been here, was seen and has gone. And anyone who has moved from one ward to another within the last 25 days loses his vote next Tuesday.

April 14, 1897 Chicago Record (Wed.) p. 2

Watch Airship for Miles. Many Illinois Towns See the Mysterious Object--Comes to Earth. / Special to the Chicago Record.

Carlinville, Illinois, April 13.--The so-called airship has been seen in this locality. From the description given by those who were fortunate enough to view it the impression given was that of a cigar-shaped boat with long oars projecting, and a canopy top. It was first sighted near Hillwood, at about 2:30 Monday afternoon, on the farm of Z. Thacker, about twelve miles north of this city. Three young men saw it descend, but before they could reach it it slowly arose and majestically sailed north. It was next seen by a party of miners at Green Ridge, at about 6 p.m., as it sailed by, settling down in a cove one and a half miles north of that place and about two miles south of Girard. The night operator of the Chicago and Alton, Paul McCraner, says he was sufficiently near to see a man step out of the ship and repair the machinery. At Sherman, thirty-two miles farther north, it passed over at 8 o'clock, and later at 8:45, it was seen higher in the air by residents of Williamsville. Some claim they saw on the front end a banner bearing the letter "M." At Green Ridge tracks covering a large space showed where the ship rested while being repaired. The operators along the line of the Chicago and Alton wired ahead to each operator to be on the lookout and watch the direction and note the rate of speed.

Cabery, Ill., April 13.--This village, twenty-three miles south of Kankakee, saw the airship tonight at 9:30 o'clock. It moved at an extremely rapid rate in a southeasterly direction, displaying a dull red light. The idea that it might have been a heavenly body is precluded by the fact that the sky was overcast and not a star in sight. April 14, 1897 Chicago Record (Wed.) p. 5 (letters) (card 1)

Aerial Navigation.--My observation leads me to conclude that there is a widespread interest among all classes of people concerning the but little understood subject of aerial navigation. It is not commonly known that there are a great many men, of varying attainments, who are intelligently seeking a solution of this wonderful problem. The results of a practical accomplishment of aerial navigation undoubtedly would involve great and revolutionary changes in human existence, and I submit a few ideas and propositions that not only may be of interest to reviewers generally, but possibly may help some one working to solve the riddle. In the first place, it must be understood that aerial navigation involves only a purely mechanical proposition. The whole thing is simmered down to simply the correct use of force. The man who can devise a motor of sufficient power and light enough construction holds the key to the mystery. Given the power to apply to a mechanism, it will be an easy matter to ascertain the proper design for a practical airship. The motor power must be great enough to lift and propel by use of screwmen the whole apparatus. There cannot be safely used any element of buoyancy such as a balloon. The balloon feature must be eliminated from the successful airship, as it would not only retard progress, but would make the thing a plaything of air currents. The aeroplanes must be absolutely flat and perfectly rigid, as any curvature or bagging of a plane would imply great danger of destruction no matter how strongly constructed. The propelling fans must be placed in front, so as to pull, not push. There must be vertical, as well as horizontal planes, to insure perfect control in steering. By a great many it is supposed that the laws of nature must be transgressed in order to accomplish aerial navigation; that some mysterious miracle must be performed, or that some now unknown and undiscovered force must be found to enable men to do this apparently wonderful thing. There has been all manner of speculation on the subject, but speculation does not generally end in practical accomplishment. The thing to do is to ascertain, as nearly as possible, the conditions under which aerial navigation is a possibility. Then strive to make a rational mechanical construction that will operate in harmony with the laws of nature. It is but a question of applied force and proper design. I have no doubt that there will be put into operation the next 12 months more than one successful airship. My experiments and the knowledge I have of others' efforts lead me to conclude that the world will soon accept aerial navigation as an assured fact. The whole social fabric is to be affected radically. I am constantly referred to the failures in the past to accomplish aerial navigation. I always answer: "You see that the birds still fly!" The conditions that will permit an animal by its own puny strength to propel itself with such wonderful grace, safety and swiftness through the air still holds out the assurance that greater power and greater intelligence will outstrip the bird in the air.

Chicago, April 12. J. P. S. 1897 April 14 (Wed) Evening Telegraph (Dixon, Ill.), p. 4.

Airships Are Numerous. / A man need not be very full to see that our sky is filled with lightly floating airships of various sizes and varieties. Last evening they were flying about over Dixon at a lively rate. Not since the wonderful "Moon Hoax" have the people all over the country been so completely wrought up to a fever of excitement over celestial fakes. The Evening Telegraph has many communications by telephone and post regarding the airship excitement. William Rock, over in West Dixon, informs us that he has the skeleton of one of the aerial vagrants now at his house on free exhibition. Hot-air balloons are as thick as stars, soon after dark, and men with fertile imaginations and impediments in their veracity see airships at all times of the night. A South Dixon poet came in today, as we were going to press, with the following:

Twinkle, twinkle little star, / How is we wonder what you are. / Up above our town so high, / Like an airship in the sky. / When the evening sun has set, / And lips with "mountain dew" are wet, / Then you show your little light, / Twinkling double all the night. / At eve your colored lights draw near, / At dawn they quickly disappear-- / With awful speed you rend the sky, / With equal speed the people lie. 1897 April 14 (Wed) Evening Telegraph (Dixon, Ill.), p. 5.

Suburban Sightings. / Lee Center. / April 14. A number of our citizens saw the light of the supposed "air ship" last Saturday evening.

Sublette, April 12. The mysterious airship was seen traveling northwesterly from us Saturday evening by a number of our citizens. One person expressed the opinion that it was the devil sailing around as an angel of light. An objector to that that theory asked, "If that is so, why doesn't he alight somewhere?" A pessimist replied, "Because wherever he has been he has found his followers actively at work in his cause, and sectarians fighting each other, instead of opposing him.

16.8. The airship was seen by many Amboy people Saturday and Sunday evening. There must be more than one or an airship was seen at the same time at Saint Louis; Burlington, Ia.; Plymouth, Lakehart and other places in Indiana; West Superior, Wis., and other faraway places. No one will deny the possibility of solving the problem of aerial navigation, but it will be brought about gradually. That first airship will not be ~~permanently~~ the perfected machine capable of long flights, miraculous rapidity of motion and power to remain in the air indefinitely. When the alleged airship shall finally land on terra firma, we may all go view it at close range.--Amboy Journal.

- 17.1. Winkle & Hulle.
15.1. A Chicago newspaper has a picture of the arsp taken from a photograph of the machine. That settles it so far as photographs being like the little boy, Washington.
19.1. Speaking of heirships, or arsp, ...new Carnegie baby has $25-75 million.
May 4, 1. That was a very pretty strip of new moon displayed last evening; a very gracefully modeled arsp.
1897 April 14 (Wed eve) Galena, Ill., Gazette, p. 3.

Ancient the Air-Ship. The Dubuque Times has the following reminiscence (?): J.B. Howard, Jr., sent up a paper balloon Sunday night in one of the Galena parks and the entire population were sure they saw the airship.

This incident recalled to the mind of a well known Dubuquer a balloon ascension in this city in which J.B. Howard, Sr., was a big factor. The ascension took place where the archbishop's building on Seventh and Main streets now stands. The gas company was to furnish the gas for the balloon. "Jerry" Sr., was superintending the job of inflating the balloon. The time had arrived for the ascension to be made and some of the ropes holding the balloon were loosened. One of these came loose with a jerk and wrapped itself around "Jerry's" leg. Before he knew what happened the balloon shot upward and "Jerry's" leg went with it. He was about eight feet in space when the rope unwound, and "Jerry's" head first dive for mother earth was realistic. He undoubtedly remembers the interesting incident.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Monmouth, Ill., Daily Review, p. 1.

WAY UP IN THE SKY. / DOE Two Young Ideas Have-Some Fun With a Kite and Lantern.

The most realistic air ship of them all appeared in the north end of the city last night and after attaining an altitude of about seven miles made a dive for the southwest. There were thousands of people, more or less, on the streets, and every one of them had his head in the air. When apparently about over the corner of Second street and Archer avenue, the ship seemed to cast anchor (the boys had to put on another ball of cord), and stayed in that position for a long time.

The perpetrators of the joke were found to be Masters John McManara and Harry Skinner, who, from the rear lot, corner A and Boston, had put up a small kite with a Japanese lantern hanging to the tail. As kite-flyers these boys would put old Ben Franklin in the shade. His lightning arrester tail is no longer a wonder, for a couple of Monmouth boys have succeeded in making several people temporarily believe they had solved the aerial navigation problem by means of a kite. If the boys had as much fun out of it as the crowd did, they are well repaid for their trouble and expense of buying cord and other material. By an unfortunate accident, however, the kite string broke, and lantern and complete paraphernalia were precipitated to the ground. All the passengers jumped, it is supposed, and went up instead of coming down, as no remnants could be found this morning.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Argus (Rock Island, Ill.), p. 5. (card 1)

VISION OF VENUS / Prof. Mansill's Explanation of the Air Ship. / WHAT IS NOW MISLEADING. / More People Claim to Have Seen the Aerial Navigator--Also Witness Destruction of a Paper Balloon--A Chance Tonight.

Prof. Richard Mansill, Rock Island's authority on planetary science, reached home this morning, and to an Argus representative, who sought his views on the air ship phenomenon, stated that he had no views, in that he had given the subject no consideration. "Indeed," said the professor, "I have not looked for the strange object, and consequently have not seen it. I think the world has been deluded by a vision of Venus. People are dreaming. Venus is the bright, particular star in the western firmament at this time. It happens every two years at this time of year that Venus becomes unusually brilliant, and while people not students of planetary science are not apt to be startled with the beauty of the planet, the more their attention is attracted to it the more they become impressed with the splendor of the spectacle which for years has feasted the eyes of astronomers. On the 28th of the month Venus will disappear and shortly thereafter will become a morning star. Then, I take it, the people will imagine they see an air ship in the morning.

"Another star that is attracting much attention now is Alpha, in the southwestern heavens. This illuminating body has adopted a peculiarly and particularly red shade, and this, too may have contributed to the excitement that is prevalent over alleged scientific discoveries."

Saw the Ship Again.

Passengers on the ferry, Augusta, coming from Davenport shortly after 8 o'clock last night were positive they saw the air ship. There were 25 on board and all gazed in wonder at a strange light, this time in the eastern heavens. The sky being completely overcast there was no opportunity to confuse the spectacle with stars, and all were satisfied they saw an illuminated moving object. Robert Solomon, of the Augusta crew, had the boat whistle blow a salute to the passing ship to keep to the right, but it disregarded the marine laws and failed to acknowledge the signal. Solomon afterward speaking of it said "the light appeared off in the east up the river. It seemed about the head of the rapids and moved swiftly in a southerly direction. Almost as we gazed it seemed to cross over the upper part of the Island of Rock Island, and out across the lower part of the line, and the exact end of Rock Island and finally disappeared in the south-east."

"Shortly after we observed a light rise suddenly in the southwest which soon sent up a sheet of blue and disappeared. That was plainly a hot air balloon started to deceive no ~~how~~ doubt, and eventually caught fire, but I feel confident that the first was the air ship."

As the prospects are not unfavorable to a clear sky tonight, the present positions of the planets as well as the opportunity to witness the unnatural spectacle should be better than was the case last night.

An enterprising young man sent up three hot air balloons on Twelfth street last night, but only one ascended far enough to be seen.

There are all sorts of funny stories in town today about the air ship having been in the outskirts of Rock Island Monday, and having been near Milan yesterday afternoon.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Rock Island, Ill., Union, p. 4.

THE AIR-SHIP AGAIN. / It is Observed a Second Night Over Rock Island, and Has a Changing Colored Light.

The air ship, or whatever the thing is that is circulating about in the air, was seen again about 9 o'clock on Tuesday night. The sky was cloudy and not a star visible. It appeared coming directly from the south at first and then shot off in the direction of east-south-east with wonderful rapidity, and continued steadily on that course until it faded from view. During its close proximity it shot out a bright red light which anon was changed to blue and then to red again and the blue was on duty when it was lost sight of. These color changes were made with rapidity though not with frequency. They suggested the screens that are placed before calcium or electric lights in a theatre to produce a glow of one particular color at a time--and they also suggested active human agency. There is nothing of the celestial in its wobbly movements, driven by a force that robs it of grace and ease and is distinctively terrestrial. It is really less of a wonder to imagine it the product of mechanical genius than a planetary body gone astray from its orbit and traveling without regard to air currents. Perhaps we may get an explanation in accordance with this speculation, in accordance with the following letter, said to have been dated at Omaha and received by Secretary Wakefield, now going the rounds of the newspapers:

"To the Exposition Directors: My identity up to date has been unknown, but I will come to the front now, that is, if you guarantee me 870,000 square feet of space. I am the famous air ship constructor and will guarantee you positively of the fact within a week. The air ship is my own invention and as I am an Omaha man, I wish it to be held as an Omaha invention. It will safely carry twenty people to a height of from 10,000 to 20,000 feet. I truly believe I have the greatest invention and discovery ever made. Will see you April 17, 1897, at the headquarters."

This communication was written on a piece of plain notepaper, with out printed matter of any kind whatever which might throw any light upon the identity of the writer. He gave no address and his name does not appear in the last city directory. The amount of space he asks for is nearly thirty-five acres. The exposition authorities await his appearance with a good deal of interest on Saturday.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Springfield, Ill., News, p. 7.

AIR SHIP REPAIRED IN ILLINOIS / Alighted Near Girard While the Occupants Mended the Machinery.

Carlinville, Ill., April 14.--The report from authentic sources is that the airship, which has been seen at many different places the past month, was seen half way between the towns of Milwood and Girard at 6:15 Monday evening. When first seen it was descending, and was noticed by Wm. Street, Frank Metcalf and Ed Teeples and the telegraph operator at Girard. These men saw it alight, and a man get out and fix some part of the machinery. They started for the place where it had alighted, but when within a quarter of a mile it rose and disappeared from view in a northerly direction.

The ship was of enormous size, pointed at each end, and had wings on each side, while the top was covered with what appeared at some distance to be a canopy, like that used on a surry. There was a sign on the ship, but nothing could be seen plainly except a large "H." The ship rose to a great height. When the parties arrived at the place where it had alighted in the field, there was clearly seen the footprints of a man who had been walking around, evidently those of the man who got out of the ship to fix some part of the machinery. Its course was northward.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Daily Breeze (Taylorsville, Ill.), p. 1.

That Air-Ship. /

"I'll tell you, a town that can't have an air-ship nowadays exhibits mighty little enterprise," remarked Warren Povel to a Breeze representative the other day. "Now, Estill Harner and I are making one and when it is completed I will send you word, and I want you to accompany us on the trial trip. Of course, in the meantime, you want to boost the thing along by saying a word now and then about the one that is attracting so much attention over the country."

Last evening this office was informed by messenger that Warren Povel was ready for the representative. Everything being in readiness, Estill Harner, by a circuitous route, took the airship to the Vandever meadow at the west end of Main Cross street where he was met by the great aerial navigator, Warren Povel, and the Breeze representative. The trio soon succeeded in hoisting before a stiff north-wester, a four foot kite, with 60 feet of tail. To the end of the tail was attached by wire a small lantern of candle, mica and tin--another of larger dimensions was attached about 20 feet nearer the kite. The candles surrounded by mica of white, green and red, were ignited, after the experimental sail, and the ship was again let over the west part of the city amid the cheers and cries of "air-ship" from a hundred or more of throats.

The great aerial navigator was clapping his hands in glee and saying: "Now boys, your pa's up in the watermelon patch," when the cord broke and the whole blamed air-ship was precipitated on the roof of Almon Barnes' residence, on West Market street.

Notwithstanding his ill luck, the great aerial navigator is not in the least disheartened, and after another trial of his invention north of the city, announced that he would yet demonstrate the practicability of passenger traffic through the air.

His ship is now on exhibition in the show window of H.M. Povel & Son, on the northwest corner of the square.

1897 April 15 (Th) Alton, Ill., Evening Telegraph, p. 3.

THE AIRSHIP. / Seen in This City Again Last Evening. /

Little Elmus Clapp, son of Mr. E. A. Clapp, of State street, called at the Telegraph office this morning, and stated that while he and his parents and sisters were on the bluff last evening, they caught sight of the famous airship. It appeared over in the west, about nine o'clock, and had a bright light, which shone upon the Spread Eagle, then coming down the river, thoroughly illuminating the deck and plainly showing the deckhands on the boat. Elmus stated that when in a certain position, the ship appeared to have a long tail, or something that looked like a tail, and that when in other positions the appendage could not be seen. The light went out very suddenly, and the ship disappeared from view.

This mysterious ship, or whatever it may be, has the power of being seen at many different places in the same night. It must travel very swiftly, and disappears from view just as soon as it discovers that it is being watched.

A large pink balloon landed on the front fence of the residence of Mr. E. W. Schmidt, on Ninth street. It sailed through the air very prettily and finally landed on the pickets. It is thought by some that this is one of the airships seen by various people.

April 15, 1897 Chicago Record (Hours), p. 5 (The City)

May Solve Airship Mystery--The police at the West 13th street station think they have a solution of the airship mystery in a large tissue paper balloon, which was found yesterday morning by policeman Thomas Martin on the prairie at Washburn avenue and Robey street. The balloon was made of red, white and blue paper and the lower portion of it had been burned.

April 15, p. 4--On one of its off days this week the airship has been seen in only three widely separated places at the same time.

Mon. April 19, p. 4--If the airship were a reality the Cubans would not need to worry about capturing a port.

--Greeks and Turks at war, and by Apr 20 this news fills 2-3 pp.

Wed. April 21, p. 4--The fact that the airship has not been sighted for several evenings is to be taken as proof that the imaginative facilities of the American people are deteriorating.

1897 April 15 (Th) Decatur, Ill., Evening Republican, p. 8. (Caro 1)

AIRSHIP STORY. / Home of the Mysterious Machine is Near Vandalia. / TRAVELS 100 MILES AN HOUR. / A Republican Reporter the Guest of the Inventor--Description of a Trip to Chicago--Wonders of the Ship. /

A vast amount of speculation concerning the mysterious airship which has been cavorting through the upper regions has been indulged in by all classes of citizens. It is said that one confirmed old toper of this city has been so impressed that he has determined that the aerial craft is one of the signs of approaching wind up of the universe mentioned in the good book and now takes his Sangamon river water straight. A few months past a reporter for the Republican was in Vandalia and during a rather protracted visit became acquainted with Mr. C.

Devonbaugh, a farmer, residing among the hills about four miles west of that city. On evening Mr. D. called at the local hotel and requested the reporter to ride with him to his home, promising a view of one of the greatest wonders of the age. The invitation was accepted, and owing to this fact the reporter has recently been afforded an experience such as fall to the lot of few men. During the ride to the farm Mr. Devonbaugh explained that he had been interested in the problem of aerial navigation and had perfected a craft which would glide through the air, obedient to the will of the navigator and which would in time astonish the world. His prediction has been fulfilled.

Arriving at the farm, Mr. D. led the way to a long but rather high building, which had been erected for a barn. The windows were carefully closed and fastened, and the doors were secured with huge locks. Applying a key to the lock the owner entered the building, the reporter followed and stood in the presence of the mystery.

The machine or airship was composed of two cigar-shaped spheres of aluminum, each 45 feet in ~~length~~ length, and eight feet in diameter at the center, tapering to a point at the bow and stern. The two were bound together by slender but exceedingly strong steel rods. A flooring composed of pine lumber, dovetailed together joined the tubes. Near the center of the craft was a cabin built of light stuff, and covered with thin sheets of corrugated iron. The cabin would accommodate five or six persons, and was fitted with divans for sitting and sleeping, lockers for provisions, etc. The machinery which propelled the craft was located forward but this part of the craft Mr. Devonbaugh refused to exhibit, stating that while electricity was the force used, it was generated by a new ~~method~~ process which he wished to perfect and cover with letters patent before allowing the secret to pass into other hands. Hinged to the side of the craft were two huge wings formed from varnished canvass and braced by slender steel rods. These were of the same length as the craft and when extended covered a space of about 40 feet in width. They were used to steady the craft when in motion. The raising and propelling power were derived from three "rothascopes," composed of canvass and steel ribs which were attached to revolving masts and which could be set at any desired angle. The rudder was fashioned on the plan of a steamboat propeller, and operated by a wheel, set in a small house located well forward. Towering above the "rothascopes" masts were two slender wooden masts which Mr. Devonbaugh explained were to support parachutes especially designed for the purpose and which would support the craft in case of accident to the wings or machinery. The craft had been tested the day before the reporter's visit but certain defects had been discovered which could only be remedied by sending the parts to St. Louis for repairs. To give greater buoyancy the aluminum cylinders were to be charged with gas, and this would necessitate, as Mr. D. remarked, "the use of cold vituals" during the trial voyage. The Republican man was given to understand that he might form one of the crew on the first voyage and left for home with the understanding that a telegram bearing the words, "Come tonight" would cause him to hustle for Vandalia.

The other morning while preparing for a business trip to Blue Mound, a telegraph messenger brought the looked-for message, and it is needless to say that the south bound Illinois Central train bore an excited but outwardly calm passenger provided with a ticket for Vandalia. The trip was made without incident and Mr. D. was found pacing the platform. "Hurry up my boy," exclaimed the skipper, for so we must now call him, "we must get away soon after dark. Everything is in order and you will have something to write about, that is, if the thing don't go down with us, and scatter your fragments over the universe." This was not assuring but the reporter concluded he was in for it, and applied a fresh match to his old pipe which had gone out from the fright.

The Devonburgh place was soon reached, and the crew had assembled. Mrs. Devonburgh, and her sister, a sprightly miss of eighteen, Mr. D. and the hired man who had assisted in the work, were on hand prepared for the journey. After giving some hurried directions to his son who was to remain in charge of the farm while his parents were shooting around among the clouds, dodging shooting stars and getting into the track of wandering planets and other things, Mr. D. led the way to the barn. He unlocked and threw open the huge folding doors. A step ladder was placed against the craft, the ladies climbed aboard and disappeared within the cabin. "Bear a hand here, you men," exclaimed the skipper, and by the united efforts of the three the craft was rolled into the yard. "No aboard with you, and toss off those blocks of iron was the next command. A dozen or more masses of iron, weighing several hundred pounds were thrown overboard and the strange vessel rose slowly into the air. Mr. D. slipped into the little house forward, and the reporter who was watching his movements through the glass door saw him pull down a lever which with a lot of other levers, knobs and things adorned a board something like the ones in a telephone exchange. The steel masts began to revolve and the upward motion was accelerated, the lever was moved another notch and the rothascopes were at full speed. Higher and higher the machine mounted until nothing could be seen of the earth, and were hidden by masses of vapor [?]. Then the skipper wings on the sides were extended. Another thingumabob was taken out of place, the position of the rothascopes were changed and the craft shot ahead at full speed. "We are now about 2000 feet above the earth," said Captain Devonbaugh as he stepped out of the engine room, and joined the reporter. "I should judge we are making at least 65 miles an hour and are headed straight for Chicago. We'll keep dark until we are over the city and then will astonish the natives. Now be careful not to light a match when you go into the cabin, we don't want to risk an explosion while we are up here. The results might not be pleasant, you know."

For two hours we sailed through the night, the queerest journey ever undertaken by mortal man. There was no jar, nor sound save the ceaseless whir of machinery. Above us the stars were shining brightly below us thick masses of rolling vapor. The air was not uncomfortably cold, and the cabin which we entered once during the trip was warm and comfortable. The electric heaters were working well. Mrs. D. and her sister seemed unconcerned, and chatted gaily. This was not their first trip. Both had accompanied Mr. D. on several short nocturnal trips. "We have had great times keeping the ship hid from the neighbors," said Mrs. D. Our hired man, my husband and son have put the craft together. We had the parts and engines made in Omaha, boxed and sent to Vandalia. We have not been long on the farm which my husband leased for his use because it was somewhat retired, and we have not encouraged the country people to call on us. I don't believe any of our neighbors know about this ship, although my son says some of the people were curious about the machiner, and had tried to find out something. Our trial trips have been short, and made on dark rainy nights, but the secret will be out now." "Come out you fools, and see something," called the captain, and the party hastened on deck. Below us was a vast plain, the surface dimly seen tossed in huge billows. "We are over Lake Michigan," exclaimed the captain, "and if you will look over toward the northeast you will see a cluster of lights. If I am not mistaken that's Chicago." The ship glided ahead with undiminished speed, the lights stood out in bolder relief and became more numerous. Suddenly a towering mass of illumination loomed up before us. "That's the Masonic Temple," said Mr. D., and now I guess its time to surprise these people. He stepped into the cavern of mysteries, pulled a knob, and a double line of electric lamps started at the bow and extending around the vessel gave out a various assortment of colors. "We are now about 1800 feet in the air," remarked the captain, as he gave a lever a twitch and the boat swerved off its course, changed directions like a swallow chasing its dinner, and then went straight ahead. Below us, and extending for miles in every direction were the lights of the city and shipping in the harbor. When over the center of the town, as near as could be judged the reporter attached a folded copy of the Republican to a small pebble, and tossed it overboard. He has often speculated regarding the fate of that issue. For several hours the craft and crew sailed over the city and suburbs and then as the little clock in the cabin struck the hour of one, Captain D. laid his course for home. The craft was raised to an altitude of as near as could be judged of 3000 feet and then those rothascopes settled down to business. The "skyscope" sped away behind sweeping faster than a hired man getting in late to dinner, and the captain who was examining some sort of an odd contrivance announced that we were making something over a hundred miles an hour. There was nothing oppressive about this high speed. The atmosphere seemed perfectly still, although we could tell that some kind of a storm was going on beneath us. Flashes of lightning were occasionally seen below us, and the heavy rumble of thunder now and then came up from the depths. After a time, the speed was reduced, lights were extinguished and the craft slowly climbed down from its elevated position. Mr. D. had calculated our starting point to a nicety but missed his bearing and it only lacked an hour of dawn when he suddenly changed the ~~direction~~ direction of the rothascopes, and dived in the wings. The craft remained for a moment stationary in midair, and then slowly descended until with a slight jar, it rested on the ground. Then in the dim light of early morning the reporter recognized the yard and the long low barn, which had been our starting station. The boy came out of the house and his cheery wattle of fact greeting "well, dad, back again are you?" seemed out of place as the termination of an adventure that was destined to set tongues wagging and type machines clicking on two continents. The ladies were assisted to earth again, gas allowed to escape from the cylinders, and when everything had been made ship shape the strange craft was pushed into its harbor; the doors were locked and bolted and the family were at home again. An early breakfast, a hurried exchange of opinions regarding the craft and journey then the team was ~~brought~~ brought around and after good bys had been spoken and promises exchanged for another tour, the reporter hastened to the light wagon and an hour later was on the platform at Vandalia, ready to take his place in the train and speed back to Decatur, a rate of travel which seemed very slow and commonplace after gliding through the air at 1000 miles a per hour.

Mr. Devonbaugh states that he has been in correspondence with the Cuban junta and if certain arrangements can be made the ship will be taken to Cuba and used against the Spanish army. The effect which dynamite bombs may cause when they come tumbling from an invisible source high in the air can be imagined.

Not the Real Thing.

The people of Decatur who were out last evening "rubbering," thinking they had again seen the airship, were imposed upon by some boys in the east end who had sent up a paper balloon, attaching colored lights to arouse interest and speculation. Why people will be so easily misled is indeed a greater mystery than the Vandalia invention.

1897 April 15 (Th) Galesburg, Ill., Evening Mail, p. 1.

ANOTHER GLIMPSE OF THE AIRSHIP. / More People See the Alleged Machine Last Night Again.

The peace of mind of a good portion of Galesburg is again disturbed. Last night the mysterious air ship was seen floating about in the north wester heavens, and its curious antics were plainly noticeable. In order to prove that the bright particular light was not a star, one man lined up against a tree, where he could not see the light, and then waited. A moment more and it bore into full view. This was about 8 o'clock in the evening. Some two hours later it again appeared, this time ~~lower~~ lower down in the sky. It shone full and brilliantly for some time, and then suddenly disappeared.

There is a report that a petition will be sent up to the manager of the ship to please stop and explain.

What was generally supposed to be the mysterious air ship that has caused such an excitement throughout a half a dozen western states during the past five or six weeks, was observed by fully a hundred people of this city between 8 and 9 o'clock last night in the northwestern heavens about thirty degrees above the horizon. It was first observed about quarter past 8 o'clock and continued within the range of vision for considerably more than an hour. According to the testimony of those who watched its course, it descended ten or twelve degrees towards the horizon in about twenty minutes and gradually passed out of sight. It was somewhat brighter than a star of the first magnitude and glowed with a reddish light not unlike the planet Mars, although of much greater brilliancy. Some of those who watched it are sure that its course was an erratic one and professed to be able to see party colored lights at intervals as if arranged by human agency. Of those who saw the mysterious aerial wanderer the great majority are sure it was some sort of mechanical contrivance designed to travel through the ethereal world, while a few are sure it was one of the celestial bodies. Its comparatively rapid transit would seem to preclude the idea that it was a stellar body and its position in the northwest would place it out side the zodiac, consequently it could not have been one of the planets and the query naturally arises, what was it? Among those who saw the mysterious visitor last night was Mayor B.C. Wells, John W. Miller, Albert Watson, Col. H.G. Jones, Sam Casey, R.F. Buckham, G. Gale Gilbert, George E. Deeds, W.E. Sumner, George Carter and scores of others.

1897 April 15 (Th) Ottawa (Ill) Republican-Times, p. 2 (card 1)
wky

AIRSHIP—OR WHAT? / Several People Who Report a Phenomenon Saturday Night / WAS IT A STAR OR THE SHIP? / Has Some One Solved the Mystery of Navigating the Air by Electricity?—What People Who Saw it Say it Looks Like. /

Chicago and Evanston and Joliet need not imagine that they are the only cities in the state of Illinois that possess people with good enough eyes to see the mysterious "air ship" that has been seen in Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota and California, for they are not. It has been seen in Ottawa. It was seen Saturday night between 9 and 10 o'clock. At the time first seen it was overhead and moved slowly to the westward. William Trabing, Sr., and Charles N. Miller both saw it, and their descriptions agree. It was seemingly high up, carried two lights, one green, the other white, and the lights seemed to be about 25 feet apart. Both of them watched it for some time and saw it move slowly to the westward and disappear.

J.J. Withrow reports that when he closed up his store, about 10:15 that he stepped outside and saw overhead and moving rapidly towards the southwest an airship or something of that sort. Whatever it was it carried a light that seemed to be about as strong as one of the city electric lights and very bright. After it passed over the court house and got in range of the flag pole he stepped to one side to see how far it went, but it had vanished completely. He saw but one light, and if it was not the airship it certainly was something that carried a light, and it was altogether too low for a meteor, for it did not seem to be higher than the clouds.

Walter Hood, night operator at the Rock Island office, saw an airship or a meteor, he did not know which, Saturday evening. The light was strong and showed red, like a very powerful locomotive head light. It lasted for a couple of minutes and moved rapidly to the southwest, finally disappearing in that direction. He called his folks out and they saw it as plainly as he did. The time was a little later than when Mr. Withrow saw it.

Whether there is anything in it or not, there are many to-day who are studying the problem of aerial navigation, and it is possible that some one may have succeeded in manufacturing some such outfit as described in Jules Verne's "Robur, the Conqueror," in which book an electrical airship plays the most important part, and is at present having a lot of fun with the people of this country, sailing around in the air and setting everybody to talking. Joliet reports seeing the ship Friday night, a dozen men seeing it, yet there are those who are skeptical and do not believe in it at all. It has been seen in Illinois for several nights, and when Alpha Orenois (sic), a star of the first magnitude, appeared in the eastern heavens the other night many residents of Chicago and suburbs thought the Kansas airship was paying them a visit. Prof. Hough, of the Northwestern University, solved the mystery, however, by proving scientifically the identity of the star, and explaining that it is a fast traveler and gives out colored light. This explanation may solve the mystery of the strange visitor above Western states.

High over the tallest buildings of the city a strange light gleamed and moved and was stared at by thousands of people in the streets and on house-tops, who said it was the Kansas airship.

Evanston and other towns in Illinois and Wisconsin brought information of a strange celestial visitor, which was believed to be the same that has startled the people of Kansas of nights for more than a week. In the face of these reports it is easy for the multitudes of curious people to believe that the double green light which hung in the firmament of the northwest was the searchlight of the airship which began its nightly tours in the arid clime of Kansas.

1897 April 15 (Th morn) Peoria Daily Transcript, p. 1. (card 1)

PEORIA HAS AN AIR SHIP / Thousands Saw the Celestial Marauder Last Night. / IT WAS GOING UP THE RIVER / Now They Learn that It was Merely a Balloon Sent up to Test Their Imaginations. /

At last the airship has visited Peoria.

It was seen last night by thousands of reputable citizens, who described it minutely as they saw it. The monster aerial navigator which has been reported sailing over several different states during the past week, notably in California, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Wisconsin and finally Illinois, was first sighted flying over Peoria about 8:45 last evening, apparently following the course of the river. It went some distance in the direction of Chillicothe, apparently about to Spring Bay, when it turned and was seen going back over the city in a northwesterly direction, finally disappearing from view.

A Strange Light Seen.

The first known of its presence was a strange light in the sky, some say about one thousand feet high, and variously described as to size from an incandescent electric light to three times as large as a locomotive headlight. Excited parties of men rushed into the Transcript office to report what they had seen, and the telephones in the office were kept ringing for several hours after.

Some were backward about speaking of it until they heard that others had seen it, and then they detailed the vision as it appeared to them. Going out one the street they would meet some one else who saw it, and as the story passed from mouth to mouth each man added some new feature until their imaginations pictured a hideous monster with wings, tail, a fiery furnace, ship rigging, etc. Some had heard the machinery in operation, others saw lights of all colors, others heard music and still others human voices as the airship moved along at the rate of a hundred miles or more an hour.

It was described by some as a cigar-shaped arrangement, such as have been described in the Chicago papers. Others saw two cigar-shaped hulls fastened together, and with screw propellers attached to the rear of both hulls.

Varying Reports.

According to the stories of different ones who called at the office or telephoned in, the airship cavorted about in the atmosphere over Peoria for nearly an hour. Soon after it was seen at Averyville, and a street car conductor on the Fort Clark line, going west, says a party of men on the rear platform of his car called his attention to a strange light high in the sky. He looked at it for some time and thought it a balloon, but said he could not distinguish more than the red light. The others were certain that it was the airship. The conductor said the ship was going in a northwesterly direction, toward the West Bluff, and finally disappeared over the bluff. Out at John Nakken's it was plainly visible. A crowd was in the amusement hall, but only a few on the outside saw it floating over the place.

Reports of Its Coming.

The latest report received over the wires yesterday from the airship in its travels was that it had passed over Beardstown and was headed toward Peoria. It had been at Quincy and Jacksonville and so on night before, but its whereabouts during the day could not be accounted for. Reports were later received from Havana, Manito, Little Indiana and other towns along the C.P. & St.L. road, but it seems to have missed Pekin, or to have turned off the lights as it passed over the town, as it was first noticed at the foot of Harrison street, directly over the river, where it was near the ground and the operator seemed to be hunting a place to land.

The First Reports.

The "airship" had hardly reached Averyville when Sam Hunsatter came rushing into the Transcript office, shouting "Did you see the airship?" It just went over." When he cooled down he explained that he had seen the airship, that it had a headlight twice as big as an ordinary locomotive headlight, and its speed was so great that only profanity could assist him in accurately describing it. Some one suggested that it might have been a balloon, but Sam scoffed at any such idea.

One of the men in the Transcript composing room discovered it, and the entire force was soon hanging out of the back windows watching the mysterious visitor. The balloon theory was discussed but "Andy" Anderson, the "head" man, declared that it went too fast to be a balloon.

A well known deputy sheriff telephoned to the Transcript a very good description of the flight of the ship. He was aboard a Rapid Transit car and every passenger had the privilege of seeing the wonderful ship, he said. He described it as having a large red light in front and a smaller white light in the rear of the car and described its course as "going south."

Saw the Ripping.

M. E. Wilson, the Main street restaurant man, said it looked like a big balloon and was going straight up the river. Its course was steady and its progress swift, and for this reason he did not believe it was a balloon. "There was an object below and above the lights," Mr. Wilson said, "and the top reminded me of a ship's rigging. As near as I can tell it passed over the city at 8:45 o'clock." A friend of Mr. Wilson's spoke up and informed the reporter that Wilson was not addicted to imaginative or fanciful flights, and said that if Wilson said he saw the air ship he was positive that it was a ship.

R. Gains, a colored man, said: "I could not extinguish what it was exactly. It didn't wobble like a balloon and was going a steady gait. I am sure it was an air ship."

Billy Boyer, of No. 217 Main street, saw the supposed air ship and described it as did Mr. Wilson.

Alfred M. Comigisky, of Main street, thought it was a balloon at first, but then came to the conclusion that it was going too fast for a balloon and that it must have been the much talked-about air ship. He had heard so many people talking about it that his faith became larger, and when a reporter saw him he was cocked up against a Main street railing waiting for the balance of the ship, which he said always trailed behind.

Dave Comigisky, the lawyer, saw it. He believed it was a balloon sent up for a joke, but said there was so much talk about the ship that it might have been one for all he knew. Nothing was impossible these days.

A resident of the East Bluff telephoned to The Transcript office at 11 o'clock inquiring as to the air ship. He said he was not at home when the ship sailed over the city but his family and the neighbors had seen the ship. He asked about its course and whether any one else had seen it.

Night Officer Elliott said he saw the air ship and knew two of the men on it.

Pettit Was Sure.

George Pettit was another air ship caller at The Transcript office. He was accompanied by three young men who with Munsaker and Elliott had witnessed the sight from in front of Pettit's place on Liberty street. George declared that the ship had a headlight four times as large as an ordinary locomotive headlight, and that there was some dark object following along behind it, and he pused his open hand against the air slowly to illustrate. He was ready to swear he had seen the air ship, and the other fellows were backing up everything he said. They all saw it at the same time but their descriptions were somewhat different. They hooted at the idea of its being a balloon, however. None of them could estimate the size of it.

What They Really Saw.

What the people who imagined they saw the air ship really did see was an ordinary paper balloon about five feet in height and nine feet in circumference, sent up by two Transcript reporters.

It had been thought that the imagination of the people all over the country where the air ship has been reported sighted was all that there was to the airship story, and to test the imagination of the people of Peoria The Transcript representatives purchased three colored paper balloons and started out to launch the air ship and see what would grow out of it.

Takes to the Water.

The balloons were red, white, blue, green, yellow and white. The launching place of the first one was at the Tazewell end of the lower free bridge. On arrival at the crossing of the T.P. & W. railroad on the trestle the reporters unwrapped the balloons, and were about to inflate the air ship when they suddenly remembered that a train was nearly due, and not caring to be discovered and have the train mistake the light for a danger signal they retreated to the end of the span. Here one climbed on the bridge railing and held the balloon while the other applied the match. There was a strong wind blowing up the river and it was soon apparent as the turpentine ball began to blaze and the wind blew in the sides of the balloon that the first voyage would be a failure, as it proved in a very few minutes. The first balloon caught fire, the reporters had to let go to avoid burning their hands and the air ship became a submarine boat after floating in the air out over the breakwater.

The Second Trial.

There was too much wind on the bridge, and the reporters returned to this side of the river. The bridge superintendent was let into the secret and was to telephone the time of departure of the ship to The Transcript office. He sent a man along with the reporters to a shed alongside the Peoria Transfer Company's buildings, where they were out of the wind. In a few minutes the balloon was inflated and floated grandly out upon its mission, the testing of the people's imagination. It just grazed a smoke stack as it rose over the electric light works and started to ascend rapidly. It was at this time that it was discovered by Munsaker, Pettit and others on Liberty street, and ~~xxxx~~ instead of being 1,000 feet high, as Munsaker declared, it was less than 200. But it was getting a good start, and went up the river past Averyville, over the upper free bridge and on in the direction of Chillicothe. If the steet car conductor above mentioned saw a light going northwest over Jefferson avenue it must have been this balloon returning, but it is hardly probable.

The Last Ascension.

The reporters returned to the office just in time to meet the first Arrivals, who rushed in to tell of seeing the airship, and after listening to their stories, started out to send up another balloon. As the first one had not gone over the city, but soared along up the river. A party of three boarded a Fort Clark car and rode out to Stone Hill Garden, where the third balloon was sent up and a note pinned to the bottom of it contained these words:

"This is the airship from the Peoria Transcript."

The balloon rose gracefully toward the sky and started for the center of the city, but it was lost sight of by the reporters, who watched it until the light disappeared. It seemed to have passed over the center of the city and to be over Averyville when the light faded from view, and it was thought that the light went out and the balloon fell. Little was heard of this one, except in the lower end of the city, and it appears that the majority saw the first one, which traveled along the river, and was seen by residents of the East Bluff by Averyville people and by people in the center of the city. Many lower end people saw the last one sent up, as reports were received by telephone.

Satisfactory Test.

The test was eminently satisfactory, so far as proving that the imagination has played an important part in these airship stories. It was great fun for the reporters to listen to the wonderful tales pour into their ears and remarks heard on every hand as they passed along the street. The test shows that all of the stories which have been published could easily be produced in that manner, and that none of them have been overdrawn.

Peoria can be satisfied now. She has seen the airship.

Each observer's mind promptly added to what he saw much of what he had been reading in the papers during the past few days. One man telephoned in that he saw the "headlight" change from white to red. This may be accounted for by the rotation of the balloon, which had white and red stripes alternating. But this observer added that he could discern the green light in the "rear." Here is where the play of the imagination came in. He averred also that the "ship" was moving north at the rate of forty miles an hour.

One observer, of a scientific turn of mind, tried to measure the "air ship." He estimated that, if it was 2,000 feet above the city, it could not be less than eighty feet in length to make such a showing as it did.

(Pic.: AS IMAGINATION PICTURED IT. / What a Great Many People Really Believe They Saw (3 men looking up at cigar-shaped sp v headlight beaming as it passed over building).)

1897 April 15 (Th) Rockford, Ill., Daily Register-Gazette, p. 6.

POOR OLD FREEPORT. / Airship Yarn Pools the Sleepy Pretzellites. /

When the man who is seeking the most gullible town in the universe hits Freeport, he quits the quest for he has reached his goal.

Any ordinary town finds it hard enough to gulp down the whole yarn of the big air-ship as seen by local eyes, but not so Freeport. The Freeport Democrat on Saturday evening had a highly ~~saxx~~ colored description of the wreck of the air-ship near Lanark and followed it on Monday with full particulars. The machine was smashed, its occupants were at the point of death and were strange beings of another ~~saxx~~ world. According to the Democrat, farmers were flocking to the scene and special trains were being arranged for.

About three-fourths of Freeport bit and a number of camera fiends rushed to Mt the Milwaukee & St. Paul depot to charter a special train. It was only with great difficulty the enthusiasts could be persuaded the affair was a hoax. And then poor Freeport settled down to her accustomed lethargy and the disappointed ones, instead of ~~saxx~~ catching an ~~saxx~~ airship, contented themselves with intercepting a few schooners sailing over the bar.

1897 April 15 (Th) Springfield News, p. 1.

MYSTERY SOLVED / THE STRANGE AERIAL VISITOR / ALIGHTS NEAR SPRINGFIELD / IS SEEN AND INSPECTED BY JOHN HALLEY AND ADOLPH WENKE--THE OCCUPANTS. /

The air ship, which has been seen at frequent intervals the past few days by citizens of Illinois and Iowa, effected a landing last night at 9:30 at a point on the Jefferson street road three miles west of the city, near the country store recently owned by the Reilly estate. At about 9 o'clock last night John Halley, a farm hand, was returning home from the city. He suddenly observed high in the heavens, a mysterious object with a large light, suddenly coming from the west. Mr. Halley, supposing it to be a large balloon, stood watching it a while, when suddenly he became conscious that the object was lowering. At this point Adolf Wenke, who is the owner of a vineyard at this place, joined Mr. Halley, and both men gazed curiously at the descending object. It was but a moment when, with a hissing sound, the thing landed about 200 feet ahead of where the men stood. At first the two farmers stood in abject fear, but readily seeing no apparent danger they ventured toward the "fangled thing," as they called it, and were at once face to face with a long-bearded man. The latter spoke to the farmers readily, inquiring the name of the city close by. Being told it was Springfield, he seemed surprised, saying his air ship reached here from Quincy in thirty minutes. The air navigator kindly explained the several requisites necessary for a craft of this kind to take flight. Inside the car was seated another man and also the scientist's wife. He said he generally rested in the dry time in obscure portions of the country, not wishing to lay bare the working of the huge wings, which could be easily seen in day time. This accounts for his night travels. When asked whether he was backed by the government he was loath to answer, but signified to the farmers that as soon as congress recognized Cuban belligerency his air ship would be heard from.

The car carried numerous electric apparatus, including a powerful searchlight, which was not at present used. He carried an ordinary locomotive headlight, which was continually used. The frame of the car was made of aluminum, covered with canvas. When asked the scientist's name he smiled and pointed at the letter M, which was painted on the side car. After bidding the farmers adieu, he entered the car, took a seat, and pressing an electric button the ship rose from the earth and sailed due north. It was soon lost to view.

The reliability of John Halley and Adolf Wenke is beyond question, and it is also reported that quite a number of people living in West Springfield saw the aerial visitor about the above-named hour.

1897 April 15, (Th) Savannah, Ill., Journal (wkly), p. 5.

Air Ship Seen in Savannah.

The streets were full of people Monday night about 8:15, watching the air ship in the northwestern heavens. The light is certainly a remarkable one, as it grows brighter and dim, and finally goes out altogether, only to again reappear. "What stuff 'tis made of, or whereof 'tis born" still remains a mystery.

That Air Ship.

The mysterious monster of the air which has been seen in Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Dakota and lastly in this state was the theme of conversation and furnished food for much speculation: All kinds of theories were advanced, but no definite conclusion arrived at. Yesterday the report was circulated that the mysterious "something" was seen at Mt. Carroll. Following closely on the heels of this report the Freeport Democrat came out with a column article giving account of a terrible disaster which befell the ship at Lanark. The report created much excitement, especially when it was stated that the remains of two persons were found near the wrecked ~~saxx~~ airship. A telephone message from Lanark states that the report in the Democrat is without foundation and consequently the mystery is as yet unsolved. Arsp. owner writes Oms. exposition.

Air Ship Passed Over Town.

The air ship rose, as if from the ground, last night in the west end about 9 o'clock and passed over the city, finally disappearing among the clouds. A bright light was all that was visible. Crowds of people down town saw it and some business men became excited. It was evidently a balloon.

Dr. E. W. Wahl was ~~xxx~~ up from Tampico today. He says air ship lights were seen there between 7 and 8 o'clock, heading for the north-east.

13, 5: Mike Cramer spent one and a half hours last night in an effort to get a glimpse of the great air ship that is attracting so much attention. He is losing faith in the actual existence of such a machine.

14, 8: Sunshine! It has been plentiful today and has attracted as much attention as the airship.

15, 6: Urban Items: Now they say that the airship stirred up the clouds and caused the snow storm on Friday night.

16, 4: The people will soon find out that the airship is a fake. If you will investigate what the Globe Clothing House offers...you will find reality without a telescope.

1897 April 15 (Th) Sterling, Ill., Eve. Gazette, p. 5.

THEY SAW THE AIR SHIP / Citizens Became Excited Over Moving Lights in the Heavens Last Night.

Little space has been devoted to the air ship in the Rock Falls columns, but when the citizens of the city begin to see the flying machine a few lines may be excused in naming a few of the prominent people who have seen "something" and are sure it was the air ship. At about 9 o'clock last night P.H. Geyer discovered a light passing over the western part of the city and leaving his store unlocked rushed home to call the family out to see the sight, but before they could be induced to get out into the ~~xxx~~ yard the air ship had vanished and Fred's word about seeing the wonder was disputed. Frank Miner and Rull Scofield are sure they saw some strange form pass over with lights attached. Many others are sure ~~they~~ saw some strange form pass over with that there was something more than a hot air balloon. A young couple in plain sight of another whole family stood out in the soft moon light, he with his arms about the slim waist of ~~xxx~~ his sweetheart and she with her loving head dropped back upon his manly breast, together they considered the wonders before them. ~~xxxx~~ Beautiful sight, they thought, and may this opportunity oft be repeated. With such help to see the sight it is not to be wondered at that the air ship was a long time in passing from view.

A number of prominent citizens claim to have had a very good view of the air ship last ~~xx~~ night between nine and ten o'clock. Among them is Edward St. Jare, who pronounces it one of the most beautiful sights he ever saw, which is saying considerable considering the extent of his travels.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Alton, Ill. Eve. Telegraph, p. 3.

The Air Ship.

Passengers who arrived on the Burlington 9:30 train last night claim that they saw the air ship on the way up from St. Louis, and that the mysterious craft is a hummer, as it kept very nearly even with the train. It had two big lights. When the train arrived at West Alton there was a large crowd on the platform watching the mysterious sailer. It passed over the city, say the passengers, at a rapid rate and disappeared from view.

A peculiarly fanciful explanation of the so-called ship, now said to be seen in many places each evening, is given by an eastern paper, which supposes it to be a resident of Mars sailing on the romantic swan, which the people of that planet are said to fly through space on. This veracious eastern authority believes that the wandering Martian wishes to communicate with earth, but is scared off by the queer people he sees here.

1897 April 16 (Fri morn) Daily Pantagraph (Bloomington, Ill.), p. 6.

THE AIRSHIP. / Two People at Leroy Saw the Modern Miracle Wednesday Night--Was Going West.

--The airship was seen in the vicinity of Leroy Wednesday evening. Mr. James Hammand, living four miles east of that city, reports that he saw it between 8 and 9 o'clock. It moved in a westerly direction and up and down, and finally seemed to come to the ground. Its shape was long and ship like and there were three lights with it.

Mr. Bliss Humphrey also saw it over the city of Leroy. / Another Account of It.

--A correspondent at Leroy writes as follows concerning the appearance of the airship: "The excitement in the city of Leroy is at fever heat, and people are running to and fro, exclaiming, 'Did you see the monster airship last evening waway up in the heavens, fluttering like an anchored vessel in a tornado?' James Hammand, a veteran Methodist preacher, declares that he viewed it for more than half an hour, and it was the most wonderful sight he ever witnessed.

"Many from Hall's restaurant beheld it as it floated proudly towards the western ~~xxx~~ star. Mr. Scranton turned his field glass upon it, and saw a party of six. This was about 10:30 at night, when the advancing schooner appeared at a stand-still in this city. It was fully an hour before it disappeared towards the west, far away beyond and above the clouds."

SEEN AT SPRINGFIELD.

(Winkle & Hulle)

Travels 240 Miles An Hour.

The Airship Is Said to Have Descended West of Springfield, Ill. / Special to the Chicago Record.

Springfield, Ill., April 15.--It is reported here that an airship descended from the skies last night at 9 o'clock about three miles west of Springfield, and that a couple of farm hands conversed with the man in charge. The passenger is said to have asked the name of the city, and to have been surprised when told it was Springfield. He said he had come from Quincy in thirty minutes. As this would necessitate a speed of 240 miles an hour, there are some who would doubt the truth of this story. The alleged airship is said to have sailed due north from here.

Quincy, Ill., April 15.--Conductor Charles F. Malley, who brought in the Wabash passenger train at 10 o'clock to-night, reports that his train raced with the alleged airship from Versailles to Herman, a distance of fifteen miles. The train was going forty miles an hour, but the strange thing in the sky kept ahead of them, and finally left them and disappeared. It was half a mile from the train, and all they could see was the light. It varied in its course, and at times was close to the earth, occasionally rising several hundred feet in the air. Conductor Malley says he is confident it was not a star. The object was seen by all the passengers, among them being Henry C. Cupp and Myron E. Lusk, both reputable businessmen of this city.

April 16, 1897 Chicago Tribune (Friday) p. 4 (Card 1)

Sees Man Fishing from Air Ship.

Occupants of the Air Craft Drop a Swordfish in the Lake and Sail Away.

Cleveland, Ohio, April 15.--(Special.)--S. H. Davis of Detroit says that while out on his fish tug, the Sea Wing, yesterday the fishermen noticed a queer-looking boat not far away. Captain Joseph Singler, master of the tug, and Mr. Davis agree that it appeared about 40 feet in length. It had a cabin covering about one-quarter of the deck surface. A man dressed in a checked hunting suit and wearing a long peaked cap was fishing from the boat. He was apparently about 25 years of age. A handsome woman sat at his side, with a boy of 10 at her feet. As the Sea Wing neared the curious craft a gaily decorated object was slowly inflated and rose to the length of the ropes by which it was attached to the boat. It was a balloon, cylinder shaped, about 50 feet long. Slowly the boat rose into the air until it stood directly over the tug, about 500 feet from the water. It circled like a hawk for several minutes. Suddenly there was a splash in the water.

A large swordfish had been dropped from the airship. The fish was stunned and is now on exhibition in a tank at the fire tug, Cleveland, Ohio. A sail was dropped from the airship and the mysterious people were carried away by the high wind. Mr. Davis said the boat had a wheel similar to those of steamers. This, it is stated, acts as a propeller in the air as well as on the water.

Mount Vernon, Illinois, April 15.--(Special.)--What is thought to have been the mysterious airship was seen here by more than 100 persons last night. Mayor Wells, who had an excellent view of the mysterious visitor from the observatory attached to his residence, says it resembled the body of a large man swimming through the air with an electric light on his back.

Carlyle, Ill., April 15.--(Special.)--The airship was seen this evening travelling rapidly in a ~~xxxx~~ northwesterly course.

South Haven, Michigan, April 15.--(Special.)--The same talked of airship seen here last night headed westward. Eider Ketchum says it was cigar-shaped and moved with remarkable speed.

Quincy, Ill., April 15.--(Special.)--The Wabash passenger train which arrived here at 10 o'clock tonight raced for 15 minutes with the alleged airship. They first sighted the thing near Perry Springs, 52 miles east of Quincy, and raced with it to Herman, when it pulled ahead of the train and disappeared. The train was running 40 miles an hour. All of the passengers saw it, but all they could see was two lights, one white, the other red.

Hillsboro, Ill., April 15.--(Special.)--What is supposed to be the airship was seen in the western heavens by a number of reputable citizens last evening.

Mon. April 12, p. 6 (eds.)--It is time to think seriously of a Greater New York when the people there can see an airship.

The West Side airship phenomenon can be accounted for by the fact that an electric car was "held up."

The progress made by the human race is nicely illustrated by the fact that Alpha Orionis has been performing a set turn in the firmament for ten million years or more but has only just been found out as an airship.

Tues. April 13--This mysterious air craft appears to be a sort of inter-state exhibition.

It will probably turn out that the "airship" is "all smoke" and is merely the name of a new brand of cigar.

That picture of the "airship" proves conclusively that both the artist and the etcher were sincere when they said they thought the photograph genuine.

Thurs. April 15--Tuesday night was a busy one for the airship. It exploded in Kalamazoo, Michigan, ran ~~xx~~ round in Carlinville, Ill., and made its debut in Washington, D. C. It now seems to be a three-ringed circus affair.

April 16, 1897 Chicago Tribune (Fri.) p. 12

(Card 1)

Live Topics of Today.

Out of the thousands of reports which are coming in from every crossroads in the country in regard to the airship, many of which are no doubt exaggerated and inaccurate as concerns details, there are a few that have the brand of eternal truth so fixed upon them that they must be believed by every scoffer. Such a one is a telegram from Birmingham, Iowa. It relates how one William Walters, an honorable man, while walking on his farm between 7 o'clock and the corner grocery, saw the airship descending on a meadow lot. William is not in the habit of seeing airships alight on meadow lots in this vicinity, and accordingly he and some other men ran in haste to the spot. Before them in the pale moonlight loomed a structure 100 feet long and 20 feet high. As they approached somebody on board presumably said, "There comes Bill Walters!" for "the airship slowly rose with a loud whirring sound like that of fast revolving wheels." Why can't everybody be truthful like William? Perhaps in the excitement they forgot about it, but the next time they see the airship let them listen and see if they do not hear the sound "of swift revolving wheels." Correspondents are hereby requested to pay particular attention to this point, as it is of the greatest importance.

Another telegram in regard to the airship reads: Bullcon Junction, Ill.--James S. Truthfulmark, while walking in the road near his home last night at 10 o'clock did not see the airship. Peter Toobesure was with him and corroborates Mr. Truthfulmark in every particular, and says he did not see the airship. A number of other reputable citizens all declare that they did not see the airship, too. Frank Brakes, a conductor of the D. T. fast freight, is willing to swear either on oath or on general principles that he has not raced with the airship, and his engineer backs up the statement with the fire shovel. Besides this incontrovertible proof Ole Tank saw the red and the green light, with the white one between, and declared that as they picked him up and threw the banana peel away that purple, orange, indigo, vermilion and other old lights were present. Such eminent men as Rep. D. Esay, Judge W. H. S. Key, Attorney B. Leaves, and Pete Stringer all saw as much of the airship, as well as Truthfulmark, and Bullcon Junction is in a ferment of excitement which will last until the church fair is over.

EZRA MARK

Filed 9 p.m. 4-17, Bullcon Jc. Collect $1.25. This telegram has been delayed and is not yet received, but is anxiously looked for. Its reliability cannot be questioned.

Fri. April 16 p. 12--The biggest and most persistent of the floating lies is the airship.

Sat. April 17 p. 12--The airship when seen at St. Louis is somewhat funnel-shaped.

Sun. April 18 p. 19--(cartoon--"Fine Crop of Airship Reports")

Ananias (liar) watering "flowers" across USA. 1897 April 16 (Fri) Decatur, Ill., Daily Republican, p. 1.

A SPRINGFIELD STORY. / The Airship as Seen by People Near the State Capital.

Springfield News, April 15: The airship has been seen at frequent intervals the past few days by citizens of Illinois and Iowa, effected a landing last night at 9:30 at a point on the Jefferson street road three miles west of the city, near the country store recently owned by the Reilly estate. At about 9 o'clock last night John Halley, a farm hand, was returning home from the city. He suddenly observed, high in the heavens, a mysterious object with a large light, suddenly coming from the west. Mr. Halley supposing it to be a large balloon, stood watching it a while, when suddenly he became conscious that the object was lowering. At this point Adolf Wenke, who is the owner of a vineyard at this place, joined Mr. Halley, and both men gazed curiously at the descending object. It was but a moment when, with a hissing sound, the thing landed about 900 feet ahead of where the men stood. At first the two farmers stood in abject fear, but readily seeing no apparent danger they ventured toward the "fangled thing," as they called it, and were at once face to face with a longbearded man. The latter spoke to the farmers readily, inquiring the name of the city close by. Being told it was Springfield, he seemed surprised, saying his airship reached here from Quincy in thirty minutes. The air navigator kindly explained the several requisites necessary for a craft of this kind to take flight. Inside the car was seated another man and also the scientist's wife. He said he generally rested in the day time in obscure portions of the country, not wishing to lay bare the working of the huge wings, which could be easily seen in day time. This account for his night travels. When asked whether he was backed by the government he was loath to answer, but signified to the farmers that as soon as congress recognized Cuban belligerency his air ship would be heard from. The car carried numerous electric apparatus, including a powerful searchlight, which was not at present used. He carried an ordinary locomotive headlight, which was continually used. The frame of the car was made of aluminum, covered with canvass. When asked the scientist's name he smiled and pointed at the letter M., which was painted on the side car. After bidding the farmers adieu, he entered the car, took a seat, and pressing an electric button the ship rose from the earth and sailed due north. It was soon lost to view. The reliability of John Halley and Adolf Wenke is beyond question, and it is also reported that quite a number of people living in West Springfield saw the aerial visitor about the above-named hour.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Lincoln, Ill., Weekly Courier, p. 3.

AIR SHIP LANDED. / Several Men at Girard Actually Saw the Aerial Wonder.

The talk about the air ship seen over Lincoln Monday night has taken queer forms. Many accused those who saw the curiosity of being drunk or deranged. Others hold that a light and nothing more was seen. Hundreds saw the light and knew it was not a star or the moon. That there was something unnatural floating in the heavens is true. The statements of truthful people in Lincoln who saw the object, with this statement from Girard will explain much of the mystery:

Carlinville, April 13.--The report from authentic sources is that the airship, which has been seen at many different places the past month, was seen about half way between the towns of Milwood and Girard at 6:15 last evening. When first seen it was descending and was not illuminated by Wm. Street, Frank Metcalf and Ed Teeples, and the telegraph operator at Girard. These men saw it alight and a man got out, and fix some part of the machine. They started for the place where it had alighted, but when within a quarter of a mile it rose and disappeared from view in a northerly direction. The ship was of enormous size, pointed at each end, and had wings on each side, while the top was covered with what appeared from a distance to be a canopy, like that used on a surrey. There was a sign on the ship, but nothing could be plainly seen except a large "M." The ship rose to a great height. When the parties arrived at the place where it had alighted in the field, there was clearly seen the footprints of a man who had been walking around, evidently those of the man who got out of the ship to fix some part of the machinery. Its course was northward. 1897 April 16 (Fri.) Lincoln, Ill., (Semi-)Weekly Courier, p. 8.

The County. / New Holland.

Monday night about 10 o'clock as Supervisor-elect James White, J.S. Guttery and P.H. White, in company with the village night watch, were wending their way homeward their attention was attracted by a peculiar mysterious illumination sailing at a rapid pace in midair, going in a northeasterly direction. At first they were somewhat startled by a glaring flash and looking heavenward saw a contrivance having a most brilliant headlight resembling all the colors of the rainbow, fronting an object that very much resembled the skeleton of a huge butterfly. There is no doubt in the minds of the parties who saw it that it was the same object seen at other points of the country--the air ship. 1897 April 16 (Fri. eve.) Quincy, Ill., Daily Herald, p. 1.

They Saw the Airship. / It Whistles for the Bridges and Then Takes to the Woods.

George Lane and Theodore Terwische saw the airship last night. It was coming down the river and, after whistling ineffectively for the bridge draw to be opened, arose and flew over the structure to avoid collision. They watched it come down to about the foot of Main street, when it disappeared in the Missouri brush.

Mr. Terwische is a truthful young man and Mr. Lane's word is as good as his oath any day. When they say they saw the airship they say it--that's all.

17,8. The airship was seen again last night. Any number saw it, or think they did, which is just the same.

13,2 Ghost, Bullard's arsp / 12,8 Milwaukee & Clinton Case / 14,8 Explodes over Mich & circus adv. / 15,8 Winkle & Hulle/28.Hamilton. 1897 April 16 (Fri) Quincy Daily Herald, p. 8.

THE AIRSHIP IS SIGHTED / Well-Known Quincyans Saw the Craft Last Night. / Passed a Wabash Train, Although Going Against the Wind--Observed by Myron Lusk, Henry Clay Cupp and Other Reliable and Well-Known Citizens. /

Myron Lusk, the insurance man, Henry Clay Cupp and other passengers on the Wabash train last night had a good view of the airship again. It was for a long time in plain sight and kept abreast of the train for fifteen miles between Perry Springs and Versailles. The strange part of it is that the ship was going against the wind all the time, and yet was able to exceed the train in speed. At one place it crossed the track only a little ahead of the engine and at a height of less than three hundred feet from the ground. A distinct oscillating motion was visible, and Conductor Malley says that lights could be seen on both sides of the curious craft.

The spectators declare that it could not possibly have been a balloon or kite and are sanguine that the airship really exists and that they have seen it.

After being in line with the Wabash train for several miles the aerial craft suddenly made a spurt and went [ahead] so fast that it disappeared [] and the engineer could not [] see it again.

Passengers from St. Louis also [are said] to have seen the nocturnal visitor on the west side of the river last [night].

Certainly there is some hocus [pocus] going on in the skies above [of which] we vot not.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Quincy, Ill., Daily Journal, p. 3.

They See One of 'Em.

"Hello!"

"Hello--that Chief Ahern?"

"Yep--what's wanted?"

"If you want to see the air ship go to ~~take~~ the window and look through the draw of the bridge."

"Come and see the air ship!" exclaimed the chief to Sergeant Horbelt, Officers Barry and Scharnhorst and a Journal man, who were all in the police station at the time--about 9 o'clock last night--and the chief led the way to the window.

The light which was larger than the evening star, was visible just above the top of the Missouri forest. The light was reddish in color and it was moving northward and downward. Within a couple of minutes it had passed below the timber line and was lost to view. In ~~some~~ five minutes it rose again, moved northward and disappeared.

The viewers concluded that it was a balloon with lantern attachment, such as are being sent up in so many places. It may have been a reflection of light from the evening star in whose domain it was seen.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Quincy Morning Whig, p. 1.

RACED WITH THE AIRSHIP. / Wabash Passengers Saw the Thing Last Night. / FASTER THAN THE TRAIN. / The Wabash Train Which Arrived Here Last Night Raced With the Airship for Fifteen Miles—Quincy People Among the Passengers. /

