The Wabash passenger train which arrived here at 10 o'clock last night had a race for fifteen miles with the airship that is skylarking around the country. The train was running forty miles an hour and kept up with the strange thing for the distance stated, but then the airship pulled ahead of them and disappeared. It was seen by Conductor Charles P. Malley and all the passengers, and there was great excitement on the train. Among the passengers who are known to Quincy people and are thoroughly reliable were Henry C. Cupp, of Fall Creek, Myron E. Lusk, the insurance traveler for Frank Riggs' agency, John Lawson and Oliver Peacock, the porter of the train. All of the passengers and train crew saw it and watched it closely with the greatest interest. And they are all willing to vouch that it wasn't a star or a balloon.

The strange thing in the sky was first seen near Perry Springs, fifty-two miles east of Quincy, and it was about half a mile south of the train. There was a bright white light and close to it a red light. The red light was not visible all the time, but would appear and disappear, while the white light was constant and steady, and shone with considerable brilliancy. The thing was so far away from the train that they could not make out the form of it or see much else but the lights.

The course of the airship was generally parallel with the train. It had a sort of a wave-like motion, up and down. When first seen it appeared to be about 200 feet above the earth, but it was constantly changing its altitude. At times it would swoop down close to the earth, and then with the same graceful motion would rise to a height of several hundred feet. That motion convinced them that it was not a star or a balloon, and there was not enough breeze to carry anything along at the rate of forty miles an hour and more without some other mode of propulsion. A breeze of forty miles an hour would be a heavy gale, and they could see by the trees that the air was almost perfectly still. Moreover, the smoke from the engine showed that what little breeze was stirring was blowing in a direction different from that taken by the airship.

It kept ahead with and just a little ahead of the train for fifteen miles. It never came closer to the train than about half a mile, but as stated, varied its altitude greatly. The unique race was a most interesting one. Through Versailles they went, and when the train slowed up at the station the airship also slackened speed, so as to maintain about the same position. When they pulled out of Versailles and the train increased its speed the airship did likewise, and on they went side by side to Herrgan. Then the airship seemed to become tired of the race, although the train was running full forty miles an hour the thing suddenly shot ahead with a burst of speed that left the machine on the rails far behind in a few minutes. Faster and faster seemed to go the strange thing in the sky, and soon it disappeared from sight.

In speaking of the novel race Conductor Malley said: "I don't know whether it was an airship or not, but I am certain it was not a star or a balloon. I do not know what the form of the thing was, for half a mile is a long distance to see anything at night, even though the night is clear. The weather there was just about what it is here, clear and still, and with a full moon in the sky."

Whatever the thing is, it can certainly travel faster than a passenger train.

The airship was also thought to be here last night. A telephone message to this office from the Anheuser-Busch office on Front street called attention to a strange ~~xxxx~~ big light hovering above the Missouri shore near the draw of the river bridge, but it was so far away that nothing could be made out of it. / HERE'S RAPID TRANSIT. / From Quincy to Springfield in Thirty Minutes by Airship.

Springfield, Ill., April 15.--Adolph Winkle and John Hull, farm hands, made affidavit.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Rockford (Ill.) Daily Register-Gazette, p. 4.

Kingston, Apr. 14.--Several of our citizens have seen what is supposed to be the mysterious "airship."

Apr. 15, 4. Mt. Carroll, Apr. 14.--...The air ship has been observed all over the state was thought to have been seen here Monday evening. The opinions are so conflicting that there seems to be but little doubt that there was an airship. It was noticed to be moving toward the west with two lights suspended from it.

17,8. Pecatonica, Apr. 15.--Pecatonica did not see the airship.

Wed. Apr. 21, 5. Whiteside County: Sterling people noticed a queer northern light Saturday night. It is described by the Gazette as a quadrant sloping[sic] down from the west. For an hour or more this white band of pale light extended from the northern horizon past the zenith of the west.

22,5. Elburn has a haunted house.

Daily Courier, Charleston, Ill., April 14, p. 4.

The air ship is causing a great deal of comment among the Chicago papers just now. During the greater part of the winter it hovered about St. Louis but seems to be going northward. However, the Ledger says it visited Oakland Sunday night.

A Mysterious Light. / Seen in the Heavens Last Night--Was It a Paper Balloon?

A number of persons standing on the corner of Fifth and Monroe streets at about 7:30 o'clock last evening saw a large, brilliant light in the heavens. The light was moving rapidly and was at a great height. Of course, ~~xxxx~~ many persons thought it was the wonderful airship.

Others, however, who were more skeptical said that it was certainly not a star or a balloon, but they were not prepared to say what it was.

People watched the brilliant light until it was so far away that it could not be seen over the tops of the buildings. Some of them then went to the roof garden of the Odd Fellows' building, and there watched the light for a time. The light was still as brilliant but it was not so large.

A party of young men went to Washington park to watch the light, and upon returning to the city stated that the thing came down to the earth, then it rose a little and the light went out. Later the light was seen again, and it was much higher than it was when the light went out. Perhaps it was a paper balloon, such as was sent up at Burlington, Peoria and Decatur.

An afternoon paper yesterday published a story to the effect that two farm hands, Adolph Winkle and John Hulle, residing two miles west of the city, saw the airship land yesterday, and stated that they were willing to swear that they had a conversation with the parties, three in number, in the ship. Of course, no one believed the story.

Mar. 30/8 One April Apr. 11/1/ p2 Hawkeye faks//13/4 adv/16/2//17/6adv 18/6adv

Fri Apr. 16/4--If that mysterious "airship" doesn't come down to earth pretty soon and give itself a local habitation and a name, the whole western country will be afflicted with one gigantic crick in the neck.

Decatur Rvw: "It is now about a month since that airship was first sighted. The inmates must be tired of hardtack by this time. Or, perhaps, the airship is equipped with refrigerators, meat coolers and other modern conveniences of a similar order."

It is high time that the arap shld be laid up for repairs. The arap is like that promised prosperity. It doesn't stay long in one place.

1897 April 16 (Fri morn) The Journal (Springfield, ILL.), p. 6. (card)

SAW A GREAT LIGHT. / But Did Not Take Warning, as Did Saul of Tarsus. / Instead, Several Observers Claim to Have Seen the Air Ship That is X Touring the Skies.

Considerable excitement was created last evening by the appearance of a bright light in the western sky. This light was somewhat larger than that of a star and was much brighter. Those who saw it, say it moved to the north and west. The air ship stories were all revived by the appearance of the light and there was much speculation in consequence. It was suggested that several boys in the west part of the city had been flying kites for several nights with the view of creating the impression that an air ship was hovering over Springfield, and this may account for the light in the western heavens.

There are some of the observers, however, who do not accept this theory. One of these declared that he first saw the light in the southeastern part of the city and that he followed it with his eye entirely across the city until it disappeared toward the occident.

One thoughtful fellow to whom the balloon theory was suggested, called attention to the stubborn fact that at the time the wind was blowing from the point of the compass toward which the light was moving. The fact was called to his mind that the current of the air in the upper heavens oftentimes proceeds in a direction opposite to that of the air at the earth's surface. He declined to accept this possible explanation. His mind was set firmly upon the proposition that what he saw was really and truly an air ship--the weird, interesting kind which easy dreamers have been careening over scores of widely separated cities at the same hour.

There were hundreds of observers on street corners and all were agreed on the one point that the light, be it kite or balloon or phosphorescent monster of the air or what-not, was in motion. To satisfy themselves they took positions where they could just see the light over the edges of roofs and past the dark outlines of church steeples. From these vantage points they could easily determine that the position of the aerial luminary with reference to fixed bodies was constantly changing.

A party of observers consisting of Editor Clendenin, Thomas Rees, J.F. Miller and J. Otis Humphrey watched the traveler from the top of the new Odd Fellows buildings. They were predisposed to the theory that it was a star of unusual brilliancy, but when the element of motion impressed itself upon their minds, there was trouble at once. Each of them was sure the light moved west by north and finally it faded away altogether, whether on account of distance or because it was snuffed out by other natural causes, they were not prepared to say.

Many of the legislators saw the light and they discussed it seriously and jestingly in the lobbies of the hotels. Whether they will take official notice of the visitor remains to be seen.

An evening paper published a story to the effect that an air ship lighted three miles west of the city and that its occupants, a man and woman, were interviewed by two people living in the vicinity. The description given of the craft was the same as one sent out from Carlinville, ~~xxx~~ purporting to describe an aerial conveyance ~~wix~~ which came down at Green Ridge. It is even said the air ship was decorated with the letter "M," a peculiarity possessed only by the Greed Ridge craft. As the Carlinville story has been shown to be without foundation except in the mind of an ambitious space writer, it is probable that its local counterpart had its origin in a similar, but less ingenious, source.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Springfield, Ill., News, p. 1. (card 1)

THE NEWS' AIRSHIP / SEEN BY WENKE AND HALLEY / THE LETTER "M" IS SOLVED / BY CLENDENIN, REES AND HUMPHREYS LAST NIGHT--A TRAIN RACES WITH THE AIR-SHIP. /

The excellent account given in last night's News about an air-ship descending from the skies Wednesday night at 9:00 about 3 miles west of the city was and is the all-absorbing topic, and while the statement made by Adolph Wenke and John Halley is doubted, these gentlemen are prepared to vouchsafe for its truth. The News account has been scattered all over the country by telegraph and has furnished a sensation everywhere, and all day telegraphic inquiries have been made to the News concerning the airship. The sleeping morning papers are disgruntled over the News' great scoop and is the cause of silly sallies which can only emanate from the weak brains of the poor, inefficient reporters. Notwithstanding all this, they fill columns of ridiculous twaddle about the airship, which they claim to have been seen from the Odd Fellows' building. /

THE LETTER "M" SOLVED / By Clendenin, Rees and Humphrey Last Night. Editor Springfield News: Being a porter in the Odd Fellows building I unwittingly overheard the conversation of Messrs. Rees and Clendenin of the Register, and Humphrey and Miller while viewing the air ship from the top of the Odd Fellows' building last night. They were all agreed that the indescribable craft bore upon her side the letter M which was so plainly seen in Carlinville and by the two farmers west of the city. But no two of the four could agree as to what the M indicated. Clendenin admitted that the M indicated to him the mistakes of the democratic party. He was willing to admit that the mistakes had been many. He made a mistake in our tariff bill, in our platform, in our candidate for president and in running Hellweg for mayor; while Rees was satisfied that it was the letter M that was visible and did not wish to deny the mistakes enumerated by Clendenin and could not understand why Clendenin should have left out the mistakes of Altgeld, but he did not believe that the letter M had reference in anyway to the mistakes of anybody, but that it indicated that M meant money. Money makes the rare go, and, of course, that means good money. He was willing to admit that the letter M made a deep impression on his mind, and from this time forward he thought if the Register could be brought gradually around to the advocacy of sound money that they would probably recover some of their lost ground by getting back some of their old subscribers.

Humphrey was willing to admit that the views of both Clendenin and Rees were the result of fair reasoning, but that he had taken a different view of the meaning of the letter M. It looked to him that inasmuch as the strange craft had come from the east and was rapidly moving towards the west it certainly stood for McKinley, and that prosperity was on the move. He admitted that if the craft was right side up it was an M that was visible, but if the craft had turned over it might be a W. In that case it would simply show that the city government had turned from democracy to Wheeler.

Mr. Miller's opinion of the craft was that it certainly was an airship, and he was satisfied that the others were right so far as the letter M was concerned. He agreed with all of the views entertained and expressed by Clendenin and Rees and Humphrey. Still, as to politics, he did not see why the letter M might not signify mix. He was satisfied that the statements made by the different parties were certainly somewhat mixed, and then, too might not M mean mixed drink? We all know he said the more drinks are mixed the more wonderful things are seen, and surely this is a wonderful sight that we have all seen tonight. On the whole, Mr. Miller stated that he was willing to interpret the letter M to signify Miller & Staley's show store. He believed that would be the best solution of the whole affair.

RACED WITH THE AIRSHIP. / Wabash's Passengers Saw the Thing Wednesday Night.

The following story about the airship from the Quincy Whip is doubtless the ship Wenke and Halley inspected in West Springfield:

The Wabash passenger train which arrived here at ten o'clock last night had a race for fifteen miles with the airship that is skylarking around the country. The train was running forty miles an hour and kept up with the strange thing for the distance stated, but then the airship pulled ahead of them and disappeared. It was seen by Conductor Charles P. Wally and all the passengers, and there was great excitement on the train. Among the passengers who are known to Quincy people and are thoroughly reliable were Henry C. Cupp of [] Creek, Myron E. Lusk the insurance traveler for Frank Riggs' agency, John Lawson, and Oliver Peacock, the porter of the train. All of the passengers and train crew saw it and watched it closely with the greatest interest. And they are all willing to vouch that it wasn't a star or a balloon.

The ~~xxxx~~strange thing in the sky was first seen near Perry Springs, fifty-two miles east of Quincy, and it was about half a mile south of the train. There was a bright white light and close to it a red light. The red light was not visible all the time, but would appear and disappear, while the white light was constant and steady, and shone with considerable brilliancy. The thing was so far away from the train that they could not make out the form of it or see much else but the lights.

The course of the airship was generally parallel with the train. It had a sort of a wave-like motion, up and down. When first seen it appeared to be about 200 feet above the earth, but it was constantly changing its altitude. At times it would swoop down close to the earth, and then with the same ~~xxxx~~graceful motion would rise to a height of several hundred feet. That motion convinced them that it was not a star or a balloon, and there was not enough breeze to carry anything along at a rate of forty miles an hour and more without some other mode of propulsion. A breeze of forty miles an hour would be a heavy gale, and they could see by the trees that the air was almost perfectly still. Moreover, the smoke from the engine showed that what little breeze was stirring was blowing in a direction different from that taken by the airship.

It kept even with and just a little ahead of the train for fifteen miles. It never came closer to the train than about half a mile, but, as stated, varied its altitude greatly. The unique race was a most interesting one. Through Versailles they went, and when the train slowed up at the station the airship also slackened speed, so as to maintain about the same position. When they pulled out of Versailles and the train increased its speed the airship did likewise, and on they went side by side to Hersman. Then the airship seemed to become tired of the race, although the train was running full forty miles an hour the thing suddenly shot ahead and with a burst of speed that left the machine on the rails far behind in a few minutes. Faster and faster seemed to go the strange thing in the sky, and soon it disappeared from sight.

In speaking of the novel race Conductor Halley said: "I don't know whether it was the airship or not, but I am certain it was not a star or a balloon. I do not know what the form of the thing was, for half a mile is a long distance to see anything at night, even though the night is clear. The weather there was just about what it is here, clear and still, and with a full moon in the sky."

Whatever the thing is, it can certainly travel faster than a passenger train.

The airship was also thought to be here last night. A telephone message to this office from the Anheuser-Busch office on Front street called attention to a strange big light hovering above the Missouri shore near the draw bridge, but it was so far away that nothing could be made out of it. /

AIRSHIP JOKE.

Waverly, Ill., April 16.--(Special to the News.)--The residents of this city were startled last night with a report that the mysterious airship was passing over. The streets were soon filled with people looking heavenward, where a light could be seen plainly moving to the northeast. The facts surrounding this mysterious object came to light this morning, and are as follows: John Ritchie, editor of the Waverly Journal, and Harmon Tietgen, agent for the J. & St. L. R'y, got their heads together and manufactured a large paper balloon. With the utmost secrecy they inflated it and sent it up, and after it had reached a certain height they began calling people's attention to the "airship." It was the occasion of considerable merriment. /

UP IN A BALLOON.

"Twinkle, twinkle little star, / Now like a balloon you are, As you ramble thro' the skies / Making rustics open their eyes. How like balloons made of paper / Is your most erratic caper! Politicians at the bar / Watch you twinkle, little star, Scared from top to very bottom, / Imagining again they've got 'er. Sail on, sail on, little star, / Let them wonder what you are. Sparkle, sparkle every night-- / You will help them out at night."

1897 April 16 (Fri) (Springfield) Illinois State Register, p. 4 (eds) Journal

Still Sees Airships.1

It is evident that The Register is determined to make itself the laughing stock of the city. It is still suffering from a severe attack of airships and insists upon talking about an alleged scheme to sell the water works which never.... No one but a confirmed victim of the airship habit could find in that article any such scheme as The Register had dreamed about, and it simply exposes itself to ridicule by discussing the subject and thus calling attention to its pitiable hallucinations.

No town is quite up to date these days unless it has been visited by the "airship," and none is so far behind the times that it does not possess citizens who can see "airships."

Sat Apr 17 p. 4--Those arsp stories might properly be called floating lies.

Apparently that mysterious airship goes abroad only at night. It knows when it will be most likely to find the class of observers that will advertise it.

Apr 17 p. 7--Arsp at Petersburg

18 p.12--That airship business is being overdone.

30 p. 4--The airship must have encountered a cyclone.

Mar 30 Omaha; April 16/5, 18/6

Apr 11 p. 1--Arsp faka (Hawkeye experiment)

Apr 12 p. 3--Airships in the sky appear to be all the rage at present, but any other forms of "jim-jams" ought to answer just as well for those who are unable to see airships.

1897 April 17 (Sat morn) Daily Pantagraph, Bloomington, Ill., p.5 (cd.)

THE AERIAL MYSTERY. / IS HOVERING OVER CENTRAL ILLINOIS. / Seen at Rankin, Arrowsmith, Merum and El Paso Last Night--Mr. Raney Savage's Experience. /

Mr. Raney Savage was at the farm of his father, J.W. Savage, near Downs, several days this week. He says that he saw the air ship one day and that it came down on the farm where he was working. Six persons were aboard and he conversed with them. The machine was cigar-shaped and answered all the descriptions he had read.

The Lake Erie operator at Rankin telegraphed the local office at 8 o'clock last night that the air ship had just passed over that place and was seen by many people.

A few minutes later the Arrowsmith office telegraphed that the ship hovered over that town and then started toward this city.

ON THE CENTRAL BRANCH.

The Illinois Central passenger train which arrived in this city at 7:45 last night reported that the airship passed over the vicinity of Merna as the train came south. It was plainly seen by Mr. J.P.W. Eson, the mail agent, Baggage-master Black and others. These gentlemen are reliable and assert with the utmost positiveness that they saw the aerial voyager and that it was making for the northwest at a rapid rate. The description of the ship tallies with those published in regard to it from various other points.

AT WOODFORD STATION.

When the 8:50 Illinois Central train from Dubuque arrived in this city last night the train crew and passengers at once reported that they had seen the air-ship between Woodford station and Minonk. It showed the usual colored lights and was moving swiftly northward at a high altitude. Among those who saw it were Conductor William Wamsley, E.M. Carter, superintendent of bridges, and Mr. Adamson, chief of agencies, all good, reliable men. Several of the passengers also saw the wonder and all told precisely the same story.

SEEN AT EL PASO.

El Paso, April 16.—[Special.]—The "airship fever" seems to have struck this vicinity. Mr. Robert Hitch and family, living north of town, say they saw a bright light in the heavens between 8 and 9 o'clock last night and supposed it to be the much talked of airship. The light seemed to be headed for the northwest and was going at a good rate of speed. Several others also saw it. The character and truthfulness of those who claim to have seen the airship are unquestionable and it is likely, if there is anything in this airship business, the object seen last night was the flying ship.

DANVERS SEES TWO SHIPS.

Danvers, April 16.—[Special.]—Many of the citizens of Danvers declare they saw the airship which was reported from Leroy to be coming in this direction, and also a trailer which followed it very closely and was much smaller. They presented the prettiest sight that has ever been seen in this part of the state. The mandolin club, which is composed of the best and most truthful young people of the town, say they saw them first and gave the alarm to others. It was three minutes after 12 this morning. The ships were of some bright material which presented the general appearance of aluminum and the occupants were dressed in western style.

AND MASON CITY ALSO.

Mason City, Ill., April 16.—[Special.]—The much-talked-of flying machine was seen about this city tonight. The peculiar light was first seen almost directly above the city at 9:30. Word was passed from one person to another, and soon a large crowd gathered in the business portion viewing it. The light was very bright and much larger than a star. It shone intermittently, being bright one moment and then dark. Its course at first seemed undetermined, it went south for a short way, then back north, and then rapidly floated away in a westerly direction. It was at great altitude and was seen for about 30 minutes.

April 17, 1897 Chicago Record (Sat.) p. 3

(cont'd)

One Airship Would Not Fly

Practical Jokes at Waterloo, Iowa, Deceives Thousands of Persons. / Special to the Chicago Record.

Waterloo, Iowa, April 16.—Waterloo made the discovery early this morning that an airship was anchored on the west bank of the Cedar river, just inside the city limits, and the citizens thronged to the spot. The ship was constructed of canvas, heavily painted and tightly stretched to a light framework of wood. The principal parts of the concern were two large cigar-shaped balloons, each 36 feet in length and about eight feet in diameter at the swell. These lay side by side, and slightly elevated between them was the cabin, and inside of this were the compressors and generators with which the man guarding the machine seemed to be perfectly familiar. No opportunity was given any one to inspect the machinery, and any attempt to cross the rope fence which he had erected was met with an order to stay out.

Visitors came hastening from all parts of the city, and the news spread rapidly. It was but a few moments before the telephone and telegraph wires were busy receiving messages from outside towns asking information on the latest airship. So well did the man guard his treasure, and so clearly did he tell the story of how he, in company with a Mr. Stornont, left San Francisco on March 20, and gave every detail of the voyage up to the time of landing, that fully half of the 5,000 people who visited the place today doubted the truth of the matter when it leaked out this afternoon. The affair was built by a practical joker, who has devoted more than a week to its construction, and when it was finally completed and placed on the ground late last night not half a dozen persons beside the inventor knew anything about it. The grounds around it are crowded to-night, and people are coming in from a distance, expecting to see the "airship" start on its journey at the hour appointed. When told that one man had fallen overboard just before landing, a searching party was organized by some of the more credulous, and a start was made at dragging the river for his remains, when it was discovered that the entire affair was a joke.

Bloomington, Ill., April 16.—Many reports of airships have been received here to-night. The telegraph operators at Rankin and Cross-Smith, stations on the Lake Erie and Western railroad east of Bloomington, report that at about dark an airship hovered over those towns and then set out in the direction of Bloomington. Soon after this the crew of an Illinois Central train from the north arrived in the city. Conductor William Wamsley, E. M. Carter, superintendent of bridges, and Mr. Adamson, chief of agents of the Illinois Central, declare that while the train was at Woodford station, near Minonk, about 8 o'clock they saw an airship at a great altitude, and going west or northwest. A few minutes later a passenger train on the Illinois Central arrived from Chicago. The mail agent on the train, J. P. W. Eson, of Bloomington, and William Black, train baggage-man, assert that they saw a gigantic aerial boat sailing westward while they were between Barnes and Merna stations, in this (McLean) county. Others on the train declare that they also saw the airship. It was flat, of apparently rectangular form, and carried red and white lights. Robert Hitch and family, who live three miles south of El Paso, say they saw the airship in the heavens between 8 and 9 p.m. yesterday.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Peoria Daily Transcript, p. 6.

From Thursday's Daily. / Saw the Air Ship.

Mrs. W.E. Andrews, wife of Prof. Andrews of the Taylorsville high school, enjoys the distinction of being the first person in Taylorsville to see the air ship that is now attracting such wide-spread interest in central and northern Illinois. She is an enthusiast on aerial navigation and during the absence of her husband Monday evening she looked skyward for the nocturnal bird. Finally she observed the red and green lights floating in the heavens and notified the family of C.E. Evans, living next door. When the Evans (sic) appeared the air ship could not be seen, having disappeared while Mrs. Andrews was calling her neighbors to witness the latest triumph in navigation.

Yesterday's dispatches are to the effect that it was also seen at various times during the last 24 hours at Burlington, Iowa, Moline and Lincoln, Ill. Between Chicago and the former place it distanced a fast mail, and the engineer claims that it traveled 150 miles per hour.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Peoria Daily Transcript, p.

Another Air Ship Hoax.

The boys at the Horological Institute have had their share of the general interest in the airship and have added the usual college pranks to the excitement. About 1 o'clock yesterday morning a crowd got under the window of one of their instructors who has been much interested in the ship and aroused him by shouting that the aerial visitor was then in sight. He popped his head out of the window to see it, only to be greeted by howls of derision from the students. Their racket had aroused the landlady, however, and she soon made the air so blue in that vicinity that if the airship had been right over their heads no one could have seen it.

1897 April 17 (Sat.) Daily Illinois State Register (Springfield), p. 6.

They Saw the Airship.

Petersburg, April 16.—[Special.]—The supposed mysterious airship passed over this city about 7:50 last night. It was seen by 50 of the leading business men around the square and any one of them would say under oath that they saw a red and green light at that time. It traveled the entire horizon from northwest to southeast in less than one minute and appeared about the size of a Chinese lantern to the naked eye. It appeared to be about 2,000 feet from the earth and to be traveling at an extraordinarily rapid rate of speed.

1897 April 17 (Sat morn) Illinois State Journal, p. 7.

Airship at Petersburg. / How a Party of Jokers Daffied with the Credulity of Their Fellow Citizens.

Petersburg, April 16.—[Special.]—Last night about 8 o'clock a telephone message purporting to come from Springfield was received by George Freese, proprietor of the Werner house, bearing the intelligence that a monster airship had left Quincy and would pass near Petersburg about 8:15 o'clock. Mr. Freese at first gave little credence to the message, but upon going out and looking into the heavens saw three colored lights about six feet apart. He at once gave the alarm and in a few minutes the square was alive with people who craned their necks in wonder at the monster aerial machine.

The wildest speculation prevailed, some asserting that the ship was moving over 100 miles an hour—that it was at such a great height as to prevent any part of it being visible but the colored lights. Investigation this morning developed the fact that the whole thing was the work of a few practical jokers who had inflated a small balloon provided with a crossbar at each end of which were colored lights. The bright moonlight added in the deception and completely hid the balloon from view.

The perpetrators of this joke are said to be J.D. Holz, Dr. Fouche, Logan Duncan and John Hamilton. Carl Aug. Gustafson denies any complicity in the matter. Sam Rule is responsible for the bogus telephone message.

The scheme was successfully carried out and the deception perfect. 1897 April 17 (Sat) Taylorsville, Ill., Daily Breeze, p. 3.

A SEA ABOVE THE CLOUDS. / Extraordinary Superstition Once Prevalent in England.

The curious superstition that there is an ocean above the clouds is illustrated by the following strange story, by an old English writer: "One Sunday the people of a certain village were coming out of church on a thick, cloudy day, when they saw the anchor of a ship hooked to one of the tombstones—the cable, which was tightly stretched, hanging down from the air. The people were astonished; and while they were consulting about it, suddenly they saw the rope move as though some one labored to pull up the anchor. The anchor, however, still held fast by the stone, and a great noise was heard in the air, like the shouting of sailors. Presently a sailor was seen sliding down the cable for the purpose of unfixing the anchor. When he had just loosened it the villagers seized hold of him, and while in their hands he quickly died, just as though he had been drowned. About an hour after, the sailors above, hearing no more of their comrade, cut the cable and sailed away. In memory of this extraordinary event, the people of the village made the hinges of the church doors out of the iron of the anchor." It is further stated that these hinges, "are still to be seen there;" a bit of evidence much like Munchausen's rope wherewith he once climbed to the moon. If you doubted the story you were confronted with the rope.

There is another queer tale about this aerial ocean. "A merchant of Bristol," it is said, "set sail with his cargo for Ireland. Some time after, while his family were at supper, a knife suddenly fell in through a window, on the table. When the merchant returned and saw the knife, he declared it to be his own, and said that on such a day at such an hour, while sailing in an unknown part of the sea, he dropped the knife overboard; and the day and the hour were found to be exactly the time when it fell through the window." All of which was once implicitly believed by many, and regarded as incontrovertible proof of the existence of a sea above the sky. One is at a loss to conjecture how that "unknown part of the sea" connected with the rest of it. A physical geography showing this would be no small curiosity. --Boston Post.

1897 April 18 (Sun) Ottawa, Ill., Sunday Journal, p. 4. (card 1)

VISION OF THE AIR SHIP. / BY DANTE.

On the train that Tuesday morning we had been talking about the airships.

The air and the newspapers were full of them.

Where they came from or what they were no one could tell.

Almost every known town north and west, and some unknown, had given reports of them, and from Lake Michigan they had come floating in over Chicago, the silent messengers at night and the fortunate ones that had seen them had given glowing and varied descriptions.

From the shape of an enormous cigar to a full rigged ship with masts and steamer side wheels and double deckers.

They had seen the men on board and the colored light signals as they sailed away into space.

Men talked of them on the streets, in their homes and places of business and each morning the papers were scanned for the latest news of the fading curiosity.

But Ottawa had been left out. No mention of our own city in all this excitement.

Could it be that we of Ottawa were not so imaginative and were bound only to tell the naked facts?

Or had we been slighted in all this sea of air sailing ~~above~~ above us? Where were our reporters always so alert for the news?

From the small boy who would be willing to break an arm to get his name in print to the business man who always dodged the interviewer, we knew the reporters, and no one ever dared doubt their loyalty to Ottawa.

But now we had been forsaken by them and Ottawa must now have an air ship all of her own.

In this condition of mind I slept. Again I was in the great city of Ottawa.

Around me arose the massive blocks of buildings, taller, grander than before. I recognized the street only by the familiar signs over the places of business, names of firms and men I knew so long ago.

And as I looked down the street some one comes with that elastic swinging step, that happy face, comes again my old friend Beckwith.

Hello my my farmer friend, he cried, as recognition was mutual and our hands met in friendly greeting and a live shake was given.

Tell me, Beckwith, I asked first of all, how is it you and I both live after such a fall from that dizzy tower?

Why my friend, he answered, that was 100 years ago and I supposed you ~~knew~~ knew it all.

Is it possible you have not been here for so long a time and all these things are strange again?

I stood aghast at his answer.

Then had I slipped another 100 years. Beckwith assured me that such was the case, but that old friends were alive and well and would know and greet me.

But fell me of our escape from the falling tower I said.

Oh, so easy, was his answer.

When the master at the station saw the ship had passed, he turned on the attractive with full power in our direction which stopped the ship as she cut through the steel beams and held the toppled tower in midair till another ship was sent to our relief and all were saved harmless but yourself.

You had disappeared and no one knew where you had gone, and this is the first information from you for 100 years.

I am pleased to see you again, he continued, and you will find the city of Ottawa still growing and spreading out over northern Illinois.

But the ships in the air, I asked, tell me of them, I can hardly wait.

Well, he answered, you remember when you was [sic] here 100 years ago, we had a line of steel ships speeding between here and London.

I never told you about my experience with the ships before I took the public into my confidence.

I had conceived the idea somewhere back in the winter of 1896-7 and had harnessed enough of the forces to apply my ideas to a small ship in April, 1897.

With three trusty men I built the ship in secret, and as I planned so well that when completed it worked almost to perfection.

I stored the ship with provisions and one dark night in April four of us entered the ship, cut it loose and arose into the air.

To tell you of all our wanderings for the next four weeks in midair would be a long story.

We could attain almost any speed we desired up to 150 miles per hour. Could rise above the clouds or touch the earth as we wished.

174 To mystify the people below all the more, we exhibited ourselves only at night and then by the aid of colored lights, intensified with reflectors.

We made our first appearance over Omaha, and sailed over Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois and the lakes.

At times we would descend low enough over a town to see the people and hear them talk, and see the excitement we were creating.

In the quiet hours of night we would alight in some favored spot where we could obtain the daily papers to read the next day in our journey above the clouds.

It was rich to read the opinions of press and people about us. Some were sure we were a lost star sailing through space. Some figured us out a flock of geese in their night wanderings.

Others had heard our ship explode in mid-air and found the fragments the next morning while a few were thought crazy to advance the idea that we were live men operating and controlling the first successful ship that ever navigated the air. And so we sailed and enjoyed the comments of the world below until I was satisfied my experiment was a success.

And so Ottawa is the birthplace and home of the air ship. We now have a line of ships between here and nearly all the important ports of the world.

We also have put in operation smaller carriage ships for family or private use and they are as common now as horses used to be in the olden time.

Families own their own air carriages which they use freely and safely, about the city or country for pleasure and business. See them now as they begin to come out this pleasant morning he remarked.

In astonishment I saw them coming. Over the tops of the highest buildings they floated side by side, filled with business men, and laughing pleasure seeking ladies, coming from homes into the streets before us. Richly painted carriages, flashing in the sun light, decked with gaily colored flags or streamers as they floated down to the street like birds or mounted up to mid air, or passed and re-passed before us up and down above the heads of the multitude below. What a sight! I shall never forget it. And all this came Beckwith from your experiments that the people wondered at so long ago" I asked. "Yes this is the result he replied and yet we are not satisfied but are still hunting for better things in the near future.

But come take a trip over to Australia with me tonight in our new ship "The Ottawa" and I will tell you more of the great city and can read the news in the Ottawa Journal as we go, fresh from all the world beneath us. This ship will speed out at 5 p.m. so be on hand.

Just then the brakeman jostled me as he called "all out for Chicago."

April 19, 1897 (Chicago Tribune (Mon.) p. 6 (editorials)

Time for the Airship to Quit.

It is reasonable to expect and hope that the perpetrators of the airship will have the grace to look upon Easter Sunday as the closing day of their season. With spring well under way and soon to merge into summer the public ought not to be burdened with too great a strain on its patient confidence. The aerial craft has enjoyed a long and entertaining engagement. It has usurped the prerogatives of birds, stars, and about everything else above the surface of the earth, but its attainments are strictly confined to the ethereal realms, and the time is close at hand when the gaiety of the Nation looks for inspiration to the "vasty deeps." As much as the airship is cherished by the mass of the people and held in reverent admiration for its ubiquitous achievements, it yet must not intrude on the time set apart for the gambols of that other eccentric wanderer, the sea serpent.

At about this season of the year the great sea monster is accustomed to poke its head up above the surface of the waters at some chosen summer resort and take a preliminary survey of the battleground. This first appearance is much after the style of the traditional spring opening made by the groundhog, but the reptile is not so difficult to please and loses little time in becoming a continuous show. It is apparent that the picturesque denizen of the ocean would be much discomfited if he found general attention diverted from himself to a rival attraction in the heavens. Moreover, the people who spend their time observing these apparitions could not hope to do justice to both at the same time. We advise the airship to retire gracefully before it becomes ridiculous. In an excess of zeal it is showing a disposition already to overdo the business. Some people are beginning to harbor doubts about its genuineness. The occupants are risking their reputations by indulging in hazardous fishing expeditions, catching swordfish and suckers. At other times they have been evincing a lively ignorance of "where they are at." They are plainly "rattled," and need a rest. In one of its incarnations the craft appears to have exploded up in Michigan somewhere. That would be an easy and dignified form of exit, and it would be prudent in the management to make an official announcement that owing to this "blow up" performance will cease indefinitely.

Down with the airship and let the sea serpent rise.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Peoria Daily Times, p. 6.

AN AIRSHIP FAKE. / Brakeman Hardinburg Thinks He Saw the Mysterious Ship.

When the Peoria & Pekin Union train rolled in from Hollis Saturday morning Brakeman Hardinburg and Baggage-master Haley told a great story of the air ship, which has been attracting so much attention recently but from all The Times can learn their statement was a bare-faced lie. They declared that while the train was going through a ravine to the new Sholl bank near the insane asylum, they saw something a short distance from the track. There were a number of people about it. The train was stopped and they went to find what it was the air ship. Hardenburg in conversation with a Times reporter minutely detailed the apparent construction of the strange craft. He gave dimensions, told of the wonderful machinery, the greater part of which was covered with canvass. He said there were three men and one woman in the party. They were young looking people and he talked with them. They landed in the ravine at 3 o'clock Saturday morning having made the trip from Omaha since 8:30 the night before. They were anxious he said to know what the people thought of them, and what the newspapers had said. Hardenburg told where the whip was built, and a great deal more. A Transcript reporter was sent to the ravine to investigate. He could find no trace of an air ship or anyone who had seen it except Hardenburg. No one in the immediate neighborhood knew of it. Engineer Schems of the same crew did not see it but heard Hardenburg talking about [it], and the air ship story is probably a lie made out of whole cloth.

1897 April 19 (Mon.) Sterling, Ill., Evening Gazette, p. 6.

QUEER NORTHERN LIGHT / Band Like the Milky Way Extended from Horizon to Zenith Saturday Night.

Saturday night an unusual phenomenon was observed in the northern heavens by a number of Sterling people. About 9 o'clock a quadrant of an enormous circle of light was seen in the north, sloping down from the west and tangent to the earth. It was quite plain and seemed to be tinted, though the moonlight dimmed the colors. Gradually the circle widened and the arc extended toward the zenith, growing less intense and resembling the milky way. For an hour or more this wide band of pale light extended from the northern horizon past and somewhat west of the zenith. Judging from the gradual expansion of the quadrant, the band of light was doubtless an arc of a circle whose radius was infinitely long.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Chicago Tribune, p. 4.

EDISON SCOFFS AT THE AIRSHIP. / Says That It Is All a Fake and That at Best Such Machines Are Only Toys.

New York, April 19.---Special.---Thomas A. Edison doesn't think much of airships. He has seen today in his W. Orange laboratory in regard to a late account of the movement of the airship, according to which a letter was dropped from it on a farm near Astoria, Ill., with a ~~scissors~~ cipher enclosure addressed to Edison and signed "C.L. Harris," electrician airship no. 3.

Mr. Edison paused from a luncheon of sandwiches, pumpkin pie and tea to observe: "You can take it from me that it is a pure fake. I have had several men named Harris in my employ, but I know nothing of C.L. Harris.

"I have no doubt that airships will be successfully constructed in the near future, but there has been too much talk about this supposed airship out West. I have always found that there is much talk before these ships are tried and very little afterward.

"It is absolutely absurd to imagine that a man would construct a successful airship and keep the matter secret. When I was young we used to ~~make~~ construct big colored paper balloons, inflate them with gas, and they would float about for days. I guess some one has been up to the same game out West.

"When an airship is made it will not be in the form of a balloon. It will be a mechanical contrivance, which will be raised by means of a very powerful motor, which must be of very light weight. At present no one has discovered such a motor, but we never know what will happen. We may wake up tomorrow morning and hear of some invention which sets us all eagerly to work within a few hours, as was the case with the Roentgen rays. This success may come.

1897 April 21 (Wed) Jacksonville, Ill., Daily Journal, p. 3.

City and Vicinity.

People in the north part of the state needn't think they have a monopoly of the airship, for last night while several reputable gentlemen, whose names are on file at the Journal office, were ~~sitting~~ sitting up waiting for the news from the polls, they saw plainly in the northwest the lights of the aerial vessel, and occasionally the dim outline of the ship itself. The name of Fairbank(?) was conspicuous on the side and other emblems were visible and its course veered from northwest to north and it kept in sight for 15 or 20 minutes finally sinking beneath the horizon at a point nearly north of the city.

Galena, Ill., Gazette, ~~xxxx~~ Tues eve. April 13, 3. City Chat.

The "air ship" was seen a score of different places hundreds of miles apart again Monday night. It was seen at Elizabeth by many reputable witnesses. Every circumstance goes to prove the theory of the Dearborn observatory astronomer correct. It is to the effect that the mysterious lights are reflections from the brilliant star, Alpha Orion.

Apr. 2, 9. Hallucinations. Napoleon saw "his star" even in tent.

1897 April 22 (Th) Daily Pantagraph (Bloomington, Ill.), p. 5.

Saw the Airship.

---Mr. J.C. Roeder, of N. Oak street, has received a letter from his son, Samuel Roeder, who is at present in Chicago studying engraving, in which he states positively, that the much talked of airship was seen by him last Saturday night at 7:30. Mr. Roeder states that, previous to this time, he had no faith in the airship stories, but seeing is believing, no matter what people say. He states that he first saw it in the southwest and that it traveled so fast that it took it only about 45 seconds to pass around to the northeast of him, and gradually got smaller and finally disappeared.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Galesburg, Ill., Evening Mail, p. 4.

ANOTHER VIEW OF AIRSHIP. / Galesburg People Are Sure They Saw It Last Night.

Once again has Galesburg been treated to a vision of the air ship, and residents in the north part of the city are willing to take oath that they saw the mysterious apparition last night. This time the course of the ship was different ~~xxx~~ than on former occasions. It appeared to rise in the northwest corner of the city, and passed around to the north, and then to the southeast, where it was finally lost to view. Those who saw it say that the light was very bright and had a reddish tinge. It was far brighter than any of the stars, and the sky was clear. The light at times would make a great dip down and then apparently stop altogether, when it would suddenly shoot forward again. It was last seen about fifteen miles to the southeast, as tho' making for Peoria.

1897 April 21 (Wed) Evening Telegraph (Dixon, Ill), p. 4.

Are We Geese?

One night during the airship excitement a lone wild goose flew over this city without making a sound. The "rubbernecks" saw it and great was the uproar. To them it was the airship with the lights out, discernible in the bright glow of the moon. A half-hour later a whole flock of them flew over and the very timid thought that we were about to be attacked by a fleet of ships from Mars.

PALMYRA

Mrs. R.M. Swigart of St. Johns, Mich., who has been a guest of Mrs. Carrie Swigart the past week left Saturday morning for an extended visit in Iowa and Kansas. In a letter received from her Monday she reports having seen while enroute the "great airship" by the water side close to the train at Waterloo, Iowa. It was described as looking like two large balloons with wings and was being visited by many hundred people.

FRANKLIN GROVE

The "flying machine" was seen by a number of our people both Saturday and Sunday nights. The blamed thing must be a hustler on the travel, as it was seen, according to all reports, in many different states not only on the same night but almost at the same hour.

1897 April 21 (Wed.) Sterling, Ill., Evening Gazette, p. 6.

Urban Items.

The air ship put in its appearance in Jordan last Sunday night. A citizen of the town (who ~~says~~ declares that he can tell a flock of wild geese from an air ship), saw the ship about 9 o'clock in the evening going from the east to the west. He positively declares that the ship landed at Bressler's mill where it took in a supply of water. It was impossible to discern if any of the occupants got out of the ship. After taking in the water the ship rose straight up about 1573 feet and then disappeared in the west. The ship was the same cigar shaped floating instrument seen by others.

16, 6: Penrose and Suburbs. A number of flocks of wild geese has been noticed flying north in search of the airship.

Some enterprising young fellow and his girl in the north part of Jordan, have been out every night for the past week, mooning and scrutinizing the sky for the air ship and have finally discovered what it is. They say it is nothing more or less than a flock of very wild geese with glass eyes. So there you have it in a nutshell.

16, 8: Walter Stockdale vent up the river yesterday in search of fish pickled eels and airships.

14, 5 (Wed.): A travelling man who came down from Dixon last night says the milky way was all stirred up over the airship last evening. About 7:50 o'clock the mysterious light in the heavens was seen floating over in a southeasterly direction. In a very short time the streets were thronged with people who were stretching their necks and straining their eyes to make out the shape of it. He estimated that there were about 1,000 people looking at it and great excitement prevailed.

1897 April 22 (Th) Galesburg, Ill., Weekly Mail, p. 1.

HIGH SCHOOL BOYS FLY A KITE / People Think It the Airship and Wonder Threat.

Monday night many people on the North side saw what they supposed was the airship. Many saw the apparition and were very glad to think they had seen the "real thing" and when it was in much better shape than when seen a few nights ago. This time, according to the many accounts, the light was very brilliant and was moving very rapidly and in a very unsteady course. But now the truth is made known and many will doubtless be sorry to learn, as they will have to wait until Galesburg is favored with another visit from the "ship." What was seen by the Northsiders was nothing but a large kite with a large Japanese lantern on the tail in the hands of some High school boys who were trying to see if they could make people talk. They did.

1897 April 22 (Th) Straator, Ill., Daily Free Press, p. 2.

The Air Ship Fake.

Illinois should surrender its title of Sucker State to Iowa. There are a good many suckers in our neighboring state. A genius over there took advantage of the airship delusion and build an astonishing machine in a cornfield and then surrounded it with ropes so that it could not be easily inspected. He then procured a smooth talker. Of course the machine was discovered and of course it was the air ship. The jokers had a very smooth and plausible story to tell about making the ship in California and about their journey and breaking one of the wings. Hawkeyes flocked by the thousands to see the "ship" at 25 cents a "see." The inventor fairly revelled in "quarters." The discovery got into the newspapers and hundreds of telegraphic inquiries poured in from all parts of the country. Correspondents were deluged with dispatches from their papers, all anxious for good stories. Finally the joke leaked out and now a big laugh is going up all over Iowa. Indeed the state should be called the sucker state.

More Air Ships.

The people long for power to fly into the air. They envy the birds in their flight. By the invention of the locomotive and the bicycle, man is able to pass the swiftest beast on foot, but the innocent bird still holds a monopoly on aerial navigation. The thought is so often father to the wish, that the Public is not surprised at the rumors of air ships studding the sky like stars, and then, we opine, air ships will disappear. Reputable inventors are at work on aerial navigation and it may not be long before the long-hoped for air ship will appear and carry passengers. The Budget of Philo, Champaign county, started the sensation of air ships about three weeks ago and it has spread all over the west, many people believing the aerial problem has been solved. Quite a number of reliable citizens of Clinton think they saw the mysterious airship last night, traveling from east to west in the direction of Lincoln about 10 o'clock.--Clinton Public.

1897 April 23 (Fri.) Lincoln, Ill., (Semi-)Weekly Courier, p. 8.

The County. / Eminence.

At the dark hour of midnight one night last week we were aroused from slumber by the cry of some one as if in distress out on the road. We could not see distinctly, but there were two men in some kind of conveyance with a cover. They asked for the loan of a hatchet. As we turned to get the desired tool we heard some kind of a noise, as of the starting of a motor and the flapping of wings, and our strange visitors rapidly sailed off in a northwesterly direction. We are not sure this was a visit from "that air ship," but judging from the profane language and idiotic laugh of the motor man, as they departed, they were evidently strangers in Eminence.

April 26, 1897 Chicago Record (Mon.) p. 2

(card 1)

Says He Sailed the Airship

Omaha Exhibition Directors Think They Know the Real Inventor. Special to Chicago Record.

Omaha, Neb., April 25.--Some time ago the trans-Mississippi exposition directors received a note signed "A. C. Clinton," requesting an option on ground sufficient to fly an airship daily from the exposition grounds. The writer admitted that Clinton was not his own name, but declared he was the man who had been sailing an airship in this locality recently and explaining that he desired to conceal his identity temporarily. It caused much comment, and an investigation was instituted. It has resulted in the showing that Clinton A. Case is probably the inventor. He went to Kansas City some time ago. Before going he exhibited his invention under pledge of secrecy to Alva J. Groves, a civil engineer of Omaha, together with the drawings of a propelling engine, the like of which the engineer had never before seen.

Mr. Groves declared himself of the opinion that an airship or aeroplane, built upon these lines, would be able to navigate the air, providing its resistance to air currents and the efficiency of its steering gear were in proportion to the lifting capacity of the aeroplane.

A remarkable feature of this air navigator was the propelling engine, which owing to the construction of the plane, must of necessity combine great power within a small space. Case's plan showed that after the first 300 pounds of weight every horse-power could be secured by each additional three-pound weight of engine; the whole power for carrying 1,000 pounds could be stored within the space of an ordinary office desk. Naptha was to be used instead of coal, being easily carried in tanks at the bottom of the plane. The plane itself, of an entirely original design, was the result of many years' experimenting. Its framework was to be of bamboo, which the inventor has found to be the strongest as well as lightest material known. Thirty-foot wings of bamboo, ~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ covered with silk, extended outward and downward on each side of the body of the ship, the latter having somewhat the appearance of a boat's keel, tapering upward toward the front. The propeller at the rear was like an ordinary steamship's screw, with the exception that the blades were very long and tapering and made of aluminum. At the bottom of the ship on each side wheels were placed, which assisted in starting the plane, and they were also to be utilized when alighting.

cont'd - ?

1897 April 26 (Mon eve) Springfield, Ill., News, p. 1.

HE SAW IT. / Cleveland Man Who Will Swear to the Air Ship.

Cleveland, O., April 26.--J.W. Lansing, of Brundage and Lansing, Central avenue commission merchants, has just returned from a trip through southern Iowa. While in Grinnell, Mr. Lansing said, he saw the much talked about air ship. Mr. Lansing is noted for being strictly temperate and does not wear glasses. In speaking of it he said: "I saw it twice, but at Grinnell it was very plain. It was early in the evening and the ship could be seen distinctly. It was shaped like a cigar, and it moved in various directions, some of the time against a strong wind.

"The general impression of those who saw it seemed to be that it was an air ship worked by electricity. I could not say myself that it was, but it was some kind of a manufactured thing floating about overhead."

AIR SHIP PLAN / Filed to Be Patented--May Be the One Reported Seen.

Omaha, Neb., April 26.--In the office of G.W. Sues, the Omaha patent solicitor, may be seen the plans of an air ship which, it would seem, very nearly solves the problem of aerial navigation. The invention is that of Henry Heintz, of Elkton, S.D.

In this connection it would not be at all strange if it turned out that the people in Nebraska reported to have seen an air ship had really seen the Heintz air ship, as Elkton is a little more than 200 miles from Omaha. The invention as described by Mr. Sues, it is thought, very nearly duplicates, through mechanical means, the flight of a bird.

The invention embodies an elongated aerial car, entirely enclosed, provided with a steam engine to drive a shaft provided with a ~~booyas~~ propeller.

1897 April 29 (Th) Monmouth, Ill., Daily News, p. 1

ANOTHER AIR SHIP. / Two Men Say They Saw the Machine Last Night.

The air ship story was revived last night after a two weeks' rest by a story told by two men whose word ought to be good. They were talking on the street about 9:30, when the something sailed almost directly above them and parallel with the street on which they were standing. It seemed not a great distance up, but yet so far that they could see nothing but the three colored lights it displayed. They did not see the traveler until it was above them, and then they watched it go rapidly out of sight in a line directly east of them.

The men say they do not claim they saw the air ship, but they certainly saw something, balloon, kite or ship, and it was going at a lively rate and almost straight into the teeth of quite a breeze.

April 30, 1897 Chicago Record (Fri.) p. 5 (letters)

Colored Lights in the Sky.--Last evening, about 3:15 o'clock, my family and I were watching the stars, when our attention was attracted by a moving object in the heavens which tallied with the airship of which we have read something. Having been skeptical, we called our neighbors' attention to the object, and five families of us watched it for about 30 minutes. It was a little southwest of here. It seemed to be travelling west, but veered as it travelled, moving north and south, and also up and down. It showed three distinct colors of light as it changed its position--white, red and pale green. This object we watched until it went down over the hills.

Interior, Michigan, April 25. P. H. Watgoner.

Wed. April 29, p. 4 (eds.)--The advent of the airship was timely. It should find a ready sale among baseball umpires.

Thurs. April 29, p. 4 (eds.)--The airship did one good turn during its short career. It diverted the attention of the correspondents who regularly bill off the peach crop at this season.

INDIANA

1897 April 5 (Mon) Columbus, Ind., Evening Republican, p. 1.

AIRSHIP IN KANSAS. / A Former Bartholomew County Man Writes of the Wonder. /

A. S. Arnold, a former resident of Columbus, has written a letter to John Perry, of this city, describing the air ship which has caused the people of Kansas so much wonder:

Mr. Arnold is now the postmaster of Topeka, Kansas. He is a cousin of Mr. Perry. In the letter he says:

TOPEKA, Kans., April 1, 1897.

The appearance of the air ship at night in this and some adjoining states is a matter attracting much attention now. I have seen it twice. First time last Saturday evening and again last night. There is much speculation about it. I don't know what it is. One thing I am certain of, and that is that it is a bright object moving in the heavens and seemingly under perfect control. It is a deeper red than the red ~~xxxxx~~ of the ordinary stars and here it appears usually in the west, I am informed, about 10 o'clock at night. Look for it.

There may be others. / A. S. Arnold.

April 5, 1897 Indianapolis Journal (Mon.) p. 5 (card 1)

That Elusive Airship

That Mysterious Wanderer of the Heavens Last Seen in Illinois.

Chicago, April 4.--The Herald says: It was not to be supposed that the people of Nebraska and Kansas were long to have the monopoly of gazing on the mysterious airship that soared into the heavens after dark and dazzled the wondering and awestruck spectators with their brilliant searchlights. But it was the general understanding that Indiana would next be chosen for the visitation because of the national reputation of the Chicago correspondents at Winamac, Anderson and Pink Mink Marsh. And now comes sober, cultured and conservative Evanson and gravely ~~xxxxxx~~ deposes that on the third day of April, A. D. 1897, at 8:40 p.m., a mysterious light, evidently that of an airship, was seen passing rapidly over the city, going west-northwest. The light was very bright, more like an electric light than anything else, and gave out a curious sort of flash at intervals. It seemed to be about a quarter of a mile above the earth. At 8:55 it mounted high in the heavens and was rapidly lost to sight. The story is probably true, for the Evansonian who reported it was afraid of being laughed at and declined to give his name.

Seen by Kansans.

Independence, Kansas, April 4.--The mysterious airship that has been seen at various points over Kansas and Nebraska and has recently caused so much comment, beyond a doubt paid southern Kansas a visit last night. It passed over the city at an early hour last night and was seen by many people whose veracity is beyond question. The strange ship appeared in the southeast about 8 o'clock. At first the persons who saw it thought it was a star, but it gradually came nearer and increased in brilliancy as it approached. It could be observed that it did not travel in a straight line, but darted first this way, then that, but always keeping on the same course. Suddenly it veered to the south, then turned and passed directly over the city, in a northerly direction.

When first observed it appeared very low, but as it approached it rose higher and higher and passed over the place at a considerable distance and was traveling at a high rate of speed. After it had passed it again descended and for five minutes appeared perfectly stationary. Then it was set in motion, darting back and forth, up and down, and after a short interval continued on its journey and disappeared gradually in the northwest. It was about half an hour from the time it was first seen until it disappeared.

April 7, 1897 Indianapolis Journal (Wed.) p. 2

That Mysterious Airship

Nashville, Illinois, April 6.--What appeared to be a balloon, but what most people who saw it think was the mysterious airship of Kansas and Nebraska, passed over this city about 8 o'clock last evening. It appeared in the northwest as a large red light, and as it approached the city a dark outline was faintly discerned. The fact that the object travelled from the northwest while the wind was from the southeast goes to prove it was not a balloon.

April 8, 1897 Indianapolis Journal (Thurs.) p. 4

That Air Ship Again

Hundreds of Omaha People Have Another Glimpse of the Vessel. Omaha, Nebraska, April 7.--The supposed air ship which has repeatedly been seen here lately made its appearance in the heavens here last night. Thousands witnessed it. The outline of the vessel were clearly seen. Among those who saw it and permitted the use of their names as witnesses were these business men: O. D. Kiplinger, W. I. Hawks, H. K. Surkut, A. Hospe, jr., Gould Dietz, L. P. Funkhouser and Arthur Goulo. About fifty members of the Knights of Ak-Sar-Ben were treated to a glimpse of the air ship, the sight being observed twice, and each time for a space of from five to eight minutes. The object was then about three-quarters of a mile high and a little over a mile west. It next described a semi-circle to the east, following that direction for about a mile, when it turned to the north against the northeast wind and travelled in that direction about half a mile. It then turned east, after some vacillation, and was lost behind a bank of clouds. The Knights returned to their lodge, and after the initiation, while waiting for the car, the ship was again seen, far to the southwest, but bearing rapidly up against the wind to the north, and passed out of sight.

April 9, 1897 Indianapolis Journal (Fri.) p. 5

Wanderer of the Night

That Mysterious Air Ship Alleged to Have Been Seen by Iowans Belle Plaine, Iowa, April 8.--The air ship which has been mystifying western people has been observed in this county. One of the most reputable physicians of Vinton says that all members of his family observed the mysterious aerial machine last night and distinctly heard it swishing through the air. The air ship first appeared low down in the southwest about 9 o'clock and could plainly be observed to travel in a swaying manner, like a bird flying against a wind, and darting to and fro, would rise up quickly and lower itself with a gentle, easy motion and seemed under perfect control of the navigator. It was going in a northeasterly direction.

p. 2--Are living mastodons still to be found in Alaska? Their tusks are abundant.
April 10, 1897 Indianapolis Journal (Sat.) p. 5

Like an Immense Star

That Mysterious Air Ship Alleged to Have Been Seen Again. Cedar Rapids, Iowa, April 9.--The mysterious air ship was seen here last night. It was first noticed about 9 o'clock, when it was in the northwest heavens at an angle of about 45 degrees. It was moving north rapidly and by 10 o'clock had faded from view. At 10:30 o'clock a dispatch from Northwood, in the extreme northern part of the State, said the mysterious visitor was seen west of there. It looked like an immense star, and with the naked eye it was easy to discern it swaying from side to side.

April 11, 1897 Indianapolis Journal (Sun.) p. 6 (card 1)

Moving Light in the Sky

Mysterious Air Ship Seen in Illinois and Indiana at Same Time.

Chicago, April 10.--The Times-Herald says "It" is here. "It" must be here because it was seen again last night at Evanston. This time it was seen by persons within the four-mile limit. "It" is the air ship which has been disturbing the inhabitants of the western States for the last three weeks. The air ship is supposed to have started from California. It is conjectured that it is on its way to Dwight, but that the strong wind of yesterday blew it out of its course. Several persons had seen the air ship through strong cocktail glasses out West, but the fact that it was seen twice within the four-mile limit of Evanston sets all such theories at rest forever.

Several persons in Chicago saw strange lights in the heavens about 9 o'clock. The lights travelled and it was at first thought they were shooting stars. Professor James Carter seized a glass and gazed at the celestial phenomenon. He declared it must be the air ship. Later Robert Lowen, 1926 Sherman avenue, Evanston, noticed the moving light in the sky. The light appeared to be over the lake and was moving in a westerly direction. Lowen got a field glass and was able to discern four lights a short distance apart and moving in unison. The first was a bright white light and appeared to be operated like a searchlight. Behind it was a green light and farther to the rear were green and white lights set closely together. F. Newland, employed at Hill and Garwood's drug and candy store, saw the ship. So did R. C. Libberton of the Evanston life saving crew, who was on duty at the station during the early evening. The large glass at the station was called into use and each person who looked through it declared that lights both green and white could be plainly seen. It was decided to notify Professor Hough, the astronomer at the observatory and learn if the peculiar phenomenon had been seen through the observatory telescope. At the time Prof. Hough was taking an observation of Jupiter and had his instruments pointed directly across the lake. He said that the object had not crossed the range of the telescope, and that to change the instrument would be the work of several hours.

Nearly an hour after the strange lights had faded into the western heavens George Clemens of Mile Center, telephoned to the Evanston police that the residents of Miles had seen the light passing westward a short distance south of the village. Nearly 200 persons gathered on the streets of Evanston to gaze on the lights, and each corroborated Lowen in his statement that the lights were green and white.

R. E. Whitlock, of Newport, Indiana, writes under date of April 10: "The mysterious air ship was evidently viewed by a few of the residents of this place last night, in the western heavens. A strong light was first seen, low in the southwest, moving towards the north. It was watched by three or four reputable citizens until it disappeared in the north, taking about twenty minutes to pass beyond the range of vision. Deputy Postmaster D. A. Gibbons and E. S. Eggleston were among those who watched its maneuvers."
1897 April 12 (Mon) Indianapolis News, p. 9.

The Airship Afloat. / Several Towns and Villages Claim to Have Witnessed Its Flight. / Special to the Indianapolis News.

Lagrange, Ind., April 12.--There was great excitement last night by the appearance of a supposed air-ship, which was observed about 9:30 o'clock. It was seen by a number of reliable witnesses, including County Auditor Gilham and ex-Senator Drake, who watched it for forty minutes. It disappeared in a southwesterly direction.

Headed Northwest. Special to the News.

Plymouth, Ind., April 12.--The air-ship, which has been attracting attention at Chicago and further West, was seen here last night by Deputy Postmaster Bailey and a companion, Frank Tanner, who observed it about 9 o'clock in the far northwest. The ship appeared to be going northwest. The lights seemed to be as large as an engine headlight when the train is a mile away.

Passed Over New Carlisle. Special to the News.

New Carlisle, April 12.--What is supposed to have been an air-ship, was seen passing over this place last night about 8:30 o'clock. Lights could be distinguished from a dark object far up in the heavens, which had an appearance of being shaped like an egg, and which was traveling very rapidly northwest. It was viewed here by at least fifty responsible persons.

April 12 p. 7--Misled by a Meteor. / Special to the Indianapolis News.

Warsaw, Ind., April 12.--The airship which has been causing such excitement was seen here last night. It was first noticed about 7:30 p.m., northwest of this city, traveling in a northerly direction and disappeared in about half an hour. A swaying motion could be plainly seen, and at times a red light was also visible.

same p.--Cannelton ghost (no description)
1897 April 12 (Mon) Logansport, Ind., Daily Pharos, back p.

The Air Ship. / Discovered in the Heavens by a Northsider. / Said That His Attention Was First Attracted by Its Shadow on His Barn. / A Chicago Man Claims to Have Seen and Photographed the Wonderful Machine.

There is a citizen of the north-side who declares that he saw the Kansas airship last night. Like all important events, it cast its shadow before, and it was the shadow of the thing upon his barn, which first attracted the attention of the Northsider. Then looking up he saw those mysterious lights, high in the heavens, moving eastward. The gentleman's name is withheld by request of his friends.

April 12, 1897 Logansport Daily Reporter (Phos. Edition) Back p.

Mysterious Airship.

Was Seen Last Night by Several Logansport People. The Strange Craft Apparently Moved at Will. Seemed to Be Two Miles High.

The air ship which has been seen at so many western points and about which so much has been written paid Logansport a visit last night if the word of several well known citizens is to be relied on. Henry Poit, of Porter's drug store, Fred Shuman of Ferguson and Jenks', Al Anderson, of Krout's barber shop and Charles Knowlton, of the Lock mills, saw the air ship wonder and the reputation of the four men for truth and veracity is unquestioned. Poit and Shuman claim the distinction of having seen it first and are therefore entitled to it, but no one has been able to get it. The queer craft was sighted about 11 o'clock last night and Poit and Shuman said it a cavorted about in the heavens at a rapid rate. They saw red and green lights. If they saw anything else they failed to say so. It is not likely that Anderson's attention would have been directed to heavenly things had it not been for his custom of casting his eyes toward the courthouse clock every night before going home. Last night when he noted the time on the dial his eye was caught by the air ship which seemed to be about two miles high. He observed the different colored lights and described it as being much like a big barber pole with a shaving mug suspended to it. Knowlton saw the air ship and declared that there was a man in it who threw magic lantern pictures on his barn.

None of the policemen saw the "queer bird," but as everything was "quiet on the Potomac," there is no reason to disbelieve the assertions.

of the four men. They as well as hundreds of others believe that the problem of aerial navigation has been solved and that the strange visitor of the heavens is the perfected flying machine.

1897 April 13, 1897 Indianapolis Sentinel (Tues.) p. 8.

1897 April 12 (Mon.) South Bend, Ind., Daily Tribune, p. 1.

SAW IT AT NEW CARLISLE. / Airship Lights Seen by Several Reputable Citizens. / Special to the South Bend Tribune.

New Carlisle, Ind., April 12.--William Denney, John Miles and other reputable citizens say positively that they saw the lights of an air ship in the heavens about three miles west of New Carlisle at about 9 o'clock last night. There was a green light in front and a red light in the rear and they moved in a northerly direction until out of sight.

Noblesville, Ind., Democrat. April 23, p. 1. The Rev. J.S. Axtell, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Portland, has been experimenting for a number of years with airships. He is now engaged in perfecting a machine which he calls the aerodrome or flying car.

30, 4. Your real airship of the present hour is the monetary commission just appointed by President McKinley.
May 14, 4. The "airship" we have heard so much about of late is as much of a joke as the great "advance agent of prosperity" that was seen by so many imaginative people a few months ago.

1897 April 12 (Mon.) South Bend, Ind., Tribune, p. 6.

SAW THE FLYING MACHINE. / Much Quoted Yellow and White Lights Visible in South Bend.

A credible witness is authority for the statement that the flying machine made a visit in the vicinity of South Bend Sunday evening. He saw the much quoted yellow and white lights in the northwestern sky at 8:10 o'clock.

The lights were in view nearly half an hour, moving first in a northeasterly and then in other directions and finally disappeared in the northwest. The yellow light appeared to be the head light and shone steadily, but the white light showed at the side of the machine and was more intermittent. It looked like the bursts of light that come from opening the furnace door of a locomotive. It was probably a search light. The outlines of the machine could not be seen and the lights appeared to be two or three miles away.

1897 April 13, 1897 Indianapolis Journal (Tues.) p. 2

Saw the Airship at Elkhart
Special to Indianapolis Journal.

Elkhart, Indiana, April 12--A dozen people claim to have seen the airship over this city at about 10 o'clock last night. They say they watched it half an hour, and that it gradually passed out of sight. It had a bright light at its head, they say, and was moving rapidly.

Mon. April 12 p. 4 (eds)--The appearance of the so-called air ship which is reported to have been seen at different points seems to vary, according as it is viewed through a common tumbler, a champagne glass, a decanter or a quart bottle.

1897 April 13 (Tues.) Indianapolis News, p. 2.

THE AIRSHIP. / Marion Johnson, of Haughville, Thinks He Saw It. /

Marion Johnson, nominated last night for town treasurer of Haughville, saw with others what he believed is the airship he had read so much about recently in the newspapers. What he knows he did see was a bright light moving about the sky in the northwest and going mostly in a circle. He could see no ship nor anything else but the light. He called the attention of others to it. It was in sight about five minutes.

13, p. 4--The reports from many places indicate either that there is an air ship afloat or else alcoholic visions have become epidemic.

13, p. 8--General State News.

Hundreds of people at Elkhart were greatly excited over a sight of the supposed air-ship seen at various points throughout the country, but they have accepted the explanation offered by Prof. Carriott, of the signal service, Chicago. He reports that the mystery is explained by a phenomenon of which the star A. Orion, a member of the constellation Orion, is subject. The same thing occurred 25 or 30 years ago. The professor claims that owing to some peculiarity of its own the star goes off on an occasional tangent, turns blue in the face and spits fire in a manner that any well-behaved star should avoid.

14, 7--Gen'l State News.

Muncie has caught the aerial-ship fever, and spends half the night gazing at the starry firmament, hopeful of its appearance.

15, 1--Letter in Appleton, Wis. / 19, 5, Rev. Axtell's article.

17, 4--Perhaps the people who are seeing that air-ship are those who are also capable of seeing international bimetalism in the air.

24, 4--That story about the airship is still afloat.

29, 2--Gen'l St. News--A monster ape, or something similar in appearance, is reported to be at large in the woods near Sailor, in Elkhart Cnty.

Sat. May 15, 8. The Airship of Prosperity.

They were discussing the airship in the police station and one of the patrolmen averred that he had seen it twice, hovering over Haughville. He described the bright lights and claimed that he had heard voices from the ship.

"No," said bicycle patrolman Holtz, "that was not the airship you saw."

"What was it, then?" he was asked.

"Why, that was the ship of prosperity, looking around for a place to alight."

An Unusual Light

Which Is Supposed to Have Emanated from an Airship.

A strange and peculiar light, which was observed by a number of people, hovered over Haughville last night. Marion Johnson saw it and he is now of the opinion that the light came from the much-talked-of airship. At the time he observed the light the moon and stars were obscured by the clouds and he is positive it was not a star he saw. The light was an extremely bright one and seemed to be moving about from place to place. He watched it for some little time and then called the attention of other persons to it. R. L. Hariner was among the crowd of people who watched the light. It seemed to circle about to the northwest of the town for probably five minutes. Once or twice it disappeared behind buildings, but reappeared again. Nothing like the body of an airship could be made out, the light being too far away. None of the persons who saw the light claims it came from the supposed ship, but they are of the opinion that if there is one floating around they have seen it.

1897 April 13 (Tues) South Bend, Ind., Tribune, p. 1.

Was Seen at Plymouth. / Special to the South Bend Tribune.

Plymouth, Ind., April 13.--The airship which has attracted so much attention in Chicago and the west was seen here Sunday night by a number of young men, including Deputy Postmaster Bailey and a young man named Tanner. Red, blue, green and white lights were seen and at times they appeared as large as an engine's headlight when a short distance away. The ship appeared to be going in a northwesterly direction

14, 1. Mysterious panther-like animal killing livestock, Edwardsburg, Mich.

15, 1. Winkle & Hulls.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Terre Haute (Ind) Evening Gazette, p. 2.

Saw an Air ship / Residents of South 10th Street Think They Have Seen the Electric Air Ship.

There was much excitement on South 10th street last night when a number of residents of that district saw what they believed was the much talked of air ship that is said to have been hovering over neighboring cities the past few weeks. They saw a bright light that appeared in the heavens to be a powerful revolving searchlight with a dark object behind it. The strange light appeared in the west, seemed to be about a half mile above the earth, was visible for twenty minutes and finally disappeared in the southwest. Among the persons who saw the remarkable light and dark object were the following: Henry Bergham, L.D. Gordon and son Bert, Mrs. W.P. Blair, Miss Jessie Blair, M.W. Blair and Mr. and Mrs. Elva Evans.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Daily Banner Times (Greencastle, Ind.), p. 1.

That Air Ship.

If you haven't seen the air ship yet you are behind the time. It has been seen all the way from San Francisco to Chicago and now some fellows up at Logansport claim that they saw it last night. We don't know the name of the brand used in Logansport but it seems to add largely to the vision of the people of that town of brides. This air ship, if it is one, is creating a sensation wherever it is seen and many people believe that aerial navigation has actually been accomplished, Darius Green to the contrary, and has come to stay. Two men in Chicago claim to have photographed the ship Sunday morning but men imagine a great many queer things in Chicago the morning following Saturday night. We have a number of astronomers here who study the skies every night through glasses more or less thick at the lover sides but as yet none of them has announced the fact that he has sighted the ship. Probably they were too much preoccupied with navigating schooners of their own. This air ship has red and green lights and it you see anything of this kind pursuing a zig zag rattle dattle, four through the air and can convince yourself that you "haven't got 'em agin" why you can conclude that you are looking at the greatest triumph of the nineteenth century.

April 14, 1897 Indianapolis Journal (Wed.) p. 4

(card 1)

That Mysterious Air Ship

First Seen in California, and Is Gradually Moving Across the Country. / Chicago Times-Herald.

Now that it has become a fad to scan the skies at night and look for a moving light, and then say one has seen a mysterious air ship, the history of the birth and growth of this latest craze is a matter of interest. The first air ship seen--one that seemed actually to fly and appear to be under the control of its pilot--within the last six months was in Sacramento California, many of the inhabitants of that city declaring that about one o'clock on the morning of Monday, November 16, they saw an air ship passing rapidly over the city. Some merely declared that they saw a bright light and nothing else, while others went so far as to assert they saw a cigar-shaped flying machine and heard voices on it. Some residents of Oakland, across the bay from San Francisco, also declared they saw the same sight a few nights previously. According to George D. Collins, a lawyer of San Francisco, it was a real air ship and made a journey.

December 1 John A. Heron, an electrician of San Jose, Calif., in an interview, said he had been to Honolulu and back in an airship, but refused to say anything as to the inventor or the model of his machine. Heron is the patentee of a platinum speaking apparatus.

Nothing more was heard from either of these ventures, and the public had ceased to interest itself till January 2, a month later, a dispatch came from San Francisco saying that it would soon be sent up from there. This statement was made by authority of Dr. C. A. Smith, Sight Twenty Minutes.

The airship, as it is claimed to be by some people, has been seen by three Fort Wayne people. For some time past the people of Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska and several other states have been highly excited by a light in the sky and what is said to be an airship by some and what is claimed to be a star by others. Telegrams from various places have told about the sight of this strange light and Fort Wayne people have been on the lookout for it. For several nights telescopes have been directed toward the heavens of the northwest, and at last F. Crocker and R.J. and J.L. Tretheway have been rewarded by a sight of the star, ship or whatever it may be.

Mr. Crocker, who lives at 56 Barr street, was the first man to see it, and after watching the light for some time, called his wife and the Messrs. Tretheway. The two brothers were in a flat below the Crocker home, and the quartette saw the light for fully 20 minutes.

When asked to describe what he saw Mr. Crocker said: "I had taken a great deal of interest in the stories printed in newspapers about this star or airship, and was standing at the window of my flat endeavoring to get a glimpse of it. In a short time I was rewarded with a sight of it. It appeared in the West and traveled in a northwesterly direction, at a good rate of speed. It was of a yellowish color and pear-shaped with the apex downward. From the sides I could see two rays of light of the same color as the main body. I am very positive that the body swayed to and fro as it proceeded on its journey. I had no glass of any kind so could not get a good sight of whatever it is. It moved rapidly and in about 20 minutes was out of sight. I called the Tretheway brothers, who are in the flat below mine, and they also had a good view of the lights."

R.T. Tretheway, who was first of the party, said, "Whatever the light was it seemed to me as being round with a V-shaped tail to it. The color of it seemed a bright yellow and strong rays of the same colored light were constantly being shot out from the main body. The light appeared as big around as a bushel basket and traveled at a good rate of speed. I got a range on it between two chimneys that are about 20 feet apart and it took the light about 15 minutes to pass these two points."

So far as is known no other Fort Wayne people have seen the light, but many are on the lookout for it.
1897 April 15 (Th) D. Banner-Times (Greencastle, Ind.), p.1.

DANVILLE HAS 'EM. / Claims that Air Ship Passes over that Little Village.

If there is anything afloat Danville generally sees it. It is said of the average citizen over there who is not putting in his time playing base ball or voting the republican ticket, that he studies astronomy. The Danvillians know the heavens by heart and can tell the dipper or any other constellation in the shape of a drinking vessel readily. Just what kind of glasses these good people use is not known but the following dispatch in the Journal shows that they either "have 'em afloat" or have seen that air ship:

DANVILLE, Ind., April 14.—The mysterious air ship which was first seen in Nebraska and has since been traveling eastward, being seen by numbers of persons in Iowa, Illinois and Indiana, was seen at Danville last evening about 8:30 p.m. It hove in sight from the northwest and passed directly over the city, disappearing beyond the hills to the south. Green Purris, John Tinder, and Livingstone Rankin, of this place, will make affidavit that they heard singing and talking proceeding from the aerial visitor.

A dispatch from Gas City says the ship was seen there and one of the men quoted as having seen it is W.P. Garthwait, formerly of Roachdale where he is well known. The Greencastle star gazers who missed the thing will no doubt be out tonight hunting it. The Banner Times will publish the names of those who report seeing it, affidavits and all.

At Terre Haute last night a large crowd was out looking for the ship and the Express says: "They looked through all kinds of glasses. There were field glasses, beer glasses and whiskey glasses in use. Everybody was looking for the ship. But she care not with her red and green lights."
April 15, 1897 Indianapolis Journal (Thurs.) p. 4 (card 1)

Mysterious Air Ship

It is Alleged to Have Been Seen by Hundreds of People, Viewed by Citizens of Over Half a Dozen States and Territories on the Same Day and Night. Exploded in Wisconsin, But Took Wings Again and Rested on Indiana Soil. Marvelous Tale from Gas City--The Thing Either a "Fake" or a Shrewd Advertisement./Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

Chicago, April 14.—The correspondents in numerous towns are wither doing a great deal of "faking" or there is really an air ship—perhaps half a dozen—mysteriously sailing over the states of Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma Territory. According to dispatches received here within the past two or three ~~xxxx~~ days the mysterious wanderer has been seen by hundreds of people in over half a dozen States, and it has even been photographed. Sometimes when seen in the daytime it is described as appearing like a gigantic bird and the "rushing of its wings can be plainly heard." When seen at night it often resembles a huge star; again it looks like half a dozen stars, and to some people it appears to be showering fiery sparks of many colors. At one place the spectators affirm a searchlight was thrown on them from the mysterious aeroplane. Astronomers have cast discredit on the reports by asserting that the alleged air ship is nothing but the planet Venus, which for some nights has been unusually brilliant, but people who claim to have seen the wonder scoff at the scientists and say they do not need glasses to tell the difference between a planet and an aeroplane.

It is suggested that the whole thing is merely an advertisement, and that it will soon be explained—before long an air ship will be on exhibition by some circus. But even if this were true the mysterious flights of the air ship would be more wonderful than the glimpse of a motionless air ship in a circus tent.

Where It Has Been Seen.

Here are a few samples of the dispatches received here: New Carlisle, Indiana.—One hundred prominent citizens of this place saw an air ship going in a northwesterly direction at 8:50 o'clock Sunday night. The vessel was probably 500 feet above the earth and moving very rapidly. At one time it rose very slowly and afterward seemed to drop a long distance. In addition to the headlight, spectators claimed to have noticed smaller lights of blue, green and red behind, indicating that the vessel is of considerable size. It was in sight at least ten minutes.

Anderson, Indiana.—Mrs. William Marsh, residing in the northern part of the city, went to the pump to get a drink at 1 o'clock last Saturday morning. She was almost frightened to death by a big headlight in the air, which was swooping down directly at her. She ran into the house and called her husband and the latter aroused several of the neighbors. The big headlight was then making great circles in the air. It would come down then go up and then circle. At last it went up into the air at an angle of 90 degrees, and after attaining great height it sailed off to the south. When it was low the small party could hear the "shuffling of wings." Mrs. Clarence Huggell, in the southern part of the city, also saw the strange sight, called her husband and neighbors out. Farmers north of the city came in Sunday and told of the "crazy star" they had seen. When seen last at this point it was going south at a remarkable speed.

Lagrange, Indiana.—Great excitement was caused here Sunday night by the so-called air ship showing itself to a number of reputable citizens. The bright light was seen in the west, travelling westward with a wavelike motion and then disappearing. Advices received here state that the air ship was seen in many places in this section and that at Howe Military Academy at Lima a powerful telescope was trained on it and its movements were plainly visible.

Battle Creek, Michigan.—What is believed to be the mysterious air ship visited this city Monday night at 9 o'clock. It was two miles west of the city and a mile high when first noticed. It emitted a shower of red sparks similar to a skyrocket, the sparks seeming to follow a loud report. The outlines of the object were then plainly visible. Fully 50 people from different parts of the city have reported seeing the strange visitor. Among those who saw it are L. E. Clawsay, attorney; W. A. Cady, jeweler; Dr. McGuffin, Dr. McNeal, J. H. Dorsey, manager of the Western Union Telegraph Co.; Thomas Barry, ex-alderman; M. J. Loomis, photographer, and many guests at the sanatorium.

Similar reports have also been received in the last three days from Wabash, Muncie and Elkhart, Indiana; Waukegan, Lake Forest, Mt. Morris, Carlisle, Lincoln and Koline, Illinois; Ripon, Madison, Eau Claire, Grand Rapids, Kenosha and Palmyra, Wisconsin, and Clinton, Iowa, Emporia, Kansas, Mexico, Missouri, and Perry, Oklahoma Territory.

The Thing Explodes.

Kalamazoo, however, reports that while the air ship was being viewed at the places mentioned above it exploded near that city. A dispatch from Kalamazoo says: "People of Pavilion have made some startling reports, and, if true, then the much-talked-of air ship was not only a reality, but is now a thing of the past. George W. Somers and William Chadburn, old soldiers, claim to have seen the ship when they remained up until a late hour in attendance upon a sick horse. The descriptions given by them are somewhat at variance, but both agree in the assertion that the apparition was illuminated at both ends and moved through space with wonderful rapidity. They had scarcely time for their observations when a dull explosion was heard and the object disappeared. They declare the report to have been like that of heavy ordnance and to have been immediately succeeded by a distant sound of projectiles flying through the air. Wondering greatly, they proceeded to the house, where they spent an excited and sleepless night. Mr. and Mrs. Wallace say they heard the explosion distinctly, but thought it was thunder. But the discoveries of the morning are sufficient to establish the veracity of the two actual observers. In one place two miles from Scott's there was found a large coil of heavy wire, evidently a part of some electrical appliance. At another point ~~in a pasture~~ by ~~found~~ a propeller blade of some very light material was discovered in a partially fused condition. Three men engaged in shingling a barn in Constock township affirm that upon resuming work on the morning following the occurrence they found their completed work covered with minute fragments which had in some instances penetrated the shingles and entered the boards beneath."

A dispatch from Madison, Wisconsin, says: "The air ship mystery has been solved. It isn't a star, but the promoters may take credit for being orbs of the first magnitude in the matter of advertising. Railroad men who reached Madison report that the much-talked-of aerial machine was seen at Baraboo, and that as the sky was thoroughly overcast with clouds there was no Alpha Orionis about it. It first appeared over the east end of the city, and after drifting westward a mile sailed back again and hovered over the winter quarters of a circus. Suspicion was at once aroused that the 'air ship' was nothing other than a clever, well-~~devised~~ devised and better executed advertising scheme of the circus men. It was recalled that one of the circus men had been in Baraboo on Sunday and had taken some large and mysterious bundles from the train to the winter quarters. It was further recalled that he was seen about the city little during the day, and that more than usual life was manifested in the big buildings down on the river front. It was then remembered that the ship of the air made its appearance in Chicago almost simultaneously with the advent to that city of the circus, and that Omaha, Des Moines and other points where it has been seen are already marked out for the circus next summer. The western aphelion of its orbit, if such it may be called, was rather significantly over the winter quarters of the circus. To the skeptical observers at Baraboo the 'air ship' had the appearance of being controlled from the two circus grounds, about a mile apart. In the evening a heavy rain came on, and this had the effect of completely obscuring the strange aerial visitor and preventing the people from noting its later movements. The belief cannot be dissipated from the minds of Baraboo people that the circus man who made a flying visit to our city Sunday knows more about the matter than he has told even to his friends. They are of the opinion that the air ship was a succession of balloons or something of that kind, which were aimed to prey upon the curiosity of a credulous public to the end that shining half dollars would pour into the big wagon where tickets for the 'big show' are sold."

At Carlville, Ill., those who saw the air ship said it had a boat which was cigar-shaped with oars or wings extending from the side, and a canopy on top similar to that of a picnic stand. Near Green Ridge an operator who was hunting avers that he saw a man working about it, apparently fixing the machinery. The fact of its alighting twice and remaining such a long time in the same locality leads to the conclusion that the machinery was injured in some manner.

No Affidavit with This. ditto Crawfordsville

The Mysterious Air Ship Alleged to Have Rested in a Field. Special to the Indianapolis Journal. Gas City, Indiana, April 14.—About 3 o'clock this afternoon hundreds of the inhabitants of this city were amazed and startled on looking up to the heavens to see approaching from a northwesterly course what appeared to be an immense bird. As it approached it came nearer the earth and the outlines of the flyer could be distinctly seen. It was in the shape of a cigar and was propelled by broad canvas wings. People rushed to the point where they thought it would land, but all were fooled. The air ship, for such it proved to be, lighted in a field on the Roush farm, about one mile east of this city. Cattle and horses were terrified and consternation reigned supreme. A rush was made for the Roush farm, but the navigators of the aeroplane anticipated the move and before the crowd reached the farm the mysterious visitor was again in the air, going in an easterly direction. Some of the best businessmen here will vouch for having seen the mysterious thing. Among them are: L. V. Sybrant and D. Conway, of the Mississinewa Hotel; W. H. Guthrie, W. P. Garthwait, G. W. Willars, D. V. Cox and others.

Merry Party on the Ship. / Special to the Indianapolis Journal. Danville, Ind., April 14.—The mysterious air ship which was first seen in Nebraska and has since been travelling eastward, being seen by numbers of persons in Iowa, Illinois and Indiana, was seen in Danville last night evening about 8:30 p.m. It ~~was~~ in sight from the northwest and passed directly over the city, disappearing beyond the hills to the south. Green Burris, John Pinder and Livingstone Rankin, of this place, will make affidavit that they heard singing and talking proceeding from the aerial visitor.

Valparaiso Sees the Ship./Special to the Indianapolis Journal. Valparaiso, Ind., April 14.—The air ship which has created so much interest made its appearance northwest of this city to-night a few minutes before 8 o'clock. In less than ten minutes nearly half the population of this city was on the streets and on top of buildings watching its movements. After about 30 minutes it disappeared in the west. April 15, 1897 Indianapolis Sentinel (Thurs morn) p. 6

That Mysterious Airship Persons Near Frankfort Talk of Seeing the Big Machine

Frankfort, April 14.—Special.—That mysterious airship passed over this vicinity at an early hour last night and was seen by a number of citizens, who are ready to vouch for the reality of the machine. D.W. Paul, a marble dealer of this city, was returning with a party of workmen from Burlington, Carroll county, where they had erected a monument in the village graveyard, and when at the middle fork of Wildcat creek the monster came into vision through a break in the clouds. Its appearance was preceded by a swishing, roaring sound. Green, yellow and white lights were displayed, the white being a searchlight that flashed over the surrounding woods and blinded the eyes of Mr. Paul's party.

Their ideas of the shape of the car differ somewhat, but they all agree that it was cigar-shaped and rigged with wings or fins. It quietly descended to a distance not far above the treetops, and after remaining stationary a moment, gracefully arose again and darted rapidly off in a southwesterly direction, accompanied by the same noises that had heralded its approach.

Landed at Gas City Gas City, April 14.—Special.—At 3 o'clock today that mysterious airship was seen by persons east of this town. Reliable persons say it was shaped like a cigar and that it landed in a corn field, and that the "navigators," on seeing so many people coming, set the machine in motion and it arose in the air and went south.

Passed Over Princeton. Princeton, April 14.—Special.—What was supposed to have been the mysterious airship passed over this city tonight at 8 o'clock. It was seen by many reliable persons, including Sam Zimmerman, a contractor, and Trustee Van Zandt. There was great excitement. 1897 April 15 (Th) La Orange, Ind., Standard, p. 5.

The Airship Over LaGrange.

The airship; did you see it? That's the question that fled from mouth to mouth, in LaGrange, Monday morning. And there were a dozen or more men—full grown men—who were not out to see their best girls, or whose eyes were never known to become vision afflicted, declared they did see it about ten o'clock Sunday night. They are not positive it was a ship filled with gallant youth out on a lark, but it was something, larger than a star, with motion peculiar and unusual. There have been telegrams supposed to be of a fake order published the last two weeks from various points in the Western States, and from Chicago the last of the week, describing a something floating to and fro in the heavens, which they called an airship. The more enthusiastic saw the outlines of a real airship, others heard the noise made by it, others saw persons on board, etc., etc. Wonderful indeed, and people laughed incredulously. But now many are beginning to believe there is something up, and possibly one of the "great signs from heaven" predicted for the latter days. But it may be when Mars gets out of the way, the signs will cease.

1897 April 15(22) Th. Martinsville, Ind., Republican, p. 6.

The Ship. / Franklin Republican.

The air ship excitement struck this section of the state the past week and long lengthy stories were published to the effect that the ship after circling around over Johnson, Brown and adjacent counties settled upon the top of Weed Patch hill in Brown.

It was said that Pennington, the individual with whom Edinburg parties have had considerable business in the past, was in charge of the machine. The stories told were seemingly so straight that numbers of persons went down into Brown from this and Morgan a counties to have a good look at the wonderful ship.

However it developed, as usual in such cases, that the story was a pure fabrication. None of the natives of Brown have been able to see the machine and it has not been anchored on the hill. The stories were mostly hatched in Martinsville, and they are credited to the influence of the celebrated mineral water of that place. /

A number of Martinsville curiosity seekers drove over the hills and mud roads to Weed Patch hill, Brown county, the other day to get a view of the air ship, which was said to be hovering over the tallest point in Indiana. About the time they reached their destination they were informed by a man who resides near the hill that he had never heard of it, and that the travelers had surely been "strung." He was right, and the party came back to Martinsville under cover of darkness.—Indianapolis Sun.

1897 April 15 (Th) Monticello, Ind., Herald, p. 1.

AIRSHIP STORIES DON'T GO / WITH CAPT. PRICE AND MEN OF HIS EXPERIENCE.

/ They Admit the Possibility of Red and Green Lights but Draw the Line at "Cigar Shaped Bodies" and All Other Flying Machines—

Capt. B.F. Price is skeptical about airships, and no amount of newspaper theorizing can phase his agnosticism. He says the people about Chicago and further west who are so confident they have seen an airship may have seen a light, but as to everything beyond that he is an unbeliever and veal nigh a scoffer. He assigns various reasons for his incredulity, but back of all of them, we are inclined to think, is a bit of recent experience which illustrates how easily men's eyes may deceive them, especially after night.

One week ago Saturday as he was returning home from town just after dusk, he noticed a bright light away down in the field south-east of his house. He contemplated it with some curiosity as he went through his orchard. He knew there was no house at that spot, and it could not be a light from a window; besides it was too bright for that, and he wondered who could have built a bonfire down there. He went into the house and after eating his supper came out to inspect the light again. It was still there and as bright as ever. He walked down to John Ward's in the direction of the light and found that John had also been watching it and was equally puzzled about it. Then the captain and John and Milt Goslee started down towards the blaze resolved to find out what it was. They had not gone very far when to their surprise it began to move towards them, rising occasionally from the ground and swinging to and fro. Then they laughed at each other, for it dived upon all of them that it was a man with a lantern comparatively near to them, which they had magnified into a bonfire afar off. They stopped and waited for his approach. The light came on, following the road which led up towards them, as they could see by the detour it made in coming around a pond which lay in the way. Suddenly it surprised them again by appearing further off than ever, and then they went back to the house and read up on the subject of jack-o'-lanterns. They were soon satisfied that they had seen a sample of this phenomenon and were further assured of it by Mrs. Ward's observation of it as reported to them in the morning. She continued to notice it, being awake several times in the night, and it remained visible until about 2 o'clock, when it had begun to rain and the light was no longer to be seen.

It was the first phenomenon of this kind ever seen on Capt. Price's farm to his knowledge, but with the vision of the man and the lantern fresh in his mind he will be pardoned for not swallowing airship stories readily.

1897 April 15 (Th) South Bend, Ind., Tribune, p. 4.

The Air Ship Again.

Sid Thornton declares he saw the mysterious airship in the north-western heavens at 8:15 o'clock last night. He called others' attention to it and they all viewed the strange sight with great interest. It carried the mysterious red and white lights and sailed fast.

Mon. May 3, p. 6. The Air Ship Again.

The I. I. & I. passenger department have arranged with the owners of the air ship for them to give an exhibition along our lines daily. All passengers using our line will have an elegant opportunity to witness this wonderful machine.

Saw the Air Ship

Shelburn, Ind., April 15.--(Gazette Special.)--As Mr. I.H. Woolsey, T.J. Cushman and Ed Woods were returning from Currysville last night about 11:30 they saw a great light rising like a sun in the south-west. As it approached they were badly frightened and climbed down behind the railroad embankment but as it came nearer they could see that it was too high to do them any injury and they watched it till it disappeared in the north-east. It was not more than 200 feet high and they could easily distinguish the outline of an airship. It was barrel shaped but pointed in front. [It] was bound by heavy bands and had the steering apparatus in the rear. They are all thoroughly reliable men and much excitement prevails here. There will be hundreds watch[ing] for the apparition tonight.

Sat Apr 17 p.4--That airship seems to be as numerous as the heads of Cerberus.

p.2 pt.2 * Mysts arap (Chi TH)

Mon. Apr 19 Most of the airship liars say the ships they saw passing in the night were cigar-shaped.

Wed. Apr 21 Suggestions for the air ships: Harken to the cry from Macedonia, sail over there and drop some dynamite & bombs in the Turkish army and give little Greece a chance to live in peace.

1897 April 15 (Th) Waterloo (Ind.) Press, p. 1.

General News.

The air ship has been seen by Waterloo citizens--Dr. J.O. Welch and A.V. Sinclair. Keep your eyes open for the air ship; there's something in it sure.

Lebanon, Ind., Patriot, Apr. 15, p. 8.

That air ship that is going east, west, north and south at the same time all over three or four states, and exhibiting itself in many forms and by all kinds and any number of lights is equal to nothing in earth, sea or sky except a first-class sea serpent. It is a vast improvement over the aforesaid sea serpent, however, for its "limitations are more vast." With it an inland town has the same show as a fishing village on the coast. So let it be passed along until all the "reliable" citizens get a view of it.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Lake County Star (Crown Point, Ind.), p. 2.

Lovell Items.

The air ship has struck Lovell. It was plainly seen last Saturday night at 8:30 by Mr. Elliot's family. They describe it about the same as parties in other states.

p.3. Local News.

Joe Young's air ship, sent up on Sunday evening, was espied by many of our people--some scrutinizing it so closely that they could see men in it with wings on. We are all on watch and nothing can escape. Out Cleveland saw it too.

Crown Point has furnished her share of star gazers the past week who were looking for the airship and many will swear they got glimpses of the great flying machine, but where it goes during the day none are able to tell. This is the last fake, and what will be next is hard to tell.

April 16, 1897 Indianapolis Journal (Fri.) p. 3 (card 1)

Air Ship Conspirators

Plot of Aeronauts to Make Short Crops this Year.

A Scientist's Startling Suggestion--Alleged Letter from the Voyagers in the Aeroplane. / Special to Indianapolis Journal.

Chicago, April 15.--According to the representative of a circus now exhibiting here the mysterious air ship that is alleged to have been seen by so many people in the past few weeks is a reality. He says the original machine was successfully tested on Governor's Island, New York, in 1888. A dispatch from Appleton, Wisconsin, says the people there saw the air ship last Sunday night. Yesterday on the farm of N. B. Clark, north of that city, a letter was picked up attached to an iron rod, 18 inches long, sticking in the ground. The letter, which was not signed, is received by some as being authentic, while others declare it a practical joke. It is as follows:

"Aboard the Air Ship Pegasus, April 9 1897.--The problem of aerial navigation has been solved. The writers have spent the past month cruising about in the air ship Pegasus, and have demonstrated to their entire satisfaction that the ship is a thorough success. We have been able to obtain a speed of 150 miles an hour, and have risen to a height of 3500 feet above the sea level. The Pegasus was erected at a secluded point ten miles from Lafayette, Tennessee, and the various parts of the machine were carried overland from Glasgow, Kentucky to that point, being shipped from Chicago, Pittsburg and St. Louis. We have made regular trips to three days each from Lafayette to Yankton, and no more has come to the Pegasus thus far. Within a month our application for the patents for a parallel plane air ship will be filed simultaneously at Washington and the European capitals. It is propelled by steam and is lighted by electricity, and has carrying power of 1,000 pounds."

Dispatches from other cities and towns continue to tell of the wonderful flight of the aeroplane, the accounts varying such as they have done in previous reports. A scientist who has given some thought to the subject thinks the movements of the air ship has much to do with the damp, cold spring; and he intimates the owners of the air ship should be prosecuted as conspirators against the common weal. It has been demonstrated--that gases freed in the upper air will cause moisture to collect and precipitate, and this scientist suggests these wondering aeronauts may be engaged in a plot to make the spring so damp and backward that the crops will not grow. This could be done, he believes, if ex-Senator Farwell's theory is correct, by exploding large quantities of gas in cloudland. The conspirators may be in league with speculators, who may soon begin to bull the market on the strength of anticipated short crops.

Marion Astronomer Says It Is Venus.

Special to Indianapolis Journal.

Marion, Indiana, April 15.--Last evening a number of people here became convinced that they were to have something more than a glimpse of the air ship, which is attracting attention in the newspapers and elsewhere, but the high school telescope trained on the western heavens failed to confirm their hopes. Professor Graves, teacher of mathematics, who had been called too late to get action on the phenomena, also discouraged them somewhat by ~~stating~~ the declaration that, according to their description and location, it was in all probability the planet Venus. The air ship, so far as could be learned, is the same Venus that was supposed to be suspended in a balloon a few weeks ago over the city of Chicago. The appearance is much the same, the location the same and the planet the same, induding the freaks that have characterized her from time immemorial. Another test of the telescope this evening confirmed Professor Graves's suspicions. The air ship and Venus are one and the same, so far as the phenomenon witnessed here is concerned.

April 16, 1897 Indianapolis Sentinel (Fri. morn) p. 4 (editorial)

That Airship

The question now is not, What is the airship? but, how many are there? --St. Louis Republic.

Do we understand that the airship takes the place of the ruined peach crop as a spring sensation? --Detroit Free Press.

The much-talked-of airship was scheduled to pass over Elwood at noon today, but we presume that Anderson raised a larger bonus and the thing went that way. --Elwood Call-Leader.

And now the news comes from Kalamazoo that the airship exploded over that city last night. Chicago intoxicants are thus discounted by the Kalamazoo band. --Chicago Dispatch.

The most conclusive evidence that the "flying machine" is a fake is the fact that the inventor didn't talk about it for two years and then exhibit it in a museum. --Commercial Tribune.

The airship of late mentioned in the press as having been seen at different points has not been observed by anyone here at Frankfort. It is quite apparent that our liquor lacks the imaginative quality possessed elsewhere. --Frankfort Crescent.

While other Michigan towns are having their excitement over, or rather under, the mysterious airship, we don't see why Detroit shouldn't send up a balloon with red, white and blue lights, and be right in it with the rest of them. --Detroit Journal.

What manner of thing can this be? Has the problem of aerial navigation been solved? Is it a bit of Mars on an exploring expedition or only Alpha Orionis on a "bat"? Accounts from the west are too confusing for judgment, so we advise our scientific men, toppers and police force to be on their guard against a visit from this uncanny apparition. --N.Y. Herald.

1897 April 16 (Fri. eve) Kokomo (Ind.) Daily Tribune, p. 5.

THE MYSTERIOUS AIR SHIP. / Even Little Middlefork Over the Way Has Visited From the Aerial Traveller.

Even Middlefork, a few miles west of here, has got the airship. It has not got it as bad as some other towns, but it has it, nevertheless. A writer from that place says the ship was seen in the vicinity of that burg Wednesday night.

When first seen the air ship was north and a little east of the town and was seen by a number of citizens. The strange craft was going at a rather slow speed and was in sight some 10 or 15 minutes going in a northerly direction. Among those who say they saw it are John Hall, William Riegel and William Rodkey. None of these are willing to assume the responsibility of a definite description of the mysterious what-ever-it-is, but they are of one accord in saying that they saw something of a very unusual character moving through the air at the time and place mentioned. So far there have been no reports of the air ship having been seen in Kokomo.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Logansport (Ind.) Daily Reporter, p. 4.

Airship Comes to Earth.

Marion, Indiana, April 16.--Several people saw the airship here. It came from the northwest, travelling very rapidly, and when first sighted was thought to be a monster bird. As it drew nearer the cigar-shaped outline and broad wings could be distinctly seen. About a mile south of Gas City the ship alighted on the John Roush farm, terrifying the Roush family and causing horses and cattle to rush madly away. Six people were in the ship and they got out and seemed to be adjusting some portion of the mechanism. Before the Gas City people could get within halting distance the ship soared aloft and, taking an easterly course, was soon lost to sight.

1897 April 17 (Sat) P. Banner-Times (Greencastle, Ind.) p. 1.

That Air Ship.

Vincennes, Ind., April 16. More than a score of citizens of unquestioned veracity saw some strange body passing over the city early this evening, which they think was the mysterious air ship. It was at a great altitude and moved rapidly in a southeasterly direction straight over the city. Such men as Col. M.P. Ghee, ex-Mayor Ewing, Edward Watson, Thomas Eastham, Judge De Wolf, Scott Erison, Will

Mason and others saw the strange aerial visitor in its nocturnal migration. Heretofore they have doubted the story of the air ship, but all now admit that seeing is believing.

Albany, Ind., April 16.--The air ship that has been flitting across the heavens for the past four weeks was seen here early last evening by several citizens whose veracity is above suspicion. It was between 7 and 8 o'clock when the object was seen moving across the western sky going south. The shape of the object could not be plainly distinguished. Mrs. Smith Clark, J. S. McIrvin, cashier of the Albany State Bank, and William Yocum were among those who saw the object.

The Tennessee Centennial managers say the airship is no fake. That its owners are under contract to take it to the exposition and it is expected here shortly.

1897 April 17 (Sat.) Greensburg (Ind.) Review, p. 1. (card 17)

The Greensburg Liear Loose Again. /

As a sample of the slush that is being sent out as "news" from this city it is but necessary to quote the following from a lengthy article which appeared in the Chicago Chronicle of the 14th:

GREENSBURG, IND., April 13.--The skeptics of this city who have read the accounts of the airship seen in the western skies now no longer doubt its reality, since the machine itself was seen here this evening. The airship made its appearance in this county about 6:30 o'clock and was seen by several hundred people. 156 prominent citizens of the city and county are willing to make sworn statements that they saw the strange machine.

The news of the sighting of the airship spread like wildfire, and it is the sole topic of conversation on the streets tonight. The first report of the machine being seen in this county came from St. Paul. Raymond Walker, correspondent for the Daily New Era, wiring the word to his paper to at once look for the airship, as it had been seen there and was coming slowly this way, at a rate of about ten miles an hour. Three or four hundred people were immediately on the streets, when, in a few minutes, the strange object made its appearance.

It was seen slowly approaching from the west. When within about a half a mile of the city it turned its course to a southerly direction. It was not quite dark, and the sky being clear, it was plainly outlined. No light was burning. About half an hour later it was seen approaching from the east with three lights, a green, red and a large white one in the center. The green and red lights were small and the clear light was large and very strong, and is believed to be a search light. Prof. George Keely, who obtained a good view of it from his observatory, says the search light is of medium power. He probably got the best view of anyone, although he did not get in his tower till it was passing away the first time. For the past two days and nights Prof. Keely has been on constant watch for the machine, thinking it would pass over this way, but had temporarily left his post tonight when it appeared. /

The article goes on to describe the anxiety of Prof. Keely and other people concerning the clothing worn by the men in the air ship, and closes as follows:

One disastrous result of the airships' visit came to the famous Greensburg goat. Billy saw the strange thing in the heavens and immediately becoming frantic, commenced to butt the northeast corner of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. Finally he took another despairing look at the heavens. The lights in the airship changed color at that instant. Billy frothed at the mouth and vent against the corner of the church a seventh time, when his left horn broke off near its base. He is now under the care of a veterinarian. /

How any self-respecting citizen can send out such stuff as news and how any self-respecting newspaper can print it as news is beyond the ordinary powers of discernment. If such articles only reacted on the man who writes them it would be different, but as they make Greensburg and its people appear silly and ridiculous, the author should be called down. The Chronicle should take a reef in the young man's imagination.

Greensburg New Era, April 21, p. 1--Hawkeye Fake.

p. 5--The mysterious airship or aerial phantom, which has been mystifying various western states, has invaded Indiana and is reported as having passed over Lagrange, Plymouth, New Castle and other northern towns. Can this be the advance courier of "the locomotion of the future" or is it only an optical illusion due to the cross-eyed quality of the liquor used in the sections reporting?--Connorsville Examiner.

April 17, 1897 Indianapolis Journal (Sat. morn) p. 1. (card 1)

More Air Ship Fakes

Navigators of the Aeroplane Thought to Be Populists.

Its Occupants Are Said to Wear Peffer-Like Whiskers--What Passengers on a Big Four Train Saw.

Special to Indianapolis Journal.

Chicago, April 16.--Board of Trade "bulls" scout the idea of a local scientist that they are responsible for either the movements of the mysterious air ship or the winter-like weather that threatens to make short crops this year. While admitting that snow and rain, and consequent chilliness, might be produced by artificial means, such as explosions among the clouds, they assert that they are too good citizens to engage in such a conspiracy against the public welfare. Meantime reports, "all well authenticated," according to the writers of the "fakes," continue to pour in from nearby States. A correspondent at Belle Plaine, Iowa, says:

"The citizens of Linn Grove declare there is no longer any doubt among them of the existence of an air ship. This morning a large object was seen slowly moving in the heavens in a northerly direction, and seemed to be making preparations to alight. James Evans, liveryman; F. G. Ellis, harness dealer; Ben Buland, stock dealer; David Evans and Joe Croskey jumped into a rig and started in pursuit. They found the air ship had alighted four miles north of town, and when within 700 yards it spread its four enormous wings and flew off toward the north. Its occupants threw out two large boulders of unknown composition, which were taken into the village, and are now on exhibition. There were two queer-looking persons on board, who made desperate efforts to conceal themselves. Evans and Croskey said they saw the longest whiskers they ever saw in their lives. Nearly every citizen in Linn Grove saw the air ship as it sailed over town, and excitement is intense."

According to a correspondent at Mount Vernon, Illinois, the air ship was seen there by a hundred people. Mayor Wells, who had an excellent view of the mysterious visitor from the observatory attached to his residence, says it resembled the body of a huge man swimming through the air with an electric light at his back.

Similar reports have been received from numerous towns, the reports merely varying with the imagination of the correspondent.

Snowdrift from Chicago. / Special to Indianapolis Journal, Champaign, Ill., April 16.--The crew of train No. 3, Peoria division of the Big Four, in charge of Engineer Sharp and Conductor T. E. Jarvis, with 30 passengers, saw what is supposed to be the air ship northwest of St. Joseph, Illinois, being in sight about ten minutes and travelling at the rate of about 120 miles per hour.

Scoffers assert that what the passengers saw was merely a cloud driven with great force across the sky, but Conductor Jarvis, who reported the above to the telegraph operator here, says it was too compact and moving with too great velocity to be either a common cloud or a Kansas twister. Some of the passengers suggested that it might be a Kansas snow drift (snow fell in the windy city today) that had been picked up by the wind and was being hurled about in the heavens, undergoing solidification preparatory to being dropped to the earth as a spring hailstone.

They Saw a "Strange Body." / Special to Indianapolis Journal, Vincennes, Indiana, April 16.--More than a score of citizens of unquestioned veracity saw some strange body passing over the city early this evening, which they think was the mysterious air ship. It was at a great altitude and moved rapidly in a southeasterly direction straight over the city. Such men as Col. N. P. Chee, ex-mayor Ewing, Edward Watson, Thomas Eastham, Judge DeWolf, Scott Baisson, Will Mason and others saw the strange aerial visitor in its nocturnal migration. Heretofore they have doubted the story of the air ship, but all now admit that seeing is believing.

Albany Gets a Sight of the Ship. / Special to Indpls. Journal, Albany, Indiana, April 16.--The air ship that has been flitting across the heavens for the past four weeks was seen here early last evening by several citizens whose veracity is above suspicion. It was between 7 and 8 o'clock when the object was seen moving across the western sky going south. The shape of the object could not be plainly distinguished. Mrs. Smith Clark, J. S. McIrvin, cashier of the Albany State Bank, and William Yocum were some of those who saw the object.

April 17, 1897 Indianapolis Sentinel (Sat. morn) p. 6

Message From the Airship

Note Tied to a Screw Found by an Elkhart Woman, Elkhart, April 16.--Special.--The following note was picked up yesterday by Mrs. C. Strook of St. Joseph st. It was tied to a large screw by means of twine string. It reads as follows:

"From the air vessel to the people of Indiana--two hundred feet above, fellowcountrymen, I, the inventor of the new idea (the flying vessel), am now passing over your city. It is now 12:30 o'clock and very cloudy. I will pass over your city on my return trip Friday night. Yours truly,

"THE INVENTOR".

Mrs. Strook says she believes the message came from the airship, and although the note bears no date, several parties have been formed here to watch for the return trip of the machine, which is scheduled for tonight.

Landed at Monon.

Monon, April 16.--Special.--About 10:30 o'clock Friday night the mysterious airship slowly settled to the ground near the Monon depot. There were two passengers and an attendant. They seemed to regret the necessity of landing to make trivial adjustments to the motor. No one could learn anything about the destination, but as a few words were dropped in regard to the jury bribery case at Marion, a number are led to believe that the passengers are Phin Howard and George Harvey. Both men were rather heavy built and smooth faced. One of the men was several inches taller than the other. After the repairs were made, which required only thirty minutes, the ship sailed away in a southeasterly direction, evidently for Marion.

Talked with Airship Man.

To the Editor--Sir: The "famous airship" was seen at this place this morning at 9:30 o'clock. The Hon. D. E. Watson and Jap Miller of Riley fame were on the hills north of the city and saw the ship descend to earth. They had a talk with the navigator and he told them that he was a poet from the planet Mars; that in the flights of his imagination he had gone beyond the powers of gravitation and came direct to earth. His object in stopping here was to get the benefit of our mineral waters, but when he heard what the taxes were in this county he immediately put his machinery in motion and left for parts unknown, before our assessor could list his "machine" for taxation.

W. Martinsville, April 16.

1897 April 17 Logansport (IND.) Daily Reporter, back p. (Sat.)

Saw the Airship. / Minor West Saw the Mystifying Flying Machine. Minor West, of the State National bank is one of the few Logansport people fortunate enough to catch a glimpse of the mysterious airship which defies the law of gravitation and has set the entire world agog. Minor was interviewed by a reporter this afternoon and describes the navigator of the aeroplane as a light about the size of a football which revolved rapidly and whirled out of sight below the horizon ~~before~~ before he could grasp an idea of its general outlines. He was not prepared to say whether the queer craft was propelled by wings or steam.

April 18, 1897 Indianapolis Sentinel (Sun) part 2, p. 1 (fiction) (S. M. ...)

Lands on Monument The Mysterious Airship Pays a Visit to the City Shortly after midnight the brilliant light from it is seen in the heavens and for a few moments the heavenly navigator hovers over the city--It anchors to the monument and is hailed--a voice from it tells of its identity, history and purpose--Mystery that has been heretofore unrevealed about to be solved.

The airship which hangs onto soldiers' monument is the spirit of aerial navigation, now about to be captured and enslaved by man--He sent bicycles to pacify man's urge, but now man is after it again.

In its travels the airship runs into the soaring ambitions of men, especially politicians.

Sunday April 18, 1897, p. 11 (Indpls. Journal):

All the Planets Visible / St. Louis Republic, April 17. Thursday night another "air ship" made its appearance in the western heavens--it was Mercury the planet not to be seen but once in a lifetime (1). Mercury is about five degrees south of Venus, the bright evening star which was mistaken a few nights ago by a number of people for the wonderful air ship which is supposed to be hovering over this city.

April 19, 1897 Indianapolis Sentinel (Mon. morn) p. 6

The Airship Fake

Muncie People Duped by a Quartet of Balloons.

MUNCIE, April 18.--Special.--Several thousand people of this city were duped into the idea they had seen the "mysterious" airship and some are none the wiser yet. About 9:30 o'clock while the streets were still crowded with the usual Saturday night shoppers, the dim outline of a swiftly moving object, to which were attached several lights, green and white in color, was seen traversing the heavens from the south-western part of the compass. Some one spied it and cried, "There goes the airship." In an instant the eyes of all were turned heavenward and the spectacle of the dim-looking object with lights attached, moving rapidly over the city, caused the firm belief to settle on all that they were witnessing the famous airship making one of its lightning-like trips. Those who were in the stores rushed into the streets, forgetting everything in their desire to see the mysterious ship of the air.

In less time than it takes to tell this the supposed airship had passed out of sight. It was seen again several hours later, retracing its first path. Not all of the people in Muncie know that the airship was nothing more than four hot-air balloons fastened together, to which were attached lanterns with colored globes, sent up by two enterprising reporters, who revel in excitement and a good joke at the public's expense.

April 19, 1897 Indianapolis Sentinel (Mon morn) p. 6

The Martinsville Story

Martinsville, April 18.--Special.--The special in Saturday's Sentinel in regard to the airship at Honon was the subject of much conversation here today. Dr. Webster, a former resident of ~~Marion~~ Marion, is very positive in some of his statements about airships. It is known that he made a professional trip over in Brown county yesterday, and he told a Marion resident this morning that he had been called to the relief of George Harvey, and that Phin Howard was with him. While the Doctor will not say that he has seen the airship, the manner in which he parries questions is most convincing proof that Harvey is making regular incursions to Marion via the airship. Harvey's financial condition would not preclude such a method of travel.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Daily Banner Times (Greencastle, Ind.), p. 4.

The Air Ship is Found.

Notwithstanding that air whip was seen at Vladivostok, Siberia, yesterday, shaped like an oblong parsnip with an undulating tail which emitted sparks, Henry Heltzer carried the pesky air ship into our editorial sanctum at noon today, having found it in his garden early this morning while engaged in brushing the frost off his early sass. There has been an even bet standing in the city that if the air ship ever was seen here that Mr. Heltzer would get the first glimpse of it and now it seems he has captured it. It looks something like a Greencastle electric light globe ~~and~~ after it has run amuck of a small-boy-large-rock combination, but printed on its sides in bold letters are the words "air ship." In order to make this story compare favorably with those of the energetic correspondents who have been working the daily newspapers, we ought to add that "thousands have viewed the air ship with open mouthed astonishment," but our modesty forbids. The air ship is here but the astonishment is shy.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Indianapolis News, p. 6.

SWINGING THROUGH THE AIR. / One Green and One Yellow Light on the Air-ship. /

Frank Johns, 21 East North street, says he saw two lights in the sky last night which he is convinced must have been attached to some kind of airship. He says: "I had finished reading in the News about Rev. J.S. Axtell's experiments with airships. About 9:15 o'clock I looked up into the sky and saw two lights swinging through the air. One was green light and the other was yellow. The yellow light was about the size of an electric arc light, and was in front of the green light. The lights were too high for me to see anything connecting them. They were traveling southwest at a good speed, for it took only about three minutes for them to pass out of my sight. They swung through the sky as if they were attached to a balloon. The lights were clear and strong, and I shall be surprised if I do not hear of other people who saw them.

An Advertising Scheme. The air-ship business is understood to be an advertisement adopted by a circus, which is releasing colored balloons in different parts of the country. In due time the scheme is to be disclosed. May 6, 7; 8, 1. Barnard.

April 20, 1897 Indianapolis Sentinel (Tues morn) p. 6 (Card 1)

Another Strange Light

Witnessed in the Heavens by an Elkhart Citizen To the Editor--Sir: Last evening at 8:15 o'clock I saw a light go across the heavens. I am not the only person who witnessed the strange light. Hundreds of people all over the city are talking of it today, and all seem to have the opinion that it was the mysterious airship.

When I first noticed it I was standing at the corner of High and Main-streets with C.A. Hall, and I chanced to look up and a moving light in the sky attracted my attention. Others had seen it before I chanced to see it. The light was a dark yellow and certainly must have been an oil light of some kind, and was about twenty-four inches in diameter when I first noticed it. It went in an easterly direction a few points to the south, notwithstanding the wind was from the south. The light certainly must have been at an altitude of at least 4,000 feet and travelled faster by far than I have ever witnessed a balloon travel or a gust of air blow the dust. It was about six to eight minutes in going from the western horizon to the eastern horizon. I watched it as long as it could be seen. The moon shone clear and bright and there was not a cloud to be seen at the time the light was travelling. SODER.

Elkhart, April 19.

Course 'Twas the Airship.

Columbus, April 19.--Postmaster Rush is authority for the statement that the much-advertised airship passed near Columbus.

"It was either an airship or I don't know what an airship is," said Mr. Rush this morning, "I was driving from Edinburg last night. It was early in the evening, about 7 o'clock. Maybe a little later. Whatever it was it came up suddenly and the horse was badly frightened. The people in the carriage were thrown out. The buggy was broken. I was badly scared. The brightly lighted object passed and I saw the red light in the rear disappear. The farmers in the community said they had lived there for years and that no airship had ever passed that way. But that is no reason. It was the airship or the express train from Madison."

A Mysterious "What is it."

Shelbyville, April 19.--A party of well-known young men who were in the country this morning returned to town greatly excited and declaring that they had seen the much-talked-of airship, supposed to be flying over the country. The mysterious sight was first seen by Harry Lane, who called the attention of his companions to it. Mr. Lane described the object as being four times the size of a balloon at that distance. The young men, among whom were Albert Chreden, Forest Buell, Harry Lane and others, watched the ship gradually float westward, to be finally lost to sight.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Rushville (Ind.) (Twice-wkly) Republican, p. 3.

Mysterious Air-Ship.

Charles Worthington and John Rodabaugh, who live in the west part of this city, claim to have seen the air-ship, which is causing so much mystery among the towns in Indiana. The men named above say that they saw the air-ship at Hodge's branch, last Saturday morning, where the men who operate it were taking water. They describe the ship as having large wings which propelled it through the air. There were three men in the ship and when it arose from the earth they shaped their course in a northeasterly direction. Just so!

1897 April 21 (Wed.) Angola Herald (Steuben Cnty, Ind.), p. 5.

Brevities of Local Interest.

Some of our citizens thought they saw an air ship Sunday night, in a southeasterly direction, while others declare that it was only the moon. All agree, however, that there was an abundance of air afloat in all directions.

p. 7. Story of explosion of arap, Pavilion, Mich.

p. 8. Lights are seen almost nightly by spearing parties on Lang lake, in violation of fishing laws.

Wed. Apr. 14, p. 8. Pleasant Lake Dept. Our agent read a report over the wire that an airship that left Omaha, Neb., yesterday, passed over Battle Creek, Mich., at 8 a.m. today.

Fountain-Warren Democrat (Attica, Ind.) April 15, p. 1.
Bluffton--body of boy found in field with clothes burnt off, but no fire in field.
p.2. Kickappo Legends--ghost shows reporter an arsp, shaped like whaleback and with lights--people stare at.
May 6, p. 1. Meteora, Geneva, N.Y.
1897 April 21 (Wed) Columbus Evening Republican, p. 1 (card 1) could be arrested. The whiskey sold at Gas City has long borne an evil reputation.

Prof. Hough of Northwestern University thinks the airship is a star. He says it is Alpha Orionis, which the astronomers know as the star Alpha in the constellation Orion.

p.5. Should airships become the means of popular transit there are a few specimens of the traveling fraternity which should be prohibited from riding on them--the old reliable railroad hog who occupies two seats in a crowded car, the curious tourist who insists on raising the window in order to see everything, and the woman who boards a train carrying a good-sized slice of a large department store. The nervous woman who imagines there is a cow on the track continually, will be out of a job on an airship.--Ex.

AIRSHIP IS IN BROWN. / IT IS WAITING ON WEED PATCH HILL FOR REPAIRS. / An Interview With E.J. Pennington, the Owner, Who Claims Hour for the Machine--It Is Said to Make Almost a Hundred Miles an Hour Through the Air--May Come Here. /

The air-ship is in Brown county. E. J. Pennington, the owner and inventor of the machine is the authority for the statement.
Wild stories of the appearance of the ship have been floating about the county seat of Brown for some days. Many farmers in that county have stated that it has been seen by them. Their stories were brought to Martinsville and according to the reporter of that city, Jeremiah Collier and William York are ready to make affidavits that they have seen and examined the wonderful invention. The reporter says that two farmers came to town and reported that the ship had anchored on Weed Patch Hill during the night and would remain there several days to repair some damage to their machinery, and to substantiate their story the men exhibited telegrams that the owner of the ship had given to them to have sent off. They said that the reason that the owners did not come in was that the roads were so bad that horses could hardly pull a wagon over the road and then they wanted to rest for a few days. Their reason for locating at Weed Patch is to escape sightseers during the several days that will be necessary to complete the repairs. From the messages shown by the men it was learned that the man at the head of the enterprise was E.J. Pennington.

April 21, 1897 Indianapolis Sentinel (Wed. morn) p. 6

Very Hard to Believe
Mysterious Airship Takes on Coal Near Town of Linton
Linton, April 20.--Special.--The airship, about which there has been so much talk, passed over this city at about 9 o'clock last evening. It came from the southwest and lighted at the shaft of No. 2 mine and took on three tons of coal. Two men were the occupants of the ship. In conversation with a citizen they stated they were on their way to Canada. They had entire control of their machine and explained the different parts. They stated that they would next stop at Brazil, several miles north of here, and take on coal. They left about 9:50 o'clock.

Mr. Pennington is well known to the people of Indiana. He is a native of Dearborn county and, some eight years ago, was running a brand saw factory at Moores Hill, and while there he drew the models of what he thought to be the proper thing in the air-ship line. Afterwards he went to Edinburg, and thence to Mt. Carmel where he builded an airship that attracted much attention. It was exhibited in the auditorium in Chicago and in the exposition grounds in St. Louis. While in St. Louis the sheriff attached it but during the night it disappeared and was never heard of again. Mr. Pennington next appeared before the people of Indiana as the promoter of the Noblesville and interurban electric railroad. Monday morning, continues the Reporter, Mr. Pennington went to Martinsville to take an early train over the Big Four. In an interview he said:

About two hundred persons watched the mysterious machine take on coal and a good many noticed its twinkling lights from the distance. The machine seemed to travel at the height of two hundred feet above the ground.

Thursday, April 22, p. 4 ("Snaps")--That mysterious airship is probably the "Flying Dutchman" brought up to date. --NY Tribune.
1897 April 21 (Wed) Michigan City, Ind., News (Wkly), p.1. (card 1)

"Yes I have an airship over in Brown county undergoing some repairs I selected that place to get away from crowds that the machine would naturally attract. I am going east and will not be back before Saturday when I expect the machine to be repaired and here in town to meet me. We will start at once for Cuba, where we will join the patriots in their struggle for liberty. It is the same old Moores Hill machine with some improvements as suggested in Prof. Langley's ideas published by the Government some five years ago. The newspaper reports have been somewhat confusing because we have three machines in the air, and just now they are in central states. One of them will be at the Tennessee exposition. The report that the machine exploded the other night was the most natural thing in the world. Owing to the roof of our machine springing a leak one of our electric circuits became grounded and the dynamo burned out. The display was something wonderful, but, fortunately, we have two sets of propelling machinery and it did not bother us to keep going, but our lights were out for several hours. This is partly the damage we are to repair here.

A MYSTERIOUS STAR. / Discovered at Berrien Springs, Michigan--It Hangs Over This City. /

While other parts of the country are all torn up over the appearance of the great air ship that is floating about over the earth at night, the usually quiet people of Berrien Springs, Michigan, are agitated over the sight of an immense electric star they see in the heavens, suspended directly over the Union Soap Company's works, in this city. The bright star was first noted in the skies, by the residents of Berrien Springs, about ten days ago, and much interest was manifested over it. Some claimed it was an associate of the evening star. Others thought it was a new discovery in the world of astronomy, while many believed it to be an electric star suspended some 500 or 1,000 feet in the air, directly over Michigan City. This last theory continued to grow in the minds of the people at Berrien Springs until it was watched every night, was talked of in the schools, in the stores and upon the streets, the great mystery being as to how the Union Soap works kept that star suspended so high in the heavens. Everybody down there uses the famous Union Star soap, and recently when Joseph Clouchek was making one of his periodical visits there he was questioned about the electric star suspended 1,000 feet in the air, over the soap works here, and an explanation as to how it was kept up so high was demanded. Jo. dropped onto the joke and carrying it out upon the theory that the Berrien Springs people had the right idea of mysterious star they had discovered, gave them a good story. For many nights the whole populace was out to watch that new star, and it was the talk of the town. The Berrien Springs people this week contained the following regarding the big star the people there have discovered:

"We carry our own workman and they were here last night to secure such material as they needed and, when I left this morning, the work was well under way. Lately I have been devoting my time to the manufacture of motor cycles and have attended all the exhibitions of these machines that have been given in the world and from these I have packed up many small ideas to complete this machine, the dream of my life, and while I am in Cuba I expect to work out such improvements, that in a few years I will be able to introduce the machine into the commerce, not only of this country but of the world. I would like to talk to you longer but the train is starting and I must go. Be here Saturday evening and I will take you a short ride, as far away as you can get back on the train by Monday morning. Our speed is ninety-seven miles an hour."

Rumors have been going the rounds of the press and swain circles that a very bright star recently seen in the southwest was something astronomers had not previously located and that it was--must be, in fact--an electric star, kept up by some mysterious agency, by the Union Soap Works of Michigan City, as an advertisement of their celebrated Star soap. Of course many people rejected this theory just as the electric inventions of such men as Morse, Edison and Tesla have been rejected by people who didn't know a little bit about electricity. Now the cat is out of the bag. Last Saturday Mr. Joseph Clouchek, representing that Michigan City Company, was in town and, in strict confidence, imparted the information that his company had hung up that star. He seemed unwilling to tell just how it was supported at such an altitude but we all now know that many things yet not fully understood by laymen are possible to electric engineers.

1897 April 21 (Wed.) Hartford City Telegram (Ind.), p. 6.

The Mysterious Airship. / It Travels Over Hartford City at 11:30 in the Night Say Several Glassworkers. /

It was about time somebody in Hartford City saw the airship which has been flying through the newspapers for many days. It passed over Hartford City Wednesday night. Several employees of the Hartford City Glass Company's plant on the x South Side saw the strange light and they aver that it was the airship. It was also seen at Fort Wayne that evening, going in a northwesterly direction. It passed over this city in a southerly direction--according to the glassworkers who saw it. "The light first appeared in the west," said one of the glassworkers who saw it, "and it traveled southward at a good rate of speed. It was of a yellowish color and shaped like a pear. There were two lights at the side and the thing swayed to and fro as it traveled."

Mr. Clouchek intimated that some fine day people using that particular brand of soap would become so purified that their vision would be enlarged to a degree that would enable them to discover many things now undreamed of by them.

1897 April 22 (Th) Evening Republican (Columbus, Ind.), p.6.

They Saw It.
Bert Edmonson, James P. Honar, J.F. McClellan and others were in the south part of the city last midnight posting bills for the excursion and they discovered a large light apparently thirty feet long passing through the heavens moving rapidly in an easterly direction. Whether it was the airship or not they were unable to tell. They saw the strange visitor, all the same. The boys were probably walking in their sleep.--Seymour Republican.

Under the laws of the State of Indiana the saloons close at 11 o'clock. Half an hour after that the airship sailed over Hartford City. There may be some connection between these two circumstances.

It is said that the airship alighted in a cornfield one mile from Gas City at 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon but it got away before it 23,2. A reasonable solution of the mysterious lights so frequently mistaken for an airship is given by an exchange which suggests that they are only a few escaped metaphors of Mr. Bryan's. The airship was a sort of fly-by-night affair and seems to have completely flown.

May 6/1 Barnard: 13,3 Kansas snake.

Apr. 10. 2 flock of passenger pigeons seen?
 12.1 Spontan. human combustion.
 13.4. Strange & peculiar light at Haysville--Ind. Sent.
 19.1. Airship seen near Columbus--Postmaster Rush said "either air-ship or train."
 19.2. Still the air ship, or "that air ship," is causing much excited comment. Now a man in Kentucky claims to know the inventor and that he has found the solution to overhead travel. If he has there may be brisk competition among the tourist companies for parties going to Paris in 1900. It is not improbable to think that these lines will announce the trip to be made in one night. And how the ocean lines will cut the rates. Any dream sounds almost practical in these days of wild stories.

1897 April 22 (Th) Fort Wayne (Ind.) Weekly Gazette, p. 12.

TWO MEN IN THE SHIP. / To Say Nothing of the Dogs--The Spiritualists Make a Discovery.

The airship has again been seen by Fort Wayne people. On Wednesday evening, as several members of the First Spiritual Circle were leaving their society rooms after a meeting, they noticed the air ship passing over the city toward the northwest at a rapid speed. It carried two lights, a red one in front and a blue one in the rear. It is said by A. Carpenter that the members returned to their hall and the medium went into a trance. While in that condition the medium disclosed the occupants of the ship to those gathered in the room. There were, according to the medium, two men in the car and a third living body supposed to be a dog. The apparitionists are greatly agitated over the matter and further seances may be held.

p. 10. The erratic course of the famous airships demonstrates that it is the astral body of the late populist party. It arose from its grave in the West and like Noah's dove could find no resting place. It was making for Washington, but having one captain and two mates that were not in harmony as to the course to be pursued, it has zigzagged all over the country.

If our free trade friends will cease to fight protection in congress and direct their attention to perfecting an air-ship, the cause of free trade will be triumphant, not only for the U.S., but for the whole world. Nations can be fenced and custom house placed at every gate, but nature cannot be roofed over, and protected goods will sail over the custom houses as easily as the cow jumped over the moon.

1897 April 22 (Th) Logansport (Ind.) Daily Photos, p. 5.

An Airship. / Under Course of Construction at Logansport. / Its Size and Shape Known Only to the Builders. / Edward Gall and Henry Conrad, Well-Known Young Men of This City. //

Who knows but what the mysteries of aerial navigation may yet be solved by Logansport inventors? Or, who knows but what the solution has already been made and the alleged skylarking about by night in the empyrean near this city was really on the square.

A representative of the Pharos did discover today that an airship is really in course of construction by Messrs Edward Gall and Henry Conrad, well-known young men of the city, residing in the East End. Parts of the ship were and are being made at J. A. Anson's carriage work on the south-side, but its size (further than it will be thirty feet long) and shape are held a profound secret in the breast of the builder.

Mr. Gall is a brother of William Gall, a compositor on the Pharos, who has had considerable experience in handling a balloon. Edward makes his home with William, but notwithstanding that fact the latter has not been let into the secret of the airship business. He says that he had frequently seen Edward in possession of odd-shaped pieces of iron, but never questioned him concerning them.

The gentleman who put the Pharos man next today is firm in the belief that Messrs Gall and Conrad are constructing this machine as an improvement on the one that has been in use for some time, and to it may be traced those mysterious lights which have moved strangely in the sky of late.

1897 April 22 (Th) Martinsville, Ind., Republican, p. 6. (card 1)

THE AIRSHIP LOCATED. / It Is on Weed Patch Hill, Brown County--The Inventor Talks.

The wonderful airship that has been perplexing the minds of the citizens of the Central States for some time, is now explained. The ship is now resting on the top of Weed Patch Hill and will be there until next Friday or longer.

The strange conveyance was first seen in Martinsville last Wednesday when Dr. Grant Monical and several other professional and business men having offices and stores in the Cunningham Block, observed it. Their report was laughed at at first but they persisted and finally convinced the people that they knew what they were talking about.

The next appearance was about closing up time for the business houses Saturday night and those who saw it were the most prominent business men of the town, Jap Miller, a merchant, S.H. Guthridge, a councilman and connected with the First National Bank; Smith Johnson, another councilman and a druggist; "Howe" Egbert, of the National Hotel; Will Cain, a saloon keeper, and Nightwatch Pollard, are among those who maintain they saw the machine and it was traveling eastward very slowly. Their story was confirmed Sunday morning by Jerry Collins and "Bud" York. Two farmers came to town and reported that the ship had anchored on Weed Patch Hill during the night and would remain there several days to repair some damage to their machinery, and to substantiate their story the men exhibited telegrams that the owner of the ship had given to them to have sent off. They said that the reason the owners did not come in was that the roads were so bad that horses could hardly pull a wagon over the road and then they wanted to rest for a few days. Their reason for locating at Weed Patch is to escape sight seems during the several days that will be necessary to complete the repairs. From the messages shown by the men it was learned that the man at the head of the enterprise was E.J. Pennington.

Mr. Pennington is well known to the people of Indiana. He is a native of Dearborn county and, some eight years ago, was running a band saw factory at Moores Hill, and while there he drew the main models of what he thought to be the proper thing in the air ship line. Afterwards he went to Edinburg, and thence to Mt. Carmel where he built an air ship that attracted great attention. It was exhibited in the Auditorium in Chicago and in the Exposition Grounds in St. Louis. While in St. Louis the sheriff attached it but during the night it disappeared and was never heard of again. Mr. Pennington next appeared before the people of Indiana as the promoter of the Noblesville and Inter-urban Electric railroad.

This morning Mr. Pennington came to town early to take the 6 a.m. Big Four train. In answer to questions he said, "Yes I have an air-ship over in Brown county undergoing some repairs. I selected that place to get away from crowds that the machine would naturally attract. I am going East and will not be back before Saturday when I expect the machine to be repaired and here in town to meet me. We will start at once for Cuba, where we will join the Patriots in their struggle for liberty. It is the same old Moores Hill machine with some improvements as suggested in Prof. Langley's ideas published by the government some five years ago. The newspaper reports have become somewhat confusing because we have three machines in the air, and just now they are in the Central States. One of them will be at the Tennessee Exposition. The report that the machine exploded the other night was the most natural thing in the world. Owing to the roof of our machine springing a leak one of our electric circuits became grounded and the dynamo burned out. The display was something wonderful, but, fortunately, we have two sets of propelling machinery and it did not bother us to keep going, but our lights were out for several hours. This is partly the damage we are to repair here."

"We carry our own workmen and they were here last night to secure such material as they needed and, when I left this morning, the work was well under way. Lately I have been devoting my time to the manufacture of motorcycles and have attended all the exhibitions of these machines that have been given in the world and from these I have picked up many small ideas to complete this machine, the dream of my life and while I am in Cuba I expect to work out such improvements, that in a few years I will be able to introduce the machine into the commerce not only of this country but of the world. I would like to talk to you longer but the train is starting and I must go. Be here Saturday evening and I will take you a short ride, as far away as you can get back on the train by Monday morning. Our speed is 97 miles an hour."

1897 April 22 (Th) Mitchell Commercial (Lawrence Cnty, Ind.), p. 1.

That Air Ship. / Seen in Mitchell Last Friday Evening.

Last Thursday evening as Will Ewing and a friend were returning from prayer meeting about 9 o'clock their attention was called to a bright light in the heavens over the north-west part of the city. The outline of the object could not be distinguished very clearly but the light burned steadily and in such a manner that plainly indicated that it was not a star or some erratic planet off its reckoning. Fred Larkin and Harry Kimberlin saw the light also and watched it until it was lost to sight moving off gracefully to the northwest. To make sure the object was in motion the gentlemen sighted from a tree and were convinced beyond possibility of a doubt that the air ship or whatever it may have been, was in motion. They don't pretend to say that it was an air ship but they do know that it was something unusual. Who knows what it was?

1897 April 23 (Fri.) Hamilton County Ledger (Noblesville, Ind.), p. 2.

Not the Air Ship.

About 8:15 o'clock Sunday night when the church people were on their way home from the evening services, many of them observed a bright streak of light in the northwest about midway between the zenith and horizon. It traveled rapidly in a northerly direction and gradually disappeared. Some one spied it and cried, "There goes the air ship." All eyes were instantly turned heavenward and many believed they were witnessing the famous air ship making one of its lightning trips. The light was nothing more than a meteor flying across the heavens with a bright trail of fire following on its path.

p. 8 County Capers / No. 3 W. Washington.

The Neversveats of Horton last Saturday played a mean, dastardly practical joke on several of us rural backwoods farmers who had gone to town for our mail, and what was worse some of them belonged to meetin'. They said that on Thursday and Friday nights between 7 and 8 o'clock an airship had passed over the town, going in a northwest direction and had dropped a letter down to the inhabitants of the burg, saying that they were sure that the ship would pass over the town on Saturday night. We sat up till about 7:30 o'clock, with one eye pointed in the direction of Horton, watching for the ship, but it like many other things, came not, and we retired thinking of the sinful ways in general of the Neversveats who have nothing else to do than to pitch horse-shoes and fool honest farmers.

1897 April 22 (Th) Rensselaer (wkly) Republican (Indiana), p. 1.

Of course somebody in Rensselaer had to see the airship. A very respectable elderly gentleman, whose name we withhold out of regard for the feelings of his friends, was up about 2:30 A.M. Sunday morning, and saw the airship hovering over the new court house, as though looking for some soft place to light. The old gentleman does not think it was more than a mile and a half above the earth, and thinks he saw four men in the ship. He did not observe whether their teeth were chattering or not, but considering what the weather must have been up there, it is safe to say that they were.

p.8--Explosion at Pavilion, Mich.
15,1 The air-ship fake, which started in California last fall, has now got as far east as this state, and telegraph liars are working it for all it is worth, in every direction.

Pike County Democrat 4/23, p. 1: That airship is creating a great deal of talk in this section of the state. There is hardly a hamlet in southern Indiana but where persons say they have seen the monster aerial ship. It has been seen here by several parties, but we will venture the opinion that it was a buzzard that was hovering above them and they had been looking through the bottom of a glass.

1897 April 22 (Th) Terre Haute Evening Gazette, p. 4.
Saw the Air Ship.

Patrolmen Kotsch and Budd and Charles Scheydt claim that they saw the air ship in the heavens last night. They say that the shape of the object was just like those they had seen pictures of, pointed at both ends. It did not seem to move but gradually disappeared like an air balloon.

Apr. 12 p. 4--Wizard Edison having pronounced the airship a fake the KC Journal invites him to come out to Kans and stimulate his vision with drug and strong beverages, promising him, if he does so, that he will see his mistake, also the airship.

Between the cups and the lips sails many an airship.
29 Case letter/30--flight of meteors.

Sat. May 1--Perhaps those airships are hunting for that promised prosperity in the heavens above, not having found it on the earth beneath or in the waters under the earth. (p.4)

Anethema maranatha (spelling not vouched for) be the next person who sees the airship and doesn't throw salt on its tail and so capture it.

1897 April 23 (Fri eve) Kokomo (Ind.) Daily Tribune, p. 4 (CARD 1)

The Mysterious Air Ship. / The Much Seen Aerial Navigator Finally Shows Up Here. / It Was Seen at 10 O'clock Thursday Night by Any Number of Reputable Citizens--Picture of the Critter. /

It finally got here. It would be quite contrary to the economy of nature for the great air ship to make its appearance in other towns in Indiana and neglect to give Kokomo a call. The much seen aerial navigator was in Kokomo Thursday night and its presence can be proven by any number of creditably witnesses who saw it with their own eyes and were frightened out of a year's growth by the spectacle.

The ship soared almost directly over the town from southwest to northeast. It came in the form of a ball of fire. At least that was the only part clearly visible, though there are persons willing to declare on their oaths on a stack of Bibles as high as the moon that the ball of fire was not all there was of it. Some could distinguish the faint outlines of a long cigar shaped object and something that looked like arms or wings. Others saw nothing but the light.

Perhaps 100 people saw the illuminated stranger pass over the city, and all without exception declare it to be an artificial contrivance of some description, and not a meteor as some might suppose.

The object travelled too slow and too straight for a meteor. The latter shoot through the sky at a swift downward pace, whereas, the air ship, or whatever it was, went slowly and horizontally. Among the Kokomo people witnessing the object were, Dr. R.H. Smith, Frank McCarty, of the Citizens' National bank, Walter Farquhar, D.A. Woods, Mrs. Michaels, W.E. Sollenberger, Will Kirk, Dr. Bell, Ed Clem, George Pentecost, Fred Daily, Harry Grimes, C.J. Hammill and Policemen Taylor and McFann. To them the light seemed about the size of an ordinary breakfast plate. The light was rather white with reddish tints. It appeared to pass over the western part of the city and soared very low not to exceed 300 feet above the earth. No motive power was visible. As a matter of fact, admitted by all, the unexpected visitor threw the spectators into confusion, so strange and unearthly was its appearance.

Walter Farquhar, who caught the first glimpse of it from his South Main street residence, contends that he is not good authority on the subject and didn't want to be quoted. He is trying to retrieve his reputation for truth and veracity since the time he saw the moon and thinking it was fire, called out the department. He is willing to say, however, that he saw something and believes it to be the same "air ship" that is being seen all over the country--probably nothing more than a bladder balloon sent up by mischievous boys.

Dr. Smith saw it from his West Sycamore street home and declares it was not a bladder nor a meteor, but some artificial mechanism. He thought he could distinguish accompanying outlines, but was not sure of it. The light was similar to that produced by burning oil. The object seemed to be traveling at the rate of 30 to 40 miles an hour, and being low, was soon obscured by the tops of the tall buildings.

The story as told by the other eyewitnesses conforms to the above. They agree on the time, the altitude, the size, color and speed of the light. It is therefore an indisputable fact that a strange light passed over the city Thursday night.

The Tribune produces herewith an exact picture of a real airship, constructed for aerial navigation several years ago, but which has failed to navigate to any elaborate extent. The ship as described, contains a brass band discoursing sweet music in the rarified atmosphere of the western states and territories, and is equipped and panoplied for a high old time, with a bar of liquid refreshments and all other necessary ingredients for sporting 'em high. This is probably not the air-ship seen here, though one man in the northeastern suburbs imagined he heard the passengers singing "The Ships that pass in the Night" and "Just tell them that you saw Me."

The Tipton Tribune says the same kind of a light passed over Tipton Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock and quotes a number of well-known citizens to that effect.

Of course there are incredulous persons, who were so unfortunate as not to see the stranger, take no stock in the thing; insist that there was no airship, no light, no anything. This class is also mean enough to suggest that when such men as Dr. Bell, Dr. Smith, Walter Farquhar and Willie Sollenberger get to seeing air ships, the country is going to the dogs pretty fast.

Two witnesses, C.J. Hammill and Harry Grimes, describe the object as follows:

"While standing at the corner of Buckeye and Myrtle street a dark form of some long object rapidly approached. Its peculiar shape could be plainly seen. The rays of light extended far in advance, with two lights on the side. Its route was northeast. The time occupied in its flight over Kokomo (as long as seen) was about three minutes. Speed guessed at 600 to 1,000 miles per hour. The course of travel was twice changed while it remained in sight. It was low, occupying a place corresponding to the sun at 5 o'clock. It was at 10:10 o'clock when the object appeared."

April 17 p8 More Arap Fake (from Chicago paper--causes cold weather, Linn Grove, Ia, Mt. Vernon Ill., Champaign, Ill, rr., cloud driven with great force across the sky, Vincennes.

Keep Your Optics Peeled, Not for the mythical arap, but for 2 comets that are headed this way.

1897 April 23 (Fri morn) Kokomo Dispatch, p. 4. (CARD 1)

ON THEIR OATHS. / Reputable Men of Kokomo Aver That They Saw the Air-ship, / Or Something Very Like It, Which is Much to the Same Purpose.

William Edgerton Sollenberger, 81 West Mulberry street, cashier of the Kokomo Loan and Savings association, rushed into the editorial sanctum of The Dispatch office last night, breathless and greatly excited, to exclaim that he had seen the much talked about airship. The local quill driver to whom he related his story, expressed his incredulity, but William insisted strenuously upon being believed. There was nothing left to do but take William seriously, for if there is a young man in Kokomo who can approach George Washington when it comes to stern loyalty to the truth, that young man is William Sollenberger. Telling the truth with him is a habit formed in childhood, and he could not depart from it if he tried. Besides, he is president of the Epworth League of the city and an assistant superintendent of Grace Sunday-school. What he says is entitled to belief. Having passed through the ordeal of eighteen months service as a newspaper reporter successfully, retaining his pristine innocence, his veracity is unimpeachable. He said: "I was at the corner of Webster and Walnut streets about 10 o'clock and saw the ship going in a northeasterly direction. It appeared as a red light moving very fast."

Lindell Darby, 186 South Main street, secretary of the Presbyterian Sunday-school, was riding on his bicycle near the corner of Walnut and Union streets about 10 o'clock, and saw the ship. Lindell thinks he saw the frame work. The light it carried appeared white, as if it was produced from oil, rather than electricity.

Will G. Kirk, who is entitled to be believed because other heaven-gazers who saw the ship tell the truth, declares that he sighted the curious object while in an alley--for what purpose was not learned--on his way to lunch at the Haggard restaurant.

Officer Ross Taylor, who sometimes looks up, adds his testimony to that of other witnesses. He states: "I was standing on the Lake Erie and Western railroad track near the Laeade factory at the Junction, about 10 o'clock, when I saw the ship. It carried red, white and blue lights and was going toward the northeast. Suddenly it turned completely around, and drifting toward the northwest was soon lost to view."

Officer Charles McFann, who whose chief claim to veracity is that he generally pays his debts, was at the Laymon grocery corner, when he saw the ship. The light it cast seemed to him to be of blended colors. The object appeared to be at a great distance, and sailing with great rapidity.

The following affidavit was found necessary and was sworn out last night:

Otis C. Pollard, being of lawful age and duly sworn, upon oath deposes and says that he is well acquainted with Officers Ross Taylor and Charles McFann. That he has known them for a number of years, during which time they have been residents of this community, and that he is well informed as to their reputations for truth and veracity. That the aforesaid officers never lie as long as they tell the truth and that they always tell the truth when they find it pleasing and convenient. OTIS C. POLLARD.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 22nd day of April, 1897. T.C. McREYNOLDS Notary Public.

1897 April 23 (Fri) Logansport (Ind) Daily Reporter, back p.

Saw the Airship. / Patrolman James Kleckner and Others Viewed It Last Night. / Flew About the Starry Firmament for an Hour.

The airship has a strange liking for Logansport. There seems to be something in the atmosphere of the Wabash valley which agrees with the navigators of the ethereal regions. It was seen by a number of Logansport people last night about 9 o'clock. Among the favored ones were Patrolman James Kleckner and wife, Rev. A. L. West and wife, Fred Menke and wife and John Cadwallader and family. Mr. Kleckner first sighted the light in the northwest and said it appeared to be about 500 feet high and several inches in diameter. It moved about in an aimless fashion for several minutes and then headed for the west, finally disappearing altogether. Many people believe the airship to be a product of the imagination, but those who have seen it are firm in the belief that it has a place in the list of planetary bodies or airships. Ed Gell and Henry Conrad, of Aman's carriage factory, have been engaged in the manufacture of a flying machine for several weeks, and it is possible that the mysterious traveler is the result of their handiwork.

1897 April 23 (Fri) Hamilton County Ledger (Roblesville, Ind.), p. 8e.

(Local news) AROGNA ...

The air ship that has been seen in the west of late was observed circling and hovering over the northern portion of this county a few evenings ago. It was seen over this place. Isaac Edwards, Isaac Porrer, Rant Ault, Alf Leeman and Jehu Richwine were the first to observe the machine. A line was let down with an order for compressed natural gas, which was duly supplied from the gas well at this place. Another line was suspended from the rear end of the ship attached to a basket containing money and an order for water and provisions, which was promptly filled. The money used was gold coin. The ship, after taking aboard provisions, hovered over the town for a few moments, then circling around, took a due northeast course. No audible communication from the ship was heard, save the rustling of its progress through the air. It is possible that the machine came from our neighboring planet, Mars, for we see in this planet a world well advanced in years. Evolution there is also advanced. The climax of existence is long passed and a terrible catastrophe apparently is about to wipe out all organic life. The water supply on the planet is on the point of exhaustion, hence irrigation is therefore the all-absorbing pursuit of our Martian neighbors, and hence the universal system of canals which have been observed upon that planet. One thing certain, they use for their circulating medium gold, and as old mother earth advances in arts, science and age, every nation on the earth will use gold for a money basis. A large electric light was seen near the ship, demonstrating that Mars is not devoid of electricity. Possibly, as a committee, they were sent in the air ship to investigate our planet, with a view for the inhabitants of Mars to leave their arid old dying planet and become citizens of the earth. BLUE MYRTLE.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Cannelton (Ind.) Inquirer, p. 1.

RIGHT IN THE SWIM. /

Cannelton is bound to keep up with the procession if possible. Heretofore there have been people in this town that saw ghosts, and some have seen snakes, but not till Friday night last did anyone see the airship. But early on that evening a crowd of reputable citizens saw a two-colored light moving slowly across the southern sky. They are sure it was not a shooting star, and it is hardly the season for balloons. If it was not the air-ship, what was it? We pause for a reply. Apr. 3--Arsp at Omaha. / 4, 10 Local ghost. 17, 4--Kansas arsp passed over Chicago. Has 1 advantage over its predecessors. It flies.

The mysterious airship has been seen in daylight in Illinois. If reports are half true it is a traveler from way back. One report from Indiana says an airship fell in a marsh near where some hunters were camped. In the morning only one wing showed above the mud. There is evidently a great deal of originality about some of these reports. 4/17 p.1--The supposed arsp turns out to be an electric light attached to a balloon sent up to advertise Troy.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Cannelton, Ind., Enquirer (Wkly), p. 2.

An alleged air-ship has been "hovering" over parts of Kansas and Nebraska for some time back at intervals. According to reports telegraphed from various points the machine is a "big thing" with a searchlight that sends a great bar of light whisking around the "canopy of night," so to speak, in a most bewildering fashion. Human voices are also alleged to have been heard dripping down through space, a drops of sound like hail or rain. The details of the "vision" are a trifle overdrawn but not altogether incredible. The last alleged appearance of the mysterious vessel was at Nashville, Ill., where a large red light appeared against a vast dark outline sailing against the wind. The fact that it sailed against the wind is regarded as proof that the machine was not a balloon. There may be "something in it," but from the bulk of information at hand it would seem that Max Munchausen has some very competent successors in our day.

1897 April 24 (Sat.) Daviess County Democrat (Washington, Ind.), p. 2.

An Odd Light Seen / Traveling Through the Air at a High Rate of Speed. / The Veracity of Those Who Saw the Mystery Is Unquestioned. / The Light Was Also Seen by a Score of Vincennes Citizens--Was It the Air Ship? / Saturday's Daily.

The much talked ~~xxx~~ about airship that has been flitting across the country for the past week or two was seen here early last night by a number of persons whose veracity is above suspicion.

The attention of those who saw it was attracted by a rapidly moving dull red light.

J.W. Miller, the well known stone cutter at Kelle and Dillard's monument shop, was one of the ~~xxx~~ persons who saw the strange light. He says the light was apparently about one foot wide and three feet long.

Mr. Miller and his wife and Miss Ida Stephens happened to be out in the yard at the time the peculiar light was seen. On account of the distance of the light from where they were standing they were unable to see any outline of the supposed airship.

They say the light traveled only a short distance above the earth and was going in a northwesterly direction. The light moved rapidly, about three times as fast as an ordinary paper balloon.

Mrs. W.F. Kelle and her little child also saw the strange light. The odd light was also seen at Vincennes last night. Dispatches from that city say it was at a great altitude and moved rapidly straight over the city. Such men as Col. M.P. Ghee, ex-Mayor Irving, Edward Watson, Thomas Eastham, Judge De Wolf, Scott Eason, Will Mason and others saw the strange aerial visitor in its nocturnal migration. Heretofore they have doubted the story of the air ship, but all now admit that seeing is believing.

Captain Smith of this city, also, thinks he heard the airship last night. The family were sitting around the fire when they heard a "buzzing" noise resembling a trolley. On going out it appeared to be up in the air, but nothing could be seen.

p.1. Very Hard to Believe / Linton--see Indpls. 1897 April 24 (Sat.) The Journal (Osgood, Ind.), p last p. 95 Apley J.1.

The Air Ship Discovered.

On Sunday night operator John Young caught a glimpse of the mysterious air ship which is sailing aloft in space with a rudder and a reckless passenger, and startling the natives who trod the soil underneath. On Monday afternoon, there being not a cloud to fleck the blue dome above, operator Beatty, of Milan, sent word to Will Kelley and agent Glendening that the albatross was circling around Milan, and that it had taken a due westerly course and was expected to be over Osgood within a few moments. Several pieces of smoked glass were broken from the windows at Mat Wymond's smokehouse to protect their eyes from the dazzling rays of the sun. Kelley rang up Wilson at Delaware, over the 'phone, to be on guard and he and Glen settled back and impatiently awaited the coming of the mystery of the present century.

They had not long to wait for Wilson excitedly exclaimed through the new telephone that it was so nearly "out of sight" there that it looked like an English sparrow or chippie bird. It was plainly seen here, and greatly resembled one of those "long John" cigars the one bus drivers, Singer and Arnold, generally present the depot force. A great many are lifted because Glen and Kelley kept the affair so quiet, but we think the aerial specter will hover around here as nothing is ever content to leave the place.

It is thought by most of the people who saw it to be the specter of ~~xxx~~ prosperity that was pictured in the Post recently, and that it will remain in thin air, self-supported in the atmosphere, until torrid weather and cyclones appear, when it will be swallowed up in the vortex and blown into space.

The first time this strange craft was ever known to land was down in Kentucky, where the lone operator stopped on terra firma near a well and drawing a bucket of water, boarded the machine and was off. In an incredible short time a dispatch told of the thing being in Omaha. / Foreman Finds It. / Special to the Journal by Wire.

Napoleon, Apr. 21.--The air ship settled on the farm of Albert Hicks, near this city at 12 noon, today. A paddle in the propeller became loose. It remained but a minute, and no one got near the object. / G. W. Foreman. 6.1. ghosts.

1897 April 26 (Mon afternoon) Logansport (Ind) D. Reporter, p. 5.

Did They See It?

Cy Graham and Harry Purcell are prepared to make affidavit that they saw the airship Saturday night as it flitted about the starry firmament. They say it beggars description and that they would not be surprised at anything after viewing the queer object of the air. Inquiry fails to show anyone else who saw the airship Saturday night, so Messrs. Graham and Purcell are unsupported in their statement.

Tues April 27, p. 3--Looked Like a Kite./That Airship Was Seen Again Sunday Night.

A drug clerk, a gent's furnishing dealer and a policeman saw the airship Sunday night as they stood at 10th and Broadway at 10:30. The drug clerk was describing its appearance to a small coterie of friends last night and after remarking upon the erratic movements of the red, white and blue lights, observed that it greatly resembled a kite. The gent's furnishing man backed up the assertions of his druggist friend till someone suggested that the compounder of medicines saw his own kite, though he does not often fly it on Sunday. Bedford, Ind, Daily Mail--Wed April 28 '97, p. 2--The best description of that mysterious nocturnal airship comes from a KC man, who says it "looked to him about as big as a beer glass."

May 6 p. 2--One swallow does not make a spring. It merely starts an airship.

The biggest and most persistent of the floating lies is the airship.

1897 April 29 (Th.) Auburn, Ind., Courier, p. 1.

Saw the Airship.

Between 8 and 9 o'clock last evening Chas. Fisher claimed to have seen the marvel of the age. It presented itself to him as having the shape of a cigar and was made visible by two green lights. At first sight it appeared to be nearing the earth, but before he could locate it again, it had vanished from his view. The sight was witnessed by a number of people from the north end.

22, p. 1. Explosion.

1897 April 29 (Th) Hancock, Ind. (wkly) Democrat, p. 1.

The Air Ship in Greenfield.

On Saturday evening last about 7:30 o'clock, several residents of East Greenfield, namely Miss Emma Stephens, Mrs. Geo. Johnson and children, and several other persons saw what is termed the air ship. It was near the filter of the Greenfield Paper Mill when they discovered it. It gradually rose to the height of about fifty feet when it sailed off to the northeast. A man could plainly be seen standing in the front in a boat-shaped basket. The air ship carried two lights, one at the head and the other at the stern. These people seen [sic] it arise from the filter and when up some distance it moved off at a very rapid gait. The people who saw the supposed airship are trustworthy and are to be believed. Two tramps who were setting [sic] on the railroad at the time seen [sic] the same thing when it passed over them, and they were so frightened that they ran up the track for some distance. There is something very strange about this supposed airship, as it has been seen in many parts of the country and no one has yet been able to get near it. The persons who saw it here described it in the shape of a boat with a house or small room in the center for the machinery. They could not see anything above it which led them to believe that it had a gas bag above it.

Mar. 25, p. 1. Venus is bright.

Th. Apr. 22, p. 4. The astronomers insist that what has been mistaken for an airship is simply the planet Venus, shining under varying atmospheric conditions. But this does not account for the wings which various veracious chroniclers insist that they saw flapping from the sides. Venus ought to behave herself better when she's out at night.

Franklin (Ind.) Democrat (wkly) April 23, 2nd section, p. 6. That mysterious object in the sky is nothing but the old ship Confidence loaded with prosperity. Now let's all keep still and see where she lights.

Hobart, Ind., Gazette. Fri. April 30, p. 8. Lake Station. Some of the Lake people have sighted the airship, or claim they have.

La Grange, Ind., Standard. Th. April 22, p. 4. Mongo.

Mongo, Apr. 19. ... Some of our citizens saw the airship Wednesday night.

Fairmount, Ind., Weekly Express News, April 30, p. 4.

Twinkle, twinkle little ship, that now doth through the heavens slip; a ad. balloon, a joke, a star--many wonder what you are.

May 7, p. 4. The latest intelligence of the movements of the air ship is that it landed in Fairmount at an early hour Monday morning last, and carried off the "citizens'" ticket.

1897 April 30 (Fri) Kentland, Ind., Courier, p. 1.

The Courier (Morocco Courier?) says that "two airships" were ~~xxxx~~ visible from Morocco one night last week, and that when last seen "they were hanging in the sky to the north-west of town, but in the course of half an hour gradually descended below the range of vision. When the people once thoroughly understand that these so-called airships are nothing more than hot-air balloons, or something similar, the subject will become a "chestnut," but not before. One cannot pick up an illustrated newspaper now-a-days without finding upon its pages a picture of an "air ship" descending into a field, while in the back ground may be seen the farmer's team leaving that locality ~~xxxx~~ at a rate of speed, which, while not as fast perhaps as the best record, is nevertheless unusually good for an ordinary farm team. If, added to the arduous task of keeping an eye out for covered cars, threshing machines and ~~xxxx~~ [?] agents, the farmer is compelled to pursue his labors with the ~~xxxx~~ unpleasant knowledge that at any moment, some devilish aerial contrivance is liable to ~~xxx~~ descend on his team and stampe it into the next township, while perhaps he himself has a leg pulled off, then his position in life is made doubly unpleasant.

1897 April 30 (Fri) White County Democrat (Monticello, Ind.), p. 1.

--Our Fair Oak correspondent gives an account of mysterious lights which have been floating over that neighborhood during the past week. The people up in that section of the country are not inclined to give much credence to the air ship theory, but rather incline to the belief that the phenomenon portends disaster of some kind. The ~~xxxx~~ Idaville Observer this week also gives an account of the same light having been seen floating northward between Burnettsville and Idaville. Within eight minutes after it was seen at Idaville it was sighted at Star City.

May 1, 1897 Indianapolis Sentinel (Sat.) p. 6

Resembles A Man

Strange Animal Seen in the Woods Near Sailor by a Farmer.

LeGrange, April 30.--The farmers living near Sailor, northwest of here, are considerably aroused over the appearance in the woods of a strange animal which resembles a man. It has been reported for the last two years that a mysterious animal was inhabiting the woods, but the reports were never credited until today, when Adam Gardner and Ed Swinchart, two well-known farmers, reported that the animal was seen and that shots were fired at it. The men report that the beast walked on its hind legs and had every appearance of a man, save the body was covered with hair. The height was that of an average-sized man. When the animal saw the men approaching it jumped and started for the thick portion of the woods upon its hind legs, but afterward dropped on its hands and disappeared with rabbit-like bounds. Gardner shot at the animal and thinks he hit it, as the animal seemed lamed. A searching party is being organized to hunt for the mysterious animal.

1897 May 3 (Sat) Logansport Daily Pharos, back p.

What It 'Tis / Robert Ray Saw a Strange Object in the Heavens. Robert Ray says that he was awakened at 1 o'clock yesterday morning to take a look at a strange object in the heavens. It appeared to be a ball of fire about as large as a cart wheel, and was moving from east to west in the northern heavens. At times it would seem no larger than a small, dim star, then burst forth again, giving off sparks like a rocket. When the brightest Robert says that it hurt his eyes to look at it.

Mon. April 26, back p.--What It Is/Kokomo Dispatch:--Allen S. Jackson, the tinner, has solved the airship mystery to his own satisfaction at least. It is not an airship at all, he says, but the long lost McKim boom of prosperity looking for a place to light."

1897 May 4 (Tue) Kokomo (Ind.) Daily Tribune, p. 8.

The Air Ship at Cassville.

The Air Car Takes Refuge in a Gravel Pit and Terrorizes the Natives of That Vicinity.

A Cassville correspondent writes:

"Mr. Edwin Shaffer saw the wonderful air ship about one-half mile west of Cassville at the Keller gravel pit Sunday night as he was driving home about 1 o'clock.

"Mr. Shaffer was driving a young horse that became frightened at the monster and could not be driven past it. As a consequence he had to turn around and go back.

"The ship was cigar shaped, forty feet long, handsomely furnished on the inside and the aerial craft was inhabited by a crew of foreign tongued midgets who spoke no English. Mr. Shaffer thinks the ship a wonderful piece of mechanism."

O. P. R.

May 13, p. 3--Rain of snakes in R. N. Y.

1897 April 24 (Sat eve.) p. 4 (Tribunes and Exchanges)

This Explains It All.

Agent of Main's circus this afternoon showed a telegram which explains the air ship talk. It is a real air ship advertising the Main circus and the ship managers were telegraphed in Clay county to land in the south part of Anderson near the circus tents, between 6 and 8 o'clock to-night.--Anderson Bulletin.

p. 7 or 8--Not an Air Ship.

Nor an air castle, but a fully demonstrated fact.... (adv. by Kokomo Loan and Savings Assoc., to save and thereby become prosperous.)

May 4--crazy about arses (Cincinnati story)

1897 May 5 (Wed.) Hartford City (Ind.) Telegram, p. 2.

Richmond Sees the Air Ship.

Several young men of Richmond who had a desire to fool the people rigged up a large kite Wednesday night and tied to the base several large Chinese lanterns so that it looked like an airship. There was a brisk wind in the evening and the kite ascended without great trouble being experienced. When it attained a height of several hundred feet the young men got into a buggy and drove northwest, holding the slender thread and of course pulling the "airship" with them.

Gas City Weekly Journal, May 14, 1897. Making Light of It.

The Tennessee airship has none of the red, green and yellow lights which lent a spectacular effect to the airship which six "reputable" men swore they saw land in a cornfield near Gas City. Nevertheless the fact is stronger than the fiction, if not so gorgeous.--Hartford City News. (April 9 issue missing.)

LaPorte Argus, Th. April 15, p. 1.

That night-sailing airship the Western papers are talking so much about has at last reached Chicago and several people have seen it. We imagine the La Porte people can see the same thing any clear night by looking to the west in the early evening. Whatever ~~xxx~~ they whether they see the airship or not will depend mainly upon what they have been drinking. The more sober they are the more likely they will be to call it Venus.

p. 4. It was very clear Sunday evening and the planet Venus was visible in the west in unusual splendor. It appeared as an airship to thousands of people, and although the story is getting old and stale the big papers have many telegraphic reports of it from all points of the country. One would suppose they papers would get tired of paying for and publishing such absurd trash.

1897 May 3 (Wed) Terre Haute Evening Gazette, p. 8.

Air Ship Seen. / Last Night About 8:30 O'clock.

"Last night," says one of the Gazette employees, who solemnly avers that the vision was not induced by strong ~~xxxx~~ coffee or mince pie. "I saw the air ship. It was first noticed by myself and friends at 8:30 and was plainly visible in the western sky for about ten minutes. It was several times larger than a star of highest magnitude, and was, in fact, nearly as large as the moon. It gave out flashes of light and slowly sank out of sight in the west.

May 8 p. 11--aerl nav article w info on Sacramento arsp.

Tues May 11 p. 3--Kite & Ar Sp. Aeronaut W.P. Dennis has 2 patent devices which he will bring out this summer. He has built ear kite & arsp; kite made to lift man w seat suspended below, & kite has windmill device to help lift, & can ascend several 100' with it, seeing enemy in time of war. The ar sp uses gas in cigar shaped balloon, w pedalled windmill device for forward motion. Has paddle wheel like a steamboat's at rear, is made of bicycle tubing, & will be said displayed in summer.

 McClure's Mag, June 97
 Th May 12 p. 1--(Cartoon--The Arap Again. Liquor bottle with corkcrew spinning from front and stem glass for-back, ashtray suspended under, carrying snake looking down:
 "Our respected citizen, Mr. Lately Lodgeman, on his way home from the club at an early hour this morning, declares he saw a strange obj in the heavens which he firmly believes was the arap. Mr. L is confined to his house today and cannot be seen.--NY Jnl.
 1897 May 6 (Th.) Louisville Evening Post, p. 8.

Saw the Airship.
 MADISON, Ind., May 6 (Special.)--Reliable officers of the steamer
 Lizzie Bay saw the airship last night, going southwest, near Hamilton, 50 miles above Madison. It was cigar shaped, with three lights, and sailing 35 miles an hour.
 Monticello, Ind., Herald, May 6, p. 1. The air ship so minutely described in last week's Idaville Observer proved to be a toy balloon sent up by some practical jokers at Burnettsville for the special purpose of exercising the Observer man's descriptive powers.
 1897 May 6 (Th) Martinsville, Ind., Republican (wkly), p.1. (card 1)

THE AIR SHIP STORY. / The Louisville Courier-Journal Almost Believed the Same Fake--The Popular Impression. /
 Last Thursday afternoon a stranger entered the Louisville Courier Journal and told a reporter that he had just returned from Evansville where he and a party of five had been on a pleasure excursion on the much talked of airship. The stranger even entered into details about the matter to the extent of saying that one of the passengers had been left at Evansville sick--that the ship was then concealed near Louisville and that he would convince the reporter of the existence of the aerial monster if he would be at a certain point in Louisville at a certain hour that night. He further stated that the party would leave Friday morning for Europe and would send a cablegram to the Courier Journal from London, Monday, May 3. The reporter kept his promise by being at the appointed place at the appointed time, but the stranger with the air ship in his eye was not there. He had probably found some other Kentuckian who was, perhaps, more liberal with the Blue Grass state's favorite drink.
 These facts would naturally impress one that the stranger in the Kentucky newspaper office was either trying to play a practical joke on a reporter, or was daft on the airship question. But reading the account given in the Courier Journal established the belief that the stranger "almost persuaded" the Courier Journal that he was telling them of something that was in existence. They made not a single statement that tended to cast doubt upon the stranger's story. They gave the facts for what they were worth, as they put it. They did not question the unbelievable speed required to carry the aerial party from Louisville to London, England, in four days and nights, in time to send a cablegram from the latter place to the former on Monday of this week.

The point of greatest interest in the whole matter is that the Courier Journal is but one of the many newspapers of the country that printed these fake airship stories and paid the correspondents for sending them in. The Courier Journal supported its failure to expresdoubt of this story by saying that several trustworthy citizens of the city had claimed to have seen the air ship. The fact that so many newspapers seemed to have so much faith in these wild stories led the Reporter to publish a story of its own on the same subject of general interest two weeks ago. That story was so labelled as to warrant any person in treating it as a "take off" on the numerous stories that had been read in other [newspapers]. The citizens of this town believed it and, when it was republished in neighboring newspapers, citizens of other counties believed it and journeyed to Wood Patch Hill to view the air ship. The fact is that too many persons believed it to allow it to be a good joke, as it was intended. The one consolation is that many persons in high places did not doubt the story of the air ship, as was the case in the Courier Journal office.
 1897 May 9 (Sun) Indianapolis Journal, p. 2. (repeated May 10, 6)

Sure It Was the Air Ship. / Special to the Indianapolis Journal.
 Seymour, Ind., May 8.--Last night about 9 o'clock the air ship, which was thought to have been seen here a short time ago by two of our truthful citizens, but which was doubted by a great many, was seen again and by so many that it cannot now be doubted. It approached our city at a rapid speed from the south. The alarm was immediately given and soon the streets were thronged with people. The night was so dark that it was impossible to see anything but the headlight.
 May 9 p. 13--Interview with Barnard
 14 Bones of sea serpent found
 May 14 p. 4 NYT down on B's arap.
 1897 May 12 (Wed.) Madison Courier (wkly), p. 2.

THE MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP. / THE COURIER HAS THE LATEST STORY. /
 Captain Charles Betrens, pilot of the Madison and Cincinnati packet Lizzie Bay, while on duty at eleven o'clock last night, when the boat was opposite Hamilton, fifty miles above this city, saw a strange sight overhead, apparently a mile or two in the air. He at once concluded it was the airship, of which the papers he papers have had so much to say late. He therefore called Captain John Hamilton, master of the boat; Lul Duprez, the second clerk, and Mate Dock Bondurant, all of whom hastened to the hurricane deck so as to get the best possible view of the object. They describe it as a cigar shaped concern, having three lights, one at each end and one in the center. It was going in a south-westerly direction, apparently with the wind, or at the rate of about thirty-five miles an hour. The officers gazed after it until it disappeared from sight. Whether or not it was the airship, which is said to be a circus advertisement, all unite in the declaration that they saw and were awe-stricken at the strange aerial traveler.

 Goshen wkly Democrat 4/21/97, p. 3: An Elkhart photographer is making the people of that town believe he has correct photographs of the air ship. And they think it is a fact, too.
 The Mail (Bedford) 4/22, p. 1. A Kentucky editor says: "The writer has been sampling all kinds of liquor lately, but so far has not been able to get hold of the air ship brand. However, as high as four moons have been visible on one or two occasions.
 1897 May 13 (Th) Terre Haute Evening Gazette, p. 2.

Kansas Snake / It Swallows Pigs and Chickens and Kills a Horse.
 Topeka, May 13.--The farming community around the town of Logan, in Phillips county, is in terror over the discovery of a huge snake that has been committing depredations there for the last few days. It was first seen last Friday on Crystal creek, and is thought to have ascended the small stream from the Solomon river during the recent freshet. A German farmer made the discovery. After losing twenty pigs, he found the trail of the reptile and followed it to the creek, where it disappeared. The next night he lost twenty more pigs, and was advised that a neighbor lost sixty chickens from the same cause.
 They instituted a search and claim to have seen the snake and shot at it, but it managed to elude them by crawling back into the water.
 On Sunday it killed a horse and the farmers reported the matter to the town people and asked help in subduing the reptile.
 A description has been forwarded here in order to determine the species to which it belongs. It is said to be fifty feet in length, green in color, with white spots on its body. It raises its head to a height of ten feet and makes a very wide track where it crawls on the ground.
 The facts in relation to the snake are furnished and vouched for by Bert P. Walker, postmaster at Logan and editor of the Logan Repub-

OHIO

1897 April 14 (Wed) Cincinnati Enquirer, p. 4. (card 1)

IN THE AIR / And on Earth as Well / Famous Airship Is Seen By Many Illinois People--Machinery Out of Order. / Special Dispatch to the Enquirer.

CARLINVILLE, ILL., April 13.--The much-heralded airship has been seen not only in its aerial flight, but on terra firma--in the northern part of this county. This city was much concerned this morning by reports coming in from various points north that a strange apparition answering to the description of the airship had appeared at different places Monday afternoon about 3 (7) o'clock. It descended in a field owned by E. Thacker, a mile north of Millwood. Three men--Wm. Street, Ed Tupper and Frank Metcalf--say that they saw it. After a period of 45 minutes

IT SAILED NORTH.

The next notice taken of it was at Green Ridge, a little mining camp, where a large crowd of people saw it settle a mile north in a grove. They hastened to investigate, but as they got within a half mile it again rose and continued its northward journey. The C. and A. night operator, who was hunting near by, was close enough to discover a human being working about the machine as if tightening some loosened machinery. The spectators say it was shaped like a boat with oars extending on each side and a top similar to the CANOPY OF A MACHIN BOOTH.

It passed over the town of Sherman about 8 o'clock at the rate of 35 miles an hour, and was last seen about 9:45 flying over Williamsville north toward Peoria. The operators along the C. and A. kept a close watch of its direction and speed. The fact that it alighted twice in such small intervals of space leads to the supposition that the machinery was in some manner incapacitated. The whole country is greatly exercised over the event. /

MUNCIE SPEAKS UP. / SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER.

MUNCIE, IND., April 13.--Sylvester Oran (?), a resident of Avondal a suburb of this city, claims to have seen the mysterious airship this morning about 3 o'clock. He was called to go for a doctor, and on leaving his home he says his eyes were attracted by a bright light in the heavens. It moved swiftly from north to south, going at a great speed and vanishing in a few seconds. He bears a good reputation for veracity, and his story is believed. /
 Seen at Manchester. / SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER.

WABASH, IND. April 13.--The report came from North Manchester last night that what appeared to be an airship floated lazily over that place at a height of a quarter of a mile last evening. Several persons claim to have seen the headlight and watched the dark mass until it disappeared. The description of the machine corresponds with that given by the Western people who assert they have seen it.
 1897 April 15 (Th Morn) Cincinnati Enquirer, p. 1. (card 1)

SIX MEN / Seen In the Airship / As it Sailed Over Marion in Daylight.
 Alighted Near Gas City, But Again Ascended Before It Could Be Apprehended. / SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER.

MARION, IND., April 14.--The much-talked-of air ship passed over Marion this afternoon about () o'clock about six miles to the south and apparently about a mile from the earth. It came from the northwest and veered around to the east. It appeared to be a cigar or boat shaped body with large wings. Six passengers were aboard.
 Strong telescopes made the color of the body visible and reliable citizens declare that it was of a brown cast, and that the wings were white. About 7 o'clock this evening an object carrying a large light, apparently that of a headlight, was seen passing over Marion, coming from the east and bearing off to the northwest.

Prof. Alva Graves, Principal of the High school, with W.H. Sanders, editor of the Chronicle; Howard Roose, city editor of the Morning News; H.M. Elliott, an attorney, and your correspondent, went to the High school Observatory, where they have a telescope of the finest make, but when the telescope was placed in position the object had passed behind a bank of clouds, and could not be seen. / IN DAYLIGHT The Queer Machine Seen To Land Near Gas City. / SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER.

GAS CITY, IND., April 14.--About 3 o'clock this afternoon hundreds of the inhabitants of this city were amazed and startled upon looking into the heavens to see approaching from a northwesterly course what appeared to be an immense bird. As it approached it came nearer the earth, and the outlines of the flyer could be distinctly seen. It was in the shape of a cigar, and was propelled by broad canvas wings.

People rushed to the point where they thought it would land, but all were fooled. The airship, as it proved to be, lighted in a field on Roush(?) farm, ~~but the navigators~~ about one mile east of this city. Cattle and horses were terrified, and consternation reigned supreme. A rush was made for the Roush farm, but the navigators of the monster anticipated the move, and before the crowds reached the farm the mysterious airship was again in the air, going in an easterly direction.

Some of the best business men will vouch for having seen the ship, among them L.V. Seybrant and D.E. Conroy, of the Mississinawa Hotel; W.H. (Cut 1e), W.P. Carthwait, G.W. Villars, D.W. Cox, William M. Dunlap and others. /

ANDERSON PEOPLE / Claim to Have Seen the Strange Flying Machine Recently. / Special to the Enquirer.

ANDERSON, IND., April 14.--Fifteen or twenty Andersonians of good reputation claim to have seen the real thing in the airship line last night. It was hovering over the city, and those who saw it say there could be no further doubting. They were in the west part of the city. Ladies were called out, and the party watched the strange electric light until it disappeared in the northern mist. Parties in another section of the city, among them Deputy Clerk Pulton, state that they saw it early Friday evening.

1897 April 16 (Fri.) Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, p. 1. (card 1)

AIR SHIP CAUGHT IN CINCINNATI. / It Is Photographed for the Commercial Tribune. / ON EXHIBITION TODAY. / Old Trick of the Camera Explains the Hoax. / OTHER PICTURES TAKEN. / A National Joke That Is Growing Old. / SHIP'S TRAVELS YESTERDAY. / Seen in Illinois, Michigan and Lake Erie, in Towns Hundreds of Miles Apart. /

The airship has arrived in Cincinnati. It was photographed for the Commercial Tribune while in full flight, and is at this identical moment in the Commercial Tribune counting room, where anyone who wishes to look at it may do so.

The airship in the Commercial Tribune counting room may not be the only one on earth, but is as real as that which has been seen in so many different parts of the country by so many different people who do not own telescopes. It is a matter of record that not a single astronomer has seen the navigator of the air.

The correspondents of the country have shown a wonderful lack of cooperation. On one day the ship was sighted at Topeka, Kans., at Cartersville, Ill., and at Muncie, Ind., at about the same hour.

Photographs ad lib. have been obtained and exhibited as proof that the airship really had been seen.

The joke was getting a bit stale, so the Commercial Tribune decided to try a little camera manipulating itself.

The Wiley Camera.

For ways that are dark, and tricks that are vain, the photograph camera is peculiar. It can give a man any number of leads, can make him face himself, stand on his own head and perform a thousand curious feats, all by the simple changing of the focus, or the position of the camera.

The Commercial Tribune has a photograph of the airship. It is a genuine photograph, and copies of it may be seen on exhibition in the Commercial Tribune counting room. The negative has not been changed or touched in the slightest degree and it is a bona fide photograph of a real airship. The only apparent deception is that of distance. The airship looks as if it were a mile or two up in the air, whereas it was at the time of taking of the photograph just eight feet and six inches from the earth by actual measurement.

How It Was Done.

Two pieces of cardboard were cut out in accordance with the popular idea of an airship. These two bits of cardboard were fastened together by a bit of slate colored silk, which makes no impression on the photographic plate. The cardboard was rubbed with a lead pencil to dull its color, and the whole contrivance was hung by a bit of slate-colored silk to the end of a broomstick, about eight feet in the air and about the same distance from the camera.

Taking the Photograph.

The camera was pointed upward toward the sky so as to throw the top of the building next door (Col. Nelson's residence in Newport) well toward the bottom of the plate. At the same time the airship was swung into position so as to be against the background of the sky. With that infinite depth behind it, it looked as if it might be well up toward the sun. An exposure of a fraction of a second over the usual time was allowed for the ~~xxxx~~ vibration of the airship, so as to give the indistinct appearance that is noticed about any object at a great ~~xxx~~ height. By the simple shifting of the camera the airship could have been shown at any altitude desired by the photographer.

A Fine Negative.

The negative thus obtained is absolutely true. There is no retouching, no "doctoring" nor putting in of figures. Any photographer might have developed the plate, and the same picture, as reproduced above, would have been secured.

191

The process used is just the reverse of that employed by the truthful fisherman to prove the stories he tells of six-foot fish he has caught. In the case of the truthful fisherman the fish is placed a few feet in front of the camera by a colorless thread. The truthful fisherman stands ~~xxxx~~ about 15 feet to the rear, with his arm outstretched behind the minnow's head. When the photograph is developed the six-inch fish looks as big as the six-foot man. / Aeronauts Go Fishing.

The Mysterious Ship Found Anchored in Lake Erie. / Special Dispatch to Commercial Tribune.

Cleveland, O., April 15.--S.H. Davis, of Detroit, was in Cleveland today. He says he was out on his fish tug, the Sea Wing, Wednesday, headed for Cleveland Harbor, about 15 miles from the piers. The fisherman noticed a queer-looking boat about two miles away. Capt. Joseph Singler, master of the tug, and Mr. Davis agreed in the statement that it appeared to be about 40 feet in length. It had a cabin covering about one-fourth of the deck surface. A man dressed in a checked hunting suit and wearing a long, peaked cap, was fishing from the boat. He was apparently about 25 years of age. A woman sat at his side. A boy of about ten years sat at her feet.

As the Sea Wing neared the curious craft, to the amazement of those on the tug, a gaily decorated object which had been lying on a framework over the boat, was slowly inflated, and rose to the length of the ropes by which it was attached to the boat. It was a balloon, cylinder shaped, about 50 feet long. Slowly the boat rose into the air until it stood directly over the tug, about 500 feet from the water. It circled like a hawk for several minutes. Suddenly there was a splash in the water. A large swordfish had been dropped from the airship. The fish was stunned by its fall, and was picked up by Capt. Singler, and is now on exhibition in a tank at the fire tug, Cleveland, O.

After moving aimlessly about for a short time a sail was dropped from the air-ship, and then mysterious people were carried away by the high ~~xxx~~ wind.

Mr. Davis said the boat had a wheel similar to those on steamers. This, it is stated, acts as a propeller in the air, as well as on ~~xxxx~~ water. /

AIRSHIP'S TRAVELS. / Seen All Over Illinois and in Michigan. / Special Dispatch to the Commercial Tribune.

Carlyle, Ill., Apr. 15.--The airship was seen here tonight, going rapidly in a northeasterly course. It showed a number of red lights. / Special Dispatch....

St. Vernon, Ill., Apr. 15.--What is thought to be the mysterious airship was seen here last night by a hundred persons. Mayor Wells said it resembled the body of a huge man swimming through the air, with an electric light on his back. / Special Dispatch....

South Haven, Mich., Apr. 15.--The airship passed here last evening headed westward. It was cigar-shaped, and moved with remarkable speed. / Special Dispatch....

Hillsboro, O., Apr. 15.--A number of reputable citizens saw the airship here last night about 10:30 o'clock. Red lights were plainly visible. / 18, p. 16. How does a man feel the next morning after he has seen an airship, anyway?

A frightful drought is threatened in the West. The air is so full of airships that it can't rain.

20,4. The airship is now playing one-night stands in Minn., but has open dates after next Saturday.

If the arap keeps this up, the sea serp will register a loud & prolonged kick.

Isn't it about time for those people in the arap to come down and take a bath?

1897 April 16 (Fri.) Cincinnati Enquirer, p. 1 (card 1)

TALKING / Heard By the Citizens / As the Airship Passed Over Dunkirk --Seen at Casstown and Other Places. / SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER.

DUNKIRK, OHIO, April 15.--An airship passed over this place about 4 o'clock this morning. It is supposed to be the same one which was seen in Marion, Ind., yesterday evening. It was going in an easterly direction, and when at the eastern part of the city it was within 300 feet of the ground.

It was seen by Willis Mahon, the Marshal, railroad tower man and several prominent citizens. When passing over these gentlemen they could hear several men in the airship talking very loud, but could not distinguish what they were saying. From what could be seen it resembled a wagon bed with large wings extending on either side, and looked to be large enough to hold at least a dozen men. / FARMER SCARED / When the Air King Sailed Over to Jig Time. / SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER.

CASSTOWN, OHIO, April 15.--This morning James McKenzie, a well-known farmer living about a mile north of here, came to town with a startling story about the airship. Mr. McKenzie is entirely responsible. His story is that about 8 o'clock last night, while engaged in feeding his hogs, he was startled by a strange noise not unlike the passage of a flock of geese. Upon looking up, he further says, he saw what at first appeared to be a huge bird headed in a southwesterly direction.

He distinctly saw the wing-like object by which the supposed airship propelled itself through the air, and noticed what appeared to be a large rudder. The ship was moving quite leisurely, and Mr. McKenzie avers that a sound like that of distant music accompanied it. The object was ~~xxx~~ not more than 150 feet from the earth, and but for the gathering dusk he believes he could have seen its tenants.

One of his neighbors heard the strange sounds at the same time, but did not get to see the great modern air bird. As the farmer had not read anything about the alleged airship said to be travelling through space, he was on the lookout for nothing of the kind, and now since he has heard of the airship, he is of the opinion that it was the object he saw last night over his farm.

As the thing disappeared he says he heard a sound very much like a human voice, and something large and white seemed to leave the ship. A party will leave this village to-day to look for the supposed message which is expected, if found, to reveal the identity of the air king and its people. / Seen in Portland.

PORTLAND, IND., April 15.--Several citizens claim that the mysterious airship passed over Portland last night, and that the lights were plainly discernible. Some claim to be able to give in general its outlines, and their description is in accordance with that which has been telegraphed from a number of places. 1897 April 17 (Sat) Cincinnati Enquirer, p1 (card 1)

STRANGER / Seen in the Heavens. / Many Responsible People Declare It an Airship--The Whole Country is Excited. 7 SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER.

Bloomington, Ill., April 16.--A number of reports of airships seen this evening have been received, and are occasioning much wonderment in Bloomington. The telegraph operators at Rankin and Arrowsmith Stations on the Lake Erie and Western Railway, east of Bloomington, reported about 7:30 p.m. that about dark an airship had hovered over the town and set out in the direction of Bloomington. Soon after this the crew of an Illinois Central train from the north arrived in the city. Conductor William Wamsley, E.M. Carter, Superintendent of Bridges, and Mr. Adamson, Chief of the Illinois Central, reported that while the train was at Woodford Station, near Minton (?), about 8 o'clock, they saw an airship at great altitude and going west or north-west.

A few minutes later a passenger train of the Illinois Central arrived from Chicago. The mail agent on the train, J.P.W. Eson, of Bloomington, and William Black, train baggage man, asserted that they saw a gigantic aerial boat sailing westward while they were between Barnes and Marna Station in this (McLean) county. Others on the train declared that they also saw the airship. It was flat, of apparently perpendicular form, and carried red and white lights. Robert Hitch and family, who live three miles south of Elpaso, saw an airship in the heavens between 8 and 9 p.m. yesterday.

UNQUESTIONED / Is the Veracity of Those Who Saw the Mystery. / SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER.

Vincennes, Ind., April 16.--More than a score of citizens of unquestioned veracity saw some strange body passing over the city early this evening, which they think was the mysterious airship. It was at a great altitude and moved rapidly in a southeasterly direction, straight over the city.

Such men as Colonel M.P. Chee, ex-Mayor Ewing, Edwin Watson, Thomas Eastham, Judge DeWolf, Scott Emison, Will Mason, and others, saw the strange aerial visitor in ~~the~~ its nocturnal migration. Heretofore they have doubted the story of the airship, but all now admit that seeing is believing.

/PROF. BALDWIN / Says Venus Distorted May Explain the Heavenly Mystery. / SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER.

Cairo, Ill., April 16.--The famous airship made its appearance this evening about 8:30 over the western horizon, and was seen by scores of people. Its description corresponds with that given from a number of places.

Prof. Baldwin, the Arctic explorer, now connected with the Weather Bureau, watched it attentively, and discovered that it was the planet Venus. The air strata and smoke over its face as it hung a few degrees above the horizon distorted its appearance, and as it set it appeared to slowly float away. Prof. Baldwin believes this to be the original airship that has been so much talked about. / A Signed Statement. / SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER.

Birmingham, Iowa, April 16.--W.H. Walters, a respectable citizen of this place, has published a statement over his own signature, claiming to have seen the airship light in a field one mile from town. He saw two men in the car.

April 14, 1897 Cincinnati Commercial Tribune (Sun.) p. 20 (card 1)

Was Plainly Seen
The Airship Attracts Widespread Attention.
Takes Peculiar Forms
As It Is Observed from Many Standpoints.
That It Was Picturesque
And Grotesquely Weird All Agree--How the New Fad Appeared to Many Cincinnatians.

The flying machine has passed over Cincinnati. This startling statement will come as a surprise to possibly 200,000 of the Queen City's sleepy inhabitants; but the other 200,000 will be glad to testify that last night between 12 and 1 o'clock the strange aerial boat which has become famous of late, was seen passing over the city. Most of them saw it, or something strange in the sky, and from the best authority obtainable, the Commercial Tribune prints this morning full descriptions of the new wonder that is startling the continent.

As the sun went down Thursday evening and the busy city prepared to enjoy itself for a few hours before taking its nightly rest, nothing seemed to indicate to the thousands of human beings who have read of the weird western visitor, that it would pass that very night over the Queen City, and that the trip would be witnessed by thousands of men and women. Unlike the city's other distinguished visitor, W. J. Bryan, the vessel did not stop off and take supper. It is not a candidate for anything, it may be said in passing, save popularity and the free coinage of gas.

Felt It In the Air.
Later in the evening several people who are in the habit of having premonitions, declared that they felt that things were going to happen and some went to their homes in order to avoid their creditors in case an earthquake threw them together in an indiscriminate mass. Their predictions came true at precisely 12:36 by the City Hall clock, which had gone to sleep an hour earlier.

Several days ago the flying machine was "spoken" near Sandusky, and it was observed then that she was headed for Cincinnati, with a look of get-there-or-bust in her electric eye. She got there. And it did not bust.

Suddenly there appeared in the clear, quiet sky a small, brilliant light, moving at a rapid rate toward the south, and flying about half mile above the level of the Ohio. It increased in size, and, almost before the astonished onlookers could determine what they were gazing upon, it passed over the city, its great wings flapping silently in the air, its speed at least thirty miles an hour, and the sound from a triple expansion engine came from its vitals. As the thunderstruck and excited Cincinnatians looked up they all heard voices above them, and laughter and songs were also wafted down to the inhabitants. Then the great ship of the air was gone.

A number of well-known citizens were interviewed in the latest improved style early this morning, concerning the vessel, and although their descriptions differ somewhat, it is evident that they all saw something unusual in the sky last night.

"I was just about to turn in," said Mr. Toots Jordan, "and was looking at the evening star 'ere I dived into the bed, when my attention was attracted to a most remarkable thing which was sailing over Clifton in a southwesterly direction. As it came closer I saw it was a cigar-shaped affair, with a long, tapering Havana filler rudder. A man was encased in the shell, his arms and legs hanging out, the latter working a propeller by means of a bicycle attachment. He held a lantern in one hand and seemed to be afraid that he would not reach his destination on time." Before I could hail him he was out of sight. His lantern showed eighteen different color lights. I counted that many before the thing got away from me. It was a thrilling sight."

Tom Logan, the tailor man, is also one of the prominent Cincinnatians who insists that he saw the airship. As to the time Tom says it is not--time never cut any figure with him anyhow. He declares he saw it what at first he supposed to be a balloon sailing over the Gibson house. Upon closer observation the thing took on the form of an immense tailor's goose, to which was attached an apparatus at one end much resembling a revolving feather duster while at the other was a large pair of scissors, which seemed to cut an opening through the air for the flying what-is-it. Tom was looking for somebody yesterday to tell about his remarkable discovery, when he stumbled in to a Commercial Tribune reporter. To the latter he agreed to say not a word for fear that the great airship "scoop" would be spoiled.

Mr. Tom Sherlock also witnessed the flight of the stranger, but his idea of its shape and size was radically different from Mr. Jordan although seen almost from the same view.

"To a sausage-shaped balloon," said he, "was hung a most peculiar affair. I never saw anything like it before. It was a twisted, tapering pipe, with a beak or bill as long as one my friend, Judge Baker, once presented Dr. Wise, of Covington, for some legal advice--you will remember it. In the handle of this peculiar vessel sat a man holding on for dear life to a rudder, and steering the thing through the atmosphere. As the machine passed overhead a horrible squeak issued from its mouth, as if all the steam in the city were escaping through it. I hastily grabbed a field glass, and with its aid was able to read, printed in large sea-green letters on the side of the sausage-shaped balloon the word "Canis," which is Latin, I believe. It was a rather strange experience, and I own I was unnerved for an hour after. It was exact 12:37 when the ship passed in the night."

Now, who would have thought it? Colonel Rud Wilhelm Gruber also declares unhesitatingly and without reservation that he saw the airship it was precisely 12:36 a.m. He is positive as to the time, because that is the exact minute on April 16 that the light in his 10 3/4-carat diamond is scheduled to go out, and it had just ceased to flicker. The Colonel had been over to spend the evening with his friend "Norry" Moses, and was on his way to his new home on Lexington avenue, Avondale when he was attracted by something startlingly unusual in the sky. It appeared to be a volume of white, fleecy clouds cutting up all sorts of didoes. The peculiar thing seemed to come directly toward the Colonel, who stood as if transfixed gazing upon what he thought to be an apparition. It came so close that its outlines could be easily discerned. There was no doubt as to what it was. The Colonel had seen it before, and ought to know. It was nothing more nor less than an up-to-date skirt dancer in all its glory out for sport. But it had wings made of twenty-dollar bills, which it used in its most wonderful gyrations through the air. It did a combination of hootchy-cootchy and waltz dancing that simply stunned the Colonel. And as he was figuring on what Jim Fennessy would give for such an attraction the gauzy thing rose majestically into the air and sailed away over Louie Prixione's house. And then the Colonel looked for the keyhole in the front door of his brand new residence.

A Strange Visitor Indeed.

At 12:36 3/4 Hr. Stanley Ferguson declares he observed the nocturnal visitor, and his description of the affair is even more vivid than the others.

"I saw it plainly, as if it was broad daylight," said he, when asked about the matter. "It was nothing more nor less than a huge lobster, bigger than 10,000 Fitzsimmons, and with eyes like a dragon. I counted 25 people astride the thing's back, and they all sang topical songs as they buzzed through the air. The flying apparatus was a wonderful contrivance, too complicated to describe. A grind organ, to which was attached a monkey, made music also. I called up to them 'Just tell them that you saw me,' and they shouted back, 'There'll come a time some day,' then the machine disappeared. I think it was made of rubber, glue and asphalt. It looked like it."

Doorkeeper Robert Archibald probably had the best view of the monster affair. And, as there was no session on 'Change yesterday, he came all the way in from Oakley to tell about it. Bob is president of a building association that meets every Thursday evening in Madisonville. It was on his return from the meeting Thursday night that he saw what at first he took to be some terrible phenomenon. The meeting had lasted a trifle later than usual, and it was well toward midnight when he started to drive home. He first heard a peculiar churning sound in the air, and then he saw a bright light in the heavens. Greatly alarmed, he looked up and could plainly see the outlines of the airship. It had large paddles that were revolving rapidly, like wings, and which had caused the peculiar sound he heard. Its motion seemed to be directed by a pair of paddles in the rear, and altogether, Bob says, it more resembled a large bird than anything else he can think of.

Thought of Footpads.

O. G. Fetter thinks he saw the remarkable heavenly body about half an hour later almost directly over his home in Maplewood. To him it looked like a giant man swimming through the air, and with great electric lights for eyes. He was much alarmed at first, for there have been a number of holdups out in Hillcreek Valley of late. Mr. Fetter himself was a contemplated victim, but he bested the two villains who attacked him. He at once came to the conclusion, Thursday night, that he was to be the victim of another attack, but from a source that rendered assistance out of the question. He realized that his good right arm was of no avail in combatting this heavenly footpad, and was almost paralyzed when it occurred to him that this was probably the mysterious airship he had been reading about.

William Marret, the coal man and erstwhile president of the Zoological Society, probably had the most peculiar impressions, however. He had been out a trifle later than usual, attending some social function, and was hastening home, with a mind at peace with all the world, when he heard strange noises coming out of the north, as of a myriad of wings beating the blue ozone of heaven, and mingled with it creakings and groanings. Looking upward, he described a bright light in the sky. As he looked intently he saw beyond the bright light the outlines of what resembled an immense tugboat, but with great wheels on the sides instead of at the stern. The rudder, too, was unlike any he had ever seen. He was overcome with surprise, and his mind became so confused that he imagined the birds and animals at the Zoo had formed a combination, turned the carnivora into an air boat, stolen the electric light plant and started out on a tour of the world. The object was still in view when he entered his home, and he was able to sleep but little for wondering what it was. Not until he read the account of the presence of the wonderful airship did it occur to him what he had seen the night before.

Gave Warts the Blues.

"Imagine, if you can, a huge champagne bottle as big as a house," said Walter Cameron, in describing his view on Price Hill of the strange vessel, "with wings as big as those of a good theatrical angel and swinging below it a huge basket. That is what the flying machine is like, I tell you. It passed within fifty feet of my head, and I felt its hot breath upon my brow. It was exactly 12:34 when the thing slid over the city. Yes, I am quite sure of the time. It gave me the blues, that flying machine did, for I wanted to invent it myself."

Passenger Traffic Manager D. S. Edwards, of the C. H. & D., when questioned about the airship mystery, gave a strange story. He has a way of getting up at his Walnut Hills mansion with the sun, and puts in an hour or so while breakfast is preparing in sprinkling his lawn. He says that yesterday morning he was out and was struck with something that seemed to be floating in midair.

"I thought it was a cloud," said he, "and did not pay much attention to the object, but after reading the Commercial Tribune this morning, I jumped at the conclusion that I had spied the airship of which we have heard so much."

Assistant General Passenger agent Warren J. Lynch, of the Big Four, said that two or three of the men connected with the passenger office volunteered the statement that they had noticed something unusual in the heavens yesterday morning, but gave the latter little attention until a discussion arose later in the day, and then all came to the conclusion that they had seen something of the mysterious air monster that has been attracting so much curiosity everywhere during the past few days.

A Tremendous Tray.

Judge Joel Baker, of Covington, was the only witness across the river who could state what he saw, and that was because he happened to be on this side when the vessel passed.

"It was shaped exactly like a tray," said he. "An oval, flat affair, with wings out every few feet, all flopping at once. There was a steam calliope aboard, and some one was doing a song and dance. I thought I was dreaming at first, until a railroad sandwich was dropped overboard and blinded my eye. It was the biggest tray I ever saw. No walter alive could have carried it. It was 35 minutes after 12 when I observed the flight of the aerial navigator."

Passenger Traffic Manager E. O. McCormick, of the Big Four Railroad, yesterday morning blew in from Gotham on the Southwestern Limited. With him was General Manager C. B. Schaff, who went out into Indiana to look after a bridge. Mr. McCormick, while in the east, says that he read the stories of the strange airship's appearance in the clouds, and he did not believe that there was anything tangible in the reports until he awoke yesterday morning. He says that he was standing on the rear platform of the last car of his train looking out over the country. Something possessed him to look up over the heavens and he saw a queer-looking object floating apparently a mile or so high.

"I looked at the object closely, but was unable to make much of what I saw. I rubbed my eyes and was still uncertain. To satisfy myself I went back into the car and got out a pair of opera glasses I had bought in New York. I drilled these glasses on the object and was astonished, for revealed to me in clear outlines was a moving ship with huge wings of fans. The ship was no doubt moving, but I could not see any one. I called Mr. Schaff's attention to the matter, but he only ridiculed me and refused to investigate. It may be that my head was turned by the Dave Martin dinners, but I swear my life on what I saw being an airship of some description. The ship must be travelling very rapidly to cover the distance it does in so short a time."

Bancroft's Story.

While the stars were blinking in the sky which roofs the select suburb, Norwood, Frank Caligula Bancroft stopped poring over the schedule and figuring how he could give 18 players a lower berth in a sleeping car which contained only 12, and worrying about the milk bill due on Monday, and commenced humming that old ballad: "Where Is My Dog Tonight," when he chanced to look through the hall window, in which the blinds were not drawn. The hired help had taken the curtains down to be laundered, and Bancroft had tacked an old newspaper only over the lower frame in order to screen himself from the public gaze.

These preliminaries give an idea of the clear, unobstructed view of the heavens afforded through the upper sash. Bancroft was trying to figure on the location of the Big Dipper while looking out of the south window, when he suddenly noticed a long, oblong body floating through space. He stopped thinking of the dog and antitobacco testimonials flashed through his mind.

The object grew larger, and by the time Bancroft had stepped to the veranda he noticed that it was an airship. The machine was headed directly for his lot, and, becoming alarmed, the baseball manager lighted a lantern, drew over the globe the leg of a red stocking of some big game player's uniform, and, standing close to his coop of high-priced but nonlaying chickens, he waved the danger signal frantically. Two blocks away the midnight trolley car stopped with a crunch, but the airship sailed on and on. The engineer of the aerial motor cast anchor in a neighboring tree, and, after inquiring if the spare man in the gray moustache and shirt sleeves would blaze the way to the house of one F. C. Bancroft, the baseball man replied that he would sign the pledge at once, if the stranger would only take the thing away. Promise of Sunshine.

But it was a peace mission which brought the strange navigator. He came direct from the Agricultural Department at Washington, and was sent by Chief Weather Man Willis Moore. Moore apologized for the speck of bad weather, and explained that it was all due to an inferior Democratic clerk, who mixed up the Ohio Valley and New England orders—the Buckeyes rain and the Puritans sunshine. Even civil service will not save the clerk, the airship man explained, and future entertainers at the Cincinnati Ball Park will not have to be taken with "water on the side."

All Norwood, and as far in as O'Bryonville and as far out as "Ar Duffy's and Oakley, are talking about the airship this morning.

When "Duck" Baving went out late Thursday night to take a look at the sky, to see if rain threatened to stop another game, he noticed, far away to the east, a queer, cigar-shaped object high up in the air. At first he thought that it was a sunspot, left over from the day, for sunspots are always numerous during a season of protracted humidity. The object became larger and, after watching it for a while, Baving looked at it through a pop-bottle. With the aid of this lens he soon discovered that it was an airship. Five minutes later he could discover the outlines of a man steering the contrivance, and then he noticed a trunk, on which was printed in large letters:

"T. CORCORAN, New Haven, Conn."

Hastily calling Tommy up by long distance 'phone, the Reds' captain was delighted to learn that the recalcitrant shortstop had suddenly determined to sign a contract when he discovered that the salary term had started. Being anxious to join the team as quickly as possible, he had embarked on an airship which had just been perfected by a New Haven genius who made a fortune in wooden nutmegs and dissipated it seeking to discover perpetual motion. Failure drove him to despair, and while his reason was tottering he contrived to dodge the madhouse long enough to build an airship. Tommy discovered the invention while chasing a fly ball for a New Haven amateur club which had dropped down the chimney of the inventor's workshop.

Soared Over Columbus.

Seen Just Below the Clouds in the Early Morning.

Special Dispatch to the Commercial Tribune.

Columbus, Ohio, April 17.—The airship has struck Columbus. It was soaring high above the city just under the clouds, and it had two or three red lights.

1897 April 18 (Sun morn) Cleveland Plain-Dealer, p. 1.

THAT AIRSHIP AGAIN. / This Time It Is Seen by Some Upper Sandusky Young Men Who Were Going Home Early in the Morning. / -Special to the Plain Dealer.

UPPER SANDUSKY, April 17.--What appeared to be an airship of huge dimensions was observed by E.T. Kenan, clerk in Supervisor Shineman's office, at an early hour this morning.

Mr. Kenan, with a party of other young gentlemen in this city, attended a country dance and were on their way home. One of the party on looking to the northwest at a shooting star was thrilled by the sight of a brilliant object in the heavens. The party was alarmed at the sight. Finally Mr. Kenan suggested an airship and the party at once felt at ease.

The object was watched for fully half an hour as it seemed to gradually approach them. When it got near enough the lights were of very bright purple, yellow and green. The night was rather cloudily, but by the time the young men reached town the moon was shining and the outline of the huge airship could be traced. It was about forty feet in length, of the shape of an auger and had huge wings like a sixteenth century windmill. At one time it made a dive to the earth, but soon recovered itself and passed to the north and was soon lost in the darkness. It is the talk of the town today and but for the young men's standing in the community would not be believed.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Cincinnati Enquirer, p. 5.

TALKED / With the Airship Man, But He Would Not Answer Them--Latest Chronicle. / SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER.

Lexington, Ky., April 18.--George Alverson, a butcher, and Alex Oxford and Charley Hunter, railroad men, claim to have seen the much heralded airship and to have conversed with its lone occupant. They say that they were walking on Manchester street, near the Cincinnati Southern trestle, last night, when they were startled by a strange whirling noise overhead. It was near 9 o'clock. Through the darkness the machine made a rush earthward, settling in a vacant lot about 200 yards from where they stood. They hurried toward the vehicle of the clouds, but were met by a stranger some 40 years old. He had just emerged from the machine and had in his hand a bucket, which he filled with water from the springs nearby where his machine rested in the blue grass. Supplied with water, he reentered the car, and I, declining to answer any of the questions put to him by the three men, he sailed away in the direction of Richmond. Alverson describes the machine as looking like a large winged spider. The body was cigar shaped and had a dull lead color. The three men are reputable citizens, and their stories were so generally believed as to cause those who heard them last night to sit up later than usual, hoping that the airship might return. / BOTH SAW IT. / And Both Are Certain That It Was an Airship. / SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER.

Paducah, Ky., April 18.--Mr. George Langstaff, Jr., member of the firm of Langstaff & Orme, lumber dealers, and one of the most prominent men in the city, stated to The Enquirer correspondent that he and his wife and Mr. Isaac Quigley, one of the best known lawyers in the state saw the airship last night at 9:30. Editor Starks, of the Metropolis (Ill.) Journal has also written a description for The Enquirer correspondent of the ship which he saw last night an hour later below Metropolis. Both are gentlemen of unquestioned xxx integrity and both say that by no possibility could it have been a star.

April 20, 1897 Cincinnati Commercial Tribune (Tues.) p. 2

Hovered Over the Town Citizens of Cochransville, Ohio, Make Affidavit That They Saw an Airship. / Special Dispatch to the Commercial Tribune.

Sistersville, W. Va., April 19.--Since the newspapers have been chronicling the movements of a mysterious airship the people of the old metropolis have been watching for it. Tonight about 9 o'clock a mysterious light was seen approaching from the northwest, gliding along until directly over Cochransville, Ohio, when it slackened speed and rested, flashing lights, red, white and green.

An examination with strong glasses left the impression of a huge cone-shaped arrangement 100 feet long, with large fins on either side. The lights seemed to be in only the one end.

After standing twenty minutes, it floated away to the southwest.

1897 April 23 (Fri eve) D. Sentinel, Bowling Green, O., p. 1.

Speck Has 'Em Too.

It is certainly no fake, but a grand reality. The various reports hailing from San Francisco, Cal., St. Louis, Mo., Detroit, Mich. and other places of the appearance of the air ship visitor, is farther confirmed by its appearance in the vicinity of Pemberville, having been seen on last Thursday night at about 11 o'clock, by a company of young people returning from a party. It did not appear to be at a xxx very great altitude, as its general outline was plainly visible, xxx having the shape of a short, heavy cigar. An exceedingly brilliant light, like the improved headlight of a locomotive, illuminated the anterior portions of it.

The beholders were struck with majestic awe at the graceful, moving vonder, and this awe was intensified into breathless, reverential silence when the suddenly far distant notes of a cornet could be distinctly heard emanating from this--one of the greatest wonders of the 19th century. The ship moved to the southeast and was visible about 15 minutes and was then lost sight of, disappearing amid the clouds.--Pemberville Leader.

1897 April 25 (Sun) Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, p. 10. (card 1)

No Mistake This Time / Reputable People See the Airship. / Was Probably a Balloon, But It Dropped Mr. Remme a Message. //

The airship that has visited several states and has startled people all over the country passed over Newport, Ky., Friday night at 8:30 o'clock, and was plainly seen, so declare several reputable citizens. Not only was the ship plainly seen, but its passengers communicated with the citizens, a message being dropped from the clouds and found in the rear yard of Mr. Charles Remme's residence, at 22 West 3rd street. The message was written on a small linen bag, which was filled with sand, and was as follows:

"Airship Pegasus, April 23, 8:30 p.m.--Passed over Newport, Ky., at 8:25 p.m., travelling at the rate of 40 miles an hour, due west. Aerometer recorded 200 miles since 4:30 p.m. Expect to arrive at Nashville, Tenn. at 3 a.m. Sunday.

"CAPTAIN PEGASUS."

The message was displayed yesterday on the streets of Newport by Mr. Remme, who is a manufacturing jeweler and a brother of Cashier

Edward Remme, of the German National Bank. Mrs. G.T. Pilling, of 20 West 3rd street, stated that she was sitting on her front porch Friday evening when she saw a light in the west that seemed to be moving about but she thought nothing about it until it began coming nearer. She says she watched it until it passed over her house; that once or twice she started in the house to get a pair of large field glasses, but she was afraid it would be gone before she could get back. She stated it was the shape of a cigar and was very long.

Mr. Ezra Van Duzen stated that he saw the light coming from the west, but did not suppose that it was an airship, but kept watching it until it came near enough to be seen very distinctly. He then called for Mrs. Remme and her daughter, Miss Lucy Remme. They, too, with Mr. Van Duzen, watched the light until it disappeared over their house, when they ran through to the rear yard to again watch it. Just as he got into the rear yard they heard something heavy drop near them, but in the darkness they could not see what it was, but spoke of it among themselves. The statement made by Mrs. Pilling and Mr. Van Duzen was corroborated by several other persons. Mrs. Remme arose early yesterday morning, and remembering what she had seen the night before, went out in the rear yard to see if anything had fallen, and there found this bag of sand and the message. There was a small break in the bag in two places, showing evidence that it had fallen a great distance. The seeing of the airship and the communication received from the aerolists was the sole topic in Newport yesterday.

Drops Things Now. / Does the Mysterious Airship--More Queer Antics.

The airship discoverers from out of town districts have taken a new steer. The heavenly travellers, according to those veracious chroniclers, have taken a turn of a sudden to dropping things from their lofty aeromotor. This propensity, like the original man story, has come from all quarters simultaneously, and is enumerated in detail with such remarkable accuracy as to leave no doubt in the minds of any as to its truth or falsity.

Dupont, Ohio, reports a man who followed the vessel of the air, and came up with it just in time to see it rise and fly away. But he found a note from the crew saying they had travelled 4,000 miles and were going to find the North Pole.

Despite their assertions the atmospherical bugbear is next seen at Newport, south of Dupont, although in the meantime Lorain, Ohio, gets a glimpse of the thing and finds a note giving a detailed statement of the origin, navigation and destination of the bird. It would seem that for North Pole voyagers the navigators have either lost their compass or success has turned their heads.

And from Lorain yesterday the next stop in the North Pole journey was Chattanooga, where some of the good people, gifted with second sight and things, saw the cigar-shaped monstrosity late yesterday evening making for the North Pole in a due so-sou-west direction as if the helmsman thought the longest way 'round was the shortest way home.

1897 April 25 (Sun) Cincinnati Enquirer, p. 9. (card 1)

AERIBARQUE. / That's Its Official Name. / A Lancaster Gentleman Saw the Airship. / And Had a Talk With Its Chief Engineer. / Gave Him an Enquirer to Cheer Him on His Way. / And Also Closely Inspected the Weird Machine. / Details of a Stranger Story Than That Related of the Flying Horse in the Arabian Nights. / SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER

LANCASTER, OHIO, April 24.--A gentleman who is prominent in this city and well-known throughout the state, but who positively declines to permit the use of his name, lest his friends should accuse him of "hitting the pipe," stated to the Enquirer correspondent today that he had not only seen the much-bruited airship, but had pretty thoroughly inspected it, as well as conversed with one of its occupants.

His story, which he told in all seriousness, is a remarkable one, and argues either that he saw what he describes or possess an imagination which ought to insure anyone a fortune.

"A few evenings since," said he, "I was on my way home between Baltimore, in the northeastern part of the county, and this city. It was between 8 and 9 o'clock. My horse, a very quiet one, suddenly exhibited signs of both fear and distress, and became greatly excited. On looking about for some explanation of the animal's unusual conduct I saw slowly descending into a field near by an object which looked a large or larger than a full-grown elephant. Fore and aft it carried brilliant white lights, which illuminated the country for considerable distance like a pair of electric globes.

"By this time I had become as badly rattled as my horse, and from the whirring, hissing noise of the descending object I expected to be a terrible crash when it struck the ground. You can judge of my further surprise when I saw it come to the ground not a hundred yards distant without concussion or even a jar. In the scintillating lights, which still continued as brilliant as when I first noticed them, I saw the forms of two men, and heard them conversing in

AN UNKNOWN LANGUAGE.

"To my startled and abnormally enlarged vision, the aerial visitor, as it stood in the open field, looked as large as a barn. My first impulse was to whip up my horse, which had quieted down somewhat, and get out of the neighborhood. On further reflection, however, I concluded not to do so. Instead I drove to a near turn in the road beyond a thick growth of underbrush, where, out of sight of the machine, I securely tethered my horse, climbed the fence and went back to reconnoiter.

"I must confess that it was with considerable trepidation I approached the thing, and was soon face to face with the airship and its occupants, and in conversation with them. One of them was clearly a foreigner, and it struck me that he was a Japanese, or belonged to some other Oriental race.

"He was apparently willing to talk, but his language was unintelligible to me. The other was an American, or, if not, then an Englishman, judging from his accent and pronunciation. He talked excellent English, at all events, and evidently explained to his companion that I could not understand him. At all events the foreigner addressed me no further, but from time to time asked the other a question and once or twice seemed

HIGHLY AMUSED AT HIS ANSWERS.

"The American talked freely enough, but gave me no real information. He wanted to know just where they were, and what the people and newspapers were saying about the object which stood before me. Happening to have a copy of the Enquirer containing several dispatches concerning the airship in my pocket, I gave it to him to read at his leisure. He was profuse in his thanks, and said that newspapers had been rather a scare (scarce?) article for some time, and that he was rather anxious to see what they said about it.

"But why are you sailing around in this mysterious way?" I inquired. "Why don't you let the world know what you are doing?"

"That's easily explained. We have discovered the principle, but there are doubtless, many applications of it. If we were to appear in public, even after patenting our principle and discover, with the appliances we now have, it would only be a little while until other men would probably discover better forms of application, and we would be compelled to divide the benefits of our discovery. We are on a tedious voyage of experimentation, and have been for more than six months. We often mingle with the world, but our discovery is hidden away, as it can be in a small compass, and no one suspects who or what we are. We pose as tourists among our fellow-men.

"We are constantly making improvements. As soon as one is worked out we descend in some secluded spot, go to a town or city, and have the necessary mechanism made from drawings, adjust it and go on with further tests and experiments. At those times we are probably looked on as harmless cranks trying to Six months hence we shall probably have reached the limit of possible improvement. Then we will patent it in every country, and then in every manufacturing center they will turn out the aeribarque, which will revolutionize the world."

INVENT PERPETUAL MOTION.

"Do you call this concern an aeribarque?"

"That is what we call it. The name is exactly descriptive of the object."

"Will you permit me to inspect it?"

"He turned to his companion, and after a short consultation replied:

"In a general way only. But I will explain nothing to you. If you can reason out how it ascends and descends, or is propelled, well and good; but I shall answer no questions. Look it over and draw your own conclusions."

"The contrivance itself was a strange piece of mechanism, and stood from 12 to 15 feet high. The lower half, or car, was an oblong square 8 by 5 feet. The upper half, an elongated globe, apparently 8 feet at its greatest diameter, gradually diminishing and terminating to rounded points, its extreme length being 15 or 18 feet. The frame appeared to be a wire fret work, only the wires were of an immense size—an inch in diameter on the bottom and sides of the car, growing smaller as they ascended, until at the top of the elongated globe they were not more than a quarter of an inch.

"They were joined together at close intervals and in both directions across the bottom, and ran up perpendicularly 8 or 9 feet, then curved onward

TILL THEY NEARLY MET.

Then outward, upward and over till they formed the complete circle of the outer frame of the elongated globe or cigar-shaped apparatus spoken of in the papers. Inside of this upper fret work was a bag or balloon, just fitting it and partially inflated.

A very little testing convinced me that the supposed wires were tubular contrivances, composed either of steel or aluminum or some new metal, clearly of great strength and exceeding lightness. A series of these tubes ran horizontally around the lower part of the car at close intervals, joined into the upright tubes to a height of three feet. They were safety or guard rails. At the forward end the uprights were turned abruptly right and left at the height of 18 inches, and then brought together, near the upper half, forming an entrance and exit to the car something like two feet wide. At this end the guard rail came no higher than the abrupt angle of the uprights, while at the other end they were uniform with the sides. At every point of contact these tubular wires were inserted into each other, while one nearly an inch in diameter, coming up independently from below, was inserted into the lower part of the balloon centrally.

"Thrown on the bottom of the car were several Oriental rugs, while all sorts of luggage, blankets, coats, canned goods and the like were stowed away at convenient points, or suspended overhead. Near the rear end of the car was a small box-like table on the top of which was a number of knobs or buttons, very like the appliances we see in ELECTRICAL (

"As I was (not) permitted to enter the (cabin) nor even thrust my head inside, I could only guess as to the purpose of this table. It seemed clear, however, that it was the motor or controlling principle of the aeribarque.

"The gentleman with whom I had been conversing seated himself at the table and said:

"Take hold of the cross bars and lift the aeribarque or turn it over, if you can."

"I made the attempt, but failed.

"You are weak and excited. Calm yourself and try again when I tell you."

"He touched one of the points on the table, and there was a hissing sound like escaping steam or compressed air. He touched another, and a tremor ran through every part of the machine, and the balloon expanded perceptibly.

"Now try it again."

"I grasped the cross bars and threw all my strength into the effort but this time machine, men and baggage didn't seem to weigh a pound.

With one hand I could lift it above my head. I begged him to tell me how the attraction of gravitation had been overcome, but he said he had to be brief, except to say:

"Wait till the proper time comes."

"He touched a third button and the lights disappeared, a fourth and they reappeared, one a vivid green, the other white; then he alternated them with other colors. In the meantime I discovered that he was changing the temperature of the tubular frame from temperate to extreme cold and then to 200 degrees or above.

"Just below the points of the elongated globe I had noticed what looked like two folded window shades of different sizes or shapes depending from metallic projections. He touched two buttons at once. The forward one unfolded into a rudder, the rear one into

A PAN-LIKE PROPELLER.

"Explain to me, my dear sir," I said, "these remarkable mysteries!"

"Wait a moment."

"He touched a series of buttons in rapid succession. There was the hiss of escaping steam air; the tremor through every line of the frame work, the balloon filled with a hissing sound till it bulged through the metallic framework, and the aeribarque rose like a startled bird.

"Good night!"

"This was called down from a height of a thousand feet; the propeller expanded, the rudder dropped into place and swung around, changing the ship's course at an acute angle, instantly and more quickly than it takes to tell it, it had disappeared in the direction of Newark."

"And what a conclusion do you draw?" asked the Enquirer man.

"Why, sir, someone has got on the inside of nature at last. Don't you know that this thing is constructed on the principle of a bird, in every essential? The frame of a bird is a combination of light, strong tubes, or bones and quills. The strongest and longest flyers have the largest proportionate bones and quills.

"We know as a general principle, that a bird is capable of expelling all the atmospheric air from its bones and quills, or tubes, and supplying, in some unknown way,

A VOLATILE SUBSTANCE.

"This overcomes the attraction of gravitation, and enables it to rise in the air with the aid of its wings, and fly away at will.

"When it wants to descend it ballasts with atmospheric air the tubes from which it lately excluded it. Kill a bird instantly, on the wing and it drops perpendicularly, if the wind is not blowing. Wound it seriously and it falls at an angle. In the one instance the attraction of gravitation becomes ascendant instantly—in the other gradually, hence the sagging floatation.

"I am convinced that this airship not only embraces all the principles of the flight of birds, but another more wonderful and incomprehensible. The expulsion of the air from the tubular framework, supplying its place with some volatile substance, the expansion of the balloon compartment, with probably the same substance, and the lifting factor, the light, the heat, and the motive power for the machinery, I am convinced, all come from the same source and are produced and modified at will.

"Whether this be electricity or some more subtle and powerful principle in nature, I have no idea. But seeing what I did leaves not a single doubt in my mind as to the feasibility as well as the reality of the airship. It is really less improbable than the telephone and Edison's discoveries were a score of years ago. The men I saw have evidently unlocked one of nature's profoundest secrets."

U. A. T.

1897 April 25 (Sun) Cincinnati Enquirer, p. 17.

HE SAW IT. / Cleveland Man Who Will Swear to the Airship. / Special Dispatch to the Enquirer.

Cleveland, O., April 23.—J. W. Lansing, of Brundage and Lansing, Central Avenue commission merchants, has just returned from a trip through southern Iowa. While in Grinnell, Mr. Lansing said he saw the much talked about airship. Mr. Lansing is noted for being strictly temperate and does not wear glasses. In speaking of it he said: "I saw it twice, but at Grinnell it was very plain. It was early in the evening and the ship could be seen distinctly. It was shaped like a cigar, and it moved in various directions, some of the time against a strong wind."

"The general impression of those who saw it seemed to be that it was an airship worked by electricity. I couldn't say myself that it was, but it was some kind of a manufactured thing floating about overhead."

p. 1--AIRSHIP PLAN / Filed to Be Patented--May Be the One Reported Seen. / Special Dispatch to the Enquirer.

Omaha, Neb., April 24.--In the office of G.V. Sues (??), the Omaha patent solicitor, may be seen the plans of an airship which, it would seem, very nearly solved the problem of aerial navigation. The invention is that of Henry Heintz, of Elkton, S.D.

In this connection it would not be at all strange if it turned out that the people in Nebraska reported to have seen an airship had really seen the Heintz airship, as Elkton is little more than 200 miles from Omaha. The invention as described by Mr. Sues, it is thought, very nearly duplicates, through mechanical means, the flight of a bird.

The invention embodies an elongated aerial car, entirely enclosed, provided with a steam engine to drive a shaft provided with a buoyant propeller.

1897 April 25 (Sun) Cleveland Plain-Dealer, p. 1.

MORE NEWS FROM THAT AIRSHIP. / An Alleged Message Found at Lorain and Something Was Seen in the Air Near New London. / Special to the Plain Dealer.

LORAIN, April 24.--The Times tonight prints a ~~long~~ letter, alleged to have been found by "a prominent townsman," giving out some interesting points in connection with the much talked about airship. On the outside of the envelope was written the word: "Aboard the Airola, April 23, 1897."

In the letter the writer stated that the ship was built in an obscure place near Santa Fe, N.M., from which place the journey began. "We have hovered over every state in the union," continued the writer; "fished in the great lakes, crossed the plains and settled on mountains and in valleys." He states that the ship is eighty-two feet in length and nineteen feet wide, supported by a balloon thirty-five feet in diameter. A wheel at the stern, he states, is propelled by means of a storage battery, the wheel having eight paddles. He claims that himself, wife and child are the only persons aboard the ship.

The hull of the air craft is a wire netting covered with thin but strong oiled silk, through which ~~and~~ neither air nor water can pass, and in shape resembles a cigar. "During a rain," continues the navigator, "we rise above the clouds and are perfectly dry." In closing, the writer says they will return in a few days to New Mexico, where a larger boat is under construction, with which he hopes to cross the sea. He signs the name of William R. Harris.

1897 April 27 (Tues) Cincinnati Enquirer, p. 8.

Saw the Aeribarque. / Special Dispatch to the Enquirer.

Bradford, O., April 26.--David Brant, Osear Richards and Colonel Michael Roach, all reputable citizens of this place, claim to have seen the airship descend near here, and that they talked to the occupants, one an Englishman and the others speaking some foreign language. They claim the ship was made of tubes, as described in The Enquirer.

1897 April 28 (Wed.) Cincinnati Enquirer, p. 1.

Will Swear to It. / Special Dispatch to the Enquirer.

Toledo, O., April 27.--Howard Warn, of the office of Southworth and Co., and his father, M. B. [S.?] Warn, both reputable citizens, are willing to make affidavit that they saw an airship on Saturday night.

May 2, 17. ghosts. / 25. Hamilton's cow. / Suppl.--Ohio arsp inventors during Grant's administration. / May 5, 1. tax on arsp, Little Rk.

Cleveland Plain-Dealer, Mon. May 10, p. 10. Saw the Air Ship. / Here's a Man Who Says It Looks Like a Pool Table.

John Merkle of Lorain street writes the Plain-Dealer as follows: "May 8, 1897.

"You can say in your next edition that I saw the airship Wednesday evening, May 5. Looks to me like a pool table with lights hanging down in place of pockets, not triangular, as has been stated. Saw it at 8:30 o'clock."

12,4. That Nashville arsp isn't an arsp at all, according to the bonafide arsp makers. They must be right. The Nashville nondescript flew 13, 2 Kans. snake.

4. That St. Louis man who claims to have seen the arsp by daylight is believed to be merely trying to get ahead of the Chicago neck stratchers.

15,4. There is an arsp, lost, strayed or stolen, in the atmosphere above central Tenn. This is the real thing, and parties seeing it need have no hesitation in mentioning the fact.

1897 April 28 (Wed) Cleveland Plain Dealer, p. 5.

SAY THEY SAW THE AIRSHIP. / Two Reputable Residents of Toledo Are Willing to Make Affidavit to That Effect. / Special to the Plain Dealer.

TOLEDO, April 27.--Howard Warn of the office of Southworth & Co. and his father, M.S. Warn, both reputable citizens, are willing to make affidavits that they saw the airship on Saturday night. Howard states that he rode his bicycle home through a light shower, about 11 o'clock at night, and after slightly cleaning his wheel he stepped to the door to see if the rain was continuing. His attention was attracted to a bright lights of different colors moving rapidly toward the southwest.

Mr. Warn states that at that time the clouds were breaking slight and were very near the earth. The lights were attached to a cigar shaped object, moving close to the lower line of the clouds, and in the opinion of the observer the affair was not to exceed [500] feet above the earth, although it was much farther away from the point at which he stood. Warn called his father, and they watched the lights until they disappeared finally into heavy clouds to the southwest.

Both gentlemen agree as to the size and general shape of ~~the~~ the airship, and say that there was nothing to indicate the use of wings or propellers, neither were they able to see any human beings aboard. Owing to the newspaper jokes that are being passed upon airships the Warns were reluctant to tell the story until today.

April 29, 1897 Cincinnati Commercial Tribune (Thurs) p. 8

The Airship Seen

In the Sky by Police Officer John Ringer.

Officer John Ringer, of the First District, has been enrolled among the men who have seen the airship. He said last night: "I was standing at the corner of Eighth and Walnut streets at 10 o'clock, when my attention was called to a string of lights moving across the sky. I could see one large light in front, like the headlight of an engine only much smaller, while behind this there was a long row of little lights not much bigger than stars, and one right behind the other."

"It was so high up that I could see no outline, and nothing but the lights. They moved rapidly in a northerly direction, and I watched them until they disappeared. Half a dozen citizens were standing near me, and they also saw the moving lights. I believe it was an airship."

(this editn cuts off what must've been contd in other ed.)

1897 April 29 (Th) Cleveland Plain Dealer, p. 3.

SAW THE AIR SHIP. / "J[e]d" Wickham Says He Saw the Phenomenon at the Corner of Willson and Euclid Avenues.

"J[e]d" Wickham, cashier in the county clerk's office, declares he saw the air ship Tuesday night. He told the story at the court house Wednesday and he was still laboring under the excitement of the sight of the strange thing.

"I was standing near the corner of Willson and Euclid avenues, about 10'30 o'clock last night," said he, "when I happened to look up at the heavens and saw what at first looked like a headlight on a loco motive. If I had been drinking anything stronger than soda water I would have thought I had 'em sure. At first all I could see was the blinding glare and then it slowly turned around and I could see the shaft of light across the skies. Of course I thought of the air ship, which the papers had been talking about. Finally I could dimly discern the body of the thing. It was shaped like a cigar and right about it was a balloon shaped affair. It seemed to be stationary for quite a while, and then it moved slowly off to the southeast."

"You fellows may think I am 'kiddin', but I am giving it to you straight. I saw the air ship."

April 30, 1897 Cincinnati Commercial Tribune (Fri.) p. 6

He Saw the Airship.

The article published in yesterdays edition to the effect that the airship was plainly seen by Philip Meagher, local billposter for the C., P. and V. Railroad, is verified by that gentleman. Mr. Meagher saw the ship the same evening that officer Ringer got so good a view of the aerial wonder.

(the preceding article alluded to was not found)

April 25, p. 25--full page on aerial navigation experiments.

April 25, p. 12 (eds.)--Since it appears that the airship isn't coming this way, all we can do is to watch for the first straw hat.

April 26 (Mon.), p. 4 (eds.)--The latest report of the airship comes from Haddam, Kansas. We are not surprised that they saw it there.

—Just think how many airships Rip Van Winkle would see if only he were here.

1897 May 4 (Tues) Cleveland Plain-Dealer, p. 4.

TALES OF THE TOWN / That Runaway Airship.

An esteemed reader of the Plain Dealer seems to have his doubt about the genuineness of the airship message which appeared in the Sunday edition of this paper. He suggests that Tom Starr, Jim Sturgis and Pony Rodgers "got their science vice versa," that "rarification would send their airship down," while a "heavier atmosphere would force it upward."

This shows how painfully easy it is for a man to jump at conclusions. In the first place, what does the critic know about airship anyway? Has he studied their habits, their tastes, their predilections? Is he prepared to go upon the witness stand and give the details of their construction? Can he place his hand upon his heart and solemnly assert that airships do not violate all the known scientific principles and most of the natural laws?

Did he ever see an airship?

The explanation of the eccentricity of the airship in which the Starr-Sturgis-Rodgers trio found themselves, is extremely simple. The lifting power of the aerial marvel is a certain nephitic gas evolved from concentrated lye by a process which it will be impossible to find mentioned in the patent office reports. It is a well known property of this gas that chilly atmosphere robs it of its buoyancy while warm air from any source increases its lifting power. This is a phenomena which is often commented upon in connection with the various lye products.

If it were possible to communicate with the unfortunate voyagers, a more detailed description of this singular craft might be obtained. As it is, the critical reader is advised to put his eyes steadily on the heavens and perhaps, in good time, he may receive that practical knowledge of airships in general which at present he so evidently does not possess.

1897 May 5 (Wed.) Cincinnati Enquirer, p. 7.

AIRSHIP. / Said to Have Been Seen Passing Over This City Last Night. A number of people on Garfield place saw the airship last night about 9 o'clock, and are willing to make affidavit that they have sighted the mysterious navigator that has been creating so much excitement over the country. Dr. Louis Dumhoff, 112 Garfield place, made a drawing of the light, which he described as egg-shaped, red in color and appearing as though a portion of it was covered with a curtain, the rays escaping in the center and at each end.

It came from the direction of Price Hill and passed in a southeasterly direction, disappearing in about five minutes, and, so far as he was able to approximate, covered a distance of about 20 miles in that time, moving in a zigzag course, first up, then down. Conductor J.C. Gaupel, on the Monmouth street car line, also saw it. W.J. Klein, an attorney in the Mitchell Building, and E. Feed Porter, of the Methodist Book concern, and a number of others say they saw and watched the curious aeronaut.

1897 May 7 (Fri) Cleveland Plain-Dealer, p. 10.

THE AIRSHIP. / "Jud" Wickham Has Discovered Its Identity--A Toy Balloon With Lanterns Attached. /

"Jud" Wickham, cashier in the county clerk's office, has solved the airship mystery. Late Wednesday night, by the light of the moon, he was at work in his pansy bed when he happened to look heavenward and observed a one-eyed monster directly above his head. Of course the first thing "Jud" thought of was the airship, and he rushed into the house to get his field glasses. With the help of those he was able to study the thing very thoroughly.

The airship proved to be a toy balloon of large dimensions. A lantern with a reflector was attached to the base of it. On both sides of the balloon were long conical shaped affairs, which, through the powerful glasses, appeared to be constructed of some filmy material, probably tissue paper. At the apex of the balloon was a small flag, and all along the conical shaped side attachments were smaller balloons. The "airship" was traveling with the wind, rising, falling and moving rapidly and slowly, according to the velocity of the breeze. The affair was high up in the air.

1897 May 7 (Fri) Cleveland Plain-Dealer, p. 10.

AN AIRSHIP ROMANCE. / Workmen in the Waterworks Tunnel Credited With Having Seen One. /

The airship has been seen once more. At least employes of the waterworks department say the men working on the tunnel saw it sink into the lake a few nights ago.

It was time for a new shift to go down. As the force stood at the top of the shaft the cigar shaped mechanism, brilliantly lighted, was seen in the distance. Frank Kosterling, tunnel inspector, is charged with being the first to notice it.

According to the story told in the city hall Thursday the ship descended gradually from the sky to the water's surface, then floated off and disappeared in the distance or was submerged. Kosterling denies the soft impeachment and came down to tell Supt. Kingsley it was all a fake. He does not believe in air ships and thinks no one else saw this one.

Waterworks employes tell all sorts of air ship jokes. Kosterling claims they did so in this instance and will make it warm for the originator.

"I understand they're going to tax aerostats in the western states," said Clerk Norton. "Ain't you seen it? Next time try barrel three as you enter, to the right."

1897 May 9 (Sun) Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, p. 1. (card 1)

The Air Ship a Reality. / Was Built in Newport by a Resident of That City. / The Inventor is a German Who is Too Poor To Take Out Patents. / Thousands Saw Him Sailing Over Cincinnati. / Early Saturday Evening. / Started from a Secluded Spot Near His Home. / Parts of the Machine Repaired in a Nearby Shop--The Town Excited.

It is time to lay aside the jokes about the airship. The mysterious navigator of the air, whose comings and goings were as strange as the maneuvers of the sea-serpent--and generally believed to be about as authentic--rose from Newport last evening, passed over Cincinnati shortly before 8 o'clock, and was noticed by scores of citizens. Over in Newport it was seen by hundreds, and the good people of the three cities talked of little else last night. Furthermore, the inventor is a Newport man, and the ship was built secretly not far from Cincinnati.

Of course, many who caught but a glimpse of the nocturnal wanderer were as skeptical as ever, and pretty nearly all those who saw it not insisted that it was only the revival of another "fake."

But the airship is a reality, according to testimony which is unimpeachable; it is the invention of a resident of Newport, and has been thoroughly tested in the most practical manner. The ship passed over Cincinnati at a frightful rate of speed last evening, and was headed in a northwesterly direction. But of the people who saw it there is time to wait. What the public wishes to read is a brief sketch of the airship itself.

Built in Secret.

The device which has been perplexing the residents of southern Ohio and eastern Indiana for the past several weeks is the invention of a resident of Newport. He has been testing it by night, but has been very careful about timing his departures and arrivals when there would be none about to watch him. Last night he started out earlier than usual, and three or four people enjoyed the novel sight of witnessing his start. The flight was made from a point near Tipperhauer's brickyard, and the ship ascended so rapidly that it was only a few seconds until it was high in the air. A few moments more and it was speeding over Newport, over the river, over Cincinnati and out of sight. At first there was only a small light shining from the ship, but its general outline could be distinguished for all that. After the altitude of about 200 feet had been reached two other lights were turned on, and as the ship passed over Cincinnati all who saw it agree as to the reddish glare of its fairly large headlight.

The inventor has taken only two of his neighbors partly into his secret, and some who have had an inkling now and then have guessed pretty closely to the truth.

The Inventor.

One of the most prominent residents of Newport told the following story about the inventor and his invention to the Commercial Tribune last evening:

"I am acquainted with the man who owns the airship, but will not divulge his name. He is a German and can not speak English, and has been working on the machine that he has now perfected for many years. He is very poor and has not got money enough to have it patented, and for that reason he wants his identity kept secret."

"Well, but have you seen the ship itself?" "No, I have not, but I have seen many parts of it. The inventor has sent several parts to Crawley's machine shop to be repaired, and I saw them there. The ship is large enough to carry three people, and not more than a week ago he took two gentlemen up with him, they paying him $15 a piece for the trip, and each was bound to secrecy. A gentleman connected with the Crawley Machine Works--which is situated on Kenturah street--stated that a man had been in the shop several times with some odd looking machinery to have repaired, and had spoken to Mr. Crawley, stating that he had an airship, but it was old and patched up, being the same one he started to build several years ago, and before he got it perfected it met with several accidents, and as he now has it perfected he would like to have a good one built. He did not know what arrangements Mr. Crawley had made with him, but he had called at the shop several times since his first meeting."

Thousands Saw It.

The starting up of the airship last night and being seen by several people in the west end of Newport, has aroused that neighborhood, and the man in the mysterious machine will have to be very careful in the future or he will be caught.

The airship made a flight over Cincinnati late Friday night, and among those who noticed it was a lady living on Walnut Hills. It was shortly after 11 o'clock when she noticed the mysterious traveller in the sky, and hastily calling her older children, who had not yet retired, she pointed it out to them. The next instant it had passed beyond their range of vision.

Scores of people downtown saw the ship last night, and pretty nearly all of the people in the lobby of the Gibson House had it pointed out to them by Thomas Smith, a cabman. It was the talk of that block last evening, and such as caught a fair glimpse of it were positive that it was a genuine case of airship, at least.

Robert Emerich, of Sixth Ward, observed the sky wanderer for some moments before calling attention to it.

May 9 p. 1--(fanciful picture of arsp as riveted balloon with bootlike platform beneath latter, surrounded by rails, many people, some stand, & rear propeller: "The Tenn. Centenn. Captures a Real Live Arsp.") p. 12 (eds)--Even if the latest arsp (Tenn) did have to be brought back home on a hay wagon it made the outward-bound journey unaided, which is more than the usual run of arsp do.

The discovery that the Tenn Centenn has a genuine arsp make us wonder if the recent arsp craze wasn't, after all, the deft work of our friend, Herman Justi, Chief of the Exposition Dept. of Promotion and Publicity. Moses P. Handy made a great record as a boomer for the World's Fair but Justi, old boy, is some pumpkins himself.

12, 7 bad weather prevents ascent of Barnard's arsp.

14, 4 (Fri)--An astronomer up in Milwaukee has seen a covey of comets in the daytime, instead of an arsp. He looked through the same kind of glass, no doubt, but then some people see things differently under those circumstances.

15, 2--B's arsp goes 12 mi in 30 min.

16, 24 feature on flying machs, w pics./ 18,4 pic of Richard Williams.

Mon. 17, 4 eds--And now, just as we were all finally convinced that those arsp stories were fakes, & that no such thing existed, along comes Prof. B. of Nash., & upsets our conclusions by riding a genuine arsp in broad daylight. It makes us tired to change our minds so often.

1897 May 11 (Tues) Cleveland Plain-Dealer, p. 3.

THAT AIRSHIP AGAIN. / Two Norwalk Young Men Claim to Have Seen the Mysterious Aerial Navigator. / Special to the Plain Dealer.

NORWALK, May 10.--The famous airship was seen passing over this city last night. Mr. Abe Parker, a well known young man of this city, says he saw it, and he describes it as follows:

"It appeared to be but a little higher than the Glass block, and was moving very slowly. It was about 8 o'clock when I saw it moving along. The lights were very bright and must have been of an electrical origin. They were of two colors, white and red. As well as I can remember, there were ten or twelve of them. Although I could not hear the sound of music, there were those standing near me who claimed they heard the musical sounds quite distinctly. As well as I can judge, the aerial visitor was in sight about ten minutes."

Another young man who saw it corroborated Mr. Parker's statement. He gives a description of its shape as follows: "Newspaper accounts describe the airship as cigar shaped, but they are way off; at least, the one I saw is not of that shape at all, but round, like a huge ball. After the ship crossed Main street I followed it over a mile. Part of the way it led me through a field. We were so far from the street lights that it was quite dark. Whatever be the nature of the light carried by the airship, it is very powerful, for it cast a shadow, which I saw distinctly, and repeatedly. Now, if the airship is cigar shaped, the shadow naturally would be cigar shaped, but it was not. On the contrary, it was round."

WEST VIRGINIA

1897 April 17 (Sat eve) Parkersburg, W.Va., Sentinel, p. 1.

The Mysterious Airship Seen Passing Over Parkersburg Last Night. A woman living in the East End declares that she saw the air ship pass westward about 10:30 last night. It was so far up in the clouds that she could not distinguish its size nor shape, but the flaming headlight and small side lights were quite distinct. She is very positive that it was the air ship about which so much has been said and written. It appeared to be moving slowly and its course was to the west.

Mr. Henry Ogden, of the East End, who is one of the most reliable gentlemen of this city, saw the mysterious flying machine, and also the family of William Moyers, Ben Woodyard and others.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Wheeling Register, p. F.

THE AIR SHIP / Was Reported by Several Persons Yesterday Afternoon. The much talked of airship seems to have become a reality. In consequence of the many newspaper articles regarding its appearance both in Wheeling and elsewhere, many people in this city kept careful watch for it all day yesterday. It was reported late last evening that the airship had been seen by several persons about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon passing rapidly over the city toward the northeast. The Register was unable to obtain full particulars or an accurate description of its appearance, but it was said that painted on its sides in large letters so as to be plainly read was the following: "If you would run no risk, buy the Krakaur piano from F.W. Sawyer company."

1897 April 20 (Tue) Parkersburg, W.Va., Sentinel, p. 1.

That Air Ship. / Prominent Steamboatman Observed It. "About eight thirty last night (Sunday) when lying at Sistersville, a light was seen by myself and others high in the air and apparently right over the river below us, though no one could tell just how far. Nothing could be seen but a large round light, too white for a gas light and not quite white enough for an electric light. It had somewhat the appearance of a small search light on a steam boat. At times there could be seen a smaller light of the same nature, just back of the big light. The [] seemed to be moving in a general north-westerly direction, sometimes rising and falling swiftly, at other times retracing its course. The streets of Sistersville were crowded with people watching it. Nearly midnight it disappeared over a hill to the westward."

For so much the captain will vouch, but as to what carried the light he could not say. The same story was told by Elmer Hardy, Watchman, and Litts Kinnard, engineer, who also witnessed it for some time, though the Register was unable to interview them.--Marietta Register.

1897 April 21 (Wed) Parkersburg (W.Va.) Sentinel, p. 1.

That Air Ship. / Makes Another Appearance in This Vicinity. It Was Seen Monday Night by Several Persons.

The mysterious air ship seems to be the all-absorbing topic at present. Every day more people report having seen the strange craft sailing through the air, but apparently the machine and its mysterious crew goes into port during the day, for no one has yet reported having seen it during the day.

According to W. Marvin Wolfe of the Parkersburg Transfer Company, the air ship has been making nocturnal excursions for at least three weeks. As there had at that time been no report made of the strange visitor, he did not say much about what he had seen for fear of ridicule, and in fact he himself was not entirely sure that his eyes were not playing him false; but since so many reports have come of the appearance of an object of some kind in the heavens, he has come to believe that he really saw the wonderful thing several weeks ago.

He was coming, he says, from the Henderson oil field and was still a number of miles from town when night set in. He had just reached the top of a high ridge over which the road passed when one of the teamsters, who was with him suddenly called his attention to a peculiar light upon an opposite ridge about a mile distant. The light referred to looked like about the size of a lantern light and seemed to be suspended in the air about fifty feet from the top of the ridge and was moving at a rate of fifteen or twenty miles per hour toward the east. Mr. Wolf and a number of men who were with him saw the light distinctly and watched it till it passed out of sight. It seemed to move with a steady motion parallel with the top of the ridge and a considerable distance above it. None of the party could explain the mystery and it is not yet explained except on the theory that it was the wonderful air ship.

p.4--We now know what the air ship was. It was the Republican caucus of the council trying to get away from the candidates. 1897 April 23 (Fri) Parkersburg (W.Va.) Sentinel, p. 1.

It Is Cigar-Shaped. / And the Helmsman Had Perfect Control of It. Last night Capt. Sam Parsons and several other gentlemen were standing on the corner near the Court House, and about to bid each other "good night," when they heard a rumbling and hissing noise above them, and looking up toward the sky saw the "mysterious air ship" sailing through the air and at a rapid rate of speed, going southward. On closer examination they saw the brilliant red head lights of the ship. Just after it crossed over the Kanawha, it seemed to slacken speed and hovered in the air as if making ready for a descent to the earth. They say it was cigarshaped, as all do, who have seen the ship. Soon it was lost to view. The Captain, however, says he could plainly see a man at one of the openings contentedly smoking a cigar. None who know the jolly Captain, will doubt for a moment but what he and his friends did really see the "mysterious air ship."--Point Pleasant Register. p. 23, p. 8--Building an Airship.--Capt. Elijah Spencer of NY is working on an arap 28' long x 7' wide and 9' high, to make 30 knots. Probably some others have worked out the problem and hence the araps that have been seen flying about promiscuously the past week or two. 26, 4--The ar ship lit in two different places on Sat., in Ohio and in Tenn. The list keeps going on, however. 1897 April 23 (Fri) Wheeling, W.Va., Daily Intelligencer, p. J.

THE AIR SHIP. / The Hoax Practiced with Success on a Gullible Public. / TWO YOUNG PRACTICAL JOKERS / Started the Story that the Air Ship Had Been Seen Hovering Over the Heart of the City--Other People, Hearing the Story, in Some Inexplicable Manner Became Convinced that they too Had Seen the Wonderful Aerial Navigator. / The air ship hoax struck Wheeling good and hard last night. Two young practical jokers who stood at the corner of Fourteenth and Market streets, attracted considerable attention shortly after [8] o'clock by declaring to what soon became a large and excited audience that they had seen the wonderful air ship. It had hove in sight from the northwest and with a meteor-like speed had shot across the sky into the darkness of the east.

The story received a varied reception. Some doubted, others "caught on" to the jokers, while the majority were only too willing to believe anything and everything about the wonderful aerial navigator. Soon the story had spread all over the central part of the city, and in less than an hour hundreds were discussing it. In its travels the story became ~~more~~ distorted and exaggerated in a most wonderful manner. It was said that the ship had struck the church spire at St. Matthew's and had been nearly wrecked. In another quarter it was stated that the ship had red and blue lights, another version was that it was provided with an electric search light of several thousand candle power that almost blinded persons on whom it had been turned. A little further on and names of persons who had seen the ship were given, but these when approached of course did not verify the statement made in their behalf.

When the public makes up its mind that it has been humbugged on this air ship business, then perhaps there will be no repetitions of last night's idiotic performance. 1897 May 1 (Sat) Wheeling (W.Va.) Daily Intelligencer, p. (card 1)

THE AIR SHIP. / Photographs of the Vessel Taken, Here in Wheeling. / SHOWN AT THE INTELLIGENCER / Office Yesterday--They Fooled Many Persons and Those who were Not Deceived were Unable to Explain this Exhibition of Sleight-of-Hand Photography--The Method by which the Untruthful Photographs were Secured. / Photographs of the now famous air ship taken right here in Wheeling. You consider that a statement to be received with more than the allotted grain of salt.

Yet the statement is true. Yesterday afternoon a series of three photographs of scenes along the river front were displayed in the Intelligencer counting room window. One showed the public landing with the buildings on Water street in the background. Another had the Island for its background, while the little propeller Manhattan is the central figure. In the third are seen the steamers Leroy and Ruth, with the steel bridge in the distance.

"But what's especially interesting in these?" is the natural query. That's easily explained. Away up in the sky in each of the photographs is seen the famous air-ship--or what represents the popular idea of the aerial navigator. If air-ships were an undisputed reality and a usual thing in the "prop-erty" ~~make~~ make-up of the heavens, these pictures showing the vessel would deceive nine out of ten persons, for from the photographic standpoint they are nearly perfect.

But as the airship is not believed by sensible persons to be anything but a creature of the imagination, it devolves upon somebody to explain these photographs. The popular idea of a photograph is that it invariably represents "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth," as lawyers say. Such an impression is away off as will be revealed when the Intelligencer explains the manner in which the series of air-ship photographs was secured.

The scenes along the river front, mentioned above, were taken by the Intelligencer photographer several months ago, long before persons with an overdose of imagination of an underdose of truthfulness, created what has come to be known as the air-ship craze.

If anyone of the hundreds who inspected the photographs at the Intelligencer office yesterday afternoon and last night, had stopped a moment, he could have seen in an instant that the pictures were not ordinary and legitimate camera work. In the selection of scenes, the Intelligencer's photographer overlooked the fact that the Manhattan had not been plying in the Wheeling-Sisterville trade for several weeks, and consequently that craft could not figure in a picture of the air-ship taken at Wheeling.

So it is established that the pictures are "photographic lies." It follows that "the liar" must explain. Briefly, the modus operandi was as follows: Prints were made of the scenes taken on the river front. Then they were placed in another printing frame containing the "fake" negative. This negative was made from a crayon drawing of the air-ship, the work of the Intelligencer's artist. The drawing was designed after the published description of the air-ship telegraphed from Chattanooga, Tennessee, a week ago. It shows a shad-shaped inflated body, with two immense wings, one on each side; the propeller screws at the stern and the basket suspended below by rigging. Altogether it was a creditable production. The negative taken from this drawing was used in inserting the air-ship in the prints already made of the scenes on the river front. Very simple and not at all difficult.

But the photographs fooled many a wiser head than the author of this piece of slight-of-hand photography. The pictures can be seen to-day in the east window at the Intelligencer office.

The much heralded air ship which has been stirring up the people of the western states, passed over Erie last night about eleven o'clock. It came from the south and was headed north and was going at a high rate of speed. It was perhaps 2,000 feet up in the air, but it could be plainly seen. Mr. J.S. Scheer, the confectioner, whose store is on the corner of Ninth and State streets, Frank King and Frank Mulick, say they saw the aerial ship in its flight over Erie. Mr. Scheer describes the mysterious ship as being quite long and shaped like a cigar. It had two wing-like fans on each side and a huge propeller on the stern. It also carried bright lights on the bow and although it moved very fast it could be plainly seen.

No life was noticed aboard the strange ship and although the air was still not a sound could be heard. Other people saw the strange ship, but it soon passed over the city and when last seen it was out over Lake Erie heading due north.

FLEW PAST SHARON. / The Mysterious Flying Machine Said to Have Been Seen There. / (Special to the Times.)

Sharon, Pa., April 22.—Jay Latimore and C.S. Wallace, of this place, and Attorney E.E. Andrews, of Youngstown, O., claim that the air ship passed over this part of the state last evening about dusk, at a height of about 2,000 feet, and was headed for Lake Erie.

It was running at a high rate of speed. They say three men were on board, and the ship was plainly visible. They are reliable citizens and their story is generally believed. The ship was cigar shaped and seemed to have wings and a propeller.

PENNSYLVANIA, NEW YORK

1897 April 12 (Mon) Pittsburg Dispatch, p. 2. (card 1)

RODE IN A FLYING MACHINE. / An Allegheny Man Goes the People of Omaha and Kansas City One Better—Grave Yard Coxtails Blamed.

That mysterious airship which has been causing the people of some of the Western cities to gaze skyward in mute astonishment is said to be going east and at a very rapid gait. It has been seen in this locality, it is said, and that no later than last night. Of course, it was seen on the Allegheny side of the river. No man with imagination enough to see such a queer thing could be found anywhere but in Allegheny. It might have been what he was drinking or it might have been the fact that he was listening to the Chinamen playing their funeral dirges and singing their weird chants at the funeral of Yee Poy yesterday, but he saw an airship sail across Troy Hill last night. He even saw more than the people out West saw, for he claims to have talked with the occupants of the mysterious craft and to have taken a ride in it.

At any rate he passed the watchman on the Sixth street bridge early this morning. He was so engrossed in thought over having been given a ride to the top of Mount Washington in the airship that he forgot to pay his toll as he passed. He was halted, but remembered that he was did not have the price. Asked how that was, he said he lived on Troy Hill. He had just walked out into his yard and then he discovered that it was—what he will never be able to explain. He thinks it was an airship. Two men stepped up to him. They just picked him up and took him along. The last he remembers of his aerial ride was when he woke up on the side of Mount Washington. In the distance he is sure he could see a bright light slowly fading away and hear the whirl of innumerable wheels. This is how the story of the ship passing over Pittsburg came to be known. The toll collector was interested and wanted to know more.

The individual who was broke could not tell him any more. He had gone home early in the evening. Previous to that he had been in a club house. He had imbibed freely of a beverage known on Troy Hill as the graveyard cocktail. It is not known anywhere else. The name is given to it for the reason that if anyone manages to get away with many of them he usually wakes up in a graveyard. This individual managed to get a way with (13) of these drinks. He remembers of going home home and going to bed. He is sure that he did not go to bed on the six side of Mt. Washington.

"What did the men in the ship say to you?" was asked by the interested collector of tolls.

"Simply told me to go home, and if I met people who told me they did not believe that machines were made that could fly to tell them that I saw one and had a ride in it."

"Well, that is a good excuse for your not having any bridge toll. I suppose they did not give you time to get any money. I will let you pass this time, but be sure you do not take any more rides in flying machines."

The unknown muttered something about how far it was to Troy Hill and started to plod across the bridge in the pelting rain.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Pittsburg Dispatch, p. 7.

AIRSHIP GOING EAST. / Many Prominent Citizens of Derry Say They Sighted It.

DERRY, April 18.—(Special.)—The airship, which has been seen in Indiana, Wisconsin, and Iowa passed here last evening according to the testimony of many prominent persons who claim to have sighted it.

It is cigar-shaped and has red and green lights and a very small center light, white and very brilliant. The ship was headed east, traveling very rapidly, and about 5000 feet high. A car is hanging about ten feet from the ship entirely enclosed.

1897 April 22 (Th) Erie (Pa) Daily Times, p. 8.

PASSED OVER ERIE. / The Mysterious Air Ship Was Plainly Seen Last Night. / WAS HEADED DUE NORTH. / AND WAS GOING AT A HIGH RATE OF SPEED. THE SHIP PASSED OVER SHARON EARLIER IN THE EVENING AND WAS HEADED FOR LAKE ERIE. /

SAW THE AIRSHIP. / J.W. Lansing of Cleveland, Ohio, Tells of His Vision Out in Iowa. /

A Cleveland man is perfectly sure that he has seen the airship a about which there has been so much newspaper speculation comment ~~lately~~ recently, says the Cleveland Leader. The Cleveland man is J.W. Lansing. He is a ~~commission~~ commission merchant. The firm of which he is the junior partner does business at No. (56) Central avenue.

A reporter called at the commission house yesterday afternoon and asked Mr. Lansing to tell all about seeing the ship.

"So that you can print it?" asked ~~the~~ the commission merchant.

"Surely," said the reporter.

"Well, I guess not," said Mr. Lansing. "I saw the ship all right enough but there has been so much sarcastic comment about it that I don't want to talk on the subject for publication. I told a friend of mine that I had seen the airship only yesterday, and he said: 'Say, Old Man, tell me where I can buy that kind.'"

The reporter urged Mr. Lansing to tell about seeing the ship, and he finally did tell the story, omitting, however, some details that would have made the tale more interesting from a newspaper standpoint on account of his reluctance to have the story published.

Mr. Lansing's Story.

"I was out in Iowa on a business trip. I had a lot of business to attend to and I was travelling about quite a good bit. It was at the town of Pella that I first saw the ship. It was night and I was walking down the street. I wasn't thinking anything about airships and I was thinking about my business. I happened to look up at the sky and I saw a brilliant light. It seemed reasonably near, and I said to myself, 'That is some smart boy flying a big kite with a big lantern tied to the tail.' But it wasn't. It was the airship, for the thing was moving along rapidly, much more rapidly than a kite or balloon could move.

"The next evening," continued Mr. Lansing, "I was in another town some miles south of Pella. A friend and I were sitting on the porch in front of his house. I was telling him of seeing the mysterious light moving through the air on the night previous and he laughed at me.

"That's all right," I said to him, "you would be surprised, now, wouldn't you, if that ship sailed right over your head at this very moment!"

"Indeed, I would," said he, and he laughed some more.

"It wasn't 15 minutes after that that I saw a big light a long way off and quite high in the heavens.

"Well," said I, "here comes the ship as sure as fate."

"My friend looked, but he couldn't see the ship at all. I finally got him to come over and sighted his eye at the light by means of a post near us. The light grew larger and larger all the time.

It Moved Past.

"Gee!" said my friend, "that thing is coming towards us mighty fast."

"And it was, too. It came so swiftly that pretty soon it seemed to be almost directly over our heads. The light was bigger than an ordinary locomotive headlight. The ship would sail along almost straight for some time, and then it would dip down, and then recover, and go along straight again. It acted just as you would expect a body moving along susceptible to currents of air to act. We could only see the brilliant light and a black mass behind it.

"Several days after that," continued Mr. Lansing, "I was in Waterloo, Ia. There they told me the airship was being inspected by crowds on the public square. It had alighted and pretty nearly the whole town was out to see it. I asked one old fellow how far it 'slid' when it 'lighted,' and he said 'about 20 feet.' But I had to catch a train and couldn't wait to see it. I tell you I would have given $25 to have had a ride on that machine, and then I could have told you a story worth printing."

Throughout the interview Mr. Lansing was thoroughly in earnest. "Now don't go and print that," were his last words to the newspaper man.

SAVE THE AIRSHIP. / CORRESPONDENT'S STATEMENT IS VERIFIED ... /

Fairplain, May 4 (Special Correspondence).--Last Tuesday evening, April 27, as your correspondent came out of one of the neighbors' houses to come home (it being 15 minutes to 9 p.m.) I saw as I crossed the avenue a very bright light in the heavens just ahead of me moving at a rapid gait. I stopped and took a good look at it. Then in a moment the thought came to me--it's the airship. Then I ran as fast as I could home, stepped to the door and said to my household, "If you want to see the airship, come quick." So all came out, and when we all stood in our yard, I looked at my time and it was 15 minutes after 9 p.m. The great light which I saw had a very bright light on its east end, as it went west, and occasionally it would turn sideways, then we saw a fiery [sic] red center on its side and a green end (west end), a halo of light was about in the form of a waterspout and it went straight west as in a bee line. It would tottle up and down a ways and then it seemed to fall quite a ways down, but would rise as soon as it fell to its old line of travel. It went very fast, and from the time I first saw it till it sank in the west (like the sunset), it was 55 minutes, or 20 minutes to 10 p.m. Now what it was I know not, but no one can convince me that it was "only a star" I saw. I firmly believe it was the "airship," or something unusual in the heavens. Another neighbor saw it, making four persons in Fairplain. What I saw was, nor is, no "fake." Because others did not happen to see it, is no criterion that I didn't see it, and that it was not a fact.

the same "Pennyrite." The aerial navigator probably changed his course about the time the party decided to watch for him, however, for the efforts of the curious ones have been in vain up to this time. 1897 April 15 Louisville Courier-Journal, p. 5

The Air-Ship in Kentucky. / Said to Have Been Seen Near Adairville. / (Springfield, Tenn., Dispatch to the Nashville American.)

The statement was made to the American's correspondent Tuesday afternoon that an air ship, or whatever it may be, was seen in the heavens near Adairville, Ky. Monday night, and that it created great astonishment and terror among the multitude of people. The American's informant was John S. Sarr, who is a well-known and substantial farmer, who lives about two miles this side of Adairville, in Robertson county.

Mr. Sarr stated that the strange aerial navigator appeared in the northern horizon about 8:30 p.m., and was viewed for an hour by the excited populace. The light, he stated, was about the size of an ordinary locomotive headlight, but was brighter, and from the effulgent rays shed by the monster he judged it to be electric.

The attention of those who first saw the air ship was attracted by a bright light appearing at least twenty inches in diameter, the reflection from which passed along what appeared to be a steel body, the length of which Mr. Sarr estimated at from 25 to 30 feet. The object was about three-quarters of a mile high.

On either side of the strange visitor were large projections, which at short intervals could be plainly seen by the astonished watchers, and which were doubtless propellers or wings. Upon the forward end a bright light, which was evidently used as a headlight, and upon the rear was carried a red lantern.

The phenomenon was witnessed for fully an hour before finally disappearing. At times it would dart off with the velocity of a bird and sail away until the lights merely twinkled.

Mr. Sarr says that people in his area are simply nonplussed, and that the negroes are overcome with abject terror. Many of them shouted and prayed as if they thought the millennium was at hand.

Before finally disappearing the ship, for a few seconds, appeared to slow down and for a few moments was almost stationary, then, gathering speed once more, started off to the south at a rapid gait, and was not seen again.

Mr. Sarr says he is willing to make affidavit to all he has related above, and that he can produce 40 or 50 good citizens who are likewise prepared to do the same.

KENTUCKY

1897 April 12 (Mon) Louisville Evening Post, p. 3.

Flies By Night. / Mysterious Airship Seen at Anderson, Ind. / Was Low Enough to Hear the Wings Rattling.

ANDERSON, Ind., April 12 (Special).--The people of this town who have been laughing at the stories of an airship that was seen by people in many Illinois and Missouri towns last week are convinced today that reports were true. The mysterious fly-by-night was seen by 200 people of this town last night. It was flying so low the rattling of the wings could be heard and the large aerial flyer circled around over town for ten minutes before rising and sailing away to the north. The mayor of one Illinois town has written a signed statement for a Chicago paper telling of his look at the airship. He says it is the wonder of the century.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Louisville (Ky) Evening Post, p. 6. (card 1)

AIRSHIP PASSED IN THE NIGHT / ...

For the past few days reports have been flying over the country that a mysterious airship was passing over the land, and was apparently headed toward Kentucky. Strange were the stories told of this mysterious visitor. Wherever it went it spread terror and confusion among the stock and awe and superstition among men. A glance at this prodigy coursing through the heavens bright with red and green lights, caused cats and dogs to flee to places of safety, cows to bellow in their barns and horses to kick their stalls to splinters. In some of the small towns over which the airship passed it was supposed to be an omen of wrath to come. Revivals were held, and the inhabitants prepared themselves for the judgment day. It was last seen on Saturday at Winemas, a little town in Indiana. Now Augustus Rodgers of near Louisville claims it passed over Louisville last night.

Nothing had been heard of it for several days when Rodgers, who lives two miles south of the city, came out of his cabin an hour before daylight to attend to his stock. There immediately above him at a distance of 400 feet according to his story, was a terrifying and yet a beautiful sight. A huge, oblong shape, says Rodgers, apparently about 40 feet by 15 feet, brilliantly lighted, for it was yet dark, and flying through the air at a speed of 100 miles an hour, met his eyes. The vision, Rodgers says, was in the form rather of a barge than a ship, with massive proportions and solidity. Rodgers called to his wife, who came out, and together they watched the strange sight as it disappeared to the southeast. Before it vanished uncouth and enormous shadows flickered from all parts of the ship, and both Rodgers and his wife saw a form, like that of a man, standing at the front of the ship and directing its course.

Exactly ten minutes later John S. McCollough, who lives a short distance back of Churchill Downs, was driving down a lonely road toward town. It was still very dark, and McCollough had great difficulty in seeing the road before him, but it was suddenly illumined by a great light.

McCollough, who is a Bible scholar, was instantly reminded of the time in holy writ when the light appeared to Saul of Tarsus on his way to Damascus. He pulled up and tied his horse and stepped onto the road. As yet he could see nothing, but the woods and road were as bright as day. A moment later he heard a whirring sound, and the airship was over his head.

He says as the ship flashed out of sight a small black object leaped from off it and struck a few feet from McCollough. He picked himself up and went to it and found it to be a half-burnt coal.

Rodgers and McCollough are both reputable citizens and as they are willing to swear to what they saw their story is attracting attention. Altogether the whole affair is most incomprehensible and has an uncanny look.

1897 April 13 (Tues) Louisville Evening Post, p. 3.

Party of Morganfield People Anxious to See the Air Ship.

It is said that Charles Hart, of the Morganfield Sun, has been holding nightly [levees] on his roof to enable friends to catch a glimpse of the "airship" which has been flying around in that part of

The strange air ship was not seen in Springfield.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Louisville Evening Post, p. 3 (card 1)

Airship. / Mayor and Reputable Citizens of Russellville Saw It Last Night. / The Speedy Aerial Flier Also Convinced Skeptics in Todd County. / Is Said to Have Been Built in Glasgow and Conveyed to Another Town. / Letter from the "Pegasus."

WHAT THE AIRSHIP IS

The airship plod the azure fields, / And sailed the mountains steep. She toar the engy clouds above, / And thru the storms did creep. She flopt her wings ora wavin' grain, / The mity winds sha'd burn Sheavuz a pit cher to behoold / A beaut from stem to stern. The sity people watched all nite / For it to cum that way, And farmers grab'd their whiskers tite / For fear they'd be blo away. At last some blasted thing flew by, / Majestic, grand, serene An' next day all the papers sed, / "An airship has been seen." Jay birds wearin' bloomer pants / On Fridays will be seen, When we can travel thru the air / In a sho-nuff flying machine. It's jout ai plain opinyun this, / They ain't just what they seems They're simpy brayin' night-mules / Appearin' in our dreams.

--Ted Spoonward.

RUSSELLVILLE, Ky., April 16.--(Special).--The skeptics can hoot the airship idea all they want, but there is some sort of strange aerial cruiser in this part of the country almost every night. As many as ten reputable citizens have seen this fly-by-night, and they are willing to make oath to the statements. An oath is never necessary, however, when such men as Mayor Andrews, Col. James McCutchen the wealthy dry goods merchant, Dr. Charles Forehand, the noted "huskey root" purveyor give in their testimony.

These three gentlemen tell the Evening Post man that they saw the airship plainly and distinctly last night. They say they were attracted by the noise and, thinking it was wild geese flying over, looked up more through force of habit than through any expectation of seeing anything beyond the ordinary. They saw a queer-shaped thing circling around high up in the air. The head light or searchlight or whatever it is was flashing around a circle about fifty yards in circumference. They say it sailed off to the west after it had circled around over the town for a few minutes. It was speedy, and the light looked to be small, which is thought to be proof that the airship was high in the air.

Other persons in the country nearby report that they also saw the strange aerial visitor.

TODD PEOPLE SAW IT

Other Witnesses to the Truth of the Airship Story.

ALLENSVILLE, Ky., April 16.--(Special).--The airship is a certainty. While many people were joking each other about the "faks" night before last, a well-known farmer came in and made oath to the fact that he saw the thing flying around above his farm. This was taken with a grain of salt in spite of the gentleman's unquestionable standing, but last night five citizens of the nearby community saw it, and one negro says he could hear the machinery working as plainly as he can hear the noise of a train when it moves through the town. These gentlemen have certainly seen something and there is no discounting that. Your correspondent has not seen the "sails," but he would stake his last dollar on the truth of the statements made by the men who have told him of the nightly flier.

BUILT IN KENTUCKY.
The Airship Dropped a Letter and Its a Penny(Elk)[?] Product.
Appleton, Wis.--[Pegasus story].
SEEN IN CLARKSVILLE.

CLARKSVILLE, Tenn., April 18.--(Special.)--The mysterious airship was seen by a number of citizens here last night, flying about a mile above the city in a northwesterly direction.

SEEN IN CHRISTIAN COUNTY.
HOPKINSVILLE, Ky., April 16.--(Special.)--The airship certainly and surely passed over this city about 9 o'clock last night. It was seen by men whose statements cannot be doubted. Marshall Fouks, a prominent citizen, saw it plainly from his porch, traveling in a northerly direction at a very rapid speed. It very soon disappeared.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Louisville Courier-Journal, p. 2. (card 1)

A
IS THIS IT? / Belief That An Air Ship Is Hidden In Kentucky. / INVENTION OF HARRY TIBBS. / He Had Been Working In Secrecy For Many Years. / HARRY T. B JOHNSON'S STORY. /

The mystery surrounding the huge air ship which many persons in different parts of the state claim they have seen floating through the air at the height of about 250 feet has been solved. At any rate, Mr. Harry T. Johnson, who resides on Market street, between Seventh, tells a story which he is positive will disclose the mystery.

Mr. Johnson says that in January, 1896, he was a member of a fishing party whose camp was located on the shores of Big Lake George in Florida. One day a stranger came to the camp and asked for a job as general utility man about the camp. The young man possessed a wonderful amount of general information and was extraordinarily intelligent. He was given the job he asked for, and in the course of a few days became a great favorite among the boys in camp. He and Mr. Johnson became good friends. He never told his name until one afternoon when the two were left alone in the camp. He then said he was Harry Tibbs and said that he was an expert civil engineer and electrician.

Tibbs went on to say that he had been working on an air ship for years and had exhausted his funds. In order to make more money to perfect his invention he had gone to Birmingham, Ala., where he thought he could get work. He was unable to do so, however, and wandered further south, where he hoped to secure employment, save some money and go back to Cincinnati, where the unfinished air ship was ~~xxxx~~ stored.

Tibbs told Johnson never to mention what he had told him. The young inventor was a great student and was the life of the camp. He remained at Big Lake George for several weeks and then left for Cincinnati. Before his departure he told Johnson that he had accepted a position as civil engineer for the Brush Electric Light Company, on Eighth street, in Cincinnati, and that it would not take long for him to complete his invention.

"Then, said he, "I am going to go down to the mountains in Kentucky make a more perfect ship and keep it there until I can secure a patent on it. I expect to make several tests of it in Kentucky before I apply for the patent."

Not long ago Mr. Johnson received a letter from Tibbs, which read as follows:

"I believe the ship is a success. I have made a trip in it by night from Cincinnati to Erie, Pa., and it works like a charm. You write to me at the address I have given you. If I don't answer you may know that I am in your state with the ship."

Mr. Johnson says Tibbs once gave him a description of the ship, which coincides precisely with the way it has been described by the persons who claim they have seen it. Mr. Johnson further says that Tibbs is not a crank, as many inventors are, but is an intelligent, bright young man, whose face showed that he had spent days and nights in trying to perfect the invention. Tibbs' idea in going to the Kentucky mountains was to keep any one from seeing the ship, for he feared some one might get an idea of the plan and beat him to Washington.

Col. Bennett H. Young said last night that he had been out on the Eighteenth-street road last Friday night, where he had been invited to speak, and while he was there a couple of men rushed into the hall and said that they had seen the air ship. Col. Young and others went outside and saw a small light over toward the Indiana knobs. It looked very much like a balloon, but no one believed it was the ~~xxx~~ air ship. It was regarded in the light of a joke, for the thing disappeared about two minutes after it had been observed. The two men, said, Col. Young, claimed that they had seen the thing in the afternoon.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Louisville Evening Post, p. 3.

Still Cruising About. / The Airship Seen by Bowling Green People Last Night.

BOWLING GREEN, Ky., April 19.--(Special.)--The supposed airship was seen here last night at 7 o'clock. In the western sky was a large moving light which disappeared after an hour. Scores of people saw it, but it was too far away to distinguish its form, except in an imperfect way. It disappeared due west.

Tues Apr. 20, p. 8--The Airship a Certainty.--Make this doubly sure by buying one of our choic carpets, and your "HEIRSHIP" will not be questioned.

Fri. Apr. 18, p.2--There's an Airship. / Nashville's Centennial Managers Say It Will Be Exhibited There.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Apr. 16(Special)--The Tenn. Cen. managers say the arap is no fake, and that its owners are under contract to bring it to the Exposition, and it is expected here shortly.

1897 April 19 (Mon eve) Louisville Times, p. 2.

HAVE BEEN HITTING THE PIPE / Mercer County Man Says He Saw Angels Riding in That Air Ship. / Special to The Times

Harrodsburg, Ky., April 18.--There are people in this town and county who claim to have seen the aerial travelers in their craft sailing southward. One man who lives in the county, Mr. Samuel Bunnel thinks it was a celestial craft, with angels for passengers, who are reconnoitering this terrestrial sphere for some unknown purpose, perhaps with a view of locating a colony. He says when he drew his telescope on them he could see that the occupants of the contrivance had wings and were gorgeously dressed, and seemed to be playing on some kind of instruments. He thought he heard sounds like cymbals produce. Another man who peeped through the same glass says it was Elijah's chariot.

Miss. P. Dunn, M. Parks and L. Riker claim to have seen the air ship, but could not distinguish any people positively.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Daily News (Paducah, Ky.), p. 2 (card 1)

MADE OF THIN AIR. / The World Rubbernecks to See That Lightning Bug of the Heavens. / BOBTALLED COMET OR WHAT? / Far Above Paducah the Strange Voyager Flirts With the Sailing Man in the Merry Moon. / LITTLE 'STARS' WINK THE OTHER EYE. /

Has some star slipped his moorings and gone staggering through space like an aerial drunkard? Or has a new comet shed its tail and started on a tour of the firmament? Or has one of the heavenly bodies --busybodies would be a more appropriate name--been seized with a violent attack of St. Vitus dance? Or has some genius really invented an air ship that splits the welkin at its pilot's will? Or has the whole nation craned its neck star-gazing in an utterly foolish effort to see something that exists only in its own imagination? Or what? Yes, or what? That is the question that now curdles and fers ferments and congeals in the gray matter of the public. Some answer it one way and some another. The News declines to try to answer it at all.

But persons of undoubted veracity in many parts of Ohio, Missouri, Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana, West Virginia and perhaps other states say they have seen a queer aerial voyager of some sort within the last three weeks or so. And now this strange lightning bug of the horizon has paid the upper atmosphere of Paducah a visit. It has passed over low enough to be seen by the human eye, but high enough to avoid being arrested by the acute city officials for failure to take out license as a common carrier.

Friday night Mr. George Langstaff, Jr., and Judge I.M. Quigley were standing upon the front porch of the former's residence, on Court street between Seventh and Ninth, saw a light move across the heavens. They are confident it was the same strange meteor that has startled observers in such a number of towns in the central states since the 1st April.

About the ~~xx~~ same time Editor Starks and his wife witnessed a similar phenomenon from the front stoop of their home in Metropolis. Last night about 7:30 [?] o'clock [200] people gathered on North Fifth street in front of the Palmer house to watch a strange looking light which appeared to be moving in the northwestern horizon. Opinion varied as to whether the object was one of the planets or something more uncommon to mortal gaze. The crowd watched the light for nearly an hour. Some of the watchers swore that they saw the light move and flicker.

Balloonist Wm. Schumaker of Metropolis who has invented an air ship which he wants to try at his old stamping ground in this city, is feeling uneasy. He fears that some one has forestalled his discovery. He is now at St. Louis working up interest in his invention.

Two things are certain. Allowing that some one has solved the problem of aerial navigation, that lucky party has turned loose not one but a whole flock of the sky traveler, judging from the number reported to have been seen in different places at the same hour. The same genius has also put into practical use a medium of illumination far stronger than gas or electricity. /

Seen at Cairo, Too.

The Cairo Bulletin of Saturday said: "The great airship that has been seen in so many places recently passed to the westward of Cairo last evening about 8:30 o'clock [?]. Hundreds of people saw it and all recognized it at once by the descriptions given of it elsewhere. It was a really beautiful sight. As it moved very slowly westward about two degrees above the horizon various lights were displayed. Sometimes they were flaring and bright and sometimes varying in color, as if small cartridges of different colored Greek fire were ignited at intervals.

"After gazing upon it for a time the signal office was called by telephone to ascertain if its officers were on the alert for new heavenly bodies. When asked if they had been watching the heavens they replied promptly, 'Yes, we have; isn't it a beautiful sight.' 'Yes; say, do you think it is the same air ship that has been seen in so many other places?'"

"Then there came a laugh over the telephone and the reply, 'Haven't any doubt of it. The descriptions given tally exactly and it certainly has been on exhibition a great many nights. It is only the evening star, Venus, seen much magnified through vapory cloud strata; ~~xxx~~ very pretty, though, isn't it?'"

And that is all there is of the air ship hoax.

1897 April 21 (Wed) Louisville Evening Post, p. 2.

Flitted By. / Corbin and Madisonville See the Speedy Airship.

MADISONVILLE, Ky., April 21.--(Special.)--The airship was seen distinctly last night by Dayton Cooke, Robert Bradley, Mayor Holeman, A. Worley and others. There was great excitement, and the streets were crowded with people watching the aerial wonder.

*Th. April 22 p. 4--Kentucky Journalists Poke Fun at the Airship.
Georgetown Times. It is barely possible that the airship which was seen in Mercer county one night last week was only a disguised tollgate raider.

Owensboro Messenger. So many airships are now flying about that are long aerial collisions will be another feature of news in the columns of the up-to-date newspaper.

Hopkinsville New Era. The alleged airship is not the cow that jumped over the moon, as has been suggested, but, very probably, the planet Mercury.

Madisonville hustler. Anent (?) the airship that has so mysteriously appeared and disappeared at different places recently, a telegram is reported to have been received from Springfield, Tenn., Sunday night to the effect that the mysterious aerial visitor had passed that place headed this way. Acting upon the information thus received several of our citizens sat up till a late hour awaiting its passage, but in vain.

Paducah Register. The airship may be a myth, but an airship is quite as practical as many of the inventions that were a few years ago declared to be impossible. Edison, now living, was denounced as a crank because he contended that two telegraph messages could be sent across the same wire at the same time.

1897 April 21 (Wed. eve.) Owensboro, Ky., Daily Inquirer, p. 1.

THE AIRSHIP. / The Henderson Journal Says Fred Frayser Saw It But Fred Says No.

Henderson Journal: The air ship was first seen by Fred H. Frayser, the well-known grocery man. Mr. Frayser spent Monday night at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. William Elliott, on Terrace Hill. As he desired to have xxxxx on an early train, Mr. Frayser rose shortly before 6 o'clock yesterday morning and walked out of the house to the street.
As he passed along he heard a whizzing, whirring sound that seemed to come from a great distance.

Thoughts of the air ship immediately occurred to Mr. Frayser and he cast his eyes heavenward. Then he saw a strange sight. About 3,000 feet above the earth was a queer looking object, speeding swiftly over the city in a northerly direction. Mr. Frayser described the air ship as having a cigar shape, with a rotary screw behind and a canopy above it.

Mr. Frayser says he didn't see the air ship, and did not hear of it while in Henderson. Somebody put up a job on him, and it is his opinion that he did not go out of the Journal office to do it.

1897 April 22 (Wed.) Louisville Courier-Journal, p. 4.

Madisonville's Got 'Em Now.

Madisonville, Ky., April 21.--(Special.)--Madisonville has been sorely troubled of late on account of Hopkinsville, Clarksville, Owensboro and other rival towns anticipating her somewhat in glimpses of the airship. This morning she is happy. Last night at 9 o'clock a half dozen of her most reliable citizens had the pleasure of gazing upon the long-sought object of her tender solicitude. This aerial wonder hailed from the northeast and passed quietly and respectfully over toward the southwest. And while her Mayor and Chief of Police are both champion wing shots of the Pennyrite, Madisonville can not boast like some of her erstwhile rivals that she so far forgot ordinary proprieties as to shoot at the aerial flotilla, after luring it hitherward by her natural refluency.

Apr. 11 (Sun.) Sect. II, p. 9. The Governor of Kansas has been 8
"seeing things." He calls them "visions." One of these visions was an airship which he says appeared to him in the night, in the form of a bright light roving about over the streets of Topeka. It is probably a simple explanation of this vision to say that the Governor is a Kansan.
If, however, any additional explanation should be required it is perhaps sufficient to refer to the able editorial of the Larned (Kans.)
Chronoscope which we quoted the other day, and which assured the world that in Kansas, "for years we have been drinking whisky made of concentrated lye and rainwater, and beer that tastes like printer's ink sauce."

1897 April 11 (Sun.) Louisville Courier-Journal, p. 9. (Third 1)

PILLAR OF FIRE. / Strange Light Seen in the Northern Heavens. / Many Thought it the Appearance of a New Comet. / WAS IT THAT AIR SHIP?

If the air ship has been scooting back and forth through the heavens for the past month or more is no more substantial than the one which a dozen or more policemen and citizens saw at midnight Tuesday, it is a twin sort of a sham indeed. Ed. Farrell, one of the members of the life-saving crew, can claim the honor of exploding all the highly colored stories of starving men and the unmanageable and untamed piece of air mechanism.

Farrell was on the late watch Tuesday night and while in the tower at midnight taking a survey, preparatory to making his watch report, he discovered a pillar of fire in the northern heavens. The sky was particularly clear. The moon was just rising in the southeast. The pillar stood out in bold contrast with the clear blue of the sky. It was of a dull red color and was just a few degrees east of the north star. The pillar was about two feet and a half wide and perhaps twenty feet long. It did not reach as far down as the horizon and stood almost perpendicular.

There was no movement to the strange phenomenon. Farrell at no time thought it was the much-talked-of and written-about air ship, but concluded that he had discovered a new comet. He secured his glasses and made another inspection of the pillar, expecting to find a star at one end. In this he failed, but he watched the strip of light for about five minutes, during which it gradually faded away. It seemed to be a nebulous gathering through which he could see very readily. There was absolutely nothing about the phenomenon as substantial as an air

202 ship would be. He is of the opinion that the light was the wake of a meteor.

Mr. C.A. Myers saw the same curious phenomenon. He is ready to swear, so it is said, that the light was caused by the air ship, which for some reason seems to be hovering about Louisville.

Capt. John Tully, of the No.6 Enginehouse, and the rest of the members of the company saw the light also. They were all up, having just returned from a run with the engine. One of the company called attention to the peculiar sight, and the men at once concluded that it was the air ship. A member of the company said last night that it must have been the air ship because he did not know what else it could be.
The light, he said, moved in a northwesterly direction until it finally disappeared.

Others who saw the light and who believe it was made by the air ship are Lieut. Jefferson, of Seventeenth-street station; Mike McCue, Mad Connelly, Pat Kilgareff, Joe Eisert and George Booth. They all believe the light was the air ship because they could account for it in no other way.

1897 April 22 (Thu) Daily News (Paducah, Ky), p. 2.

N., C. & ST. L. TOWNS. /.../ THE AIR SHIP VISITS GALLOWAY. /.../ (From Murray Ledger, 22nd.)

The airship which has been seen at different points throughout the country passed over Murray Tuesday about 8 o'clock. It was noticed by a number of citizens. It is described by W.O. Wear, John Mills, Joe Radford and other gentlemen who were looking for it as a large cigar-shaped affair with immense wings. It was not very high here and the gay ropes and rods could be seen. The searchlight in the bow of the concern threw its rays a great distance ahead. Four men could be seen in the ship and they frantically waved at people who saw them. The machine took a zig-zag course and seemed to be unmanageable. It is the general opinion that the machinery is out of fix and the thing is wandering aimlessly about and its occupants are slowly starving and freezing to death, being unable to come down. /.../

Some of the boys sent up a paper balloon. Many citizens thought it was the air ship and much excitement was created. A cotton ball saturated with burning turpentine was attached to the balloon, which made a very good "searchlight."

1897 April 23 Louisville Evening Post, p. 3 (Fri).

Omnipresent. / That Airship Is Everywhere at Once and Everybody Sees It

There is either an airship or else there are some mighty good men who have been badly mistaken. From Rich Pond, Ky., comes a letter from Mr. H. P. Jordan, the well-known merchant, in which he says: "While returning from Bowling Green Tuesday night I saw the airship and it was a beautiful sight. I had supposed it was a fake, and was greatly surprised to see with my own eyes an aerial flyer that seemed to be lighted by electricity and going at about the rate of a passenger train. It flew directly over Rich Pond and was seemingly about 200 feet above me. Mr. B. L. Bender, of this place, also saw it, and he gives in substance about the same account as mine. There is some sort of airship, and we saw it down this way."

ditto/ Can't Be Doubted. / Three More Reputable Citizens See That Ubiquitous Airship.

BEREA, KY., April 23--(Special)--It is claimed that the airship passed over this place this week and was seen by three of the citizens here. Mr. Joe Johnston, the owner of a livery stable, was returning from the country about 10 o'clock, and saw an object in the sky with a light in each end. It was traveling in an easterly direction. Mr.
Golden also saw a similar object the same night as it passed the village. He says his attention was first directed to it by hearing a peculiar noise above. He called to his nephew to witness the strange sight. The men say it was not very high. All are men whose veracity cannot be doubted.

1897 April 23 (Fri) Paducah (Ky) Daily News, p. 3.

News Via Airship / A Heavenly Lightening Bug Brings Items of the Entire Section.

(From Metropolis (Ill.) Republican, 22nd.)
Nightly providers have seen imaginary flying ships during the past week.
(From Clinton Democrat, 22nd.)

The reason the editor was not written several columns about the airship is plain. He had his doubts about it, as most other honest people had, no doubt. He likes a liar, but he draws the limit at air ships.
(From Mayfield Monitor, 22nd.)

The air ship was seen by a number of Mayfield people Monday night.
The light from it was dimly visible high in the heavens and some viewers thought they could see the outlines of the strange craft. A closer inspection, however, showed the wonderful object to be a lightning bug, the first of the season, and the consequence was a disappointed crowd.
(From Princeton Republican, 22nd.)

Sunday night the airship was seen at Princeton by several responsible parties. Mr. Pasteur watched till nearly midnight and could plainly see it scooting through the heavens toward the west. The same night a farmer named Cross, living four miles east of here, got the only message yet received from the sky sailer. This letter gotten by Cross was picked up a few feet from his barn about (1) o'clock Monday morning.
He brought it to town and the Republican reporter succeeded in getting all of it. It reads: Enroute, April 13, 1897. Dear Friends: Pardon me for taking up your time, but I am the inventor of a machine which burns the wind at a rate of 175 miles an hour, and am now testing it.
Have been on the road now several days, and have not descended for fear someone will beat me out of my patent rights. I haven't any news except that I am enjoying myself hugely. X.Y.Z.

[From Marion Press, 22nd.]

For several weeks the newspapers have contained accounts of a huge airship seen floating over various sections of the country. Sunday night about 9 o'clock two reputable citizens of Marion, Messrs. Robert Hodges and J.C. Elder, Jr., were startled by the appearance of a huge light far up in the heavens southwest of town. To them it appeared like a big electric lamp; at one moment it was brilliant and then it diminished in size to a mere speck in the blue dome. They watched it for more than thirty minutes as it floated off to the west and disappeared from their range of vision.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Louisville Evening Post, p. 2.

Aerial Flyer. / Seen by Reputable Citizens of Lewisburg Last Night. LEWISBURG, Ky., April 24 (Special)--The light of the supposed airship was seen here last night by fifty or more people. Some of the most reputable citizens saw it and noted its movements. They say it was moving a little south of west, and appeared to be going at a xxx rapid rate of speed. Its outlines were plainly observed and many good citizens will swear that it was the aerial flyer.

1897 April 24 (Sat morn) Owensboro, Ky., Messenger, p. 4.

Seeing the Airship. / Still Flutters Around Over Kentucky, According to Reputable Citizens.

Perea, Ky., April 23.--It is claimed that the airship passed over this place this week and was seen by three of the citizens here. Mr. Joe Johnson, the owner of a livery stable, was returning from the country, about 10 o'clock and saw an object in the sky with a light in each end. It was traveling in an easterly direction. Mr. Golden also saw a similar object the same night as it passed over the village. He says his attention was first directed to it by a peculiar noise above. He called to his nephew to witness the strange sight. The men say it was not very high. All are men whose veracity cannot be doubted.

H.F. Jordan, the well known merchant of Rich Pond, Warren County, Ky., says: "While returning from Bowling Green Tuesday night I saw the airship and it was a beautiful sight. I had supposed it was a fake, and was greatly surprised to see with my own eyes an aerial flyer that seemed to be lighted with electricity, and going at the rate of a passenger train. It flew directly over Rich Pond, was seemingly about 100 feet above me. Mr. B.L. Bender, of this place, also saw it, and he gives in substance about the same account as mine. This is some sort of air-ship, and we saw it down this way.

Apr. 16. Arap distances train, Ia.

27. p. 9. That Air Ship--seen & described. w 2 men above, 1 airship supposed to attend local sale.

28. p. 10. Joseph McKite--balloon.

29. p. 11. Airship from Newport, Ky.

30. p. 12. Saw the Airship.

31. p. 13. May 12.--An airship passed over Hanover this morning, and was scientifically viewed and described by the college professor.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Paducah(Ky) Daily News, p. 3.

[From Princeton Banner, 23d.]

Mr. Samuel McElbrich and family, of this place, profess to have seen the aerial visitor on Saturday night about 9 o'clock. The rapidity of the moving object prevented them from getting a correct impression of its shape and size, but they saw the lights that it threw out and its bulk pictured against the sky.

[From Hickman Courier, 23d.]

The appearance of the so-called airship reported from various sections seems to vary at different points. Some are able to see it through a common tumbler, a champagne glass or a smoked glass while others require a demijohn or a quart bottle--bottom up.

26. p. 3 [From Murray Times, xxxix 27th.]

On the night of April 20, Burnett Holland and J.W. McDonald, who had been wasting sleepless nights watching for the great mysterious were rewarded at 7:30 o'clock when they discovered a real air ship sailing around in the heavens to the east of town.

May 15, p. 3 (Sat.) [From Bardwell Star, 14th.]

xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

Cyclones will probably abandon the old style garb of a balloon or funnel and come out in a fashionable cigar shaped costume this season.

April 17, p. 3 [From Mayfield Mirror, 16th.]

Lawyer Tom Wallace and Jess Scott declare they saw the air ship here about 10 o'clock Wednesday night. They must have been making astronomical observations through a bottle.

Apr. 9, p. 4: Paducah's arap line--Wm. Schumaker invents arsp.

21.1 Arap & Tariff--fr. St.L PD.

22.4 Arap man here again--Schumacher in city to confer with owners of park to build ship there.

1897 April 25 (Sun) Louisville Courier-Journal, sect. 11, p. 6.

SAW THE AIR SHIP. / Thomas J. Cosey, an L. & N. Clerk, the Latest Witness of the Freak. / Was Shaped Like a Cigar and Traveled 100 Miles an Hour.

Thomas J. Cosey, a clerk for the Louisville and Nashville railroad, who resides at 1237 13th street, says that he arose early yesterday morning and was standing in the rear of his home, when he heard a buzzing sound over his head. He quickly looked up toward the sky and saw the much-talked-of air ship just as plainly as if it were before him on the ground.

Mr. Cosey said: "The ship was going directly south. It was at a height of about 200 feet, and looked as though it was sailing through the air at the rate of about 100 miles per hour. A man was standing in the rear of the lower part of the ship, which was shaped exactly like a big cigar. He looked at me, and I waved my hat. Two other men were sitting in the helm. The man in the rear dropped a card, which bore the words, 'Mattoon, Ill.' I do not know whether to believe the ship was from Mattoon or not. When I saw the card falling I watched its course, and found it on 13th street several hundred yards from my house.

"Many people do not believe there is such a contrivance as an air ship, but I saw it with my own eyes. It did not take it long to pass out of view. I watched it until it had disappeared in the clouds far to the south."

Station keeper Tom O'Neil, of Central police station, says he saw the ship about the same time that Mr. Cosey did.

1897 April 25 (Sun) Owensboro (Ky.) Daily Inquirer, p. 1.

Saw the Airship.

Lewisburg, April 24.--A profound sensation was created here last night by the discovery of the lights of an airship moving in a south of west course and at a great height. It was witnessed by a great number of our most reputable citizens. There can be no doubt whatever that it was the airship that is said to have been seen in so many places.

April 16, p. 1.

Russellville, Apr. 16.--Several reputable citizens saw the airship last night.

Illinois and Iowa. Several of the best people of this place last night saw the airship which has been seen in various places in Illinois and Iowa.

1897 April 26 (Mon) Louisville Evening Post, p. 2.

They Saw It. / Airship, Like Banquo's Ghost, Just Will Not Down.

CLARKSVILLE, Tenn., April 26.--That mysterious airship was seen here at 9 o'clock last night, flying about a half mile high, and disappearing in a westerly direction. It could not have been a star, as it was too close and it was cloudy and sprinkling rain. It carried a very bright light as it darted fast through space.

1897 April 26 (Mon) Daily News (Paducah, Ky.), p. 1. (card 1)

THAT AIR SHIP. / Is Out of Order and is Now Resting for Repairs in the Tennessee Mountains

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., April 25.--The air ship reported almost daily for the past three weeks as having been seen in different sections of the country is said to have been seen at this place. It is said that the machine met with an accident to its working gear last night, and the navigator was compelled to descend for repairs.

Instead of being cigar or balloon shaped it is said to be in the exact shape of a snail, minus head and tail. The metal is aluminum, bound around with thin strips of steel. On each side of this are two large wings, which are fixed to knuckle and socket joints. The wings can be moved up or down, back or forward, or in any direction. This makes the ship rise or fall without any loss of gas.

Two motors, one electric and the other naphtha, give the motive power. It is said that from the stern there is a propeller at least nine feet in diameter, which has a maximum revolution of 900 turns a minute. The snail shaped portion is filled with hydrogen gas, having a pressure of twenty-seven pounds, and a lifting capacity of 1800 pounds.

The passenger car underneath the ship is nine feet long, four feet wide and three feet deep, and is made of bamboo and aluminum strips, which combine strength and lightness. The navigator is said to carry provisions in the shape of canned goods and compressed biscuits. Aluminum vessels comprise the culinary utensils.

Several presumably truthful citizens of this city have given the foregoing account of the vessel. They say that they came upon the vessel resting on a spur of a mountain near this city. Two men were at work on it and explained that they had been compelled to return to earth because the machinery was out of order. One of the men said his name was "Prof. Charles Davidson." He is alleged to have said that the vessel left Sacramento a month ago and has since been sailing over the country. /

Saw the Air Ship.

LOUISVILLE, April 25.--Thomas J. Casey, a clerk for the Louisville and Nashville railroad, who resides at 1227 Thirteenth street, says that he arose early yesterday morning and was standing in the rear of his house, when he heard a buzzing sound over his head. He quickly looked up toward the sky and saw the much talked of air ship just as plainly as if it were before him, on the ground.

Mr. Casey said, "The ship was going directly south. It was at a height of about 200 feet and looked as though it was sailing through the air at the rate of about 100 miles an hour. A man was standing in the rear of the lower part of the ship, which was shaped exactly like a big cigar. He looked at me and I waved my hat. I saw other men were sitting in the helm. The man in the rear dropped a card, which bore the words 'Mattoon [sic], Illinois.' I do not know whether to believe the air ship was from Mattoon or not. When I saw the card falling I watched its course and found it on Thirteenth street several hundred yards from my house.

"Many people do not believe there is such a contrivance as an air ship, but I saw it with my own eyes. It did not take it long to pass out of view. I watched it until it had disappeared in the clouds far to the south."

Stationkeeper Tom O'Neil of Central police station, says he saw the ship about the same time that Mr. Casey did.

1897 April 27 (Sun) Louisville Courier-Journal, p. 5.

Doc Starbuck / Dropped from the Airship as it Passes Over Corbin. / ...

three miles per hour--but nowhere, save near Denver, Col., did we halt. Near this city our feather-jib loosened and we descended to repair it. Here we were interviewed by some of the farming people. "I can state generally, for public information, that the Baglet is constructed of aluminum and linen, has two fore-and-aft propellers, four fans each, two bat wings on either port, is capable of holding five passengers and provisions, and, supplied with a compressed gas, an hundred times lighter than air, can remain suspended or in motion for seventeen days, according to the consumption of gas. This product is the result of an eminent scientist of France. Further than this, I can say nothing.

1897 April 27 (Sun) Louisville Courier-Journal, p. 5. (card 1)

THE AIR SHIP / Mystery that is Holding the City in Awe. / ONE MAN'S STORY. / Says He Has Traveled On the Vessel To Evansville. / LETTER FROM ITS "MASTER."

Is the air ship a reality? Has it really been hovering around the city for the past few days? Is it now concealed in some secluded spot only a few miles from the city?

"Years, money and talent have been expended in the construction of similar machines, and almost all were built upon a misconception of the idea. Our perfected model, easily handled, safe and shandy, will be exhibited in due time to the public. As yet our patent papers are in embryo. Until then have a patient faith in the genius of man, nor doubt that yourself, your aunts and cousins may ascend in New York at 6 a.m., reaching London the following afternoon. R.L. SMELLING."

These are questions which are suggested by the numerous and varied rumors which were afloat yesterday and last night about the alleged mysterious visitor. The will-o-the-wisp which has been interesting the whole central part of the country for weeks past has seemingly been brought right to our doors, and it remains for some daring explorer to ferret out the deep, dark mystery which hangs about the affair, and win to himself glory, beside which Stanley or Hansen will pale as the tallow-candle beside the arc light.

Several little incongruities may be mentioned in connection with the letter. It will be observed that the altitude said to have been reached was ten miles, at which altitude the generally accepted theory has been that there is not enough air to support animal life, and that the temperature approximates that of the north pole. It is also evident that the air ship descends every day to get a copy of the Courier Journal, and that when she started yesterday and Mr. Smelling dropped his note he had some misgivings and descending concluded himself to bring it to the Courier-Journal office, masquerading as Joshua Gates. The handwriting in the letter and the note on the back of the envelope are evidently the same.

A mysterious visitor entered the Courier-Journal editorial rooms early last night. After talking a while he became confidential, and let out the information that he himself had seen the air ship; in fact, that only yesterday he had taken an aerial voyage on it. He said he had gone to Evansville on the ship, starting from some point near Louisville. There were five men in the party, but one of them was taken ill and left at Evansville. Last night they returned and alighted at a point near Jeffersonville, where the ship, he said, was concealed while he was talking.

Again Mr. Smelling calls his craft "The Baglet," which is far from being expressive and romantic than that chosen by the aerial navigator who wrote the Courier-Journal a not the day before and called the ship "The Illuminati."

"To-night at 11 o'clock," said the visitor, "we will start from Jeffersonville for a trip across the Atlantic. We expect to go direct to London, and I will send a cablegram from there Monday to the Courier-Journal. If a reporter for the paper will meet me at 11 o'clock to-night I will take him over to Jeffersonville and show him the ship before we start, and take him to Europe with us if he would like to go."

1897 May 2 (Sun) Louisville Courier-Journal, sect. 1, p. 10.

The reporter was more than anxious to go, and was on hand at the time and place appointed, but the mysterious man failed to show up.

SAW THE AIRSHIP. / A Middlesborough Man Willing to Make an Affidavit. / Middlesborough, Ky., May 1.--(Special).--The famous air ship can not be a myth, as it was plainly seen in this section last night. Gillis Hendricks, section foreman on the L. & N. railroad, is willing to make affidavit to that effect. He describes it as being a conical-shaped affair, carrying blue and white signals, and says it did not travel 30 seconds in any given direction, but veered alternately to the four winds. Hendricks' story is laughed at, but he swears that it is true.

There is other testimony to the effect that the air ship has been seen in this vicinity recently. Within the last few days at least a dozen reputable citizens have told the Courier-Journal that they had seen it. The matter has been a subject of very general gossip about town recently, and there are many people who implicitly believe that the problem of aerial navigation has been successfully solved.

1897 May 11 (Tues) Louisville Courier-Journal, p. 4. (card 1)

From still another source comes information of mystery. The following communication was received through the mails by the Courier-Journal last night. It was mailed from Louisville:

LUMINARY / Describes a Circle and Sails For Indiana. / WAS IT THE AIR SHIP? / Many Witnesses Saw the Strange Visitor. /

Louisville, April 29, 1897.--Editor Courier-Journal, Louisville, Kentucky: I have flown about the State of Kentucky, revisiting the scenes of my childhood and early manhood. Now I am off to the European continent. You will hear of me Monday, 3d of May, over Constantinople. Reason why I never alight on terra firma, where my ship can be seen, is obvious, viz.: I am the MASTER OF THE WORLD. Kindly yours,

The air ship has been seen again. It has presumably returned safely from its European trip, for last night it appeared over the city, and was seen moving toward Jeffersonville, where it has a refuge, according to the "Master of the Illuminati." This time the "what-is-it" was seen by too many reputable citizens to admit of a doubt that there was something passing over the city, but whether it was an air ship or a balloon remains an unsolved problem.

"MASTER OF THE ILLUMINATI" These evidences of the existence of a machine which, if it is really a fact, will be the wonder of the wonderful Nineteenth century, are given for what they are worth. Seventy million people are waiting expectantly for the man who will verify or disprove them, and the time has come for the discoverer who will put Hansen in the shade. An expectant public breathlessly watches for his appearance. Will he step forth?

It was about 8:45 o'clock that the apparition appeared, an hour rather too early to allow the charge that the observers could see two moons. At that time there were several well-known citizens standing at the corner of Fourth and Jefferson streets talking. They saw a bright light in the eastern sky, described by one observer as about the size of a hat, which approached them rapidly. It seemed to be moving in a direction a little north of west, and appeared to be coming almost above Jefferson street. When apparently nearly overhead, however, it veered sharply to the north, and after describing a circle disappeared in the direction of Jeffersonville.

1897 May 11 (Tues) Louisville Courier-Journal, p. 5. (card 1)

LETTER / From a Navigator in the Air Ship. / CRUISING OVER LOUISVILLE. / Moves Eighty-Three Miles an Hour Ten Miles From Earth. / TRIP TO INDIANA.

Mr. Isidore Wittelschofer, of the firm of Rosenham & Co., was one of the observers. He said: "When I first saw the light, it appeared to be moving almost straight down Jefferson street. It was coming quite rapidly, and moved entirely too fast for a balloon, I think, especially in view of the light wind which was blowing. It came straight on until it was nearly overhead, when it turned and made almost directly north. Immediately afterward it apparently described a complete circle, and then continued on its northerly course, disappearing in the direction of Jeffersonville. I could not tell how high it was. It might have been a mile or so, or only a few hundred feet. I did not think it was very far off."

The air ship is still in the wind. Last evening an envelope addressed to the Courier-Journal was left on the counter in the business office on the back of which was the following note:

Charley King, who is employed at Rosenham's, said: "Yes, I saw the air ship, or whatever it was, very plainly."

"Found near the corner of Twenty-eighth and Portland avenue by Joshua Gates."

The testimony of several other witnesses was practically to the same effect, and all agree on the main details. The matter was the subject of general comment on the down-town streets last night. Those who [had] seen the light seemed to incline to the belief that it was something more than a balloon, but others were decidedly skeptical.

The envelope contained the following letter: "On Board the Baglet, near Louisville, April 30, 1897.--We are greatly amused over the newspaper information concerning the flying machine. It appears that 50 per cent. believe the stories and 50 exercise a heroic impartiality, believing 'nothing in it.'"

Observer O'Connor, of the Weather Bureau, says that at the time of the vision the wind was blowing steadily from the south, and had been in that quarter for several hours. It is said that the light disappeared behind one side of the Equitable building, and almost immediately reappeared on the other side. That being the case it was evidently not far off, or it could not have covered so many degrees of the horizon in so short a time. This proves that it was not high in the air, or the building could not have obscured it when so close. All of which goes to show that the light was probably low enough to be reached by the current of air blowing on the surface, and, therefore, if it had been a balloon it would have drifted steadily from the south to north instead of describing eccentric curves and circles. The Courier-Journal has had communications recently from the

"At any rate, the aerial machines hovered over your city under the broad sunlight of April 28, and but that people will not look up, thousands might have seen the Baglet gracefully sailing toward the South at a downward speed of thirty miles an hour, capable of attaining full speed with great pressure of an hundred miles in the space of time. "Such an experiment is a success, as our voyage from Los Angeles, Cal., eastward will prove. "The true altitude attained during the trip was about ten miles, and totally avoiding topographical prominences, with a varying tack, east and south, of perhaps fifty miles, and a mean speed of eighty-

"Master of the Illuminati" and Snelling, of "The Farler," in regard to the air ship. If either is now rendezvoused in the wilds back of Jeffersonville he will ease the mind of an harassed public by coming forward and stating whether it was his craft which last night passed over the city.

TENNESSEE

1897 April 14 (Wed) Nashville American, p. 8.

SAW THE AIR SHIP. / SOME GOOD PEOPLE OF ROBERTSON COUNTY THINK THEY DID. / ~~NEVER~~ Describe it as a Monster of Ferocious Mien, Which Scared the Darkies--Reads Well, Anyhow. /

SPRINGFIELD, April 13.--(Special.)--The statement was made to "The American's" correspondent this afternoon that an air ship, or whatever it may be, was seen in the heavens near Adairville, Ky., last night, and that it created great astonishment and terror among the people. "The American's" informant was John S. Sarr, who is a well known and substantial farmer, who lives about two miles this side of Adairville, in Robertson County.

Mr. Sarr stated that the strange aerial navigator appeared in the northern horizon about 8:30 p.m., and was viewed for an hour by the excited populace. The light, he stated, was about the size of an ordinary locomotive headlight, but was brighter, and from the effulgent rays shed by the monster he judged it to be electric.

The attention of those who first saw the air ship was attracted by a bright light appearing at least twenty inches in diameter, the reflection from which passed along what appeared to be a steel body, the length of which Mr. Sarr estimated at from twenty-five to thirty feet. The object was about three-quarters of a mile high.

On either side of the strange visitor were large projections, which at short intervals could be plainly seen by the astonished watchers, and which were doubtless propellers or wings. Upon the forward end a bright light was discernible, which was evidently used as a headlight, and upon the rear was carried a red lantern.

The phenomenon was witnessed for fully an hour before finally disappearing. At times it would remain almost stationary, then again it would dart off with the velocity of a bird and sail away until the lights merely twinkled.

Mr. Sarr says the people in his vicinity are simply nonplussed, and that the negroes are overcome with abject terror. Many of them shouted and prayed as if they thought the millennium was at hand.

Before finally disappearing the ship, for a few seconds, appeared to slow down and for a few moments was almost stationary, then, gathering speed once more, started off to the south at a rapid gait, and was not seen again.

Mr. Sarr says he is willing to make affidavit to all he has related above, and that he can produce forty or fifty good citizens who are likewise prepared to do the same.

The strange air ship was not seen in Springfield.

1897 April 14 (Friday) Daily Leaf-Chronicle (Clarksville, Tenn.), p. 1.

THE AIRSHIP SEEN HERE. / A Number of Reputable Colored People Saw It in The Sky / Last Night While They Were en Route to Church About 8 O'clock. / Appeared to be About a Mile From Earth, Traveling in a North-Westerly Direction. /

The mysterious air-ship claimed to have been seen at different places in this section quite recently, has been seen by Clarksville people, so a number of colored citizens reported at the office of the Leaf-Chronicle this morning. Last night about 8 o'clock while Elder A. P. Wimberly, pastor of Mount Olive Baptist church, Elder A. L. Lewis, Pleasant Pinnick, who is employed at Jarrell's wagon factory, his wife and his wife's mother were in the act of leaving Pinchen's home on Main near Lievenh street, to go to church, the air-ship was seen by Wimberly, who called the attention of the others to it. The ship appeared to be about a mile from the earth, was flying a number of miles northwest from the city, now far those who saw it cannot tell. They are all positive as to what it was from what they have read of it, and state that its movements were very swift at times. The colored people viewed the flying object for perhaps twenty minutes, until it was hidden from their sight by trees and buildings. They are positive it was not a star, balloon, kite with a light attached, or anything of the sort, that it was too large and the light shed from it too bright, resembling more than anything else, the headlight of a locomotive. The strange thing, at times, would take circuitous turns, darting with great rapidity through space, and again it would assume a direct, steady motion.

William Tanner, an employee of the Electric Street Railway, states that he saw this air-ship night before last, flying over base ball hill, in South Clarksville, where Tanner lives. He describes it in much the same manner as the colored people.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Daily Sun (Nashville, Tenn.), p. 2.

IT IS SURELY HERE. / The Mysterious Air Ship Is Seen by Reputable People. / The Shape and Different Lights Clearly Described. / It Comes Near Earth at Night for Electrical Energy. /

"It" is here. "It" is the wonderful and mysterious air ship that has been disturbing the inhabitants of several Western States for the past month. At first "It" was supposed to be headed for Dwight, Ill., but when "It" hovered over Chicago for a number of days and was seen by several policemen and other reputable citizens whose veracity has never been questioned, "It" became an assured fact, instead of a mythical "what is it."

The first knowledge that it was headed in this direction was given in The Sun on Tuesday morning in a telegraph from Chicago stating that A. C. Clinton, of Omaha, wanted 87,000 square feet of space for his air ship. The ship is said to comfortably seat sixty persons and ascend to a height of 20,000 feet.

205 Prof. Clinton evidently does not propose that his wonderful invention shall lose its novelty prior to May 1, as he ascends to such a height during the day that as yet it has not been seen during daylight. At night he descends toward the earth for the purpose of restoring his batteries from the electrical energies of this sphere that is called the earth.

It is during these nocturnal visits that the air ship is seen. Naturally it is seen but by few people, and the description varies greatly. Monday night it was seen in various places in Illinois and on Tuesday and Wednesday nights in Kentucky.

At 11:27 last night it was first seen by James C. James, who lives between St. Cecilia and the Jewish Cemetery, in North Nashville. He immediately telephones The Sun and gave the following description. He said:

"I was just about to go to bed when I was attracted by what I supposed to be a shooting star. On taking a second look I saw that the light was sometimes in a horizontal and other times in a perpendicular position. It appeared to me to be something like a locomotive headlight moving from side to side and up and down. Then I saw a red light and in a moment a green one. They gradually disappeared until lost to view. Five minutes later I saw the white light, dim at first, then brighter and brighter. I then saw behind the light a cigar-shaped form about forty feet long, conical or cigar shaped.

"Just as I saw it clearest it switched off to the northwest and in a moment was gone. It was certainly an air ship. My hired man and daughter also saw it. No, I had not been down town and there is not a saloon within ten blocks of my house."

There is no doubt about "it." Several parties in New Town saw a mysterious light in the heavens. Four policemen reported by telephone to the Sergeant that they had seen red and green lights that they had never before noticed. The motorman of the last Beuna Vista car said he had seen a white light that appeared to be directly before him but could give no further description of it.

"It" is here and every description of it coincides with that in the papers in different localities. The air ship that appeared in Omaha and Chicago is certainly in or near Nashville.

About 2:45 o'clock this morning, as Dr. W. R. Tune, of No. 316 North College, was crossing the bridge, answering a late call, his attention was attracted by a moving light of extreme brilliancy which appeared to be turning the bend of the river across the wooded point opposite the Hospital. Dr. Tune states that he at first thought the light was attached to the stacks of a steambot, but a very few minutes dispelled any such idea. The light was traveling at a rate of speed never attained by a steambot. He says only a few seconds were required in traversing the distance from the old reservoir to the upper wharf. Then he gained the first glimpse of the strange nocturnal visitor. In distinct view, from the bridge, by the gleam of the arc light at the foot of Broad street, were revealed the outlines of what is undoubtedly a bona fide airship.

The brilliant light which first attracted his attention was attached to the bow of a long, cigar-shaped object which was speeding through the air with lightning-like rapidity. As soon as the ship got opposite Broad street several broad plates which extended at right angles to and above the vessel on both sides, were shifted, the clank of machinery being faintly heard, and in a moment the monster mounted to an altitude of over 800 feet and changed its course to a northwesterly one.

Dr. Tune states that the progress of the ship was not marked by any noises save a whirring sound. He estimates the machine to be about sixty-five feet in length, and says it has a round, pointed, cigar shape.

From his description there can be no doubt it is forced through the air by large propellers located about the stern, and that it has appliances of the aeroplane variety for elevating or depressing its altitude. He says that after clearing the tops of the Market-street houses it gradually rose higher and higher until it had reached a height of over 500 feet, its searchlight being constantly shifted from right to left, up and down. He also noticed two smaller lights near the stern of this remarkable vessel, one red, the other green. When last seen it was speeding in a northerly direction. The Doctor was indignant at the slightest question implying incredulence, and stated very emphatically that he had $500 which had been recently paid to him on a judgment in a damage suit against the city, for personal injuries, which he would be glad to bet any man that this ship did pass over Nashville as stated.

Sylvester Carter, porter of Ye Old Inn, was standing in front of the saloon on Cherry street shortly before 8 o'clock, and he was paralyzed by seeing what he designated "an electric car" passing far over the houses on College street. He immediately called Mr. Ben Brown, who rushed to the front, but too late to see anything but an indistinct form and the tiny twinkling red and green lights of the ship as it passed out of sight in a northerly direction.

A number of gentlemen who had been enjoying a quiet dinner at one of the swell up-town hosteleries were standing at the corner of Cedar and Cherry streets when the airship passed over. The party was composed of Messrs. M. Bert Pletz, S. Chester Keller, George Johnson, Ed Fred S. Mulligan, Senator Ryan and Dr. Harry Saxton.

Their attention was directed to it by Mr. Johnson, who is something of an expert in the aeronautic line. It was sailing gracefully, about 3,000 feet above earth and its form was clearly outlined against the skies. Their descriptions corroborate in every respect the dimensions and general aspect of the vessel as described by Dr. Tune.

Quite a number of people living in the northern portion of the city, telephoned the police station in regard to the strange monster seen floating high above and bearing a bright white light and two smaller colored ones.

Although decried (sic) by several members of the force, it has attained such a height that its outlines were very indistinct. (Overlook) to the extreme lateness of the hour no further facts in regard to the strange aerial visitant up to the time of going to press (sic).

1897 April 16 (Fri eve) Nashville (Tenn) Banner, p. 1. (cap 1)

THE AIRSHIP IS COMING. / Should Reach Nashville Within Twenty-four Hours. / Under Contract to the Centennial Management. / It Will Be the Greatest Aerial Voyage of the Present Century.

The most wonderful aerial accomplishment of the century is near at hand and will ~~xxx~~ probably reach its fulfillment at the Centennial grounds within the next twenty-four hours.

It will be the arrival in transit of the air ship which has been in motion on its aerial journey to Nashville all the week and has excited every city and town over which it has passed, as well as perplexed the press of the country.

The feat is so wonderful that newspapers all over the country have treated the reports of the progress with scorn.

It may prove to be a fake. But this much is certain--the owners of it are under contract to the Centennial Exposition Company and the ship was due to arrive here yesterday. The conditions of the atmosphere, of course, prevented any accurate schedule, even if there had been any previous voyage of the kind by which to compute the required time.

It is not regarded as a fake by any means at Centennial headquarters and its descent on the Exposition grounds is looked for at any hour.

If it should fail to arrive, the scoffers will continue to jeer, but if it does arrive, the world will applaud the voyage and the Centennial be better advertised than ever before.

REPUTABLE PEOPLE.

Say They Saw the Airship Pass Over This Town. / Special to the Banner. Russellville, Ky., April 16.--Mayor Andrews, Dr. Chas. Forehand and Jas. McCutchen, the oldest and wealthiest merchant in this county, saw what they believe to have been an air ship pass over this town last night between ~~the~~ ~~xxxx~~ 10 and 11. They say they were walking home together and that the moving headlight and large black body could be seen as plainly as the moon. They are such reputable citizens the people who had been calling the air ship stories fakes are now convinced. It was seen by a dozen men in the nearby country communities.

SEEN AT SPRINGFIELD.

It Was Headed Towards the Centennial City. / Special to the Banner. Springfield, April 16.--Several responsible men of this county told the Banner's correspondent to-day that they saw the air ship Tuesday night over Parren Plains, seven miles north of here. It was going southward. These men claim that it was between 9 and 10 o'clock at night when they witnessed the ship.

SAW THE AIRSHIP.

Citizens of Allensville Behold the Aerial Visitor. / Special to Banner. Allensville, Tenn., April 16.--Five citizens of unquestionable veracity saw the air ship or saw some strange aerial visitor, fly from west to east last night about 10. They are all mystified about the thing and a crowd here will watch for it to-night.

A MILE HIGH.

Going in a Northwesterly Direction When Seen at Clarksville. / Special to the Banner. Clarksville, Tenn., April 16.--The mysterious air ship was seen by a number of persons ~~xxx~~ here early last night. It appeared to be about a mile high, going in a northwesterly direction.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Daily Leaf-Chronicle (Clarksville, Tenn.), p.1 (cd1)

MESSAGE FROM MARS / Origin of the Air Ship Ingeniously Accounted For. / It Was Never Invented and Built on This Mundane Sphere. / If So, It Would Have Been Heralded Through the Papers With a Great Blare of Trumpets. / A To the Leaf-Chronicle.

I have been much interested with the various accounts of the air-ship seen over Colorado, Kansas, Indiana and in the past week hovering over Clarksville, Trenton, Allensville and other points, and collecting the evidence of the many witnesses have come to certain conclusions which are submitted to you.

First, the aerial navigator was never invented and built on this earth. If so, it would have been ~~xxx~~ heralded through the paper with a great blare of trumpets. Its starting point and hour of departure would have been telegraphed with precision, and its occupants would have traveled with all possible speed to some point and landed, and time telegraphed to show the speed made.

Scientists assert that the inhabitants of Mars have superior intelligence to our people, and must have made far greater progress in the sciences. They report that the Martians have been signalling the earth with electrical lights for more than a year. An air machine can only be driven by electricity, and such a machine after penetrating the thin atmosphere of Mars, could travel through the airless space with the speed of electricity, which is 300,000 miles a second, until it reached the envelope of our heavier atmosphere which is only forty miles thick. The air-ship could easily be stored with compressed air to last the travelers for a much longer journey than from Mars to this earth. The visitors, no doubt provisioned for months, evidently fear to land among strange peoples who may be barbarous in their view, and therefore seem to be reconnoitering, and examining the country here and there before landing.

There may be another cause for their delay.

The atmosphere of Mars is greatly lighter than ours, and perhaps as yet they can only breath without pain the lighter air we have a mile or so up, and they are seeking to accustom themselves to it, so that they can gradually descend lower and lower. I predict that the air ship will be seen many times and in many places, before a landing is finally made.

I suggest that our visitors be informed that a friendly welcome awaits them, which can easily be done. The astronomers have kept accurate records of Mars' signals, and in all cities where there are electric lighting plants there should be arranged large searchlights, which at a given hour every night should repeat into the sky Mars' signals, and the air ship would catch them somewhere and would quickly no doubt reply, and communication once opened the air ship could be visited by balloons in the interim that the air ship could not land on terra firma. The Smithsonian Institutions at Washington should take the matter in hand at once. The air ship has been seen by too many creditable witnesses living far apart for it to be pronounced a sensational hoax.

April 17 1897. Yours to Command, Adam Oldham.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Daily Leaf-Chronicle (Clarksville, Tenn), p.4.

THE MYSTERY SOLVED. (ed.)

It remained for the ~~xxxx~~ esteemed Nashville Banner to make the startling announcement yesterday that the most wonderful aerial accomplishment of the century is near at hand, probably reaching its fulfillment at the Centennial grounds in this city within the next twenty-four hours. It will be nothing more nor less than the arrival in transit of the air ship which has been in motion on its aerial journey to Nashville all the week, exciting every city and town over which it has passed and perplexing the press of the country. The Banner further states that newspapers all over the country have treated with scorn the reports of the progress of this wonderful craft thitherward. "It may prove a fake," say the veracious Banner, "but this much is certain--the owners of it are under contract to the Centennial Exposition Company, and the ship was due to arrive here yesterday. The condition of the atmosphere of course prevented any accurate schedule, even if there had been any previous voyage of the kind by which to compute the required time. It is not regarded as a fake by any means at Centennial headquarters, and its descent upon the Exposition grounds is looked for at any hour."

Now, to cap the climax, the Banner, in connection with the preceding, prints telegraphic reports from its correspondents at Russellville, Springfield, Allensville and Clarksville announcing the fact that the airship had been seen the previous night by parties of reputable standing. This ought to settle the business.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Daily Sun (Nashville, Tenn), p. 2. (card 1)

AIR SHIP HEREBABOUTS / The Aerial Wonder Passed Over Nashville Last Night. / Wine and Mirth and Revelry Hold Sway Aboard. / A Nashville Man Hit by a Champagne Cork From Above. /

The wonderful airship, which has excited more curiosity, caused more talk and struck more terror to superstitious souls in a score of States than an eclipse of the sun would in darkest Africa, has at last reached Nashville. Not only is the aerial wonder here, but, according to the testimony of accurate and veracious witnesses, its crew and passengers have no fear of being hurled precipitately through space, and are enjoying life and all its pleasures with the ease and careful spirit of the members of the M Hermitage Club.

Lieut. Henry Curran, whose veracity is unquestionable, went post haste for a Sun reporter at an early hour this morning, and informed the newspaperer that as he was going out West Church street about 1:30 o'clock he heard an explosion which he thought to be a pistol shot. No one was in sight. A second later he was struck on the head by what he for a moment imagined was a rubber ball. It fell at his feet, and upon picking it up immediately discovered it to be a champagne cork. Looking up to see whence it had come, he saw a dark object, surrounded by bright lights, outlined against the dim sky. A round of merry laughter greeted his ears, and he is almost certain that he heard the voices of Herman Haslock and Col. William J. Slatter. Ere the laughter of the midnight sky-reveler had died away, the airship darted away into the darkness, its red and green light twinkling like stars.

Lieut. Curran's story is corroborated by several other gentlemen who are less fearless of criticism than he, and ask that their names be suppressed. This news will be more than welcome to the citizens of Nashville, particularly the portion of it in regard to the champagne, as a report was current on the streets to-day that the airship had landed in Kentucky and had taken on a supply of the liquid refreshment so common in that state, and for which the true Tennessean has no use.

RECENT VIEWS.

There is certainly no fake about the air ship. It is positively near Nashville. It was seen by a number of people in New Town about 9 o'clock and again at 11:20. At the latter hour it was seen by a number of people at the fire hall in South Nashville. One of the firemen stated that the lights could be distinctly seen in the northwest. He said these were red, white and blue lights. It has been generally said that one of the lights is green. The difference in color is easily accounted for as many people are colorblind.

At 2 o'clock this morning the operator at the telephone central stated that he had been called up several times by persons who had seen the wonderful ship and the general descriptions were the same.

The fact that the ship was seen here by so many people proves conclusively that the telegraph received from Waterloo, Ia., that the ship was wrecked at that point is erroneous. It may have been a small naphtha launch that was seen to leave the ship at Adairsville Ky., on Wednesday night.

AN ERRATIC AIRSHIP. / Struck and Adverse Wind and Was Wafted to a Strange Port.

Waterloo, Ia., April 16.--The now celebrated air ship, with one man in it, was seen near here this morning at about 4 o'clock. The appearance of the mysterious messenger in the sky caused considerable excitement. It was first discovered at an early hour by belated citizens, who decried it as gliding in circles around the town, at times seeming to be perfectly motionless.

At one moment, when immediately above the city, an intensely bright light shone from the object, and the gazers were startled at the sight of the plain outlines of the sole occupant. One of the group witnessing the strange spectacle said the man in the ship resembled the platoon of the great Napoleon.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Daily Sun (Nashville, Tenn.), p. 4.

OUR AERIAL VISITOR.

It is of course impossible longer to doubt the existence of the nocturnal airship, which for the past ten days has been traveling about through our common eyes, dancing hither and thither at the sweet will of its captain and merry crew. Whence it started we do not know. It is alleged to have been constructed in a lonely spot amongst the Rocky Mountains, and to be the result of many years of labor. When fully completed, the builder got together a party of his friends and now all are sailing joyously hither and thither, en route to the Tennessee Centennial, where space has been secured by special telegraphic request. The entire country is excited. Various communities have seen it, and from Denver to Nashville, its nightly covertings have been witnessed. It seems that the proprietor has decided to travel only by night, in order that the exhibition of this ship may be all the more sensational when it finally arrives in Nashville. The report that its arrival has been delayed by adverse atmospheric conditions and climatic influences is evidently erroneous.

The ship was clearly seen here Thursday night and it is rumored that there were those who caught hurried glimpses of its red and green lights last night. Certainly a few moments after a certain member of the Hermitage Club has seen the phenomenon passing directly over him at a height of probably a thousand feet, he called out several fellow club members and while they were looking up theirs suddenly fell into their midst a champagne cork. Therefore, it was admitted that there could have been no mistake and also that the party about were having a jolly old time, whilst prowling with the wine and reveling through the platitudes. We feel sure that the ship will be on hand by May 1. Thousands will give it greeting and turn their heads to gaze upon the bold navigators.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Nashville American, p. 3. (card 1)

AIR SHIP IS NO IDLE DREAM / Director General Lewis Says That It Is Scheduled for the Exposition. / THE DETAILS ARE A SECRET / Contract Entered Into More Than a Year Ago for the 19th Century Wonder—Was Sighted Here Last Night. /

Since the countless sands of the ocean first felt the lapping of the waves, since the stars of the morning first sang together, and since necessity became the mother of invention, there has been one grand pinnacle of achievement towards which all mankind has struggled. It has been the dream of poets and the problems of inventors. To-day the dream seems realized and the problem solved.

At the Centennial you may see the product of those centuries of thought and labor in a flying machine that is said to be perfectly able to carry an able-bodied man from one point to another about the grounds with the ease and the swiftness of a swallow in its flight.

"No," said Director General Lewis yesterday, "the story that we are to have a flying machine at the Centennial is not a fake. We fully expect to have such an attraction. Details? I cannot give you anything definite at present because we are under contract with the inventor to keep all details absolutely secret until we have received notification from him that they can be divulged. All that I can say is this: The Centennial Company entered into a contract with an inventor more than a year ago to furnish us with such an invention if it could possibly be perfected, and the inventor at once began work on the machine. We invested considerable money in the scheme and it now begins to look as though we would reap great profits from the investment, for I have reason to believe that the inventor has made a success of his idea."

"Can you tell me the name of this gentleman?" said the reporter.

"No, I am not at liberty to do that just now," Major Lewis replied, and then to reassure the incredulous of "The American's" representative, continued: "Your paper printed a story the other day from Springfield in this State near the Kentucky line, giving an account of a flying machine being seen in the heavens in that vicinity. Well, I have no doubt but that the people saw this same machine which we expect to have at the Centennial. At any rate, the inventor is experimenting near the Tennessee and Kentucky line in the vicinity of Adairville. I shouldn't be surprised to see him come flying into Nashville any day."

The story from our special correspondent at Springfield referred to by Maj. Lewis, is as follows:

SPRINGFIELD, April 13.—(Special.)—The statement was made to "The American's" correspondent this afternoon that an air ship, or whatever it may be, was seen in the heavens near Adairville, Ky., last night, and that it created great astonishment and terror among the people. "The American's" informant was John S. Sarr, who is a well known and substantial farmer, who lives about two miles this side of Adairville, in Robertson County.

Mr. Sarr stated that the strange aerial navigator appeared in the northern horizon about 8:30 p.m. and was viewed for an hour by the excited populace. The light, he stated, was about the size of an ordinary locomotive headlight, but was brighter and from the effulgent rays shed by the monster he judged it to be electric.

The attention of those who first saw the air ship was attracted by a bright light appearing, at least twenty inches in diameter, the reflection from which passed along what appeared to be a steel body. The length of which Mr. Sarr estimated at from twenty-five to thirty feet. The object was about three quarters of a mile high.

On either side of the strange visitor were large projections, which at short intervals could be plainly seen by the astonished watchers, and which were doubtless propellers or wings. Upon the forward end a bright light was discernible, which was evidently used as a headlight and upon the rear was carried a red lantern.

The phenomenon was witnessed for fully an hour before finally disappearing. At ~~times~~ times it would remain almost stationary, then again it would dart off with the velocity of a bird and sail away until the lights merely twinkled.

Mr. Sarr says the people in his vicinity are simply nonplussed, and that the negroes are overcome with abject terror. Many of them shouted and prayed as if they thought the millennium was at hand.

Before finally disappearing the ship, for a few seconds appeared to slow down and for a few moments was almost stationary, then, gathering speed once more, started off to the south at a rapid gait, and was not seen again.

Mr. Sarr says he is willing to make affidavit to all he has related above, and that he can produce forty or fifty good citizens who are likewise prepared to do the same.

HEADED FOR NASHVILLE AND WAS BOVERING NEAR.

Famous Airship Was Sighted from the Roof of "The American" Bldg.

It is believed that the airship which has recently been written of so much is headed for Nashville at least. Its headlight, or something that was readily mistaken for that, was seen last night about 9 o'clock and created some excitement. At that time it was on the western horizon and moving in a northerly direction, in spite of the fact that a strong north wind was blowing. The light was of a green color and was about the size of a star of the first magnitude.

Shortly after the hour mentioned a telephonic communication was received at "The American" editorial rooms, which was somewhat sententious but nevertheless was responsible for a stampede when it was ascertained that the message was true. The import of the message was that the light of the airship was plainly visible low on the horizon a little south of west. The telephone was answered by a reporter, who, upon hearing the news, repaired to the roof of the building and remained there for several minutes.

As seen at that time from "The American" building the light was over the rear of the Jackson building and in a short time sank out of sight altogether. The news was conveyed below and the point of observation was soon thronged with members of the editorial and repertorial staffs and printers who watched with interest the strange phenomenon.

In a few minutes the [] from behind the Jackson building and [] extreme western [] moved northward and at 11 o'clock was northwest of the city. Its altitude was also different, it having risen some distance in the two hours. Even at that distance, however, the flickering tendency of the light was distinctly visible.

The light could not have been one attached to a kite or a toy balloon, as it was going directly against the wind, which proves the fallacy of that supposition at once. Its motion also makes it unreasonable to suppose that it was a star.

The airship was said to be due in Nashville to-day and it may be that the aeronaut arrived ahead of time in order to make a survey of the city before coming to earth. It is fully believed by many that this great invention is in this immediate vicinity and will be seen more closely in the next few days.

What the Airship Is.

The airship ploud the azure fields, / and sailed o'er mountains steep; / she tear the angry clouds above, / and thru the storme did creep. / She flopt her wings o'er vavin' grain, / the mity winds she'd burn; / she was a pitcher to behoald, / a bute from stem to stern. / The sitty people wateh'd d all nite, / for it tu cum that way; / And farmers grabd their whiskurs tite, / for skeer they'd blo' away. / At last sum blasted thing flu bi, / majestic, grand, serene; / and and next day all the papur red, / "a airship has bin seen." / Jay birds wearin' blumer pants, / on fridays will be see; / when we can travel thru the air, / in a sho-nuff flyin' machine. / It's must ni plane opinyun this, / they ain't just what they seems; / they're simply brayin' night-wules, / apperin' in our dreams.

—Ted Spugnardi, in Louisville Post.

SIGHTED AT CLARKSVILLE.

Colored People Behold the Monster While Going to Church. CLARKSVILLE, April 16.—(Special.)—The mysterious air-ship reported to have been observed in this section, has been seen in this city, so a number of reputable colored people reported to-day.

Last night about 8 o'clock while A.B. Wimberly, pastor of Mount Olive Baptist Church; Elder A.L. Lewis, Pleas Pincham and wife and wife's mother, were on their way to church, this air-ship was seen by them in the northwest, flying about a mile from the earth and going in a northwesterly direction. The ship was a number of miles away. The colored people are positive they saw it, that it was no star or anything of the sort. They describe it as has been done by parties heretofore. It was seen by them twenty minutes, when it disappeared behind trees. The airship would take circuitous courses at times, traveling very swiftly in the heavens, and was viewed with wonder by the colored people. William Tanner, a white man of this city, reports having seen this air ship flying over the city at a high altitude the night before last.

MESSAGE FROM MID-AIR.

Those Aboard the Ship Tell of Their Trip. APPLETON, Wis., April 15.—(Special.)—Many persons in this city declare they saw an air ship pass over last Sunday night. Last night on the farm of H.B. Clark, PROBABLY IN DEEP BLUE SEA. / Hypothetical Fate of the Wonderful Airship. / The Entire American Force Witnessed the Catastrophe. / Report That Crew Was Lost in Sycamore Creek Not Credited.

As but only chronicled by the local press, as well as by all the leading newspapers of the United States, the marvelous airship, which started from Oana, Neb., last week for the Tennessee Centennial with its freight of five human lives last Monday, accomplished its aerial voyage last night, according to the testimony of several hundred reliable citizens of this city.

According to telegraphic reports published yesterday the aeronautic phenomenon was seen by numerous people in towns north of Nashville heading this way with as much precision as a railway train. Its speed was reported to be about eight miles an hour, which made it due here about 11 o'clock last night. At that hour hundreds of people in every part of the city were on the qui vive to discover the approach of the great wonder of the century.

Ten o'clock passed, and the aerial engine had not "come in sight." After a little more waiting the more skeptical of the watchers retired and addressed themselves to sleep. But the faithful stood to their posts.

Greatly to their delight, after the confident vigil of an hour, embracing the circumference of the skies, what should appear faintly outlined along the northern summit of the dark but a moving figure of fire. "There it is!" was the exclamation from hundreds of throats.

Slowly the fiery apparition advanced, seemingly from the clustered host of stars, descending as it reached the city, plainly indicating that Nashville was its intended terminus. Thus were put to shame the scoffers of this unparalleled contrivance, and thus rewarded the constant watchers whose faith in human achievement is not bounded even by the proposition of navigating the air.

The airship approached the western limits of the city, according to the testimony of credible observers, and it was apparent that the pilot was searching for the city, which was its designated landing place. When about 200 yards from the ground a strong current of wind directly from the north swept against the ship and, overcoming the resistance of the engine, bore it swiftly to the south.

It gradually ascended, and according to the testimony of the American force, manager, editors, reporters, printers and all, who viewed the marvelous spectacle from the roof of that building, it appeared suddenly to strike an upper current of air and disappeared at an altitude of about one mile. This was accounted for by the American force on the hypothesis that, in the higher altitudes, there is an air current which corresponds to the gulf stream, except that the air is a positive and the water a negative force. From these deductions they concluded that the navigators lost control of the airship in the current and that it would in all likelihood be borne to the Gulf of Mexico and by the law of affinities be carried down by the current and forced into the Gulf of Mexico stream.

A report reached [Inspector]-General Lewis this morning that the ship suddenly collapsed at an early hour and precipitated its occupants into Sycamore Creek in Cheatham County.

There were five passengers in the ship according to this report. They got a good ducking but managed to reach the shore and are said to be making their way to this city. Maj. Lewis discredits this report.

The hypothesis of the American reporter that the airship arose to such an altitude as to become intimately engaged in a round with a cold current of air headed toward the [south] and that its momentum was overcome and it was borne hence, has been considered [as vague] and indefinite to command credence everywhere, as the ship has since been discovered hovering over the pinnacle of Paradise Ridge.

Ting-a-ling-a-ling jangled the Banner's telephone at noon to-day. "Hello, there, what is it?" was the cordial response.

"It is [to] be not afraid," replied Mr. J.A. Williams, of Paradise Ridge.

"What can we do for you?" asked the Banner man. "Oh, nothing. I am already done for. That airship dipped down out of here and almost swiped the top of the ridge. About twenty of my neighbors witnessed the detour and the occupants of the concern evidently recognized some of us, for they saluted with a dignified wave of the chapeau. We saw it, and don't you forget it."

"In what direction did the vessel appear to be moving?" queried the reporter.

"As near as I can figure," replied Mr. Williams, "it was headed northward. I tell you," said he, "that nothing like it has ever been seen in this neck of the woods. If the thing above shows up again I'll let you fellows know," and with that the bell went ting-a-ling.

People living in West End who were on the lookout for the air ship were rewarded at 8 o'clock last night by seeing an unusually large and brilliant light in the northwest, probably a mile high in the air. They believed that this was the headlight of the much-written-about airship, but it was too far away for them to discern the outlines of the ship. The light appeared to be half the size of an electric arc light and was moving in a westerly direction.

Some suggested that this was probably a toy balloon, but the light was different from that thrown off by one of these illuminated toys. It was larger and much more brilliant.

The light was visible for some minutes until it passed behind the hills.

Andy Milan said a man from the lower part of the Thirteenth District told him that he saw the airship late yesterday afternoon while out hunting and he thought it was a big bird. He fired at the thing and instantly it reversed its course, going out towards Cheatham County.

Richard Scruggs, officer of the Second Circuit Court, who lives in the Nineteenth District, confirms the story about the light in the western sky last night. He said he saw the light and watched it from [8] until 11 o'clock. It appeared to be stationary and probably a mile high. /

SEEN AT GUTHRIE.

The Aerial Wonder Seen by a Number of Reputable Citizens. / Special to the Banner

Guthrie, Ky., April 17.--The mysterious airship was seen by several reputable citizens at this place this morning, sailing at a considerable elevation.

1897 April 18 (Sun) Memphis (Tenn.) Commercial-Appeal, p. 4.

TRENTON HAS 'EM. / Fifteen People Ready to Swear That They Saw the Airship.

TRENTON, Tenn., April 17.--(Special.)--Tonight at 8:30 o'clock the airship that has been seen in the States of Illinois, Indiana and elsewhere, appeared on the northern horizon. The first seen of the ship was a large white light, that gradually grew larger. Many thought it to be a comet, but as it glowed nearer, a large conical mass, shaped like a cigar, was seen behind the light. Soon a red light on the right and a green on the left became discernible, and the people at last realized that the airship was the object they saw. The ship remained in sight for about five minutes, and disappeared as suddenly as it came. The ship appeared to be about 1500 feet in the air. As many as fifteen persons saw the great ~~xxxxxxx~~ wonder. The ship was moving in an easterly direction, and going about fifteen miles an hour. And Milan, Too.

MILAN, Tenn., April 17.--(Special.)--This town was disturbed about 8:30 o'clock tonight by a large illuminated body, appearing in the east, going at a rapid ~~xxxx~~ speed. It passed over the town at a height estimated at one-half mile. The body appeared to be 25 feet in length, and a brilliant light preceded it. When a quarter of a mile west of town the body stopped for a few moments, then kept the same track at an increased speed. The body was headed due west. Hundreds of the most reliable citizens in this city viewed the wonder, many negroes being frightened at the mystery. It was thought to be an airship.

1897 April 18 (Sun) Daily Sun (Nashville, Tenn.), p. 12. (card 1)

POSITIVELY SEEN "IT." / Interviews With Some of the Leading Citizens. / All Attest the Air Ship to Be a Reality. / It Will Probably Land Here To-Day. /

Is the flying nocturnal airship a delusion or is it a reality? That is the question now most poignantly perturbing the public mind.

Director General Lewis declares that it is one of the Centennial's booked attractions and not one who heard his positive pronouncement on the subject doubted in any wise the stories flying here and there concerning this mysterious and thoroughly fin de siecle parader of the heavens.

So many have seen it and so many haven't that the Sun determined yesterday to send out its staff of reporters and find out things from the former for the benefit of the latter. Every street was gone ~~xxxxxx~~ through and homes were invaded in the eager quest for something authentic. /

One of the first found was Mr. Samuel J. Keith, President of the Fourth National Bank.

"Yes, sir; I saw it and very distinctly. I had just left my library where I had been figuring my losses for the past ten years on money ~~xxx~~ loaned to leniently on improper securities and at too low rates of interest. A feeling of deep philanthropy had taken possession of me and I thought to go out into my yard and get one fresh breath of the budding trees and bursting ~~xxx~~ violets before retiring for the night. How long I had been standing abstractedly I do not know. Suddenly athwart the horizon just between a couple of most brilliant constellations there appeared a strange object in the skies. At the distance it appeared about the size of a ninety-day note at 1 o'clock on the last day of grace. I distinctly saw two lights. One was a sort of golden yellow and the other a shimmering 50-cent-dollar color. It darted through the skies like a kited draft from an expert operator and disappeared. I am absolutely certain that it was the air ship in question. It caused me to pass a sleepless night." /

Gen. Harvey H. Hannah, Private Secretary to the Governor, was next interviewed.

"There is no doubt about it," he said. "It flashed across the Capitol tower just past 11 o'clock. In appearance it resembled a fresh petition from some applicant for a Railroad Commissionership. It paused a few minutes, possibly, over Capitol Hill, throwing its red, ~~xxxx~~ white and blue lights in every direction, as if giving somebody the great big laugh. At first I thought it was manned by some Republican devil, but afterward concluded that its inhabitants were simply guying the railroad lobby. The huge measure was divided into three parts, seemingly. Its enacting clause was conically shaped and rather drawn out; the body was well condensed, and seemingly unambiguous, while the 'public welfare' section seemed to be armed with a huge revolving wheel or propeller. It was evidently inhabited." /

Sam B. Williamson: "At first I thought the thing a fake. But Thursday night I saw it. Yes sir; I saw it and smelt it. It was shaped like a barrel or tank and had an ~~xxxx~~ unmistakable aroma of kerosene attaching to it. I was very much rejoiced and felt that it came as a good angel to swell my receipts as Coal Oil Inspector, when suddenly the thing took on a sudden amount of speed and darted away as if on a sort of aerial trolley right down toward Memphis and Col. Jim Coleman's appearance." /

R.L. Rains: "When I saw it I didn't pay much attention. I thought it just another of these queer apparitions which try to inveigle the attention of the average young man. All at once, as it stood directly overhead, there came a sound at my side. I looked and found lying not two feet away a beautiful red satin slipper with French heels. Then, of course, I looked with greater interest. There is a poem which tells of some party who raised a mortal to the skies, and alos of another who drew an angel down. How was I to know but that the latter privilege was to be mine? How I would have liked to follow that aerial car no words of mine can tell. It went over toward Steward county, out of my sight, but I trust not forever. I telegraphed my friend Lory, and am even now awaiting a response. You can bet your Centennial there's a real live airship floating around Nashville and that there's a jolly old crew on board."

Charles Currey: "You see it was this way. I had just finished supervising the affairs of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railroad, and had put my last signature to a Tennessee Centennial stock certificate, and started home. Naturally, I was very tired. Indeed, I felt the need of something bracing. On my way to a soda water stand (here Mr. Currey crossed his fingers) I chanced to look up. 'Heavens!' I cried, 'is this a wild engine or have I been bit with a brick?' Yet there it was, a huge machine, not 200 feet above me, puffing and blowing and flashing all sorts of colors of lights, as if in distress. It required but a second for me to recognize it as the famous air ship. I thought it was trying to land, as I distinctly saw a man in its stern putting on earthbrakes. The man in front wore a cap and was, I presume, in charge. He raised something to his face, whether a telescope or a bottle I cannot say. I am not familiar with telescopes. All at once there was a sound of tinkling bells and the thing sailed smoothly but rapidly away. It went Centennialwards and seemed to hover over Vanity Fair, but evidently didn't stop. I had been strictly at work all the evening."

Mr. H.M. Doak saw it. "I had just finished reading Bob White's 'Centennial Dream,' and was feeling fit entirely for treason, stratagems, spoils or any other old thing. I decided in favor of the last named, so repaired to the Hermitage Club, where it is provided in more appetizing form than elsewhere. After a couple of hours socially spent with my friends discussing Shakespeare, Browning, Munn, Copeland and several other authors who are calculated to stimulate the conversational faculties and shorten distances. I started home. Turning into Broad street from Spruce, I looked up and saw the most startling apparition. Heaven help me! Was it some goblin damned, or the incarnate spirit of some author I had murdered? Was it the fiery form of hell-orn retribution for the political vagaries I had espoused? Was it the rampant fury of Webster or Worcester thus visiting itself upon me for having presumed to throw off the shackles which their orthodoxy or narrow verbal limitations sought to impose upon my independent spirit?"

"These thoughts rushed through my brain and I began to rush with them. The thing gave an awful snort and as my hair elevated itself my legs began to work in their sockets at a wonderful pace. I fairly flew, and right above me, throwing out sparks and puffing and snorting and repuffing and resnorting came that horrible thing. Home was a mile distant, and no John Howard Payne ever longed for home as I did. To die in the bosom of my family was all I craved. At last I reached home and rushed into the sitting room, pale and trembling, proclaiming in stuttering accents what I had seen. 'Never mind, dear, just go to bed, you'll be all right in the morning; you always are.' And that was all the comfort or credence which my story received. I am sincerely delighted that you are attempting to show to the world that such a thing as the air ship is prowling about frightening innocent men."

Dr. William White had been reading a volume of the poems of Robert Burns, until about 10 o'clock he thus sat, intent. His thoughts were of such a nature that he stroved out to secure a midnight preventive for insomnolence. After several schooners of this, what should more appropriately upon him than a ship? At first he thought it was a mere joke which the boys had perpetrated. Then he became more serious. The search lights from the vessel's awful countenance suggested to him some horrid devil.

"I could have said my prayers," he said, "but didn't think of it. Instead, I rubbed my eyes. Then it was plainer than ever. Suddenly there came from the vessel the sweetest music I ever heard. It was a sort of cross between the soul appeasing notes said to be made by glistening ice against the sides of a water pitcher the next morning, and those other notes which rattle in the strong box of the hard-working Christian banker. It seemed as if some angel was calling to me and the waning lights made it appear as if she was beckoning too. There was beautiful singing. One soprano warbled 'Comin' Thro' the Rye', while far above it all came the words of that old familiar nerve-distractor, 'Put Me Off at Buffalo.' The car stopped overhead but a few moments, then seemed to bow its head in manifest sorrow at being forced to leave me. It shook every lantern, spun around and around every search light and disappeared into night. It was no dream. I saw it, and will swear to it."

The list of others who saw the mysterious air ship is long. Controller Harris saw it, as did John Demoville, Col. E.P. Wilson, Gen. Van Leer Kirkman, Sidney Lucas, of the Climax; Manager W.K. Black of the Maxwell and Charley Cullom. E.B. Stahlman saw it and thought the devil had come to take the Louisville & Nashville Railroad lobby to their final abode. He trembled for several hours and will attend McKendree Church Easter services today, looking as pious and saintly as a deacon.

1897 April 18 (Sun) Nashville American, p. 2. (card 1)

MANY EYES SEE THE BIG AIRSHIP / Newspaper Man Observes It in the Hoop Small Hours of the Morning. / CERTAINLY IN THE VICINITY / Tally-Ho Party Watch It Sail Over the Residence of Jas. E. Caldwell on the Franklin Turnpike—Sighted Elsewhere.

Information concerning the airship of song and story continues to come in in very large packages and from all directions.

It is like a will-o-the-wisp in being seen here, there and everywhere all at the same time, but always at some distance above terra firma except one. The most debatable story yet told regarding it is from a local newspaper man of unimpeachable veracity, who makes oath in due form of law that as he wandered homeward yesterday morning while the day was breaking, he observed the truly famous manifestation eating grass in a nearby field. Seeing it betray such unmistakable vegetarian instincts, the young man turned away without interviewing the airship or even inquiring into the condition of its wheels. No doubt science is the loser for the newsmen's lack of curiosity.

All last night the telephone bell was ringing and the wires were kept hot with tidings of the aerial phantasm, but it was not observed by any of "The American's" force. Other parties, however, saw it and watched it for some time. It was visible in West Nashville until a very late hour. About 11 o'clock its navigator, after journeying for some time in a northerly direction, suddenly turned toward the South and the light was soon lost in the fog which prevailed in the sky last night.

At the residence of Jas. E. Caldwell, three miles from Nashville, on the Franklin turnpike, a tally-ho party that sojourning there for the evening was entertained with a glimpse of the aeronaut's craft. At 9:45 (9:15?) o'clock, according to the information of the members of the party, the airship passed directly over the house, while they were enjoying the beautiful atmospheric appearances from the front porch of the Caldwell residence. It was first seen by Miss Mildred Williams, who attracted the attention of the others to it. The mathematicians in the party estimated that it was then at a height of a half a mile and was going northward at the approximate rate of ten miles per hour. In shape it resembled a cigar and seemed to be about sixty feet long. There was a large headlight in front, it is said, and two small red lights in the rear. The former was very bright and seemed to have very powerful reflectors behind it. It is thought that the red lights indicate that there are others, at least this is the meaning conveyed to railway men.

The young ladies and men composing the party who saw the airship from the Caldwell home were: Misses Annie D. Richardson, Elsie Caldwell, Mildred Williams, Elsie Briggs, Nannie Dudley Pilcher, Annie Dallas, Seldie Cooper, Nina Stratton; Meedmae Caldwell and Pilcher, and Messrs. Alex. Hunter, Will Jackson, Will Peyton, Dan Buntin, Edgar Foster, Will Rutland, Roger Caldwell, Ed Warner and Chas. Cullom.

In South Nashville about 10:30 o'clock the airship was distinctly seen by Albert Ewing, and his account of it was similar to that given by the tally-ho party.

From the thickness and fastness with which reports of the airship come from all directions, there is evidently a whole fleet of airships floating about above Nashville, awaiting the Centennial opening.

FELL IN GIBSON COUNTY.

This Airship Came to the Ground Near Reelfoot Lake. HUMBOLDT, Tenn., April 17.—(Special.)—The various reports from different parts of the country of people claiming to have seen a practical airship have at last been verified, or at least made plausible by its discovery today near this place. As Sam McLeary was plying through the backwaters of Forked Deer River going to feed some frogs [lops?] on a knoll in the bottom he came across a wonderful object partly on the ground and partly suspended in the timber where it had evidently fallen and lodged. The larger portion consisted of a thin shell of bright white metal about 100 feet in length by 30 in diameter running to a point at each end. A tubular rib extends along each side and from this is suspended a framework carrying the machinery, with enclosed compartment for passengers or crew. The solitary occupant, however, was unable to tell his story for though the weather is not cold his body and his water barrel were solid blocks of ice. The machine had evidently reached too high altitudes, and its manager had succumbed to the pitiless cold and for want of his control had fallen to the earth.

Its engines were of a strange and unknown construction, but were probably run by nitroglycerine automatically fed and ignited by electricity. Screw propellers above and at each end and horizontal sails or wings at each side seem with the buoyant skill to combine all the principles of sea and air navigation. An estimate of the weight of the concern would be about 4,000 pounds. A simple calculation gives the buoyant capacity of the shell to be about 6,000 pounds, allowing, say, 2,000 pounds burden or ballast. No ballast, however, is necessary, as the shell is made in two sections, one sliding in the other like the parts of a quinine capsule, reducing or increasing the capacity of the cylinder by means of a horizontal screw shaft extending from end to end and operated by the engine below. As may be surmised gas is not depended upon for buoyancy, but simply vacuum. Though hydrogen gas is lighter than air it still weighs something, while vacuum does not. A little gas though may have been carried to help counteract the external air pressure on the shell.

This much has been ascertained from observation and meager notes found on board, but who or whence the solitary airship captain has not yet been discovered. Will be glad to mail you more detailed description and copies of all records found.

P.S. If you see any more accounts of this ship being seen elsewhere you may depend on it is only Venus in her new Easter clothes flitting with Mars or else another (. LL.)

AIRSHIP FLEET AT ATLANTA.

Anchored Over the City and Preparing to Sail for Cuba. ATLANTA, Ga., April 17.--(Special.)--A fleet of between 300 and 400 airships have been anchored all day over Atlanta, having stopped here on their way from Chicago to Cuba. They are in command of Julio Sanguilly, who was recently released from a Spanish prison, and all are heavily armed. A number of local Cuban sympathizers were taken up by the fleet in a dispatch boat attached to the flagship, Gomez, this morning, and other stops will be made for volunteers at Jacksonville and Key West. The tonnage of the ships range from 250 to 2,500 and each one carried, in addition to her crew a large number of American volunteers, who were going to Cuba to join the insurgent army.

Admiral Sanguilly refused to permit visitors on the boats, all of which dropped anchor just over Piedmont Park, where the recent Exposition was held. They floated easily and gracefully in the air, about a mile and a half above the earth, and at night, when lighted by millions of tiny electric globes, they presented an appearance of unusual beauty. The dispatch boat, Senator Morgan, made frequent trips between the fleet and the headquarters of the Cubans in this place, and once or twice was sent to New York with important communications for Mr. Tomas Estrada Palma, the Cuban representative in this country.

There is great consternation among the United States authorities here, and the war and navy departments at Washington have been kept fully posted as to the movements of the filibusterers. It is said that every effort is being made to charter a number of airships from the Chicago manufacturers, but with what result is not known. One of the vessels of the fleet late this afternoon roved further over toward the city and it appeared directly over the residence of the Spanish Consul, and it is said by dropping torpedoes upon the defenceless building. It is understood that the officers who [uncivilized warfare] will be [uncivilized warfare]

The whereabouts of the Spanish fleet, under [uncivilized warfare] hovering about New Orleans, is not known [today], but there is every reason to believe that the two forces will meet shortly and that a tremendous battle is imminent. The ships have been photographed.

SEEN AT TRENTON.

Night Rider "Discovered" by Fifteen Persons. TRENTON, April 17.--(Special.)--To-night at 8:30 the great airship that has been seen in the States of Illinois and Indiana appeared on the northern horizon. The first seen of the ship was a large white light that gradually grew larger. Many thought it to be a comet, but as it plowed nearer a larger conical [cigar] shaped like a cigar, was seen behind the light. Soon a red light on the right and a green on the left became discernible, and the people at last realized that the great air ship was the object they saw. The ship remained in sight for about five minutes and disappeared as suddenly as it came. The ship appeared to be about 1,500 feet in the air. As many as fifteen persons saw the wonder, and state that although they had not believed the stories concerning the ship before, now there is no doubt in their minds that they were the lucky spectators of a great wonder. The ship was moving in an easterly direction and going about fifteen miles an hour.

This One Dispensing Patronage.

HUNTINGTON, April 17.--(Special.)--The airship anchored over town last night about 10:30 o'clock. A note was dropped and picked up by Prof. Longmave of the Southern Normal University, who interpreted it. It contained the following: "Is Col. Tom Baker in town? If so, we will land and take him on board. We have a high-up place for Tom."

1897 April 19 (Mon) Daily Sun (Nashville, Tn), p. 5 (card 1)

MOST POSITIVELY SO. / The Air Ship Still Hovers Over the City. / A Newspaper Man Who Saw It in Chicago. / He Sees It Here and Says It Is the Same--Fine Description. /

A good many people in and about Nashville seem to think all this talk about our air ship is mere persiflage--airy persiflage, as it were. The assumption that a real air ship really is hovering over this section of the country is now corroborated from an unexpected source. Bernard J. Mullaney, of the Chicago Times-Herald, who is in the city to "write a few pieces for the paper" about the Centennial Exposition, says he has seen the vehicle reported to be wandering through the atmosphere herabouts and recognized it as the same one he saw before leaving Chicago. As he comes from the Windy City it may be presumed that he is familiar with aerial travelers.

"I saw this air ship a little over a week ago," said Mr. Mullaney. "It crossed my vision first while I was in Evanston, one of our suburban towns. Let me explain right here that Evanston is a prohibition town and the seat of the largest Methodist university in the world, a town where the sale, or even possession, of alcoholic beverages within four miles of the city hall is a penal offense. Well, that's where I first saw the air ship, after a long hard day. I had no time opportunity to study it closely at the time, but on my return to Chicago later in the evening, and after having armed myself with a pair of strong glasses, I studied its aerial gyrations for several hours. It was long, low and rakish in outline, with great spread of wing. Two brilliant lights, one red and the other green, were on the bow of the ship, and these seemed to dance and to oscillate about each other as if moved by complicated and delicate machinery. Whenever they were momentarily at rest they glowed like a sixteen-candle power electric lamp. Another light of bright blue swung to and fro in the air as if attached to the rudder. After watching it for some time I stepped into an adjacent drug store, and when I came out the air ship had disappeared. "I saw the strange creation again Saturday night after an arduous day with John J. McCann and other gentlemen connected with your exposition here. It was the same one I had seen in Chicago. All the characteristic marks were identical. There was no doubt about it. A friend of mine of the name of Joe Peacock once discovered a sea serpent in Lake Michigan off Chicago which had long red whiskers and made its way through the water by means of a rostrary contrivance in its tail like the screw propeller of an Atlantic liner. I will make affidavit that this air ship bears no relation to my friend Peacock's sea serpent."

Reputable citizens all over town are seeing the ship. Capt. Luke Walker, who has successfully steered a steamboat, a circus and a Republican newspaper, and who wants to assist in steering the country with the "advance agent of prosperity," has not only seen the ship but has entered his application for a position as pilot on the air ship to be accepted in case the "advance agent" does not need his assistance. Capt. Walker does not care to tell of the conditions under which he saw the ship, but simply makes the assertion that he saw it. To those who know him best this is entirely satisfactory.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Daily Sun (Nashville, Tenn.), p. 3 (card 1)

AIRSHIP'S FLIGHT / A History of This Wonderful Visitor. / IT IS STILL SEEN IN VARIOUS SECTIONS. / XXXXX It Darts Through XXXX Speed With the Greatest Ease. /

The airship is still being seen in various portions of the city and also other portions of the United States. On Saturday night it was out the Murfreesboro pike about three miles from town when it was carefully observed by W.B. Baird. Mr. Baird was going to choir practice and states that he very plainly saw the shape of the aerial visitor as it was directly above him. He watched it for about five minutes and then climbed upon a rock fence to get a better view, when his foot slipped and he fell from the wall. When he got up the ship was disappearing at a mile a minute gait off in the Northwest.

The first heard of the wonderful airship was when it appeared to the citizens of Maryville, Col. In a few days it was seen by citizens in Sacramento and Oakland. After several weeks supposed to have been occupied in crossing the Rocky Mountains, the inhabitants of Kansas and Iowa, prohibition states too, if you please, viewed it with great frequency. High license Oklahoma also saw it.

The first record of its landing was at Carlinville, Ill., where it is claimed it struck terra firma for repairs on April 13. But the winged passenger carrier immediately hurried off and traveled 800 miles in twenty-four hours, for it was seen next in Pavilion, Mich. Northwood, Ia., next saw the phenomenon, and since then it has appeared in almost every town in the country east of the mountains. It has probably been seen by more people in Chicago than in any other place. This is probably due to the fact that there are more people there.

The following from a telegram from Milwaukee, is of interest. It is said to be a genuine chip from the log of the good ship Meteor, and was found on the top of a brewery. It reads:

Sighted Milwaukee 9:30 p.m., Minneapolis 9:25 p.m., Denver 9:35 p.m., St. Paul 9:42 p.m. There were lights moving about in St. Paul as if somebody had been awakened. Passed over Jacksonville, Fla., at 9:43 and Havana, Cuba, at 9:47. Saw moving lights and flashes along the central trocha. May have been a fight. At 9:48 made the ship fast to a boulder in the Third ward, Duluth, and all hands, except the larboard watch, were piped to quarters for the night.

AIR SHIP NOW IN COLORADO / Message Dropped in Passing Over Cripple Creek. / Communication Was Contained in a Sardine and Exhibited by the Finder. /

Cripple Creek, Colo., April 19.--The air ship passed over this place yesterday and a message was dropped in passing.

On Saturday night James Graham was in his barn when he heard something fall on the roof. He went outside and asked a little girl who was playing near if she had seen anybody throwing stones at the barn. The girl replied that she had seen an object fall on the roof of the stable, but that she did not know where it came from. Mr. Graham climbed to the roof and there found a small sardine box stuffed with paper. On prying open the can he found a sheet of writing paper bearing a message which read as follows:

"In midair, April 17.--To whoever finds this note: There are three of us to sail in an air ship. Our names and addresses are C.J. Pillsbury, 180 Washington street, Boston, Mass.; Pierre Humbert, City Engineer, Boston; C.D. Novina, 72 Rue Truffant, Paris. On April 8 last we were on terra firma. Upon that day we descended upon a town on the Missouri Pacific in Eastern Kansas named Weeks, which is about seventeen miles north of Emporia. We have since been sailing, we know not where. We are out of water and have given up all hope, and we trust that whoever finds this note will immediately wire the addresses given."

Upon reading this Mr. Graham immediately searched the heaven with his eyes and thought he detected a bright speck above Mount Pisgah. As darkness was coming on he could not be sure. Mr. Graham showed his find to a number of people, and now has it at his house to exhibit to all interested. He is inclined to think the message is genuine, and does not think he has been made the victim of a joke. From Mr. Graham's business standing here it is known that he would not participate in a hoax of this nature.

Yesterday about 10 o'clock, on the streets the people of Cripple Creek were attracted by an object about a mile above them that glided strangely in the sunlight. Many got out their glasses. The object proved to be moving very slowly. It was shaped like an immense cigar and was evidently made of some light, bright material, presumably aluminum. For two hours people watched it and it is estimated that fully 8,000 saw it. Many of these were emphatic in their belief that it was an air ship. About noon it had worked itself well over toward the west and disappeared behind some clouds.

WAS IT THE AIRSHIP. / Building Is Wanted for Some Mysterious Purpose by the Exposition People.

The airship continues its course unimpeded, and is still seen by "persons whose veracity cannot be questioned." Whether it be bird or beast or devil cannot be stated absolutely yet, as no one has obtained a very close look at it, but as to the existence of some unusual appearance in the sky there can be no doubt. Aside from the mystery which the sky contains, there seem to be some things equally as mysterious in progress on the Centennial grounds, which, it is thought, can only be explained by the contemplated visit of the wonder of the nineteenth century.

Engineer-in-Charge Robert T. Creighton and a number of his assistants were hustling around pretty lively yesterday hunting for a building near the Centennial grounds which they wanted to rent at a big price for the coming month, beginning at once. They refused to talk to the reporter, but some of the parties on the outside of the grounds it was learned that they were inquiring for a building, 40x20 feet and 20 feet high on the inside.

Such a separate effort was made to find the building that the suspicions of some were aroused that there was something which was to be concealed at all hazards. What it could be was the thing that puzzled everybody. The Director General was not in his office during the afternoon, and the only time "The American's" Centennial reporter saw him during the day was just at the last moment before leaving the grounds. At that time he was hurrying over the hill around which Vanity Fair is located, and in answer to the reporter's question the Director General said that he could not tell all he knew. Until out of the reporter's sight he kept turning around to see if the reporter was following.

The general belief among those who discussed the matter was that the airship had landed and was to be taken and put away till after the opening of the show. This hypothesis would explain the whole thing and all the seeming mysteries. It is known that the airship was seen by a large number of people Sunday night while it was evidently hovering around this city, and the last seen of it was when it was going towards the northwest. It may have finally dropped late in the night, after the curious had stopped watching its lights, and if it did the mystery is a mystery no longer.

It is the plan for a number of the officers of the Exposition to take the vessel away the night before the Exposition and from some point twenty or thirty miles from Nashville to make the journey to this city the day of the opening, by the airship. The intention is to arrive just as the great crowd has gathered about the Auditorium and to thus give a practical demonstration of the reality of the airship.

Dr. Dudley, the Director of Affairs, was asked as to the airship, but politely declined to answer, asking in turn: "What do you know about it?" It was very evident that there was some knowledge in Dr. Dudley's possession which he did not divulge.

Chief Clerk W.H. Bruce was fully as uncommunicative as the others. When asked what he knew of the airship he asked, as if he had never heard of the subject, "What airship?"

It is quite evident that the Centennial officials are not telling all they know, and that they have some mysterious project in hand.

Another curious coincidence is that the moving lights which have heretofore enabled people below to distinguish the movements of the airship were not reported seen last night by anybody. Either the airship is not now in this locality or it has landed at the Centennial grounds.

Wed. April 21, p. 5. A MYSTERIOUS BUILDING. / What Is to Go Into It No One Knows But the Director General, But Many Guess.

Right off the top of the hill behind Vanity Fair yesterday morning the engineering force laid out a new building which is for some purpose known as yet to no one but the Director General. The building was ordered laid out on the exact bearing given, which was north 41 degrees 10 minutes east. In order to get the exact bearings observations were taken of Polaris a night or two ago at midnight to determine exactly.

The timber was hauled yesterday and work will be begun to-day. The building will be sixty feet long, thirty feet wide and twenty feet to the ~~xxxx~~ ceiling. Nobody can say what is to go in it, but there are plenty of suspicions.

Another building laid out yesterday is the Childrens Home.....
1897 April 22 (Th morn) Memphis Commercial Appeal, p. 4 (card 1)

SAW THE AIRSHIP. /

The Newport (Ark) Herald prints the following interesting story: The airship which is being talked of so much of late rested near this city all yesterday and took a westerly course about 7:30 o'clock last night.

This statement may seem fictitious to many, but is nevertheless true, because it was not only seen by a couple of Herald reporters, who had a talk with the navigators of the aerial monster, but two men from the country, who were hunting, gazed in open-mouthed astonishment on it as it arose from the earth.

For several days past the world has been in a great state of excitement over what was claimed to be an airship—a vessel which has been described as being cigar-shaped, carrying bit lights which dazzled all who saw them. The thing was first seen in California last fall, but had been almost forgotten, until it made its appearance at St. Louis a short time ago.

When it first appeared in California everybody, except those who saw it, pronounced the story a fake and ridiculed the idea of sitting up o' nights looking for it, but nevertheless thousands crawled out on top of their houses and gazed heavenward for hours at a time. When at last the airship appeared on the horizon they were satisfied, and instead of laughing it off as a joke began to discuss the strange visit of a such stranger object. It finally disappeared and was seen no more in that part of the country.

It was supposed that after the California experiment the inventor had been busy making improvements on his vessel, hence the long interval between appearances. This time Missouri was chosen as a place to experiment, and the machine is now more perfect than before.

Two Herald reporters took a little boat ride yesterday, and when a short distance up the river rowed across to the other side, landed and walked up on the bank. While standing there a strange object was seen through the woods, and the men of the pencil approached. It did not dawn upon them what kind of an "animal" it was until within about fifty yards of it. Then it was that thoughts of the airship flitted through their minds. They came up to where it stood and found the "crew" sitting about reading Friday afternoon's Chicago papers.

By asking a few questions it was ascertained that the crew consisted of two men and a woman—G.W. Turksley and wife of San Francisco and W.B. Framley of Chicago. They all seemed very ready to talk to so hustling a newspaper as the Herald, and answered any and all questions put to them, except in regard to the inside workings of the big machine. They told of their travels over the country and gave many interesting stories of their experiences above the earth.

Mr. Turksley is the inventor of the aerial ship, but Mr. Framley is the power behind the throne—that is, he furnished the funds to put in operation the product of the brains of the former.

The party travel at night only, stopping in some quiet place in the daytime, because they are only experimenting, and the workings of the ship would be watched too closely in daylight.

"I have not as yet been able to attain the high rate of speed I hope to before I show my machine to the world," said Mr. Turksley, in reply to a question as to its speed, "although I can go at a pretty good clip now. We went from Springfield, Mo., to near Chicago Thursday night, and came here from Chicago last night, but we intend to make San Francisco tonight, as I understand it more thoroughly with each succeeding trip."

"You certainly have astonished the world," ventured a reporter. "I am thoroughly aware of that," he replied, "but I have not startled myself. Ever since I was a little boy I have watched the birds fly about and wished that I had money enough to experiment on aerial navigation. In later years I decided to experiment without the money, and for several years I drew plans in my mind. At last I hit on what I thought to be the real thing, and induced Mr. Framley, who was a boyhood friend, to furnish the money with which to put my plans into execution, with the result you see."

Mrs. Turksley said she thoroughly enjoyed sailing through the clouds on the monster airship. At first, she said, a queer sensation would come over her when the ship was raised into the air, but she had become accustomed to it now.

At 7:30 the machinery was put in motion and the ship rose in the air and disappeared over the treetops in a westerly direction.
1897 April 23 (Fri.) Memphis Commercial-Appeal, p. 7.

JACKSON HAS SEEN IT.

JACKSON, Tenn., April 22.—(Special.)—About 11 o'clock last night a strange light appeared in the firmament over this city, and for more than an hour cut some very peculiar antics for a well-regulated star. It appeared first in the northeastern horizon and rose rapidly, drifting in an easterly direction, growing larger and brighter all the time. Its movements were by lunges, the stranger often entirely disappearing and in an instant returning to sight with increased brightness. The light appeared about the size of an ordinary headlight of a locomotive and was of a deeper hue than an ordinary star. The stranger did not approach near enough to the earth to distinguish any form more than it appeared as a huge ball of fire. After drifting about for more than an hour the stranger became stationary for a little while and finally disappeared. It was pronounced by many responsible gentlemen as a most peculiar visitor, and some claimed it to be the mysterious airship.
1897 April 24 (Sat.) Memphis Commercial-Appeal, p. 7.

WAS NO AIRSHIP. / Only a Coal Oil Lamp or a Tallow Dip.

SOMERVILLE, Tenn., April 23.—(Special.)—Much excitement was felt in Somerville tonight over the sight of what was supposed to be a light from the mysterious airship. Many citizens rushed into the street to view this novel sight but upon closer examination it proved to be only the faint twinkle of the coal oil lamps with which the city fathers are vainly endeavoring to illuminate the streets. A petition signed by a large majority of the citizens and property owners of the town asking that the question of Somerville issuing $10,000 in bonds for the purpose of putting in electric lights and water works be submitted to a vote of the people has been prepared for board of mayor and alderman, but a majority of these gentlemen look with disfavor on anything more illuminating than coal oil or tallow candles as shown by the suggestion made to the council by one of the members that each family in Somerville be furnished with a lantern at the expense of the town, and it is very probable that the petition will not be granted. The last session of the legislature passed a law authorizing Somerville to issue $10,000 in bonds for this purpose, and a large majority of the business men, merchants and property owners are in favor of doing so.

IT WAS A KITE. / But Nevertheless an Airship Story Came Out of It. TUSCUMBIA, Ala., April 23.—(Special.)—The airship reported to have been recently seen in this city was a "fake," and nobody gives credence to the story. What was thought to have been the aerial navigator was merely a large kite to which a light had been attached, and but for the fact that a supposed airship had been seen in sections of Tennessee and Kentucky, no attention would have been paid to it, as kites with candles skillfully attached to them are frequently seen. The report was sent out by an over-zealous newspaper correspondent, and was discredited by the people of Tusculum, who have heard of Joe Mulhatten before and are not yet ready to accept his canards.

was shown on the stern. The ship continued to rise until the big light looked very much like a twinkling star.

When this occurred the newspaper man turned over on his pillow and saw that the sun was shining brilliantly into his room, by which he realized that it was time to crawl out of bed.

THE AIRSHIP SEEN AT LAST / VAKXXXX Proves to Be Something More Than the Idle Dream of a Pipe Smoker. / THE INVENTION OF THE AGE / Newspaper Man Sees It and Pronounces it Fifty Feet Long, Cipar Shaped and Made of Aluminum. /

THE AIR-SHIP, OR WHAT? / The Mysterious Aerial Traveler Seen Last Night. / Observed by Quite a Number of Both Ladies and Gentlemen. / Was Noticed Flying in the Southwest--Could Not Have Been a Star--How It Appeared. /

While taking his night cap at one of the city institutions of good fellowship yesterday morning, the peculiar purchase of a belated pedestrian led a newspaper man to make a discovery which will startle the entire civilized world when it is announced.

While a reporter for the Leaf-Chronicle was en route to the Feb-beth and Dunlop Mills plant just after the alarm of fire was sounded at 8:45 o'clock last night, his attention was directed to a bright light in the heavens in the southwest. It was close cloudy and rain was falling, hence the object seen could not have been a star, and besides the light shed was too bright for a star. Furthermore no kite or frail human invention could have withstood the elements last night. It must have been the mysterious air-ship. The people who saw it believe it was, and it was seen by several, reliable persons, both ladies and gentlemen.

The purchase in question was twenty-five boxes of a brand of tobacco, known as Yale Mixture. He who showed such a fondness for the weed was a man about 35 years old, rather low, heavy build and dressed like a gentleman of leisure on an outing expedition. He wore a neatly fitting suit of corduroy, a negligee shirt and shoes of undressed calf. Upon his face was plainly written a will that brooked no obstacles. After putting the boxes of tobacco in a basket which he carried, the man pulled out a roll of bills, but handed the smallest to the bar-keeper. His change was given him, and he left without making an explanation of his unusual purchase.

When first seen the object appeared to be sailing directly from the reporter. The attention of several who were going to the fire at the flouring mills were called, and the party stopped to view the light in the heavens. Soon it began to move very rapidly, and would change its course with a suddenness never before noticed by bodies usually seen floating in the sky, and would dart through space as quickly as a bird could change its course. After a time it disappeared entirely from view. It appeared to be flying about half a mile from the earth, and several miles from the city.

A very few minutes after the stranger had left the barroom with the basket on his arm, the reporter likewise issued forth from the place and took the same direction. The newsman's curiosity, both professionally and naturally, was thoroughly aroused, and buttoning his coat close up to his chin, he began a game of shadow to discover something about the party who evidently was preparing to smoke up in a wholesale way.

The heavens last night were closely clouded, and at the time the strange object was seen rain was falling, so it must have been something capable to withstand more than ordinary weather and sky conditions.

The game began near the corner of Church and Cherry streets and was continued through the various thoroughfares of the city leading toward the Centennial grounds, the pursuer following the man with the basket about a hundred yards in the rear, and always managing to keep as much as possible in the shadow.

This is the third time this airship has been reported seen in different portions of the heavens by Clarksville citizens of great reliability, and should it not be the much talked-of airship, everybody who has been favored with a view of it are at a loss to account for it.

In this manner the two men entered West End avenue and walked to where it ceases to be designated as a city street and merges into the Harding turnpike. Just beyond the place opposite the Centennial gate the man, with the tobacco halted apparently for a breathing spell, as he deposited his load upon the ground and dropped on the grass beside it, continuing in that position until his energies were recuperated.

There are air ship and there are air ships. Some of them are weird, wonderful creations that live only in the vivid imaginations of some deluded mortal, and others, or the other, is a startling reality, or to be absolutely correct, will be by Wednesday night, if Jupiter Pluvius withhold his wrath against the newborn invader of the skies.

After a few minutes, which the reporter had also put to very good use in blowing, the stranger arose from his recumbent position and climbing a fence on the left hand side of the road began the ascent of the hill-side which stands overlooking the turnpike in this locality. The pursuit continued uneventful, except for one accident, which came near ruining the enterprise. A small gully on the slope, which the newspaper man failed to note in his desire to keep the other party in view, tripped him, and he fell heavily to the earth. The man in front, on hearing the sound, turned quickly, but the shadower was clinging so closely to terra firma that his body was not discovered, and after looking in that direction for several seconds, the former began the ascent again. The flash of something which he had drawn from his pocket when the fall occurred made the reporter more careful, but did not abate his ardor.

Like thousands of others in Nashville I have been a skeptic on this particular branch of aerial navigation until yesterday afternoon, during a trip to the Centennial City in search of news. I chanced upon unmistakable evidence of the building of an air ship.

The man led the way to the western side of the knob, and here was a surprise, the nature of which simply repaid the reporter for his long chase and any danger in which his inquisitiveness had led him.

While sitting in one of the offices on the ground floor, awaiting the arrival of the official of whom I was in quest, I chanced to notice a ship of paper at my feet. Thinking that perhaps it had been blown from the desk near which I sat, I picked it up and was about to place it on the desk when my eye caught the words, "Aeronautical Department."

Clearly defined against the clear sky was a strange body. A body whose peculiar shape made the blood leap quick in the young man's veins as he lay upon the ground behind a shrub, and listened to his heart beat.

As I knew of no such department on the grounds, and fearing I had been remiss in the search for readable news for the public, I glanced a second time at the sheet before me. Having a slight knowledge of the necessary arrangements for the successful launching of air ships, it dawned on me that this bit of paper pertained to such an occasion. I hastily made a copy of its contents, as follows:

It was the famous airship, at last, and was anchored by a rope to a tree. The craft was about fifty feet long and tapered from the center in both directions, with the greatest diameter about fifteen feet. Only one side was seen by the reporter from his hiding place and on that there were six propellers, not unlike the whirligigs made of paper and sold on the streets to children. They were about twelve feet from tip to tip.

Tennessee Centennial Exposition Company, Nashville, Tenn., April 26.--To E.C. Lewis, Director General: Please furnish the following articles to be used in the Aeronautical Department, Top of Hill:

The wings were only slightly in motion, just sufficiently to keep the anchoring rope fast. The body of the craft, or the hull, shone in the moonlight, and substantiated the belief heretofore expressed that aluminum had been used in its manufacture, something similar to the headlight of the ordinary railway engine, but no light emanated from it nor was there a single ray visible about the concern. Not a sign of life was to be seen about the airship until the man with the basket whistled shrilly. Then a door creaked and a voice said: "Hello, Jack, is that you?"

Quan. Des. Where Want. When Want.

"Sure," was the answer from below. Then there was heard the sound of sliding rope, and the end of it appeared swinging down from the airship. As the rope end came dangling down, the man on the ground began to unfasten that that anchored the ship. A noose was in the end of the rope let down, in which he placed his foot, and very soon the creak of a pulley was heard, and he began to rise. In a short time he was on board, the other rope end was pulled in, and the six immense whirligigs on the visible side of the craft began to revolve more rapidly. One end of the vessel was slightly elevated and gradually it drew farther and farther away from the earth. When an altitude of one hundred feet had been reached, suddenly a brilliant light appeared in the headlight on the bow and a green one Iron filings from red car to top of hill. Keep dry. 50x20 feet of burlap taken to top of hill an ounce.

50x150 trees cut front, rear and north sides at once.

Water run to large tank at once.

Ground leveled on north side (sand top) at once.

One bushel of unslacked lime and any small loose rope 200 feet long at once.

Keep for to-night. / A.W. BARNARD, Placing the requisition on the desk, I started in search of "the top of the hill." Just in the rear of the Commerce Building stands a hill, surmounted by a huge barn-like building, nearly completed. There I directed my steps, and after plodding through ankle deep mud, I came upon two carpenters at work some distance away from the mysterious building.

"Where is Mr. Barnard?" I asked. "Don't know anybody of that name," was the reply. "Can you tell me what the building you are working on is to be used for?" I inquired.

"I dunno. Guess its goin' to be a stable." Seeing that I could gain no knowledge in that quarter, I walked up to the building. It was a huge, barn-like structure, with nothing mysterious about it except two peculiarly constructed tanks on the north side, one smaller than the other, and connected by piping. After making a survey of the surroundings, I addressed another carpenter.

"Where is Mr. Barnard?"

"I don't know."

"Well, he was up here a few minutes ago, and I have important business with him. Can't you know where he is?"

"I haven't seen him since this morning."

I next asked him about the airship, but the man was posted, and I had no knowledge of such a thing. He said he did not know what the building was for, and it wasn't any of my business. I was convinced that the carpenter knew something more than he was willing to admit. Before many minutes I proved the correctness of my convictions.

"Yes, it's something of that sort," he said, when I told him point blank I knew the whole business. "They just told us they wanted a building 60x10 feet, and wouldn't give us any plan to work on." Maj. Lewis said they were going to put an eighteen foot goose in it, and that's what I have been telling everybody that asks what the shanty is for."

"What are those tanks for?" I asked.

"Chemicals," was the startling reply.

"I understand a trial ascension will be made tonight. Is that so?"

"No; they didn't intend to make one tomorrow evening, but we couldn't get this house completed in time. I think it has been postponed."

Seeing that I could get nothing more from that source, I went in search of Mr. Barnard, but found that he had left the premises.

Luckily I ran across an employe who is on the inside, to a certain degree, of this exclusive airship society, and found the workshop where the aerial wonder is in course of construction. It is located under the Administration building, and there were all the mechanical appliances to be put together to form the great invention. I could not get more than a glimpse, but among other things was a [square] mass of silk, which filled with chemicals will be the supporting power of the machine.

I had managed to get a description of Mr. A.W. Barnard, and had also learned from my hilltop informant that he had been ordered to send the key of [] building, in the event of its being sufficiently completed to put a lock on it, to the Architects office in the Administration Building, where he would get it at [] o'clock, when he came back to the grounds.

It was now about 3 in the afternoon, and I had at least a three hours' wait ahead of me. This time I availed in finding a number of people closely connected with headquarters if they knew Mr. Barnard or anything about the building on the hill. One and all were totally ignorant of his existence. Never in the history of the Centennial has such a remarkable secret been kept so long. I felt a great deal of admiration for the genius of the men who could not construct a wonder which will revolutionize the travel of the world, but, [still] keep their operations a profound secret from the brilliant local news gatherers who daily visit the Centennial in search of items.

As 6 o'clock drew near I secured an introduction to a gentleman who knew Mr. Barnard, and he promised me the pleasure of meeting the gentleman in whom so much mystery is centered.

Shortly after 6 a slender, medium-sized man, with blue eyes and Vandyke beard, ran up the steps of the Administration Building and I recognized him as the man I was in search of. In a few minutes I secured the wished-for introduction, my friend at the same time adding, "Col. Church can tell you whether it is finished or not. He has just been up to [] see it."

Upon learning that he referred to the prospective home of the airship, I answered that it was not finished. As soon as an opportunity presented itself I took Mr. Barnard to one side of the veranda and asked him for news about the air ship.

"I don't know anything about any air ship," he replied.

"How about the building on the hill?" I asked.

"Oh, that is to be used for aeronautic displays. We will have different kinds of kites, balloons and that sort of thing there."

I refrained from saying that it was rather a strange departure from the general line pursued by the Centennial people to construct such a barren shanty for exhibits, far off on a hill, and said:

"Mr. Barnard, I know positively two things. First that there is an air ship being constructed; second, that you are in charge of the construction. Now, will you kindly tell me something about this [] matter?"

"Who are you?" Mr Barnard asked.

"I am a Sun reporter," I replied.

"Well, I don't know anything about it in the first place, and if I did I never gave any news to a reporter, and don't intend to. If you want to know anything about what is going on out here you should go to Maj. Lewis, Dr. Dudley or Mr. Bruce. They are in charge and can tell you anything they want to."

This was far from satisfactory, and I soon convinced Mr. Barnard that I knew enough about the air ship to make a good story, even without any assistance from him. When he discovered this he changed his tactics, and told me that any premature publicity would interfere seriously with their plans, and that a number of the most prominent people in Tennessee were interested in the matter.

He further said that a contract had been made with everybody concerned to remain silent until the trial trip was made, and gave me to understand that such an arrangement had been made with the Associated Press and local papers. I was in position to know that no such agreement existed between the Sun and the air ship speculators, and told him so, and that I was under no obligations to refrain from what would be interesting, if not sensational news to the Nashville public.

He admitted that arrangements had been made for a trial trip Tuesday night, but that owing to the rain of yesterday it would have to be postponed one day. Mr. Barnard said, however, that if I published anything regarding the intended trip or the air ship in general, he would deny it in the next paper. I pointed out that in the end the public would see that the Sun told the truth, but he argued that it made no difference. He would deny it for the time being. Mr. Barnard laid particular stress on the great error I would make in connecting the gentlemen who are connected with the enterprise with it.

Although Mr. Barnard spent the succeeding twenty minutes in trying to explain to me the reasons why this matter should be kept quiet, I could not see the logic in it, and at last told the gentleman that the only way to do so would be to telephone to the editorial rooms of the Sun. Should my editor say remain silent I would drop the matter at once.

We then went to see Director General Lewis about the matter, but he had gone for the night. Dr. William L. Dudley, Director of Affairs and Mr. Bruce were coming down the stairs as we entered the building, and as Dr. Dudley is one of the interested parties, I asked his advice in the matter. He told me that he, as were all others interested, were under promise to remain silent regarding the strange enterprise, but when I suggested that he put a stop to my investigations by requesting the managing editor that I be called to a halt, he replied that he had no authority to do so. He asked that no names be mentioned, saying that a man's name was his own property.

I differed from him, and the conversation ended by Dr. Dudley telling me that I was a free agent, but it would be far better to let the matter rest until it could be spoken of more freely. It was his idea, he said, to make a trial of the air ship soon, and invite all the newspaper men, when, if everything worked smoothly, a full detailed statement would be furnished them. If no, they were to be requested to suppress any notice of the matter whatever.

After leaving Dr. Dudley, Mr. Barnard and I held another spirited session in which that gentleman averred his desire to give me all the news later on, but wished his name suppressed now, and said he did not know as much about it as the carpenter who was erecting the building to contain the ship.

This ended the lengthy discussion, and Mr. Barnard, who says he is not connected with the air ship, headed directly for the shanty on the hilltop. I strolled slowly toward the Centennial gate convinced by beyond a doubt of several things, to wit:

An air ship is being constructed at the Centennial.

That it will sail (perhaps) from the shanty on the hill.

That no one who is connected with it knows anything about it, and that the first trial will be a revelation to those who had no suspicion that such a wonder was in their midst. J.M.C.

1897 May 1 (Sat.) Daily Leaf-Chronicle, Clarksville, Tenn., p. 2.

SAW THE AIRSHIP. / Occupants Were Visible, Waving Their Hands. / Story of the Aerial Wonder Which Comes From Elkton--A Startled Family. / The following appeared in yesterday's issue of the Todd County Times:

"Tuesday night about 7 o'clock as a family living south of town were sitting at the supper-table, they were suddenly startled by the furious barking of the ever-faithful watchdog, and as is usual with children, they all rushed out to see what had caused the excited excitement of the canine. They all rushed back pell-mell, head-over-heels, exclaiming: 'Jack-o' lantern in the sky, mamma! Jack-o' lantern in the sky!' The wiser heads of the family, after close inspection, concluded that Elkton had at last been favored with a visit from the wonderful airship. And, as Elkton was never known to be out of line, they were not in the least surprised at the mysterious spectacle that met their view. For the benefit of the curious, we will give as accurate a description of it as possible: A large cigar-shaped affair, with immense white wings. It was not very high and the guy ropes and rods could be seen plainly. Three men were visible and they frantically waved their hands as they passed. The machine had a zig-zag course and seemed to be out of working order.

"Any further information will be gladly furnished by Miss Katie Barnes, Elkton, Ky."

1897 May 2 (Sun) Nashville American, p. 14. (card 1)

REPUTED HOME OF THE AIRSHIP / Story From Wisconsin Gives an Account of the Invention of Such a Machine. / DISCOVERED BY AN ACCIDENT / Three Men Are the Inventors and Sailors of the Mysterious Craft--Left Letter Saying They Were Gone to Washington. / ...

A dispatch from Brule, Wis., bearing date of April 24, says: It is extremely probable that the famous airship has found correct solution through discoveries just made by residents of Brule, taken in connection with facts of peculiar nature existing prior to the first discovery of the floating vessel.

Volney Stewart, a young Scotchman, who has resided in this town for five years is believed to be the inventor of the mysterious craft, and it is further believed that he is now on board the vessel with two companions, John Jenkins and Harry Foster, the former being a cousin and the latter a brother-in-law of the inventor. The discovery furnishing ground for this theory was made last Wednesday morning by James Conness, a prominent resident of this place, and the facts [] tending to strengthen the theory are attested by nearly half the populace. The residents of Brule have not the slightest doubt that the mystery has been solved by them, in fact so strong is the belief that Stewart and his two companions are now flying through the air aboard the mysterious vessel that great fear is entertained by friends of the three gentlemen for their safety. Whether or not the theory prove correct, it is certain that the three men named have furnished a genuine sensation for the public and have an interesting story concerning aerial navigation that is built upon well known facts, together with a chain of statements made by veracious people.

Stewart was a local builder, but for a number of years previous to the building of the house he had been in various capacities. It was first found out that Stewart made his last trip to Duluth, and from the latter place he came to Brule and took possession of a tract of Government lumber land. A few months later Jenkins and Foster went out to the claim to "batch" with him, and the three men have resided there until a few weeks ago. After building a comfortable log cabin, the men set to work upon the construction of a one-story, faced-log building, and in a few months this was completed. This brick building, so men said, was to be used for a barn, but, strange to say, the only domestic animal upon the place was a dog, and the people of that neighborhood were somewhat at a loss to understand why a building of such dimensions was necessary in such a place. The structure came to be looked upon with suspicion by those who knew of its existence, and some of the more curious ones were energetic in their efforts to ascertain its purpose, but without complete success. It was noted that a great deal of time was spent by the three men within the mysterious structure, while the clanking of hammers and the buzzing of saws could frequently be heard by people traveling that way. But the one large door of the building was invariably bolted and the windows on either side were frosted to obscure the view from outside, so that a glance at the interior could not be obtained without smashing a window or forcing an entrance through the door, and this could hardly be successfully accomplished, because the building was constantly under the watchful eyes of the three companions from the house when they were not occupied at their mysterious pursuit. At last it was agreed among the people of the neighborhood that the three claim dwellers were carrying on some illegitimate business and the xxxxxxxx majority were inclined to the belief that they were engaged in making counterfeit money.

One day about three years ago some unknown person took the pains to notify the United States authorities that a counterfeiting establishment was operating at full blast in broad daylight and United States Deputy Marshall Oakley instituted a quiet investigation of the report. But to arrest followed, and it was said at the time that Mr. Oakley and a secret service xxxxx man went to the Stewart homestead and searched the mysterious building, but failed to discover evidence of counterfeiting. For five years the three friends continued to occupy themselves within that mysterious building, xxx closely guarding the secret of their occupation, while the people on the outside continued to hover about the place like vultures, hungry for information. Frequently one of the men would go to Ashland or Duluth for provisions or material, and so curious were some of the residents to solve the mystery of the one-story building that they occasionally followed the man to town and watched his movements as a detective would a criminal but without obtaining the desired information.

About six months ago the report circulated among the neighbors that a man from Ashland, while "looking" timber, had accidentally gained access to the mysterious building and that he had discovered the secret so closely guarded for years by the three friends. He had promised not to disclose the secret, the report said, but one day, a few weeks later while on a spree, the "looker" became talkative and violated his rash promise. He caused it to be made known generally that what he saw inside the secret workshop was nothing more or less than a wonderful new invention in the line of an airship, and that he had been given the quiet tip to the effect that the three builders were just putting on the finishing touches when he saw it and proposed to set sail with the craft in a short time. They did not allow him to inspect the craft closely, he said, but xxx during the brief xxx time in which he was accorded the privilege of feasting his eyes on the new aerial wonder he saw enough of the craft to enable him to furnish a general description of it.

According to the story of this man, whose name is Robert Haner, and who is a well-known resident of Ashland, the vessel he saw was about thirty feet in length, shaped like a screw, the large end being perhaps ten feet in diameter, with a gradual taper to a sharp point. The boat, he said, rested upon wooden horses, and suspended from the rear of the axis upon which the main body was evidently intended to revolve was an enclosed carriage, probably large enough to hold six men comfortably, and lighted on two sides by single-pane windows. He saw nothing in the shape of wings attached to the ship, and came to the conclusion that the machine would be operated by some power contained within the revolving screw. Haner avers that the three men ordered him to leave the place instantly, but he managed to tarry a few minutes, greatly to their disgust, and finally left in company with one of the men, who gave him the information which he subsequently disclosed, the agreement being that he would say nothing about his visit to the place until six months had elapsed. The people who heard Haner's story were inclined to discredit it, but their views were altered a few weeks later by the story of a lumber jack, who also claimed to have stolen a glimpse of the air vessel, and whose description of the wonder tallied with that of Haner's as far as it went. The lumber jack claimed to have reached the door of the log building just as one of the three friends was coming out, and while the door stood ajar he gave the interior a searching look and discovered the screw-shaped air vessel resting upon a pair of carpenter's horses. The man at the door, he said, ordered him away from the place, and upon his refusal to withdraw intently grasped a double-barreled shotgun and ushered him away under cover. Upon signifying his willingness to depart peacefully from the premises the man with the gun ventured the information that the object of their labors inside was a new model water craft for navigating in deep water.

Wednesday morning Jas. Conness, while returning to Brule from a visit to a homesteader, passed by the Stewart house, and when nearing the cabin made the discovery that one side of the mysterious building was torn away and that the material taken therefrom was carefully piled near by. His curiosity was aroused and he decided to investigate. Inside the building there was a miscellaneous collection of material, including scraps of sheet iron, bolts, waste lumber, narrow strips of brass, pieces of canvas, ropes, etc., and outside there were four posts driven into the ground, attached to which were four long ropes, one of them dangling over the top of a tall pine tree.

Conness rapped at the cabin for admittance, but received no response, and then returned to town. Later in the day Mr. Conness, accompanied by a dozen other residents of the town, went out to the Stewart claim to satisfy themselves of the truth of the story. They found things as represented by Mr. Conness, and made the further discovery by affecting an entrance into the cabin, that preparations had been made by the three claim dwellers for a departure. In the lean-to used for a kitchen there were two large chests in which were carefully arranged numerous sets of carpenter's tools of all descriptions and in the one large room of the building all the furniture was carefully stored and covered with sheets, while in a rudely-constructed cupboard was found a dozen books treating on the science of modern shipbuilding and aerial navigation. Tacked to the outside of the lean-to door was a card upon which was written in a scrawling hand the words: / "Gone to Washington to get a patent. / "VOLNEY STEWART."

By comparing notes the residents of the Stewart vicinity and of the town of Brule arrived at the conclusion that the three ship-builders must have taken their departure about three weeks ago. They were not seen by any of the residents since that time and one man is positive that he noticed the side of the building was gone over two weeks ago.

1897 May 8 (Sat) Memphis Commercial Appeal, p. 177

Airship Seen Last Night. / Mrs. Hannah Nixon Was the Person Who Saw It, And She Describes the Object.

An airship was seen last night by a Memphis, by a woman of veracity and intelligence. She is Mrs. Hannah Nixon, of 235 Beale Street, a kinswoman of Mrs. Emmett Howard. Mrs. Nixon tells in a straightforward manner what she saw. She related to a reporter for the Commercial Appeal her experience something as follows:

"I had stepped out of my room on the veranda upstairs and was enjoying the cool air, when I noticed a dark object in the west moving rapidly along from north to south. The dark object, as near as I could see, was cigar-shaped and about as long as that table," she said, pointing to a center table that is five feet or more long.

"Along the top was a streak of light, resembling somewhat the top of a street car when it is at a distance. Suddenly a bright light flashed up like a search light, about twice as long as the dark object. This light went out, but the row of lights along the top remained as long as I could see them.

"I think it must have been in sight four or six minutes, for when I saw it I stepped through the window into my room and took my field glasses from the mantle and looked at it again. It just seemed to glide through space without a bobble.

"No, it was not a meteor, nor the moon either. It did not go as fast as a meteor, nor did it look like one. The moon was farther to the right than this object, and the clouds were just clearing away and made the moon appear to bobble.

"I know I saw it, and I believe it was an airship. I expect to ride in an airship before the year is over."

No amount of jesting could shake Mrs. Nixon's faith in what she saw. She believes it was an airship and accepts no other theory or phenomenon. She regretted that the trees prevented a prolonged view of the strange object.

1897 May 9 Memphis Commercial Appeal, p. 7. (Sun).

This Settles It. / Hot Springs Officials Make Affidavit Covering Definite Contact with the Airship.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., May 8.—(Special.)—The mysterious airship which has been seen at so many different points throughout the country in the past month, and been the subject of much newspaper criticism, was seen about five miles west of this city last night by Deputy Sheriff McLenore and Constable Sumpter, who were out in search of a fellow constable who had been sent in the country to secure service of a witness in court. In a sworn affidavit published today the above gentlemen state that when first seen by them the vessel was high in the air and descending to the ground. It struck terra firma a short distance ahead of the riders, and was brilliantly lighted with electricity. Upon approaching nearer, two men and one woman was found beside the vessel filling its tank with water from a neighboring stream. It was cigar-shaped and resembled the pictures contained in many of the newspapers. The older of the occupants is described as a tall man with long black beard, who courteously invited the officers to take a ride with him. He stated that they were bound for Nashville to attend the exposition.

The story of the men was given no credence until after their sworn affidavits appear [sic] today, and as both men are of undoubted integrity their statement can be fully relied on as being true.

1897 May 12 (Wed morn) Nashville Sun, p. 1.

SEA SERPENT ASHORE / Monster Now Stalking Kansas Plains Devastating Plantations. / AN APPETITE UNPARALLELED / Unusual Shape And Color, but in Its Taste Differs From Past Records. / SWALLOWS BIG GAME. / Hogs, Chickens and Even Dogs and Plow Horses Victims of Its Omnivorousness--Proof Against Bullets. /

Topeka, Kan., May 11.—B.P. Walker, Postmaster of the town of Logan, is authority for the story that the farmers who lived in the valley of Crystal Creek in Phillips county are greatly excited by the appearance there of an enormous reptile, which reputable men say is not less than fifty feet long.

It has the sinuous body of a snake, but its tongue is not forked and upon its head are two short horns. Its color is green, with dirty white spots.

It feeds upon small animals and fowls and it has an enormous appetite. One night a farmer lost sixty chickens and the next morning he followed the trail of the reptile until it disappeared in the creek.

Another farmer lost forty young pigs in forty-eight hours, and a German testifies that the monster killed his plow horse, which was feeding near the creek, by a single blow from its enormous tail. It has been shot at several times, but its hide is proof against bullets. When in anger it lifts its head three feet in the air and protrudes its tongue three feet or more and utters a whine like a puppy.

The farmers are afraid of it, but will make an organized effort to destroy it. It hides in the swamp and water, and it is supposed it came from the deeper water of the Solomon some miles distant.

D. C., VIRGINIA

April 13, 1897 Washington Post (Tues.) p. 6 (editorials)

The Kentucky people are so engrossed with their Senatorial fight that they are neglecting their chief industry and the quality of their output has sadly deteriorated. This accounts for the actions of those Western people who are seeing air ships in the sky at night.

Wed. April 14, p. 6--The airship jag is becoming a very common Western institution.

Thurs. April 15, p. 6--St. Louis is seeing the air ship. It is cheaper than grand opera.

--Possibly the navigator of the Oregon (battle ship recently run aground) was trying to give an imitation of that Western airship.

Fri. April 16, p. 6--There is considerable curiosity to know in what respect the air ship next morning differs from the orthodox variety.

--The sight of that air ship is making all Western editors sea sick.

Mon. April 19, p. 6--The Chicago man knows just what it means when he is invited to brace up for a look at the airship.

--They are beginning to receive messages from those airships. This ought to interest the chaps who declare Shakespeare didn't write it.

April 20, 1897 Washington Post (Tues.) p. 6 (eds)

The airship now has a formidable eastern rival. A man at Beaver Falls, Pa., ran over a dog, was thrown from his bicycle, and since that time has been seeing everything double.

Wed. April 21, p. 6--The North squadron of airships is now stationed over Michigan, and will remain there as long as the supply of liquor lasts.

--Hon. William Jennings Bryan is disposed to make a political airship of himself.

Thurs. April 22, p. 6--The summer resort without an airship attachment will not be in it this season.

Sat. April 24, p. 6--The increasing time between the airship stories indicates a corresponding increase of time between drinks.

April 25, 1897 Washington Post (Sun.) p. 6 (editorials) (card 1)

The Airship.

The reports of a mysterious airship are becoming more numerous and more bewildering. At first the progress of the ship from the extreme West was easterly. There were no retrograde movements. It appeared somewhat irregularly in spots, but every time it was reported it was further east than before. Latterly it has become erratic and has been signaled from points further west. Illinois, it would seem, was as far east as it was able to get. The steering gear of the machine got out of order somehow and the ship is now, according to the latest accounts, hovering over Cripple Creek, Colorado, in an aimless and uncontrollable manner.

A gentleman residing in Cripple Creek was out in his barn on last Saturday evening, when he was startled by hearing something fall on the roof of the building. Supposing someone was throwing stones, he went outside and asked a little girl who was playing around if she had seen anyone throwing stones at the barn. She said she had not, but had seen something drop on the roof. The gentleman climbed on the roof and found there a square box stuffed with paper, which on being opened disclosed a common sheet of writing paper, which read as follows:

"In Hidaïr, April 17.

"To Whoever Finds This Note:

"There are three of us loose in an airship. Our names and addresses are C. J. Pillsbury, 180 Washington street, Boston, Mass.; Pierre Humbert, city engineer, Boston; C. D. Novina, 72 Rue Traffant, Paris.

"On April 8 last we were on terra firma. Upon that day we descended upon a switch on the Missouri Pacific, in Eastern Kansas, named Weeks, which is about 17 miles north of Emporia. We have since been sailing, we know not where. We are out of water and have given up all hope, and we trust that whoever finds this note will immediately wire to the addresses given."

To this account is added the information that the gentleman who found the can examined the heavens and imagined he could detect a bright speck, but as darkness was coming on he could not be sure. It is alleged, however, that fully 3,000 people in Cripple Creek saw a glittering object about a mile above them, shaped like a cigar, which worked over toward the west and disappeared behind a cloud. As the airship was seen in Iowa a day or two before, down on the ground, guarded by a man with a rifle, who refused to allow any person to come close to the machine, it is clear the ship is rapidly moving west and southerly.

We are sorry for this. The progress eastward was so persistent that we were encouraged to hope Washington was the destination of the airship and that in about two weeks from Easter Sunday it would reach here. This hope is doomed to destruction by the news from Cripple Creek, and while we are not altogether surprised at this retrograde movement, still we are grieved and disappointed. The journey of the airship has not been recorded with the respect due such an enterprise. There has been an air of levity pervading the accounts of the airship, not so much in announcements of its appearance as the way in which these announcements have been treated. In the remarks made by the press in general there has been a notable element of thinly veiled skepticism, which has doubtless had its effects on the navigators of the airship, and determined them on retracing their course back to where a more primitive people will greet them with enthusiasm and confidence instead of with the unbelief and suspicion which they met with as they journeyed east.

It is sad to reflect that genius is greatly below par in the market and promoters of airship schemes are quoted as low as two cents on the dollar; but when an airship does make its appearance it should have a chance to show what it can do and not be blown from its course by the tornado-like breath of adverse criticism. One newspaper in Minnesota threw an obstruction across the path of the airship in this wise: "Until further notice the Scorchers will not accept airship stories by wire unless they are prepaid or accompanied by a photograph of the elusive aerial visitor." Now, that is no way to encourage genius. No wonder the airship doubled on its trail and sought the mountain regions of Colorado. The "loose in an airship" story is probably intended to mislead the critics. Pure disgust at the treatment they have received along their route and what they might expect as they drew nearer the Atlantic coast inspired the change of course, and the steering gear got out of order because the voyagers became listless and inattentive and we hope the ship will get near enough to some mountain peak for the passengers to throw a grappling hook or two and anchor while repairs are made. Further news is anxiously awaited.

April 25, 1897 Washington Post p. 6 (eds.) Sun.

That man who is without the price of a squint at the airship is not cutting much of a figure in the West these days.

Mon. April 26, 1897, p. 4--Must Have Taken an Air Ship (S.C. banker disappears)

--- p. 6--Mr. Mason will never be able to get the U. S. Senate into an airship mood.

Wed. April 28, p. 1--That Mysterious Airship. (cartoon--balloon tax labeled "National Democracy", piloted by Cleveland and associates in undercarriage, has broken rope and rudder, and drops message of "We can't land" over Washington Monument) "The task is not an easy one, but surely not hopeless"--G. Cleveland.

Fri. April 30, p. 1--Daylight meteors story.

April 18, 1897 New York Tribune (Sun.) p. 6 (arsp as modern Flyg Dutchman)

Sat. May 8, p. 2--Barnard's airship is nothing special. There have been many similar ones which work as well, and the French "dirigibles" of 10-12 years ago worked better.

May 2, 1897 Washington Post (Sunday) p. 28 (card 1)

Light on the Airships

Weather Chief Moore Says They Are Kites.

Imagination Did the Rest.

People All Over the Country Have Been Constructing Great Cellular Kites, According to Plans Recently Published by the Government and Those Which Escaped and Sailed Away Probably Gave Rise to the Airship Stories.

Professor Moore Chief of the Weather Bureau, is confident that he can explain the stories of mysterious airships which have created such widespread interest recently. Said he yesterday:

"They are kites--that is to say, kites of the newfangled cellular pattern, which people all over the country have been making after the plans published not long ago by the Weather Bureau. The utmost interest has been exhibited by newspaper accounts of these kites, and many persons in various cities, provided with the plans, have gone to work to manufacture them for purposes of amusement. This we know to be a fact incidentally, it often happens that the kites escape, and under such conditions they will float at a great height for a long time, traveling in some cases for a surprising distance. Commonly they are large affairs, ten feet or more in length. Attach three or four lanterns to one of them, and as seen at night, making allowance for exaggeration by the imagination, the contrivance corresponds reasonably well to the descriptions printed. There is no doubt whatever that the so-called airship seen floating near Washington the other day was a kite which got away from our experts near Arlington on the same day."

[rest of long article concerned with kites and their scientific uses.]

1897 April 28 (Wed.) Roanoke, Va., Times, p. 5.

THE AIRSHIP SEEN.

The mysterious air ship continues its nightly wanderings. A citizen of Ballyhack came into town yesterday morning and reported that the vessel was seen sailing over Mill Mountain Sunday night about 12 o'clock, making in the direction of Hollins. It first hovered for a short time over Virginia College, and it is said the voices of Q. L. Harston, Lawrence Davis, Willie Eberhardt, City Editor Pepper and W. B. Daniel could be heard distinctly, singing to guitar accompaniment, "Come Where My Love Lies Dreaming." The airship was white and looked like a huge swan, occasionally flapping its wings with great grace and beauty as it made an upward flight. The flash light just at the bow of the vessel was a beautiful sight, lighting up Ballyhack with such brightness that two men were seen to take a drink from June 14, 4 / Life in Georgia. / Worse Than the Air Ship.--It is reported that a strange looking figure which resembled a woman with long floating hair was seen by a few of our citizens a few evenings ago, flying through the air three or four hundred feet over the Litchfield Hotel, Neworth Post.

1897 May 18 (Tues eve) Atlanta Journal, p. 4.

LIFE IN GEORGIA

Saw the Airship.--Several prominent farmers living west of Cordele report having seen the passage of what seemed to be an airship on yesterday morning, just before daybreak. It gave out a brilliant light, sufficient to illuminate objects under its path. Excitement in the neighborhood over which the air ship passed was intense for several hours and it was not until it had vanished from sight that the spectators realized they had seen a real air ship.--Cordele Budget.

20, 2 Strange ran wandering in woods--is armed. 8 Weird man in local park.

27, 4 Animal the size of large dog, light colored, with dark spots, is loose in Calhoun county and kills and eats dogs at night.

June 9, p. 1 Barnard's arap explodes, but it makes parachute so he lands safe.

1897 June 7 (Mon. eve.) Atlanta Journal, p. 3.

AN AIRSHIP HERE SOME FOLKS SAY / Passed Over Northern Part of the City About 1 O'Clock This Morning. / HOW THE SHIP LOOKED / It Resembled the Upper Saloon of an Ocean Steamer Seen in the Distance--Description of It. /

An air ship passed over the northern portion of the city about 1 o'clock last night.

It was seen by a number of well-known citizens, and a most novel and striking sight it presented.

It seemed to be about a mile high and was sweeping along at the rate of about ten miles an hour. It was not vividly seen, but the outlines were distinctly visible. The aerial vessel seemed to be about the size of an electric car, was brilliantly lighted as if with electricity, and had somewhat the appearance of the upper deck saloon of an ocean steamer when seen at a great distance on the sea at night.

Quite a number of people in the northern part of the city distinctly saw and greatly admired the nocturnal visitor, which, moving slowly, was readily visible for a few moments, and then disappeared gracefully to the northeast, seemingly passing over the Southern railway beyond Ponce de Leon.

1897 June 22 (Tues.) Atlanta Journal, p. 4.

Life in Georgia.

Everybody Sees It.--Several citizens report having seen a huge ball of fire floating in the heavens southeast of town about 9 o'clock Wednesday night. The ball remained in sight a few seconds and was as large as an infant's head.--Hartwell Sun.

Mon. June 21, p. 4. Life in Georgia. / Not an Air Ship.--A meteor or aerolite, as dazzling as ever swept across the firmament, passed from east to north about 25 degrees above the horizon at 8:05 o'clock Wednesday night. The light had an electric brilliancy, and the flying globe left a train of sparks like a gorgeous rock. Probably no larger nor more beautiful meteor was ever seen.--Eatonton Messenger.

23k 24.3. Giant frog, Covington.

July 14, p. 2. Man who cursed God burned by sulphurous fire from inside his body.

July 22, p. 4. / Life in Georgia. / Rainbow at Night.--While going home about 12 o'clock at night recently from a Kukkk Knights of Pythias lodge meeting Dr. Howard E. Felton and Mr. John Kennedy say they saw a wonderful phenomenon in the eastern sky in the shape of a rainbow. The moon was shining brightly while rain was falling with the above result.--Cartersville News.

29, 4. 40' blacksnake, Calhoun.

FLORIDA, ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI, ARKANSAS

1897 May 2 (Sun) Florida Times-Union (Jacksonville), p. 12

WELAKA WAIFS. / Famous Air Ship Seen Passing Over Lake George Recently / ...

While out with their girls on the St. Johns river last night, several of the young men saw something pass over little Lake George, which looked like an air-ship. It appeared to be about fifty feet long, and was going in the direction of Cuba.

Friday April 16., p. 6. STATE ITEMS.

The other night at the foot of Scott street, near the river, a bright light was seen emerging from the river. It was thought to be a lantern carried by a fisherman, but further investigation proved it to be a ball of fire about the size of a baseball. Some little boys wanted to catch it, but it soon took a rise and disappeared.--Tampa Herald.

Tues. April 20, p. 8. IN AND ABOUT THE CITY.

A solar halo was observed for several hours yesterday, the luminous circle with prismatic colors attracting a great deal of attention. A large number of superstitious people began to g tell what it meant. Some said it was a sign of war between this country and some foreign power; others that it was an Easter omen set in the heavens as a sign that peace would soon prevail in all parts of the world.

11, 4. Two airships are now reported as floating over Nebraska cities. And yet there is plenty of good drinking water in Nebraska.

12, 4. The airship is now being seen in Iowa. Where, oh where is Francis Murphy?

16, 4. That air-ship has not yet made its appearance over any part, of Florida, and yet a ~~great~~ great deal of whiskey is drunk in this state.

19, 4. The man who is in love is navigating an air ship. 1897 April 11 (Wed.) Birmingham (Ala) News, p. 3.

TUSCUMBIA SPEC IT. / The Air Ship Article Seems to Flow in Alabama. A special of the 17th from Tuscombua to the Montgomery Advertiser says:

This city is in a tumult of excitement over the appearance of a large black object, which passed over last evening about 8 o'clock. It had an immense headlight, which could be seen for miles. It was seen by several parties, who claim they could very distinctly make out a large barrel-shaped body, with the large light in front. The moon was shining bright and the sky was very clear, thus giving a good chance for observation. From the description of the celestial visitor, it was probably an air ship, and was traveling directly south, from a northern direction, and was making for the mountains, which are about three miles south of the city, where it was last seen going down behind them. It could not have been a meteor, as it did not travel fast enough for one, and the people are wondering what their strange ~~the~~ celestial visitor was.

p. 4: It remained for a Kansas man to provide the best description of the nocturnal airship. He said: "It looked to me about as big as a beer glass."

p. 4 (Spirit of teh Press): "Several thousand people living in the vicinity of Chicago saw, Friday night, in the sky an illuminated something or other, which they took to be an air ship. The aerial vehicle has now been seen in Kans, Neb, Minn, Ia and Ill. We trust it may come south so that we may be duly satisfied that the whole northwest has not been seized with an epidemic of lying. Perhaps it is an escaped boat from the canals of Mars. Perhaps it is a Crookes tube on a rampage. Perhaps it is the star-eyed goddess of reform searching for Mr. Harry Watterson. Perhaps it is the ball fired to the moon from Fla. by Jules Verne some years ago. Perhaps it is some stellar Hawaii seeking annexation. Perhaps it is another Chicago bank doing a fly-by-night business. There is no telling.--Macon Telegraph.

16, 4 The arap recently seen over Chi turns out to have been a balloon. The suggestion is made that perhaps it was the one in which the Republican city ring went up on election day. / also mention of C. Case lettr 17, 4 The mysta arap has passed over Clarksville and is now headed this way. Prohibitionists will not see it.--Memphis Scimitar.

19, 4 It remained for an Ia man to see the mysta arap alight in his field. He makes affidavit to that effect & says 2 men disembarked fr the car. And yet Ia is a prohibition state. / If the arap business continues the Prehib. party will be driven into calling an extra session to formulate plans for an emergency campaign.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Daily Clarion-Ledger (Jackson, Miss.), p. 2.

Several northeastern towns (in Miss. ?) report having seen an air-ship flying over, but so far no one has been able to discover whence the strange aircraft came or whether it went.

17, 2. Cooing lovers in Iowa, Illinois and other states are now "sitting up to see the airship." That's just as good a dodge as the old one of "staying out to see the comet."

While Western towns are having their excitement over, or rather under, the mysterious air-ship, what's the reason some enterprising citizen of Jackson cannot send up a balloon with a Chinese lantern or two attached and thus be in the swing? Dozens of places in the West have reported having seen an air ship during the past week or two and there has been the greatest excitement.

22, 2. That airship took a rest on mother earth near Stepenville, Tex, Monday, and hundreds of people went to see it. The three passengers did not permit anyone to examine its mechanism but informed them that they were testing the thing for New York capitalists and that aerial navigation is now an assured fact.

27, 2. The air ship is now spoken of as the "advance agent of prosperity." Its operators fight powerful shy of this part of the earth.

1897 April 22 (In) Arkansas Gazette, p. 3. (CARD 1)

SAW THE AIR SHIP / Conductor Hooton, of the Iron Mountain, Tells of It. / MOST AUTHENTIC STORY PRINTED / He Ran Across the Aerial Ship in an Open Field Near Roman and Talked With the Men Manning It--He Gives a Graphic Description of the Queer Looking Ship--Five Men Were Passengers in It--Mr. Hooton's Statement. /

Capt. "Jim" Hooton, the well-known Iron Mountain railroad conductor, who was in the city yesterday, not only verifies the report that he has seen the air ship, but has furnished "The Gazette" with the following sketch, which was made by him [The Air Ship As Sketched By Capt. Hooton.]. Those who know Mr. Hooton will vouch for the truth of his statement:

"Of course I saw the air ship," said Mr. Hooton to a "Gazette" reporter, "there is no doubt in the world about it, and you will be safe in banking on what I tell you. It came about in this way: I had gone down to Texarkana to bring back a special, and knowing that I would have some eight or ten hours to spare at Texarkana, I went to Illoman to do a little hunting. It was about 3 o'clock in the afternoon when I reached that place. The sport was good, and before I knew it, it was after 6 o'clock when I ~~was~~ started to make my way back toward the railroad station. As I was tramping through the brush my attention was attracted by a familiar sound, a sound for all the world like the working of an air pump on a locomotive. I went at once in the direction of the sound, and there in an open space of some five or six acres, I saw the object making the wata noise. To say I was astonished would but feebly express my feelings.

I decided at once that this was the famous air ship seen by so many people about the country. There was a medium-sized looking man aboard and I noticed that he was wearing smoked glasses. He was tinkering around what seemed to be the back end of the ship, and as I approached I was too dumfounded to speak. He looked at me in surprise, and said "Good day, sir; good day." I asked: "Is this the air ship?" and he replied, "Yes, sir," whereupon three or four other men came out of what was apparently the keel of the ship. A close examination showed that the keel was divided into two parts terminating in front like the sharp edge of a knife; in fact, the entire front end of the ship terminated in a knife-like edge, while the sides of the ship bulged gradually toward the middle, and then receded. There were three large wheels upon each side made of some bending metal and arranged so that they became concave as they moved forward. "I beg your pardon, sir," I said, "the noise sounds a good deal like a Westinghouse air brake." "Perhaps it does, my friends; we are using condensed air and aeroplanes, but you will know more later on." "All ready, sir," some one called out, and the party all disappeared below. I observed that just in front of each wheel a two-inch tube began to spurt air on the inside and they commenced revolving. The ship gradually arose with a hissing sound. The aeroplanes suddenly sprang forward, turning their sharp ends skyward, then the rudders at the end of the ship began to veer to one side, and the wheels revolved so fast that one could scarcely see the blades. In less time than it takes to tell you, the ship had gone out of sight. This drawing I have made you is the best I can do under the circumstances. I consider I was fortunate under the circumstances. I consider I was fortunate in seeing the ship. You may add that she pumped while standing still like the air pump of an engine. One particular feature I remember is that what I would call the cow-catcher was sharp as the blade of a knife and almost as pointed as a needle. There was no bell or bell rope about the ship that I could discover, like I should think every well regulated air locomotive should have."

LOUISIANA

1897 April 21 (wed) Daily Picayune (New Orleans), p. 6.

SOLIDLY SAVED BY LINES OF INTEREST. / ...The Flying Machine Seen by the People of Natchitoches... / NATCHITOCHES. / The Airship Seen in Louisiana.

Natchitoches, La., April 20.--Last night at about 1:30 o'clock, as a gay crowd were returning from a reception given by Company I at the Armory Hall, they were treated to a strange sight, coming from the western heavens. That spectacle consisted of a massive airship, the first story being of balloon shape, and the under car being of conical or cigar form. When first seen it seemed but a faintly animated spark, which, as it came nearer, gradually grew brighter. After a few moments its entire form was clearly perceptible, and developed a structure of strange proportions. It seemed to have been illuminated with a fluctuating light, which ranged from brilliancy to semi-darkness. Its destination appeared to be northerly, and it gave indications, from its course, as coming from Texas. It was evidently a machine of unique invention, as its movement was of an undulatory character, and bore a striking resemblance to the movement of some huge bird. It was visible, though about a thousand feet high, for nearly half an hour, and was a rare curiosity to those who had the good fortune to witness the phenomenon. The remarkable fact in connection with its visitation was that, as its course neared the city, the light that illuminated it became suddenly low, and did not again rise until the city was left in the darkness.

1897 April 21 (Wed) Daily Picayune (New Orleans), p. 9.

THE AIRSHIP. / One Man Saw It in New Orleans Last Night.

At 12:30 o'clock this morning Camp street in the vicinity of the newspapers offices was roused by an unearthly yell of "There it is!" and as quick as a flash the man who saw it disappeared up a stairway, and the racket as he jumped four steps at a time could be heard a block away. He had seen the airship, so he told his colleagues on the papers, and instantly every window in both offices was filled by the newspaper men and printers, all searching the heavens for the wonder, while the fortunate young man who saw it tried to describe it. He seemed very much excited, but he managed to say that he saw it going in a northwesterly direction, and it was about 50 or 60 feet long. It had a powerful searchlight which played around. As he described what he had seen everybody craned their necks and looked and looked, but they looked in vain, for there was nothing to be seen but the blue ether of night, dotted here and there with a twinkling star, which some started their companions by saying it was the searchlight of the aerial wonder. As the momenta flew by, and nobody saw anything which could by any possibility be distorted into an airship, the laugh began to grow on the man who said he saw it. He denied the soft impeachment which were cast at his veracity by his co-workers, but it was hard to convince them. His general reputation for truth and veracity is such, however, that his friends cannot help but believe that he saw something and as the airship was seen in the vicinity of Natchitoches yesterday, it is not unlikely that it may have come in this direction, the navigators bent on having a little fun at the expense of the people of New Orleans.

A young man connected with the Picayune claimed to have seen the airship here on April 1, but all he saw was the searchlight, as it was dark at the time. It was generally treated as an April fool joke, but the subsequent excitement caused by the alleged appearance of the strange craft in other cities leads to the belief that there may be some truth in it.

The two supposed navigators of the airship, Dolbear and Tillman, as they gave their names to the people of Stephenville, Tex., were supposed to have been in the city last night. Their names were registered at one of the hotels, but it was in all likelihood a hoax, as cards sent to their room failed to get any response.

219

1897 April 25 (Sun) Daily Picayune (New Orleans), p. 7.

THE AIRSHIP. / A Texas Rabbi Says He Has Seen It and Describes the Wonder.

There is a man in New Orleans who has seen the airship and conversed with one of the occupants. He is Rabbi A. Levy, of Beaumont, Tex., and his clerical position entitles him to credence.

Dr. Levy was seen by a Picayune man last night at the residence of Mrs. G. Levy, No. 40 St. Peter street, where he is stopping, having come to this city to attend the wedding of Mrs. Levy's daughter this afternoon, the young lady being his niece.

"You can take my word for it," said he, "that the airship is no myth. I had heard a good deal about it, but placed little reliance in the stories that were circulated, and doubted until the moment I saw it. It was about ten days ago on a farm about two miles from Beaumont, which is my home. About 10 o'clock that night the whole country around was aroused by the report that the airship had been seen and that it had alighted on a farm near by. My curiosity was aroused and I went to see it. I learned that they had stopped to lay in a fresh supply of water. It was dark as pitch then, and I could see very little except the outlines of the ship. It was about 150 feet long, the body being shaped something like the shuttles used in an ordinary sewing machine. On either side were immense wings, about 100 feet long. It seemed to be made of some light material, what, I could not say. I spoke to one of the men when he went into the farmer's house, and shook hands with him. It is run by electricity, but how it is applied I do not know. Yes; I did hear him say where it was built, but I can't remember the name of the place, or the name of the inventor. He said that they had been traveling a great deal, and were testing the machine. I was so dumfounded that I could not frame an intelligent question to ask, so you see I can give you but very meager details. One thing I do know, and that is that an airship is an accomplished fact, for I have seen it, and many of my friends have seen it flying in the air. It went to Dallas, Austin, Fort Worth and hovered all around Texas for some time." Dr. Levy will return to his home in a day or two.

1897 April 29 (Thu) Shreveport (La.) Times, p. 6.

THE AIR SHIP. / Seen by a Thoroughly Reliable and Well-Known Citizen. (To the Times.)

Deadwood, Tex., April 24, 1897.--Seeing so much here of late in reference to the air ship has put me on the lookout for several days and nights, and my vigilance, much to my surprise, was rewarded on Friday night last, April 23. I was out about 8 o'clock in my Bermuda and clove pasture about 200 yards from my house, looking after some of my fine stock that seemed to be very much alarmed at something unusual, they running and snorting like regular bronchos. On arriving in the neighborhood of where my stock were, I saw a very bright and varied light in the air some 300 feet above the earth, coming from the southeast and going northeast. On its near approach to my surprise a vast search light, turning night into day, was cast down upon the immediate locality where I was standing. I recognized the ship as has been usually described so often, and began saluting the aerial travelers at the top of my voice. Much to my surprise, I received in reply a message dropped near me in a beer bottle bearing the trade mark of Anhusser-Busch, put up at St. Louis. Enclosed in the bottle was the message stating that this was the ship recently landed near Beaumont, Tex., and was one of five now traversing various parts of the United States, this special ship having covered nearly the whole of the north west, and was now bound for St. Louis.

It was seen by a number of my neighbors, who will testify to the same, and as to my veracity in this neighborhood, where I have lived for the last forty years. Some very amusing scenes took place on sight of the ship. Many took it to be the coming judgment day. Within the past twelve months there have been many converts to the holiness faith in this community, and some of them claim that this is but a forerunner of mighty evidence that will soon come to the doubting christians who still linger in benighted darkness of the old-time teachings on christianity. Let us hear from the next. Very respectfully,

H. L. LAGROME. / Deadwood, Panola County, Tex.

TEXAS, OKLAHOMA

1897 April 6 Dallas Morning News, p. 4.

Denison Man's Find. / He Sees a Brilliantly Illumined Air Ship Sailing Northward.

South McAlester, I.T., April 5.--A gentleman who came in from Denison last night says that at 3 o'clock this morning, when he was returning to his room he saw a large airship going in a northern direction. It was brilliantly illuminated, and was going at the rate, he supposed, of about fifty miles per hour. There was a peculiar swishing sound to it, and as near as he could judge it was a quarter of a mile up from the earth.

His attention was first directed toward the stars by the peculiar sound from the ship, or whatever it may be called, and he watched until it passed over the hills to the north.

The gentleman is a Mason and a K. of P., and his reputation for truth is beyond question.

April 6 (Th) Dallas Morning News, p. 1. d. r. G. ...

Strange Object Seen. / "And There shall Be Signs Seen in the Heavens" ...

Soon a bright light was seen at the front of the object, which seemed to be thrown out in different directions. Mr. Trumbull called a number of people, who watched the strange shadow object for a long time, and are confident it is the mysterious airship seen at so many places during the past few weeks.

Its outlines were indistinct, but a light was thrown out from the front, and at times there were flashed of light along the sides. It moved swiftly backward and forward, sank almost to the ground just north of the city, and then rose straight into the air at great speed and disappeared in the darkness of the night.

1897 April 8 (Th) Oklahoma State Sentinel (Stillwater), p. 4.

The people of Stillwater were awakened Saturday night about one o'clock from their sound slumbering by a terrific explosion in the neighborhood of Eighth and Main streets as near as it can be located or in the heavens immediately above it, and what the explosion was or what was the cause of it remains a mystery at this writing. The supposition by some is that it was a meteor exploded in passing over and by others that some men or boys had exploded a stick of dynamite, but no trace of where it was done has been found. Their (sic) was no damage done more than to arouse the slumbering and make things jingle about everywhere their place of abode. The night watch and a few others sallied forth with their wincesters supposing that burglars were cracking a bank safe which afterward proved to be incorrect. It couldn't have been one of those supernumerary air ships that have been sailing back and forth over Kansas at night at the rate of sixty miles an hour, and have been seen hovering over several towns with its bright headlight for the past week dropped a bomb to explode in the air just to let us know that they had paid us a flying visit.

1897 April 9 (Fri) Galveston Daily News, p. 1.

A Live Meteor.

"South McAlester, I.T., April 8.—A large meteor, measuring about two feet in diameter fell last night just north of the stockade during the downfall of rain. In its descent from the heavens it presented a burning mass and would have burnt itself in the fall if it had not fallen on a huge mass of sandstone, which it crushed to atoms. The meteor is a common looking stone, but shows its meteoric origin. The rock was not entirely cool this morning.

April 10--Instead of the belled buzzard, that has served the great American sensationalist for more than half a century, a mysterious airship is now seen in the heavens here and there.

The Kans. arsp has been discovered by the former citizens of Kans now in Okla.

It seems that there are in all the states some people who see arsp. Apr. 7 p.4--Snapshots--It's now explained that the ar sp which the people of Kans. saw recently was nothing more than a flock of wild geese going north. It is remarkable that the Kansans didn't recognize them. Th. Apr. 8, p.4--The sails of the Kans arsp seemed to have been made of three sheets in the wind."

Apr. 15 p.4--The rumor that mysterious battleships are flying about in the sky above us was probably set afloat by enterprising jingoes who want to enlarge still further the army and navy.

Civil service question propounded to applicant from Kansas: "Have you ever seen an airship?"

Apr. 18p.16--Snap Shots--arsp parties in Kans.

Apr. 19 p.4--The arsp mystery of Kankakee now seems to be thoroughly understood. The dark object floating in the air fell down and the 100s who rushed to see found a pair of fresh bloomers.

The NJ arsp was found to be a mosquito with foxfire on his neck.

20, 4--The crew of the arsp which are cruising in the ethereal oceans of Texas will please be careful not to throw their empty flasks overb.

21, 6--The arsp is doubtless of providential dispensation to enable the producers & consumers of Am. to escape the oppression of the Dingley bill by sailing far over the custom houses.

23, 10--(Adv.) The Arsp Has Left Tex for the N. If you want to catch it... take I & GN "Fast Mail." (rr)

24, 6--The arsp have made an Iowa woman insane.

26, 6--The arsp have sailed from Tex, but the nights continue to be luminous with stars and musical with the caroling of mockingbirds.

1897 April 10 (Sat) Dallas Morning News, p. 4.

McKnight's Airship.

Paris, Tex., April 9.--For several days past The News has contained specials from different points stating that parties had seen an airship in the night. A man named McKnight has been working on an airship at U. S. Marshal Williams' ranch for some time and it is claimed he has been traveling around by night in his ship. While McKnight will not corroborate the statement, many who are in a position to know say his aerial navigation has at last become a success.

1897 April 15 (Th) Dallas Morning News, p. 4.

THE AIR SHIP AGAIN. / Lady and Gentleman See It at Different Localities and Describe It Minutely.

Denton, Denton Co., Tex., April 14.--That Denton is not to be behind the other towns and cities in north Texas is shown by the fact that the mysterious airship, of which so much has been said and written in the past few days, has been seen here by at least two credible persons, one a gentleman, the other a lady, whose reputation for truthfulness cannot be assailed.

The gentleman who saw the ship says that he was stand standing in his yard watching with the aid of a powerful pair of marine glasses. the stars, when a shadow fell athwart the moon, obscuring it for the moment. The sky being cloudless, he looked up to examine the cause.

"I at first thought it was a meteor," said he, "but upon closer examination discovered the unknown object to be almost stationary and focusing my glasses on it, discovered that it was moving slowly in a southeasterly direction. At this slow rate of speed the ship continued its course for a few minutes and then, with almost a jump, started off at a terrific rate and disappeared in the Southeast, remaining in the range of my vision about 20 minutes.

"When I first ascertained the character of the object it floated about ~~xxxx~~ a half mile above the earth and seemed to be about 50 feet long, of a cigar shape with two great wings thrust out from each side; a broad tail or steering sail behind and a long beak or blade resembling a cutwater on a ship in front. At the point where the beak joined the main body a powerful search light threw its rays far into the night ahead, beside which even the luminosity of the moon paled. A row of windows along the side gave out smaller lights, the source of which must have been stored electricity, as there was no smoke, as well as I could see and I could see very plainly, coming from the ship nor was there even a sign of a smoke-stack. I do not doubt but that it was an airship."

The lady above-mentioned is a member of the Ariel society, is one of the most widely read ladies in town and is not one upon whose credibility anything of a hoax-like nature could be imposed. Her description, although much less explicit than the gentleman's as she was unaided by any glasses, tallies almost exactly with the above. When she saw it, the ship was bounding along through space like a balloon.

These two descriptions are better than any of their predecessors' as one of them was with the aid of powerful glasses and both of them are from people widely read and much of the readings, too, of a scientific nature.

April 15, Dallas Morning News, p. 4

Snap Shots / A dispatch from Kankakee, Ill., says: The airship has reached Kankakee. Fifty prominent citizens, attracted by its phosphorescent glow, watched it hovering over the city about 1000 feet above the earth, for fully an hour to-night, when it darted off to the northeast in the direction of Chicago at a very rapid speed. In addition to its headlight, others in red and blue were seen, indicating a ship of large dimensions. Ex-State Attorney Hunter Roger, D. D. Sherman and Train Manager Cooman of the Ill. Central were among those who saw it.

Is it necessary to add that one of the lunatic asylums of Ill. is located at Kankakee?

1897 April 16 (Fri) Austin Daily Statesman, p. 1.

Watch for the Airship.

Weatherford, Tex., April 15.--(Special.)--Last night ~~xxxx~~ at 9 o'clock, the airship that has been mentioned in Oklahoma and other points was seen here. It passed over the city in a southwesterly direction and lights were thrown out from the front resembling the headlight of an engine. The machine was seen by many people, the Statesman correspondent included.

1897 April 16 (Fri) Dallas Morning News, p. 5 (card 1)

Sighting the Air Ship. / A Mysterious Traveler of the Skies Seen at Weatherford, Corsicana and Cresson. / Looks Like a Passenger Coach! / Powerful Search Lights Fore and Aft--Has Monstrous Wings That Fan the Breezes.

Weatherford, Tex, April 15.--Last night at 9 o'clock the airship that has been mentioned in The News from Oklahoma and other points, was seen here. It passed over the city in a southwesterly direction and lights were thrown out from the front resembling the headlight of an engine. The machine was seen by many people, The News correspondent included.

The Air Ship Again.

Corsicana, Tex., April 15.--Various and truthful citizens of Corsicana to-day declare that the airship, which has received not a little mention in the press this week, passed over the city last night.

It was described by one, who is emphatic in the statement that he saw it, as being a bright light a long distance from the earth and was moving at rather a fast speed across the firmament. It was said to have been seen at about 8:30 o'clock, came from the north and was moving in a southerly direction when first noticed. The light was described as being about the size of a water bucket and gradually assumed a smaller proportions until it vanished and was not observable to the eye. It remained visible about ten minutes. No messages were left behind by the aerial tourists.

The object, or whatever it might have been, was viewed by a party of eight or ten persons at the home of Judge Sam R. Frost on West Third Avenue.

Dr. Wills had his attention called to it and says that it was certainly not a meteor, for the reason that the light was intermittent, appearing to come and go, but that the object was too far from the earth for him to be able to see anything as to its form or shape. The light, he says, was the only visible part of the strange flyer. Seen at Cresson.

Fort Worth, Tex., April 15.--Night Chief Operator Dunlap of the Texas and Pacific union depot relay office in this city, hands The News correspondent the following:

"The operator at Cresson, on the Rio Grande railway, claims he has seen the mysterious and much-talked of airship. He describes it as resembling the top of a passenger coach in shape, long and pointed at the ends, with powerful searchlight in the front end, with several smaller ones on the sides. The ship appeared to the operator to be about sixty feet in length, and when first sighted was making a terrific rate of speed in a southwestern direction. It had wings on it, he said, something like that of a bat. After passing the station about two miles he saw the ship suddenly alter its course and turn to the southeast and disappeared within a few minutes behind a cloud. He says this is no optical illusion nor after-touch of an extensive jag, but the truth, pure and simple."

Continuing, Mr. Dunlap said: "This is dead straight. I am now convinced that there is something in this airship business, for several prominent citizens of this locality also saw the ship."

Cresson is thirteen miles southwest of Fort Worth.

In Illinois and Indiana.
1897 April 17 (Sat) Dallas Morning News, p. 8.

(card 1)

FLIGHT OF THE AIR SHIP / A Mississippi Traveler Saw It In The Heavens Last Night. / MR. GRIFFIN'S STRANGE STORY / He Saw the Aerial Traveler From the Top of the Courthouse--Was Overjoyed. / SENSATION IN RAILROAD CIRCLES. / Freight Conductor J. E. Scully Caught a Glimpse of the Ship and Its Pilot Near Hawkins' Tank. -----

Ghost hunters, quail eaters and high divers and high jumpers have been relegated to the rear and the biggest man in the country to-day is the pilot of the airship, that mysterious aerial plunger seen in the heavens for the past ten days by sober citizens from the lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. The airship was the sole topic of conversation in all circles in this city. From the banker to the bootblack, all were interested. "Have you seen the airship?" was the question sprung at least 1,000,000 times. A News reporter found a good Adventist brother who was positive that the millennium was at hand and that the messenger was coming. "Don't mention my name," he said, "but I had a vision the other night and I am convinced that we are upon the eve of a great upheaval." Men of the world pronounced it a raw joke and a few crusty old chaps intimated that the quality of whisky sold in the small towns was enough to make the average toper see anything from a boa constrictor to a full rigged ship in the heavens. On his rounds yesterday a News reporter found two men who had actually fastened their eyes upon this "flying Dutchman" of the clouds. One of these parties saw the airship sailing along like a magnificent bird of passage. The other saw the ship resting on the ground, its pilot in his shirt sleeves, working like a beaver, making repairs. Mr. M.E. Griffin, at the courthouse, saw the ship gliding through space like a thing of life, and "Truthful" Scully, a freight conductor on the Texas and Pacific railroad, was the man who witnessed the pilot scraping the barnacles from the keel of the airship. Mr. Griffin was found at the courthouse yesterday afternoon. Mr. Griffin is a church man and has lived in Dallas for many years. He broke the ice himself when The News representative halted. "Well, I saw the airship and I could scarcely believe my own eyes. It was this way. I have been reading the stories of the airship on its travels in The News every day. At first I regarded it as a huge hoax. Next I saw I was in error, because it was next to impossible for good men all over the country to be deceived. Says I to myself, 'They are seeing it everywhere. What's the matter with taking a peep from the top of the courthouse, Griffin? Well, I borrowed a powerful glass and climbed to the top of the courthouse. From my position I could sweep the heavens in all directions. I had been there, say ten minutes when to my great delight, I saw the airship going in a southeasterly direction with the velocity of the wind. It was shaped like a Mexican cigar, large in the middle and small at both ends, with great wings that made it look like an enormous butterfly. It was brilliantly illuminated by the rays of two great search lights. I shall never forget the magnificent spectacle. Finally the airship disappeared in the distance and I very reluctantly descended to the earth. Ah, it was a sublime scene."

Mr. Griffin did not weep after this recital, but the moisture stood in his eyes. He is positive that the airship has two searchlights and is a swift traveler.

There was a great commotion in railroad circles just after the shadows began to gather last evening. It was rumored that Freight Conductor J.E. Scully and his crew had surprised the airship and its pilot in a lonely spot by the side of the track somewhere in east Texas. A News reporter hurried out to the union depot at 8 p.m. and caught the "cannon ball" when it rolled in from Texarkana. The knight of the punch, good-natured Conductor Foster, was buttonholed before the soles of his patent-leathers touched the platform.

"Have you seen the airship?" queried the reporter. "The devil, no," he replied. "I saw the picture in The News and read the specials from different places, and that's all. See Mahoney. He will be down in the morning. Mahoney is a bird. He sees everything and the chances are that he has seen this airship. He never misses a good thing. See Mahoney," and then the jolly conductor boarded his train and was off.

Across the track from the union depot is the dispatcher's office. Mr. M. Patton is the dispatcher. He composed that beautiful song, "And the Wind Blew Through His Whiskers," while stationed at St. Joe, Mo., a number of years ago. That is, Mr. Patton was once arraigned before the bar of public opinion on this charge and he entered a plea of guilty.

"Mr. Patton, did you notice an airship strolling about in this neighborhood this evening?" asked the representative of The News.

"An airship? No, see here, forty men have poked their noses in here and fired that question at me this evening. I am busy. I haven't lost any airship and I am not hauling airships. It is, months since I tasted liquor," and then he whistled "The Wind Blew Through His Whiskers."

220

"Where is Conductor Scully?"

"Scully? You mean 'Truthful' Scully. He is out on the road and is due here, westbound, in a few minutes. Has Scully seen this airship? Well, he's a jolly good fellow, who loves the truth for truth's sake and his word is as good as a gold mine. He'll pull in here directly."

It was 10 o'clock when Conductor Scully's train came to a standstill opposite the office of the dispatcher and that individual rushed in to register and get his orders. The composer-telegrapher introduced the conductor and the scribe and the latter fired away. "Mr. Scully, it is rumored that you saw the famous airship at a point east of here to-day."

"I did."

"Was it sailing or resting?"

"Resting."

"What did it look like?"

"The descriptions already given in The News. Its bow was towards us, and its pilot was using a hammer and chisel, as near as I could make out, evidently making slight repairs."

"Could you furnish a description of the individual in charge of the airship?"

"Well, there is a clearing about midway between Hawkins and Hawkins tank, and the air ship had selected this place to make repairs necessary, and to be far away from the vulgar eyes of curiosity-seekers. There isn't a house anywhere near the spot. The conductor of the ship was 100 yards from the track. He was tall and spare and looked like a scientist or an inventor. He had that tired, far-away expression, as near as I could ascertain, and he was plugging away for dear life on necessary repairs."

"At what hour did you witness this singular individual and his marvelous air ship?"

"Well, we left Big Sandy at 2:10 p.m. It was close on to 3 o'clock when we reached Hawkins. We were making good time and all at once, in the clearing, I saw this ship on the ground with its bow towards the track. The air ship has wings and must be well equipped. Of course we passed it in a jiffy, but I saw all that was necessary to convince me that the air ship conductor had selected a quiet spot for resting purposes and repairs. Well, when we got to Hawkins I mentioned the fact of our discovery in the clearing in the woods and it spread like wildfire. I am sorry now that I mentioned it to any one, and I wish you would just leave my name out of the paper."

And then the conductor stepped out of the office, swung his lantern a few rounds, boarded his train and was off.

Mr. Patton shot an admiring glance at the query-voiced conductor as he sped away, and addressing The News representative, said:

"Truthful Scully knows an air ship when he meets one in the woods. I am satisfied that his story is gospel truth. Hawkins is midway between Mineola and Longview. Truthful Scully is a lucky chap. I might have passed that clearing in the woods a hundred times and never laid eyes on an air ship. Some men are born lucky. Others are born in Missouri."

Conductor Scully, before his train pulled out for the west, said to a friend: "In my opinion the air ship man has his plane well arranged. He is skipping about the United States creating intense excitement. When it gets too warm he'll ~~not~~ let sail for Europe. The chances are when I saw him to-day he was getting ready for an ocean voyage preparatory to making a tour of Europe. The air ship is the greatest invention of the age, or my name isn't J.E. Scully."

Col. W. A. Robertson of Mississippi walked into The News office last night and in a tone of deep satisfaction remarked:

"I have seen it."

The whole force rushed at Col Robertson with one bound. "Yes, gentlemen," he continued complacently. "I have looked at the airship with my own eyes."

"How big was it?" asked one.

"About 150 or 200 feet long, I suppose."

"Have any lights aboard?"

"Yes sirree, and they were big ones."

"Which way was it going?"

"Southwest."

"Going pretty fast?"

"Yes; it looked to me like the fellow had an engagement to eat breakfast in the City of Mexico and was afraid he might be late."

"Sure it was not a meteor?"

"I guess that when I see a thing I know it."

"It was this way," continued the Mississippian. "I was a passenger on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas south-bound train. I was sitting on the east side of the coach looking out of the window. Just after we passed Garland I saw a blaze of light in the sky quite a ways ahead of us. I made up my mind in a second that it was the airship, and I poked my head out of the window to get a good view of it, but the thing was moving faster than we were and in about two minutes was lost in the fleecy clouds. I could not distinguish the shape of the aerial traveler, but I saw its searchlights as it sped along."

At and Near Marshall.

Marshall, Harrison Co., Tex., April 16.—Conductor Virgil Brown and ~~Mr~~ his brakeman, James Murphy, saw the much-described air ship at Jewella, Ia., a station on the Texas and Pacific railway, thirty-two miles east of here, last night. There seemed to be a huge searchlight attached to the aerial machine and the light was thrown in several different directions. The speed of the ship was far faster than a railroad train. The ship appeared to be going in the direction of Marshall.

Dick Weathersby, a night watchman of the Texas and Pacific railway car shops, said he saw this unusual aerial visitor at 10:20 o'clock last night. A number of other reputable persons claim to have had a view of this unknown visitor at about the same hour. Last night the sky was perfectly clear. Many people have provided themselves with powerful glasses and will scan the heavens to-night to get a view of this strange object.

SEEN NEAR HILLSBORO.

A Lawyer Had a Good View and Gives a Graphic Description.

Hillsboro, Hill Co., Tex., April 16.--Last evening Hon. J. Spence Bounds of this city was called out into the northwestern section of the county near Osceola to write the will of William H. Gathingu, an old settler, who is quite sick and is not expected to recover. It was dusk when Mr. Bounds got there, and as the will was lengthy with complications in it, it was nearly 9 o'clock when he got through and started home. What occurred on his homeward drive is best related in his own language to The News reporter. The narrative was made to the reporter in the presence of Judge J.H. Hall of the eighteenth judicial district and Hon. W.E. Spell, attorney for the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas Railway. Said Mr. Bounds:

"I want to recite a little thing that I witnessed last night. I have been up to old Uncle Billy Gathings to write his will and was driving homeward thinking of the old man and his useful career and the reward that doubtless awaited him in the good hereafter when I was astonished by a brilliant flash from an electric search light which passed directly over my buggy. I want to tell you also that I was almost frightened to death by it, for it made the space around me as light as day. My horse was also frightened and came near over turning the buggy. He snorted, reared and plunged madly, trembling meantime like a leaf. My hair stood straight up and I was almost too exercised to pay attention to the horse. Fortunately the light rested on us scarcely a second, but glided along over the fields and the country till it was suddenly turned upward toward the heavens. Then following it with my eyes I beheld, about 1000 feet above me I judge, a huge black monster, from which the light emanated. It was in shape something like a cigar, but underneath there appeared to be a body similar to the body of a ship, which was attached to the object and from which the light originated. The search light was presently shut off and a number of incandescent lights flashed around the lower edge of the body of the vessel or whatever it was. When I first saw it it was going very slowly in a southerly direction. The lights were soon entirely extinguished and it glided along like a small black cloud in the air. When some miles further south the search light again appeared and glided along the tinders of Aquilla creek and rested on a hill about three miles this side of the town of Aquilla. The vessel or ship steered for the mill, and as it approached it all the lights were again extinguished and the ship disappeared from my sight. I think it must have stopped on the hill.

"I never had anything to so thoroughly work me up, and I resumed my journey home, considering in my mind the strange adventures of the night. I have read and heard much of airships, but I never expected to see one. I had never seriously thought of them as possible, but in a few minutes I recalled the many stories I have recently seen in the papers about airships and decided that what I had seen was an airship. When I was within a mile of Hillsboro, about an hour later, I saw the same object rise from the locality where it disappeared. It ascended till it looked like a mere dark cloud in the skies, when it started in a northeasterly direction and went at a terrific rate of speed. It must have gone at a rate of 100 miles an hour or more. It was headed as near as I can judge toward Dallas or near there. Every few seconds it would send out brilliant flashes and sparkles, but it traveled most of the time in darkness.

"Now, gentlemen, I am not prepared by my profession to believe everything I see and hear, but I saw that object and my horse saw it. It almost made both of us frantic. So there is no denying the fact of its existence. The question is, what is it? Man has conquered the ocean, but we are told that the devil is the prince of the air. Again the scripture says the devil shall be turned loose for a season. Who knows but what the scripture is being fulfilled right here before our very eyes. It is possible, I admit, for man to get up a flying machine but still, for all that I have seen, I feel curious as to what it was, and can't help it."

Judge Hall and Mr. Spell were much interested in the narrative. The former commenting on it said:

"There is no end to the inventions of man and I place fully as much confidence in what my friend Bounds saw as in the accounts I read in the papers about airships every day."

"Yes," added Mr. Spell, "when Bounds is on the opposite side of a case that I am I think he is the most imaginative man in Texas, but when he descends from the bar and says on his honor as a gentleman that a thing is so I deal very gently with him and always give him the benefit of the doubt."

SEEN AT PARIS. / An Accurate Description by One Who Observed It Closely.

Paris, Tex., April 16.--Several parties here claim to have witnessed the flight of the mysterious airship that has attracted so much attention through the press of the country during the last few days as it passed over this city at an early hour yesterday morning.

The most accurate account is gleaned from Mr. J.A. Black, the night watchman at the Paris Oil and Cotton company's plant. He said to The News man:

"I was engaged in making my usual rounds at the mill yesterday morning about 2 o'clock when I observed a faint, but luminous object in the northeast sky which attracted my attention. It had the appearance of being ~~an~~ enveloped in a luminous, hazy cloud. I first thought it to be a meteor of gigantic proportions, and its speed appeared equal to such a planetary tramp. As it came nearer this idea was quickly dispelled. I ran to the cabin of a colored man by the name of Jim Smith, just across the road, and hastily awoke him and together viewed the aerial monster as it approached nearer. From what appeared at first to be a luminous cloud there was now clearly outlined a monster airship. Myself and the negro (Smith) were held spellbound by the sight. He had a perfect view of the ship, for the night was clear and the moon was shining brightly at the time. The ship had sails or wings outstretched on both sides of its cigar-shaped body and on both ends there were large rotating fans projecting from the sails at an angle of about 45 degrees, the one in front being elevated, while the one at the rear was depressed, somewhat resembling the tail of a bird. We could only gain a faint idea of its accurate size, but think it may have been 100 feet long, the sails or wings constituting nine-tenths the whole.

"The cigar-shaped casing was apparently suspended in the midst of the sails, and it was evident that the fans were propelled by some power or force located in the cabin. The noise of the propelling machinery was plainly heard as the ship sailed swiftly over us. My dog with me when the airship was first discovered and he immediately set an unearthly moaning which he continued until the curious visitor was completely lost to view. The negro was visibly affected, and being naturally superstitious lost no time in falling to his knees and offering up a prayer for the safety of himself and family. The negro even now claims that the airship was none other than the return of Noah's ark, with wing like attachments on its way toward the Mississippi bottoms, its mission being to save the colored folks from the perils of the overflow in that section.

"I am sure, for my part, that what I saw was a veritable airship, and that it had lights radiating from the various openings along its sides, but whether originating from the power or the illuminating machinery I am unable to say. I would judge that it was traveling at about the same speed as the passenger trains do in Texas, although from the time I first observed it in the far northeast sky until it disappeared from view in the southwest was not over ten minutes I don't think."

Mr. Black says that he is willing to make affidavit as to the truthfulness of his assertions above.

Railroad Man Saw It.

Sherman, Tex., April 16.--W.S. Hellyer, cashier of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railway in this city, last night saw a dark, oval-shaped object apparently six times its diameter in length, pass across the moon. It moved slowly and apparently toward the southeast. At the hour Mr. Hellyer saw what he thinks may be the airship there was not a cloud in the sky.

Seen at Fort Worth.

Ennis, Ellis Co., Tex., April 16.--Conductor W.M. Hanney of the Fort Worth branch, said today that while sitting on his front porch with his wife and mother at Fort Worth last night, their attention was attracted to a strange object moving over the city. He is sure that it was the much-discussed air ship. He says it was a large dark object, bearing a bright light in front, but he did not see any wings or sails. The object was moving in a southeast direction and soon passed out of his sight.

Quality of Liquor Interferes.

Waxahachie, Ellis Co., Tex., April 16.--The people of Waxahachie have been looking skyward to-day in hopes of getting a glimpse of the much talked-of air ship. A ~~xxxxxxx~~ certain gentleman remarked to The News reporter that the whisky sold in Waxahachie was very good, and he didn't think any air ship would be discovered from this reservation. This remark will not keep many from viewing the skies diligently to-night.

Less Skeptical Now.

Denton, Denton Co., Tex., April 16.--Since other dispatches in The News report the presence of an air ship in Texas, other observers here, made bolder thereby, report that they too have seen the mysterious vessel, and less doubt is attached to the report from this place in The News yesterday relative thereto.

Keeping People Awake.

Mexia, Limestone Co., Tex., April 16.--The account of the airship appearing in The News to-day created much excitement here. No doubt that many people will watch for its early appearance.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Daily Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex., p.1.

THE AIRSHIP. / Sighted Last Night by Two Citizens of Oak Cliff.

Prof. Laird, of Patton's Seminary in Oak Cliff, states that at about 10 o'clock last night he saw a copper red light apparently about a mile high sailing across the heavens in a southeasterly direction. The light was about 10 minutes in passing out of the professor's visual range. He avers that attached to the light there was an object which was so dim that he could not discern its shape or outline. Whether this was the airship the professor is not prepared to say, nor does he attempt to account for the phenomenon on any other hypothesis; he merely reports the fact.

Mr. Sam Hurlock, of Oak Cliff, reports that he sat up last night reading the Duke of Argyle's interesting brochure on the difficulties to be overcome in order to make a levitation as simple a matter as gravitation, and stepped out in the yard to get a breath of fresh air before retiring. The subject he had been reading about, or something else roused him to take a survey of the heavens when he saw a light, evidently the same described by Prof. Laird. Mr. Hurlock says there was a air object to which the red light appeared to be attached. He has no doubt that this is what so many other persons have been seeing for the last several nights and reporting as an airship, which, for all we know to the contrary, it may be.

1897 April 14 (Sun) Austin Daily Statesman, p. 7. (card 1)

STRANGE AND STARBELLING. / A "WHAT IS IT?" SERENELY SAILING OVER THE BLESSED LONE STAR STATE. / WILL BE SIGNS AND WONDERS. / A Big Airship or Something Else Seen in the Heavens at Various North Texas Points--Keep a Watch Out Here. /

Of late strange sights have been witnessed in the heavens and some days ago the Statesman contained a dispatch saying that an airship or something of that sort had been seen sailing over Oklahoma.

Now the mysterious aerial craft has been seen at various points in Texas and from all accounts it is a fast sailer.

Friday night at Sherman, Mr. W.S. Hellyer, a cashier of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad, saw a mysterious oval-shaped object of large proportions pass over the moon.

On the same night ~~xxxxxx~~ Conductor W.M. Monney of Fort Worth, his wife and mother saw a strange object pass over the city.

On the same night Hon. J.S. Bounds of Hillsboro, on his way to visit a sick friend, had an experience he will not forget soon.

He was jogging along quietly, when suddenly his horse whirled around and came near overturning the buggy. There was a brilliant light, as if coming from an arc light. This light, he says, rested on him less than a minute and then he saw it gliding over a field near by. It then turned upward and he watched it until he says it must have been 1000 feet up in the air. The light appeared to him to be the headlight of some kind of a ship. While he watched, the light went out and small ones, such as incandescent lights, appeared all around the body of the vessel, or whatever it was. The strange craft sailed slowly in a southerly direction and while Mr. Bounds watched it all the lights were extinguished and then it disappeared.

On the same night about 2 o'clock, J.A. Black of Paris, Tex., night watchman at the Paris Oil and Cotton company's plant, observed a faint but luminous body in the northeast heavens. It looked at first like a luminous cloud, but as it drew nearer he saw it was some huge monster. He hurried over to the cabin of a negro named Jim Smith and woke him up and when Jim caught sight of the heavenly visitor his wool promptly straightened out and Jim pliously went to praying. Mr. Black watched the object carefully, and to a Dallas News reporter he said its body was shaped something like a cigar and appeared to be 200 feet long. It carried sails and attachments that looked like great fans. It finally disappeared, going in the direction of the Mississippi river. Mr. Black's dog was with him when he first discovered the monster and he was greatly agitated and moaned until the thing disappeared.

On the same night Conductor Virgil Brown and his brakeman on the Texas Pacific Railroad saw the curious monster near Jewella, La., about thirty miles east of Marshall. It appeared to have a search light attached to it that threw out rays in several directions. It appeared to be going in the direction of Marshall and traveled faster than his train.

On the same night at Marshall, Marshal Dick Weatherby, night watchman at the Pacific Railroad shops, saw the monster pass over.

From Jewella to Hillsboro is some 300 or 400 miles, and the ship being seen at both places only a few ~~xxxxxx~~ hours apart shows it is a traveler.

Whence is it? What is it, and whither is it going, anyhow? Are we living in the days when strange sights are to appear in the heavens?

1897 April 16 (Sun) Daily Times Herald (Dallas), p. 12 (card 1)

THE AIR SHIP. / Views Expressed Concerning the Aerial Monster. / SEEN BY VARIOUS PERSONS. / A Druggist Who Saw It Tells of His Experience--Sighted by a Watchman at the Hour of Going to Press. /

Have you seen the airship? This is the question that was heard most frequently on the streets Saturday and was made the theme of the street corner humorist almost to the exclusion of the Cuban war, ~~xxxx~~ Count McCloskey's base runners, and the latest gossip about the flood in Louisiana.

Staid citizens who have never been known to get within shooting distance of a saloon, would stop each other and refer ambiguously to the eccentric appearance that has been keeping the people from one seaboard to the other "fussing" for the past weeks and causing the eyes of thousands of others to bulge out with astonishment while watching it "seroching" above the firmament like Mr. John Hay's "Prairie Bull" with its furnace crammed xi resin and pine.

Such a phenomenon certainly offers a happy theme for the lovers of conjecture, and about as many theories have been expressed about the uncanny monster as it has been times seen. There is no question but what it has surprised, temporarily at least, the place of the sea serpent, that winged monster which every right minded proprietor of a summer hotel would sign a season's contract with to disport itself exclusively for the gratification of his guest on the white sea sands. At present there is great doubt as to whether or not it is a rakish piratical craft skimming the sky for ulterior purposes of gain, either of pre-empting choice portions of the earth not yet claimed, or annexing some Cherokee strip in Mars. Some think it is a product of the craft of man not unmixd with gulle.

"I wonder why it always flies in the night time," remarked one Dallas man Saturday.

"Why, it's a fly-by-night company, to be sure," remarked a friend.

This is a facetious view--one indulged in seriously by quite a number of level headed citizens, however. Some are utterly skeptic and suggest that it is a new fad with those people who are unfortunate enough to "see things." Formerly their minds conjured up blue rovers Nile-like saurians and other creeping things equally disagreeable for the mind to dwell upon long at a time. They suggest that having exhausted the catalogue of things that creep, they have by some mental somersault invaded the realm of flying things, and hence the airship. This aerial vessel seems to have adopted as its motto the words of that plaintive foreign air once so popular on these shores: "Just tell them that you saw me," and there was nothing else to mention.

Perhaps it is the long lost Pleiad vainly endeavoring after all these years to get back home and take its place in society. Again, it may be the successful culmination of some aerial invention which a jealous European pover is anxious to secure a copyright on and takes this means of testing where no prying neighbor can break in and steal the patent safety-brake device. It may be an aerial navigator from Mars, a work of devil-may-care Ulysses with a desire to go west and survey new patches of ether. In fact, there is no end to the amount of conjecture that might be indulged in.

Plain, unaesthetic folks think it may be the work of some patent pill producer, or baking powder magnate, who seeks to startle the American people by a great hoax, knowing that he who boometh his own judiciously prospereth not a little.

But there are people who have seen it. Why, dear me, of course there are. Right here in Dallas, too.

Druggist R.C. Kopsch, whose store is next to the Oriental hotel, has a vivid impression that he saw it. The impression was all that remained with Mr. Kopsch when talked with by a Times Herald reporter yesterday. He referred to the spectacular appearance very modestly.

Said he: "I don't know what it was I saw, but last night between 8 and 8:30, and while I was in the store, my attention, as well as that of some 15 or 20 others, was drawn to something that might be likened to the headlight of a trolley car that hovered afar over in the west and moved swiftly in a northwesterly direction. It had no particular shape to it as far as I could see, but there was a sort of hazv darkness back of the light that seemed almost opaque.

"The phenomenon, as I said, attracted quite a crowd on the corner, including a number of guests of the hotel. We watched it till it disappeared toward the north."

"Right in the direction of the brewery, eh?" inquired the scribe.

"Yes, so it was," said Mr. Kopsch, as if he bethought himself of something.

The reporter turned away. His faith in the airship was shaken. It was veraciously reported that Judge A.T. Watts witnessed the frisky airship disporting itself in the heavens in the full glare of publicity and the moon, but a call at his office developed the fact that he was at the ball game, and two calls later still failed to find him.

Later developments leading to the identity and ownership of the aerial craft are awaited with interest, and further communications of witnesses of its impetuous passage through the ~~xxx~~ stilly night will make good Sunday reading. /

Later--Just as the Times Herald was going to press the following was handed in for publication.

The mysterious airship which has created so much excitement throughout the country, and furnished two or three columns of news to our daily papers the past week, was just sighted passing over the city by the fireman of No. 4. Engine company on watch. Its approach was preceded by a blinding flash of light, and a dim shadow was cast as it passed over the city hall from the northeast. It was so high that accurate description of its dimensions was impossible. Its speed was very great, with a strong search light in front. Smaller lights resembling the windows of a lighted passenger coach in the night were seen at the side. No wings were discernable, nor any noise heard, it being so far away. It appeared to be more than one hundred feet long, and was propelled by some powerful force. THE WATCHMAN.
1897 April 18 (Sun) Dallas Morning News, p. 4. (card 1)

HIGH IN THE HEAVENS / Sailed the Aerial Traveler, According to Statements of Several Witnesses. / PROF. LAIRD OF CAX CLIFF / Saw it a Mile High on the South Side of the Trinity River. / HOW IT LOOKED ONLY LAST NIGHT. / Messrs. Williamson and Ventas Given a Free Show--The Views of John L. Ward. //

The story of "Truthful" Scully of Fort Worth, clinched by the thrilling tale unfolded to a News reporter by Col. Robertson of Mississippi, contained in The News of yesterday, created a great sensation in scientific, political and aerial navigation circles. The airship was the sole topic of conversation, the talk of the town, yesterday. Mr. William J. Sneed, who is a crony of "Truthful" Scully, said to a News reporter:

"I believe it. Mr. Scully would not utter an untruth. The Mississippi colonel is not on my visiting list, but no Mississippian was ever known to mistake a shooting star for a full-rigged airship with a ~~xxxx~~ searchlight in front and a torchlight in the rear. The evidence is xx conclusive."

John L. Ward of Fort Worth, ex-manager of the Panthers, was seen yesterday morning at the Windsor. He said: "I read the story of the airship at Hawkins' tank and was deeply impressed with it. Joe Scully is a friend of mine--a citizen of Fort Worth. We are proud of him. Hundreds have seen the airship in the heavens. Joe saw it on the ground. I believe in omens--good and bad. The Scully incident is a good one. To-day McCloskey's 'Haughty Hibernians' will be humbled by the Fort Worth Invincibles, and McCloskey will weep."

Col. Robert H. Gaston of the Texas militia read The News' story yesterday morning and at once hunted up a representative of the paper. "Tom Camp is just in from the Gaston ranch, in Kaufman county," he said, "and Tom saw the airship. He had been on a hunt and was very successful. About 9 o'clock Friday night he saw a peculiar object over head. It resembled a Chinese flying dragon in appearance and was a monster breathing red fire through its nostrils. Its body was dragon-shaped and its fore legs and hind legs were pin-shaped. Its legs were the propellers, he thought. This dragon airship was brilliantly lighted and swifter than the Empire State express. It was going south, Tom said. He watched the singular object until it grew as small as the gleam of a hotel clerk's diamond. Finally it disappeared altogether, and Tom made a bee line for the house, almost overpowered by the weird scene he had witnessed in the heavens. I think myself that the problem of aerial navigation has been solved."

It was rumored about the streets that Hon. A.T. ~~McKinley~~ Watts had caught a glimpse of the airship in the heavens on Friday night. A News reporter visited his office. "It is a mistake," he said, "but I have a theory, I firmly believe that the forty-three Greeks in Texas have clubbed together, purchased an aerial warship from Edison or some other fellow and are experimenting before starting for Europe. They want to be sure that they are safe before they set sail. I am not interested in aerial navigation. This afternoon I must attend the ball game at the park and am studying up the new rules and curves. The Defenseless, no the Defenders, should win out, don't you think?"

Mrs. Bina George is a colored cook in the home of Mr. C.W. Middleton. She saw the airship Friday night. Yesterday morning she told the story to Mr. Middleton. That gentleman said to a News reporter yesterday: "Bina is truthful and intelligent. At 9 o'clock Friday night she was gazing into the heavens and saw a bright object a few hundred yards above her head. At first she suspected that it was a cloud of fire, but it wasn't. It was a ship-shaped affair, well-lighted and traveled faster than any train of cars Bina ever saw. She said it was ~~now~~ headed in a northeasterly direction and that she watched the ship until it was out of sight." She kept it to herself until this morning, as she did not care to be joked about it. Finally the secret grew too large for her to control and she "fessed up."

Hon. Ed. C. Smith, the populist leader, was standing by. His face brightened. "The airship is manned by McKinley's advance agent of prosperity," said Mr. Smith. "He has been due in these parts since last November, and perhaps the president has employed an aerial messenger to scatter broadcast the glad tidings."

This was a frost and the scientists dispersed. Messrs. William J. Smith and Albert Webber were found at room 12, the Gaston building. Mr. Smith is familiar with all phases of aerial navigation, it is said, and agrees with the Scientific American that the problem has been solved. "At 1 o'clock this morning on Lamar street I met an individual who appeared to be unduly excited. I stopped and questioned him. He pointed skyward and said:

"It has just passed by."

"What has passed, foolish man?"

"The airship," he replied.

"I did not ask him his name or his street number, but he certainly acted like a man who 'seen something.' Aerial navigation is an easy thing now. We have compressed air and electricity. Airships are sure to come in fact. According to The News correspondents the ships are here. The Scientific American concedes this much."

Mr. Smith subsidized and Mr. Webber began: "On Wednesday night my wife saw a peculiar object in the heavens. At first she thought it was an illuminated balloon, but soon discovered that it was not balloon shaped and sailed like a bird. It had two great lights and was traveling southward. It wasn't a meteor, it wasn't a balloon, it wasn't a ball of fire—I guess it must have been an airship."

Ex-Alderman Patrick O'Keefe, who is deeply versed in aerial navigation topics and astronomical lore, was found playing the horses. "Have ~~you~~ seen the airship? I have not. I don't drink and I never come down town after dark."

Prof. James A. Laird of the Patton seminary, Oak Cliff, it is reported, saw the airship plunging about on Friday night. His description of it tallies in the main with the birds-eye view of it obtained by "Truthful" Scully in the vicinity of Hawkins' tank, except Mr. Scully saw it on the ground with its wings folded and Prof. Laird saw it in the sky skimming along like a swallow homeward bound after a hard day's flying. It was a mile high and going in a southeasterly direction when Prof. Laird first discerned it in the heavens.

In Illinois they are "inditing" poetry to its flight across the Sucker state to the following verses:

There's a wild weird something that sails in the air.

With wings like the 'Piousa bird.'

Look up ~~ward at~~ night from almost anywhere,

You'll see it since April third. /

The people at Elgin declare it has eyes

As red as the sun in the fall;

Two Evanston lovers (who always are wise)

Declare it has no eyes at all. /

The wise ones at Rockford have seen it arise

Like a cloud from the West, and they tell

How the mayor and council, with wide span eyes

Stood breathless, as bound with a spell.

It raced with the engine that hauls the fast mail,

Down the Burlington track yesterday.

The engineer sat with his face deathly pale

And watched the thing vanish away.

At Alton, perched high on the Piana hill,

It scramed like a panther with a voice strange and shrill;

That rose high above the wild storm.

It's headed for Washington, now I am told,
And I doubt not, like dashes of churn;
It will hasten reports on affairs growing cold,
Awaiting the Dingley bill turn.

And then let us hope it will take a deep breath,
And sail out to Cuba and Greece,
To frighten the Spaniards and Turks half to death,
Establishing honorable peace.

We need such a fowl, with a nest full of eggs,
To hatch out a brood that will fly,
And cause lawless people to take to their legs
When they catch the strange bird's warning cry.

Hundreds watched for the reappearance of the airship last night. They argued that it isn't far from the Scully dry docks near Hawkins' tank to Dallas, and that most likely the pilot might fire up his boilers and sail this way in order to ascertain the fate of the Naughtly Hibernians of the opening day of the Texas league games. It panned out ~~just~~ just as they had surmised. The pilot of the airship is a fan, for his ship was seen hovering over Dallas last night. ~~It~~ perhaps signaling to manager McCloskey. Mr. S.J. Williams, who clerks in a McKinsey avenue drug store, is positive that he saw the airship. In addition to the two search lights the pilot displayed colored lights that night. It is not known whether they were danger signals or tips to McCloskey's men to keep off the grass. Mr. Williamson says that the airship sailed away in full view, going in a southeasterly direction. Later a gentleman named Ventes, on a Fairland car, in North Dallas, saw the airship according to advices received at a later hour last night. Not only Mr. Ventes, but his fellow passengers were given a free show. They glued their eyes on the queer ship with its fantastic lights and never once batted an eyebrow until the aerial visitor had disappeared behind a dark cloud in the northern sky. "There are others," but News representatives failed to locate them owing to the lateness of the hour the news was received at this office.

AT FARMERSVILLE.

Men Seen in It and Heard Singing "Nearer My God to Thee."

Farmersville, Collin Co., Tex., April 16.—(To The News.)—Last night about 9 o'clock a dim light was seen to the northwest, apparently moving slowly to the south or southeast. When first seen it did not look larger than an ordinary 50 cent silver piece. Those watching the queer light soon discovered that the object was approaching the city, traveling at the rate of 60 or 80 miles an hour. Some thought it to be a cloudless tornado and those who had stormhouses lost no time in getting into them, while the more unfortunate waited and watched the results of the approach of the queer object. In a very short time fully two-thirds of the citizens were out looking at what they then supposed to be a large planet or meteor approaching the earth. In a very few moments—in fact, in less time than one can tell it—the queer thing was almost hanging over the city.

City Marshal Brown was in the western part of the city making his rounds before going home and says the ship, or balloon, or whatever it was passed over him in about 200 feet of the ground. Brown says he could see two men in the ship and something resembling a large Newfoundland dog. Mr. Brown says he was close enough to them to hear them talk, but could not understand one word of their language. He is of the opinion they are Spaniards.

He thinks Spain has sent several of these airships into the United States with none but trusted officers of the Spanish government to make a survey of the country, so in case the United States should declare war against ~~the~~ Spain the latter nation would know every weak seaport station in the United States and Spain would know just where to land her army and attack our weak points.

Another eye witness, Mr. Hildreth, says he saw three men in the ship, and that he heard them singing "Nearer My God to Thee" and that they were distributing temperance tracts. R. FORSTER.

(?) Waxahachie Kept Awake.

Waxahachie, Ellis Co., Tex., April 17.—Many people sat up the major part of last night looking for the airship. At 12 o'clock possibly half of the vigilant committee retired for the night. At 1 o'clock a few more dropped off, and at 3 the number had dwindled down to a few faithful, who were kept up through faith in the truthfulness of the airship reports in The Dallas News.

This morning The News reporter made a grand round, hoping that at least one man could be found who would testify to the reality of the flying will o' the wisp, which has been defying gravity and causing the wreckage of a certain clause in the ten commandments, but there was not one who had seen anything bigger than a hat or larger than a snake, with residence at Waxahachie. At a certain hotel there was a man who gave his name as W.H. Patterson, who said he had discovered the battle airship while on watch with Mr. John Phillips of ~~Waxahachie~~ Waxahachie; in fact, he said he would give Mr. Phillips as reference and he was certain that Mr. Phillips never told a lie in his life.

It was along about 11 o'clock when the battle airship came along; the whole earth was illuminated with a star-like brightness. The ~~battle~~ battle airship seemed to be about 400 feet from the ground and was going toward Dallas. The machinery seemed to be worked by a woman, who was running a patent resembling a sewing machine. When the sails were at a certain angle a searchlight shot its light in the direction of the hotel and caused the observers to flee. Mr. Patterson says it may be funny to look at this strange aerial monster at a long distance, but that a degree of uneasiness overtakes one when the thing comes at close range. He thinks his satanic majesty or Beelzebub has something to do with this traveler in the lower stratum of ether.

Seen Near Whitney.

Hillsboro, Hill Co., Tex., April 17.—The publications in The Dallas News yesterday and to-day relative to the airship that has been seen in different portions of the state has been the sole topic of conversation on the streets and elsewhere in the city to-day.

Since the reliability of the witnesses that have seen it is unimpeachable, many persons now come forward and admit having seen it. John Ford of Whitney, brother-in-law of G. M. Young of this city, president of the county Christian Endeavor, was in the city yesterday and Mr. Young said to The News reporter to-day:

"John Ford was here yesterday and told me that he saw the airship Wednesday night as he was returning from Hillsboro to Whitney. He was near Peoria and looking up he saw a black object that looked very much like a passenger coach, going in a southwesterly direction. He described it as having an immense headlight and as being brilliantly lighted within and as traveling at a very rapid rate. He watched it until it completely disappeared. He would not say anything about it for several days because he was afraid somebody would think he was trying to get off a gag."

Other parties in various sections of the county report having seen the ship. Several parties are going to set up here to-night and watch the heavens for the mysterious visitor that rarely shows itself except at night.

Seen Twice About Texarkana.

Texarkana, Bowie Co., Tex., April 17.--The mysterious bright light that has been visible in the heavens for the past fortnight has been seen from this point. Wednesday night it was spied by the telegraph operator at Hope, Ark., who claims to have experienced a full ray of the headlight upon himself about 11 p.m.; that it was zigzagging its course in a northwesterly direction and was sailing about a mile high; that he plainly discerned the shape of a large, dark object with the light, which he thought could be nothing but an airship.

Thursday night many truthful citizens in Texarkana viewed a light of monster proportions sailing away to the northwest. It was described as too large and too near the earth to be a star.

Seen Plainly at Garland.

Garland, Tex., April 17.--The airship which created so much excitement Thursday night, was seen in Garland by several, among the number being J.N. Floyd, Agent N.S. Newland of the Katy and Mr. Cady. It was reported by them as traveling in a southerly direction at a surprising velocity, passing a few miles to the west of Garland. Mr. Floyd got a good look at the ship and says he could see the engineer operating the machine.

Mr. Newland says the ship was in the shape of a cigar and had two sets of wings on each side and one wing on the rear end.

These gentlemen are reliable and their accounts of the noted mid-air traveler have created no little excitement in Garland.

Causing Talk.

Denton, Denton Co., Tex., April 17.--The airship, reports of which have appeared in The News from this and so many other places, is causing a great deal of talk here, although many still profess to believe that it is a gigantic hoax being perpetrated equal, if not greater, than that of the Cardiff Giant.

Several See It at Bonham.

Bonham, Fannin Co., Tex., April 17.--The mysterious airship passed over the northern part of this city last night at 8:15.

John German, motorman on the electric line, was returning to the city on his regular run. The car had slowed up as it was rounding the sharp curve just beyond Russell Heights, when Mr. German noticed a light moving rapidly from the southeast toward the northwest. At first he thought it was a shooting star and called the attention of several young men in the car to the phenomenon. All parties pressed to the front of the car, and seeing that the light lingered longer than any shooting star they had ever seen, they brought the car to a standstill and all alighted to the ground in order to get a better view of the wonderful sight. The moving light approached rapidly and as it passed north of them the light streamed out brightly, looking as large as the bottom of a half-bushel measure, piercing the dark ether with the brilliancy of the headlight of a railroad engine. Mr. German had not read of the mysterious airship and was gazing upon it with wonder and awe. He could hear a whizzing, whirring sound as it passed. It looked like it was about a quarter of a mile high. For about four minutes they watched the wonderful sight, when it disappeared in the northwest, going toward Denison.

Mr. Oscar Lusk was the only one in the crowd who had read of the wonderful airship, and he explained all he had read about it in The News and the mystery was cleared up satisfactorily to all, everyone agreeing that it was the wonderful aerial navigator. Messrs. Oscar Lusk, Will Pope and Sherwood Spotts were present with Mr. German and will vouch for the truthfulness of his statement.

Seen at Cleburne.

Cleburne, Johnson Co., Tex., April 17.--The much advertised airship seen by so many was seen here last night by two gentlemen of undoubted integrity.

Mr. G.M. Duncan while returning from a moonlight picnic saw it and describes it as others have done and says it had two white lights in front and a green light in the rear, which later, it is said, indicates in railroad circles that no other train immediately follows. In other words, Mr. Duncan understood it to mean in street parlance that it was "the only turtle in the tank."

Mr. J.F. Wade was the other gentleman who saw this aerial monster and he says it was scudding along just above the tops of the houses and going at only a moderate rate of speed. Mr. Wade was returning to his room from uptown and says that he had not touched a drop of anything except water during the evening. Mr. Duncan makes the same statement as to imbibing and says he surely saw it.

Both gentlemen say it was going in a southwesterly direction. Mr. Wade says that it was so low that he could see one of the passengers and as it sped by the passenger gave him the go-ahead sign that brakemen give on the railroad.

Seen at Beaumont.

Beaumont, Jefferson Co., Tex., April 17.--R.E. Draughton, who is the night watchman at the Texas Tram and Lumber company's planer, says that this morning at 1:30 he saw something which he took to be the much-talked-of airship. The object was a globular shaped thing a little dark with a bright light the size of a star in one end. It came from the south-east and went toward the northwest slowly, but was very high in the air. Question Settled.

Davis, I.T., April 16.--The stories about the famous and much-heard-of airship were satisfactorily proven to the people of this vicinity. Last night shortly after dark A.H. Mitchner coming from his residence to town saw the strange and mysterious object flying through the air about 500 feet from the ground. It was headed directly west when first seen, but changed its course toward the south and did not come nearer the town than half a mile.

Seen at Tioga.

Tioga, Grayson Co., Tex., April 17.--James Daugherty, a young farmer living near town, saw the airship at 11:30 last night. His description tallies with that of others who have seen it. He said it made a whirring sound and passed rapidly to the southwest. Jim is a truthful boy, and as the town affords nothing stronger to drink than mineral water, he evidently saw the ship.

Observed at Greenville.

Greenville, Hunt Co., Tex., April 17.--Several persons here say they saw the mysterious aerial visitor the night of April 15. It was seen in the northwest, going southward. The sky was clear and bright moonlight. The different-colored light from the ship could be distinctly noticed from any other lights in the sky.

Another Man Saw It.

Denison, Tex., April 17.--Jack Farley was in Fort Worth last night and swears by all that is good and holy that he saw the airship sailing over the town. "It was a way up in the west and had a big headlight. It looked like a big bird with its wings outstretched and attracted a great deal of attention."

Excitement at Mansfield.

Mansfield, Tex., April 17.--(To The News.)--Great excitement prevails here. An airship or something of the kind made its appearance above the city about 9:45 o'clock last night. When first seen it was about 500 feet high, but dipped down with 300 feet of the earth, then suddenly arose high and darted off in a southeasterly direction. It appeared about as large as a box car, main part of vessel cigar-shaped with wings or sails extended on either side. Front end of vessel had a light something like the headlight of an engine, while the side lights were green with bright red light in rear. This airship was viewed by Capt. J.H. Wright, C.P. Witherapoon, W.H. Howard and many others. / W.C. RIVERS, telegraph operator.

Two Gentlemen View It.

Ladonia, Tex., April 17.--There seems to be no more doubt in the minds of some regarding the airship. Attorney R.M. Rowland says that this morning about 3(?) o'clock, having had to go for the doctor for his child, as he left his home he noticed a strange object far up and at a great distance in the northeast. It seemed to be surrounded by a dim, misty light, but as it approached the light became brighter. It was moving very rapidly in a southwest direction and lowering somewhat as it progressed. When it reached a point nearly overhead one could readily see the light shining out of the cabin windows. The head light was very bright, leaving the impression that it was made by electricity. The wings were huge in appearance; the sides were oval like a large bay window; it had a long sail-like tail and disappeared very rapidly in a southwest direction.

Col. R.N. Burt, assistant cashier of the Weldon National bank of this place, it is said by a reliable person, also saw this ship last night about the same time Mr. Rowland saw it, having been aroused by some unusual noise in his poultry yard. His description varies very little from that of others, only that it appeared much larger to him, as he says that it seemed to be about 300 feet long, its wings being enormous and looking like huge sails, and the lights on both the bow and the stern being of a dazzling brightness. It seemed to hover for a short space of time over the city, and then rise and go rapidly in a southwest direction.

Mr. Burt seems to think it strange that any one would doubt the reality of this airship. He is a gentleman who is unimpeachable and his word not to be doubted, is a strict member of the Baptist church and a leader in the Loyal league.

"Truthful" Scully Corroborated.

Fort Worth, Tex., April 17.--"Truthful" Joe Scully of the Texas and Pacific force is in the city from his run. All day he has been asked concerning the airship. Seen by a News man to-night, he said:

"I did not think that The News reporter was going to quote me at Dallas, but he told the truth. On the dead, I saw that ship, and if a man says I ever took a drink or did not see that ship, just give me his name and I will give him my attention. People don't think these things are coming, but they are, and one of them is already here, for I saw it. Superintendent Leroy Trice of the road, so Scully says, has admitted to him privately that he had also seen it. Scully says:

"Trice told me to say nothing about this matter, just like I told The News man at Dallas, and of course I told him I would not. Now, this ain't for publication."

Col. Gaston Moeller (?) of the Texas and Pacific, here from Dallas, said to-day:

"When I used to live in Alabama some years ago I heard of airships; but I never dreamed that such things existed until such men as Trice, Scully and Dunlap told of their seeing them. I never go behind the returns in matters of this kind. Their sacredness is on a par with that of election returns."

Sentiment at Ennis.

Ennis, Ellis Co., Tex., April 17.--People here are deeply interested in the published accounts of the airship as seen and reported from various points. Some are disposed to treat the matter as a huge sensational joke, while others believe that it is a reality.

Lady Thinks She Saw It.

Forney, Kaufman Co., Tex., April 17.--Mrs. C.W. Voiers, wife of Cashier Voiers, states that she is of the opinion she viewed the airship last night. It was too far off to discern its shape, but the lights were plainly visible.

HEAVENLY VISITORS.

Man Saw Something That Knocks the Air Ship Hollow.

Hillsboro, Hill Co., Tex., April 17.--Today while the subject of airships was being discussed by some gentlemen on East Elm Street The News reporter was approached by a farmer named Eugene Apling, who lives a few miles east of town, who said: "Many people in the country are getting excited on the subject of airships and some of them regard them as signs of the latter days and recall what the scriptures say about signs and wonders in the heavens above and the earth below.

"A man named Brown who lives five miles northwest of town, relates a stranger thing than the airship, and if it is true would certainly indicate that the scriptures are being fulfilled in that respect. He said that two farmers near Abbott, whose names he did not know, but who are reported to be reliable and truthful men, had while working in their fields, which adjoined each other, seen the strangest sight recorded since the ascension.

"They were surprised as they were working by the sudden appearance from the skies of what seemed to be bodies falling, but which upon closer inspection proved to be a man and six boys descending from the skies.

"They drifted down as easily and gracefully as birds alighting until within a few feet of the ground about fifty yards from them, where they remained stationary a few seconds and reascended into the heavens out of sight.

"The day was perfectly clear, not a cloud in sight anywhere, so that if the eyes of any one else had been turned in that direction they must necessarily have seen the spectacle. I don't know whether these two men told Mr. Brown himself or whether they told some one else who told him. I wish I was able to give you the names of the men. Mr. Brown is in town and you may be able to get more information about it from him."

A search was made for Mr. Brown, but he was not to be found, having gone home early in the morning.

Airship Blows Up.

New York Herald.

Carlisle, Ill.--

1897 April 18 (Sun) Fort Worth Register, p. 11.

(card 1)

NOT-SEEN AIR-SHIP. / Seen at a Point West on the Texas and Pacific. / CAPT. PAT. C. BYRNES, / Telegraph Line Repairer, Examined the Machine and Talked With Its Manager and Crew--Bound for Cuba to Deal Death to the Spaniards--A Description. /

Mr. Patrick C. Byrnes, a repairer in the telegraph department of the Texas and Pacific between Fort Worth and Baird, came in from the west last evening, and to a Register reporter told a story which a great many will doubt, and were it not for his reputation as a truthful man, The Register would hardly care to repeat it. Mr. Byrnes has been employed on the Texas and Pacific for the past twenty years, and has always been known as a truthful and honest employee.

As he told the story, Thursday afternoon and evening he was engaged in making some repairs near Putnam station, which occupied his time till it became so dark on account of the clouds obscuring the moon, he was unable to proceed with his work, when he turned his attention to supper and a place to sleep. He started toward Cisco on his velocipede, and when near Delmar siding, about seven miles west of Cisco, he saw a light some little distance from the track on the south side. Knowing full well there was no farm house in the neighborhood, his curiosity was aroused, and, dismounting from his velocipede he proceeded to investigate.

Imagine, if you can, his surprise when he found that he had stumbled on to the airship which has attracted so much attention and been the occasion of a great deal of speculation of late as to what it really was. A number of men were moving about the ship, or machine, and seemed considerably surprised when Mr. Byrnes appeared. Nevertheless, they were nothing loath to talk when he had explained how he came to be there. Something had gone wrong with the search light of the ship, and not daring to proceed in the darkness, the ship had been brought to the ground.

It is cigar-shaped, about 200 feet long, and fifty feet across at the widest point, gradually narrowing to a point at both ends. Mr. Byrnes was allowed to examine as much as he pleased and all his questions were answered.

At each end of the ship is a large steel snail-shell device. This he was informed, was the apparatus by which the strange machine was propelled. Large gasoline engines caused whichever of these are in use to revolve rapidly, and to bore into the air, dragging or pulling the ship along at a wonderful rate of speed.

Two more of these devices are attached to each side and near the ends of the ship and are used for steering. When it is desired to turn the ship to the right or left the propeller on that side is set in motion. To raise the machine a like apparatus on top is set in motion.

The craft is loaded with several tons of dynamite and is bound for Cuba. The captain said that Spanish troops are being massed in the cities for transportation to the Phillipine Islands, and it is proposed to sail over these cities and drop dynamite into the camps of the soldiers and on the transport ships. Besides destroying the camps and transport ships, it is proposed to destroy the Spanish navy. This will enable filibustering ships to land arms and ammunition for the Cuban soldiers, who, thus supplied, can easily dispose of such of the Spaniards as escape the dynamite dropped by the air ships.

About 1 o'clock Friday morning the search light was in good shape, and the ship started for the Wilds of the Ozark mountains, where, the captain informed Mr. Byrnes, they spent the days, experimenting at night with the ship.

They expected to sail, or fly, for Cuba by Sunday, and hoped to reach there by Wednesday. When they do, Spain is likely to hear something drop. / Seen at Thome. / Special to The Register.

RHOME, Tex., April 17.--H.A. Hambricht, B.T. Hambricht, A.J. Jones, Hute Rives, Elmer Helm and numerous other creditable witnesses inform The Register man that they saw an air ship pass over Rhome last evening about 8:30 o'clock. It is alleged that it was running westward at an estimated velocity of about 150 miles per hour. It was visible about five minutes. It was about the size of a small passenger coach. A white search light in front, and had five lighted windows on the side (sic). It was apparently very near the earth, though it didn't halt at Thome, but kept its occidental course, as though we were as dead as Rome of old.

To consider this in the most normal light of deliberation it seems at first absurd, but in face of the testimony of the above witnesses it is entitled to credence.

1897 April 18 (Sun) Galveston Daily News, p. 2.

(card 1)

AIRSHIP SEEN IN GALVESTON / WALTER L. NORWOOD, AN UNDERTAKER, VIEWED IT EARLY YESTERDAY MORNING. / A FARMERSVILLE MAN'S ACCOUNT / Saw Two Men and Heard Them Conversing in a Strange Language. Another Saw the Pilot. /

Walter L. Norwood, an undertaker, and Bob Tevis, his driver, saw the airship yesterday morning over the city of Galveston. Mr. Norwood was sitting on the bench in front of J. Levy & Bro.'s stables and Mr. Levy announced to a News man that he had seen the airship. After some badinage he protested his innocence of attempting a joke.

"No, this is no joke. I am telling you the truth. I was called out to Thirty-ninth and R about 3 o'clock this morning. A negro out there had died and we were called to prepare him for burial.

"The moon was shining brightly, and we could see almost as plainly as in daylight. There was not a cloud in the sky. When we were out on the beach not far from our destination I happened to look up, and saw the thing. It moved to the eastward down the beach, following the line of the beach as closely as one would do in driving a buggy. We stopped and watched it. When down about the end of the island it turned and followed the bay front until about Tremont street, when it turned again, crossed over the town and went south out over the gulf, disappearing in the distance."

"Did it look anything like the picture in The News yesterday morning?"

"It was not so pointed at the ends as that. The picture shows the headlight as being directed more toward the earth, while in reality it is directed in front, for when it was over us we could see no light at all. It looked like a great big bird. The wings flapped regularly and it appeared to go swiftly.

"How far up was it?"

"Oh, I could not tell exactly, especially at night, but I judge it was about four times as high as one of those telephone poles." The poles are 60 feet in height.

Further than this he could give no details. Mr. Tevis was, like his wife, "examined separately and apart," and he told the same story.

Heard the Men Talking.

Farmersville, Tex., April 16.--To The News: Last night about 9 o'clock a dim light was seen in the northwest, apparently moving slowly to the south or southeast. When first seen it did not look larger than an ordinary 50-cent silver piece. Those watching it soon discovered that the object was approaching the city. It traveled at the rate of sixty or eighty miles an hour. Some thought it to be a cloudless tornado, and those who had storm houses lost no time in getting into them, while the more unfortunate waited and watched the result of the approach of the queer object. In a very short time fully two-thirds of the citizens of the city were out looking at what they then supposed to be a large planet or meteor approaching the earth. In a few moments--in fact, in less time than one can tell it, the queer thing was almost hanging over the city. City Marshal Brown was in the western part of the city making his rounds before going home and says the ship or balloon passed over him about 200 feet from the ground. Mr. Brown says he could see two men in the ship and something resembling a large Newfoundland dog. Mr. Brown says he was close enough to them to hear them talking, but could not understand one word of their language. He is of the opinion that they are Spaniards. He thinks Spain has sent several of these airships into the United States with none but trusted officers of the Spanish government to make a survey of the country. So in case the United States should declare war against Spain the latter nation would know every weak seaport station in the United States and Spain would know just where to land her army and attack our weak points. R. PORTER. / L.E. BUMPASS. /

Truthful Citizens Saw It.

Ladonia, Tex., April 17.--There seems to be no more doubt in the minds of some regarding the airship. Attorney R.M. Rowland says that this morning about 3 o'clock, having had to go for the doctor for his child, as he left home he noticed a strange object far up and at a great distance in the northeast. It seemed to be surrounded by a dim misty light, but as it approached the light became brighter. It was moving very rapidly in a southwest direction and lowering somewhat as it progressed. When it reached a point nearly overhead one could readily see the light shining out of the cabin windows. The headlight was very bright, leaving the impression that it was made by electricity. The wings were huge in appearance. It had a long sail-like tail and disappeared very rapidly in a southwesterly direction.

Colonel R.N. Burt, assistant cashier of the Weldon national bank of this place, it is said by a reliable person, also saw this ship last night about the same time Mr. Rowland saw it, having been aroused by some unusual noise in his poultry yard. His description varies very little from that of others, only that it appeared much larger to him, as he says that it seemed to be about 300 feet long, its wings being enormous and looking like huge sails. It seemed to hover for a short time over the city and then rise and go rapidly in a southwesterly direction.

Mr. Burt seems to think it strange that any one would doubt the reality of this air ship. He is a gentleman who is unimpeachable, and his word is not doubted; is a strict member of the Baptist church and a leader in the Loyal league.

Seen at Garland.

Garland, Tex., April 17.--The airship which created so much excitement Thursday night was seen in Garland by several, among them number being J.H. Floyd, Agent N.S. Newland of the City and Mr. Cady. It was reported by them as traveling in a southerly direction at a surprising velocity, passing a few miles to the west of the town. Mr. Floyd got a good look at the ship and says he could see the engineer operating the machinery. Mr. Newland says the ship was in the shape of a cigar and had two sets of wings on each side and one wing on the rear end. These gentlemen are reliable and their accounts of the noted midair traveler have created no little excitement in Garland.

A Texarkana View.

Texarkana, Tex., April 17.--The mysterious bright light that has been visible in the heavens for the past fortnight has been seen from this point Wednesday night. It was spied by the telegraph operator at Hope, Ark., who claims to have experienced a full ray of the headlight upon himself at about 11 p.m. He says that it was zipzap in its course in a northwesterly direction, and was sailing about a mile high; that he plainly discerned the shape of a large, dark object with the light, which he thought could be nothing but an airship. Thursday night many truthful citizens in Texarkana viewed a light of monster proportions sailing away to the northwest. It was described as too large and too near the earth to be a star.

Seen at Davis, I.T.

Davis, I.T., April 16.--The stories about the famous and much heard of airship were satisfactorily proven to the people of this vicinity. Last night shortly after dark A. M. Mitchner, coming from his residence to town, saw the strange and mysterious object flying through the air about 500 feet from the ground. It was headed directly west when first seen, but changed its course toward the south and did not come nearer the town than half a mile.

He Saw the Ship.

Tioga, Grayson Co., Tex., April 17.--James Dougherty, a farmer living near here, saw the airship at 11:30 last night. His description tallies with that of others who have seen it. He said it made a whirring sound and passed rapidly to the southwest. Jim is a truthful boy, and as the town affords nothing stronger to drink than mineral water, he evidently saw the ship.

Different Colored Lights.

Greenville, Tex., April 17.--Several persons say they saw the mysterious aerial visitor the night of the 18th. It was seen going southward. The sky was clear and the moon was shining kixkg bright. The different-colored lights from the ship could be distinctly seen.

1897 April 18 (Sun. morn.) Houston Post, p. 2.

The Airship at Sherman.

Sherman, Texas, April 16.--The mysterious aerial navigator that has caused so much newspaper comment recently has been sighted by W.S. Hellier, cashier of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railway at this place. This is what Mr. Hellier says about it: "I was standing on the pavement on the north side of the public square last night about 10 o'clock when I noticed a dark object begin to pass between the earth and the moon. At first I thought it a small cloud, but I noticed at the same time that it was perfectly (clear). The object was going eastward and not apparently at any great rate of speed. It was an elongated oval, perhaps six times its diameter in length. After it passed by the moon I saw no more of it.

Sun. May 2, p.4. The airship appears to be a purely Western invention this time, and the East is taking no interest whatever in it. Possibly gentlemen who are out late in the East are simply too full to look up.

7,2; 15,7. Barnard's arsp.

7,4. The Post would suggest that we all ring off on that arsp fake. May 9, 12. Now the earthquake fake succeeds the airship as the space race nuisance of the day.

13,4. There is this to be said for Prof. Barnard's arsp--he isn't afraid to show it.

14,4. As lightly as we may teeat the arsp problem, there are thousands of wise people who think that the next century will be the age of utilization of the atmosphere for transportation purposes as the present century has been the age of steam and the beginning of electricix inventions and discoveries. Those of us who are living now are just a century too soon to witness man's greatest triumphs, but we have the advantage of our great-grandfathers.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Austin Daily Statesman, p. 7.

That Mysterious Airship. / Reliable Persons at Garland Declare They Saw It.

Garland, Texas, April 17.--(Special.)--The airship which created so much excitement Thursday night was seen in Garland by several, among the number being I.M. Floyd, Agent N.S. Newland of the Katy and Mr. Cady. These gentlemen are reliable and their accounts of the noted mid-air traveler have created no little excitement in Garland. / Was Seen in Farmersville.

Farmersville, Texas, April 17.--(Special.)--The airship was seen here last night at 9 o'clock. City Marshall Brown was in the western part of the city making his rounds before going home and says the ship or balloon passed over him about 200 feet from the ground. Mr. Brown says he could see two men in the ship.

21,5 comic political commentary mentions arsp.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Austin Daily Statesman, p. 8.

(card 1)

THE MYSTERIOUS BALOON (sic) / THE STRANGE, MYSTERIOUS CRAFT PASSED OVER MANOR LAST FRIDAY NIGHT. / IT IS A WAR BALOON FROM SPAIN / So Says the Mystery Man of The Statesman Force--More About the Craft From North Texas Points. /

Mr. John Eva, formerly a clerk in the furniture store of the late Mr. Boak, and well known in town, was in the city yesterday from Manor, where he is now living.

He told, while here, of seeing the aerial monster that has thrown all north Texas into a state of intense excitement.

His little daughter happened to go out into the yard Friday night, and noticing a strange sight in the heavens, she ran back into the house and notified her father.

Mr. Eva hurried into the yard and saw the mysterious craft as it sailed over Manor and disappeared.

It was also reported in town last afternoon that persons out on the state drill grounds saw the ghostly airship Friday night.

The Dallas News of yesterday contained many telegrams from north Texas points confirming the stories of the airship visitor.

It looked to one man in the Indian Territory as if it was about 500 feet long.

It was seen at Cleburne, Garland, Tioga, Texarkana, Newland, and many other Texas points Friday night. One of the mysteries about it is that no one has seen it in the day time.

All persons who have had a good view of it give about the same description, and all testify to its carrying a large light, and a few say at times it has many.

One man reported in the Dallas News says it was only about 200 feet above him, moving slowly, and he saw two men aboard and something he said he took for a large New Foundland dog. He could hear the men talking, but could not understand what they said. From the tone of voice he took them to be Spaniards or Mexicans.

At one place in north Texas Friday night the whole population turned out to see the monster, and about half of them took to their storm cellars, believing it a twisting cyclone that was about to hurl itself upon them.

This whole matter was solemnly referred to The Statesman's "mystery man" last night, and he gave it as his unqualified and unbiased opinion that the man who heard the conversation of the two men on the craft, and took them to be Spaniards, was correct in his conclusion.

"It is nothing more," said the mystery man, "than a Spanish aerial war baloon sailing over Texas to find out the strength of the militia, and incidentally to see if there are any Populists left. You see," continued the mystery man, "the aerial telegraph and telephone carried on the craft have conveyed to its officers the arguments made in the legislature on the fee and other bills, and the aforesaid officers have become confused and bewildered, and that accounts for their being seen at so many different places. I'm satisfied, too, that if they get a sight of that old brass cannon in the capitol yard they will die of sheer astonishment and will never reach home."

The explanation of the mystery man greatly allayed the fears of the city editor and telegraph man, and last night he screwed up courage enough to venture out and go home to bed at their usual bed time, which is along in the wee small hours.

The telegraph man, who is very loquacious, asked many questions about the mysterious visitor, while endeavoring to conceal his dread and fear. Both he and the city editor went home last night with their hats dead down over their eyes, and never anon did they look heavenward. Dallas Morning News, Mon April 19, 1897, p. 4--Snap Shots.

The Aerial Fleet: We know that this is fishing time; That snakes have come to threaten man, That dreamers have begun to rhyme; That Ananias lives again-- For signs and wonders fill the sky, And airships through the heavens fly.

Airships are being seen even by citizens of the prohibition towns.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Dallas Morning News, p. 5

(card 1)

THE GREAT AERIAL WANDERER / It is Either a Reality or Ananias and Sapphira Were Mere Amateurs. / EFFECT OF CHAMBERS CREEK WATER. / Found on the Ground at Greenville and Stephenville, and Exploded at Decatur. /

Stephenville, Tex., April 17.--This afternoon Mr. C.L. McIlhany, a prominent farmer who lives three miles down the Bosque from here, came into The News correspondent's office and before seating himself he said:

"I have found it."

"Found what?"

"Found the airship The Dallas News has been talking about. It's no joke. I discovered the ship on the ground early this morning. It was in charge of two men, one an engineer and the other a pilot. They had been compelled to come to the ground to make some repairs on the machinery. I at once came to Stephenville and reported my find.

"I got a large number of our citizens, who at once proceeded to the spot to view the aerial monster. Among those who viewed the wonderful machine were: Col. James U. Vincent, Eugene Moore of the Stephenville Empire, Mr. Charlon Bannall of the Stephenville Journal, Judge W.W. Moores, Senator L.N. Frank, Mr. M.F. Martin, Dr. S.D. Naylor, Judge Thomas B. King, Mr. J.C. George, Dr. M. Day, J.H. Cage, S. Frank, W.P. Orr, mayor of the city, James Collins, Mr. Lee Young, Dr. R.S. Cameron, Dr. J.H. Stewart, A.M. Borders, S.C. Buck, Hon. J.T. Daniel, ex-district attorney, Otho S. Houston and Hon. J.S. Straughan, district judge, and many other of our prominent citizens. The airship is very much as reported by The News heretofore.

"It consists of a cigar-shaped body about sixty feet in length, to which is attached two immense aeroplanes, and the motive power is an immense wheel at each end, in appearance much like a metallic windmill. It is driven by an immense electric engine, which derives its power from storage batteries. The crew consisted, as stated, of two men, who gave their names as S.E. Tilman and A.E. Dolbear. They report that they have been making an experimental trip to comply with a contract with certain capitalists of New York, who are backing them. They are confident that they have achieved a great success and that in a short time the navigation of the air will be an assured fact. They refused to have their machine critically inspected and refused to talk further as to their plans for the future. They rapidly made the necessary repairs, boarded the ship and, bidding adieu to the astonished crowd assembled, the ship rose gently into the air and sailed off in a southwesterly direction.

"If you don't believe me, just ask any one of these men who saw it. And say, I want you to tell The News about it. This is one time old W Erath is ahead--the first place the airship has been seen to light. And say, what you reckon is going to happen when dynameters get to riding in airships and dropping bombs down on folks and cities? Is this world ready for airships?"

Without an answer Mr. McIlhany went forth to tell the news.
A JUDGE SEES IT.

The Curious Effect of Chambers Creek Water.

Waxahachie, Ellis Co., Tex., April 18.--The News reporter has had an interview with Judge Love of this city concerning the mysterious airship, which has been puzzling the minds of many Texans. A rumor having gained currency that it had been seen by him, The News reporter called at his office in quest of further information. Judge Love said: "Mr. Beatty and myself were on a fishing tour on Chambers creek near the mouth of Great House branch yesterday. The wind was in the north and we were having very little success. About 5:30 or 6 o'clock in the afternoon we decided to go further down the creek. About 600 yards from the mouth of Great House branch Mr. Beatty was slightly in advance, and I heard him say, 'My God, what is that?' When I struggled through the undergrowth to him he pointed to the left and there, in a ravine, was a group of five peculiarly dressed men, and resting on the bank by them was a queer looking machine, which from the sketches and descriptions heretofore published in The News, we decided must be the airship. The men were taking their ease--stretched out full length on some furs--and they were smoking pipes. We, with some trepidation, advanced upon them; when they saw us they appeared somewhat disconcerted, but one of them in fairly good English called to us, 'Come on and join us.' We advanced and after mutual introductions had taken place, I asked if that was the famous airship. The man who had first called to us, and who appeared to be the leader of the party said, 'That is one of the airships; would you like to examine it?'

"The vessel or airship is thirty-two feet long and in the center is fourteen feet wide, sloping gradually toward each end like a Mexican cigar. It has three pairs of wings, each is like the wings of a bird. They are ribbed fore and aft, and are covered so that the stream of air can have its full lifting capacity somewhat after the manner of the wings of the kite sent up by Lamson in Rigby park. The airship contained machinery by which the wings can be worked or flapped very rapidly and by means of a lever the ship can be turned in any direction or made to ascend or descend at the will of the helmsman. This ship is fitted for the accommodation of its crew, containing bunks, cooking department, gasoline stove and other conveniences. We were told by the serial navigators that the airship was capable of a speed of 250 miles an hour, but that its normal rate of speed was from 125 to 150 miles an hour.

"On evincing a desire to hear whence they came and how long they had been navigating the air, their leader produced pipes and a sack of excellent tobacco and asked us to make ourselves comfortable while he proceeded to enlighten us.

"We," he said, "live in the regions of the north pole. Contrary to the general belief, there is a large body of land beyond the polar seas, containing about 250 square miles of territory. The first time this land was visited by human beings, so far as we know, was when the ten tribes of Israel found their way there after the captivity and dispersion of the Jews. According to tradition they were attempting to cross Bering straits and were carried by a floating iceberg and landed on the shores of north pole land. The climate there, while at that time cold, was prevented from being uninhabitable by the influence of the gulf stream, which, after flowing for hundreds of miles many fathoms under the surface of the sea in that region, came to the surface and flows entirely around the continent of north pole land. You wonder how I speak English? Well, the polar expedition of Sir Hugh Willoughby in 1553, who, with his crew, was supposed to have been lost, as a matter of fact succeeded in reaching north pole land. The ship had been so wrecked and broken up by the voyage that Sir Willoughby and his crew were unwilling to risk a return trip, therefore they remained at north pole land. In the early part of 1846 Sir John Franklin's crew reached north pole land. Sir John having died near what is now called Lady Franklin Bay. Sir John's crew remained, as to return was impossible, the ship being crushed between two icebergs 100 miles from north pole land, to which they went in boats. In addition to the foregoing, various parties in the United States and Europe have from time to time reached this land in a helpless condition.

"How do you manage to live?"

"Well, we have a splendid country now. You know how buildings are heated by steam? Well, we have pipes through which steam is conveyed all over the inhabitable part of the country and the soil is kept at such a temperature that we can produce all the fruits of the temperate zone and some of the fruits of the tropics. The country is lighted by electricity during the six months night. We have no timber and no coal. Water, as you know, is composed of two parts of hydrogen and one part oxygen. The oxygen burns very rapidly, giving out great heat. Now, by means of a chemical process, we take an iceberg, separate the hydrogen from the oxygen and use the latter for fuel and light. For lack of timber we can not build ships or trains, therefore we were led to the invention of the airship. We have been using the airships in north pole land for many years for local travel, but not until recently have we made the experiment of taking such trips as the one we are now on.

"On the 1st day of January the Historical society of north pole land decided to send out a number of airships throughout the United States and Europe. Twenty airships were ordered built expressly for the purpose with a capacity of five men each. On the 1st day of March, 1897, ten of these ships were started to Europe and the United States. We have guns and fishing tackle and the speed which we can enable us to take any game we can sight. By agreement the ten airships in the United States will meet in Nashville, Tenn., to attend the Centennial Exposition on June 18 and 19 and the ships will be on exhibition for those two days free of charge. About 100 miles north of here we had to descend and saw one of your trains go by. They are very curious things, but go so slow. Now we must be going."

Judge Love continued:

"We then shook hands with the crew and they stepped into their ship, rose in the air and started toward Waco. The description of the ship I have given you is a very meager one, but you can all go to the Nashville exposition June 18 and 19 and see for yourselves."

C.T.G. WILLIAMS SAW IT.

It Was on the Ground and He Interviewed the Captain.
Greenville, Hunt Co., Tex., April 17.--(To The News).--I have surely seen the airship. I saw it last night about 12 o'clock. I was walking across a field two miles south of town. I was in a meditative mood, and suddenly I was aroused by a brilliant light in front of me. I was dazzled by the light and frightened almost out of my senses. I should have left the place at once but my legs refused to move.

As soon as I could recover a little I noticed that the lights had gone out and by the light of the moon I saw an immense cigar shaped vessel resting on the ground in front of me. I saw three men walk out of the vessel. Two of them went to work about the rigging of the ship. The other called to me and asked if I would mail some letters for him. This gave me courage to approach and talk with him. Having been at one time connected with a daily paper and by mere reportorial instinct I took out my pencil and paper. Seeing this the strange visitor said:

"See here, young man, don't give this thing away. We are experimenting with this vessel. So far it is a success. We expect to revolutionize travel and transportation. We have seen a few copies of the daily newspapers and are very much amused and entertained at the accounts of the appearance of our ship. If you will promise on the square not to reveal what I tell you I will give you a little history of our adventures.

"At a little town in the interior of New York state I have worked for many years on my ship. About two weeks ago I started accompanied by these two assistants to make a trial trip. My intention at first was to make a very short trip. We started in the night to avoid being seen. Everything worked so well that I decided to keep going, and I soon found myself passing over the state of Indiana.

"We stopped in a secluded spot near a small railway station. I went into the town and procured a daily paper, which gave an account of my ship being seen. Since that time we have been passing from place to place at a rapid rate of speed. Occasionally we stop near a town to get the newspapers. I am going home in a few days to improve my ship. I find some improvements necessary to perfect it. This trial trip has been most satisfactory. You will hear from me again in a short while, and then it will not be vague reports, but a full description of the modern wonder, the airship."

I had a good opportunity to look at the exterior of the monster while its occupant was talking. It is much the shape of a cigar. The main body appeared to be about 30 feet long. Great wing shaped fans spread out on either side. At the front end was a large wheel much like the side wheels of a steamboat, but made of very light material. At the rear end was a fanlike projection like the tail of a fish. The whole was about 75 feet long. I asked my visitor to explain his ship, how it was propelled, etc. He simply replied:

"Electricity. Within are electrical machines, which furnish the motive power and the lights. When once in motion the wind operating on the large wheel in front like a wind mill, keeps the ship in motion and but little electricity is needed. Now, young man, I can't tell you any more. Just wait and you will learn all about it. If you will mail these letters and not disclose the names and address and keep this all quiet for awhile, and will give me your name I will return soon and take you with me on a trip to Mexico and South America."

I promised not to give him away. He and his assistants went inside, there was a flash of light, a sizzling noise, the monster rose gracefully and flew away in a northeast direction.

I am in honor bound not to disclose the names and postoffice addresses of the letters. I deposited them in the Greenville postoffice that night.

When my visitor returns and I leave with him for Mexico and South America I will write The News regularly.

It is a grand invention, and I am fully convinced that in a short while we shall discard slow railroad trains and ocean steamers.
C.G. WILLIAMS.

A Home-Made One.

Piano, Collin Co., Tex., April 18.--The much talked of airship fell in Piano at 8:30 o'clock to-night and almost caused the destruction of Piano's large two-story public school building. It was first observed by Harris Wyatt coming from the southeast, and fell on the south gable of the schoolhouse building. Some parties who saw the big light on the roof of the building alarmed the citizens by shooting off firearms and with the cry of "fire!" "The schoolhouse is on fire!" which brought out the whole town and emptied the churches of their congregations within a few minutes, but it all proved to be a dangerous hoax, in the shape of a large "turkey buzzard" with a ball of cotton twine saturated with turpentine tied to one of the bird's legs. The bird had alighted on the roof of the school building and from a distance it looked as if the south end of the roof was on fire, which was viewed by hundreds of persons, who were unable to do anything on account of the extreme height of the building. In a few minutes after the people gathered around the school building the ball of cotton burned itself loose from the bird's leg and rolled off the roof to the ground, where the ball of cotton burned brightly for several minutes. The bird flew off the roof as soon as it was relieved of its warm burden. Piano has witnessed all the airships she wants to, and would prefer that they would pass some other way, if they all prove as dangerous as this one did to-night.

Seen Over Savoy.

Savoy, Fannin Co., Tex., April 18.--Last night between 8:30 and 9 o'clock J.J. Gallagher, druggist; E.E. Chester, station agent; and J.J. Pritchett, dry goods merchant, while on their way to the lodge, had their attention attracted to a bright light in the northern horizon. The light was at a considerable distance and was traveling in a northwest direction. It is supposed to be the same phenomenon that was seen by a number of persons in Bonham.

These parties are reliable men. They say the light remained in sight too long for a meteor, as they watched it for almost ten minutes. They are unable to account for it unless it was the much-talked-of airship.

Seen at Manor.

Austin, Tex., April 18.--Mr. John Eva, a well-known business man at Manor, twelve miles east of here, says he saw the mysterious aerial ship that has created a commotion all over north Texas.

His little girl first discovered it and called him out and he saw it as it passed over the town, going south, carrying a large headlight.

Ladonians See It.

Ladonia, Fannin Co., Tex., April 18.--The airship seen here night before last was the occasion of several parties keeping watch last night.

Col. R.M. Burt, his wife and his son-in-law, John Fulgham, saw a large light appear in the southeast and come nearly overhead and then take a westerly course, but it was so bright they could not see distinctly what accompanied the light.

A.B. Ewing also, as he was going home from his store, says he was startled by a strange buzzing noise overhead. Looking up, he saw what seemed to him to be a mammoth alligator with wings outstretched and when nearly overhead the lights went out and only a glimmer could be seen all along the side of the long body. It came from the northeast and changed its course while he looked, and went in a northwesterly direction. He says the object must have been nearly three miles high.

COL. PEOPLES SEES IT.

He Observed It With a Field Glass in the Afternoon.

Cameron, Milam Co., Tex., April 18.--The great aerial monster now flying over the country has been seen in Milam county.

Col. Tom Peoples, who owns one of the largest farms in the county, came in this afternoon and reported the substance of the following story:

Mr. Peoples says that yesterday about 2 p.m. he was sitting on the front gallery of his convict quarters watching with his field glass the convicts at work a mile or two off, when he noticed a dark shadow cover the forty convicts plowing in that gang. It being a bright and perfect day, without a cloud, he was astonished that the horses and men should be under a cloud. He at once began to look for the cause when, with his glass he caught sight of a huge body coming at a fearful speed from the northwest, and between the sun and the convicts, thereby casting a dark shadow over them. The monster had the appearance of the pictures of the great whaleback ships of which so much has been written, with immense wings both fore and aft, with great fins beneath and on the sides. The noise of its approach was not great, but it produced a humming sound, which he thinks was caused by the machinery that propelled it.

The principle on which the great unknown flyer seemed to operate was that of a great plane and the same movement as that observed in the flight and movement of the buzzard as it floated rapidly and without seeming effort and it seemed to take very little power, although it was of monstrous proportions. The visitor, he thinks, must have come from another planet and is on a tour of observation, for it came very low and almost stopped near the large artificial lake on his ranch.

Col. Peoples says that when the ship made this stop there was a great commotion aboard of it and many apparent signals were given with strange-colored banners or flags. Strange streamers or streaks of peculiar, dazzling white lights seemed to shoot up to the sky from aboard this strange craft. After this stop it, for the first time, seemed to require every effort of power to get the machine in motion. After many rapid evolutions of the great wings, rudders or fins and more humming sound of the machinery, the great and startling ship shot rapidly upward and the last he saw of it it was going southwest. There was much alarm among the convicts and guards, some thinking that the evil days had drawn nigh, some that their day of deliverance had come.

This is a strange story, but it was given in good faith to The News reporter and is vouched for by all the men on Col. Peoples' plantation.

A Windmill Demolishes It.

Aurora, Wise Co., Tex., April 17.--(To The News.)--About 6 o'clock this morning the early risers of Aurora were astonished at the sudden appearance of the airship which has been sailing through the country.

It was traveling due north, and much nearer the earth than ever before. Evidently some of the machinery was out of order, for it was making a speed of only ten or twelve miles an hour and gradually settling toward the earth. It sailed directly over the public square, and when it reached the north part of town collided with the tower of Judge Proctor's windmill and went to pieces with a terrific explosion, scattering debris over several acres of ground, wrecking the windmill and water tank and destroying the judge's flower garden.

The pilot of the ship is supposed to have been the only one on board, and while his remains are badly disfigured, enough of the original has been picked up to show that he was not an inhabitant of this world.

Mr. T.J. Weems, the United States signal service officer at this place and an authority on astronomy, gives it as his opinion that he was a native of the planet Mars.

Papers found on his person--evidently the records of his travels--are written in some unknown hieroglyphics, and can not be deciphered.

The ship was too badly wrecked to form any conclusion as to its construction or motive power. It was built of an unknown metal, resembling somewhat a mixture of aluminum and silver, and it must have weighed several tons.

The town is full of people to-day who are viewing the wreck and gathering specimens of the strange metal from the debris. The pilot's funeral will take place at noon to-morrow. S.E. HAYDON.

Skeptics and Believers.

Ennis, Ellis Co., Tex., April 18.--The excitement incident to the published reports of the wonderful airship is growing more and more intense and various opinions are being expressed. One man was heard to say to-day that the whole matter is an advertising scheme. Dr. E. Stuart, an acknowledged authority in metaphysics, gives it as his opinion that the whole affair is due to hypnotism and bad whiskey, and J.M. Chapman thinks it is purely sensational fiction. But the people are not all skeptics. Some believe the question of aerial navigation has been solved and others who have been close students of the Bible are apprehensive that the end of time is drawing near and that the strange visitations are heavenly inspectors going about to judge the world. A deeply pious lady said to-day that one would see sights, some would dream and some see visions, we would hear of wars and rumors of war and lastly that whenever the gospel shall have been preached to all nations that the end will come.

"This," she said, "has almost come. Every nation, except Thibet has had the gospel and messengers are trying to go there. When that is done the fullness of time will have come and the Lord will most likely appear in his second coming."

It is rumored to-day that Mr. C.W. Beale of this city, a very sober and circumspect gentleman, saw the mysterious vehicle last night and Mr. F.D. Hahnsbeen, night operator at the Central office, says he saw it.

City Recorder J.W. Craig says he saw the ship at noon last Monday, but as there had then been no excitement over it he let it pass with only mentioning it casually. He says that he and Charlie Pippen were looking at the moon and a star at noon and a dark object passed across his vision, which as he now recalls it suits very much to the description given of the air vessel.

A Bank Cashier Sees It.

Granbury, Hood Co., Tex., April 17.--(To The News.)--Newt Gresham last night at 9:10 o'clock, while drilling the Riddle rifles, discovered that mysterious flying jenny of which we have heard so much. Newt is a very warlike young man, being a populist, but he could not stand the sight of the air machine, so he ordered the company to open fire on the object, which it did, and the whole town was soon aroused. Every back yard was filled with spectators and still the animal hung quietly in the sky over the city.

The opinions of various responsible parties here are:

Hon. Lee Riddle said: "It's an airship run by electricity."

Frank Gaston said: "It is a cloud of some mysterious substance with phosphorescent properties."

Newt Gresham, captain of the Riddle rifles and editor of the Hood County Truth, says that it was a huge fish with wings, but the general opinion is that it is an airship, which I think it is, having had a better opportunity to observe it than the majority. It disappeared quickly southward over Comanche peak.

I think the above might be of interest to News readers, and you may publish same with my name affixed. E.B. HILBUN.

Seen at West.

West, McLennan Co., Tex., April 18.--(To The News.)--People here have been on the alert for the famous airship. It was seen by Prof. Hickman of this place about 10:30 o'clock last night moving in a south-east course. His description of the thing was very minute. It seemed to be whaleback in body with bat-like wings, windows with lights inside with a powerful headlight in front. It was not over 500 feet above the ground, but ascended rapidly until almost out of sight. It had almost meteor-like speed.

It was also seen by Thomas Franklin and others living near this place. This settles the matter of the fact of the airship in this place. JAMES GRIFFIN.

Has a Musical Crew.

Hillsboro, Hill Co., Tex., April 18.--A number of persons in this city whose curiosity in regard to the airship has been aroused to fever heat by the graphic accounts of this mysterious wanderer of the heavens as published in The Dallas News sat up most of last night in hopes of seeing it. Their vigilance was not rewarded, probably from the fact that it had engagements to fill in other sections and could not get around.

However, a gentleman named Walter Williams, who camped with his wagon on a high hill about two miles east of here on the Hillsboro and Mount Calm road, and who slept on the extreme summit of the hill, says he heard and saw wonderful things that were not on the programme. He came to town this morning and The News reporter ran across him at the city watering trough as he was watering his team. The reporter observing that he appeared perplexed about something, halted and entered into a conversation with him, and soon learned the cause of his perplexity. An account of this man and his strange experiences is best related in his own words. Said he:

"My name is Walter Williams. I am a farmer and live in Anderson county near Montalba, a small country village. I am on my way overland to Hardeman county where I have land interests. Last night I stayed two miles east of here on a high hill. I stopped my wagon and team at the foot of the hill, where I fed my team. After supper I strolled about a little for relaxation and eventually got to the summit of the hill. The night was an ideal one, with no clouds visible anywhere. The moon was cleverly up and the view from the hill was eminently beautiful and impressive. The city of Hillsboro lay off in the valley to the west in all its picturesqueness, while beyond it the shadow of the cross timbers showed darkly against the horizon. The timbered creek above and below me and the clear sky above from which a few stars blinked sleepily added to the happiness of the occasion. Moved by an impulse, I took off my hat in adoration to the hand that had fashioned the hills and spread the valley there. The place was so lonely and quiet I decided to spend the night there, and got my blankets and spread them on the ground, with nothing but the blue canopy above me.

"I soon drifted away into the land of slumber. After a while I was awakened by the sound of music. I lay on my pallet with my eyes closed and listened to it. Softer, sweeter, weirder music was never heard. Its melody coursed through my veins and penetrated my very soul. Presently I was sufficiently awake to remember where I was, and it struck me as very strange that I should hear music at that place and time. I opened my eyes and looked around me. I could see no one, and the music very strangely seemed to be in the air overhead. I sprang to my feet and peered into the air with all my might, but could not see anything. It must have been midnight or past, for the moon had climbed high up in the heavens, and its silver rays filled the earth with their radiance. I felt as if I was in a spirit land listening to the weird music of spirits. It was like the music of an organ with flageolet, violin, flute and cornet accompanying. At times it seemed very near and then floated far away almost beyond the range of hearing, but always returning sweeter and more devotional than before. Look as I would, I could see nothing of the invisible musicians, and it is natural that I should have felt somewhat superstitious about it. Yet I was not as disturbed as one would suppose by it. I knew or felt reasonably certain that no human agency produced the music, still it did not terrify me. The tune was "Coronation," and while it was soft and low, it seemed to penetrate the entire universe. The very air seemed to thrill from it. The stars in the distance, dim and indistinct, appeared to feel its vibrations. After a while the music ceased and I noticed a commotion in the milky-way almost overhead. It seemed as if millions of stars, moved by a sudden impulse, had started revolving about each other in what appeared to be a space ten feet in diameter. They revolved around faster and faster, occasionally throwing off stars, which darted into the void and disappeared. This lasted for scarcely a minute, when the disorder ceased. In the center of the circle was plainly outlined a cross of stars, adorned with a crown of thorns. This presently faded and left the milky-way in its natural state. Just as it faded I plainly heard from myriads of tongues the refrain, 'Peace on earth, good will to men.' I fancied I could see in the far heavens flashing in the moonlight the silver tips of angel wings. The song died away and everything grew silent. After that I could not sleep till nearly day, when I fell into a soft slumber. I am at a loss to account for it. It could not have been a dream. It was too vivid, and I can not account for it. While it is possible that Eastertide may have had something to do with it, I am not prepared to say that it did. I relate it as it occurred to me, and I give you my word as an honest man and as a Christian that I saw what I saw. If you doubt it I refer you to any one at Montalba, Tex., who will tell you I am at least regarded as truthful."

When the reporter recovered from the strangeness of the adventures, Mr. Williams was some distance down the street.

Seen in the Territory.

Padi, I.T., April 17.--(To The News.)--Until to-night the airship has been regarded as a fake by our people. There is, however, no unbel-xxxxxx never now. At 8:35 p.m., just as the north-bound passenger train No. 12 pulled into the station, the ship was seen traveling in a southern course, moving at the rate of about forty-five or fifty miles an hour. It looked to be from 75 to 100 feet in length, carried what seemed to be a headlight not unlike those used on a locomotive, and was some quarter of a mile from the earth.

Attention was first called to the presence of the strange sight by Engineer Girard of the train. Those who saw the ship at this place were conductor Jack Conlisk and Engineer Girard of the train, Dr. Tucker, Dr. McBride, G.D. Thompson, Mr. Nesbitt and this correspondent, besides many passengers on the train. There is no doubt it was seen by the good people of our little neighboring town of Pauls Valley, as it was traveling in that direction. R.M. TATE.

Airship Line.

Bonham, Fannin Co., Tex., April 17.--(To The News.)--Bonham capitalists will in a few days apply for a charter for the "Bonham, Ivanhoe and Lamasco Airship Transportation company." They will at once inaugurate a double daily passenger ship service and put on sufficient freight ships to transport all merchandise to Ivanhoe and Lamasco, and returning will load with corn, which will be brought to Bonham and loaded on railroad cars for shipment to different parts of the state and for export.

For a distance of about five miles in the Ivanhoe country the air does not contain sufficient buoyancy to float the ships. They expect to overcome this difficulty by either bridging or tunneling. The stockholders, backed by the local newspapers, have all the necessary material on the ground to carry out the enterprise except the bridge and ships. As this will be the first all air line in the state, I thought I would bring it to your attention. Respectfully, JULIUS (not Jules) VERNE.

Seen at Wortham.

Wortham, Freestone Co., Tex., April 18.--Capt. John A. Lilly, a prominent and reliable citizen of this place, a Mexican war veteran, claims that he saw the mysterious airship last night at 9:30. He says it was going straight up! The captain is noted for his truthfulness.

1897 April 19 (Mon.) Dallas Morning News, p. 8. Mr. Smith's Airship. / This One Carried 10 or 12 Passengers, Wearing Easter Bonnets.

Mr. L. G. Smith, steward at the Hermitage hospital, at 3 o'clock Sunday morning saw the mysterious airship. He said he was on the upper veranda looking south when he discovered an immense shadow falling across the town. This was followed by brilliant streams of light, which came from a rapidly approaching object of oblong shape, coursing also downward and from the east. The velocity was lessened and suddenly the vessel rested upon the spire of the federal building. From his position Mr. Smith could see through the windows small but decorative apartments, and was sure that 8 or 10 passengers were aboard. Several were ladies, dressed in handsome Easter costumes. The stop occupied about three minutes. Two men came to the outside. One descended to the steeple, presumably to drop a letter, while the other, with lantern in hand, appeared to be applying oil at the junction of the wings.

Mr. Smith states that he hastily aroused his wife, but before she could reach him the mysterious pilgrim war away, going toward the south, leaving in its journey Oak Cliff, immediately to the left. Tues. April 20, p. 4--The crews of the airships which are cruising in the ethereal oceans of Texas will please be careful and not throw their empty flasks overboard.

Snap Shots.--Shoot the airship.

--Somebody should persuade Senator Chandler to let up on his desperate effort to multiply the battleships until we find out whether the airships are loaded with dynamite.

1897 April 19 (Mon) Galveston Daily News, p. 2 (card 1)

THE AIRSHIP IN TEXAS.... [stories from Cameron, Greenville, West, Ennis, Dallas, Wortham & Austin in Dallas paper]

A Filibustering Expedition. Hearne, Robertson Co., Tex., April 18.--Hearne has had a visitation from the mysterious airship, and to such an extent were the remarkable workings revealed that those privileged to view this mechanical wonder pronounce the nocturnal navigator no longer a mystery. The News man interviewed a prominent young druggist this morning, who beyond a doubt has seen the machine, whose purposes he plainly explains. Its description is a close counterpart of those already given in The News. His vision was at 2 o'clock this morning, above the treetops. By the uncertain electric light he was enabled to decipher a number of Spanish words painted on the bow or fore end of the monster, and while not fully understanding the meaning, he is sure the aerial ship is equipping a filibustering expedition to Cuba. /...

That Mysterious Airship. / Philadelphia Enquirer

For some time past there have occasionally come stories of the appearance of an airship in widely separated parts of the western country. The first announcement of this character came from California, and since then the mysterious object is said to have been seen in Kansas City, Omaha and other cities. The stories were of the most circumstantial character; the truth of them was vouched for by persons of intelligence, whose veracity on other matters coming within their observation would not have been questioned, and all of them were agreed as to the particulars of what they saw and offered independent and corroborative testimony. In some instances it was simply claimed that what appeared to be the brilliant headlight of something in the sky had been seen, while other observers were confident that they saw the vessel and gave a description of its outlines and movement. Of course, there were many people who were incredulous as to the story and made it the subject of good-humored raillery.

The fact that the object was always seen by night was used as an ~~argument~~ argument against its existence; whereas, if some man has actually succeeded in perfecting an aerial contrivance, the most natural thing ~~in the way~~ for him to do at first would be to test it after darkness had fallen, and so secure secrecy for himself. And now comes the story that the directors of the trans-Mississippi exposition to be held at Omaha have received a communication from a man who declares that he has invented an airship, and that he will disclose his identity and come to the front if the directors will guarantee him ~~125,000~~ 870,000 square feet of space. He declares that the ship will carry twenty people to a height of from 10,000 to 20,000 feet.

Because an airship, such as that which has been dreamed of, has never been constructed, it would be foolish to argue that it never can be. In a story which is now appearing in a magazine the hero, who lived in this city during the revolutionary war, and who is supposed to have written the story years afterward, tells how difficult it was to reach Bryn Mawr from Philadelphia at the time that the army of Washington was in this neighborhood, and then speaks of the ease with which the trip could be made at the time of writing by a swift stage coach. This same man, although compelled to acknowledge that better means of travel had come, would have never believed in express trains, in steamships and telegraphs. And so we, who know that they have come, are equally skeptical as to the accomplishment of aerial travel. One hundred years ago it would never have been dreamed that the sea could be navigated as it is today, and yet some people ridicule the idea that the air can ever be navigated and look upon the idea as the dream of the visionary or the poet.

One by one the forces of nature are surrendering themselves to man; what were once looked upon as miracles are now acknowledged to be simply the result of an acquaintance with and a mastery of natural laws, and, therefore, there is nothing that patient invention and study seek to accomplish that should be laughed at. The eyes of the people who claim to have seen an airship may have deceived them; the man who claims to have invented it may be a charlatan, but the world will yet, if we may judge from the marvelous progress of science and invention, see a contrivance of this character, while the people who laughed at the thought will acknowledge the simplicity of the vessel and wonder why it was not constructed a century earlier.

1897 April 20 (Tues Morn) Abilene Reporter (2ce/wk ed.), p. 2.

AIRSHIP HERE! / Abilene's Attractions Were Too Great for the New Vessel to Stay Away. /

Saturday's Reporter registered a big kick because no one in the up-to-date town of Abilene had seen the airship, and our people came bravely to the rescue. At 11:30 Saturday night two of our watchmen saw the monster bird hovering over the city, its passengers evidently taking an observation. The gentlemen were enabled to see that it corresponded largely with descriptions given at other places, only it was somewhat larger, its length being about 700 feet. Windows on the side next to the observers were brilliantly lighted and faint strains of music were heard as if from a powerful orchestra. Evidently the passengers were engaged in a pleasant hop, and enjoying themselves to in a highly satisfactory manner. After a few minutes the aerial party started off in a southwesterly direction, and went at a terrific speed, but just before it faded from sight it turned to the southeast, and was almost immediately out of sight. No doubt the mysterious visitor will come again, as the attractions of ~~the~~ this country by moonlight are so great that the passengers will want to see it again. Tonight Mr. Ed Harris and others will keep a sharp lookout, and when they see it we will get a more accurate description.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Austin Daily Statesman, p. 3. (Card 1)

THE HEAVENLY MYSTERY. / POSSIBLY SOLDIERS FROM WARLIKE MARS OUT ON A TERRITORIAL RECONNOITER. / THE SHIP CARRIES COLORED LIGHTS / An Astronomical Theory About the Mysterious Stranger as Seen in Chicago--The Celestial Craft the Talk of the Town. /

The great and mysterious aerial vessel that has thrown north Texas and many parts of the country into a state of excitement and commotion, was first seen sailing over Kansas, but the stories about it did not excite much attention.

Since then, however, the mysterious stranger has been seen in many parts of the country, and Friday night last reputable citizens in scores of Texas towns had a view of the aerial vehicle.

It ~~xx~~ has traveled over Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin, Arkansas, Louisiana and other states, and everywhere has excited great curiosity and in some places provoked consternation.

On Friday night, April 9, the strange light skirted over the northern border of Chicago and could be seen, according to the numerous reports of residents in that neighborhood. A great crowd gathered at the corner of Milwaukee and Oakley avenues and gazed at the object, trying to figure out to their satisfaction what it might be. It was an "airship" for lack of a better name to designate it by, but most were skeptical about the identity of the "manifestation." It was said the object looked very much like a balloon, but the "red light" was plainly discernible. Many of the people mounted the roofs in the neighborhood and all the field glasses in the vicinity were called into play. Among those who reported seeing the lights were Max Christianson, 1552 Milwaukee avenue; Joseph Starveitch, 1480 Milwaukee avenue; George Nicholson, 1480 Milwaukee avenue; L. Wickert, clerk in Keats' drug store, 1480 Milwaukee avenue.

It passed over Chicago going eastward and disappeared about 12:45. It carried a strange green light, which was seen by thousands of people. Professor G.W. Hough of Dearborn observatory, Northwestern university, took an interest in the "airship" rumors and advanced the opinion that the strange light was caused by the effect of the atmosphere on the star Alpha Orionus, which is of the first magnitude and is in the constellation Orion. It rises early in the evening and its course across the heavens is about the same as that of the moon. In Chicago it is first visible about 7 o'clock this time of the year. It reaches the zenith, he says, about the time when the mysterious phenomenon described as an "airship" was seen that night. The professor says the star is unusually bright in a clear atmosphere and appears to be close to the earth. The star gradually disappears during the evening, and as it grows dimmer the effect of the atmosphere causes it apparently to change color.

On the same night at Lake Mills, Wis., at 9 o'clock it was seen by many people. It was visible about ten minutes, and then disappeared behind some trees.

At Wausau, Wis. on the same night, what was supposed to be an airship was seen passing over that city about 10 o'clock. Lights could be distinguished from a dark object far up in the heavens, which had the appearance of being shaped like an egg. It was viewed there by at least fifty persons.

On the same night a large number of people at Solon, Ia., saw the mysterious visitor, and on the same night at 2:05 it was seen at Marion Ia., by the night operators of the Western Union Telegraph company and others. It appeared to be about 500 feet above the ground. The outlines were distinctly visible against the sky. The ship gave out two bright lights of an electric glow.

At Mount Carroll, Ill., hundreds of people, about 8:30 o'clock, saw the strange visitor. It came from the northeast, and when opposite Carroll changed its course and went due west at a most terrific speed. It appeared to be oblong in shape and carried a red light. In length it appeared to be about ten feet long and some two or three feet high. Many people saw it in various parts of the city.

In Texas.

The strange craft seen at many points in North and East Texas Friday night has thrown these parts of the state into a whirl of excitement.

Col. R.N. Burt, cashier of the National Bank of Ladonia, Texas, saw the craft, or whatever it is, last Friday night. His description varies very little from that of others, only that it appeared much larger to him, as he says that it seemed to be about 300 feet long, its wings being enormous and looking like huge sails. It seemed to hover for a short time over the city and then rise and go rapidly in a southwesterly direction.

At Farmersville, Texas, Friday night, as reported in the Dallas News, about 9 o'clock a dim light was seen in the northwest, apparently moving slowly to the south or southeast. When first seen it did not look larger than an ordinary 50-cent silver piece. Those watching it soon discovered that the object was approaching the city. It traveled at the rate of sixty or eighty miles an hour. Some thought it to be a cloudless tornado, and those who had storm houses lost no time in getting into them, while the more unfortunate waited and watched the result of the approach of the queer object. In a very short time fully two-thirds of the citizens of the city were out looking at what they then supposed to be a large planet or meteor approaching the earth. In a few moments, in fact, in less time than one can tell it, the queer thing was almost hanging over the city. City Marshall Brown was in the western part of the city making his rounds before going home and says the ship or balloon passed over him about 200 feet from the ground. Mr. Brown says he could see two men in the ship and something resembling a large Newfoundland dog. Mr. Brown says he was close enough to hear them talking, but could not understand one word of their language.

Mr. Walter L. Norwood, an undertaker at Galveston, had a professional call about 3 o'clock Saturday morning, and he says he and his driver, Bob Tevis, saw the airship. He said to a Galveston News reporter:

"The moon was shining brightly, and we could see almost as plainly as in daylight. There was not a cloud in the sky. When we were out on the beach not far from our destination I happened to look up and saw the thing. It moved to the eastward down the beach, following the line of the beach as closely as one would do in driving a buggy. We stopped and watched it. When down about the end of ~~the~~ the island it turned and followed the bay front until about Tremont street, when it turned and went south out over the gulf, disappearing in the distance."

It was pointed at both ends, according to Mr. Norwood's description, and the headlight was directly in front. It looked like a great big bird, with wings flapping regularly, and it traveled swiftly.

Statesman's Mystery Man.

The mystery man of The Statesman heard yesterday that Mr. R.H. Cousins had caught a glimpse of the mysterious ship Friday night, and Mr. Cousins was seen about it.

"No, I saw no ship," he said. "I stepped out into my yard and my attention was attracted by a moving light, which appeared to be some distance above the earth, not far from the residence of Mr. J.W. Graham. I at first thought it was a meteor, but I soon discovered it moved too slow for a meteor. The light was not very large, I think, possibly, I could have covered it with my hand. I watched it as it moved and it passed over and down in the direction of Shoal creek. I saw no dark object nor anything that resembled a ship; I saw nothing but the light, at the time thought nothing about it."

The story, as reported, was that Mr. Cousins had seen a large ship like shape, with the light attached to it.

To the Statesman's gang last night the mystery man, to the utter consternation of the boys, gave it as his unalterable opinion that there was something in this airship business.

"Where there's so much smoke there must be some fire," he said. "So many reports, from so many different points, cannot be fabrications. People may say what they will, but there's something in it."

The gang was visibly moved.

"It is my opinion," continued the mystery man, "that the airship, so-called, is nothing more nor less than a reconnoitering aerial war car from Warlike Mars, investigating the conditions of the United States to see what reinforcements we'll need when the country is invaded by the allied armies of Europe, the Mars soldiers having no confidence whatever in the American jingoes as real fighters."

"With these soldiers of Mars cavorting around over our heads, do you think there is any danger to us of the earth?" asked the gang in concert.

"I most emphatically do. Last Thursday night one of their aerial boats exploded and scraps of steel and pieces of electric wire were found on a school house, the roof of which workmen were repairing. They heard an explosion during the night, and just before it took place the aerial vehicle was seen sailing through the air. There is great danger in venturing out these nights. What if one of those fellows from Mars should tumble out and fall on you?"

The city editor and telegraph man were profoundly impressed, and last night they slept under a table in the editorial rooms.

1897 April 20 (Tues morn) Bryan, Tex., Daily Eagle, p. 4. (card 1)

AIR SHIP IN BRYAN / The Crowning Marvel of the Nineteenth Century. / SEEN HERE LAST NIGHT. / Three Brave Young Men and What They Saw.

Three well known and reliable young men of this city had perhaps the strangest experience last night that has come athwart the history of any trio of human beings, exclusive of miracles, since the world began. They are none other than Messrs. J.G. Minkert, Dr. Chas. Edge and Dick Jones, three young professional men in whose truth and veracity most any one in the city has the utmost confidence.

As given to an Eagle reporter at a very late hour last night, these young men's experience may be briefly told as follows:

Mr. Minkert was awakened from peaceful slumbers sometime after midnight by a bad case of toothache and immediately dressed and sought a dentist. In the utmost distress, he was proceeding to Dr. Edge's dental office, when he met Mr. Jones, returning at a rather late hour from some consultation on legal matters with a brother lawyer. Joining Mr. Minkert, together they sought the dentist. The latter was found, and relief soon given to the sufferer. And now began the strange experience which was related to the writer by one of the party. Mr. Jones discovered a bright light through the open window, and speaking of it, the attention of the three was directed to a strange object approaching through the heavens, from a southern direction. Watching, with breathless surprise and interest, the celestial object was now seen approaching rapidly, while apparently getting lower. Now it was near enough to detect that it was a large body with apparently two lights, one at each end of a long, ship-like object. The light in front was extremely bright and dazzling. Coming approximately within a mile of town, the body lowered and apparently swung a great searchlight around and then moved off eastward, so it seemed, and stopped, remaining still for at least ten minutes, while the most brilliant light they ever saw flashed repeatedly in various directions. The observers think it was directly over the A. & M. College. The object was now so far from them that not much could be seen of it except the two lights. Then all at once a fluttering motion was faintly discerned, and the strange apparition began to flow up into the heavens, and move northward. It now began to be more plainly seen. Plain and plainer it became, until at last almost stopping again, a half mile south of town, it showed what its true nature is. A long cigar-shaped body, with many windows and openings through which pale lights streamed forth, with great wings protruding from each side, and an immense fan-shaped rear projection. This formidable dragon-looking celestial vision hovered over the city, then presently moved slowly away toward the eastern suburbs. This movement effaced the wonderful apparition out of sight of our three nocturnal sightseers, (who looked from a southern window). For many moments, not a word had been spoken Jones now turned to the others with a white face and eyes as large as saucers, while Dr. Edge caught his breath and said:

"Well, I'll be-----"

Minkert said he would too, and a consultation resulted in a quiet march to the other side, for a better view.

Outside, again the aerial monster loomed up, now almost stationary, and slowly descending to earth. Down it went, below the houses and tree tops, and out of sight, except for its lights brightening up the surrounding atmosphere.

One behind another, our young adventurers began a silent march toward the strange visitor. Jones led, the dentist came next with his forceps in his hand, while Minkert brought up the rear. Over the hill and out of town they went, and discovered, in the Claude Mitchell pasture, a what at first seemed a great ocean vessel sitting on dry land, a hundred miles from deep water--with great wing like sails folded up, an immense tail, a great wing or rudder underneath, but not touching ground, the vessel being supported upon great pillars projecting down from its sides. Streaming from many windows was a pale light, while the great light in front was turned off. Around the cigar-shaped body of the ship extended a deck or platform, and walking about on this were discerned numerous people, while inside and up among the sails, workmen were busy making repairs.

Our young men realized that they were in the presence of the famous airship, and longed for J.W. Leigh to see it, so he could have a tale to tell, sure enough.

The question of drawing near or retreating was discussed.

Dr. Edge remembered that he had left his door open. Jones thought it was time for him to retire, as he seldom keeps late hours, while Minkert feared he would catch cold in his jaw. So they hesitated. But they circled round, and gradually got nearer. Presently, without warning, the searchlight flashed out like lightning, and they were caught.

Blinded by its brilliance, they fell over each other into a mud hole, and crawling out found themselves "taken in" by a small squad of foreigners, and dragged up to the monster of the upper regions. They really found no cause for fear, however, and now began to see sights indeed. A man who could talk English was summoned from the cabin and came out to talk and exchange neighborhood news, as it were, and do the honors of the ship.

They now found that a party of English millionaires and French scientists had built this strange craft and three more like it, and were taking a cruise around the world, having kept the secret of their enterprise for the novelty of the thing. The motive power of the machine was electricity of course, and the search light was a 20,000 candle power electric light. Taken aboard, they were being shown the sights when Jones asked with considerable anxiety how long they were scheduled to stop in Bryan.

"We are now ready to move," said the engineer.

Then a wild scramble for the outside was made by the Bryan delegates, but the aerial navigators were not ready for them to go. Besides inventors and electricians, there were professors of more occult sciences on board. Prof. SvenBoydgollybros was summoned and with a wave of the hand, they were put to sleep. They were then told to open their eyes and watch the proceedings. The button was pressed; the fifty thousand horse power engine began to work; the great wings began to stir; the crew of pilots grappled their steering apparatus; the familiar scenes of earth faded from view, one of the boys swallowed a Taylor & Cox drink check as he caught his breath after looking out, the ship was pointing toward the north star and was bidding farewell to earth and things earthly when the professor of hypnotism snapped his fingers, sounding like a gunshot in a graveyard. Then the spell changed, and the boys turned and looked at the crowd. They were sitting by a table in the Kandy Kitchen (Bryan headquarters for ~~xxxx~~ ~~xxxxxxx~~ ~~xxxxxxx~~ airship news) while a party of Bryan amateur hypnotists were laughing at them, and the Flying Dutchman of the skies sailed on. 1897 April 20 (Tues) Daily Times-Herald (Dallas), p. J.

AIR SHIP / Seen by Fort Worth People Last Night. / Said to Have Landed in the City Park. / A Stephenville Editor / Saw It and Tried to Interview the Man Who Was Navigating the Aerial Wonder. / Fort Worth, April 19.

At last the aerial wonder causing so much comment all over the country has been seen in Fort Worth; at least there are some good citizens who declare they witnessed its appearance last night.

L.E. James says he saw it land in the city park last night, when a man at least seven feet tall alighted from it and appeared to be fashioning some ropes, after which he boarded it again when it swiftly arose and soon disappeared from view.

J.E. Johnson at the Natatorium says he saw it plainly last night passing over the city.

Word comes from Stephenville that the editor of a paper there saw it near the earth and tried to interview the man conducting it and was informed that he had not time to talk.

Leading astronomers agree that what all have been calling an airship is nothing but a star in the constellation Orion and is so near the horizon that the axial movement of the earth makes it appear that the star is rapidly moving. This is all there is to the airship, except where practical jokers have sent up balloons.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Daily Times Herald (Dallas), p. 8. (card 1)

SURE ENOUGH AIRSHIP / Lighted on East Mountain at Mineral Wells this A.M. / STATEMENT MADE BY THE CREW. / Problems of Aerial Navigation Solved. / Passing Glimpses of the Strange Visitand Explained. /

Seeing the airship is becoming quite an industry. It is even being witnessed by the inhabitants of towns that have been "dry" these many years.

The stories told range from the About Ben Adhem style of narrative to fin de siecle romances that suggest the inspiration of a gifted scientific genius a la Ignatius Donnelly.

The airy visitant continues to hover on unwearying pinions in the blue arch of night, keeping good people out of their beds in the expectant hope that they may catch a glimpse of its patent headlight. It should be observed that this airship is a respecter of the city ordinances, as no accounts are mentioned where it is seen with its "lamp" out. This is a gentle dig at the local wheelmen who scoot frantically about the streets in a lamplless condition. Why someone hasn't taken a shot at the "thing" still remains a question. It is strange that some matter of fact scientist not troubled with any scruples hasn't drawn a bead on it like the man in Coleridge's maritime narrative, whose investigations took this practical form.

A number of young men and boys who have been "funny" all their lives have taken advantage of the amount of free advertising given the aerial traveler by sending up toy balloons in order to widen the area of the airship's activity. It also promotes a Christian feeling among those people who, after descending ~~xxxx~~ knowingly upon its midnight beauties, are told by the parties to the hoax that they were only staring at a little balloon lit up by a cheap candle.

The airship is still a popular theme in the city and suburbs, and particularly in the country where the untutored agriculturalist instead of marning the plov is sitting up lat o' nights watching the airship plow the ~~xxxx~~ heavens.

Airship parties are quite a fad in Oak Cliff now among the young lady collegians, it is said, ever since a popular educator in that favored suburb looked aloft and beheld the airship with all sails set exchanging winks with the "man in the moon."

But, seriously enough, many citizens whose veracity is monumental have gazed at the bird of passage and then confided their impressions of it to the hypnotic editor.

232

Said Mr. Thomas Work, whose experience with plain drunks and peace disturbers (not airships) in the city court qualifies him to speak with some weight:

"The airship was sighted by my children and a large number of residents on Routh street last night about 7 o'clock. It was scudding along right merrily with all sails set; seemed to be going in the direction of the hospital. I expect it had a quiet tip that Dr. Armstrong was at his office. Oh, yes; it was an airship all right. There was a filmy red light about the thing peculiarly uncanny and it was going at a great rate of speed."

James Williamson, the well known contractor of West Dallas, told City Judge Curtis Smith this morning just before the regular police court festivities that he'd "seen it."

"Seen what?" said the city judge.

"Why, the airship, to be sure," said Mr. Williamson reproachfully.

"It passed my home like a house afire about 9 o'clock last night. It had a dark, piratical cut and chanced through the ether at the rate of about 200 miles an hour. So swiftly did it move that the eye was unable to follow it in its flight."

"Yes; it was no funeral procession, I expect," said Judge Smith absently.

Alf Nussbaumer, B.O. Marshall and William Boll, Jr., were hunting on Grapevine prairie, nine miles west of Dallas Sunday afternoon when the airship discovered itself to these nitrods. Neither Mr. Marshall nor Mr. Nussbaumer could be found at their usual places of business today.

Mr. Boll was seen, however, and asked to describe his sensations, which he did only regretting that Mr. Nussbaumer, who was much affected by the sight, was not present to tell about it.

"We had just sat down to dinner," said he, "and were meditating upon the number of Easter hats we missed seeing by not going to church. Suddenly casting up our eyes, we beheld a long, cylindrical body moving with fearful velocity through a nearly cloudless sky. It's general appearance was white. We could plainly discern two wings, one at each side, which looked like those of a great bird. The contrivance was, I should judge, sixty feet long, and there was a wheel behind. Save the wings, which moved with a rapidity that was uncanny, we could discern no signs of life about it. It was going toward the southeast and we watched it till it disappeared."

"Now, this is no joke. We had no drinkables of any kind for dinner and we are all willing to make affidavit that it happened just as I tell you. Mr. Nussbaumer, I understand, is going to commit the impressions of it to writing."

Even more circumstantial accounts of the "ship" are given below.

Col. W.C. Wolf, living on Wolf Trail in North Dallas, states that at 7:45 o'clock last night, he, his two sons and about a dozen of his neighbors, saw a bright headlight pass over that quarter of the city with a whirring, whizzing noise, and disappear in a northwesterly direction. He says he could see nothing but the light, which appeared to be fully a mile high.

Mr. Jeff Hightower, head man in D.M. Howard's New York store in Mineral Wells is in the city to-day. He says that at 4 o'clock this morning the airship landed on East mountain, and that a number of citizens of the wells went up and talked to the men and inspected the ship from outside. They were not permitted to enter the craft. The ship is shaped like a cigar, eighty feet long, with a paddle wheel at each end and on each side. The crew informed the citizens that they had sold the invention to a New York syndicate for big money provided they first made a trip from New York to Liverpool with it, and that before tackling the Atlantic they would make three or four successful trips between New York and San Francisco. They said they were having a lot of trouble holding the craft in a straight course, and their experiments to overcome this trouble were detaining them in the south west. The crew promised the citizens they would return and hover over the town at 10 o'clock to-night, which is the occasion of the opening of the Crazy well. Mr. Hightower, whose name ought to make him an authority in matters of this kind, says there is no joke or jolly about the ship, that the best people in Mineral Wells saw the craft and conversed with the crew.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Dallas Morning News, p. 8. (card 1)

AIRSHIP TALES. / A Number of Dallas Citizens Are Their Authors.

Cooper Nott returned from Longview yesterday. He said to a News reporter: "At Longview on Friday night I saw the airship. It's no fake. I saw it with these eyes. Charles Foster, the station agent at Longview, and Col. Thomas Kingsley were eyewitnesses and will corroborate what I have said."

Joseph A. McMurray of Mineola was in the city yesterday. "This airship business is a fake," he said. "Why Tom Breen, our new postmaster, sleeps with one eye ~~shut~~ open and he has not caught a glimpse of this airship. I don't take any stock in the stories published. Neither does Tom Breen."

Maurice Kahn, clerk of the police court, is authority for the statement that Messrs. William Boll, Jr., B.O. Marshall and A. Nussbaumer claim to have seen the airship on the ground about nine miles west of Dallas Sunday afternoon about 2 o'clock while out hunting. They will, he says, make affidavit to this if necessary.

Manton Carrick and a number of friends sent up three small balloons lashed together with lanterns attached from the corner of Olive and Live Oak streets last night. The balloon floated over North Dallas. The boys paraded the streets in that section of the city yelling at the top of their voices, "There's the airship!" All the inhabitants turned out and viewed the light in the sky with exclamations of wonder.

At 9 o'clock last night Mr. J.W. Bruit 'phoned The News from the corner of Allen and Juliet streets: "I've seen the airship. It was out near the McKinney avenue schoolhouse and going toward Oak Cliff. I was in my buggy and whipped up my horse in a vain effort to get close to it. It was very bulky."

An hour later George Saunderson, fireman at the waterworks, phoned The News as follows: "The airship passed over us ten minutes ago. I got a good look at the ship. It has three large windows and was making very fast time."

He Did Not See the Ship.

Ladonia, Fannin Co., Tex., April 18.—(To The News.)—Will you do me the kindness to say through your columns that the gentleman who informed you that I had seen the so-called "airship" was certainly very much off his base, and did me quite an injustice when he said that I was among the number who had seen it. If such a thing is in existence to-day I confess that I would be glad to see it, but so far have seen nothing of the kind, and have never made any such statement to anyone. I know your informant and really think that he did this as a joke, but in justice to myself think that he did very wrong. / R.N. BURT. 4/22, 4. When the skies fall we shall catch airships.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Galveston Daily News, p. 1. (card 1)

THE LATEST AIRSHIP JOKES. /

Hanging Around Galveston.

Tom Moore, a young man who draws the thirst-slaking soda from a fountain at Schott's, announced yesterday morning that the airship was passing over the city. Charles Schott, night clerk at the store, was on the rear upper gallery.

"I saw a big, white object for a minute," said Mr. Schott last night, "but I was unable to follow it in its flight, because my vision was ~~obscured~~ obstructed by the buildings. It appeared to be passing above the Tribune building, and when I first saw it the front end was a little beyond the alley, and the ~~rear~~ rear end almost where the entrance to the stairway is located, so I judge it to be about 75 feet long. It appeared to roll over slowly, and was pretty well up in the air. It was moving south. It was just at 5.20 this morning."

Moore says he could hear a buzzing noise as it passed along.

A boy in Schott's last night said he overheard a party of gentlemen, some of whom he knows by sight, on K and Twenty-first street, say that they saw the airship during the day. Sergeant Jack Pither, they say, called their attention to it, but when asked about it last night, Pither denied having seen any airship.

Landed on the Brazos.

Caldwell, Tex., April 19.—There has been much agitation and discussion here for the last few days concerning the airship. It is said that some reliable darkies in the Brazos bottom saw it yesterday afternoon. It showed up and settled down on the banks of the river and took on a supply of water. Two of the sailors captured a colored man who was hoeing cotton near by and carried him off on the ship because he was working on Sunday. It steamed away to the east and was soon out of sight. The News man can not verify this, as he can not spend the time necessary to find the parties who saw it. Some have been watching here hoping to get a glimpse of the aerial monster, but it has not yet come in sight of Caldwell. This is and has been a local option town since last summer and the nearest saloon is two miles away.

Monstrous Varmint.

Richmond, Fort Bend Co., Tex., April 19.—An old negro man named Mose Fletcher, living near Stafford, was in town to-day and from his description of what he termed a "monstrous varmint" it is believed he has seen the airship. He says that about 10 o'clock last Friday night he had occasion to go out to his horse lot to quiet a great commotion among the stock and he saw a "varmint" about 100 yards in the air going southwest. He says it shone like a firefly and he became so terrified he ran to the house. When he came out with his wife it was gone. Mose is an innocent and illiterate old negro and appears to be very earnest in what he says.

He Has a Solution.

Alvin, Brazoria Co., Tex., April 19.—Major Buck thinks he has solved the airship problem. Yesterday he saw a large vulture or buzzard with streamers hanging to his tail, to which he thinks a light had been attached. The heavens are closely watched by the credulous for a glimpse of the mysterious visitor.

1897 April 21 (Wed) Dallas Morning News, p. 6 (eds)

TO FLY OR NOT TO FLY, THATS THE QUESTION.

The Paris Figaro and other European papers have reprinted eagerly all of our stories regarding the airships, and express an earnest desire to secure more. Here is a great opportunity for almost any old newspaper reporter who wants fame and a fair salary. The French want the news about our ~~high~~ high-flyers. They are fearful that we have solved the problem first. The New York Herald insists that the problem of aerial navigation will eventually be worked out. It has not read the news from Texas. In Europe there are at least a dozen well known scientists working on the problem, and many half successful efforts of flight have been made, not taking into account Hiram Maxin's idea of spending energy uselessly in the endeavor to lift a machine into space by main force. The Herald notes that poets, romancers and dreamers have pictured the airship of the future. Flammarion has filled his book on the "Fin du Monde" with attractive pictures of airships floating genially through space, and he followed the Hungarian Maurus Jokai, who thirty years ago made the airship the great means of communication between the various cities of his magnetic world. Tennyson in "Locksley Hall," alludes to airships as follows:

"For I dipt into the future far as human eye could see;
Saw the Vision of the world and all the wonder that would be;
Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails,

Pilots of the purple twilight dropping down with costly bales; Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew From the nation's airy navies grappling in the central blue. Far along the worldwide whisper of the south-wind rushing warm, With the standards of the people plunging thro' the thunder storm, Till the war drum throbb'd no longer and the battle flags were furled In the parliament of men, the federation of the world. There the common sense of most shall hold a far freer realm in awe And the kindly earth shall slumber, lapt in universal law."

The duke of Argyle many years ago described in a scientific manner methods by which the air might be navigated. His essay was appropriately illustrated with cuts very like the designs of the present day. Of course our ball-bearing boxes, storage batteries, light materials and contrivances for generating and using power give us some great advantages. While we can not all fly yet, we have better means of doing so than the crude machine of Darius Green. The best way to work out results in any line is to excite a general interest in the public mind. Nobody need be at all astonished if the airship of fancy should in due course of experiment and invention become an airship in fact.
1897 April 21 (Wed) Dallas Morning News, p. 7

A Phenomenal Star.

Texarkana, Bowie County, Tex., April 20.--The belated population of Texarkana were greatly excited last night over the appearance in the heavens of a star of magnificent brightness. To a fixed gaze it had the appearance of vacillating in its proportion and some of the lookers-on swore that they could see it move from place to place. The star threw a light the color of an arc-electric, and at times it dazzled the sight in like manner. It was a scene beautiful to behold and was admired for hours by many.

April 21, 1897 Houston Daily Post (Wed. morn.) p. 2 (card 1)

Inspected the Air Ship.

Beaumont Man Saw the Mystery at Close Range. Conversed With The Travelers. Says It Is Propelled by Four Big Wings, Electricity Being the Power Used.

Beaumont, Texas, April 20.--Mr. J. P. Ligon, local agent for the Magnolia brewery of Houston, this afternoon informs The Post correspondent that the airship visited Beaumont Monday night, and that he not only saw the flying machine, but he had a chance to inspect it from the xxxt outside and conversed with one of the men who was traveling in it. "I and my son Charley drove home at 11 o'clock Monday night," said Mr. Ligon, "and were unhitching the horse when we saw lights in the Johnson pasture, a few hundred yards distant. We went over to investigate and discovered four men moving around a large dark object, and when I hailed them they answered and asked if they could get some water. It I told them that they could. They went to my house, each bringing two buckets, and after filling them, started to return. I escorted one of the men" and he told me his name was Wilson and that he and his companions were traveling in a flying machine. "They were returning from a trip out on the gulf and were now headed toward Iowa, where the airship was built."

Mr. Ligon says he accompanied the men to the ship, and describes it as being 180(?) feet long and 20 feet wide. It was propelled by four large wings, two on either side, and steered by propellers attached to the bow and stern, electricity being the power used. The hull of the ship is made of steel and contains apartments into which compressed air is pumped when the ship is in action. The ship contains a water ballast (?) that is pumped to the bow when it is desired to bring the xxx vessel to the earth and to the stern when the course is skyward. Mr. Ligon says the workings of the ship were thus described to him by the man Wilson, who also stated that this ship was only one of five that had been built in a quiet Iowa village.

Apr. 29, p. 4. Edison pronounces the airship a fake. Let him come out to Kansas and stimulate his vision with drug store beverages xxxi a while and he will see his mistake; also the airship.--Kans. City Journal xxxxx? xxxxxx What! Was soda water the cause of it! Apr. 30, p. 4. Up to date, the airship has eluded the utmost vigilance of all genuine Prohibitionists.
1897 April 22 (Th) Dallas Morning News, p. 4.

When the Hon. Jim Leaper of Coleman, after an assiduous scientific investigation, gave it as his view that the air ship was nothing more than a device of Rockefeller and Flagler to cross Texas without falling into the clutches of him who in times of peace used the knife to the hilt, the News was almost ready to advance the opinion that the mystery had been explained. A later communication from McKinney, however, places the phenomenon in quite a different light. (Communication reads four men see airship on the 20th and hear pilot at tiller call to stout man as ship descends, "By gatlings, Wm. J [Bryan], you must whoop her up," whereupon was a mighty blast of wind.)

April 28 (Wed) p. 4--Snap Shots--A Dallas father has refused to give his eldest daughter in marriage to a young lawyer who saw an airship at midnight.
1897 April 22 (Th) Galveston Daily News, p. 4. (card 1)

AIRSHIP SPOKEN.

Beltonites Felt the Breath of the Aerial Machine. Belton, Bell Co., Tex., April 20.--The numerous accounts and reports appearing in The News for some time past regarding the air ship have excited the curiosity of the people of this place to such an extent that last night quite a number of responsible people of this place "laid for it," and at 11:30 o'clock, to their surprise and astonishment, she passed over Peay's hotel, dipping low. Had she not passed to the left the "New Surprise show tent," just in front of the hotel, would have been completely demolished. The passengers spoke, but the velocity was so great that no one could understand. The ladies, however, declared they recognized the voice and features of Shrader, the divine healer. From here the ship rose and was lost to view. People here have been inclined to doubt the veracity of the existence of this aerial freak, but now, without a dissenting opinion, it is an actuality. It seemed to have reversed its former course, traveling from southwest to northeast at great velocity.

Eats Peaches and Smokes Havanas. Lovelady, Tex., April 19.--J.R. Johnson, bookkeeper for the firm of Malner & Monday of this town, at 9:25 last night saw an object which must have been the much talked of airship. He says it was 150 feet above the trees and when first seen in the northwest it was traveling at a very rapid rate in a southeasterly direction and descending gradually. After crossing the International and Great Northern track about one-quarter of a mile north of town it quickly veered to the northeast and rose rapidly to a great elevation, passing out of sight behind the clouds in a few minutes. He was so dazzled by the sight that he is unable to give accurate details of its appearance, but says that it looked like a dragon fly in shape except that the wings were wide and curved instead of straight and narrow. A long cone-shaped attachment swung underneath and extended about two-thirds of the length of the machine, whose total length must have been 150 to 200 feet. One green light was visible when the object first came in sight, but after its course changed to the northeast no lights were seen. An object resembling a man was seen in the lower attachment and could be plainly seen moving about. About the time the machine passed over the railroad track the rattle of tin was heard, and Mr. Johnson, in company with Mr. W.J. McWire, proceeded to the spot, and, after considerable search, found one one-half gallon peach can branded J.N. Lusk and an empty cigar box. The Sight at Orange.

Orange, Tex., April 19.--Orange was not left out by the airship that has recently enjoyed such wide advertisement. Mrs. Ed. M. Davis, wife of the city marshal, saw a luminous object passing over the western portion of this county last Wednesday night which, from the position she occupied, appeared to be a very large comet, of xxxix light xxxxxx km with bright lights at the fore and a train of paler light several hundred feet long trailing behind. Its course was from the southwest to northeast and it kept a straight course as long as she watched it. Others saw it, and all agree that it did not descend while they were looking at it. Mrs. Davis has kept her eyes on the papers, expecting to read of an aerolite landing in one of the upper counties.
1897 April 22 (Th) Houston Post, p. 9. (card 1)

The Airship Was Seen. / Parties at Many Places Claim to Have Looked at It. / Rev. Smith Saw It at Childress. / Very Near the Ground at Belton and Its Passengers Spoke to the Spectators. Childress, Texas, April 17.--The much talked-of airship was seen here last night about 1:16 o'clock. Rev. J.W. Smith was the first to discover the curious aerial monster. He thought at first that it was a star shooting, but after watching it a moment or two, saw that it was not. He then called to his brother-in-law, Mr. Charley Norris, and also called to Mr. Bates and wife, near neighbors, who were up at the time. Charles Norris ran over to his mother's and called out several members of the family, who saw the ship. It soon disappeared, traveling in a westerly direction. Rev. Smith thinks it might have been 2,000 feet high and traveling very fast.
At Atlanta.

Atlanta, Texas, April 19.--There was considerable excitement here today, caused by a visitation last night by the mysterious airship. It was first seen here by Jim Nelson, a farmer, living one and a half miles west of here. He had walked out into his yard just after midnight, when his attention was attracted by a peculiar noise, and looking up he discovered the mysterious aerial traveler. It seemed to be descending straight to the earth with great rapidity and Mr. Nelson's hair stood on end with fright, as he mistook it for a meteor and momentarily expected it to strike the earth, explode and blow himself, his family and earthly possessions into eternity. But when within two or three hundred feet of the earth it paused for an instant, coming to a sudden stop, almost like a heavy weight falling till it reached the end of a rope sustaining it. Then it moved off at a rate of speed about equal to that of an ordinary passenger train in the direction of this city. Having read in the papers of an airship appearing at different places, he decided this must be the mysterious stranger, and having telephone connections with this city he immediately rang up central and reported what he had seen.

Mr. Boothe, the telephone manager, being in his office, looked out for the airship, which made its appearance on time. While passing over the city it was seen by many of the best citizens. Lee Wicks, night policeman, saw it distinctly and describes it as being about thirty feet long and the body or hull being about the proportion and shape of a skiff and seemed to be propelled by revolving wheels and fitted with sails to guide its course. Both Mr. Wicks and Mr. Booth agree in their description of the ship and both believe the motor power to be electricity.

Dr. Crossly, Jack Bangus, Dr. Connerly, Chess Hayes, Tom Swint, Dick [Jan, Paul Dunklin, R.T. Cope and Mr. Huffmaster, night operator, all are reported to have seen the ship, and verify the statement and description given by Boothe and Wicks. When first seen by Jim Nelson there were only faint gleams of red, green and blue light showing, but just after starting off horizontally it shot out a glaring gleam of white light, which was directed toward the earth in front of the airship at an angle of about 45 degrees and lighted a circle about thirty feet in diameter as bright or rates, said commission shall apply to the justice of the peace of precinct No. 1, Travis county, and procure an attachment and proceed to levy the same upon said airship for the purpose of collecting said rates, etc."

1897 April 24 (Sat) Fort Worth Register, p. 5.

THE AIR SHIP. / Mr. Woodford Brooks Declares He Saw It--His Account of It. /

Mr. Woodford Brooks, secretary and treasurer of the Polytechnic street railway, is the latest Fort Worth man to report having seen the famous air ship, and he related the circumstances with such seriousness and accuracy as to leave no doubt in the listener's mind that he tells facts.

Yesterday morning about 9:30 o'clock, while riding on a street car past the new city park, Mr. Brooks saw the strange aerial visitor resting on the ground but in the park near the river. Accompanied by the motorman, Mr. Edwards, Mr. Brooks went into the park for a closer inspection of the ship, but was met some distance from that vessel by the captain who gave his name as Randall. Mr. Brooks had a short interview with the captain, who said that the destination of himself and crew, which was composed of twelve men, was the City of Mexico. Mr. Brooks inquired of the captain if he did not think thirteen an unlucky number to make the trip, when that gentleman laughingly replied that they were all protected by wearing Mexican opals.

Mr. Brooks declared that the ship is a splendidly equipped machine, propelled by electricity, which is furnished by a large storage battery. It appears that the captain and the crew mistook the water works plant near the park for an electric plant, and had descended from their great distance above the earth for the purpose of procuring a supply of electricity for their ship. Upon learning their mistake they decided to utilize what they had left in making the trip to San Antonio, and soon sailed away.

Mr. Brooks telephoned The Register office last night that he had just received a telegram from Captain Mandall, who stated that the ship and crew had arrived in San Antonio safely and would leave at once for the City of Mexico, where they expected to arrive in two days at least. They expect to return by the way of Fort Worth in about a week.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Galveston Daily News, p. 3.

(card 1)

THE AIRSHIP IN WEST TEXAS / LANDED IN THE TOWN OF UVALDE. SHERIFF BAYLOR INTERVIEWED THE MEN. / IT STARTED FROM GOSHEN, NEW YORK / And Is on a Trial Trip--Navigator Wilson Left a Message for His Friend Akers. /

Uvalde, Tex., April 22.--That Uvalde has been visited by the famous airship that has created so much excitement in Texas the past week or more, there is no room to doubt. The airship was sighted by Sheriff H.W. Baylor about 10 o'clock Tuesday evening. Mr. Baylor's attention was first attracted by a bright light and the sound of strange voices in the alley back of his residence. He went out to investigate and was surprised to find there the airships and crew of three men. They stated they were on a trial trip and did not wish their presence known to the people of the town. One of the men, who gave his name as Wilson, and place of residence Goshen, N.Y., inquired for Captain C.C. Akers, former sheriff of Zavalla county, who he understood lived in this section. He said he had met Captain Akers at Fort Worth in 1877 and liked him very much, and would be much pleased to meet him again. When told that Captain Akers was at Eagle Pass in the customs service, but often visited this place, he asked to be remembered to the captain on the occasion of his next visit.

After procuring water at the hydrant in Mr. Baylor's yard, the men boarded the ship, its great wings and fins were set in motion and it sped away northward in the direction of San Angelo.

Mr. Baylor is thoroughly reliable and his statement is undoubtedly true. His description of the ship does not differ materially from that given by Mr. J.R. Ligon of Beaumont and the gentleman who saw it at Greenville.

County Clerk Henry J. Bowles also claims to have seen the airship as it passed up Getty street north of the Baylor residence.

At Conroe.

Conroe, Montgomery Co., Tex., April 23.--Our little city is all agog to-day over the report of a most remarkable incident that occurred last night at the hotel.

Prof. G.L. Witherspoon, proprietor of that hostelry, Major Dan D. Donahue, auditor of the Texas, Louisiana and Eastern railroad, Colonel A.H. Traylor, tax collector, and John Wahrenberger, merchant, were engaged until 1 o'clock in a social game of dominoes, when they were disturbed by a call from three strangers, who said they were from San Francisco, Cal. They were most affable gentlemen and made no hesitancy in an airship from San Francisco en route to Cuba via El Paso, Conroe and New Orleans.

They had left the ship at William's ranch near town and walked in to get supper by way of a change.

Major Donahue says that he feels like he has interviewed natives of the moon, as heretofore he has scoffed at the idea of an airship, and he and his friends on last night gracefully declined an invitation to inspect the wonderful aerial traveling machine, but when less than an hour after his midnight visitors had taken their leave, he saw the ship rise majestically from the earth, illuminated by brilliant electric lights, and plow its way through space, his skepticism vanished, and the strange reality of an airship was stamped on his senses and vision.

Major Donahue is one of our most popular citizens and in the main a quiet and most unassuming gentleman, and his statements, especially when corroborated by the evidence of such gentlemen as Messrs. Witherspoon, Traylor and Wahrenberger, are accepted as gospel truth. They say that the ship must have been at least thirty feet wide and 200 feet long. They watched it until it looked like a bright star just above the eastern horizon, and the major declares he was sober.

The Aerial Visitor at Flatonia.

Flatonia, Fayette Co., Tex., April 23.--The airship has been seen in this vicinity. Albert Mach, a reputable Bohemian farmer living about three miles south of Flatonia, saw it last night about 10 o'clock. Mach had never heard or read of the ship, therefore his statement may be considered reliable. He says the ship passed almost directly over him and was about 100 feet from the earth. It was going in a southeasterly direction and he could plainly distinguish a sound like the rapid whirring of wings. He saw different colored lights flashing from the machine, and as it receded from view it cast a bright streak of light from the rear of the ship in a slanting direction toward the ground.

Mach was badly frightened, and ran to the house to call his wife, but before she reached him the ship had disappeared from view.

The airship has been looked upon as a hoax here by nearly everybody, but renewed interest has been awakened by its appearance in this locality.

What an Editor Saw.

Edna, Jackson Co., Tex., April 23.--Frank Dickson, editor of the Progress, comes to the front and avows without qualification that he saw two airships pass over the southern part of the town night before last. The distant rumbling first attracted his attention, but he thought that it was possibly the noise from a steamer navigating the Navidad river, but looking up he soon discovered the two monsters poised in the air, about 400 yards apart, communicating with each other by means of red and green lights. The outlines of the aerial navigators, says Dickson, were substantially the same as heretofore described in The News. He says: "All this transpired in the space of five minutes, and when they started off one went north and the other south, and were out of sight before I could recover my presence of mind and call my nearest neighbor, Colonel G. Egg, to witness the strange apparition."

Seen at Huntsville.

Huntsville, Walker Co., Tex., April 23.--Last night about 11 o'clock while Mr. Isaac N. Adickes, one of the most prominent social lights of this city, was returning home from a call on his best girl, he had a glimpse of the much talked of airship. He says it came from a northwesterly direction and moved at a very rapid rate and passed over the outskirts of Huntsville, ascending as it neared the hills. It was not in sight over ten minutes from the time he first saw it. Its appearance tallied very much with former descriptions appearing in The News, being cigar-shaped and having wings, and also throwing out its usual bright light. No one here doubts that Mr. Adickes has really seen the airship and especially the young ladies, as they certainly have the utmost confidence in his veracity.

Seen at Logansport.

Logansport, La., April 22.--The much talked of airship passed over Logansport this morning at 5:30 o'clock. W.F. Miller, W.E. Graham and J.C. Morse were up early doing some special work for the Chicago Lumber and coal company when they saw a large object coming from the southeast and pass at the rate of 100 miles an hour. It must have been 1500 feet high. The three men are all reliable men. They are firm believers in the ~~sixth~~ airship now.

J.W. NORMAN.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Galveston Daily News, p. 10.

MR. WREN SAW IT. / He Was Privileged to Converse With the Airship Inventor.

They were discussing the airship and much doubt was expressed relative to the existence of such a thing. Mr. P.S. Wren, deputy customs collector, was of the party, and, being in a happy mood, was told how he saw the airship:

"Last Friday night, or at least, Saturday morning, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock, I saw traveling through space that wonderful airship, or whatever one may term it. It was a beautiful object, illuminated as it was from end to end, the body was cigar-shaped, with two wings, and right in front of the wings was what seemed to be a bicycle guide, with a seat for the navigator, and sitting there I saw a man who would move first one and then the other handle of the guide. After sailing or flying toward me for some distance, the thing started downward and soon landed upon the gulf beach near my residence. As soon as I saw this I repaired to my telephone and told the Western Union telegraph people what I had witnessed. I then returned to the rear of my premises and soon saw four gentlemen and three ladies coming in from the beach. They entered the house and were made welcome. They were all fine looking people, healthy and ruddy, and very talkative. The inventor of the peculiar craft was also the navigator. He was a fine looking old gentleman and fond of explaining his pet invention, as he termed it. He w it was that informed me that when he started on this tour his intention was to land on Galveston island. Our conversation was quite prolonged, and when the inventor produced drawings of his aerial vessel, and commenced to explain its mechanism, I awaked and saw nothing except a lovely moonlight night."

1897 April 24 (Sat) Houston Post, p. 4.

That Air Ship. / Seen at Logansport.

Logansport, La., April 23.--The airship which has been soaring around the country for some time passed over Logansport this morning at 5:30 o'clock. W.H. [Miller], W.C. Graham and J.C. Morse were up early doing some special work for the Chicago Lumber company when they saw a large object approaching from the south at a rapid rate. It was at a height of about 1500 feet and was moving at a very fast rate. The above men are the foreman and two ~~xxxx~~ workers for the Chicago Lumber company and are reliable men.

1897 April 23 (Sun) Daily Newspaper (Gainesville, Tex.), p. 2.

The Airship.

Several parties in the city declare they saw the famous cigar-shaped airship pass over Gainesville last Friday night about 11:30 o'clock. The noise made by its approach resembled the rush of wind which usually precedes a storm. The ship hovered above the city looking like a huge monster roaring through the air. It sailed in a circle and finally dropped alongside of S. Zacharias' big dry goods store where it remained about 40 minutes, when it rose gracefully into the night and sailed due north. It is surmised the goods Mr. Zacharias is offering so wonderfully cheap at his special sale this week were freighted through New York by the airship.

May 13, 2. Rain of snakes at Sherman.

Wed. Apr. 21, 2. Local Short Stops. No Gainesville citizen has as yet seen the air ship, and Gainesville is not a prohibition town, either. 23,2. He longed to see the airship, / Like other jolly men, / Who did not seek their little beds / Until long after 10; / But not kind friend would set 'em up-- / No cooling draught on ice-- / He longed to see the airship, / But he did not have the price.

1897 April 25 (Sun) Houston Post, p. 5.

THAT AIR SHIP. / Said to Have Broken Down and at Kountze for Repairs.

Kountze, Texas, April 24.--The much talked of airship visited Kountze last night. It was first seen by Captain H.A. Hooks and A.W. Hodges, who are both responsible men. In descending it punctured the "air department" and will have to stay over several days for repairs.

Anyone wishing to see it may do so by coming to Kountze any time before Monday night, as it will take until then to get it in flying order.

The ship is fifty feet in length and about twenty feet wide; shaped somewhat like a cigar. There are two men aboard her. They give their names as Wilson and Jackson. They will move north after Monday.

Bartlett, Texas, April 24.--The citizens of Bartlett have been on the lookout for this wonderful ship. Last Tuesday night one of the merchants noticed traveling in a southerly direction a very large ball resembling a large ball of fire, dropping three smaller balls. This aroused all the darkies. They are now holding a protracted meeting, looking to the end of the world by fire. Last night the night operator was awakened by a tramp going north. As the operator came to the door the tramp said: "The airship stopped about one mile down the road from here."

Of course the operator was very anxious to see the ship and walked for some distance when he noticed the lights all around a large boiler and smoke in the center of the lights. Mr. J.W. Barry, a gin man, is building a large cotton gin about five miles from town. Yesterday he received over the Missouri, Kansas and Texas a large boiler, he unloaded it onto a wagon and started out. When about one mile from town darkness compelled him to stop, but he put swinging lamps all around the boiler.

1897 April 25 (Sun) Houston Post, p. 13.

(card 1)

Supplies for Airship / A Rockland Man Helped the Aerial Navigators. / Purchased Chisels and Lubricating Oil for "Smith," the Man with the Mysterious Machine.

Rockland, Texas, April 23.--Mr. John M. Barclay, living near this place, reports that last night about 11 o'clock, after having retired, he heard his dogs barking furiously together with a whirring noise. He went to the dogs to ascertain the trouble and saw something, he says, made his eyes bulge out, and but for the fact that he had been reading of an airship that was supposed to have been in or over Texas, he would have taken to the woods. It was a peculiar shaped body, with an oblong shape, with wings and side attachments of various sizes and shapes. There were brilliant lights, which appeared much brighter than electric lights. When he first saw it, it seemed perfectly stationary about fifty yards from the ground. It circled a few times and gradually descended to the ground in a pasture adjacent to his house. He took his Winchester and went down to investigate. As soon as the ship, or whatever it might be, alighted, the lights went out. The night was bright enough for a man to be distinguished several yards, and when within about thirty yards of the ship he was met by an ordinary mortal, who requested him to lay his gun aside, as no harm was intended. Whereupon the following conversation ensued:

Mr. Barclay inquired: "Who are you and what do you want?" "Never mind about my name; call it Smith. I want some lubricating oil and a couple of cold chisels if you can get them, and some bluestones. I suppose the saw mill hard by has the two former articles and the telegraph operator has the bluestone. Here is a ten-dollar bill, take it and get us these articles and keep the change for your trouble." Mr. Barclay said: "What have you got down there? Let me go and see it."

He who wanted to be called Smith said: "No, we can not permit you to approach any nearer, but do as we request you and your kindness will be appreciated, and we will call on you some future day and reciprocate your kindness by taking you on a trip."

Mr. Barclay went and procured the oil and cold chisels, but could not get the bluestone. They had no change and Mr. Barclay tendered them the ten-dollar bill, but same was refused.

The man shook hands with him and thanked him cordially and asked that he not follow him to the vessel. As he left Mr. Barclay called to him and asked him where he was from and where he was going. He replied from anywhere, "but we will be in Greece day after tomorrow."

He got on board, when there was again the whirling noise, and the thing was gone, as Mr. Barclay expressed it, like a shot out of a gun. Mr. Barclay is perfectly reliable.

1897 April 26 (Mon) Austin Daily Statesman, p. 3.

City News. / Airship Again.

The airship made its appearance again early yesterday morning. At least three young men who were camping up on Bull creek, at Muddale's Point, say they saw it. Messrs. Geo. Proctor, Ted Tobin and Jno. Caldwell went up to the lake Saturday afternoon for a couple of days' camp, and pitched their tents at Muddale's point. About 3 o'clock yesterday morning it began to rain, and the young men were compelled to get up and fasten their tent. It was at this time they saw the mysterious air craft. They claim it was in sight fully fifteen minutes and are positive they could not have been mistaken. At intervals of every few seconds it would throw its searchlights, and the boys say the light looked as big as four ordinary arc lights. It made its appearance from behind Mount Bonnell and traveled north. The boys broke camp last afternoon--they say because it was raining so hard, but that mysterious light probably made the rain seem wetter than usual.

1897 April 26 (Mon) Houston Post, p. 2.

THAT AIRSHIP. / Farmer Near Josseland Conversed with the Crew.

Josseland, Tex., April 24.--Considerable excitement prevails at this writing in the usually quiet village of Josseland, caused by a visit of the noted airship, which has been seen at many different points of late.

Mr. Frank Nichols, a prominent farmer living about two miles east of here, and a man of unquestioned veracity, was awakened about last near the hour of twelve by a whirring noise, similar to that made by machinery. Upon looking out he was startled upon beholding brilliant lights streaming from a ponderous vessel of strange proportions which rested upon the ground in his cornfield.

Having read the dispatches published in The Post of the noted aerial navigator, the truth at once flashed over him that he was one of the fortunate ones and with all the bravery of Priam at the siege of Troy Mr. Nichols started out to investigate.

Before reaching the strange midnight visitor he was accosted by two men with buckets, who asked permission to draw water from his well. Thinking he might be entertaining heavenly visitants instead of earthly mortals permission was readily granted.

Mr. Nichols was kindly invited to accompany them to the ship. He conversed freely with the crew, composed of six or eight individuals about the ship. The machinery was so complicated that in his short interview he could gain no knowledge of its workings. However, one of the crew told him the problem of aerial navigation had been solved. The ship or car is built from a newly discovered material that has the property of self-sustenance in the air, and the motive power is highly condensed electricity. He was informed that five of these ships were built at a small town in Iowa. Soon the invention will be given to the public. An immense stock company is now being formed and within the next year the machine will be in general use.

Mr. Nichols lives at Josseland, Trinity County, Texas, and will convince any credulous one by showing the place where the ship rested. 1897 April 27 (Tues) Austin Daily Statesman, p. 3.

The Airship Again.

It seems impossible to hide anything from the "argus eyes" and ears of a Statesman reporter. Mr. Teagarden of Teagarden & Shumate, "The Peacemakers," (plumbers or gen'l store) has been in "telepathic" communication with the inhabitants of Mars for some time past. In fact his summer locations on the summits of various mountains in Colorado has been the means of enabling him to adopt a system of "telepathic" communication, and he intimates that "the airship" now voyaging around us is for the purpose of discovery and not war, as some suppose.

The ship is named "The Peacemaker" and is now used in the interest of his firm, Mr. Shumate having boarded the ship near Decatur, Ill., last Tuesday night. Mr. Shumate will visit the main manufacturing centers of goods kept by his firm and perfect such arrangements as may be necessary for their interests. On his return early in May, Mr. Teagarden designs taking a trip over the eastern continent as a guest of the representatives of the fiery planet.

No alarm need be felt by the inhabitants of earth as the appearance of the ship only betokens peace. In fact, ~~xxxxxxxx~~ wars are a thing of the past in Mars, and the art is lost with them.

Meteors over NYC Dec. 4, 1896--NY Acad of Scis discusses them May 9, 1897 April 28 (Wed) Dallas Morning News, p. 6.

Thought It Was an Airship. / People at Van Alstyne Mistook a Central Special for the Aerial Tourist.

Denison, Tex., April 26.--The people of Van Alstyne thought they had captured a real airship last night when the Central special bearing General Hubbard and party passed through there about 9:30 o'clock. They had been reading about the airships touring the country, and the big electric headlight on the engine was something new to them. The train was coming down grade at a rate of speed that would have made even an airship envious. Some one saw the headlight, and as there was no train due at that hour, he at once announced the airship was about to alight at Van Alstyne. The news spread like wildfire, and when the train stopped at the station the platform was thronged with people to see the sight.

Superintendent L. A. Daffan, who was in the party, went out and talked to those assembled at the station, and tells the story of how they mistook the train for an airship with a great deal of gusto.

AIRSHIP INVENTOR WILSON / WAS OF A MECHANICAL TURN OF MIND AND FORMERLY LIVED AT FORT WORTH. / REMEMBERED BY HIS FRIEND AKRES / Who Says He Promised Some Day to Startle the World With His Aerial Invention. / Eagle Pass, Tex., April 27.--Noting that on the airship said to have been seen by Sheriff Baylor in Uvalde, was a man who gave his name as Wilson, who claimed to have known me in Fort Worth, I can say that while living in Fort Worth in '76 and '77 I was well acquainted with a man by the name of Wilson from New York state and was on very friendly terms with him. He was of a mechanical turn of mind and was then working on aerial navigation and something that would astonish the world. He was a finely educated man, then about 24 years of age, and seemed to have money with which to prosecute his investigations, devoting his whole time to them. From conversations we had while in Fort Worth I think that Mr. Wilson, having succeeded in constructing a practical airship, would probably hunt me up to show me that he was not so wild in his claims as I then supposed.

I will say further that I have known Sheriff Baylor many years and and know that any statements he may make can be relied on as exactly correct.

RE C. C. AKRES.

During a month past the daily papers all over the country have printed columns in reference to the airship and the supposed solution of the aerial navigation problem. News correspondents in different portions of Texas have contributed their quota to this class of interesting reading, much of it unquestionably pure fiction, and numerous accounts showing no trace of fiction between the lines. It is needless to say that a great deal of the airship matter offered The News was not published.

Last Friday the News published an airship story from its correspondent in Uvalde in which it was stated that one of the crew of the ship gave his name as Wilson and inquired after a former acquaintance, Captain C. C. Akres, former sheriff of Zavalla county, now connected with the customs service at Eagle Pass. The News immediately addressed Captain Akres, inclosing the Uvalde account of the airship and requested him to let the public know through The News what he knew about Mr. Wilson. The above dispatch is his answer. The Uvalde item which called it out is as follows:

Uvalde, Tex., April 22.--That Uvalde has been visited by the famous airship that has created so much excitement in Texas the past week or more, there is no room to doubt. The airship was sighted by Sheriff H.W. Baylor about 10 o'clock Tuesday evening. Mr. Baylor's attention was first attracted by a bright light and the sound of strange voices in the alley back of his residence. He went out to investigate and was surprised to find there the airship and crew of three men. They stated they were on a trial trip and did not wish their presence known to the people of the town. One of the men, who gave his name as Wilson, and place of residence as Coshen, N.Y., inquired for Captain C.C. Akres, former sheriff of Zavalla county, who he understood lived in this section. He said he had met Captain Akres at Fort Worth in 1877 and liked him very much, and would be much pleased to meet him again. When told that Captain Akres was at Eagle Pass in the customs service, but often visited this place, he asked to be remembered to the captain on the occasion of his next visit.

After procuring water at the hydrant in Mr. Baylor's yard, the men boarded the ship, its great wings and fins were set in motion and it sped away northward in the direction of San Antonio.

Mr. Baylor is thoroughly reliable and his statement is undoubtedly true. His description of the ship does not differ materially from that given by Mr. J.R. Ligon of Beaumont and the gentleman who saw it at Greenville.

County Clerk Henry J. Bowles also claims to have seen the airship as it passed up Getty street north of the Baylor residence.

1897 April 28 (Wed) Houston Post, p. 5.

Anchor of the Airship. / Said to Be on Exhibition at Merkel, Attracting Much Attention.

Merkel, Tex., April 24.--Some parties returning from church last night noticed a heavy object dragging along with a large rope attached. They followed it until in crossing the railroad it caught on a rail. On looking up they saw what they supposed was the airship. It was not near enough to get an idea of the dimensions. A light could be seen protruding from several windows, one bright light in front like the headlight of a locomotive. After some ten minutes a man was seen descending the rope; he came near enough to be plainly seen; he wore a blue sailor suit, was small in size. He stopped when he discovered parties at the anchor and cut the rope below him and sailed off in a northeasterly direction.

The anchor is now on exhibition at the blacksmith shop of Elliott and Miller, and is attracting the attention of hundreds of people.

1897 April 29 (Th) Austin Daily Statesman, p. 3.

THE AIRSHIP SEEN HERE / It Passed Over the City Early Yesterday Morning in a Rain. / MOVED SLOWLY, PLAINLY VISIBLE / Seen by More Than One Person. Work of Hiram Wilson, Son of the Master Mechanic of the N.Y. Central.

The airship, carrying a large headlight, passed over the city yesterday morning, apparently about 300 or 400 feet above the earth. It moved slowly at first, traveling in a northwesterly direction, but its speed seemed to be greatly increased when it reached a point probably over Shoal creek.

A gentleman out north of the capitol saw it, and a colored man living on Robertson Hill had a sight of the aerial visitor.

A fine view of it was had by Mr. Otto P. Porsch, an intelligent and wholly reliable gentleman living at the corner of Colorado and Second streets and doing a grain and feed business at 402 East Sixth street. He is well known and has a large circle of friends.

A Statesman reporter saw Mr. Porsch at his place of business yesterday, and he told the following story:

"I was aroused from my sleep by my dogs barking and growling, and I went to a window and looked out. It was very cloudy and dark, and I saw the glare of a big light on the clouds. I thought a large fire was in progress and hastily put on my clothes and went out into the yard to see where it was. As I opened the door to go out, my young dog greatly scared at something, pushed by me and went into the house. My old dog stayed in the yard, and I noticed he was barking at something overhead, and I looked up and saw a great light slowly moving over the Salge hotel. It was coming from the southeast and moved in a northwesterly direction. It appeared to me to be about 300 or 400 feet above the hotel, and it traveled very slow, the light being so blinding that I could not see the shape of the vehicle or whatever was carrying it. I watched it carefully, and after it had gone some distance and had passed me I could see the shape of the rear end of the vessel, and it appeared to be in this shape," and Mr. Porsch arranged his hands in a V-shape, somewhat like the tail of a fish. "It was still moving very slowly, but as I watched I saw a movement on each side of it like a bird flapping its wings, and its speed was at once greatly increased, and I watched it until it disappeared, which was not long after it began to increase its speed. It was drizzling a little and and it rained pretty hard after the light disappeared."

Asked if he saw any colored lights he said:

"No, I did not. It was just a very large, ordinary light and very blinding until it passed me."

Mr. Porsch said that a gentleman living out north of the capitol told him yesterday forenoon that he had seen the ship at the same time Mr. Porsch did.

Mr. Porsch said: "After it had disappeared I went back into the house and looked at the clock, and it was exactly fifteen minutes after 4."

A colored man named Gray saw the ship as it passed over yesterday morning.

The Galveston News of yesterday contained a story that the vessel landed in Uvalde a few days ago near the residence of Sheriff H.W. Baylor. Two men were aboard, with whom Mr. Baylor talked, one of them giving his name as Wilson, and he said he had lived in Fort Worth, and the News of yesterday confirmed his story and shows he did live in the Panther city, where he worked on an airship.

History of the Ship.

So many contradictory reports as to this airship have been published that the public has almost come to believe it a hoax. In many instances particularly bright clusters of stars have been mistaken by feverish imaginations for the ship, and in others romancing space writers have spun fabulous yarns in relation to this mysterious vessel. Little in reality is known of the exact nature of this airship, except that it is the product of two American inventors.

The ship was completed probably on November 27 of last year, and was seen for the first time on the evening of that day as it rose from one of the numerous rock ridges or islands off the California coast. For several days it hovered over San Francisco, creating a profound sensation. The columns of the San Francisco press were filled with the news of the aerial mystery. The correspondents of the San Francisco journals all over California were instructed to keep watch of the movements of the mystery, ~~the~~ in hopes that a man might be on the spot should the navigators make a descent to the earth. The Examiner finally succeeded in ferreting out the island where the ship had been put together, and from whence it had started on its aerial voyage. By degrees a general idea of the structure of the ship was secured.

The inventors were Hiram Wilson, a native of New York and a son of Willard H. Wilson, assistant master mechanic of the New York Central Railroad, and a young electrical engineer, C.J. Walsh of San Francisco. The men had labored on their project several year, and when their plans were matured they had the parts of the ship constructed to order in different parts of the country, whence they were shipped to the rendezvous at San Francisco and put together on the island.

1897 April 29 (Th) Daily Herald (Brownsville, Tex), p. 2.

AERIAL NAVIGATION.

San Antonio is the latest station passed by the airship, and the Express vouches for it as a bona fide craft. That there really is such an invention now seems really beyond doubt. Numerous reputable citizens have caught sight of it, passing through the air over various parts of the state, giving unimpeachable testimony proving the fact. The great feat of navigating the air seems beyond doubt to have been accomplished. That which has been the dream of men for many generations, which was attempted by the ancients many centuries ago, has been done through the tireless efforts of the genius of the present day. It is a fitting crown for the innumerable great and wonderful inventions which have marked the progress of this nineteenth century, now so fast drawing to a close. It is also a fitting triumph for our proud republic that this last great turn of the wheel of progress has been made by American genius.

A flying machine that will fly is no longer an impossibility--it seems beyond all doubt an established fact. What has so long been considered the futile effort of a class of cranks will most probably soon be disclosed to the wondering world as an ingenious contrivance made by intelligent effort, which will rank its producer with Fulton, who so astonished the world with the steamboat, with Morse who electrified the world with the telegraph, with Edison, Feala, and countless others who have given to man such provisions of their genius and power. The revolution in present methods of travel and communication between distant lands which the accomplishment of aerial navigation will produce is too vast, and involves too varied possibilities to be grasped in a moment. Its contemplation affords infinite matter for dreams and speculation as to what man may do, how space and time may be annihilated--when the air may be made to transport one whither one lists.

What next will the divine gift of genius contribute towards the onward progress of the world?

1897 April 29 (Th) Galveston Daily News, p. 10.

(card 1)

AIRSHIPS MAY BE UNCLE SAM'S. / He Has Been Experimenting With Dirigible
Balloons. / New York Press.

It may be that those people out west who have for the last six months have been filling the papers with accounts of a mysterious airship which they have seen in the sky are not monumental liars after all. It is possible that experiments now being made by the United States government with a view to producing a dirigible, a controllable balloon--in other words, a genuine air ship--may be responsible for their visions.

For several years the government has had in its employ a well known aeronaut, who gets, it is said, a salary of $10,000 a year, and constant work and experiment have been going on. Every great nation has a balloon department in its army organization and a balloon depot. The balloon depot of the United States is at Fort Logan, near Denver, and the whole balloon business is in charge of the signal service of the army.

A profound secrecy has been maintained as to what has been accomplished, even army officers themselves only getting vague inklings of what is going on. The captive balloon problem seems to have been pretty well solved by all nations, and in the next war among other powers there is no doubt that the movement of each other's armies will be watched from balloons sent in the air and held by a rope 1000 feet long. But it is the air ship, the dirigible balloon, that the nations are after, the United States among them. It will be remembered that Frederick Allen Gower, Nordica's first husband, thought he had solved the problem of a dirigible balloon capable of being used for war purposes, and lost his life in attempting to cross the British channel in an air ship of his own invention.

About a year ago it was announced that the Italian government had been successful in its air ship experiments, and had constructed dirigible balloons, which, in case of war, would be let loose over the devoted heads of hostile armies. These air ships were said to be arranged so as to drop dynamite in the camps and forts of an enemy or on his soldiers marching in the field. Captain Phillip Reade not long ago in an article in one of the service magazines stated that the United States had made extensive experiments with dirigible balloons, and that the results had been most encouraging, but would not be made public except in case of war. There have been rumors of late of an air ship in process of construction at Fort Sheridan, near Chicago, but they were rumors of the baguest kind, and Fort Logan would be the natural place for the construction of such a dirigible balloon.

There is hardly room for doubt that the United States has in its possession an air ship which is regarded by the officers of the signal service corps as fairly successful. For all that is known definitely on the subject by outsiders it may have several. It is possible that it is one of Uncle Sam's dirigible balloons which has been so exciting the western folk. The most tangible thing which has come from the west about the mysterious air ship so many declare they have seen, or else the greatest "fake," is a photograph taken by one Walter McCann last Sunday from a suburb of Chicago, which shows an air ship in the sky. Experts who examined the two negatives taken by McCann were unable to detect any tampering with them, and believed the photograph to be genuine. Also several people were ready to swear that they saw the air ship in the sky at the time McCann took the picture, and saw McCann operate his camera. At any rate, there is one interesting thing about his picture: the air ship shown in the photograph is not so unlike the German war balloon in shape. At the last maneuvers of the German army a balloon was used, which was pronounced the most successful of its kind. It was cigar-shaped, with a rudder aft and a projection below the after part of the body of the machine like the keel of a vessel. The air ship which McCann says he photographed was very like it.

The German balloon, however, was not of the dirigible variety, but was held captive by a long rope. In these days of submarine torpedo boats and aerial dynamite throwers war is assuming a new and interesting phase. Is this western air ship a reality and the forerunner of Tennyson's vision in Locksley Hall:

"Heard the heavens filled with shouting and there rained a ghastly dew

From the nations' airy navies, grappling in the central blue.
Far along the world-wide shipper of the south wind rushing warm,
With the standards of the nations plunging through the thunderstorm."
1897 April 29 (Th.) Houston Post, p. 10.

Rosanky, Texas, April 26.--About 11:20 last night the airship was seen passing Rosanky, Texas, about two hundred feet in the air. It made a noise something like a swarm of bees; the lights were bright;
three lights were seen and it looked to be about twenty feet long.
It created quite an excitement and people do not understand the strange visitor.
1897 April 30 (Fr.) Houston Post, p. 7 (card 1)

The Airship. / Panola County Farmer Talked with the Navigators. / To the Editor of the Post.

Seeing so much about the airship in the papers put me on the look out, and much to my gratification my vigilance was rewarded, not only in seeing the airship, but also had the pleasure of meeting a party of aerial travelers.

About 8 o'clock p.m. I heard my horses--old gentle work stock-- snorting, running and bucking around like a drove of bronchos on a regular stampede. On going out to my lot to see what could have alarmed them, I sighted about a quarter of a mile off and seemingly about 300 feet from the earth a very brilliant and variegated light, coming from southwest and headed northeast, traveling rapidly. It would occasionally make a circle, and now and then be reflected down to the earth, virtually turning a very dark and cloudy night into day. After hovering around for a few minutes it gradually descended in an open field nearby. I, having by this time recognized it as the airship, went directly to the place of landing, and on arrival found the ship of about the same make up as given by various correspondents. Its crew was composed of five men, three of whom entertained me, while the other two took rubber bags and went for a supply of water at the well, 100 yards off. They informed me that this was one of five ships that had been traversing the country over recently; I and that this individual ship was the same one recently landed near Beaumont, in this State, after having traveled pretty nearly over all the northwest. They stated that these ships were put up in an interior town in Illinois.
They were rather reticent about giving out information in regards to the ship's manufacture and since they had not yet secured everything by patent, but stated that they would soon be secure in this, and expected to establish a factory in St. Louis at an early day, and would at once enter into active competition with the railroads for passenger traffic, especially in transcontinental travel. They stated that they could shorten time from Atlantic to Pacific two to three days. The ship's crew were careful not to forget earthly things, though traveling in the heavens. They were well supplied with edibles of all sorts --likewise drinkables; had a good supply of beer and champagne. Also had a full supply of musical instruments.

The ship was seen by a number of people in this section and some very amusing scenes took place.

A good many of the semi-superstitious thought it had close connection with Judgment Day. It passed near a camp meeting being held by the sanctified people, some of whom went into paroxysms of alarm, while others hailed it as a special messenger sent in a divine and providential way to throw light into the minds of their benighted neighbors who are yet wandering in the darkness of religious theories taught by the old school churches. The ship left my farm at 8:30 p.m., bound for St. Louis, so the party told me. / H.C. Lagrone / Deadwood, Panola County, Texas.

Conroe, Texas, April 29.--B. F. Hord, night operator, a most respectable gentleman, reports seeing the much talked of airship last night, which was at a great height and traveling southwesterly.

Eagle Pass, Texas, April 28.--A great deal is being said and written from this part of the country about the airship. Of course it is all a myth, yet there are some who accept the reports as true, add they find plenty of people ready and willing to invent new stories about xxx the airship whenever their interest begins to wane. The report that the Mexican customs officials took the matter seriously and put out special guards is also a canard.

Bay City, Texas, April 28.--The airship passed over Matagorda at 12 o'clock midnight, Sunday 25th instant. A little boy saw it, ran in the house and told his parents to come and see the big bird flying; they stepped out of the house and saw it: 'twas going in a westerly direction. Several other reliable persons saw the ship.
1897 May 1 (Sun morn) Houston Post, p. 4. (card 1)

Airship of the Past.

El Campo, Tex., April 29.--I saw in the weekly paper an opinion advanced by a professor of astronomy that the airship so much has been published about was from the planet Mars.

There is an old sailor living now in El Campo with his daughter who has proclaimed that he had not only seen the vessel but had actually seen people from another world. His immediate relatives have known of the circumstances for some years, but he says the story has never been published. The name of the old gentleman is [Mr.] Oleson, and for many years he was a boatswain in the Danish navy, but at the time he saw the airship he was a mate on the Danish brig Christine.

In September 1862, the Christine was wrecked in the Indian ocean on a [[desert] rock or island several miles in [size]. This rock is set down on charts of the ocean, but is not mentioned in geographies.

A furious storm had raged for [hours] and the ship was swept far from her course when this immense rock loomed ahead amid the deafening roar of the breakers. A great wave dashed Mr. Oleson high on the rocks and for a long time he was [insensible]. When he recovered he found [five] of his companions had been saved, though they were more or less injured, and one man died of his injuries.

They collected their faculties and found themselves confronted by starvation, since there was not a vestige of vegetation or animal life on the rock. They found plenty of fresh rain water in holes, which revived them very much.

They had given up all hope and had clustered at the base of a cliff waiting for the awful end, while the wind [howled] and the furious waves dashed on the rock.

Suddenly xxx another terror was added to the horrors of the scene, for high in the air they saw what seemed to be an immense ship driven, uncontrolled in the elements. It was driving straight toward the frightened mariners, who [cried] aloud in their despair. Fortunately, however, a whirl of wind changed the course of the monster and it crashed against the cliff a few hundred yards from the miserable sailors.

Speechless with fear, they crept toward the wreck. It seemed a vessel as large as a modern battleship; but the [machinery] was so crushed that they could form no idea as to how the power was applied to the immense wings or sails, for they could plainly discern the fact that it was propelled by four huge wings. Strange implements and articles of furniture could be seen jumbled in an almost shapeless mass. They found in metal boxes covered with strange characters what they afterward discovered to be very wholesome and palatable food which, with the water in the rocks, saved them from immediate death.

But their horror was intensified when they found the bodies of more than a [dozen] men dressed in garments of strange fashion and texture. The bodies were a [dark] bronze color, but the strangest feature of all was the immense size of the men. They had no means of measuring the bodies, but estimated them to be more than [twelve] feet high. Their hair and beard were [also] long and as soft and silky as the hair of an infant.

They found tools of almost every[kind] but they were so large that few of them could be used. They were stupefied with fright and one man, driven insane, [jumped] from the cliff into the boiling waves and was seen no more.

The others fled in horror from the fearful sight, and it was two days before hunger could drive them back to the wreck. After eating heartily of the strange food, they summoned courage to drag the gigantic bodies to the cliff and tumble them over.

Then with feverish haste they built a raft of the wreck, erected sails and gladly quit the horrible island. The sea had become as smooth as a lake and the experienced mariners made rapid progress. They tried as best they could to[steer for] Vergulen island, but fortunately in about sixty hours fell in with a Russian [vessel] headed for Australia. Three more of the old man's companions succumbed to their injuries and the awful mental strain and died before reaching port.

Fortunately as a partial confirmation of the truth of his story, Mr. Oleson took from one of the bodies a finger ring of immense size. It is made of a compound of metals unknown to any jeweler who has seen it, and is set with two [reddish] stones, the names of which are unknown to anyone who has ever examined it. The ring was taken from a thumb of the owner and measures 2 1/4 inches in diameter.

Now, Mr. Editor, many people believe those airship stories to be fakes. That may be so, but the story now told for the first time is strictly true. While Mr. Oleson is an old man, he still possesses every faculty and has the highest respect for truth and veracity. Quite a number of our best citizens, among them Mr. Henry [Hahn], Mr. H. C. Carleton, Green Hill and S. [Porter], saw the ring and heard the old man's story. Very Truly, 1897 May 4 (Wed.) Houston Post, p. 10.

John [Leander].

THAT AIRSHIP. / Beeville's Ship Caused Quite a Commotion and Was Not a Myth.

Beeville, Tex., May 3.--To many people the air ship was seen in Beeville last night, and the manner in which it was seen no doubt explains why so many people have been deceived at various places in Texas in the last few weeks. A large box (?) with holes in each side pasted over with thin red tissue paper and masts made of thin domestic wire was placed on the top of an electric light post, which, when lighted from the lamp that had been put inside, gave it every appearance of a ship in the air far away. Objects between the spectators and the apparent ship acted as people aboard and many of the curious people who were watching it could hardly be convinced kxk it was a fake, some even leaving on horseback in the direction they presumed it to be descending. The joke was a very practical one and caused quite a commotion in the central part of town, where people gathered to watch it.

1897 May 7 (Fri) Austin Daily Statesman, p. 8.

SAW THE AIRSHIP. / Representative Hill of Travis Says He Has Seen the Ship.

Representative Hill of Travis, who has been looking slightly leery for some time past, was busy talking about airships yesterday, and during the course of his conversation said that he and several members had seen the airship that was knocking about the city. Mr. Hill said: "On the night of May 1, while visiting Hyde Park, the airship was faintly visible to the south of the park, moving slowly. It became more distinct as it drew nearer until it came to a standstill very nearly over where we stood, gradually settling on the ground in a few feet of us. We hailed the captain, who answered us in good, ancient Greek that he was the rear admiral of the Greek squadron of airships, now on duty in the American atmosphere, and that his flag ship, Eureka was now before us for inspection. We were respectfully requested to examine and report to the Twenty-fifth legislature her dimensions, electric machinery, and armament, the number and character of her officers and crew and the object of her visit to Austin. The shape of the ship is that of the common migratory crane, with an electric battery of immense power contained within, connecting by wires with the wings, feet, neck and tail, enabling each to move separately or simultaneously, at the will of the electric engineer. The exact length of the ship from the point of the bill to the tip of the tail is 110 feet. The headlights are the eyes of the crane, that can be opened or closed at the will of the engineer. They are each lighted by a 1000 candle power incandescent light, either of which can be so directed as to cast its light on all parts of the aluminum bird and make it appear as a star of the third magnitude at a distance. There are no guns or cannon of any character on this ship. It is well stored with small dynamite shells, to be dropped on the enemy below in time of war. It is certainly capable of doing more damage to an enemy than any invention of the Nineteenth century. The officers are a captain, two lieutenants, two lookouts, two electric engineers, four shell droppers and one linguist capable of speaking the language of any country to which the ship may be ordered. No two men, except the linguist, speak the same language and no two are of the same nationality. The man who spoke English showed Mr. Blackburn in the hold of the ship where he had been since he left, and we were informed that the engineer was [filling him with dynamite] and at the proper time he would be dropped into the granite capitol to-burst and blow up the 25th legislature. The captain informed us that it was the opinion of the allied powers that nothing short of that on the sound of Gabriel's trumpet would cause the 25th legislature to pass the platform demands and adjourn.

1897 May 10 (Mon) Austin Daily Statesman, p. 2.

Airship Seen at Llano. / Rumor that It Is a Spanish War Scout Seemingly Confirmed.

Llano, Texas, May 9.--(Special.)--The much-talked of airship was seen at this place last night about 10 o'clock by several persons who are perfectly reliable in every way. When first seen it was just over the city and moved slowly in a northwesterly direction. When almost directly over the Algona hotel it was seen to pause for a short time as if inspecting the buildings which are to be used for a military school, then continued to sail serenely in a northwesterly direction. The ship was visible for about ten minutes, and was seen by ten or twelve persons.

27.1 arsp carrying supplies to Cuba (Philadelphia, Apr. 26.)

1897 May 13 (Th) Daily Times-Herald (Dallas), p. 6.

THAT AIR SHIP. / Some Kind of Object Passed Over the City. / Fort Worth, May ix 12.

Captain Scobie said last night that about 8 o'clock Mrs. Scobie called him to see something strange passing over the city and on going into the yard he could observe something that might have been an airship or balloon.

It was high up, being above the small clouds flitting through the sky at that time. It was a dark object with a wonderfully bright light on top of it and it was going rapidly in a southeasterly direction.

The captain said it had no appearance of being a meteor or star, but moved as a balloon would. What it was he could not undertake to say, but that he saw it there is no doubt.

Many others report having seen the sky flyer at the same time.

1897 May 15 (Sat) Daily Herald (Brownsville, Tex), p. 3.

Air Ship in Brownsville. / (Communicated.)

The accounts going the rounds of the papers regarding the air ship which is said to have appeared in various sections of the State, were regarded by us as being of the "Munchhausen" order and therefore did not give them credence, but we can now credit the statement of several reliable gentlemen, that the wonder is in our midst. Last night during the electric storm, a party was watching the pyrotechnical display when they were somewhat alarmed by hearing strange noises resembling the popping of corks, together with a sizzling sound. Immediately thereafter a blinding flash revealed to their astonished gaze an immense vessel which was heading directly for them, and a moment later it landed in Mke Leake's yard adjoining the saloon. There were three occupants, who conversed freely with the gentlemen, who were taking astronomical notes on little pieces of cardboard. The strangers stated they were direct from Washington and that the object of their visit was to investigate the many charges made against applicants for the position of collector of the port, and to return as expeditiously as possible in order not to clog the wheels of the government, as it cannot be run properly while the Brownsville matters are pending.

1897 May 16 (Sun) Dallas Morning News, p. 18

(card 1)

WAS ABOARD AN AIRSHIP / THE FIRST DESCRIPTION OF THE MODERN INVENTION TO BE FURNISHED (?) / A SAN FRANCISCO-NEW YORK LONE / Travel to Be Revolutionized Within Two Years--Speed of 1000 Miles in Eight Hours. / Richmond, Fort Bend Co., Tex., May 7.--To The News: The tragic death by the flood near Grenada, Miss., last Tuesday of the writer of the following letter has induces its recipient to allow The News to publish it. The gentleman to whom it was written is Dr. D. H. Tucker, physician at the state farm in this county, and is a man of unimpeachable character and unquestioned veracity, and he pronounces the author of the letter a man of like reputation. He and the doctor were colleagues and he was a young man of scientific turn of mind and had devoted considerable time to the study of physics and similar branches, and had at one time been engaged as draughtsman on the Panama canal. Here is the letter:

Lake Charles, La., April 20, 1897.--Dr. D.H. Tucker, Harlan, Tex.--My Dear Friend: Since receiving your last letter, which reached me at Mobile, I have had a most wonderful experience. This is a day and generation of wonders. It is said that there is nothing new under the sun. I doubt this statement and am ready to affirm that Noah's ark was an object of small interest to his ante-deluvian conferees compared to the wonderful ship I have just had the pleasure of seeing. I have known that for years the scientific world has been on the qui vive for the perfection of the airship; that experiments were in progress, but that nothing satisfactory could be obtained of the practical working of any of the machines, even from the ever alert and truthful Scientific American. But the thing is a fact! I assure you of this, for I have seen the airship, have spoken to the people on board, have been on board of her, and was enabled to make a sketch of her, which I send you. Of course many of the details are necessarily lacking in it and I have had to depend more or less as to measurements to my memory, but rough as it is, it is comparatively accurate. But to begin at the beginning. Yesterday about noon, while driving country in a leisurely trot my eye encountered almost directly ahead a large object at a high elevation. It was so unlike anything I had ever seen that my gaze was instantly riveted upon it. It approached at a very rapid rate, and from the apparent size of a flour barrel it rapidly developed into a ponderous affair, the sight of which was startling, to say the least of it. When about one-half mile from me it emitted an unearthly whistle, which terrified my horses so that I was forced to jump to their heads. While struggling with them I was thrown down and they broke and ran. When I arose, there, about 100 feet from me, was a huge something, settling rapidly, but easily to the ground, and a man was preparing to descend a rope ladder. The sight at first was so startling and the struggle with my team had so unnerved me that it was several seconds before I could even estimate the size or distance of the strange affair. As soon as I recovered my senses I instantly realized that it was the much talked of airship, which I, in common with nearly every one else, had set down as the creation of fancy, and imagination. As soon as the vessel's rope about reached the ground the man came down the ladder, followed by another, both of whom came up to where I was standing and began to inquire if I were hurt and to apologize for the damage they had caused. I was so dazed that I could hardly speak at first, but I lost all interest in my team and assured them that I was not hurt, and then began to ask them questions. It was decidedly gratifying to find that they were plain, every-day Americans like myself, and they were very gentlemanly. They invited me to inspect their ship, as if it were an ordinary affair, and you can rest assured I did not wait for a second invitation, but climbed the ladder or gangway or whatever else it is called, that hung over the side.

Now, let me assure you that I am not drawing on my imagination, but am giving you facts, as strange as they may seem, and as I write I read in a late Galveston News that others have seen this ship, but always in the night time and in so many different places that it seems a piece of fiction, whereas I saw it in the broad, open light of day, and spent over an hour talking with the inventor and owner.

As I reached the deck I was introduced to a Mr. Waters, who had the position of engineer. The two men who met me on the ground were Mr. Wilson, the owner, and Mr. Scott Warren, his friend. They also had a Mexican or Spaniard, who did the cooking, I suppose. We went into what might be termed the cabin, where we sat down a few minutes. This was a room probably 14 feet long by 8 feet wide. It was fitted up very prettily, something on the order of a smoking room on a Pullman sleeper. It had three reclining chairs screwed to the floor and cushioned seats on the sides and ends. Around a post in the center was a table with several field glasses and books in a bracket above it. There were a number of incandescent lamps about the walls and hanging from the ceiling, and I immediately concluded that the motive power of the ship was electricity and so expressed myself to Mr. Wilson. He said this was not the case, but that it was propelled and sustained by a gas which had the property of great compressibility under a slight pressure and a correspondingly great power of expansion. That he had invented a machine or rather engine that once started worked automatically and that one had only to attend to the governor which regulated the speed. I was not prepared wholly to accept this explanation and intimated as much in my expression of astonishment, but I was convinced of it when he showed me the apparatus for generating the gas and the engine for utilizing it. Not being a practical mechanic I can not enter into details of the engine's construction, but this much I was able to understand: That there was a receiver, made of aluminum (and of this metal the engine and everything connected with the ship so far as I saw was constructed), from which pipes passed to what appeared to me to be a square box, at each end of which was a cylinder with an exhaust chamber, in which worked a piston attached to a very singularly constructed driving wheel like the sprocket of a bicycle, except that there were four wheels, one within the other, and these Mr. Wilson called the accumulators. There were two sets of such wheels with a combine velocity surpassing anything heretofore constructed. By this peculiar arrangement of the wheel within a wheel the balance of the centripetal and centrifugal forces was preserved in the presence of 65,000 revolutions a minute; that is, the velocity of revolutions in these wheels would equal 65,000 revolutions of an ordinary wheel ten feet in diameter in one minute if such a thing were possible.

My mouth, as well as my eyes, opened wide at this statement, but I presume the truth was told. I asked what the highest attainable rate of speed might be. Mr. Wilson said that he did not know exactly but that he had covered something over 1000 miles in eight hours and the indicator or "speed dial," as he called it, only registered 73 1/2 per cent of what he believed was the maximum speed of the ship. Though he admitted that the dial might not be accurate and the possible speed might be more or less.

I was naturally curious to know by what means he generated sufficient gas to answer the purpose of a long voyage, but he smiled and said "quite a number of people would like to know the same thing probably." This is his secret and to test the practicability of which he is now traveling back and forth. He said that he had discovered it two years ago after years of experimenting, and I judged from remarks dropped occasionally that his companion, Mr. Warren, had furnished the capital for the experiment. Mr. Wilson said, however, that the source of his gas supply was the air, which is passed through a condenser containing certain chemicals which possess the function of eliminating therefrom a gas known only to him. He did not know the chemical formula, he said, or whether it was simple or compound. All the machinery seemed very simple and did not occupy a greater space than 5 feet in length by 4 feet in width.

To elevate or depress the ship while flying through the air a small wheel at the stern of the boat is operated. This wheel was something like that in a ship's pilot house but instead of having spokes there was an arrangement of magnets connected with wires to storage batteries. By passing the current over the tire of this wheel the operator was able to overcome gravity, thus elevating the ship. By passing the current in the opposite direction and under the tire the weight of the ship was increased and could sink like a shot to the earth, and by passing the currents in opposite directions at the same time the vessel would remain horizontal at any distance from the earth. What I thought was the anchor was simply the ladder which hung over the side.

While I was on board it had a gentle swaying motion, which I can imagine if much greater would produce seasickness. At the time we were not more than ten feet above the ground. The interior arrangement of the vessel is very neat and comfortable, though not expensively luxurious. The kitchen is a very small cuddy almost identically like that of a buffet car. The berths are narrow but comfortably looking.

To attempt to describe the ship in detail would be futile, as the whole thing was so suddenly sprung upon me that I was dazed. Mr. Wilson told me that currents of wind had little effect upon them, as by pressing a button at the wheel he could rise above or below antagonistic winds or storms. He said that he had never been higher than 2000 feet, as it affected the crew disagreeably, but that, as he had only been experimenting with his ship for about two weeks he did not yet know which would be the most desirable or comfortable height at which to travel.

He showed me the mechanical means by which the ship was propelled. At one end was a propeller (working on a shaft connected with the sprocket wheels) such as those on a tug boat, except that the blades of this ship's propeller were enormous, being ten feet in length. What I thought were sails were canvas wings used in steering, but Mr. Wilson stated that he was at work on a contrivance that would obviate the necessity of using the sails. The length of the ship was 75 feet by 25 feet.

Mr. Wilson said that his pantry was easily supplied with provisions at any time as he had only to drop down near a town and make his purchases.

As to the cost of the concern I could not ascertain as neither man seemed inclined to talk about that part of it, but Mr. Warren said that it was low enough to warrant the building of three of them as experiments. Each one was essentially different in some of the details and comparisons were being made as to the relative merits of each. They refused to state what point they started from or to give any information concerning their business, except as I have stated. They had a number of different newspapers containing accounts of the ship and they referred to them laughingly. Some of them, Mr. Warren said, were correct, but many of them were untrue. On account of the pleasant climate most of their journeys had been through Texas and Mexico. They did not know where the other ships were, but supposed they were in Mexico or Lower California and Arizona. They laughed heartily over some of the accounts of their being seen at so many different places at the same time, and gave as a reason for not alighting at or near a city that they did not want to be subjected to the annoyances, and I inferred that they had not yet secured all of their patents. As a reason for traveling almost entirely by night Mr. Wilson stated that it was because they had not yet become accustomed to being in such dizzy heights, and they feared to see the distance below them. They are not aeronauts and do not claim to possess the nerves or coolness of that class of people.

I learned that Mr. Wilson (though I doubt if that is his correct name) formerly lived in Fort Worth, but I do not remember to have ever seen him. He is apparently a young man and has the typical face of a genius or an inventor. He said that inside of two years their method of locomotion would be in general use throughout the world.

These ships, he said, had been built according to plans at different places and had been put together at Mr. Warren's place, but he did not say where that was. At night a small but powerful search light was used to flash ahead or below. It was mounted on the forward deck, and near it was the air whistle which frightened my horses. This latter arrangement had just been gotten in working order and this was its first trial, and I must say it is the most diabolical arrangement I ever heard of saw.

The inventor said that as soon as he could demonstrate satisfactorily the practicability of economically and safely operating his ships he and some capitalists would construct a line of air ships to be operated between New York and San Francisco and other points, and that it would not take long for the people to overcome their natural timidity in trusting their lives in such craft. So far they had met with but one slight accident, and that was to one of the sails or steering apparatus shortly after setting out on their journey. It amounted to very little, however, and only made it difficult to steer properly.

They offered to take me up to an elevation so that I could see if my team was in sight, but I respectfully but firmly declined and told them goodbye, after promising that I would not make my observations immediately public. As soon as I reach Memphis, however, I shall write my experience up for the press, and I think I can set at rest all the mooted question as to the existence of a real air ship. I can say positively and emphatically that there is at least one, and it is a real, practical, tangible reality, and though in time to come I will no doubt see much of them I can never again be affected as I was yesterday noon.

I have told several people here of my experience, but as they treat it as a Munchausenism I have not made any particular effort to convince them of its truth, but I assure you that every word I have written is absolutely correct.

One week after writing the above the author was drowned while attempting to save some livestock near Genada, Miss., and Dr. Tucker has given me permission to use the letter for The News. With a few trifling corrections in the language it is given as it was written.

GEO. DUNLOP.

NEW MEXICO

1897 April 24 (Sat. Evng.) Las Vegas, N.M., Daily Optic, p. 8.

Town Topics.

The night operator at Cerrillos telegraphed to Las Vegas, last night, that the wonderful airship was sighted above that place, last night, and that more than thirty reliable people declare they saw it, plainly.

28, p. 3. The great air ship was noticed by several Eddyites while returning from Phenix, one night. The ship was loaded with fat steers, and sailed so low the brands were easily distinguishable.

Denver Evening Post, 28, p. 6 (N.M.) The night operator at Cerrillos excitedly wired to Vegas that he had seen an airship. If the officials of the road hear of it that young man may find that he has mislaid his job.

27, p. 6. (New Mexico) And now our New Mexico neighbors--the few of them who fail to go home when the curfew bell jangles out the warning are seeing airships and hearing voices in unknown tongues up in the cloudless semi-tropic skies.

1897 April 30 (Fri) Albuquerque Morning Democrat, p. 3.

THE AIR SHIP. / Seen in Albuquerque Last Night by Two Reliable Gentlemen. /

The following startling account is given by two prominent business men of our city, who are loth for their names to appear, as they are afraid of being accused of having snakes. Their statement is as follows:

"Last night as we were walking north on First street we noticed a bright light in the heavens in an easterly direction. Mr. G-- made the remark that it might be the airship. We both laughed, but nevertheless kept our eyes in its direction. It seemed to be growing larger and moving downward. After watching it five minutes more we were convinced that it was the airship, and that if it did not change its course it would alight some where near the mountain road. We ran to meet it like two school children after the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. On reaching first street we could see the outlines of the ship and hear a buzzing sound like that made by an electric fan. In a few minutes it reached the ground just the other side of the mountain road. We did not know whether to run for the ship or for home, but curiosity got the best of our fear and off we went for the former. When within 50 feet of the mechanical wonder, we were confronted with two men dressed in furs of seal, each one over seven feet in height, while in their right hands were ivory clubs. They asked in broken English the name of the city and said that for several nights they had noticed a very bright light on the earth's surface and were desirous of knowing what it was. On being informed that it was the Metropolitan White Front restaurant on First street, owned by Messrs Arrighi & Gray they immediately ordered a basket full of ice cream and pigs feet and went on their way. As they were flying over the hill a little bird heard them say: "The White Front is out of sight."

COLORADO

1897 April 15 (Th) Rocky Mountain Daily News (Denver), p. 10.

Ivy Baldwin Incredible. / He Takes No Stock in the Reported Airship Through the Country.

Sergeant Ivy Baldwin of the United States signal corps is of the opinion that people are mistaken who claim to have seen recently a balloon in the air which was capable of being guided at the will of a steersman.

"People are often mistaken in their impressions," said he yesterday. "Once several hundred observers saw me fall into the harbor at San Francisco. The newspapers the next morning were filled with stories of witnesses who claimed they had seen me plunge from the balloon when it was at a height of several hundred feet. They agreed that it was the greatest dive on record, but I happened to know better. I never left the balloon until it swept within ten feet of the water and the drop was simply nothing at all. I know from the experience that a great crowd of onlookers may be deceived as to what takes place before their eyes. On this hypothesis I believe that nobody has as yet seen an air ship with a successful steering apparatus." April 15, p. 4

The airship diverted itself the other evening by distancing a fast mail train and showing itself over some score of widely separated towns in Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin. Last night hard cider either began to affect the Wisconsin imagination to such an extent that letters attached to iron rods began to fall from the clouds all over the state. [?] There was a time when [?] peculiarly robust fabricator was held to be in the Rockies, but we must tearfully confess the decadence of this brand of Western industry.

Mar. 28--atrap over Topeka, KC
30--Omaha

Apr. 2--KC, & Everest

14--Milwaukee; also Clinton letter to expositor.
1897 April 16 (Fr.) Denver Evening Post, p. 7.

Just Another Airship Fake.

Elwood Tammany is a mischievous lad employed by the Dun Mercantile Agency who has been reading of airships and their mysterious flight over the country. Yesterday morning while on his run distributing the credit sheets of the agency, he reached the 9th floor of the Equitable building and in a spirit of fun constructed a small parachute, tying on it a note written with a lead pencil reading as follows:

"This is dropped out in the hope that someone will find the note. We are in an airship, but are lost." He then dropped it out of the building, where it fluttered to the sidewalk. A gullible reporter of the Rocky Mountain News discovered it and in the true journalistic spirit made out of the innocent contrivance a sensation headed "Runaway Airship--Paper Parachute Brings Word from a Mysterious Aerial Visitor." But the joke of the story is the following paragraph in the News:

"A small boy, who was first to see the fluttering parachute, announced that he saw something away up in the air a few minutes before. He thought it was a bird, but it was large and there was a stream of smoke behind it."

1897 April 16 (Fri) Rocky Mountain Daily News (Denver), p. 3.

Runaway Airship. / Paper Parachute Brings Word From a Mysterious Aerial Visitor.

Yesterday afternoon people on 17th street were startled by the discovery of a tiny paper parachute floating down from the heavens. It was made of tissue paper and thread and attached to it was a folded piece of paper. It reached the street near the Equitable building and was captured by some of the passerby. The folded paper attached was discovered to be a note, written with a lead pencil in a straggling hand, and read as follows:

"This is dropped out in the hope that some one will find the note. We are in an air ship, but are lost."

In their extreme agitation, the writers evidently forgot to sign their names. Upon deciphering the note, many people began to search the heavens with their eyes for the runaway air ship. A small boy, who was first to see the fluttering parachute, announced that he saw something away up in the air a few minutes before. He thought it was a bird, but it was large and there was a stream of smoke behind it.

Word was sent to Captain Glassford of the signal service, and if he can discover anything that looks like a runaway air ship floating around anywhere in the vicinity, he will dispatch Sergeant Baldwin in with the big balloon from the fort in chase and if possible rescue the travelers who are lost.

The fact that a lost air ship was roving over the city caused something of a sensation, and the parachute that was brought the news, together with the note it contained, was brought to The News office.

[picture of parachute and note]

Apr. 18 p. 4--That Airship.

Scientists scoff at the airship stories as incredulous in the extreme but Eastern newspapers say that Attorney Max L. Kasmar, secretary of the Chicago Aeronautical Society, now comes forth with his official sanction, and insists the airship is no dream.

"We received word from St. Louis, Mo., that a 1897 April 20 (Tues) Rocky Mountain Daily News (Denver), p. 1.

Mysterious Airship. / Cripple Creek Citizens view a Very Strange Rover Over the Gold Camp. / Special to The News.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Colo., April 19.--The mysterious airship which has been floating over Kansas and Nebraska and other states for the past few weeks was seen by hundreds of Cripple Creek citizens yesterday afternoon. Of the hundreds of people who saw the strange object very few believed that it was the lost airship, but these few are firm in the belief that the mysterious rover was the genuine article. A majority of those who got their eyes focused on the little object say that it was nothing more than a sheet of paper which was floating in an upper current.

Attention was first attracted to it by a man who was scanning the stars at the corner of Third and Bennett avenue. He called attention of the bystanders to his discovery and in less than ten minutes 500 people along Bennett avenue were watching the object which was slowly floating above Mineral Hill from east to west fully one-half a mile above the surface. It revolved slowly and at regular intervals the sun's rays were reflected from it.

The airship believers stoutly assert that the reflection came from the bright aluminum of which the airship is believed to be constructed. Those who doubt the genuineness of the airship theory call attention to the size and shape of the rover which appeared to be as broad as it was long and entirely different from the descriptions given by believers in the lower altitudes who have had the good fortune to view it.

Last Sunday the Cripple Creek Citizen contained a half column account of a badly battered sardine can picked up by J. H. Graham containing the following communication written upon a piece of wrapping paper:

In Mid Air, April 17, 1897.--To whoever find this note: There are three of us lost in an airship. Our names are C. J. Pillsbury of 130 Washington street, Boston; Pierre Humbert, city engineer of Boston; and C. D. DeNovina of 72 Rue Traffaut, Paris. April 8 was the last day we were on terra firma. Upon that date we ascended from a switch upon the Missouri Pacific railroad in eastern Kansas named Weeks and 17 miles north of Emporia. We have been sailing we know not where. We are out of water and have given up hope. We trust that whoever find this note will immediately wire our friends at the addresses given.

Very few readers of the paper believed the story.

1897 April 21 (Wed) Rocky Mountain News (Denver), p. 1.

Humbert Deceals. - He Is Safe In Boston and Not Lost In An Airship. / Special to The News. /
 BOSTON, Mass., April 21.—Pierre Humbert, who was seen by a report or more today, denies the story of the letter dropped from the airship at Cripple Creek, naming him as one of the passengers. He says: "I know the country concerned very well, and am known there. James Graham, in Cripple Creek, is a mining man. No one has ever told me that I look like a person likely to be journeying in an airship. I have never intended to go up in a conveyance of the kind until it becomes a regular means of transportation. During the whole flight of phenomenon Mr. Pillsbury and myself have not descended upon a switch on the Missouri Pacific in eastern Kansas, named Weeks, which is about 17 miles north of Emporia, nor have we been sailing over the sun kissed peak of Mt. Pisgah, or any other peak. We have been constantly on earth in Boston, in the neighborhoods of our offices and dwellings." Mr. Humbert's opinion is that some light-headed individual has perpetrated a joke on one James Graham of Cripple Creek, Colo., and that the joker must have been hard up for freight when he went more than half-way across the continent and Paris for passengers for the airship. Possibly the joke originated in Boston.

1897 April 21 (Wed) Rocky Mountain News (Denver), p. A. (card 1)

Like an Airship. / Aerial Apparition that Stimulated Speculation Among Citizens of West Denver.

What may have been the vagrant airship was seen over West Denver yesterday morning. Not one of those who saw the flying object will risk the statement that it was an airship, but will forever assert that they saw something flying through the air. The object was tumbling over and over, to all appearances, like an aerial body without a rudder or a balloon that had lost its basket.

The object was plainly seen by Mrs. Mead of 1365 South 8th street and by Mrs. Berner. Both were scanning the sky, which was cloudy. The subject of airships was under discussion when Mrs. Mead uttered an exclamation, and cried out to her companion that there was something in the air that might be the celestial wanderer. The hour was about 11, and the sun being to the east, shone against the side of the object, which was to the west of where the gazers stood and was going rapidly northward. That it was rolling over was apparent from the succession of first a white side and then a flash, as if made by the sun shining on a metal body. Both women were very skeptical regarding unhooused ships being lost in the upper air, but there was something that was not an optical illusion or a delusion of any sort, for both saw it very plainly. To make sure they closed their eyes and then looked again. There was the object, and just then came the flash as of the sun striking against a metal body. Afraid to take into their confidence anybody about, for neither woman cared to be laughed at, they watched it fly along between them and the clouds. The possibility of the object being a newspaper, turning and flapping in the wind, was canvassed, but both ladies agreed that it was not likely, for the action was not that of a paper, as near as they could judge, and was much higher in the air than any such object could be carried. Whatever the object was it was hustling along pretty rapidly, and would soon be lost among the clouds. Then it occurred to Mrs. Mead that she had a pair of opera glasses in the house, and she rushed in after them, leaving Mrs. Berner to watch the vanquishing sailor of the skies. The latter lost the object in the clouds before Mrs. Mead returned with the glasses. All search of the sky with naked eye and with the glasses failed to rediscover the lost ship. It had gone from human ken as mysteriously as it had appeared.

When seen yesterday in regard to the flying object Mrs. Mead was very reserved in her statements. She did not want to be quoted as saying it was a ship of the air, made by human hands, for she feared the criticism that would follow such a statement. But she vouched for the fact that she saw something in the air that might have been an airship, and might have been something else.

"We watched it very carefully," she said, "so that we would be sure of what we had seen, and in case anything would become more distinct and give a good clue to what the strange thing was. But it faded from sight, giving no sign other than those we made out at first. In fact, it was the flash as on something like metal that attracted my attention. It was a second or two before I saw it again and then the flash, as off a piece of metal or a looking glass, threw the light in my eye again and I saw the white part. That is all we saw and all we could make out. If I had got my glass at once maybe we might have seen more."

Suppose it was an airship and suppose the flashes it gave out were heliograph signals of distress. If it was an airship this latter supposition is not at all a violent one, for a man who knows enough to construct a vessel that will sail the air should certainly understand all the methods of conveying intelligence. Had Mrs. Mead understood the signals it is possible definite information might now be on hand of the lost ship which has been described as sailing over the country, lost and forlorn, unable to run against a mountain and thus get found or to lose its buoyant properties and come to earth in a proper manner.

1897 April 22 (Th) Colorado Springs Gazette, p. 5. (card 1)

AIR SHIP VISITS HERE. / The Adventurous Crew of Three Men Will Likely Meet the Frightful Fate of Death From Thirst.

In their search for Italian climate the now celebrated and mysterious balloonists who have been heralded from all parts of the country came within two miles of Colorado Springs last night at 8:30 o'clock. Unfortunately for them, they were at a vertical distance and unable to descend. They left their word, however, in the shape of a farewell and an appeal to notify their friends of their pitiable plight. Their position and condition they described in a penciled note, the contents of which are literally and illiterally as follows:

"April 21, 1897.
"No one ever finds this note: We are in air about two miles above the earth. Our valve is jammed so that we cannot let the gas escape.

"We have no food except crackers and bottled olives.
"Our names are: C.J. Pillsbury, 108 Washington street, Boston; Pierre Humbert, city eng. of Boston; and C. De Novina, 72 Rue Truffant, Paris.

"Please let our friends know where we are.
"We cannot possibly live 48 hours longer, as we have no water." Their beer had evidently run out, too, for the startling message was enclosed in a sealed beer bottle, which, when picked up, was broken about the middle. The label bore the legend, "DOCK BEER."

This hair-raising, blood-kiss boiling story was obtained from F.A. Bissell of the South Side drug store. He was quietly sitting in the rear near the laboratory when the crash came. It was like a small cannon shot, and was not only heard by him, but three other intelligent witnesses. Eddie Hobbs of 117 Costella street, Charles Raffield, 323 South Tejon, and Charles Draper, 322 South Nevada, all earnestly testify to having heard the explosion as the glass came in contact with mother earth outside on the flagstones of the pavement of the pharmacy. The last three mentioned are young fellows of about 15 or 16 years of age, and when seen immediately thereafter were perfectly sober and sound in mind. One of the boys swore he saw a strange light in the heavens of the southwest. This evidence was backed up by that of an officer on the local force. He and a couple of citizens were standing opposite the Elk hotel about 9 o'clock, when they were greatly puzzled by the appearance of a peculiar illuminated object in the sky over in the direction of Ivywild. They watched it as it rapidly moved through the air, and finally disappeared in the northwest. At the first sight they thought it was a shooting star, but in a few seconds it showed no signs other than a regular movement estimated at 30 or 40 miles an hour.

The drugist's discovery of the unhappy tidings of the heavenly explorers has not paid 25 cents per line for this insertion, and neither he and his youthful neighbors nor the policeman in question were irrational when interviewed last evening.

The miraculous part of the extraordinary proposition is that the bottle was not completely crushed into dust as it struck terra firma. If it be a hoax it is hard to reconcile the coincidence of the singular phenomenon in the sky with the letter from the clouds.

The Cripple Creek air-ship message contained the same names that were signed in the note received yesterday.

The plot is thickening. It will soon curdle unless the mystery is solved, the perpetrators of the joke caught and exposed or the brand of whiskey changed by those who are almost daily asserting they see queer things in midair.

The paper on which are inscribed the dying words of the aeronauts is a leaf torn from a small memorandum book and the chirography is in the style of an illiterate writer.

Thirst, however, often makes beasts of men, so it is possible it has, in this case made them forgetful of teachings of school-days.

Poet Kingsley's immortal words might be more or less applicable to the air sailors:

"So fleet the works of man / Back to earth again, / Ancient and holy things / Fade like a dream."

But the fleeting show has a jammed valve and cannot come back to earth.

24, p. 5 DE A'R SHIP. / (Written for The Gazette.)
 Honey chile now jes you lissen / An' dis' lessun you mus' min', /
 'Bout dem (how yeah eye balls glisten) / A'r ships sailin' 'bout sofine Once dere wuz some turble chillerns / Didn't min' dere mammy 'tall, "
 An' dey hooked green watah milyuns / From dere nabahs' garden wall. /
 Hooked 'em too right in de daytime / Couldn't tell de ripe from green
 When dey shoud er gone by moonlight / So dat no one would er seen. /
 An dey set er bad example / To de odder chillun roun,
 An I'll bet er pint er licker / Wusser young unns can't be foun'. /
 By en by ven dey grew older / Had'nt acted up ernuff
 So dey went an built er a'r ship / Loaded it wid stolen stuff. /
 Went a sailin froo de hebins / Up above de worl' so high Looken like a bird in daytime / Night time lighten up de sky. /
 But at las' dey sailed on too fas' / An kerlided wid a star Jammed dere valve agains' de fif' pint / Wrecked complete in middle a'r./
 Dere dey wuz up in de hebins / Didn't hab a thing to drink
 An' widout a drop o' watah / How s you spoe dat reck'll sink! /
 Chile you min' what I'm a teillin' / And wid a'r ships nebbah fool
 Dey is wus dun gos' and roblins / Wussah dan a kickin' mevl.

24, p. 5: A Message from the Airship.
Occupants say they feel pretty "soar"; sorry they didn't take the Midland west.

1897 April 22 (Th) Rocky Mountain News (Denver), p. 3.

Again the Air-Ship. / This Time Colorado Springs Is the Victim of a Hoax. / Special to The News.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo., April 21.—The airship has at last made its appearance at Colorado Springs. To-night at 8:30 o'clock while F.A. Bissell, proprietor of the South Side drug store on South Tejon street, was putting up a prescription, he heard a terrific crash like a heavy object falling on the roof of his store. Running out side he found on the pavement a beer bottle which had been broken by the fall, in which was a slip of paper, evidently taken from a pocket memorandum about 2 11/2 x 6 inches in size, which had been folded up and on the outside fold was this notice:

"Important to the finder." On the reverse side was the following: "April 21, 1897. To whoever finds this note: We are in air about two miles above the level. Our valve is jammed so that we cannot let the gas escape. We have no food except crackers and bottled olives. Our names are C.J. Pillsbury, 108 Washington st., Boston; Piere Humbert, city engineer of Boston, and C. DeNovina, 72 Rue Traffant, Paris. Please let our friends know where we are. We cannot possibly live 48 hours longer, as we have no water."

There were several witnesses to the falling of the bottle. One of them, Charles Rayfield, a high school cadet who lives at 323 South Tejon street, say that he caught a glimpse of what he believes to have been an airship just as the bottle fell. Other witnesses are Ed Hobbs, who lives at 117 Castella atreet, and Charles Draper, another high school cadet, who lives at 322 South Nevada. All of them state that the bottle and the letter were dropped from the skies.

Piere Humbert is in Boston. He was interviewed there by The News correspondent, as published yesterday morning. The Colorado Springs Joker is evidently not a reader of The News, or he would not have been caught in such a trap.

1897 April 23 (Fri) Rocky Mountain News (Denver), p. 2. (card 1)

Once More the Airship. / Bright Light Floats Over Cripple Creek Last Night. / Practical Jokers in the Deal. / Two Thousand People Watched the Aerial Wonder Travel from Mt. Pisgah to Cheyenne Mountain, Rubbed Their Eyes and Marveled Till Their Heads Ached--The Ship Was Set Adrift in Space by Assessing Those on the Inside One Dollar Apiece to Construct a Hot Air Balloon. / Special to The News.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Colo., April 22.--The air ship was seen again in Cripple Creek to-night, evidently the unfortunate individual who occupied the aerial navigator has plenty of illuminating material, as the ship was brilliantly lighted. It was first noticed coming up over Mt. Pisgah about 8 o'clock this evening. It floated over the city from west to east and was fully 3,000 feet above the surface. The sky was cloudless and very dark and the light from the ship disappeared from view behind Cheyenne Mountain.

Thousands of citizens of the district viewed the greyhound of the skies, which was moving at the rate of from 20 to 25 miles per hour and was visible for at least half an hour. Bennett avenue was crowded with people who turned out to view the strange visitor and among the number there were many who believed that the little light which was overhead came from the mysterious ship which has been roaming over the country for the past three months. Those who saw the supposed airship sail over the city last Sunday from east to west assert that the navigator returned the same route, as he was acquainted with the lay of the land.

The skeptics, and they were in the vast majority, called attention to the fact that the wind was blowing from east to west on the 18th which would carry a balloon or piece of paper in that direction and to-night the slight breeze was from west to east, which would carry a hot air balloon in the opposite direction. Ever since the reported find of James Graham of a battered sardine can containing a communication from the lost navigators the residents of the Cripple Creek district have been turning their eyes toward the heavens day and night and if there was anything in the shape of a bird, a piece of paper, a balloon or an air ship floating over the district in the past few days without being seen by half the population of the camp in the vernacular of the street it would have to be "a bird."

That a hot air balloon floated over Cripple Creek to-night there is no question, and more than one candle was lighted to show the residents the course it pursued.

For the past few days a number of practical jokers have been working up a scheme to fool the unsophisticated in the air ship story and succeeded admirably to-night. Each member was assessed one dollar for the expense of the construction of the air ship and enough was subscribed to make it a success. The balloon was started on its journey on the west side of town and arose about 1,000 feet before being taken up by the east and west current which drifted it east. The night was very dark and cloudless and enough of the schemers were on the street to call attention to the strange sight, so that it is safe to say that at least 10,000 people in the district saw the balloon. A well known business man of this city was heard to say after the balloon disappeared from view, "I never believed before how easy it was to humbug the average citizen. I paid one dollar to help float the air ship that was seen to-night."

1897 April 23 (Fri) Pueblo, Colo., Daily Chieftain, p. 3. (card 1)

HE SHOT INTO THE SKY. / A New Mexican Cow Boy Evokes Wrath from the Heavens. / THE AIR SHIP APPEARS AT TAOS. / ... The Air Ship Seems to Bear the Legend "Avril Nahr," Which Means April Fool. / ... Espanola, N.M.

WAS IT AN AIR SHIP? Not to be outdone by either California or the effete east an air ship or some sort of an aerial monster appeared in the vicinity of Taos on the eve of Good Friday. It was about 7:30 in the evening--according to Doctor Martin of Taos, and Bill Roberts, who formerly lived at Espanola--and the Penitentes had just got started in for a night session of whipping and cross bearing, when the strange craft came sailing over the mountain from the direction of Trinidad or the La Belle mining district. The first knowledge that anyone had of anything unusual was the notes of a flageolet or flute of such immense volume that the air of the whole Taos valley seemed to be full of music of a volume and sweetness that the likes of it had never been heard before by the oldest inhabitant of the vicinity.

XXXXX Seemed to be several thousand feet above the earth when it reached Taos--and while it at no time stood still it began circling in the air very much after the fashion of a hawk or eagle, now striving as though it would alight and again taking a circular shoot skyward.

Those who saw it describe it as shaped like an immense spread eagle or huge butterfly with wings of enormous length and a fan-shaped tail resembling a fan-tail pigeon or turkey gobbler in full strut--only, of course, of huge proportions. It had a very long crane or neck ending in a head crowned with an immense conical shaped cap that was constantly lit up like the headlight of a locomotive. The cap was surrounded with strange hieroglyphical characters, some of them resembling old English letters or German text.

The vessel, if ship it is, must have some new fangled electric device for a motor, and it must have great power to move and control the vessel with the apparent ease of a bird on the wing. That it is an electric device of some kind is not beyond doubt, for what seemed to be flat wires extended in eccentric shapes from the body of the vessel above the neck to the top of the head. They were probably made of platinum and shaped in zigzags purposely for effect as they looked like flashes of zigzag or forged lightning as they were occasionally lit up by the electric current from the body of the vessel.

MUSIC IN THE AIR.

Of course such an apparition accompanied by such an immense volume of music and at such a season had its effect on the faithful--or superstitious--people who saw and heard it and the effect was a hideous in the extreme. There were fourteen whippers and three cross bearers in the Penitente band accompanied by a number of torch or tatter lantern bearers. Lights went out in a jiffy, the singing or chanting ceased, bull whips and crosses were dropped and the whole band broke for the rocks and arroyas, except several who were so badly scared that they fainted in their tracks. The evening session of the Presbytery was also interrupted. Some of the brethren who no doubt read the daily papers were very badly frightened until Rev. Frank Gilchrist of Del Norte, and Rev. Craig of Santa Fe, assured them that it was nothing but that air ship, which they had read about being seen in California and also in Kansas and Missouri.

Bill Roberts' saloon was full, and so evidently were some of the patrons--full enough to be reckless. A cowboy after gazing at it for a while pulled his six shooter and began peppering away at "the bird," trying to shoot the lights out. No attention was paid to his pop and he ran behind the bar and procured Roberts' old bear gun--a Winchester of the heaviest caliber and began pumping lead into the sky. Almost instantly the ship ceased circling and started south in the direction of Santa Fe. The music ceased abruptly and in a strong clear voice from the sky came the words: "Perfluchte schvinehund." The wings and tail of "the bird" were also evidently strung with wires and as the music ceased and the ship bore straight south the current was turned on and gave the vessel the form and appearance of an immense fiery cross in the heavens. The fan-shaped tail of the vessel also bore numerous hieroglyphics and what appeared to be German, capital letters. The most conspicuous of these when lit up by the current spelled the words "Avril--nahr."

If any one doubts the veracity of the above account he is respectfully referred to Rev. Robert Craig, Frank Gilchrist, Mr. Martin and numerous other citizens of Taos county.

BONA

1897 April 24 (Sat) Rocky Mountain News, p. 23.

Airship at Alma. / Special to The News. ALMA, Colo., April 23.--The miners of the Present Help mine, situated on the pinnacle of Mt. Lincoln, saw an air ship or kite pass over their cabin about midnight. The weather was very stormy, but the light from the ship could be very plainly seen, being brilliant voices as in distress could be heard. The ship was sailing toward Breckenridge.

1897 April 26 (Mon) Rocky Mountain News (Denver), p. 2.

Saw the Airship. / Cashier of Mesa City Bank Gets a Glimpse of the Aerial Traveler. / Special to The News.

GRAND JUNCTION, Colo., April 25.--The air ship was seen here last night by Orson Adams, Jr., cashier of the Mesa County State Bank. The aerial voyager was pursuing a northwest by north course at an elevation of about 2,500 feet, seemingly moving at a terrific speed and finally vanishing behind a low hanging bank of black clouds. Mr. Adams is somewhat adverse to discussing the matter, realizing the skepticism of most people as to the actual existence of the ship, but he stated to your correspondent this morning that he was never surer of anything in his life that he is of what he saw last night. The impression left on his mind by the glimpse obtained of the passing boat, was that of a cylinder-like craft with outriggers and fan-shaped sails. A steely light beamed from the stern of the sky-scraper as she receded from view. The story has been circulated quite extensively here today and there is considerable excitement, as Mr. Adams is known as a practical and conservative citizen, who is not likely either to invent or misstate facts.

1897 May 5 (Wed) Denver Evening Post, p. 7.

A Scientific Kite. / The Kansas Airship "Fake" Exploded at Last.

Topeka, Kans., May 5.--The Kansas airship has been discovered at last. Some weeks ago Topeka was startled one night by an airship hovering over the eastern end of the city. It carried bright lights and was seen by many on several succeeding nights. Sensational stories were written about it. Professors at the university took up the matter and sagely decided it was a new planet.

It now develops that the airship is owned by John M. Patton, manager of the Topeka Street railway, who is a man of scientific tendency.

The airship was secured by him from the government observatory at Blue Hill, near Boston, and has been used by him in conducting scientific investigations. It is nothing more than a scientific kite. It is hollow, carries two lanterns, and is capable of carrying about ten pounds. When flying, it is controlled by a strong cord and when lighted at night appears to be at a great distance.

Patton is quietly enjoying the "fake" airship stories and was somewhat loath to "less" up when discovered.

11897 May 10 (Mon) Denver Evening Post, p. 1.

OUT OF THE HEAVENS / GREAT BALL OF FIRE FALLS FROM THE SKY. / Brilliantly Beautiful Astronomical Display in a Little New York Village--The Brightness of the Visitor Dimmed the Moon--A Second Visitor Came, and Both Disappeared With Explosions. /

East Aurora, N.Y., May 10.--Residents of this city and the surrounding country were startled Saturday night by a meteor, the like of which was never seen, not by the oldest inhabitants.

At 9:05 o'clock, the heavens were lit up by a vivid flash resembling lightning and at the same time there came into view almost overhead a ball of fire larger than the moon. The moon was shining in a clear sky at the time, but the flash was so brilliant that the moon's shadow was completely obliterated for several seconds.

The ball of fire hung in the heavens for a second and then there was a streak of fire that curved off to the north. This was followed by another ball of fire, which seemed to be caused by an explosion. This in turn was succeeded by another train of fire and then the meteor fell and seemed to be dropping to the earth.

About a minute after the remarkable sight had been witnessed a series of reports, as of explosions at a great distance, was heard, and at the same time many homes in the village were shaken. If the same reached the earth at all it landed many miles away, as nothing can be found of it.

1897 May 13 (Th) Denver Evening Post, p. 1.

Balloon at Sea. / Large Airship Reported Lost in the Ocean Near New York.

Quarantine, S[taten] I., May 13.--Pilot William Furrle of Sandy Hook Pilot Boat No. 20, which brought the Norwegian fruit steamer Leon into port this morning reports on arrival at Quarantine that while cruising at 5:40 o'clock yesterday afternoon about three miles east of Sandy Hook light ship he sighted a large balloon apparently about four miles south.

The wind was from the southward and the balloon came along at a rapid rate, sinking gradually. The pilot boat was headed toward the balloon, but it fell into the water and sank within a few yards of the boat.

WYOMING

1897 April 23 (Fri) Cheyenne (Wyo) Daily Sun-Leader, p. 1.

SAW AN AIR SHIP. / A Traveling Man Tells of the Queer Aerial Wonder. / While all kinds of speculation is being made as to the reported air ship viewed in different localities, it will be interesting to hear from a man who asserts he has seen the queer sight and can vouch for its genuineness.

Jefferson Martin of the Consolidated Tobacco company of Chicago became rather indignant today when the unanimous opinion of a number of his friends was to the effect that the so-called air ship and all air ship stories originated in the newspapers and were absurd. Mr. Martin said he was skeptical as any one on the question until a few weeks ago when he was one of a party to witness the queer sight. He says that while a huge ship shaped make up was discerned, it is impossible to describe the appearance, so high and swift flying was the queer wonder. Mr. Martin says so many people have actually seen the sight, it is no longer questioned in many localities that some schemer has invented an air ship which he is bringing before the public in this mysterious manner before expelling all skepticism by a final exposure of his intention.

1897 April 27 (Tues.) Denver Evening Post, p. 6.

News of Our Neighbors--Wyoming.

A correspondent of the Cheyenne Tribune claims that the airship was seen on Sherman hill, headed for the west, and the Ravlins folks watched for it so long and eagerly that every man and woman in the town is nursing a stiff neck.

12, 6. Wyoming. The Wyoming Cycle Company, of Cheyenne, advertises that it is prepared to repair airships. Is this a rival of the Keeley cure?

May 6, p. 6. Wyoming. A Union Pacific train crew brought an airship story into Cheyenne and told it in such a straight, untangled manner that the Sun-Leader just about half way believes it. The thing was traveling westward over the sand dunes, but had not whistled for Cheyenne when the paper closed its forms.

4, 6 (Wyo.). I haven't saw no airships yet, / Cavorting through the regions upper, / But I have saw worse things than that / After a cornbeefian supper.--That Laramie Poet.

5, 6 (Wyo.) An airship has not been seen at Saratoga, but the editors up there on the placid Platte see pink wolves, bobcats with yellow tails, jack rabbits with horns and rainbows at night, and that is a darn sight worse.

11, 6. Casper has seen no airships, but had an amateur earthquake.

1897 May 6 (Th) Converse County Herald (Lusk, Wyo.), n. 5. (card 1)

Air Ship at Buffalo.

of this vicinity were treated to a sight of this wonderful machine and communicated with its occupants Friday afternoon.

About 2 o'clock in the afternoon, what looked like a small black cloud was seen coming slowly from the southwest. At first it was taken for the nucleus of an approaching hailstorm, but as it approached nearer it was plain to see that it was a balloon or airship of some kind and soon the streets were full of people, anxious to get a look at the strange object, and every field-glass and telescope procurable was brought into requisition. The ship was not too great a height to form a very accurate idea of the size or shape of the ~~xxxxxxxxxxxx~~ strange object. It looked though to be of a conical shape, with an arrangement at one end that looked like the propeller of a vessel. Two wings extended from each side which, at the time the ship was seen were stationary, and the ship was sailing like a large bird.

When the ship got directly over the town it stopped and the excitement among the large crowd observing it became intense, for it was thought the wings would close and the great artificial bird settle down, but such was not the case. It could be seen that there were moving objects aboard, but their shape or size could not be distinguished, but Mr. Proctor, who had a very powerful telescope, which he would not lend to anyone else, declared that he could distinctly see five men and said they were preparing to let down a rope which was wound on a reel.

Such proved to be a fact, for a few minutes later an object was seen descending and when it reached the ground in front of Walter's ice house it proved to be a basket. A rush was made for it and it was quickly opened by Mayor T.P. Hill, who was given precedence. In the bottom of the basket there was a piece of lead weighing about three pounds, and there was also a note. The note was quickly opened. It was found to be written in a foreign language, which the mayor could not read. Mr. N.C. Jensen said it was Danish and volunteered to read it. The mayor handed it to him, and he read as follows:

"In air, 3,400 feet--To the Hon. mayor and council--gentlemen: We ask you for aid in the shape of feed. There are five of us in this air ship. We left Silsvig, Denmark, on the 27th day of March. We had our ship under perfect control until ten days ago, when a part of the machinery got out of order and since then we have not been able to lower the ship or keep on any direct course, but have to drift at the pleasure of the air currents. We hope to remedy the defect in a few days. We have run short of provisions and beg of you to send us some canned meats, flour and coffee, for which we will ever thank you. (Signed) "C.N. Johnson, / "Commander."

The request was quickly complied with. The rope made three trips back and forth and took up two sacks of flour and twenty cans of corn ed beef. The mayor sent up a note expressing regret that the aerial travelers could not visit the town.

The appearance of this strange air ship has been the talk of the town ever since and dispels all doubt as to the existence of such a wonderful contrivance, which has been so much talked about and supposed to exist only in the imagination of persons who had taken freely of a peculiar brand of "bug juice." After receiving the provisions the air ship gradually disappeared, going northeast.--Buffalo Voice.

UTAH, WASHINGTON

1897 April 16 (Fri) Spokane (Wash.) Daily Chronicle, p. 5.

THE AIRSHIP. / Some People Claim to Have Seen It.

A number of people about the city today are declaring in positive terms that an air ship has been seen in this neighborhood. Some declare they have seen it themselves. Others have seen people who have seen the machine. One man who gives his name as Thurber declares he saw the air ship, a cigar shaped machine made of aluminum about 25 feet long. He says it was stranded beyond Mead at the mouth of Dead Man Creek, and had one propeller broken. It seemed to have been abandoned by its owner, but was surrounded by a big crowd

Nov. 17, 96, p. 1. ghost. / 23, 2. Arsp over Sacra., SF. / Dec. 5. "Haunted Camp" in Wisc. a fake.

June 26, 97, 5. Sveeny-Davenport arsp under construction near SF--illus July 30, 7. Petrified Indian found, Yellowstone. Aug. 27, 5. Rain of frogs, Ft. Ogden, Fla. Sept. 10, 6. Ghost dog, ~~Spokane~~ Shakopee, Minn.

1897 April 30 (Fri) Deseret Evening News (Salt Lake City, Utah), p. 4

THAT AIR SHIP. /

The rumor the other day that an airship had been floating over Ogden where it had been observed by a number of persons, is somewhat in line with similar stories from many other parts of the country. The mysterious flying-machine, or whatever it is, was first heard from K in Kansas and then in Missouri, and now it seems suddenly to have become omnipresent. People in Chicago, in Evanston, in Milwaukee and Eau Claire and numerous other cities claim to have seen it. A humorist from Kassou [?], Minn., telegraphs to an exchange that the air ship had been seen at that place the 12th of April. It had several absconding bank officials on board and had no time to stop.

The airship story from Rice Lake, Wis., is so far the most remarkable one, though. According to the allegations of an inventive writer of that place the ship anchored one evening in a mill dam and the captain sent for a physician. Dr. J.P. Valby came and found the captain suffering from the grip. The doctor spent two hours in the ship. The captain insisted on the representative of the medical fraternity accompanying him through the air, but the latter declined. The command of the ship, however, persevered and a struggle followed. Suddenly the strange machine started on its upward career. The doctor had to jump overboard. He was already forty feet from the earth, but as he was fortunate enough to fall into the water, he escaped uninjured.

Other stories are not quite as poetic as this one, but they all give the impression that a new craze is ~~xxxx~~ about to become epidemic. Still, perhaps it is not safe to form too hasty conclusions on the subject. It is a general belief that the problem of sailing through the air is about to be solved by somebody. Some years ago a detachment of the Russian army had maneuvers in Polen (sic) not far from the German frontier. Russian officers several times reported that they had seen balloons flashing searchlights over their camp, and they concluded that German military authorities are the possessors of a secret in air navigation not to be revealed until a war breaks out. The question has been asked whether somebody in this country possibly has obtained that supposed secret and is now trying to find out its practical value.

1897 June 5 (Sat.) Spokane, Wash., Daily Chronicle, p. 8. (Card 1)

REAL AIR SHIPS. / They Are Navigated by Beings From the Spirit World. / The following communication was brought in to the Chronicle office this morning by one of the most prominent spiritualists of the city. It is a novel explanation of the air ship problem which will be of interest not only to believers in spiritualism but to many others. It is as follows:

"Notwithstanding the many frauds and fakes in spiritual investigation in Spokane, many of the most intelligent citizens believe in spiritual phenomena. There are mediums in many families through whom inspirational utterances of a high order are given. One of these, an estimable lady, whose mediumistic gifts are known to but few outside her own family, communicates the startling intelligence that air ships of spirit creation are now hovering in the earth's atmosphere. Her communication on the subject is as follows:

"The newspaper accounts of airships having been seen in various parts of your earth are not all mythical. Above your atmosphere there are peopled regions, the homes and cities and countries of spiritual beings, whose environing conditions, to their consciousness, are as real and tangible as are natural objects to you, and there are inter-linking currents filled with sentient beings throughout the intervening ocean. There are no gulfs or desert wastes separating the different abodes of individualized intelligences, but all parts of the universe are rife with forms of intelligent life. The nearest available approach to you for the denizens of the spirit realms above ~~xxxx~~ in the ~~xxx~~ far north, where the terrestrial electric ~~xxxx~~ currents converge. This accounts for the hope which for centuries has animated your navigators, of reaching the north pole. Their thoughts are drawn into that channel by spiritual attraction.

"Life on the earth or in its immediate atmosphere (filled with coarse material emanations from it) is as unnatural to the spiritual beings who live above it as life in the water would be to your land animals. But it is possible for spirits to devise protecting and counteracting apparatus by which they can safely sink through the intervening air ocean to the surface of the earth, analogously to the marine diver armoring himself, or the use of chemicals to counteract the effects of fire. The great difficulty to be overcome is to prevent sublimation of the atoms when the creation comes within range of human vision, and to maintain the necessary specific gravity to anchor it.

"Spirits have long been experimenting with machinery materialized to traverse the lower depths of the earth's atmosphere, and have at last brought it to such a stage of perfection that it has been made visible to a few of earth's inhabitants. In the polar regions of your planet it is quite easy to land these semi-spiritual craft on the higher elevations, and when your navigators discover the ocean currents through which they can sail into certain polar harbors, well known to spirit explorers, open communication will be established between the worlds, bringing to the people of the earth benefits and blessings your optimistic poets never conceived of in their wildest flights of imagination."

1897 June 8 (Tues) Indianapolis Sentinel, p. 1.

Was Probably the Airship. / Iowa Farmers Saw a Ball of Fire and Heard an Explosion.

Lansing, Iowa, June 7.--An explosion ~~xxxx~~ of yesterday's supposed earthquake has been found. Farmers residing west of this city report seeing a large ball of fire sailing through the sky in a northerly direction about the time the shock was felt Sunday morning. Immediately following the disappearance of the strange sight there was an awful explosion and it is now thought to have been a monster meteor which must have struck the earth somewhere in northeastern Iowa.

May 10--p4. Now that Prof. B. has invented the real thing, those other ~~xxxx~~ araps must have been shadows cast by the coming event.

May 11 p.4--The arap in the West has been eclipsed by the ball of fire in eastern skies.

May 13--The NY man who sends up kites with cameras attached and photographs aerial sights should be hired during the next arap epidemic.

May 15--B's 2nd voyage.

1897 July 10 (Sun) Victoria (B.C.) Daily Colonist, p. 5. (Appendix)

THAT PILLAR OF FIRE / The Mysterious Visitor Seen Again Drifting Over Northern British Columbia. / Rivers Inlet Fishermen Watch for Two Hours the Powerful Moving Light. / Visible by Daylight as Well as Before Dawn and Mistaken for Andree's Balloon.

Evidence accumulates as to the existence of a great balloon shaped body, powerfully illuminated, drifting over this continent, but the latest report as to its movements leave the mystery as to the nature of the visitor and its mission--if it has any--as far from solution as ever. Just about a year ago... See following article.

W.S. Fitzgerald, /River's Inlet, 7/14/97

Another letter received in this city yesterday from Mr. A.R. Langley, of the Wadham's Cannery, corroborates the statements made above, and saw that the men who tell of having seen the strange visitor are in every way trustworthy.

1897 July 20 (Tues) Manitoba Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 1 (Card 1)

AERIAL MYSTERY. / THE WONDERFUL SIGHT WITNESSED BY TWO FISHERMEN. / IN BRITISH COLUMBIA. / Strange Story That Recalls the Reports Made of by Indians a Year Ago--Truthfulness of the Narrator is Vouched for--Positive That he Was Not the Victim of Imagination or Optical Delusion.

Vancouver, July 19.--Just about a year ago a great balloon shaped body, powerfully illuminated, was reported from two points in the northern interior of British Columbia, by Indians who had no possible means of communication with each other before making their almost simultaneous reports to the Indian agents, but who claimed to have seen it at points not too far distant to make it ~~xxxx~~ probable that it was the same object both had seen. The Indians had all been warned to look out for Prof. Andree's balloon and they supposed it was this balloon that they were reporting. The fact that they had received this warning caused the skeptical to aver that the Indians' imagination had been at work and that there was no balloon or other aerial visitors about.

Now the report comes from a source not open to such suspicion, though, strangely enough, the witnesses again supposed it to be Andree's balloon which for two hours they watched passing from rift to rift in the clouds a mile above their heads.

The letter below is from a reliable fisherman named W.S. Fitzgerald employed at the Wadham's cannery at River's Inlet, and speaks for itself as follows: "On the morning of June 10th, about 2.30 or 3 o'clock my fishing partner and I were drifting for salmon out at the mouth of River's Inlet, being both wide awake, and happening to look up towards the mouth of the Inlet we saw over a lofty mountain peak what at first appeared to be a fire, such as would be caused by the burning of a tall dry cedar. Looking more closely, however, we saw that the light was at least a mile above the peak, and was soaring smoothly along in boundless space above the sea of mountains beneath. It couldn't be a fire we knew, nor a star, nor yet the moon, and all at once the thought burst upon us that it was a balloon and none other than Andree's, we thought, would be touching in those regions. The night was dark and overcast and when it first came into view it was through a rift in a black mass of clouds.

There seemed to be a ~~xxxx~~ besides the powerful light a large pear shaped body attached and rendered luminous by the reflection of that light. We determined to watch it in its progress and saw it pass through rift after rift in the clouds. It was evidently moving in a different atmosphere, or current of air, than we felt below at that time, for whereaw on the water there was a nasty squally wind blowing, it seemed to glide majestically along without so much as a tremor. Then ~~xxxx~~ daylight dawned and we discerned it plainly for another hour, but only the naked, powerful light was now visible, until finally it disappeared behind a huge mass of dark clouds, and we saw it no more.

"It appeared to be moving in a southerly direction, perhaps some westerly, but always on the same plane. It was indeed a novel sight, and as we watched it we could not but feel proud, after all, of the puny race of man, with all its weakness could conceive and execute such a deed of skill and daring."

1897 July 20 (Tues) Victoria (B.C.) Daily Colonist, p. 4.

What Is It? (ed)

Several weeks ago two men in the employ of the Electric Light Co. said they saw in the early morning a balloon-shaped light rising slowly in the eastern sky. They are men of good repute, and there is not the slightest reason to suppose that they did not tell the truth. On July 10 two men saw a similar object at Rivers Inlet. Their story was printed in the Colonist on Sunday. They are men whose word would be taken on any other subject whatever. On July 12 the inmates of the Old Men's Home at Kamloops saw a similar object. It was within sight for more than two hours, and disappeared in a southwesterly direction. It moved with a fluttering motion and gave out streaks of light. The Island Sentinel is responsible for this story, which must be accepted as true, unless some reason can be assigned for disbelieving it, and we are unable to suggest any, for the Sentinel would hardly print such a thing if it were false. The date of the appearance of the story in the Sentinel was such that it was impossible for any one connected with it, or any one in Kamloops to have heard of the Colonist story. In view of these three accounts, and the utter impossibility of any collusion between the narrators, to what conclusion must we come? It is, in fact, hardly possible to come to any, for the dates are too indefinite. The motion of the object and its course are entirely too slow to be those of a celestial visitor. It must have a terrestrial origin. ~~xxxx~~ Is this a second visit of the great bird with the eyes of fire, which the Bella Cooola legends tell us sat upon the mountains before the Great Winter came?

1897 July 23 (Fri) Victoria (BC) Daily Colonist, p. 5. (Card 1)

A REAL FLYING MACHINE.

Las Vegas, N.H., July 21.--In the matter of flying machines Las Vegas is not behind the rest of the world. John R. Kirk, a Santa Fe engineer, claims to have invented, after seven years hard study and experimenting, a flying machine that will fly. It is entirely different from anything yet attempted in this line, while at the same time it is a marvel of simplicity and durability. The motive power is contained in a storage battery. Many citizens have seen the machine in its nocturnal flights, but supposed it to be a falling star.

Las Vegas; N.M., Daily Optic, Mon: July 19, 1897, p. 4.
A FLYING MACHINE. / A Las Vegas Locomotive Engineer Said to Have Invented One After Years of Labor. /

(John) R. Kirk, the well-known Atchison engineer, who has resided on Tilden street for the past eight years, and who is a flying machine enthusiast in the highest degree, believes that he has succeeded in inventing his much-coveted ideal. Not unlike most great inventors, he has worked against great odds and sacrificed much of his time and money in his enterprise and he may feel justly proud of the success that the fame of his hobby now promises him. In all, he has spent over seven years in thinking and experimenting with his invention, and under the most trying discouragements and against the protests of his friends and relatives; and now that his hobby is an assured success, Mr. Kirk will probably be compelled to take a long needed rest before pursuing further in his inventive career.

It is impossible to give a complete description of the successful flying machine, while the patent is pending. His machine is something different from anything yet tried and is a marvel of both simplicity and reliability. The propelling apparatus is run by a storage battery of electricity, while its speed is thoroughly under control at all times.

One of the hardest problems to provide for, on the start, was for the steering of the concern. This, however, has been satisfactorily solved, so that there is no danger of collisions or accidents.

The great benefit of the machines is that they can be manufactured at a very small cost, so that, in time, they may become more general in use than bicycles. The curiosity that the machine [arouses] makes it necessary that all experiments be made at night. Many of the citizens have seen the machine in its journey, and simply thought it to be a falling star.

Mr. Kirk has received the most hearty endorsement as to the practicability of his schemes from scientists and societies, to whom his plans have been submitted. It will be impossible to put the machines on the general market just at present, as there will doubtless be a large demand for the first few thousand for exhibition purposes.

Mr. Kirk has not himself the means to enable him to manufacture the machines on his own [] and will have to deal with a company; however, he is a thorough Las Vegas and philanthropist, and he has said that any company, who gets control of his patent, must contract to maintain general offices and plant in Las Vegas. Mr. Kirk values his patent at a large sum, and it is doubtful if he shall have to wait long for a purchaser.

1897 July 28 (Wed) Manitoba (Morn) Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 1.

Concerning Andree. / It Might Have Been His Balloon--A Possibility.

Rotterdam, July 27.--A letter from Captain Lehmann, of the Dutch steamer Dordrecht, appears in one of the papers of this city to the effect that he saw a curious object floating in the White Sea on July 17 which was neither a ship or a dead whale, but resembled a balloon, and Captain Lehmann suggests that it may have been Andree's balloon which he saw.

29, p. 1--Argument that Lehmann couldn't have seen Andree so soon after the ascent.

August 3 (Tues) Victoria News. / Aerial Mystery.

A brilliant object similar to the mysterious balloon or pillar of fire reported from various places is reported to have been seen twice in this vicinity during the past few days. Three ladies camping at Sidney say they watched it for half an hour moving slowly northward over Salt Springs Island. They described it as a column of fire about 50 feet long. Three young men named Taitum, Young and Wolden say they saw what looked like a brilliantly lighted balloon from their camp near Goldstream on Sunday morning.

1897 July 30 (Fri) Victoria (B.C.) Daily Colonist, p. 3.

News of the Province.

(July 29) About 2:30 yesterday morning, Mr. and Mrs. E. Pannell, of this city, saw a bright light approaching about 1,000 feet above Entrance Island or in that direction. The light, which was a powerful one, appeared to swing slowly and to be floating in a southeasterly direction. It is supposed to be another specimen of the "ignis [sic] fatuus," the appearance of one of which at the head of Jervis Inlet was mentioned in the Free Press a few days ago. The light is reported to have been seen by others in the city.--Free Press.

1897 July 31 (Sat) Manitoba Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 1.

COULD IT BE ANDREE? / A LARGE BALLOON SEEN BY A WHITEMOUTH FARMER. / It Was Moving Northeasterly and Had a Large Boat Attached--Other Andree Items. /

Whitemouth, Man., July 30.--At sunset on the 29th, Andrew Henderson a farmer who lives three miles from Whitemouth, saw a large balloon slowly drifting in a north-easterly direction. The balloon ~~seemed~~ seemed to him to be twice the size of his house, and had a large boat hanging from it. Can it be Andree?

It is quite possible that Andree's balloon might be driven to these latitudes, but, if Mr. Henderson was not mistaken, it would have to come further south than Winnipeg, and then have taken a turn northward to pass over Whitemouth in the direction stated. If the balloon continued its north-east course for any length of time it would be driven to James' Bay.

The Ascension / Expert Comments ...

246

1897 July 31 (Sat) Victoria (B.C.) Daily Colonist, p. 6.

THOSE AIR SHIPS. / A Party of Children the Innocent Cause of Much Profound Speculation.

People who of late have been seeing signs and wonders in the heavens in the shape of air ships, fire ships, balloons and divers other strange and uncanny aerial bodies can now rest peaceful in the knowledge that the fearful and wonderful visitors are none other than the harmless paper balloons so dear to the hearts of juveniles.

A few evenings ago some young people assembled at the residence of Mr. C.A. Lombard amused themselves and the neighbors by inflating a balloon, and as the shades of night were drawing in released the toy which sailed heavenward in the still atmosphere. This or perhaps another similar to it seems to have changed its aspects as it soared on high until it assumed many and various shapes. At one time--to wit, when it floated over the Coal City at the other end of the E & N railway--it had become an "ignis fatuus," or words to that effect; away up ~~xxxx~~ north at Rivers Inlet it appeared to the lone watching fisherman as Herr Andree's cerulean jaunting car; while to the local observers it was "an air ship which moved from side to side, allowing the light to fall upon its sides, showing that they were made of some vari-colored materials." Sic transit gloria mundi.

Aug. 4, p. 1--Manitoba balloon seen by Henderson.

1897 August 2 (Mon) Manitoba Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 1.

BIG BALLOON STORY / ADDITIONAL PARTICULARS OF HENDERSON'S AERIAL VISION. / Saw the Airship Plainly and Declares It Answers the Description of Andree's Balloon. /

Whitemouth, Man., July 31.--Further inquiries regarding the large balloon which was reported in the Free Press as having been seen passing in a north-easterly direction on the evening of the 29th, three miles from Whitemouth, have elicited the following particulars. The evening was remarkably calm and clear, every object showed a steely distinctness against the northern sky, and not a cloud marred the fine blue expanse. Mr. Henderson was standing at the door of his barn, and was taking a glance around the sky, as any farmer will do, when his eye detected a large oblong object sailing slowly, suspended like Mahomet's coffin, between heaven and earth. Gradually he made out the car; then he saw the huge sail swing slowly a round and come into view. Astonishment held him spellbound; again and again the ghostlike sail swung and jibed full in view, showing its enormous proportions. All the while it was slowly drifting with great distinctness across the clear blue of the northern sky. He called his brother, who was upstairs in the loft, to come down and see the big balloon. Before he got down, however, the enormous object had sunk out of sight. Going back to the house Mr. Henderson was shown a ~~cut~~ cut of Andree's big airship, which was in a weekly newspaper. When he saw it he exclaimed: "That's what I saw floating across the heavens, and the sail was just working like the tail of a fish in the water."

Mr. Henderson says that the balloon was very low, and could not have been over half a mile from him in a straight line. He could see no signs of life, and it showed no lights. Great excitement and endless speculations have been aroused regarding the fate and prospects of the daring voyagers.

1897 August 3 (Tues) Daily News-Advertiser (Vancouver, B.C.), p. 3.

VICTORIA NEWS.

A brilliant object similar to the mysterious balloon or pillar of fire reported from various places, is reported to have been seen twice in this vicinity during the past few days. Three ladies camping at Sidney say that they watched it for half an hour, moving slowly northward over Salt Spring Island. They ~~xxxxxxx~~ described it as a column of fire about fifty feet long. Three young men named Taitum, Young and Wolfenden say they saw what looked like a brilliantly lighted balloon from their camp near Goldstream on Sunday morning.

Aug. 12 '96--Andree's balloon seen by Indians, p. 1.

1897 August 5 (Th eve) Seattle Daily Times, p. 8.

HOW IT REALLY OCCURRED / NO Balloon Hovered About Mt. Rainier Yesterday. / CARRIER PIGEON ARRIVED / Disturbance Caused Last Evening by the Morning Organ's Thunder Bird, Which Reached Town from the Klondyke

Considerable excitement was occasioned at the courthouse yesterday afternoon by a message sent in over the telephone to the effect that some disturbance of the atmosphere in the vicinity of Mount Rainier had attracted attention from the surrounding towns, including Portland. From the latter place the rumor had assumed the shape of the long-lost airship, which has been reported as seen in various portions of the country. An obliging attaché of the courthouse seized a telescope and the opportunity to visit the tower of the county building, where a general view of the Sound country could be obtained, and such cooling breezes as might be passing on top of the hot wave would fan his cheeks.

The obliging young man saw a shape far in the hazy northwest, high over the mountain tops, but away from Mount Rainier. The shape momentarily grew larger and it approached with the speed of the wind. It might be an airship--it surely had wings--and its size was immense and its course direct, without at all observing the direction of the wind. It was coming head-on for Seattle. There was a swishing and whirring as of mighty pinions and the shriek of the "thunder bird" was heard in the land. The monster's wings spread from West Seattle to Smith's Cove, and in the beak, reaching forward and downward like the forks of a river, could now be discovered an object not totally unlike a Klondyke outfit, well packed in a canvas bag.

Reaching this city at early twilight one ponderous wing was poised aloft, while the other bent toward earth, and gracefully circling around the thunder ~~xxx~~ bird was near its journey's end. It swooped a gentle swoop; its eyes flashed like a gleam of lightning, and its voice reverberated among the hills. Some thought it a thunder shower. Hovering on fixed pinions directly over the conjunction of Second Avenue and Cherry Street for one brief second, the unusual arrival caused the streets to be filled with people, like the last notes of a P.-I. concert, and then forth from the northwest corner newspaper establishment blithely stepped a dapper chap, who held his right hand aloft, and with the other nonchalantly confided to his trousers pocket as he remarked:

"Watch out for the P.-I. extra edition. All about my friend McGraw's trip to the Yukon. Our first carrier pigeon has just arrived." 1897 August 7 (Sat) Victoria Daily Colonist, p. 7. (card 1)

THAT LIGHT IN THE AIR / Two Victoria Firemen Have the Honor of Making Its Acquaintance. / Watched It for More Than Two Hours, But Still Thoroughly Mystified. /

That strange aerial curiosity, the fire balloon, which has been completely mystifying the people of the Northwest during the past two or three months, is evidently becoming bolder--or else more people are keeping late hours than formerly, and in consequence have the good fortune to catch a glimpse of it. What "it" is, where it comes from, or goes to, and who or what manner of men are responsible for its movements, remain just as great a puzzle, however, as when the bright light first made its appearance in the sky, fully a month ago.

For upwards of two and a half hours Firemen North and Swain of the city brigade had opportunity to inspect the erratic visitor yesterday morning, and when it was finally lost sight of in the morning air they were as completely mystified in regard to its character as when they first sighted it.

It was Swain whose attention was first attracted to the light, he and his companion having been left on duty at the ~~scend~~ of a ~~grass~~ fire on the golf links that threatened, if not carefully watched, to break out afresh and cause damage to adjoining property. It was floating low then, and he called to North to notice what a bright mast light some ship was carrying. Then both looked, and North observed that it could not be a mast light as no ship in these waters carried so bright a lookout light.

While they speculated as to it, the light came nearer, floating so low as to be mirrored in the waters of the Straits, in the direction of and apparently overhanging Discovery Island. It had no discernible form, balloon shape or otherwise--it was just a great light as large from the distance at which it was viewed as the drum of one of the hose reels, and brighter far, according to the two firemen, than electric light.

As they watched, it slowly rose and then took a westerly direction sailing over about an eighth of the horizon circle, and then returning. As soon as it dawned on the two watchers that the object of their attention was the light of ~~xxx~~ which so many had been talking, they resolved to note particulars, and hurried over to the Mount Baker to procure a night glass. No instrument of the kind was available, however, and they had to rest content with bringing the night clerk of the hotel out to see what they had seen, and be equally wonderstruck.

Until four o'clock the brilliant body hung suspended in mid air, passing slowly from east to west and back again three times, and only disappearing with the coming of the day. At one time the firemen believed that they saw a dark body outlined behind the circle of intense light, but they could not identify it positively--to look at the light itself, according to the two witnesses, was like looking at the sun at high noon.

What the light was they cannot conjecture. They have listened to many theories during the past twenty-four hours, but cannot reconcile any with what their eyes have witnessed. The favorite theory seems to be that some daring inventor is trying the product of his brain in the privacy of the night, preparatory to giving his secret to the world. If this be the fact the inventor is the most successful keeper of a secret that has appeared on the ~~scend~~ for some time. And yet this seems the most rational explanation yet put forward. Too many have seen the midnight visitor for people of common sense to doubt the presence of a mysterious something.

1897 August 8 (Sun) Victoria (B.C.) Daily Colonist, p. 2.

THE RUDDY MOON. / Late Hours Prove Too Much for the Monarch of the Night. / Its Toper's Tint Causes Many Friends to Repudiate an Old Acquaintance.

If the man in the moon is provided with a moderately good telescope he must certainly have swelled with conceit last evening at the spectacle of the many faces upturned to him. His customary aristocratic palor had been replaced by a ruddy blush, an extremely intemperate shade of red, ~~xxx~~ which unhappily betokened at a glance that the moon was half full. At first glance many believed it was not the moon at all that they gazed upon, but the mysterious fireship.

The last ~~xxxxxx~~ persons reported as having been privileged to see this fireship were firemen North and Swain, whose story was printed yesterday morning. The two firemen said in recounting their experience that they would give a good deal to have the mystery explained. Now ~~xxx~~ comes forward Mr. J. C. Elliott, secretary to the board of fire underwriters, who undertakes to wipe the veil away and set at rest the evaporating uncertainty as to this strange illumination in the heavens.

"What has been seen by so many people of late," says Mr. Elliott, "is very simple of explanation. The phantasmagoria is nothing more nor less than a fire raft, made and sent out by the campers at Cordova Bay. "During my stay out there this summer, the youthful element constructed no fewer than four or five, towed them out to sea a considerable distance, and when darkness set in applied a match to the pile. And there you had your mysterious light in the air--in the reflection.

"I have often thought how much the burning rafts must have resembled ships on fire, as they floated forth and back on the waves as the wind blew and the tides carried them. I have myself seen them just as described by the two firemen, burning through the night until close to the break of day, and lo, when the dawn appeared, disappearing as if by magic. The firemen described what they saw very accurately, but with one natural mistake. What they took for the object was in reality nothing more than its reflection on the sky; while what they took to be the reflection in the water, has been the fire raft itself."

The firemen are not yet convinced, however. As North puts it, "that light was altogether too bright to be reflected, and it did not come from the water, but from the sky." 1897 August 9 (Mon) Manitoba Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 3

AGAIN THE AIRSHIP. / CAN ANDREE'S BALLOON BE VISITING THESE PARTS. / North of Douglas Mysterious Moving Lights Are Observed in the Northern Heavens. /

Some mysterious airship is evidently floating about north of the international boundary, and naturally Andree's balloon first comes to the mind of those who observe signs of it. First reports came of strange lights being seen off the British Columbia coast; then a statement reached the Free Press from Whitemouth that an aerial traveller had been noticed in that vicinity. All these reports have emanated from reliable parties and now comes a letter from a well known young Winnipegger at present in the west on the same subject.

Douglas, Aug. 6, 1897. / To the Editor of the Free Press.

Sir,--In case some of your numerous readers may have noticed something similar at some other point I would draw your attention to a peculiar matter noticed on the night of the 5th. About 11 p.m., just before retiring, a something that at first looked like a falling star appeared directly north of the residence of Mr. John Kyle, some four miles north-east of here. The person first to notice the strange object was led to call the attention of all in the house to the matter. For over half an hour we watched the strange visitor, as it seemed to rise and fall and sway from east to west, but gradually travelling further and further northward, until about 11.45, it disappeared from view. At times several of those watching the peculiar object, which all the while shone brightly, thought they could discern the shape of a massive balloon just above the bright light. It would be interesting to know if the circumstance was noticed by any others, and if so, what the impressions conveyed were.

R.M. SCOTT.

Any who have noticed similar objects are asked to inform the Free Press. If Andree persists in floating about Manitoba barn yards let us find him.

1897 August 9 (Mon) Pueblo, Col., Daily Chieftain, p. 1

A MONSTER SNAKE IN KANSAS.

Topeka, Kas., August 8.--Rumors of the monster snake which several ~~xxxx~~ people claim to have seen in Quinton Heights a few days ago are still being spread and many people in that vicinity tread the paths and roadways carefully. Many strange things have happened in that part of the city recently, which some claim are directly traceable to the antics of the reptile. A Quinton Heights man ~~if~~ is firmly convinced that the big snake has killed several of his chickens and two little pigs. He told a carman with whom he was ~~xxx~~ riding that he was going to watch for it in the evenings, and if it appeared near his place he would use his shotgun to good advantage.

W.B. McCann, who has had charge of a force of men at the stone quarry south of Quinton Heights, claims to have seen the snake. He says, however, that it was not more than 12 or 15 feet long. He says it was ~~xxxxxx~~ spotted and had a large head. Were it not for the fact that several have said that the snake was spotted the conclusion might be that it was a monster bullsnake. But no bullsnake was ever spotted yellow.

1897 August 10 (Tue) Manitoba Morning Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 3.

Another Aerial Visitor. / A Strange Object Seen Passing Over the City.

The family of W. J. McLean, who live in Point Douglas, had a novel experience on Saturday night. At about half-past 12 Miss Eliza McLean observed a ball of fire over the southeastern part of the city. Miss McLean called to the rest of the family, who watched the aerial flight for three fourths of an hour until it had disappeared in the northwest. The light was apparently suspended from a balloon and naturally the name of Andree associated itself with the strange object. Whether or not this was Andree of course remains a mystery for the present.

Aug 18--pigeon message that Andree passed 82° N.

Aug 26--Mr. Topping claims to have solved problem of aerial navigatn.

Sept 15--Aerl nav. company formed for trips ~~xxxxxx~~ to Yukon

Sept. 15, 21, 22--pigeons from Andree?

1897 August 12 (Th) Victoria (B.C.) Daily Colonist, p. 6.

THAT MORNING MYSTERY. / Those Who Have Viewed the Strange Phenomena Decline to Accept the Fire-Raft Explanation. /

Mr. J.C. Elliott's explanation in Sunday morning's Colonist of that peculiar light in the air that has been puzzling so many people of late, does not by any means satisfy those who have had the privilege of viewing the phenomena. Firemen Swain and North for example, protest that it could not have been the reflection of any fire-raft that they saw-- nor the reflection of anything else for that matter. Sharpe Wilson writes from Nanaimo to inquire if it was a fire-raft near Cordova Bay that seemed to float high in the sky, diffusing a dazzling radiance, how did it come that he was able to see it distinctly at his home in the Coal City. And now comes forward another witness in the person of Mr. E. Scrope Shrapnel, who writes from old Oak Bay to the following effect:

"I noticed in your issue of the 8th instant a communication concerning the mysterious appearance of the morning light in the sky, as witnessed by Firemen North and Swain on the morning of the 6th. The suggestion that the illumination was caused by fire rafts does not lift the veil by any means. Myself and other members of my family watched the same brilliant light as described by the above-mentioned firemen for nearly two hours. The only difference was that it appeared to us to be directly over Mary Todd island, swaying from side to side slowly, and sometimes rising and falling in a similar manner. It was decidedly no reflection, being quite as bright, if not brighter, than the numerous stars in view."

In view of the number and credibility of the witnesses, it is evident that something out of the ordinary has been seen by them. The local staff of the Colonist would be obliged if anyone seeing the mysterious light in the future would immediately communicate the fact. 1897 August 14 (Sat.) Victoria (B.C.) Daily Colonist, p.7. (card 1)

THAT FIERY MYSTERY. / Viewed by Thousands in Vancouver Moving Swiftly Across the Southern Sky. / Rossland Also Reports the Strange Sight-- Speculation as to Its Meaning.

Vancouver, Aug. 13.--Thousands of Vancouver citizens to-night viewed with the greatest interest and curiosity a mysterious luminous body believed to be that which has been seen in many parts of British Columbia during the past month. At nine o'clock it was travelling with tremendous rapidity in the same direction as the earth, and at a speed which would circle the globe in 24 hours. It is low down in the horizon, just skimming the mountain tops in the southern sky. It is travelling with slightly rising and falling motion. It is extremely brilliant, red in the centre and surrounded by a luminous diaphanous mist. As seen to-night it would appear to belong to the stellar system, perhaps a mighty meteor running amuck, a strayed star erratically jolting across the heavens. It is strange that the observatories have reported nothing of the mysterious skylarking of this nondescript luminosity. Before to-night this stranger had been seen by many Vancouver folk including Reeve Schon [Schou], who was on the steamer Rihet on Monday last, and one of the many passengers who watched the object for hours. Mr. Schon gives the most exact description yet published. It moved parallel to the sea far below the star line. It looked like a very bright red star surrounded by a luminous halo, cigar-shaped. It travelled slowly, as appeared from that distance, and occasionally there seemed to drop from the bright red star a shower of sparks like the sputtering of an arc light.

Rosslund, Aug. 12.--A luminous ball of fire that glowed amidst a halo of variegated colors, hovered over Rosslund for a time last evening and was seen by several well known citizens, among whom were: Major Cooper, J. Wilson, Magistrate Jordan, Andy Revsbeck, Alderman Fraser, Inspector Barr and others. When first observed it was huddled down on the horizon, but approached with the swiftness of light, and after hovering about for over a quarter of an hour poised in mid air, surrounding itself the while with flashes of colors, it streaked off in a southerly direction and soon faded from sight. At first it was supposed to be a shooting star, but as it approached nearer it gleamed like a great ball of fire and poised itself directly above Red Mountain. Although the moon shone quite brightly it did not seem to dull the lustre of the stranger. Those who were watching saw a weird sight. Little particles of fire seemed to shoot out from the main ball and then a flash of red followed. It looked for all the world like a light house with a revolving flashlight of colors. No doubt if it had been dark enough the thing could have been observed more closely, but as it was, it was a sight never to be forgotten. After showing its respects to Rosslund, the wonder made several wide circles, like a bird undecided what course to pursue, and then struck an air line and passed rapidly away towards the south.

1897 August 15 (Sun) Daily News-Advertiser (Vancouver, B.C.), p. 6.

NEWS OF THE PROVINCE (Rosslund)

A luminous ball of fire that glowed strangely and shed about itself a halo of variegated colors, hovered over Rosslund for a time on Thursday and was seen by several well-known citizens, among whom were: Major Cooper, J. Wilson, Magistrate Jordan, Andy Revsbeck, Alderman Fraser, Inspector Barr and others. When first observed it was [half] down on the horizon, but approached with the swiftness of light, and after hovering about for over a quarter of an hour poised in mid air, surrounding itself the while with flashes of color, it streaked off in a southerly direction and soon faded from sight. At first it was supposed to be a shooting star, but as it approached nearer it gleamed like a great ball of fire and poised itself directly above Red Mountain. Although the moon shone quite brightly it did not seem to dull the luster of the stranger. Those who were watching saw a weird sight. Little particles of fire seemed to shoot out from the main ball and then a flash of red followed. It looked for all the world like a lighthouse with a revolving flashlight of colors. No doubt if it had been dark enough the thing could have been observed more closely, but as it was, it was a sight never to be forgotten. After showing its respects to Rosslund, the wonder made several wide circles, like a bird undecided what course to pursue and then struck an air line and passed rapidly away toward the south.

THAT STARRY VISITOR. /

To The Editor:--The evidence that you published this morning coming from Vancouver, in reference to a strange visitor that has been seen in the heavens, may meet with an explanation in the following from Guillemin's well-known work:

"It has been suggested, not without some probability, that the attraction of the earth is susceptible of retaining meteors in the state of permanent satellites; and astronomical treatises quote the calculations of a French astronomer, M. Petit, of Toulouse, who assigns to one of these bodies a revolution round our globe, the period of which would be three hours and twenty minutes. The distance of this singular companion of our moon is 5,000 miles from the surface of our earth."--from the Heavens, by Guillemin, page 173.

My time is too fully occupied with directory work to give attention to anything else, but I trust the above information may be of some service to those who have the time for such an interesting study. R.T. Williams.

1897 August 17 (Tues) Denver Evening Post, p. 6.

Utah.--A bright light on Ensign Peak attracted considerable attention from Salt Lakers Friday night. Some expressed the belief that it was a beacon light sent to lead them to better times, but everybody out there is doing pretty well, and no one followed the inviting glim. Aug. 10, p. 6--meteor over Salt Lake City 16 6-- " " Lehi

Aug. 14, p. 1--Balloon at Sea. / A Norwegian Steamer Reports Sighting an Airship That May Be Andree's.

Stavanger, Norway, Aug 14.--The Norwegian steamer King Halfdan, which arrived here today reports that at 4:50 o'clock this morning she sighted between Haugesund and Ryksdam, near Stavanger, a large balloon at an altitude of 1,500 feet, travelling east-southeast.

A guide rope 200 feet in length was hanging from the car. 1897 August 18 (Wed) Victoria (B.C.) Daily Colonist, p. 5.

SAW A LIGHT. / A Fiery Globe in the Sky Seen by Another Victorian. /

The mysterious fiery visitor that has caused so much speculation, but has so far baffled all attempts to explain, has again been seen in Victoria. It appeared on Monday morning to ex-Alderman Styles, but that gentleman being of a modest disposition and very unwilling to have his name in print, was somewhat reticent when he knew that he was expected to talk for publication. The light appeared in the east like a globe of fire, though it moved about a little. It did not take any sudden shoot off into space; but kept pretty well in the same place. This was about a quarter to four o'clock in the morning. It was much nearer the earth than the stars and could not be mistaken for anything of that description. The same light was seen by Mr. Styles in Southern California several months ago and in the same direction--the east.

Mr. Styles' description of the celestial visitant does not sound as if the light could be any description of air ship, as some people have supposed.

It rather seems more as if it were some heavenly body, though the strange part of it is how it could be apparently so close to the earth. 1897 August 21 (Sat.) Saginaw, Mich., Globe, p. 1.

Andree's Balloon. / It Was Sighted August 15 in the Northwest of Norway.

Christiane, Norway, August 21.--A dispatch to the Fremskydte from Sande, a small town in northwest Norway says a balloon was seen August 15 moving at a great height in a northwesterly direction. From the balloon depended a tackle which appeared luminous.

1897 September 14 (Tues) Manitoba Morning Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 1.

WAS IT ANDREE'S?

The Edinburgh Scotsman of Sept. 4th has the following: "Among the letters delivered to us on Saturday by the Canadian mail, there was the following communication:

Dear Sir,--On Thursday, the 5th of August last, between six and seven in the evening, a large balloon passed here, its course being west-north-west. Here means ten miles due east of the town of Prince Albert, situated on the North Saskatchewan river. It looked like the enclosed sketch.

The funny thing to us was that the lower part seemed to be dragging the upper part. Upon looking at the map you will see that the North Saskatchewan river bounds the settlement, and that beyond is only a Hudson's Bay company post here and there, hundreds of miles apart. Could the balloon have been Andree's running wild?--I am, etc. A. MUIR. Prince Albert, Saskatchewan."

1897 September 18 (Sat) Manitoba Morning Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 2.

Was It Prof. Andree?

St. Petersburg, Sept. 17.--A telegraphic message was received here from Krasnoyarsk, in the interior of Siberia, which says on September 14, the inhabitants of the village of Antzifirokkoje, in the district of Veniseinsk, Arctic Russia, saw a balloon, which is believed to be that of Prof. Andree, the Swedish aeronaut, who left the island of Tromsø shortly before 2:30 p.m., July 11, in an attempt to cross the Polar region. The balloon, it is added, was in sight for five minutes.

Wed. Sept. 22--p.2--Andree's Outlook. / Report that the Balloon Was Sighted Not Credited.

London, Sept. 21.--A Dispatch to The Times from St. Petersburg says

"The report that Prof. Andree's balloon has been sighted in the interior of Siberia are not believed here. Captain Kovanko, the leading aeronautic expert in Russia, entirely discredits them. He asserts that if Andree ever returns, it will certainly not be in midair and the balloon could not have kept up beyond twelve days."
1896 July 30--pl--sea serpent off Mass.
Aug. 13 p.6--Andree may have started Aug 4, bec was a S. wind that day.
Aug. 25 abandoned trip for a year.

1897 September 20 (Mon.) Manitoba Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 8.

A BALLOON AGAIN. / This Time One Is Seen Near Souris.
Balloon stories are always received with a good deal of doubt, and it was for this reason that a Free Press reporter had to promise a gentleman from Souris last night that no names would be made public in connection with the latest story of that nature, which is here given. On Friday evening about six o'clock five or six farmers near Souris distinctly saw a balloon floating over them at a considerable height. They could see no one in the basket on account of the great height, but they were sure there was a flag floating from the top of the balloon. The object was in sight about five minutes. The gentlemen are positive they made no mistake. The balloon was going in a southwesterly direction.

1897 September 28 (Tues) Manitoba Morning Free Press (Winnipeg), p. 4.

ANOTHER ANDREE MYSTERY.
Wm. Graham of Honora, Manitoulin Island, Lake Huron, writes to the Toronto newspapers stating that on Saturday, Sept. 11, at 10 o'clock p.m., he observed an object in the air moving to the northwest. The wind was blowing from the southeast at the time. He noticed three colors of lights--red, white and blue. The object, he says must have been seven or eight miles from where he was and high in the air, and appeared to pass over Clapperton Island, going towards Spanish River, on the north shore. Mr. Graham and his neighbors took it to be a balloon light. They telephoned Core Bay, and it was also seen from there. Mr. Graham suggests the object he saw may have been Andree's balloon.

1898 March 4. English Mechanic, v. 67, p. 63.

The Hamburg Duplicate Moon.
(40849)--There was a French story some years ago of a moon much smaller and nearer than the monthly one, revolving in less than a day, and somebody said about as large as Gibraltar-rock. A week ago, the last clear evening in London before February 19, I was going along a street leading due south, about 6 o'clock, when a man exclaimed to another, "Look at that shooting star!" I saw one flying steadily from the western houses & till hidden by the eastern ones, in perhaps two minutes. It was utterly unlike any other meteor I have seen--too slow to have any apparent tail; brighter than Rigel, not so bright as Sirius; perfectly steady, with no twinkling, no detached sparks, and kept eastward in a horizontal path, some degrees south of the Equator, for perhaps 50 degrees or 60 degrees, the houses hiding both its beginning and end.

This might be a duplicate moon, much more probably than the Hamburg one. In fact, the nearest satellites to Mars and Jupiter really seem parallel to it.

E. L. Carbett.

1898 March 11 English Mechanic (v.67), p. 61.

Scientific News.
From Griefswald, Pomerania, Dr. Brendel reports to the Astronomische Nachrichten that Postmaster Ziegher and several other persons saw a remarkable dark object pass in a north-westerly direction across the sun's disc, February 4, ingress 1 h. 10 mins., egress 2 h 10 mins. Berlin time. The object was about 6" in diameter, was perceived nearly a quarter of an hour before it reached the sun's limb, and was followed for more than an hour after emerging from the disc.

Unusual meteor seen by ship Peninsula near Aden, Feb. 8, 2.52 a.m. M.T. An enormous ball of dull red colour, about one-eighth the size of the sun, falling slowly but without a trail. When at an altitude of about 30 (?) it burst with extraordinary brilliancy, and threw out in all directions what seemed to be flames, which lit up the whole horizon in the south.

1898 July 29 English Mechanic (v. 67), p. 545.

Science News.
That "Hamburg" moon has cropped up again, and it is now stated that "the second moon was seen on the disc of the sun on February 5 at Wiesbaden, and by three German officers in China. It will be seen again on or about July 30, a few days sooner or later, like a dark round spot crossing the sun. The third moon will pass before the sun about the same time. This is larger & than the second. The passage lasts one hour or less. Its last appearance was at Griefswald, on February 4. A second moon, we understand, is no uncommon phenomenon at certain hours of the night."

p. 546. Walthemath's 2nd moon due to cross the sun soon (see v.66, p. 596)
1899 March 3 (Fri) El Paso Daily Times (Tex), p. 7. (card 1)

THAT NOON-DAY STAR. / It Was Considered a Phenomenon and Created Much Talk in El Paso.
Yesterday morning after 8 o'clock somebody discovered a large star shining brightly in the southwesterly sky as if it had remained out late just to convince old Sol that he is not the only shiner in the skies.

Some one said that the star was discovered by Richard F. Burgess while he was looking into the future from his office window. But the general belief is that Major Fewel discovered the twinkler as he was walking along San Antonio street trying not to see a man who wanted to touch him for the loan of a 'V.'

Anyway the star was discovered and it was a mighty big star to be loafing so high in the sky hours and hours after all its companions of the night before had retired. The superstitious were inclined to the belief that it was a warning of some kind. Hundreds of people were in the streets looking at the star when a stranger to the city stopped beside C.W. Fassett and after looking at the heavenly loafer a few seconds said:

"Well, that is curious; what do you think it means?"
With inscrutable nonchalance Mr. Fassett, without shifting his cigar replied: "That is what we call Texas Independence Star. You see this is the 2nd of March and on each re-occurring Independence Day since 1836 that star makes its appearance over Texas. We expect to see it today."

The stranger looked hard at C.W. to try and discover if he was joking. But when it comes to looking serious when lying the genial city treasurer is the envy of every burro and politician on the border. He looked innocent Truhy personified. The stranger pushed his eyes back off of his cheeks, stumbled in the Parlor and asked in a very dusty voice for "three fingers." While taking his bracer the stranger heard Al Howard explaining to Al Lamour and H.W. Neill that the star was one that Dewey had knocked out of Aguinaldo. And then a couple of other gentlemen came in and said the star escaped from the "Three Wives to One Husband: theatrical, which once visited El Paso.

This kind of talk was reassuring to the stranger, who went out, hunted up Fassett and offered to engage him at a salary of $10,000 per annum. The stranger was a newspaper publisher from San Francisco, and wanted a man to talk up his circulation.

H.M. Patterson declared that the mysterious heavenly visitor was nothing more nor less than the "Lone Star of Texas," which was here to, by its presence, protest against all this talk about a new state, and to show to El Pasoans that the Lone Star will forever float above them.

The star was visible until noon, when the near approach of the sun caused its pale-faced rival to disappear.

20th Century

1902 July 11. English Mechanic v. 75, p. 456.

Scientific News.
Mr. W.H. Robinson, writing from the Radcliffe Observatory, Oxford, sends to Nature a description of a curious object seen by him on May 28. Whilst observing with the Radcliffe transit circle at 11h 19m GMT, his attention was directed to a nebulous object about 8 degrees from the zenith. "It was small, but bright and well-defined, elliptical in form (major axis 2', minor axis 1.5'), and situated about halfway between N Ursae Majoris and A Lyrae, but a few degrees south. The object very much resembled the Praesepe when that cluster is visible in a somewhat hazy sky, an atmospheric condition which prevailed at this time. At first I supposed the object to be a comet, but was soon disillusioned on this point, for in a few minutes its evanescent character was revealed, and, gradually fading, by 11.30 GMT it had entirely disappeared. The position of the nebulosity was found by means of a star atlas to be--RA 16h. 15m. Decl. 44". The sky was watched until midnight for any return of the phenomenon, but nothing was seen except at about 11h 42m, when a faint patch of light appeared for a few seconds only, about 2' east of the above position. The luminosity was apparently not of an auroral nature, and Mr. Robinson suggests that it may have been the trail of a meteor, several instances of meteor clouds of this character having been recorded. Other observations of the object observed on May 28, if forthcoming, would probably enable a determination to be made of its distance and nature."
1902 July 18. English Mechanic, v. 75, p. 476.

Scientific News. (re meteor of July 13, which lasted 2 1/2 secs, v. 15 sec. tail.)

It seems to have made its first appearance at Addiscombe, near Croyden. A lady who saw it there describes it as a large ball of fire the size of the moon. It grew bright for a few minutes, and then disappeared. It was again seen at Tottenham and Wood Green, where it was visible for about three seconds. Again it was seen in parts of Hertfordshire and Essex. At (Tharsted) it illuminated the sky like a flashlight. Travelling north, it passed over Norfolk, and was seen at Sandringham, Hunstanton, and King's Lynn. A correspondent from the latter place says the meteor had a most peculiar effect, as it travelled in an upward direction from south to east, and was extremely beautiful, several colours being marked, while it left a long and fiery trail of singular formation. The phenomenon was also observed at Richmond and High Wycombe.

1902 November 15 (Sat) Sydney Morning Herald, p. 11.

A FIREBALL AT PARRAMATTA. /
The fireballs about which so much has been heard during the past few days, do not seem to have been entirely confined to Victoria, and word comes from Parramatta that one of these electrical bolts has visited the old town. The scene of the fireball was Harris Park. It appears that during the dust and heat of Thursday Mr. Bruggman was in his garden when he felt a few drops of rain fall. He was about to hasten indoors when a fireball, apparently close over head, suddenly exploded. Mr. Bruggman, who was rendered temporarily unconscious by the shock, was carried into the house, when it was found that he was partially paralyzed. In relating the occurrence he states that after the explosion sparks of fire fell all around him. It is expected that it will be some weeks before Mr. Bruggmann regains the use of his limbs.

1903 September 2 (Wed) Indianapolis Morning Star, p. 4. (cont'd)

A PREHISTORIC MONSTER SEEN / Half Bird and Half Pentile Found in Southern Portion of Salt Lake. / HUNTERS SAY IT CARRIED OFF LARGE HORSE IN JAWS / Strange Story of Two Hunters Reads Like Fairy Tale Told for Truth. / (BY STAR SPECIAL SERVICE.)

SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 1.--A terrible, nameless, unclassified creature of the animal world is exciting the curiosity, wonder and fear of occasional visitors to Scansbury Island, in the southern portion of Great Salt Lake.

This monster, for it can be called nothing else, has lately, it is said, been seen by several persons, but the best account of its characteristics and movements is given by Martin Gilbert and John Barry, two hunters, who this week returned from an expedition over the island, in the course of which they studied the habits of this hitherto unheard-of creature for three days.

The monster, which appears to be almost equally at home in the air, on the beach, or submerged in the briny waters of Salt Lake, is probably the sole survivor of a prehistoric species. It is doubtless the last remnant of a family whose other members, dead ages since, have left the testimony of their existence in the primeval rocks and no strata.

Arranging in concise form the description of this incredible relic of the animal world, from the accounts given by those who have observed it at a close range, it seems in plain, unscientific language a combination of fish, alligator and bat.

In size it is simply tremendous. Gilbert places its length at fifty feet, while Barry, who is an amateur scientist, says that an examination of its tracks demonstrates that the monster must be at least sixty-five feet from head to tail.

The head is like that of an alligator, the eyes fiercely glowing, the jaws capable of opening a distance of ten feet from the top of the upper to the lower, are provided with a fearful array of sharp saw-edged teeth, the body, so far as observation goes, is incased with heavy, horny scales. As to this Gilbert and Barry are not positive, as the constant diving of the beast, if such it may be called, into the stormy waves of the lake has incrustated it with a thick coating of salt, which, like near the winds, completely hides the body.

It is due to this unusual phenomenon that the hunters obtained their first sight of the monster. According to their account, they first spotted it at a distance of between one and a half and two miles. The day was clear, the sun intensely bright. Gilbert's own words of the discovery are:

"We were walking westward from the east shore of the island about 9 o'clock in the morning when suddenly to the northwest there appeared a thing, I don't know what to call it; it looked to me like a brilliant rainbow folded into a compact mass, moving rapidly through the air.

"In three or four minutes the monster's position was such that it no longer reflected the sunlight directly toward us, and we could then discern the outline of the form. Its wings were batlike, stretching out over a great expanse, I should say at least 100 feet from tip to tip. The tail was proportionately short, and resembled that of a huge fish. We were not close enough at this time to tell much about the head, only we saw that the jaws were very long. In shape the head was like that of a crocodile.

"We watched it disappear in the gathering gloom of night, but were for a long time paralyzed with fear, not knowing when it might return. It was probably an hour later when it did come back.

"We heard the swish of the mighty wings before it could be seen, but as it drew nearer, by the light of the young moon in the west, we saw that it carried in its great jaws a large horse, which, I suppose, it had swooped down upon while feeding. The horse was badly crushed and mangled.

"The monster carried its burden into the cave, and we could hear the crunching of its jaws and the cracking of the horse's bones as the beast devoured its victim. After an hour or so all was still, and we then slipped quietly away in the darkness and returned to our camp on the eastern shore of the island."

1903 September 1. (Sun Revu) Indianapolis Star, p. 1.

SAY THEY SAW PLAIN AIRSHIP / Strange Craft Passed Over Stratford, Near Irvington, at 5 o'clock Last Evening. / Chickens Cackled when the Machine Appeared / Viewed with Field Glasses by L.A. Perkins, James Agnew and Others. /

People living in Stratford, just outside Irvington, and residents in the southeastern part of Indianapolis are positive they saw an airship pass over Stratford about 5 o'clock last evening.

The strange craft appeared at a high elevation sailing from the northwest, according to those who saw it, and after making almost a complete circle over Stratford, turned toward the east as if following the course of the XXXIII National road.

L.A. Perkins, president of the Indiana Federation of Labor, and Mrs. Perkins watched it through field glasses. Their attention was called to the machine by James Agnew their next door neighbor. His chickens had begun to cackle when the machine appeared overhead. Several other people in the neighborhood watched the airship until it disappeared. All agreed that it was far too large to be a bird and shaped too much like a cigar to be a balloon.

It is described as having a cigar-shaped body, but pointed in front and cut off short in the rear. This body, according to estimates was about thirty feet long. Above it was a canopy protecting the center of the craft which contained the machinery.

250

Two figures were seen in the center under the canopy. They could be seen by the aid of a field glass to be moving backward and forward slowly and rhythmically as if they were operating the machinery.

No propeller was distinguished by those who say they watched the airship closely, but the general description only vary slightly.

The Star last night communicated by telephone with practically every village and town surrounding Indianapolis, but no one else seemed to know anything of the strange creature of the air. The Langley airship is reported safe in its moorings (sic) and as far from flying as ever.

1903 September 15 (Tues) Indianapolis Star, p. 10.

AIRSHIP MYSTERY HAS BEEN SOLVED / Made of Barrel Hopps and Tissue Paper and Weighs Thirty-Three Ounces.

The Stratford airship mystery has been solved.

The strange craft was seen by people in Irvington, Stratford and Tuedo Sunday afternoon, made a landing in a cornfield opposite the home of Sam Manning, Michigan road street and Emerson avenue.

Fully fifty men and boys "saw it first" and considered it their own. Finally Leonard and Edward Manning, boys of 3 and 19 years old, took the train home.

Several hours were spent making repairs, and the machine will be ready for use again in a short time.

It is about thirteen feet long, made of numerous pieces of tissue paper, representing all the colors of the rainbow and some others.

In shape it is exactly like a submarine torpedo boat, even to the turret on the top. The total weight, including the wire framework to hold a piece of cotton saturated with alcohol, is 33 ounces.

1904 June 29 (Wed) Goshen Daily Democrat, p. 6.

The "Thunder-Stone." / Missiles from Heaven But Seldom Seen in Recent Years.

"The all-dreaded thunder-stone has been so seldom seen of late years that it has come to be regarded by the vulgar as almost legendary but the people of Bristol had reason one day lately to know its reality says Country Life [Engl.].

During a very severe thunder storm some masons at work on a scaffolding at Horfield state that they saw a thunderbolt coming toward them from the direction of South Mead. One of them lost his balance, and only managed to save himself from falling by clinging to a plank. The others had to hold on to whatever was handy.

They describe what they saw as looking like a dazzling ball of fire larger than a football. One of the men says: "It cleared our building but struck a neighboring chimney, but what because of it I cannot say." An utterly demolished chimney stack remains to testify to his veracity.

The thunderbolt has not been seen, but it is well known that these missiles usually come in contact with the earth at such velocity that they bury themselves.

1904 August 12 (Fri) Reno (Nev.) Evening Gazette, p. 5.

Somebody Was A Seein' Things, Sure

There's a fly reporter on a morning contemporary that should have his eyes tested.

Something is the matter with him.

Or else the universe is out of joint.

While on his rounds last night he saw a bright star, so he writes, in the east, that appeared to be worried about something. For a moment it would behave like any ordinary, well-bred occupant of the heavens, then it would suddenly dance about and threaten to upset half the planetary system. Others stars would take fright at its queer performance and in less time than it would take to say scat there would be a galaxy of excited orbs scooting about, bumping into each other and converting the eastern section of the solar system into a gigantic fourth of July display.

The people on the streets became alarmed. Old men from Kansas began to hunt cellars and several sporty rounders made up their minds to visit a Keeley institute at once. [alcoholics' cure.]

Men who had explored deeply the mysteries of the heavens were telegraphed the news, but before they could locate the disturbance it all stopped.

Somebody must have knocked his pipe from his hand or else Morpheus claimed him for his own. At least, just as suddenly as they began this war dance the night watcher of the heavens settled down into peace and quiet and not a star was seen to dance again, nor a planet to play leap frog with his neighbor.

This afternoon at Lick Observatory a careful diagnosis of the heavens was made and all appeared to be serene. The star that started the jamboree was not to be found and no damage seems to have been wrought by the strange performance.

Oh what a night,

Oh what a night,

Deliver us, O Lord,

From another such fright.

1904 August 14 (Sun) (Carson City, Nev.) Morning Appeal, p. 3.

THE RED STAR / It Continues to Puzzle Our Contemporaries.

For some days past people in the western portion of Nevada have noticed a strange red star which does not appear to be classified by the astronomers.

The orb is in the milky way between the horizon and the zenith, and has the appearance of a bright planet. It will appear with a suddenness that illuminates the heavens and then gradually recedes in brightness until it entirely disappears.

The star appears to be traveling toward the south and its form varies, sometimes having the appearance of a winged wheel. The strange phenomenon would perhaps be explicated with the statement that it is a balloon, were it not for the fact that from Winnemucca, Wadsworth, Virginia City and other points the same stories have been received by wire. They all agree in one particular, that the star appears and disappears at intervals of from one to five minutes. Added to this is the fact that seldom before have falling stars been seen so numerous. They have been falling in constant showers all evening. This is also accompanied by sweet lightning.

At first this star was supposed to exist in the imagination of some of the Reno editors who confused it with the red light district of Reno, but it seems now to have effected (sic) the scribes of other localities.

Astronomer Friend possibly can solve the mystery. He says it is a joke. 1904 August 25 (Sat) Indianapolis Star, p. 1.

STRANGE STAR IN HEAVENS. / Phenomenon Seen in Nevada Illuminates Sky, Then Disappears.

RENO, Nev., Aug. 19.--(Special.)--A strange star in the east has been the cause of much interest throughout Nevada. The orb is midway between the horizon and zenith, and has the appearance of a bright planet. It will appear with a suddenness that illuminates the heavens and then gradually recede in brightness until it entirely disappears.

The star appears to be traveling toward the south, and its form varies, sometimes having the appearance of a winged wheel. The strange phenomenon would perhaps be explained with the statement that it is a balloon were it not for the fact that from Winnemucca, Wadsworth, Virginia and Carson the same stories have been received.

They all agree in one particular, that the star appears and disappears at intervals of from one to five minutes. Added to this is the fact that seldom before have falling stars been so numerous. They have been falling in constant showers. This is also accompanied with sweet lightning.

Sat June 11, 1904 p. 9--See a Mirage in Sky.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., June 10.--(Special.)--A mirage was seen between this city and Lagoda last Sunday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Goodbar and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Wingest, well-known people of this city, who were driving here from the country. They saw what appeared to be a lake studded with numerous isles and the strange phenomenon persisted just a few rods in front of them for nearly an hour.

1905 April 4 (Tues) Journal des Debats, p. 1.

Strange Phenomenon.--For the past several days, a luminous disc has appeared every evening above Cherbourg, between 8 and 10:30 p.m. This disc shows a [lens shape, enlargement] measuring 15 cm. in diameter, with a halo which can be evaluated at 75 cm. The projected light is direct, but it disappears at ~~xxx~~ certain intervals.

The Cherbourg special police have informed Vice Admiral Besson, the maritime prefect, of these facts. The ~~xxxx~~ chief commandant of the district is of the opinion that we find ourselves in the presence of experiments with signal lights made by an English torpedo-boat with the aid of a captive balloon. The experiments consist of measuring the range at which ~~xxxxx~~ a ship can make signals to the English coast. Whatever it may be, the maritime prefect has given instructions that torpedo boats which cruise at night and signal posts observe the ~~xxxx~~ signalling phenomenon with strictest attention.

These facts have likewise been called to the attention of the government. Wed. April 12, p. 2.

The Cherbourg Meteor.

The luminous disc which every night travels over the circle of the horizon of Cherbourg continues to be the topic of the times. Many diverse hypotheses have been given out to explain the presence and ~~xxxx~~ nature of the meteor. Some say Jupiter (at this moment invisible in our hemisphere), some a comet, etc. In fact no one knows anything.

There was announced the ~~xxxxx~~ forthcoming arrival of an American scientific mission desirous of studying this new cosmic phenomenon. That is fine; but it is regrettable that the Central Meteorological Bureau and the Paris Observatory cannot, [to their discredit], send, in several hours by railroad, some French scientists to make an inquiry.

1905, April 4 (Mon) Le Temps (Paris), p. 3a

LUMINOUS AERIAL PHENOMENON OBSERVED AT CHERBOURG.--Our Cherbourg correspondent sends us several indications on the subject of a rather curious aerial phenomenon observed in that region for some days past. [What is involved] is the regular appearance nearly every evening, above the town, of a luminous disc whose diameter measures, as well as can be estimated, 15 centimeters, with a halo of about 75 centimeters of diameter.

The marine administration, [when] informed of these matters, ~~xxxxx~~ believes that it is due perhaps to luminous signals sent out at sea by an English torpedo boat, by means of a captive balloon for example; the signal posts on the coast have received the order to keep watch on the phenomenon.

On the other hand we have asked the advice of M. Lucien Rudaux, director of the observatory of (Douvillle), near Granville (Manche), and having consequently special experience with that celestial region [i.e., with the sky in that region], M. Rudaux does not think that the phenomenon "can be astronomical"; it corresponds to nothing similar observed up to the present by [any astronomical station or other]. The dimension indicated for the luminous disc [is problematic]. We know--and it is a fact--that the disc of the moon, observed at 57 centimeters from the eye presents a disc of a half-centimeter, being that of a wafer. The Cherbourg Star--if it is indeed a star--has its 15 centimeters of diameter, thus making it enormous and wonderful by comparison, and the hypothesis of a captive balloon is more believable.

It is equally inviting to set aside the hypothesis of a bolide, because this bolide could not return to the horizon several days in a row, likewise [the hypothesis] that it is the comet recently announced by the Nice observatory in the constellation Orion, because that comet is of the 12th magnitude, and when it passes over our northern regions it will not be visible to the naked eye.

1905 April 11 (Mon.) Le Figaro, p. 4.

In the Departments / The Cherbourg Star.

Cherbourg.--An officer, charged by the maritime prefect to take up the observations of a strange star which for several days past has intrigued Cherbourg people, believes it is possible to show that it is Jupiter. The inexactitude of this [assignment] has been plainly established. One is tempted to believe that it is a phenomenon which ~~xxxx~~ astronomers have not yet had to study.

Th. April 13, p. 4. In the Departments. / The Cherbourg Star (continued).

Cherbourg.--Commandant Kalloch de Kerillis, of the battleship Chasseloup Laubat, relates the following note:

The position of the luminous body appeared to ~~xx~~ officers of the Chasseloup Laubat, who observed it, too distant from that which would have been occupied by Venus at that hour; moreover neither did the nucleus correspond in appearance to the crescent form of that planet; but, given the inferior conditions of observations in which the ship had on the sea, they do not believe it possible to draw a firm conclusion. Moreover, they add, if it were a celestial body it would have been seen by the observatories, whose opinion on the question already has been given.

Journal des Debats, April 14, p. 3. The Cherbourg Meteor.

It is known that the maritime prefect of Cherbourg has charged ship's captain Kalloch de Kerillis to examine the much-commented-on meteorological phenomenon. That officer related to newspapers a note in which he reveals that he and his colleagues hesitate to recognize the planet Venus in the luminous body which intrigues the Cherbourg people and savants ~~xxxxx~~ alike.

1905, April 12 (Tues) Le Temps (Paris), p. 3.

THE LUMINOUS PHENOMENON AT CHERBOURG.--[It has been announced] from Cherbourg that orders have been given to ships [maneuvering] at sea to try to observe in a precise fashion the sort of mysterious and brilliant star appearing every evening above the town. Several observers have [claimed] to see there the planet Jupiter, but that [appears to be altogether unlikely from an astronomical standpoint]. [Now] it is necessary to wait for new investigations [proceeding] from the astronomers.

1905 April 13 (Wed) Le Temps, p. 37

(card 1)

THE LUMINOUS PHENOMENON AT CHERBOURG.--The luminous phenomenon at Cherbourg continues to attract attention and pique the curiosity. Diverse hypotheses have [crumbled]. The possibility of experiments made at sea with a luminous captive balloon is spoken of once again. The astronomical hypothesis still claims partisan savants. We have asked the advice on this subject of master [Dr.] Camille Flammarion. Here is what he would have us say:

It is truly strange that during the six days when they observed with amazement that "mysterious light," the people of Cherbourg have not compared [it] to Venus, which [is now set in the heavens with a bright and fiery luster.] This absence of comparison makes me think that they simply all take the "Shepherd's Star" for a "new star," forgetful of Homer, Vergil, Dante, Lamartine, and Musset. It is true that Lamartine himself, in his fine poem "Evening," committed a heresy of another kind in making Venus rise in the evening from the horizon where she should set.

Anything whatever, added M. Camille Flammarion, there is neither another star, planet or comet in this region of the sky except for Venus; moreover this cannot be a meteorological phenomenon.

Our Cherbourg correspondent gives us a conclusion similar to that of M. Flammarion. He confirms what we have already reported here, that is to say, that the maritime prefect of Cherbourg has prescribed [requested, ordered] the commander of the Chasseloup-Laubat to observe the luminous point during the twenty-four hour trial at sea of his ship. The commandant, in his reply addressed to the prefect, was of the opinion [that he found himself in the presence of] Venus or Jupiter. Our correspondent remarks, moreover, that this hypothesis will soon have astronomical confirmation, if such is the correct hypothesis because each day now Venus sets a little sooner: on April 15 she sets at 20 hr. 54, or 8:54 p.m.

If what people take for a wonder [turns out] to be obedient to scientific laws, what they find [could well be] Venus.

[Out of] the suppositions made to establish a sort of provisionally complete history of the wonder, we indicate [several] which have been tried: It is really a developing comet, or a halo coming from a deviation of the solar image, or perhaps a luminous phenomenon of the magnetic type. We have seen that none of these suppositions [prove] satisfactory to the astronomers, nor answer to what earlier astronomical observations have indicated.

[With all due caution], then, we report that people are said to have glimpsed above Tunis, about midnight of 10-11 April, a luminous globe like the one at Cherbourg: it was visible only for a span of several minutes and disappeared at the edge of the sea, leaving behind itself a luminous train. In the latter case it seems likely that what is involved is a lollie of altogether ordinary appearance. At the Paris Observatory no one regards the phenomenon as being of the astronomical type, and pending later news, no one there attaches any importance to it.

(26) last and which perhaps (accounts for) the Cherbourg phenomenon abruptly ceased.

The Bourges Observatory, by reason of its geographic position, cannot, however, undertake any observation of what happens in the sky above the Manche (English Channel) department. The only observatory relatively well placed to undertake observations of this type is that at Donville, near Granville, directed by M. Lucien Fudaux: it is a private establishment which operates with its own resources. Many of the marine (naval?) observatories are charged (ordere) only with what concerns navigations and the regulation of chronometers and their stock of astronomical implements is very limited.

Strange Light in the Sky.

...Did anyone see a strange light in the southern heavens about 10 o'clock on the evening of March 27? Several people in the neighborhood of Cardiff saw an appearance like a vertical beam of light, which was not like (they say) to a searchlight or any such cause! Unfortunately, I did not see the phenomenon myself: perhaps some of your readers may have been more fortunate. It was on the southeast horizon as seen from Cardiff. Alienishen. Arthur Mee.

April 28 p. 264. Strange Light in the Sky.

[364.]—I am sorry I did not see the light referred to by Mr. Arthur Mee (letter 311) p. 220 of the 14th, but it brings to mind what I saw twelve months back. "Sorry I did not keep the date." Two shafts of light, one very bright, the other fainter, which I took to be a reflection of the brighter one. I had about half a mile to walk to my house, and on watching it it seemed to be travelling away from the earth, disappearing from view in about forty minutes from my first seeing it. The fainter one disappeared first, and the other about fifteen minutes later. It was well up in the heavens and in a southeasterly direction at the time of my first seeing it, about 9.00 p.m.; time of disappearance about 10.10 p.m. I felt convinced that no light from the earth could produce such a sight. I was eager to get "Ours" (H.M.) on the following Friday to see if there was any mention of it but I saw nothing. Neither did I in the local papers, and as far as I could ascertain, there were very few people who did see it. What struck me was that the time and position are about the same as Mr. Mee stated. / George A. Gray. / K Cransley Waterworks, Kettering.

May 5. p. 257. Strange Lights.

[384.]—I beg to thank Mr. Gray for his letter (364). I have long had a suspicion that outbursts of light are at times to be seen that are not aurorae, &c, and yet have no apparent terrestrial cause. People write to me from time to time about these things from districts where there can be no possibility of furnace glare, &c, as a cause. What is the explanation? Needless to say, I do not refer to the "Revival" lights. E / Cardiff. Arthur Mee.

1905 April 14 (Th.) Le Temps, p.

In the last hour our Chergourg correspondent, informing us that the officers of the Chasseloup-Laubat, after having coordinated their observations were unable to dismiss from consideration entirely that a comet is involved; but because of imperfect conditions by the sea where these observations are found, they do not believe they have been able to draw a firm and certain conclusion. However, if it is in fact a comet, the astronomical observatories (could not be late in establishing it). Up to the present none of them have mentioned the probability of a phenomenon of this type in that region of the sky.

1905 April 15 (Sat.) Le Figaro, p. 4. In the Departments.

Another Star.

Nantes. The lighthouse keepers at La Banche have glimpsed in the night between (April 11 and 12, a luminous body, which they supposed to be a balloon seeking to land. They prepared to make signals to (those aboard) a wreck, the steamer Lucien stranded not far from there in order to arouse them, but the object disappeared in the direction of Exzaxx Croisic. These courageous people were astounded when the steamer Archimede came (bringing) supplies, brought them newspapers informing them of the observations made at Cherbourg.

Mon. April 17, p. 4. The Star.

Perpignan.—At Palada, near Amelie-les-Bains, a luminous ball hovered over the village last night, from 10 o'clock till midnight.

1905 April 16 (Sun) Indianapolis Sunday Star, p. 3.

Americans to Study Strange Luminous Body. / It Appears Nightly Off Cherbourg and Has Baffled French Scientists' Investigation. / [By Star Special Service.]

CHERBOURG, France, April 15.—An American scientific mission is coming to Cherbourg, it is reported, to investigate the curious phenomenon of a luminous body which appears nightly far seaward off this port. French astronomers have investigated without result. The phenomenon causes much local excitement.

The light first appeared on the evening of April 3 as an enormous luminous globe. After passing slowly over the city at a great height seemingly it vanished at 11 o'clock.

Opinion was divided as to whether the light was on a balloon or was a meteorological phenomenon.

The maritime prefect brought searchlights into use, but their rays did not penetrate to the height where the light shone. Several military officers said they saw the light change in color from a red to green.

April 16 p. 9.—Star May Cause a Duel. / New Astronomic Wonder / Seafaring Men Say the Light Is a Brand New Luminary and Observatory Director Says It Is Venus. / [By Star Special Service.]

PARIS, April 15.—The astronomic wonder at Cherbourg continues to interest the inhabitants and star gazers, and the mystery of the light is still unsolved. General amusement is created by the fact that the director of the observatory at Cherbourg's Arsenal is in flat contradiction to the officers of the French man-of-war Chasseloupha Laubat, the latter asserting that it is a new star, and the former that it is Venus.

If the discussion be much prolonged it will probably be settled only by a duel. Camille Flammarion thinks it must be Venus and says the Captain of the meanest fishing boat ought to be able to say whether it is Venus or not by looking at his almanac.

A similar luminous phenomenon is now reported from Tunis, and is said to blink and to last for two minutes about midnight and then to disappear in the sea.

May 4, 1905 (Th) Indianapolis Morning Star, p. 1.

Logansport Sees a Light; Thinks It May Be Comet. Peculiar Luminous Body Appears in the Heavens and is Watched by Scores. / [By Star Special Service.]

LOGANSPORT, Ind., May 3.—Scores of people noted a peculiar light in the southeast heavens last evening and stood for hours watching it. Charles E. Johnson, Pacific Express route agent, was the first to discover its peculiarities. He was unable to account for them unless on the hypothesis that it was an airship.

He called up police headquarters, and policemen, reporters and others formed a crowd that obstructed the street as they stared at the sky. The light alternately appeared bright and dim, appearing to move sideways and then recede until it wholly disappeared, to return later with increasing brilliancy. It was first noted at 8 o'clock and watched until midnight, when it faded. Local astronomers say no comets are visible at this season.

1905 May 28 (Sun) Indianapolis Star, p. 24

Flying Snake in King George. / Reptile with Wings That Fed on Birds, Killed in Virginia. / [By Star Special Service.]

COMORN, Va., May 27.—A most uncommon and remarkable "flying

LUMINOUS PHENOMENON AT CHERBOURG.

—The commander of the armored cruiser or battleship Chasseloup-Laubat, whose report to the maritime prefect on the luminous phenomenon at Cherbourg we have mentioned here, concludes [that what is actually involved is actually] a celestial body. Is it the planet Venus? The officers of the Chasseloup-Laubat do not want to affirm it a priori because the position of the luminous body (is somewhat far away) from that which the planet is due to occupy at the hour when it has been observed; besides, the "nucleus" does not appear to correspond with the crescent form of that planet. It is well to mention that these baffling luminous appearances can occur most especially with Venus, which as an astronomical object has been baffling in many circumstances (aspects). Her brightness is most particular; it is most admirable when she stands at greatest elongation from the sun and sets three hours later than the sun.

That planet probably rotates in a year of 224 days 16 hours 49 minutes, at a distance of 108 million kilometers from the sun, when the corresponding distance for the earth is 149 million. Surrounded by a very dense and thick atmosphere, which increases the difficulties of observation, Venus can be called, after the expression of Camille Flammarion, "the twin sister of the earth." But one can believe that the existence of living beings there is still less agreeable than on our planet; in effect, this "vessel of space [space ship]" is constantly surrounded by clouds and storms; one cannot distinguish there any geographic feature for certain; astronomers ask themselves now and again if it really turns on its axis, when the rotation of Mars and Jupiter can be demonstrated by a single night of observation in a way which appears incontestable. Perhaps this very strange world has perpetual day on one side and perpetual night on the other. Taking the volume of the earth for unity, that of Venus amounts to .999.

This planet is so brilliant that, as related by Arago, it can be seen occasionally in broad daylight with the naked eye; since earliest antiquity it has been observed, and was for the people a great subject (cause) for uneasiness. This brightness can be explained, however, (on the grounds that by the quantity of light and heat received at the surface of the earth being represented by one, the same) becomes (by calculation), 1.91 at the surface of Venus. This capricious planet also possesses what is called the phenomenon of the "secondary light," which is to say that sometimes she has been seen as if fully illuminated, (even in those parts which, as seen from the earth, were not illuminated by the rays of the sun.) One (has recourse), therefore, (to) the hypothesis, related by Arago, after Herschel, (that she) becomes under certain circumstances phosphorescent. One may also think that what is involved is perhaps an "ashen light" similar to that of the moon and which has its cause in the light reflected by the earth (or in this case,) by Mercury toward Venus. Then perhaps she has intense auroras borealis. Whatever the cause, one can expect many astronomical surprises in observing this symbolic planet.

These surprises can be accentuated for the moment by the fact that, according to what is reported by Abbé Moreux, director of the Bourges observatory, solar activity has recorded starting on February

(card 1)

"snake" that was captured and killed at "Berry plain," the home of John S. Dickinson, in this city, a few days ago, has attracted wide attention and excited no little interest. The curious reptile was first noticed flying about in the air with several feet of its horrid snake-ship dangling around, presenting the appearance, maybe, of an ordinary snake attached to a strange looking bird.

So far as is known, it never once descended to the earth and crawled on the ground after the manner of snakes, but it would occasionally light in trees and catch such birds as best suited its appetite and fancy.

It was finally killed and measured, and proved to be five feet long and about one inch in diameter of body. It had perfect wings of good size, and these were covered with feathers. "Berry plain," where the curious thing made its unceremonious advent and met its untimely end, is one of the finest plantations and homesteads in King George, and being situated on the banks of the Rappahannock, it is conjectured by some that the "flying snake" may have come from an impenetrable marsh of the river or some neighboring creek.

But this theory is not accepted by many, for, as far as can be learned, nothing bearing the slightest similarity to this serpent or reptile, or whatever it is, was ever before seen or heard of anywhere in this section of the country. Such a thing was hardly ever dreamed of by a certain professor of airship fame.

1905, July 23 (Sun) Indianapolis Star, p. 8.

Strange Light in Skies / Georgians Are Perplexed / Celestial Phenomenon Appears at Early Morn as a Bright Star Just Above the Horizon. / [By Star Special Service.]

SYLVANIA, Ga., July 22.--R. R. Mock of Sylvania and Mr. Vandeville of Atlanta were witnesses of a very peculiar and startling celestial phenomenon. They were driving in from a country trip about ten miles above Sylvania when just before 11 o'clock in the morning, they perceived a bright light coming up above the horizon in the east as if it were a very large star.

The waning moon was then some distance up in the sky. Mr. Mock remarked that it was the largest star he had ever seen and his companion laughed and said that it was the top of a tree on fire some distance away. Directly, however, the strange light rose higher and they both saw then that it was in the sky and not of the earth, it appeared to the two men about the shape and size of an old field stump on fire and the light would flash out on each side occasionally and then go back.

Gradually it rose higher, apparently at about the same rate as the other heavenly bodies, for they noticed that it remained at about the same distance from the moon all the time. At times it looked like a large lantern hung in the heavens and assumed different shapes until at last it became round like a full moon and as large and bright.

Both the gentlemen declare that the light from the strange body lighted up all the trees in the woods through which they were driving. They watched it intently until they arrived at Sylvania, about 3 o'clock in the morning, when they aroused a number of the citizens, who got up and looked at it; it then appeared to be several times as large as the largest star and was some distance up in the sky.

The strange visitor was watched intently until approaching day obscured its light and shut it out from sight.

1905 August 5 (Sat.) Imperial (Calif.) Press, p. 4 (card 1)

AERIAL NAVIGATION IN IMPERIAL VALLEY / Gigantic Airship Seen Passing Over Our Valley by a Number of Well-Known Citizens. /

Imperial Valley was visited last Thursday morning by a flying machine. Mr. John A. Jackson, a prosperous farmer living in the Silsbee neighborhood was driving a herd of fat hogs from his ranch to Imperial, and was one of the first men, so far heard from, who saw the aerial visitor. In order to take advantage of the cool morning for the comfort of his hogs, Mr. Jackson left home with them about midnight. About half past 1 o'clock when near the Wilsie place on the Main canal, four miles southwest from town, Mr. Jackson's attention was suddenly attracted by a very bright light being flashed on and around him, lighting up the midnight darkness with dazzling splendor.

For an instant he was well-nigh blinded by its brightness, and the hogs gave a few "booh! booh!" and bolted for the tall weeds. In another instant the light was gone and Mr. Jackson, on looking up saw that it was nothing less than the searchlight of an airship that had been thrown on him.

The machine, which seemed to be at least a hundred feet long, and propelled by immense wings, was almost directly over him, and about 300 or 400 feet above the ground. It carried so much light and was going so fast that it was hard to determine positively how it was built, but Mr. Jackson could distinctly hear the whirr of the machinery with which it was driven and is positive there was no balloon or gas chamber to hold it up. It moved with an undulating motion, apparently was under absolute control, and was going in a northeasterly direction, and judging from the time it took to get out of sight Mr. Jackson thinks it was flying at a rate of at least thirty miles an hour.

As soon as possible Mr. Jackson called up Mr. Wilsie, and he got a good sight of the machine and could witness the operation of the searchlight with which it was provided. Both Mr. Jackson and Mr. Wilsie agree that it was a most powerful light, and that the operator was making free use of it, flashing it about in all directions, but principally within a radius of a mile or two wide on each side of its path through the heavens. The course taken by the airship in crossing our Valley would cause it to pass a mile or two north of Silsbee and about the same distance south of Imperial.

The hour at which the trip was made was one at which our people are stirring the least; no one unless it be a belated irrigator or a man engaged as Mr. Jackson was, being abroad at that hour. However, as practically all our people sleep out doors at this season of the year, there was doubtless a considerable number who were awakened by the searchlight and saw the aerial visitor. One of these was Postmaster Allatt of Imperial. He states that about half past one Thursday morning he was awakened by a sudden flash of light, which distinctly lighted up the walls of the buildings and the ground around where he was sleeping. His first thought was fire, and he sprang up to investigate. Instantly the light was gone, and after a few moments looking about he concluded it was some one passing along the street with a lantern had thrown the light on him unintentionally. Having satisfied himself there was no fire he was about getting into bed again when he noticed what he took to be an immense bright star in the heavens. As Mr. Allatt himself says "You know a man's mind don't do its best work when he is startled out of a deep sleep," so he failed to remember the astronomical fact that there is no star of exceeding great brilliancy in the eastern heavens at this season of the year at 1:30 a.m. He therefore turned over and went to sleep and thought no more of it till Mr. Jackson arrived in town at an early hour and told of the sight he had witnessed. Then Mr. Allatt realized that it was the flash of the searchlight from one of the most wonderful inventions the world ever witnessed, that had roused him from his slumbers, and that what he supposed was a bright star in the eastern heavens was nothing less than a wonderful airship, perhaps the most successful ever launched, and which, on its flight through the air, made an early morning visit to Imperial Valley.

The men whom Mr. Jackson got to help him gather up his hogs and bring them in to town after their scare by the airship, also distinctly saw the machine and witnessed its movements. All who saw it agree that it was a flying machine and not a dirigible balloon.

It was kept up and propelled by immense wings and seemed to be steered by some kind of arrangement which extended straight above the machine and worked back and forth, giving it an undulating motion. Mr. A. J. Morey, whose farm joins Mr. Wilsie's, also saw the airship as it passed almost directly over his house. All who saw it are unanimous in stating that it was certainly being operated successfully, and that it carried a very powerful searchlight, as well as a number of smaller lights on the body of the machine.

Much interest is displayed by our people concerning this aerial passer-by, and it is hoped it will stop on its return trip and give us all a chance to see the machine and meet the operators. If it is some newly perfected one out for a trial trip we commend their judgment in selecting our Valley for part of their path, and hope they will soon establish a line to run regularly from this Valley to San Diego.

The development of aerial navigation has been carried forward with such rapidity within the past two years, that the successful flying machine, the one that will make travelling through the air a commercial possibility, and a safe and comfortable method, can be expected to reach perfection at any time. It is the next great invention and is now due.

Nearly two hundred models of machines for navigating the air were exhibited at the World's Fair at St. Louis last year, and there are hundreds, perhaps thousands more that inventors were working on that were not exhibited there. Successful flights are recorded daily in the great papers, the correct principle is well known, and it has been believed for some time that it was only a question of experimentation to determine the proper material and correct adjustment to make aerial travelling safe and popular. The flying machine seen passing over our Valley appears to combine all the requisites of success.

12, J. Silsbee. / Silsbee people who were abroad at an early hour last Thursday morning were treated to a good view of a genuine airship which passed over, sailing in an easterly direction. The ship appeared to be about 100 feet long, was operated with wings and carried a powerful searchlight. It was seen by a number of people.

1905 August 31 (Th) Indianapolis Star, p. 12.

LIGHTENING'S PRANKS / A Farmer's Weird Tale. / Insists Fire Balls Chased Dogs Around Barn--Animals Disappeared While Men Were Unconscious, but Finally Returned. / [By Star Special Service.]

OAKDALE, L. I., Aug. 30.--Of all the remarkable tales of thunder and lightning told on Long Island since the first storm startled the aboriginal inhabitants, that related by the farm and stock hands on the Bourne place here is the most wonderful. It is not required that the story as related be accepted without being questioned; indeed, it is not expected that it will escape being taken with the usual grain of salt--perhaps several.

The story, which several employees on Commodore Bourne's Indian Neck estate vouch for, is in effect, that last night, while a group of men were gathered in the big barn to escape a wetting, several big balls of fire dashed in through the open doors.

A half dozen valuable dogs--some of them pedigreed animals--lay on the barn floor asleep. They were aroused when the fiery spheres made their appearance, and at once put chase to the glowing circles. Round and round the barn went the balls, hotly pursued by the dogs. The farm hands watched the canine-electric circus eagerly, and were preparing to place small wagers on either dogs or fire balls as winners when there came a succession of loud reports and the men were thrown down in a confused heap on the floor. The fire balls had exploded and the men were much shocked.

When they regained full possession of their faculties the men looked for the dogs but not a trace of them was to be seen; they had vanished completely.

A careful search of the nearby portions of the big Bourne estate did not result in locating the valuable canines, and the men were dismay do. They could not find any trace of the "disappearance." They were not dead. They were blown into the traditional "withereens" by the wind. The question that confronted them was, "Where are they?"

The search was renewed, but without success, and late at night, after the clouds rolled by and a full moon appeared, the anxious employes were out hunting for the dogs, but no canines answered their calls and whistles.

This morning, however, the dogs were about the place, apparently as well as usual, and the anxiety of the men was relieved.

The dogs, however, have not revealed their whereabouts during their absence, but merely wag their tails and fawn upon the men to show their joy at being home once more.

1905 November 10 (Fri) Indianapolis Star, p. 2.

WHALERS SEE A MIRAGE / Brilliantly Lighted City Appears to Them in Arctic Regions. / [By Star Special Service.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 9.--Mate Pease and the crew of the whaling bark, Gaymend report having seen a mirage of a city while cruising 75 miles west of Frisbylov Island in the Bering Sea.

There was shore line and rising above it were thousands of lights twinkling along a hundred streets. Here and there apparently at prominent corners were larger lights, and along the shore were myriad of lights showing the wharves.

The mate and his men knew this must be a mirage, and that for hundreds of miles beyond where these lights flared out was only an expanse of water. The mate called Capt. Fisher and he looked upon the scene and was bewildered. There was no accounting for the wonderful sight. This city seemed as real as San Francisco seems to a vessel anchored in the channel near Goat Island.

When daylight came the spectacle faded away and in all directions was only the heaving bosom of the sea, with no land in sight and no great city within thousands of miles.

1905 November 26 (Sun) Indianapolis Sunday Star, Magazine Section, p. 35.

Mystery of the White Robed Flying Woman Who Strangely Hovers Over a Town. (card 1)

Five times since the first day of June a woman, robed in white, with long clinging draperies, has flown over the town of Voltana, in northern Spain, and the people of that entire district of the Pyrenees are in a state of religious fervor and excitement, expecting each day to hear the blast of a bugle--or the call of a voice from the skies.

The astounding message of the fifth flight of the woman over the town has just been received at Barbastro, together with the statement that scores of persons standing on the mountainside, scores in the streets of the town, and many from their homes and their fields knelt where they were and watched the flight.

The woman--or whatever it is--came from the northward each time--from the direction of Algnotic Mt. Perdu--one of the highest peaks of the Pyrenees--and disappeared to the southwestward among the peaks of the Sierra de Guara.

There was no sign of any balloon or wings or other appliances--it was as if a woman garbed as an angel but without wings, floated over the town, slowly, unhurriedly--and three of the five times against a strong wind, blowing either from the south or the southwest.

News of this mystery of the Pyrenees has reached England through the report of an English mining expert in that region, who, although utterly unable to give any explanation of the seemingly supernatural phenomenon, declares stolidly that he is of the opinion that someone--or some organization (religious, he believes) is playing upon the superstitious people of the mountain region for purposes unknown, but how, or why, or by what means any trick could be played he does not state.

His investigations--according to his own admission--have shown that over 240 persons have seen--or claim to have seen--the mystic figure, to them the symbol of some great happening upon earth, float from north--evidently from some place on the southern summit of Mt. Perdu, come straight south over the village and disappear over the wooded crest of Terlusoo--a low peak south of the town in the Sierra de Guara. He, while utterly repudiating any idea of the supernatural in connection with the occurrence, admits that, beyond doubt, something did fly over the town and that the something appeared to be a woman wearing long, flowing white robes. He also declares that, as far as he can ascertain, there was no kite, balloon, or other means of sustaining any such figure to be seen in the horizon, and he admits, rather reluctantly and with some reservations, that the figure had none of the appearance of a kite in itself, and his first theory that the figure was a cunningly built kite, shaped in the form of a woman, was rather shaken by the fact that, on three occasions, it travelled directly in the teeth of the wind.

Volanta [?] is one of the most picturesque towns of the Pyrenees and is situated in the heart of Huesca Province--in the beautiful, heavily wooded foothills of the Pyrenees, which there begin to slope northward toward the skies, up and up, until the skies and mountains meet in a blur of hazy blues and browns at the summit of Mt. Perdu and Mt. Maladetta, two of the great barriers that divide the fashions of France from the picturesqueness of Spain. The people are poor, mostly ignorant, intensely religious, and ruled by the Church with a strong hand--a hand stronger than that of the banditti that ruled there only a few years ago.

The town contains perhaps 450 souls and is set picturesquely down among the hills at the side of a little stream that tumbles down from the rugged mountains into the fertile and lovely valley of the Cinca, a few miles away.

Thursday, June 1, was a saint's day in the picturesque little church on the hillside, just above the quaint little village, and most of the women of the town were there--and most of the men who were not in the fields or the little shops or driving the tinkling mule trains up toward the mines in the mountains. Father Mindre, the priest, was concluding the mass when Pedro Pobrado, a mule-driver, rushed into the church frightened almost out of his senses, and threw himself prostrate before the priest praying and imploring him to give absolution, declaring that the end of the world was coming and that the warning angel was flying through the sky.

The priest slowly raised the man, dismissed the congregation, and within a few moments perhaps 40 of them stood with the priest in the churchyard and gazed upward toward the north.

Perhaps three fourths of a mile in the air the figure of a woman garbed in white was sailing, or flying, or floating slowly toward the south. It came directly over the church. Beyond the flutter of the garments there was no sign of life or motion. The right hand seemed half raised while the left hung easily at the side.

In an instant after beholding the spectacle the priest and the congregation fell upon their knees in the churchyard and remained in the attitude of prayer until the figure disappeared in the southward.

Only a few persons outside of the congregation even claimed to have seen the figure that time, and it was whispered among the others that the saint whose day they were observing had manifested herself to the congregation. It was noticeable, also, according to the Englishman, that the number of those who attended confession in the next week increased amazingly.

The entry of the woman who floated above the town spread among the entire mountain district, and there were great and generous gifts at the shrine of the saint.

On Friday June 16, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, herdsmen from the hills south of town came running in terror toward Voltana, announcing that they had seen the woman in the sky to the northward approaching leisurely and only a few hundred feet above the ground. Almost before the herdsmen and mule drivers, panic stricken, reached the town the figure appeared above the trees on the hills to the north and floated gracefully southward, turning southeast when over the town, and disappeared.

The second appearance threw the entire district into a frenzy of excitement. Wild, weird tales were told of the woman and her appearance. Some vowed that she carried a flaming sword aloft, others declared that she held a cross in her hands, others that they saw her lips move in prayer, and some vowed that she carried close to her breast the form of an infant.

These are declared to be but the pictures drawn by excited imaginations of the superstitious and ignorant, and the best informed declare that there was no motion beyond the flapping of garments.

Many of those who swear that they saw the additional phenomena are known to have remained with their faces to the ground during the four or five minutes occupied by the passage of the figure over the town. One woman who saw the figure from the window of her cottage vows that she heard the sweetest song of all the world--an angel song--while the figure was passing over.

Three days later--on the Sabbath day, just before the darkness came--the figure passed over the town again. It was seen by not more than fifteen persons, but among them were two Jesuit missionaries, who made a careful observation of the figure, but, despite this, could add nothing to what already was known.

Word of the strange appearances and disappearances of the female had spread by that time to Huesca and Barbastro, and thence to Madrid even, and excited great wonder. Foreigners, especially English mining engineers and others, were incredulous and ascribed the entire "miracle" to the overheated imagination of the superstitious Spaniards of the mountain region.

On Tuesday morning, June 20, shortly after 7 o'clock, the figure again passed over the town, this time nearly a mile in the air and in the teeth of a high gale that was blowing from the southeast, off the Mediterranean, and this time the figure was seen plainly by at least two Englishmen, Ben Carniff and Ralph Allison, who were on a walking tour of the country. Carniff carried a pair of small field glasses, which he used to watch the movements of the figure. He admits that he was so astounded that he forgot his glasses until the figure had passed over him and was moving southwestward, but he says that through the glass it had every appearance of a woman's figure, and that he observed her feet, which seemed to be clad in some soft soleless sandal, protruding from the flowing draperies when they shifted with the wind.

The fourth appearance climaxed the excitement. Predictions of every kind were made by the frightened people, who declared, or most of them did, that the woman had come to warn the town of some great calamity which they believe impends.

Carniff and Allison, fearing to arouse enmity among the natives if they expressed their doubts as to the genuineness of the figure, determined to make an effort to solve the mystery. They had noted carefully the direction from which the figure had come, and Carniff, with his glass, had marked the spot where it seemed to descend among the trees.

For two days they searched to the northward among the southern slopes of Mt. Perdu and in the foothills, covering miles in each direction, but finding no trace of a starting point. Nor could they find any one within two miles of Voltana to the north who had seen the figure. They covered the ground carefully all the way, and, failing to find any clue, turned to the southward and searched among the foothills of Sierra de Guara, especially near the spot where the phantom--or whatever it is--disappeared. For three days they scoured the country around about, but without success.

GHOSTS AND BALLS OF FIRE. / Scare Residents of Shavertown Away from Haunted House. / [Star Special Service.]

MIDDLETON, N.Y., Dec. 23.--Residents of Shavertown, in Delaware County, are greatly excited over a haunted house in which ghosts hold nightly revel. The ghosts have not been seen as yet, but many persons declare that balls of fire rise from the ground and drift slowly into the house. Others say that lights have been seen about the house and ghosts and laughter have been heard. The house was once occupied by the late Levi D. Shaver.

Several parties have started out at night to enter the house and defy the ghosts, but have been scared away by the noises and the balls of fire.

1906 March 22 (Sun) Indianapolis Star, p. 33.

[Chinn, Ind. haunted by several ghosts: one, of a girl, disappears down well leaving flicker of light.]

Th April 12, 1906, p. 3.

SPOOKS AND BALLS OF FIRE. / Strange Things Seen on Chinn Farm in Warrick County.

Evansville, Ind., April 11.--A large party of men and boys from Dill, Ind., visited the old China farm in Warrick Co. for the purpose of seeing if the house on the place was haunted. They remained at the place for over an hour. They say they saw large balls of fire come from the old well, traveling to the house, fall through the roof and go back again to the well. It is also said flames appeared in the old graveyard. The form of a young woman was also seen to come from the old well and when approached by the men it disappeared again to the well and jumped in. There is said to be much excitement in the neighborhood. The party intends to return to investigate further.

1906 May 13 (Sun) Indianapolis Star, Mag. Sectn, p. 6. (card 1)

HAIRY GIANT IS A "HOWGLI" IN REAL LIFE

According to arrivals from Comox by the steamer City of Nanaimo, the residents of Valdez Island, near Comox, B.C., have been terrorized of late by visits from Vancouver Island's now famous "Howgli." A rancher from Valdez Island reported that the wild man of Vancouver Island is at present on Valdez, and by the description of the creature which he solemnly asserts he saw, including the corroboration of half a dozen others, the "Howgli" is undoubtedly the same as seen near Horne Lake two months ago.

A family named Pitcock, residing on Valdez, last week was frightened one night about 10 o'clock while sitting at supper by seeing a ghastly face looking through the window into the room. The face was covered with long black coarse hair, only a small portion of the skin being visible. Directly the creature saw he was noticed he uttered a diabolical scream, which was heard by ranchers nearly a mile away, and vanished.

A number of young farmers with rifles searched the vicinity the next day without success. Large prints of feet upon the soft earth of a flower bed under the window was the only sign of the monster who, according to those who have seen him, is nearly seven feet tall.

Twice during the next night the family heard a scream similar to that uttered by the wild man. All that day a careful watch was kept, but there were no signs of the "Howgli," although there were a number of footprints corresponding with those seen before, which were found along the creek that passed the Pitcock household.

The boys, however, determined to capture the individual that has created a panic among the female residents and the next night a dozen well-armed men concealed themselves near a stack of hay where the footprints of the "Howgli" were traceable. About 10:30 p.m. horrible yells were heard in the direction of the creek and after waiting for an hour some of the posse determined to go in that direction. They had gone up the stream about half a mile when the light of a lantern carried by the "Howgli" came into view. Hiding behind a tree the posse had a splendid chance to view this denizen of the woods. They describe him as very tall and powerfully built and with the exception of a few rags hanging from a belt at his waist he was entirely naked. His body was covered with long black hair and the face, which presented a hideous appearance, was identified as the same as that seen at the Peacock home the evening previous.

The men, after recovering from their fright, broke from cover, and one raised his rifle, but before he could find range the "Howgli," who had by this time discovered the farmers, threw himself into the icy waters and swam for the other side of the creek.

Nothing more was seen of him around the Pitcock residence, although two half-breeds of Alert Bay claim to have seen the same man a few days after.

1906 September 18 (Tues) Indianapolis Star, p. 4.

SHIP FOUNDERS IN AIR / Mysterious Vessel Afloat / Cigar-Shaped Object, Apparently Disabled, Passes Over Indianapolis. Is Seen by Thousands.

Swinging in long, graceful curves and continually turning round and round, a cigar-shaped object which had every appearance of an airship, passed over Indianapolis late Sunday afternoon and disappeared as mysteriously as it had come. The first sight of the unknown object was in Irvington, where it seemed to grow from a tiny speck in the distance into an airship which was apparently adrift and which could be controlled by neither rudder nor propeller.

Slowly the object moved toward the city and hundreds of persons watching its flight and wondering what it was and where it had come from. Speculations of a helpless airship with a passenger aboard were heard on all sides and pity for the supposed helpless aeronaut was ~~gax~~ general. The shape of the balloon, its color and its actions in the sky left little doubt in many minds that it was an airship and that in it was perhaps some aeronaut awaiting death when it should collapse.

The balloon's flight was south of the city, but it was distinctly seen drop downtown. When it was near the center and to the south of the business district hundreds of persons noticed it and watched until it sank out of sight behind buildings in the west. The watchman in the Court House tower trained his glasses on the balloon, but said last night that it was too far from him to see whether it had or had not a ship's mechanism or any one on board.

It is believed that the balloon was 2,000 feet in the air. It seemed to make a circuit of the southern part of the city and disappeared from sight almost directly west. At no time when it was seen did it make any turn toward the ground, a fact that gave rise to the belief that the propeller, if such it had, was broken.

[Carap of Mr. Wild at State Fair just past.]

1906 October 8 (Mon) Indianapolis Star, p. 3.

SHIP FICATS OVER CITY / Hundreds See It in Flight / Air Craft of Modern Lines Appears in Southeast, Apparently Under Control, Travels East Against Blue Sky.

Rising from the horizon in the far southeast a cigar-shaped object bearing out in detail the appearance of an airship drifted slowly toward Indianapolis late yesterday afternoon and after coursing over a portion of the southern part of the city turned directly east and disappeared as mysteriously as it had come. The ease with which the balloon seemed to follow the guiding of its supposed aeronaut left no doubt in the minds of the ~~xxx~~ hundreds of persons who saw it that it was an airship of wonderful qualities.

The mysterious object appeared on the horizon shortly after 5 o'clock and with deliberate flight increased in size until its shape in detail could be easily detected without binoculars. It was too far away, however, for any of the details of the steering platform to be seen and only its graceful curves, caused apparently by the control of its mechanism, gave weight to the supposition that it bore a passenger who was an expert in the art of aerial flying.

As the object neared the city it began to come into prominence against the sky and attracted the attention of many persons, who watched it with awe until it decreased into a tiny speck, and finally became invisible. Its course seemed directly over the southern part of Indianapolis. It swept to the eastward with easy movement, slow and graceful, but suddenly turned directly northeast and disappeared.

1907 July 5 (Wed) Burlington, Vt., Free Press, p. 7.

SAW BALL OF FIRE. / Electrical Disturbance That Startled Burlingtonians Yesterday Noon.

A forerunner to one of the series of heavy and frequent thunderstorms that have characterized the early summer in this vicinity startled Burlingtonians yesterday just before noon. Without any preliminary disturbance of the atmosphere, there was a sharp report, the like of which is seldom heard. It was much louder in the business section of the city than elsewhere, and particularly in the vicinity of Church and College streets. People rushed to the street or to windows to learn what had happened and when a horse was seen flat in the street in front of the Standard Coal and Ice company's office it was the general impression that the animal had been struck by lightning and killed. This story was not long entertained, however, as the horse was soon struggling to regain his feet, which he soon did with the assistance of many men who disconnected the harness from the wagon, and was found to be all right.

Ex-Governor Woodbury and Bishop Michaud were standing on the corner of Church and College streets in conversation when the report startled them. In talking with a Free Press man later in the day Governor Woodbury said his first thought was that an explosion had occurred somewhere in the immediate vicinity and he turned, expecting to see bricks flying through the air. Bishop Michaud was facing the east and saw a ball of fire rushing through the air, apparently just east of the National Biscuit Company's building. Alvaro Adait, who was standing in front of his place of business at the corner of College and Mechanic street, also saw the ball of fire, as did a young man who was looking out of a window in The Strong theatre building. Another man with a vivid imagination declared that the ball struck the center of College street near the Standard Coal & Ice company's office, knocked the horse down by the jar and then bounded up again to some undefined point in the sky. He was unable to find any dent in the pavement, however, and in the absence of any explanation from the horse as to his actions, it is supposed the animal was frightened by the noise, jumped and slipped, having been hit rather short. The unusual disturbance was followed in a few minutes by a downpour of rain which continued, with a brief interruption, for nearly two hours.

1907 July 15 (Mon) Indianapolis Star, p. 1.

ZODIACAL LIGHT IN MAINE / Tropical Phenomenon Appears in Northern Latitude.

BRUNSWICK, Me., July 14.--A pronounced display of zodiacal light, a phenomenon rarely seen in these latitudes, caused much wonder in Brunswick and other Maine cities tonight. Beginning at 8:45 o'clock a great band of light passed through the city (?) from east to west. It was very bright for about 30 minutes, but after that space it gradually diminished and disappeared at 9:30. The band passed through the middle of the constellations Aquila and Bootes.

The movements of the luminous tract were recorded at Bowdoin College Observatory.

Astronomers describe the light as sunlight reflected from multi-tudes of meteorites revolving about the sun nearly in the plane of the ecliptic. The phenomenon is usually seen in the tropics after twilight or before daybreak in the spring and fall, but seldom appears in this climate.

1907 December 14 (Sat) London Times, p. 16e (card 1)

A LUMINOUS OWL / TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—In the hope that, perhaps, if you can find room for it, some of your readers may be able to throw light on a strange story, I venture to send you one which I have received from a correspondent—a sportsman and field naturalist—whose statement of what he saw may be accepted with confidence.

My first impression on reading his letter was that a "Will o' the wisp," not probably uncommon in the neighbourhood, until exorcised by drain pipes, had wandered back to its old haunts, and that the writer had been privileged to catch sight of the lantern,

"Dancing in murky light o'er fen and lake
In his besetted, low, marshy willow brake."

But disappearance when disturbed into a neighbouring cover and later reappearance when the place is quiet again is more in accordance with the ways of a bird than with what is recorded of the doings of such uncanny lights.

It was an old belief that the common heron, like the salmon poachers in "Guv Manning," shows on occasions a light to attract fish within range of its extraordinary light; and Bishop Stanley writes that "there is a very extraordinary light said to be visible on the breast of a species of American bittern."

I am not aware of any record of other birds gifted in the same way. Is it possible that some tradition of the kind may be embalmed in the distinctive name of the common barn owl, Strix flammea?

The scene of the story, which must be told in my correspondent's own words, is in North Norfolk. In the interests of a probably feathered hero, I strike out more exact local references.

"Last Sunday evening" (December 1), "I had," he writes, "gone to post some letters about 7.45 p.m., the evening being dark and calm, with slight fog. I saw what I at first took to be the lamp of a motor-cycle proceeding rapidly on the road, about half a mile to the south, when it suddenly stopped, rose some yards into the air, and returned apparently several hundred yards and again stopped and rose higher into the air. I called the attention of some passers-by to it, but the countrymen merely said it 'looked funny,' and they had never seen anything like it.

"My groom's cottage being only a few minutes' walk, I called him out with his wife, and we looked at the dull lamp pursuing its aerial evolutions. Soon after I met my son, and, getting the services of a man, we crossed over to a parallel road to get a better view. Stopping by a gate, we had a splendid opportunity of watching it. Once it crossed the field in our direction to within about 200 yards of us, when it turned back and disappeared in a meadow by the stream. Negotiating a nasty fence into the meadow, we disturbed it and it rapidly flew and disappeared into Mr. ---'s plantation. About 10:30 I went again into the lane, and after waiting some time the bird (for such it certainly was) emerged from the wood and pursued the same tactics. It then alighted on the ploughed field, but rose after a few seconds, and, after flying round it, again alighted on the other side of the field, about 150 yards from where I was standing.

"It remained more than five minutes, during which time it passed twice across the field of my field-glasses, looked like a large lamp surrounded with mist. The light suddenly disappeared, and I saw it no more.

"I am quite convinced it was an owl."

Your obedient servant,
T. DIGBY PIGOTT.

Sheringham, Dec. 7.
1907 December 26 (Th) London Times, p. 2f (card 1)

A LUMINOUS OWL. / TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—With so many more important matters clamouring for a hearing I am almost ashamed to ask you to find room again for my luminous owl. But if, before the fatal 29th shuts off all hope, you can find a corner for it, the following extract from a letter written by a Wells fisherman will, I think, interest many of your readers.

That an unusual moving light has been noticed, and that almost as certainly it is conveyed by a bird, is, I think, now proved beyond question. Not only has it been seen again by my first correspondent, but also later by a policeman on his night round, and, as I learn this morning, since seen by the wife and daughter of the squire in one of whose coverts the bird has apparently its home.

"On December [13] several of us fishermen [writes one of them] were standing on Wells-bar between 2 o'clock and 6. It was a very dark morning. About 4 we were all surprised to find something blowing about just like [blue] fire. Our mittens and the edges of our sou' wester were soon full; it hung to them like cobwebs, and some parts of it were very bright. I thought you would like to know about this, as it would be almost the same time the luminous owl was seen, and I do not see why it should not hang on a bird's feathers as well as it did on us. There were about ten of us, so I do not think we were deceived in what we saw."

I may mention, perhaps, that the letter you were good enough to publish had been reprinted in more than one local paper.

"In a curious book entitled 'A Wonderful History of All the Storms, Hurricanes, Earthquakes, &c.' (8vo, London, 1704[?]), occurs [writes the late Sir Henry Ellis, Principal Librarian of the British Museum] the following account of 'flames that appear upon the shaires open and beasts: their cause.' These are sometimes clammy exhalations gathered in the air in small parts, which exhalations scattered in the air in small parts, which in the night, by the resistance of the cold are kindled by cleaving to horses' ears and men's heads and shoulders, riding or walking; and that they cleave to hair or garments it is by the same reason that dew cleaves to them, they being dry and attractive, and so more proper to receive them."

The / "Wandering fires, / Compact of unctuous vapour, which the night / Dondenses, and the cold [] round."

may not, since Milton's days, have so a completely disappeared from well-drained England as some of us had supposed. Your obedient servant, / Shearingsham, Dec. 24. T. DIGBY PIGOTT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—Will you allow me to add a little to Sir Digby Pigott's account of the luminous owl, which was published in The Times Weekly Edition of December 20?

I first observed this phenomenon in Shropshire, one evening in February, 1892, and when I mentioned it in school next day I found that several of the children knew of it, and said at once that it was a "glin oillert" (u broad, as in "full"). The derivation is obvious, and teachers in other parts of Shropshire have told me that their pupils knew both the term and the thing.

A pair of these birds, Strix flammea, lived in the buildings at a farm about a hundred yards from the school, and I watched them carefully. I saw the luminosity several times, but it was not so bright as Sir Digby Pigott's correspondent observed, and usually lasted only for a short time, though I could see the birds flying about after the luminous gleam had ceased. I never saw both birds luminous at the same time, and I am unable to say whether the male or female, or both, possessed this power. I went to their lair in the barn several times while one was exhibiting its beautiful gleam, thinking to find out which of the pair possessed the attraction, but invariably found both birds absent. I have seen both birds leave the barn in the evening, one luminous, and the other showing no gleam.

I thought the luminosity might be connected with the electrical condition of the atmosphere, but though it was usually brightest and lasted longest when the electrical potential of the atmosphere was highest, it was not always so. It sometimes happened that neither of the owls was luminous when the air was highly charged with electricity. Nor did the luminosity appear to be connected with the hygrometric state of the air; it appeared indifferently in moist or dry air.

I could observe nothing to indicate that the luminosity was under the control of the owl. It appeared to come from its breast, and the under sides of its wings and body. It always appeared when the birds were in poor condition, and not at other times. I ascertained this by visiting their lair about midday, after a luminous exhibition the previous evening. I visited them so often in this way that, after a time, they took very little notice of me.

When the owl is flying low, e.g., while searching the hedge-side in a country lane, this gleam is not visible; but as it rises suddenly to go over the hedge it exhibits it beautifully, and it is then rather trying to the nerves of horses and their drivers. I have often been startled in this way.

I have never seen a heron luminous, though I have been told of it by gamekeepers, poachers, and others who have seen it. I once thought I perceived it in a heron I was watching, as it was fishing in the canal one summer evening, but the gleam came from a hedgehog, which was swimming across the canal, and was easily explainable—it was reflected light from the bubbles of air clinging to its spines and hair.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant, / A COUNTRY TEACHER.
1908 January 9 (Th) London Times, p. 6c (card 1)

LUMINOUS OWLS. / TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—The appearance of a luminous night bird in North Norfolk, which you were good enough to allow me to chronicle in The Times has attracted so much attention and given rise to so many questionings that, if you can, before finally dismissing the matter, find space to allow me to add a few words to what I have already written, I shall be much indebted to you.

I have this afternoon returned from a two days' visit to the gentleman on whose property the birds (there are two) have made themselves at home. Though not fortunate enough, as I had hoped, to see them myself, I have personally interviewed ten trustworthy witnesses of the many who have been more favoured, including, among others, the wife, daughter and son of my host, the last an officer who served in the South African war, his bailiff, a policeman, the village schoolmaster, and the clerk and porter at the railway station.

I cannot expect you to spare room for the details of the stories they have to tell, interesting though they would be to every one who cares for natural history, and will only say that, unless evidence, one-half of which would be considered by any Court of law sufficient to hang a man, is to be entirely ignored, there can be no doubt that a pair of birds carrying a yellowish light, so strong as to have been when first noticed mistaken by two men at different places for bicycle lamps, have during the last few weeks been seen by some one (often by many people at once) almost every night hawking, like barn owls, along the hedge rows on brook side, resting for five or ten minutes at a time or a gage or trees, and every now and then swooping on to the ground.

A swopp a few nights ago was, the schoolmaster told me, in his hearing followed immediately by what he believed to be the squeal of a young rat.

Perhaps the most interesting story of all was that told by the farm bailiff, who assured me that when one of the birds, which he had been watching for some time as it hunted round a wheat stack on a very dark night, flew off and lit on a tree, which he pointed out to me, on the other side of the field, the light it gave out was so strong that he could see distinctly the outlines of the branches round it.

I confine myself to a repetition of the facts as told to me, and do not attempt to offer any explanation. But to no one who has puzzled over the phosphorescent trail of such small creatures as centipedes on a damp autumn evening, or read in the reports of the Challenger expedition or elsewhere of the wonderful light-carrying contrivances of many deep sea fishes, will the phenomenon appear either impossible or unnatural.

If the use or purpose is asked, none who as boys have caught sparrows with a bull's eye lantern or watched the startled amazement which for a moment paralyses a dormouse if a match is struck suddenly and held to the cage, will have any difficulty in finding a possible answer.

If, as your correspondent "A Shropshire Teacher" believes, the light is brightest when the bird is in a poor condition, one might be tempted to fancy that nature, red in tooth and claw, may have her softer moments and be ready at times to step down from the iron pedestal from which she watches with impartial eye the struggle for existence, to lend a hand to help the lame dog over the stile.

From stories which have reached me since "luminous owls" became the talk of the neighbourhood I am inclined to think lights of the kind may be less rare than has been supposed, and that, but for the fear of ridicule, we might oftener hear of them.

I should like to repeat some of the strange tales told me, but have already, I am afraid, put a dangerous strain on your patience.

Your obedient servant,

T. DICBY PICCOTT.

Sheringham, Ban. 7.

1908 January 1. (Tues) London Times, p. 6b.

LUMINOUS BIRDS. / TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

The curious phenomenon of a luminous bird described by Sir Digby Piccott lately in your columns will, I hope yet obtain explanation from observers of natural history. Such an appearance, though it was spoken of as "the waxwing hoax," and a good deal of "joking and hoaxing" was mixed up with it, is known to have occurred in 1898 between March and October, and in the autumn of 1899, at Greystoke and at Skelton. The keeper at Greystoke believes that it was the work of poachers who had tied a bull's-eye lantern to a setter's collar. It moved very quickly and appears to have leapt over hedges, and is described by some as "a dazzling light as large as a table lamp."

When seen at Skelton the light appeared to move in undulating curves, and not only went over hedges, but soared above the top of a fir plantation. My informant, who went out to see it two or three times, could never get near it, but is certain it was not a setter with a bull's-eye lantern, and thinks it was a bird. Its movement, he says, was exactly like the flight of a bird.

Another informant writes me that at the end of September, 1900, the keeper at Hornby-hall was approaching his home after dusk, when what he took to be a nightjar flew towards him from over a wall, and as it swerved from him it distinctly emitted a flash of light from under its wing. He described it as like the flash of reflected sunlight seen when a lapwing wheels.

One much wishes for more light upon this matter.

Yours truly,

H.D. RAWNSLEY.

January 7.

It may interest your readers to know that a male "waxwing" in fine plumage was found dead in the Keswick valley on New Years Eve. 1908 February 3 (Mon) Tacoma Daily News, p. 1.

Strange Light Seen West of Kent / Some Believe It to Be the Eye of an Airship.

KENT, Washington, Feb. 3.--(Special.)--For two nights past much curiosity has been aroused by the appearance of a large bright light apparently low in the western sky, two or three times as bright as Jupiter. It was observed both Saturday and Sunday nights between the hours of 7 and 9 o'clock, moving slowly from north to south. Suggestions were made that it might be an airship, and telephone inquiries were made covering a distance of two or three miles from this place, but no satisfactory answers were received. At times the strange light did not appear to be more than ten or twelve miles distant. All sorts of conjectures are ventured as to the mysterious illumination.

Seattle Post-Intelligencer, Mon. Feb. 3, p. 6.--Strange Light Seen by People of Kent.

KENT, Feb. 2.--A strange aerial craft or something bearing a light was observed tonight about three miles west of Kent. The entire population, almost, turned out to watch the light which was moving from north to south. The object carried a red glare, but not even the outlines could be discerned. Some of the people thought it was an airship. The light, which shone about as large as the morning star, but gave forth a reddish glow, finally passed beyond the human eye's range of vision, leaving all who saw it in doubt.

Seattle P-I, Tues Feb 11, p. 2--Mars is Signalling. / Kent's Mysterious Great White Light Solved.

The great white light seen at Kent for nights past reappeared last night distinctly. It was a message from Mars which read: "Irrigation on this planet has reached perfection. The Hanford canal on your continent is being constructed perfectly; lands same as ours. You will revolutionize farming. Let the good work go on."

Full information at...

1908 February 3 (Sun.) Morning Olympian (Olympia, Wash.), p. 8.

SEE THINGS AT NIGHT / Planet Venus Being Mistaken for Strange "Light" of Airship. /

Airship tales continue to drift in nightly and a large number of people cling to the belief that some strange lights have really been seen.

Shooting stars and the planet Venus, together with optical illusions and some lively tongue-twisting are generally credited with being the [o]rigin of the reports.

The planet Venus now appears in the west at an elevation of about 60 degrees six about sundown. It shines with unusual brilliancy in its present position and later in the evening when it nears the horizon the optical illusion that it is a bright white light within the atmosphere of the earth is perfect. Imagination supplies the trimmings. It seems [s]o close that it could almost be hit with a club. To a person moving, the planet of course seems to have motion, and hence the "airship" theory.

Occasional shooting stars have given other people the idea that they, too, have seen the "airship," although it is generally regarded as to the credit of this community that purple, green or yellow lights have not yet appeared to the inhabitants as they have in some localities. The airship is not a hoax--it is an illusion. 1908 February 4 (Tues) Daily Ledger (Tacoma), p. 4.

"STRANGE AERIAL CRAFT" (ed.)

Kent folks saw a "strange aerial craft or something bearing a light" Sunday night. It was moving from north to south. It carried "a red glare but not even the outlines could be discerned," and we are also informed that the light, which "shone about as large as the morning star," but gave forth a reddish glow, finally passed beyond the "human eye's range of vision, leaving all who saw it in doubt." Kent correspondents overlooked an opportunity for a great "story." They have left the matter "in doubt." Possibly this is just where it ought to be, but it would still have remained in doubt had a theory or two, more or less plausible, been advanced.

Does anybody know where the Japanese fleet is now? Does anybody know how many airships the Japanese are using all over Western Canada and the Pacific coast and ~~what~~ whether the lights used in Japanese aerial navigation have a "reddish glow?" These and other questions arise in the minds of those who read of the "reddish glow" observed in the heavens. What does it portend? It was so far away that observers could not determine whether it was a "rakish craft."

Fuller details may develop later, however. Take the story, for instance, of the Japanese who obtained a lease of logged-off lands not far from Port Crescent. It was plain enough at the time that the Japanese intention was to clear up the logged off lands and raise crops. Samples of the soil had been chemically analyzed beforehand and had been found satisfactory. The lease was made. Everything was innocent enough on its face. Thus the matter rested a week, until a correspondent saw the danger and straightway we learned that a commanding position on the straits of Fuca was the object of the least of logged off lands. Who shall say that the "strange aerial craft" of a "reddish glow" seen by the people of Kent, does not carry with it enough (shimosel) or other high explosive to drop on all Tacoma and ~~and~~ cover all the cities and surrounding country with that giant pile of earth.

1908 February 4 (Tues) Tacoma Daily News, p. 3.

Strange Lights Seen at High Altitude / Airship Seen Also, It is Declared / Crew and Passengers of North Pacific Train View It. / Story of Japanese Spies at Work Along the Coast is Revived--Kent and Other Towns Report Sighting Lights.

Dark red, pale green, yellow and a brilliant white are the colors of a strange light that appeared in the western horizon Saturday and Sunday nights, seen by residents of Kent and Tacoma, who firmly believe it is a passing airship belonging to the Japanese.

A large object was seen sailing through the air at a high elevation, moving from north to south. It was first sighted by an engineer on a Northern Pacific train on the tide flats, waiting for the Fifteenth street bridge to close. He pointed out the object to the conductor and passengers alighted from the train. Some examined it with field glasses. So interested did the passengers and trainmen become that the train was delayed several minutes.

Those who saw it told of a large cigar-shaped object flying a foreign flag, which some maintained was French, while others declared it to be Japanese. During the same weeks, on clear nights, colored lights were seen displayed at high altitudes and on one occasion a rocket was discharged high in the air, it is asserted.

Since that time the light has appeared at various points along the coast, usually between the hours of 7 and 9 o'clock, as at Kent, Sunday night. In many of the smaller towns along Grays Harbor, Tacoma Eastern and Northern Pacific near Tacoma, residents have watched the light. It is the firm belief of many that the light is attached to an airship employed by the Japanese spies, who are studying the topography of the coast.

1908 February 5 (Wed) Tacoma Daily News, p. 6 (eds).

The Ubiquitous Jap.

It is hard to keep pace with this ubiquitous Jap. Now he spies at the Presidio, then at Fortress Monroe. He ~~zooms~~ speeds back across the continent to make a really good map of Portland, which, were it made public, might enable the visitor to thread his way through that intricate system of house numbering. Attracted by Portland and its environs, he steals along the river to the forts that guard the entrance of the Columbia. With the speed of thought he has invaded the dreams of the commandant at Fort Lawton, who straightway proclaims the vision of a Japanese army marching unresisted on the defenseless cities of the Sound. Often he appears again in the disguise of a gardener at Port Crescent; but in reality he is there to provide a base for the advance of a brown army on Port Townsend and the Straits forts. The scheme is cleverly veiled as a colony to provide a few Japanese residents with means for living, but it is none the less devilish for all its cleverness.

But things are crowding the limit when the Jap pre-empt the air. Here is the bright light of his airship piercing the night, like the glowing eye of a demon to startle the peaceful folk of Kent. Not them alone but this matter touches us all. Trains are halted in their progress across the tideflats while passengers sweep with telescopes--not traveling bags--the circumambient atmosphere to detect the lurking place of this creature. This thing must be stopped. A citizen wandering home at night must not be further unduly alarmed at his mental condition because forsooth, multi-colored lights flash through the heavens. A free moral agent should not be so deceived into signing the pledge. The airship must be captured. We do not know its intentions, but we have no doubt that they are evil. Perhaps it flitted over this city to detect the dark designs of that suggestive democratic convention or the cracks in the primary law. If so it was a useless labor; the people see through these. Perhaps it seeks to spy on Capt. Howell and his battery of artillery. If so, we warn it that it will fail. Perhaps it wants to learn how "Billy" Paulhamus at Sumner managed to procure the payment of an overcharge claim from an express company. If so, it is doomed to disappointment: nobody knows. Perhaps it would capture that record-breaking hen at Kent. Or perhaps it would discover the reasons for operating street cars with flat wheels or delve into the mysteries of the lighting problem. If so it will have to come close to earth. And here will be the opportunity for its capture, easily effected by the usual method of bait on its tail. (m)

But where is the hero? Truly we are living in a fearful age. 1908 February 10 (Mon) Seattle Post-Intelligencer, p. 12.

IS MARS SIGNALLING KENT? / Townspeople Much Excited by A Mysterious Great White Light /

A Kent correspondent who recently reported a great white light visible in the heavens from the neighborhood of Kent is being gradually relieved from a charge of untruthfulness by the testimony of the valley people, who come to Seattle informing the story. Nearly everyone in the valley as far down as Auburn has seen the bright light, and many have examined it through field glasses and telescopes. It is visible, according to the general testimony, on all clear nights, coming up from the southwest and passing north and then back again to a point west of Kent. There it remains, flickering and changing its position from time to time until nearly morning, and then disappearing over the tree tops toward the Sound.

"I have been making fun of those stories," said William Watson, who is employed in the county auditor's office, "but a few nights ago they showed me the light, and I can swear it was there. I examined it with a field glass and had a close at hand view of the mysterious light. It appeared to me about the size of a loaf of bread and about the same shape. In the center was a gleaming white brightness like an arc light, while around the edges appeared to be smaller, flickering lights, like incense lights. While I watched, it slowly turned until the narrow side only was exposed to view, and then a tremendous flickering began, as of some one signaling. For many minutes the light remained stationary, then it dipped slowly down and rose again. Later it sailed off north a mile or two, and then came back to its [] position. In the early morning it was still there, and sailed off over the tree tops just as I took the interurban for the city. It seems to me that this is a remarkable phenomenon, and I am surprised that the University faculty, with facilities for getting a closer view of the light, does not arrange to make some observations. We see it now two or three times a week. It is too near and too evident to be a star. It is not an airship. What is it? Is the planet Mars trying to signal Seattle?"

1908 February 14 (Fri) Tacoma Daily News, p. 1.

Strange Light Seen Above the Narrows. / Witnesses Declare It Can Be Nothing But the Searchlight of an Airship.

Is there an airship hovering about in the neighborhood of Tacoma? Night before last dozens of residents on the hills say they saw a mysterious light hovering first to the southward of the city and thence traveling slowly northward west of the city until it passed from view to the northward. Some persons watched it for over an hour.

Apparently the light was at a considerable altitude, and it seems to be over the Narrows. The light is described as a big searchlight.

When the News several days ago published a story about a mysterious airship that was supposed to be sailing about at night over the Sound country the story was treated as a hoax. Some of the people who saw this mysterious light night before last say there is no hoax about it. The light, they say, was too high to be anything other than the light of an airship.

Fri Feb 14, p. 6--Advertising to our Japanese airship that recently departed itself in these airs, the Walla Walla Statesman say[s] that "on a close investigation it will likely be found that some small boy with a good-sized box kite, to which he has attached a lantern, is responsible for the phenomenon." Maybe; but if Portland can have spies that draw maps, Port Townsend spies that plant tea gardens, and Santa Monica spies that plant pivot guns, why can't we be left alone in the possession of spies that float airships? 1908 February 17 (Mon) Tacoma Daily News, p. 4.

He Suggests Venus. / Local Astronomer Inclined to Prick Airship Story.

A Tacoma astronomer suggests that the bright light seen in the west and supposed by some to be the lamps of an airship is none other than the planet Venus, which sets about 8:30 to 9 p.m. at this time, and shines at times with a brilliancy fifteen to twenty times as bright as anything else in the western heavens, even excelling that of Jupiter, which is also visible higher up in the sky.

Feb. 18, p. 6.--An astronomer suggests that this bright light which has lately scintillated across the heavens from Kent to the Narrows is not the glowing eye of a Japanese airship spying out the land, but rays from Venus. Just so, and perhaps Venus is apt to dazzle, but did anyone ever misinterpret her message or convert it into a Jap ship? Another guess is due.

Feb 15., p. 6--So that Jap airship is floating somewhere in the vicinity of the Narrows. Well, you couldn't expect it to confine its operations to Kent.

Jap ships rept spying on Am. battleship fleet moving along Pacific coast, Chile.

Wed. Feb. 19, p. 6--Since nothing has been heard of this Jap spy airship for 24 hours, it is a safe inference that new devil is afoot.

Genl Stoessel condemned for surrendering Port Arthur in Russo-Japan war 3yrs earlier; Brit. Columbia has Jap trouble; Exclusion of Jap pupils from Calif schools?; Japs preparing to invade Manchuria!

Th Feb 27, p. 6--A California astronomer says that no planet causes Mercury to stray from its natural orbit. Perhaps it's just ~~mercurial~~ mercurial tendencies, or that Kent airship. 1908 February 22 (Sat.) Tacoma (Wash.) Daily News, p. 7.

Beautiful Venus Sparkles in West. / But the Eye of the Airship Is Still Being Seen.

That mysterious light seen hovering near Tacoma and regarded by some as coming from an airship, appeared in the sky again last night. Samuel Eldridge, engineer on the tug Fearless, says he watched the strange light for a number of minutes, moving over Point Defiance. The light is too high in the air to come from a searchlight, Mr. Eldridge is of the belief that it is an airship.

Nearly a week ago residents in the West End saw the strange light hovering over the Narrows, and a short time before that ranchers at Lake bay [?] assert that they saw a light in the sky which they at first thought came from Tacoma.

Since then passengers on the steamer Flyer had seen the "airship." Mr. Eldridge was on the vessel one night when his attention was attracted by a light far away, traveling slowly to the southward. Captain Coffin's attention to the light was called by Mr. Eldridge and together they watched the light.

Interest in the light is increasing. When the first ~~story~~ story was printed it was generally regarded as a "hoax," but persons are beginning to take the light seriously now.

Fri Feb. 28, p. 6 (eds.)--When one reflects on all these waterfront stories of whales, of Jap airships cruising over the Narrows, of steamers that, overloaded at the bow propelled themselves by churning the fog, of seagulls with eyes set at the backs of their heads, does it seem like crowding the limit a bit to produce a live frog out of a barrel of cement? If this thing keeps up somebody is going to be called a "nature-faker."

Sat Feb 29, p. 4 (eds) State Quills. / All Clear--Perhaps.

The mysterious white light seen in the western sky by the people of Kent is now explained. Mars has shifted his frown to Europe and a brighter side is once more visible to the people of the Pacific coast. The astronomical expert of this paper is not at home and therefore is not certain as to Mars being located in the western sky, but to the explanation Mars should have the politeness to hang out there a while.--Auburn Argus. 1908 February 28 (Th) Morning Olympian (Olympia, Wash.), p. 1.

Are the "Airship Lights" Smugglers Signals? / MUD BAY SEES IT / Kite With Swinging Lantern / EXPLANATION OFFERED 1/Old-Time Method Used in Guiding Those Landing Illegal "Dope." /

With the declaration of a number of prominent residents of Mud Bay that they had seen a swaying light in the sky about 8:30 o'clock Wednesday night and that they had watched it until they were ~~positively~~ positive that they could not have mistaken it for a star, interest in the alleged "airship" lights have revived. Residents of Mud Bay are of a substantial and sober turn of mind, not given to "seeing things," and the positive declaration that a swaying light danced in the heavens above Eid inlet or that vicinity must be taken as the truth, and the "airship" once more is its own spotlight, despite the various explanations tending to show that those who have seen it have been mistaken. But along with the revival comes another startling explanation of the cause of the lights, or some of them at least. "Are they signal[s] of a band of smugglers, telling those bringing in contraband dope that the coast is clear?"

For months past it has been rumored that lanterns suspended to large kites have been flown as signals for smugglers, and the method is an old-time one in use on the Atlantic coast and elsewhere. The location of the lights carry their own signal code, it is explained, and boats far down the Sound could see the light and be directed to whatever cache the contraband stuff could more safely be landed.

This explanation does not hold good for all the lights, for it has been told that recently an experiment was made with a kite and a searchlight for advertising purposes, but with no success except to bring forth an "airship" tale from an imaginative citizen. The light at Mud Bay may have been merely run up for pastime, but it had all of the appearance of an acetline [sic] lantern attached to a kite swaying back and forth and at an elevation where it could be seen for miles down the bay. It was visible for some little time. The sound in the vicinity of Olympia has been the scene of many smuggling operations, the unsettled condition of a large part of the shore making it comparatively an easy matter to land a cargo without detection. Revenue officers visit the city from time to time, but it has been a long time since a successful haul has been made here. The latest explanation will at any rate give added interest to the airship tales.

1908 March 9 (Mon) Tacoma Daily News, p. 2.

That "Airship" Again. North Enders See a Mysterious Light in the Heavens Last Night.

The "airship" that has been seen at intervals during the last six weeks, has reappeared. This time the strange light in the heavens has been seen by persons living in the North End.

The light was first noticed in the direction of Point Defiance about 9 o'clock last night and did not seem to be more than half a mile high. The "airship" traveled westward and later in the evening the light was seen beyond the narrows. Jan 16--V. A. Morell's National Airship Co. a fraud.

Restrict Jap. competition, disarm in Brit Col. Spies at Fort Stevens.

Th. Feb 13, p. 6--Port Townsend may now rest undisturbed by visions of a Japanese invasion. The spies have transferred themselves to Santa Monica, where they have mounted a gun. But where's that Kent airship? 1908 March 10 (Wed) Morning Olympian (Olympia, Wash.), p. 1.

VENUS AGAIN IS LABELLED /

Clear, cold evenings now being experienced, the "Japanese airship" has returned in all its Oriental pomp and splendor. The phantom ship swung at its aerial moorings northwest of the city for some time last night between 8 and 10 o'clock and bright-eyed Japs could be seen peering over the starboard rail taking flashlight pictures of the coast defenses here and making wash drawings of the location of the harbor mines.

In fact if you snoked up another brand you could make out the name of the airship and her registry number and the horsepower of her engines.

Coming down to the realm of facts, however, the airship was, as it has been on every other clear night for months, the planet Venus, the evening star, shining resplendent in an almost starless sky, the planet alone undimmed by a bright, full moon. Imagination and the vagaries of deceptive vision supplied the rest.

An occasional vapory cloud, not visible against the steel blue of the sky, swept across the bright planet and straightway the "airship" seemed to dim and all but extinguish its "light." An eager watcher got an electric light wire within his range of vision and the "airship" was again eclipsed to him. The watchers' bodies swayed back and forth in the tension of close watching and the "airship" swayed the same. Looking a half hour later the airship was still there, but a few degrees further down in the west.

If it is a clear night it will be doing business at the same stand tomorrow night and continuously until in the progress of things astronomical it is no longer the evening star.

1908 June 14 (Sun.) Indianapolis Star, p. 9.

AZORES SEE TRAMP BALLOON. / There is No Record, However, of Missing Airship in Europe.

HORTA, Fayal, Azores, June 13.--A letter has been received from the Island of Flores which declares that a balloon, evidently under human control, passed over that island June 6 traveling westward. The balloon rose to pass over the island, and then came down to its previous level as soon as it was clear of the western shore. The Island of Flores is one of the northwest group of the Azores. It is about 800 miles due west of Lisbon, Portugal. There is no record of any balloon missing in Europe.

2/7/09 p. 6 ghost. 1904 July 25 (Sun) Boston Herald, p. 16.

Large Airship Seen Sailing Over East Part of Bristol, Ct.

BRISTOL, Ct., July 25.--A large airship sailing very high, passed over the eastern part of this town, known as Forestville, about 6 o'clock this evening and after maneuvering for a short time, took a westerly course, apparently moving toward Waterbury.

The craft is described as an elongated gas bag under which was suspended a framework equipped with a propeller. Spectators were sure that they saw a man aboard, but were not positive whether he had a companion. The airship appeared to come out of the north and continued its southerly course over the town until it reached Lake Compounce. Over the lake it stopped and appeared to be seeking a place for a landing. After circling about a few times, however, it again came north and then changing its course moved in a westerly direction over Wolcott Mountain. At this time it was apparently descending and it was thought when it disappeared that it might have made a landing in the mountain. Persons who followed it and made the journey up the mountain found no trace of it. It is supposed that the airship continued its westerly course. Nothing could be learned as to its identity.

Aug. 5 p. 7--George E. Hawkes of Lynn thinks he has solved prob of aeri nav w bird-like machine w propeller. Aug 18--secret German balloon tests

July 28--2 fisherman off Providencetown in dory, in fog, w steamer approaching which doesn't see them until a "sea light" momentarily flashes (natural phenomenon, or wave reflection?) and steamer spots men, picks them up.

1908 July 28 (Tue) Willimantic (Conn) Daily Chronicle, p. 28.

The sea serpent as a summer resort attraction is a back number. Even the news sent out of whales at play off Watch Hill has an "ancient and fish-like" odor (not saying, of course, that anything like exaggeration was practiced). But the announcement from Bristol that airships are "sailing over" at Lake Compounce has the merit of being right up to date and contains a promise of novel entertainment for visitors to that delightful "haven of refuge and rest" in the woods. The air-ship was first sighted on Saturday, "moving toward Waterbury." The craft is described as an elongated gas bag beneath which was suspended a framework equipped with a propeller. Spectators were sure that they discerned one man aboard, but were not positive as to whether he had a companion. What became of it is not stated, but there is likelihood of it coming back at any minute and while waiting for its reappearance the crowds at Lake Compounce will be well cared for in the way of refreshments and amusements with plenty of people ready and willing to supply their wants at "very reasonable prices." July 29, p. 25

The Lake Compounce airship, mentioned yesterday in this column, has come down, but not with a dull thud. It wasn't much more than a bubble and the bubble's "busted," leaving Compounce to worry along with no more sensational attractions than sheep-bakes, boating and bowling, which would seem to contain enough elements of diversion to satisfy ordinary pleasure-seeking folks. The Sunday papers all had stories about the airship and it was the talk of the town at Bristol on Sunday and Monday, a causing even more excitement than did Default Walker's arrest. Of course everybody wanted to know what became of the airship, where it went to, and the answer to this finally leaked out. A resident of East Bristol, Wilson by name, tendered his daughter a birthday party Saturday and towards 6 o'clock, a large paper balloon, in the shape of a pig was sent up to complete the celebration. And to think that a little thing like that could keep all Plainville, Forestville and Bristol stargazing for over an hour, made several of the residents hang their heads and keep very "bum" every time "airship" was mentioned.

1908 August 1 (Sat) Berkshire Evening Eagle (Pittsfield, Mass.), p. 5.

Mysterious Air Craft Goes Over Springfield.

Early yesterday morning that appeared to be a balloon or air ship hovered over the city of Springfield but no report has been received of the starting or landing of any air craft that might have passed over that city. The night watchman for the Hendee Manufacturing Company saw the balloon or whatever it was about 3 o'clock in the morning. It hovered over the city for about an hour as though the occupants desired to make a landing but later it rose higher and went to the southeast. A circular row of lights was on the craft but the watchman could not see the shape of the gas bag above. He was sure that it was not a galaxy of stars or electric lights that he saw.

It is an unusual occurrence to have lights on a balloon and it is believed that these must have been electric lights because all fire is tabooed in airships. The appearance of this craft recalls the recent mysterious visit of an airship to Connecticut and it may be possible that some one is trying some secret experiments with a new ship. [Many recent ascensions in news--"Pittsfield, Heart of the Berkshires" is dedicated a few days before; Zeppelin making trials.] 1908 September 10 (Th) Berkshire Evening Eagle (Pittsfield, Mass), p. 4.

Officer Reported That He Saw a Balloon.

Report had it that a balloon was seen hovering over Pittsfield at 5:30 o'clock this morning. Officer Thompson reported to Chief White that the balloon "Pittsfield, the Heart of the Berkshires" was still over Pittsfield at that hour. When the chief heard that the airship had landed at Kingston at 5:15 he concluded that the balloon Mr. Thompson saw was another balloon than the "Pittsfield."

...[mention of Van Sleet and Glidden flights of night before in which Van Sleet set record distance of 135 miles for trip, while Glidden's "Boston" went about 90 miles]

Earlier in the week a balloon was seen hovering over Pittsfield and several people sized it up as having been a "hot air" affair sent up during the old home week in Troy.

Sept. 17--meteor 1908 October 12 Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, p. 3. (Mon)

Balloon Is Sighted.

ROCHESTER, Oct. 11.--A large balloon, traveling very high in the air and carrying at least one passenger, was seen at noon today one mile north of this city.

The balloon passed from east to west. It is not known where the balloon came from as there has been no ascension reported in this section.

(Balloon & air races in Germany are front-page news 1908 October 26 (Mon) Springfield (Mass.) Daily Republican, p. 4.

ONE ASCENSION THIS WEEK. / ... / Will Use the Pittsfield Balloon--A Mysterious Balloon Seen at Ware.

The town of Ware was disturbed Saturday night about 11:30 by a mysterious happening, which has not yet been explained. W.E. Foster, engineer at the power-house of the Ware and Brookfield street railway company, heard a voice calling, and he finally located its source in the air above his head. The voice asked, "What place is this?" and Foster called back, "Ware." Mr. Foster said that about 150 or 200 feet in the air he could see a light like a flashlight, and that the light was traveling from the northeast to the southwest. Up to midnight last night nothing had been heard of the mysterious visitor. So far as is known, there is no balloon in this part of the country which cannot be accounted for. The Boston is in New York for repairs, and the Pittsfield, the Heart of the Berkshires, and the North Adams No. 1 are both at their proper resting places.

1908 November 2 (Mon) The Union (Manchester, N.H.), p. 2.

MYSTERY OF THE AIR / Another Report of Searchlight Traveling the Upper Levels.

BRIDGEWATER, Mass., Oct. 31.--Unknown balloon passed here about 4 a.m. going towards Plymouth. The balloon bore a light and descended as though the inmates were getting their bearings and then again rose and passed on.

BOSTON, Oct. 31.--A careful search by The Associated Press covering practically every [inch] of territory between Bridgewater and the sea coast failed today to reveal any trace of the supposed balloon which was reported as passing over Bridgewater early this morning. The search failed to reveal that the balloon had been anywhere except in Bridgewater and there by only two men, who were driving down the main street from West Bridgewater to Bridgewater.

According to the Bridgewater reports Philip Prophett and John Flynn, undertakers of that town, while driving [in to the town] a little before 4 o'clock, observed a bright light in the sky above them. The light was not like that of a lantern, according to their reports, but resembled a searchlight. This light was traveling at a rapid rate when suddenly it neared the earth. The light was then played upon the earth beneath as though operated by someone who wished to learn where he was. Then the light ascended, Prophett and Flynn say, until reached a high elevation, when it disappeared in the direction of Plymouth.

All of the balloons in which ascensions are made in this state were accounted for today. The "Pittsfield Heart of the Berkshires" is at Pittsfield awaiting shipment to Fitchburg, the North Adams No. 1 is at North Adams, where an ascension is to be made today, the [Craylock] was used yesterday in an ascension by William Van Sleet, and landed near [Whitney] and the balloon Boston is in New York under repairs.

Stories of a mysterious bright light, believed by those who have seen it to have come from a balloon, have been heard all over New England. Last summer several [such] reports came from the vicinity of Bristol, Conn., and later the same phenomenon was observed near Pittsfield. Persons at White River Junction, Vt., have also told of seeing a similar light and last week persons at Ware reported that an illuminated balloon had passed over the town in the early hours of the morning. In all these cases, however, no balloon could be found, all the known balloons being accounted for at the time.

1908 December 12 (Sat) Berkshire Evening Eagle (Pittsfield, Mass.) 2 (ed.)

A STRAY BALLOON SEEN IN EARLY MORNING / Seen From Pittsfield and Other Remote Places on Thursday--Appeared to Come From the East--Carried a Large Light. / ...

That there was another balloon flying through the air over towns in Western Massachusetts other than the airships sent up from Pittsfield early Thursday morning, is the belief of many people. Such men as Police Officer Charles Thompson and George N. Hopkins of this city, Henry Stovell of Springfield and many others vouch for the story that a balloon could be seen sailing over the east part of Pittsfield within a few hours after "Billy" Van Sleet and Dr. S.B. Stowell of this city sailed away from this city and Charles J. Clidden and H.H. Clayton left Springfield in their flight to the eastern part of the state.

Reports that a balloon was flying over this section early Thursday morning were received by the Associated Press at Boston, representatives of that office having devoted much time in their efforts to follow the course taken by the balloons released from Pittsfield and Springfield. It was learned from various places that a balloon could be seen soaring over towns in the east-central section of Berkshire early in the morning. When it was learned that the balloon "Pittsfield" and the balloon "Boston" had landed in towns close to Cape Cod bay then it was known that if a balloon floated over any portion of Berkshire county early that morning, it must have been some balloon, the release of which, had not been reported.

Officer Thompson and Mr. Stovell were on North street about 5 o'clock Thursday morning, when they discovered what appeared to them to be a balloon carrying a large light. The light travelled in a westerly direction for a time, the course then changing. The light then appeared to travel toward the east. They then supposed it was the Pittsfield balloon.

George N. Hopkins was called to Washington late in the evening and when he started for home about 3 o'clock, his driver called attention to a balloon which he had been watching for an hour or more. Mr. Hopkins could plainly see the light which appeared to be attached to a balloon. During the time Mr. Hopkins and his driver were traveling from Washington to Pittsfield this light was in plain sight and several times appeared to change its course. The light was to be seen in the east, apparently not high in the air when Mr. Hopkins reached Pittsfield.

Upon various occasions reports have come from various places in Connecticut and towns in the vicinity of Springfield that a balloon had been seen soaring through the sky but notice of a flight was never received. A dispatch from Lowell says that a balloon believed to be the "Boston" in which Charles J. Clidden and John Barrett ascended at Springfield late yesterday afternoon passed over Lowell at 6:15 o'clock last night. The balloon was reported as traveling high in the air and passed to the southeast in the direction [of] Boston. Inasmuch as the "Boston" landed in Connecticut it must have been some other balloon that was seen over Lowell. No report has been sent out of any other flight in this section yesterday.

1909

1909 February 14 (Sun) Indianapolis Star, p. 15.

FLAMING ARROW AS NEMESIS. / Seen Hovering Over Spot Where Crime Was Discovered.

MAHANOY CITY, Pa., Feb. 13.--The mining village of Stockton, about 12 miles northeast of here, is wrought up over the appearance at night of an arrow of flame, which hovers over the spot on the mountain where the dismembered body of a woman was found in a barrel two years ago. Reputable and veracious persons have seen the flaming arrow, among them the two Donnell brothers, who are leading members of the Methodist church.

The light appears every night at about 9 o'clock and hovers over the spot until midnight, but it disappears when anyone approaches the spot to investigate. The superstitious villagers say it is the avenging spirit of the slain woman come back to keep alive the history of the crime so that the murderers may some day be apprehended.

May 2, 10. ghost or lumatic, New Haven. / 28, 12. Ghosts in N.Y. churchyard
13. Pickering & light signals to Mars. / are newspapers blowing
9. 9. Ghostly summons, Philadelphia. / 30, 24. Trenton, N.J. ghost.
15. 5. Headless ghost stops horse, Beverly, N.J. / 30, 27. Fake Phila. ghost.
18, 9. Strange and ferocious bird, N.J.
23. 27. Boston dredge sp makes noise like monster.

1909 May 11 (Tues) London Daily Express, p. 1.

(card 1)

MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP. / NOCTURNAL FLIGHTS OVER EASTERN COUNTIES. / STRANGE LIGHTS. /

When reports were spread a fortnight ago that a mysterious airship had been seen manoeuvring over East Anglia in the nighttime, they were received with considerable incredulity.

It was suggested that flocks of wild geese flying in extended order had been mistaken for an aeroplane or dirigible balloon, and that the "buzzing of a motor" which had been heard was in reality the "gaggle" of the birds as they flew.

Remarkable confirmation of the reports has now been received from a number of sources, and residents of the district are keenly excited by the problem.

The following evidence regarding the appearances of the airship has been obtained by "Express" correspondents:-- Peterborough.--Seen by Police Constable Kettle.
Ipswich.--Seen by Police Constable Hudson, a postman named Jackman and Mr. J.A. Smith, manager of the Eastern Counties Dairy Institute.
Sakundham.--Seen by several residents.
Bradfield.--St. George (West Suffolk).--Seen by Mrs. Rush.
Peakirk.--Seen by residents.
March.--Seen by railwaymen.
Ely.--Seen by residents.
Southend.--Seen near the Shoeburyness forts.

THE FIRST OBSERVER.

Police Constable Kettle, of Peterborough, was the first person to observe the airship.

"I was on duty in Cromwell-road at [3.13] a.m. when I heard what I took to be a motor-car some 400 yards distant," he told an "Express" correspondent yesterday. "It was quite dark at the time, and I looked along Cromwell-road expecting to see the lights of an approaching car."

"Nothing appeared, but I could still hear the steady buzz of a high-power engine. Suddenly it struck me that the sound was coming from above, and I looked up."

"My eye was at once attracted by a powerful light, which I should judge to have been some 1,200 feet above the ground. I also saw a dark body, oblong and narrow in shape, outlined against the stars."

"It seemed to be about a couple of yards long, and I am quite sure there was no gas-bag, as there would have been the case in a dirigible balloon."

"When I first sighted the machine it was not straight overhead, but appeared to be over the railway in the direction of Taverners-road. It was traveling at a tremendous pace, and as I watched, the rattle of the engines gradually grew fainter and fainter, until it disappeared into the northwest."

"Although I should say I saw it for about three minutes. I saw nobody until about twenty minutes later, when I reported the matter to Sergeant [Sleigh]."

FLIGHT OVER IPSWICH. L

The airship was seen at Ipswich soon after 8 o'clock in the evening while the Norfolk Artillery Reserves were moving into camp at Gypesayk Park.

A postman named Jackman drew the attention of Police Constable Hudson, who was on duty in the south-western part of the town, to something in the sky.

"I saw two objects overhead," Hudson states. "One of them flashed a brilliant light at intervals, and after hovering about at a great height for some time they passed out of sight in a south-westerly, or inland direction, which, according to the lower current of air, was dead against the wind."

Mr. J.A. Smith also reports that he saw either an airship or a balloon carrying a light. His impression was that it was cigar-shaped, but as it was dark at the time he could not be sure, in spite of the fact that he watched it through glasses.

Mrs. Bush of Bradford St. George says that as she was driving home from Woolpit in the evening she was startled to see what she took to be an aeroplane at a great height travelling in the direction of Lavenham.
1909 May 12 (Wed) London Daily Express, p. 1. (card 1)

Wingland.--Seen over Mr. Worth's farm.
Peterborough.--Seen by an engine-driver named Banyard.
1909 May 13 (Th)--London Daily Express, p. 1. (CARD 1)

MYSTERY OF AN AIRSHIP. / GRAPHIC DESCRIPTION OF THE SECRET "FLY-BY-NIGHT." / PERFECT CONTROL.

The fact that trials of a mysterious airship are being made at night over the eastern counties now appears to be established beyond doubt.

It is probable that the inventor has chosen to make his experiments in the dark in order to keep his secret.

As the airship has been seen at places 100 miles apart, it must be of considerable power. Observers agree that it is cigar-shaped, that it has at least 100 feet in length, and that in manoeuvres with ease.

THREE EYEWITNESSES.

"Express" Special Correspondent.

Market Harborough, Tuesday Night.
The mysterious airship with blazing headlights, which is reported to have been seen flying by night round Peterborough and across East Anglia, is being eagerly watched for again to-night.

This strange aeroplane, with its suggestion of Mr. H.G. Wells' "War in the Air," has fired the imagination of the countryside, and the villagers everywhere are watching the sky for its reappearance.

It has been seen driving through the night by several credible witnesses in districts wide apart, and many people believe that an ingenious inventor is keeping his secret in some remote farm building between Market Harborough and Peterborough.

I have motored this evening across part of the district in which the airship--judging from its line of flight--is understood to be concealed. The fenland of the country round is as flat as a billiard-table, and remote from the main lines of railway and high roads, and is thus admirably suitable for an aeronaut who desired to keep his trial flights secret.

Among the first to see the airship that flies by night was Mr. C.W. Allen, the pedestrian holder of the 2,000 miles road record, who lives in Northampton-road, Market Harborough. I have to-day seen Mr. Allen, who has given me an account of what he saw.

SWIFT FLIGHT.

"I was motoring with two friends from Northampton when I saw the airship," he said. "We had been for a night run, and when we were passing through the village of Kelmah, about seven miles from Market Harborough, we heard a loud report in the air like the backfire of a motor-car.

Then we heard distinctly from above our heads the 'tock-tock-tock' of a swiftly running motor engine, and we looked up.

"I was sitting on the front seat, next to the driver, and had a clear view of a dark shape looming up out of the night. It was an oblong airship, with lights in front and behind, flying swiftly through the air.

"It seemed some five or six hundred feet up, and must have been at least a hundred feet long, although owing to its altitude, it looked smaller. The lights were not very bright, but we could distinctly see the torpedo shape, and what appeared to be men on the platform below.

"We slowed up our motor-car and stopped to watch it. The steady buzz of the engines could be heard through the still air, and we watched it until it passed out of sight in a north-easterly direction towards Peterborough.

"Mr. Brown, the manager of a Market Harborough motor garage, who was driving, and my other friend in the car, saw it as plainly as I did. It was travelling at least twenty miles an hour, easily and steadily, and appeared to be ensuering the helm like a ship.

"Whoever the inventor may be he seems to have made more progress than any British aeronaut. I cannot doubt the evidence of my own senses, and my two companions, both practical men, are convinced that the Peterborough district contains the home of the airship."

TEST BALLOONS FOUND.

Mr. Allen's interesting experience is vouched for by his friends, who were as astonished as he was to see this clipper of the clouds. I learn that several toy air balloons have been found recently in the neighbourhood, suggesting that the aeronauts are sending up miniature balloons to test the air currents before starting out on their night flights.

One thing is certain--the airship is not filled with coal gas, for the secret of its location would have leaked out had the resources of any local gas works been taxed. The popular theory is that hydrogen manufactured privately by the inventor is the lifting power, and that a light and powerful motor has been invented.

All who have seen the flights agree that the airship can be steered easily. The probability is that it returns to some hidden shed or old farmhouse building when the circular night tour is ended.

The airship has not been seen to the east of Peterborough. This is accounted for by the fact that the waters of the Wash and the open German Ocean would render flight in that direction more dangerous.

FURTHER EVIDENCE.

The following additional evidence regarding the airship's appearance has been obtained by "Express" correspondents:--

Terrington Marsh, near King's Lynn.--Airships with searchlights seen by a number of persons, including two labourers named Hicks and Harrison.

Peakirk.--Report of its appearance confirmed by Mr. Neaverson, a Peterborough tradesman.

THE AIRSHIP MYSTERY. / SEARCH FOR THE HOME OF THE "FLY-BY-NIGHT." / FLIGHT FROM THE SEA. //

A remarkable new feature of the mystery of the airship which has flown over the eastern counties in the night time is ~~xxx~~ reported.

It has been seen coming from the direction of the sea.

A brother-in-law of Mr. Herbert Neaverson, a prominent Peterborough tradesman, saw the airship near his home at Peakirk in the early hours of the morning.

"My house is near the loop line of the Great Northern Railway," he states, and I thought I heard a light engine coming. Then I heard a swishing sound overhead and the throbbing of a motor.

"When I looked up I saw a peculiar light coming from the direction of the sea. It was too dark to discern the shape of the airship."

This observer was so impressed by what he had seen that he at once travelled to London and informed the War Office.

In addition, the mysterious aeroplane has been seen at Clacton and Southend.

Mr. Egerton Free, of Kingscliff, Great Clacton, writes to the "Express" that he saw it ten days ago in the dusk.

"I was attracted by an oblong machine hovering quite near my house," he says. "It seemed to remain stationary for a few minutes only, then disappeared towards Frinton."

AT SOUTHEND.

Miss H.M. Boville, of Warrior-square, Southend-on-Sea, writes to the "Express" that she observed it at about 11.30 p.m. on Sunday night.

"I was looking out of my window when I noticed, low down in the sky, a large, black object, oblong in shape." She adds: "It was almost motionless at the time, but after a minute or two it suddenly rose higher and began to travel w very swiftly in the direction of London, showing for a second or two a couple of very brilliant lights.

"It was coming from the direction of Shoeburyness and passed over my home and square."

The "Automobile Owner and Steam and Electric Car Review" states:--

There are people possessing expert knowledge of aeronautics and familiar with the shapes of the Continental airships who are almost convinced that the mysterious midnight visitor in East Anglia is the German Cross-Pariseau airship, which prior to the recent success of the Zeppelin craft was regarded as the most serviceable military airship in Germany.

A search for the airship's home is being undertaken by motorists and others in all parts of East Anglia.

FURTHER DESCRIPTIONS.

"Express" Special Correspondent. / Stamford, Wednesday Night. /

The strange aeroplane has been seen in the sky over historic Burghley House, the home of the Marquis of Exeter, by Stamford town.

It was Mr. Cole, of Bath-road, Stamford, who observed the searchlights of the airship over Burghley Park. He told me this evening what he saw.

"I was in the park on Sunday night," he said. "It was just before eleven o'clock, when suddenly I saw a light in the sky over the edge of the woods.

"It rose and fell seven or eight times quickly, and I saw that the light came from some dark cigar shape in the sky. The airship, or whatever it was, must have been moving quickly, for first I saw the light on one side of the park, a few minutes later it was on the other side, and then it came back again.

"I watched it for about ten minutes before it disappeared in the clouds in the direction of Peterborough."

Lord Exeter, the owner of Burghley House, said, when I saw him later: "I have heard that this airship has been seen, but I was away from Burghley over Sunday and did not see it myself.

"The notion of such an aeroplane being over the eastern counties is an amazing one. It sounds impossible, but with modern progress and scientific skill there are many startling surprises."

The airship was seen high in the clouds over Northampton by Mr. Kelf, of the Pytchley Motor-car Company.

"My attention was called to it by my wife one night about nine," he said. "We were in the garden, and saw a torpedo-shaped airship with lights going rapidly over the town.

"The airship was going in the direction of Kettering, and I was so interested that I got my bicycle out and tried to follow its course. It disappeared in a few moments, however, and I had to give up the chase."

Another view of it was obtained by Mr. Beacon, of Wisbech, who is now living in High-street, Market Harborough.

"I was cycling at night near Wisbech," he stated. "When I was outside March on the return journey I heard a 'whir-whir-whir' above my head, and then the sound of motor machinery.

"I saw ~~xxx~~ a dark shape driving by overhead, but I could not tell the direction it was taking as it was too dark at the time."

In the marshy Isle of Ely the aeroplane has also been seen by fennemen.

Many motorists are taking long night rides in the hope of catching a glimpse through night glasses of the fly-by-night, and thus being able to trace it to its hiding place.

1909 May 14 (Fri) London Daily Express, p. 1. (card 1)

MYSTERY OF THE AIR. / WAR OFFICE SEARCH FOR THE STRANGE CRAFT. / BRILLIANT LIGHTS.

The War Office is investigating the mystery of the airship which has startled the eastern counties by its flights at night.

Among the places where fresh evidence concerning it has been obtained are:--

Coventry / Terrington Marsh / Market Harborough / Westcliff /
Pottera Bar / Peterborough / Broughton Astley /

SEEN CLOSE AT HAND. / "Express" Spec. Corresp.

King's Lynn, Thursday Night.

I have this evening traced the strange airship with flashing searchlights to the edge of the sea.

It has been seen flying along the coast in the direction of Hunstanton, across the Wash.

I motored across the Isle of Ely and the flat fen country from Peterborough to Terrington Marsh, seven miles from King's Lynn, where Frederick Harrison, of Thirty-acre Farm, saw it distinctly within a mile of the sea. His story is clear and convincing.

"I was outside New Common Marsh Farm about a quarter to ten at night when I saw the airship," he said. "I heard a whirring noise overhead, and when I looked up I saw that the fields round were lit up by a bright light."

"I was startled and wondered whatever it could be. Then I saw that the light came from a long, dark airship which was travelling swiftly overhead."

"It was low down--only a little way above the trees--so I could see it plainly. It seemed to be eighty or a hundred feet long, and I could distinguish two men on a kind of hanging platform."

"The searchlight lit up the road, the farm buildings, the trees, and everything it touched, so that it was like day. I could even read the printing on some bills on the wall. The airship passed right over New Common Marsh Farm, and went in the direction of Hunstanton, on the other side of the Wash. It was travelling very fast against the wind, and it was out of sight in a few minutes."

HEARD THE MOTOR.

Mrs. Warne, of New Common Marsh Farm, who was in her house at the time, heard the whirr of the motor as the airship, flying low, cleared the roof of the old farmhouse, and several fencemen saw the searchlights.

Mr. Strange, a London solicitor, of Peakirk, is the eye-witness who thought so seriously of what he observed that he informed the War Office. He saw the searchlight, heard the whirring of machinery, and watched the black shape appear out of the night and disappear again in the clouds.

Mr. Baxter, of New England, outside Peterborough, is another eye-witness. He was returning from the Peterborough Theatre with friends when he noticed the "fly-by-night."

"We saw a light appear in the sky," he told me. "Then we saw it was moving rapidly. It came from over Peterborough Cathedral, and was going in a northerly direction, towards Stamford."

"We could see the torpedo shape of it, but it was too high up for us to distinguish even details. I saw a faint light behind, like a searchlight, showing the sky in its wake."

"We all went on to the corner, and four or five of us ran to a gate from which we watched it crossing the Peterborough agricultural show ground."

In every little fen village along the endless hedged roads they are looking out for the night flier. The fact that it manoeuvres with ease so close to the North Sea has aroused apprehension, and I met many villagers who eagerly asked me for news.

At first the district was rather inclined to treat the airship as a joke, but the events of the last few days have led to the situation being regarded in a far more serious light. Drivers of motor-cars travelling at night have been asked to report at once any curious light or strange shape they may see in the sky.

EYE-WITNESSES.

The following are further reports from "Express" readers who have seen the airship:--

BROUGHTON ASTLEY. / To the Editor of the "Express." /

Sir,--I was walking along the road about 8:30 at night, when I heard what seemed to be a motor coming behind me. I could hear the sound getting nearer and nearer, and then, greatly to my surprise, I found it was above me.

I could hear the throbbing of the engines quite plainly, and I "traced" the sound in the air (for it was quite dark and I could not see) as it passed over me and gradually died out in the distance.

MIDLANDER. / Broughton Astley, near Rugby.

WESTCLIFF. / To the Editor of the "Express."

Sir,--I was coming home by the 8.41 train from Fenchurch-street last night, when, near Dagenham, I saw, through the carriage window, a white light in the sky.

Not until we reached Westcliff did it strike me it might be an airship. It seemed to come from the sky above Chatham.

Then suddenly I saw a second light lower down the Thames, towards London. The searchlight, from the Chatham direction actually played on our train for a few seconds. / L. RUBENS. / Winton-terrace, Westcliff, May 13.

PERIVALE. / To the Editor of the "Express."

Sir,--While my wife and I were taking a walk in the direction of Perivale on Sunday evening, April 18, we happened to look in a north-westerly direction and saw an airship travelling very fast. / WEST

EALING.

NEWMARKET.
At Newmarket races the question, "Have you seen the airship?" has been a catchword. Policemen on race duty drawn from a wide district have either seen or know people who have seen the aircraft.

COVENTRY.
The "Coventry Standard" reports that a brilliant searchlight which changed its position was seen in the sky by tramway employees and others at Foleshill.

1909 May 15 (Sat) London Daily Express, p. 1.

WHO OWNS THE AIRSHIP? / DEEPENING MYSTERY OF NOCTURNAL FLIGHTS. / GERMAN OR ENGLISH?

In reply to inquiries made at the War Office yesterday by an "Express" representative, the belief was expressed that the airship which is flying over the eastern counties is not a foreign one.

The official opinion is that it belongs to an English inventor who is conducting his experiments at night in order to keep his secret. Should the machine prove to be of value the War Office, in accordance with its policy, will be prepared to purchase it.

On the other hand, it is admitted by German experts that the airship may be a German one, and that it may have ascended from some warship in the North Sea.

A close watch is being kept at the coastguard stations on the east coast.

BERLIN'S VIEW.

By "Express" Private Wire. / Berlin, Friday, May 14.

It is admitted by German experts that the mysterious airship which has been seen hovering over the eastern coast of England may be a German airship. England possesses no such airship, and no French airship has hitherto sailed so far as the distance from Calais to Peterborough.

On the other hand, the performances of several German airships, including the Gross airship, which has made one voyage of thirteen hours, would render it possible for them to reach the English coast. At the same time it is as improbable that the German airship seen above England ascended from German soil.

An aerial voyage from Wilhelmshaven to the English coast would still be a formidable and dangerous undertaking even for the newest airships, whose performances have been excellent in bad weather.

German expert opinion is unanimous in believing that the mysterious airship ascended from some German warship in the North Sea, on which it lands again after each of its flights.

Last December it was announced that the Imperial Ministry of Marine had decided to order four airship cruisers from the Zeppelin Airship Construction Company of Friedrichshafen. Each of the four aerial warships was to be from 12,000 to 14,000 cubic metres in capacity. They were to be built under Count Zeppelin's personal supervision, and all the latest improvements in Zeppelin's system were to be embodied in them. The intention was to station two at Wilhelmshaven and two at Kiel.

FLOATING BALLOON-SHEDS.

Simultaneously with the construction of the four aerial cruisers the supreme naval authorities proposed to construct a new type of floating docks which, when covered with roofs, were to become floating balloon sheds. Shortly after the original announcement on this subject was made it was supplemented by the news that in view of the fact that the construction of four Zeppelin airships would take some considerable time, the naval authorities would in the meantime purchase smaller airships either of the Gross or Parseval type.

It is quite possible for airships of this type to have been constructed since December, as they can be constructed in twelve weeks.

Another striking point is that Parseval and Gross airships are portable and could have been conveyed on board warships in separate parts without creating any attention at the time. Owing to the extreme secrecy which has been observed on this point, it is not possible to say whether the German Navy already possess one or more airships of the Gross or Parseval type, but there are many reasons for believing that this is the case. Without actually asserting it as a fact, I am able to make the following statements on authority which has generally proved to be reliable:--

(1) It is believed that the German Navy possess one or more small airships of four or five thousand cubic metres capacity.

(2) That experiments have already been carried out at sea with these ships.

(3) These experiments have revealed the possibility of using ships as airship stations, which means that airships can ascend from them and land upon them after an aerial voyage.

SEEN AT SANDRINGHAM.

"Express" Special Correspondent. / Hunstanton, Friday Night.

The coastguard stations along the east coast are watching for the airship with searchlights which has been seen coming from the direction of the sea.

I motored to-day along the side of the Wash from Terrington Marsh to the North Sea in the direction the night-flier was making when it was last seen circling over East Anglia, and found watchers all along the shore. A keen look-out is being kept day and night, and any further movements of the strange aircraft will be at once reported to the Admiralty and the War Office.

I passed through Sandringham on my way here, and learnt that the airship had been seen passing over the fir plantations of the King's model estate in the direction of Hunstanton. Servants of the royal household have been closely questioned whether they saw it.

The keeper of the Hunstanton lighthouse told me that a close watch is being kept over the sea and land round this exposed corner of the coast.

"The coastguard stations are all in telephonic communication with one another," he said, "and any suspicious or unusual appearance in the sky will be at once reported. We have a wireless station here, and we could get into instant touch with the authorities if necessary."

"About two years ago a German balloon, the Ziegler, was carried across Hunstanton and came down in the Wash district."

The "fly-by-night" has been seen over almost every county in East Anglia, and I have had news of its passage in Leicestershire, Rutland, shire, Cambridgeshire, and Norfolk. It has swiftly come and gone, and its flying visit has opened the eyes of many towns to the amazing possibilities of a future war in the air.

1909 May 17 (Mon) London Daily Express, p. 1.

AIRSHIP MYSTERY GROWS. / SEEN SAILING TOWARDS THE WASH. /
Although reliable evidence concerning the mysterious airship which has been flying over the eastern counties at night continues to accumulate, the mystery of its home remains unsolved.

Among the most important statements regarding the airship is that supplied by Major Mayfield, of The House, Pinchbeck-road, Spalding, who writes to the "Express" that he has seen it near Crowland. His letter runs:--

While motoring home from Crowland along the banks of Cowbit Wash I was surprised and somewhat alarmed to hear a peculiar whirring in the air--very low down.

I thought it was a flock of the wild ducks which frequent this part of the fens. But this illusion was quickly disposed of as I then saw a strong, powerful light and a big black oblong object just overhead, and distinctly heard men talking in a strong guttural tone.

It passed over Cowbit Wash, and then across the shipping in the River Welland in a line for Cowthorne, towards the Wash.

My object in writing is to ask if some inquiry could not be made by the Government.

What may be a second airship was seen on Friday at Newport, Monmouthshire, by Mr. M. Lewis, manager of the Corporation Stores, Corporation-street, and Victor Dan Benjamin Beauiland, and Albert Masters, who were working at Messrs. Smith's Star Mills at the time.

"We saw it shortly after one o'clock a.m. when we were standing on the quay wall," Day told an "Express" representative yesterday. "It was of torpedo shape, and lights were flashing from either end. It appeared to be stationary, and after ten minutes the forelight suddenly went out, and the other grew dim and gradually disappeared."

[Germany to build huge aerial war fleet.]
1909 May 18 (Tue) London Daily Express, p. 1. (card 1)

MYSTERY OF THE AIR. / IMPORTANT CLUE TO THE NIGHT-FLYING CRAFT. / LOST "FENDER." /

In spite of the efforts of certain disappointed newspapers to discredit the reports concerning the mysterious airship which have been furnished by "Express" correspondents, the fact of its existence becomes more firmly established daily, and the mystery increases as efforts to discover its home fail to meet with success. /

THE DISCOVERY.

"Express" Special Correspondent. / Clacton, Monday Night.

A remarkable discovery, which may quickly reveal the identity of the night-flying airship with searchlights which has been constantly seen crossing the east coast, has followed the passing of the mysterious craft over Clacton.

A foreign airship fender or buffer, plainly marked "Moller, Fabrik, Bremen," has been found on the cliffs near Little Holland Gap--opposite High Cliff House, the residence of Mr. Egerton Stanley Free. The curious appliance, which appears to have been dropped overboard by aeronauts attempting to land, was found by Mrs. Free the morning after her husband had seen the airship passing swiftly by night over Clacton in the direction of Frinton-on-Sea.

The importance of the discovery has been realized by the War Office, the coastguard authorities, and all who have seen the buffer, and an exhaustive inquiry is now being held into all the circumstances.

High Cliff is a large modern villa standing in its own grounds on the cliff, nearly two miles out of Clacton. A wilderness of flat open country stretches along the coast beyond the house, and wooden steps lead from the grassland in front of the villa down the cliff to the beach, forty feet below.

It was at the top of the steps, high out of the reach of the tide, that the curious object was found in the grass.

Mr. Egerton Free, whose City address is Broad-street House, told me exactly what he saw.

"About a quarter to ten on Friday night, May 7, I was in the stable yard before locking the house up," he said. "I looked up, and in the sky I saw a long, dark, torpedo-shaped balloon, high in the air overhead. It was a clear, fairly light night, and I could see everything most distinctly.

"The airship was travelling swiftly in the direction of Frinton, and was showing two bright lights. I stood and watched it for some time until it disappeared.

BUFFER DESCRIBED.

Mrs. Egerton Free stated what happened next.

"I was out early on Saturday morning," she said, "and crossed from the house to go down our private steps opposite to the beach. When I got to the cliff edge at the top of the steps I saw a most curious shape sticking up in the sandy grass.

"It looked like a large, slightly flattened football, with a steel bar pushed right through it. I picked it up--it was not very heavy--and brought it into the house.

"The contrivance is about five feet long from end to end. The central bar is of hollow steel, with an end round and flat like the buffer of a railway engine.

"The ball part is about three feet long, oval shaped, made of hard grey rubber, and corded, net fashion, with twine, while the words, 'Moller Fabrik, Bremen,' are painted on the ball in black letters.

"The steel ends project about a foot on either side of the ball, and when I found it the sharp end was sticking in the grass and the ball was on its side.

"When the coastguard authorities were informed of the discovery they examined the contrivance closely, and we were asked to keep it carefully pending an examination by Government experts. We have been told that the article, which is unlike anything my husband or I have ever seen before, is a fender or buffer which aeronauts use to lessen the shock of concussion when they land from a balloon."

"A further remarkable thing has happened since the discovery," Mrs. Free continued. "We have seen two men or foreign appearance wandering around the house as though anxiously looking for something. When they saw they were observed they walked away, but a maidservant I sent on an errand told me that one of them was still lingering about the premises."

AERIAL SEARCHLIGHTS AT SEA.

MYSTERIOUS DIRIGIBLE SEEN BY A SKIPPER. / (Daleiel's Agency.) / Berli Monday, May 17.

The "Lokalanzeiger" prints a despatch from Christiania with reference to what it calls the phantom passage of a German airship over the North Sea.

Captain Egenæs [?], master of the steamer Olva, trading between Blych and Sarpsborg, reports that at night when the vessel was only a short distance out from the English side, a large airship carrying five searchlights suddenly appeared, and, hovering directly above the vessel, directed all its lights on the steamer's bridge.

The airship was within hail, but gave no answer to the challenge, and owing to the blinding glare of the searchlights it was difficult to distinguish any details.

Suddenly the airship swung off after another steamer a mile or so away, on which also the searchlights were directed. The airship afterwards made off at a sharp rate towards the south.

FURTHER EVIDENCE.

A thoroughly reliable witness as to the presence of the airship was forthcoming yesterday in the person of Captain G. A. Hervey, Local Government Board inspector for the Eastern Division, who states that when at Broome, near Eye, Suffolk, at a quarter to eight he observed a cigar-shaped balloon sailing towards Lowestoft at a height of about a quarter of a mile. It was three or four miles distant, and travelled in an easterly direction against a strong north-east wind.

LOWESTOFT.

The airship was seen passing over Lowestoft in a south-westerly direction early on Sunday morning, by Mrs. Wigg. Other residents, including Mr. Theophilus Plowman, heard the throbbing of the motor as they saw the searchlight.

The skipper of a trawler states that while at sea on Saturday night an airship showing lights passed over his vessel. He showed a flare which was answered by a flash from the airship.

YARIMOUTH.

Mrs. Fricks, a nurse, says she saw a balloon-like object hovering over the northern outskirts of the town on Saturday morning. It showed first a white light, then a green, and then a red.

NUNEATON.

According to the "Midland Counties Tribune," an airship was seen over Nuneaton on Thursday night by Mr. Alfred Moreton [?], of Bridge-street.

1909 May 19 (Wed) London Daily Express, p. 1.

BALLOON LIGHTS AT SEA. / REPORTS BY LOWESTOFT SKIPPER. / CREW'S STATEMENT. / "Express" Special Correspondent. / Lowestoft, Tuesday Night.

There is now weighty evidence that the mysterious airship which has been seen by so many persons flying over the east coast has also been observed at sea.

The skipper of a Lowestoft trawler has reported to his owners that he sighted an airship at sea on Saturday night. The owners vouch for the accuracy of the skipper's story, which is borne out by the crew, and the matter has been notified to the coastguards.

The skipper reported that he was on deck with other members of the crew in the North Sea when they heard the "thump-thump-thump" of an engine, and saw a black shape overhead. He recognized it as an airship, and thought it was about to descend on his vessel in the darkness.

He at once called to one of the crew for a flare-light, which he waved to and fro overhead, and the searchlight of the airship flashed as if in answer to the signal before the black shape disappeared.

When the skipper reported these facts to his owners he had not heard that such an airship had been seen elsewhere.

Mr. George Burwood, the skipper of the Lowestoft trawler Red Rose which arrived at Lowestoft yesterday, reports that when the vessel was about six miles off Southwold on Monday night, between 8.30 and nine o'clock, he observed a balloon high up in the air. It carried no visible lights, and made no sound.

It was running before the wind in a southeasterly direction, but eventually got out to sea, and went away in the direction of Ostend.

On my journey from Clacton-on-Sea to Lowestoft I discussed the question with Mr. H. Rider Haggard, the novelist, who lives at Ditchingham.

"The existence of the airship appears to be vouched for by persons whose word it is impossible to doubt," he said, "and the mystery should certainly be cleared up. It has been said to be a foreign airship. It is by no means impossible that a foreign airship should cross the coast line at certain points without the coastguards' knowledge."

Mrs. Egerton Free was again visited at Clacton to-day by a foreigner, who was most anxious to see the airship fender she discovered in front of her house. It remains under lock and key.

IN THE CLOUDS. / THE MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIPS: / NIGHT SCENE ON A WELSH MOUNTAIN. /

Recently many remarkable stories have been current in various parts of the Eastern Counties of an object having been seen flying by night. It is affirmed that it has shown two bright lights, and that sometimes the noise of machinery working has been heard, suggesting to observers that the apparition may be an airship. These reports have come from many coast towns washed by the North Sea and from several inland centres, while some sailors on board two ships assert that they saw this mystery of the clouds pass over their heads one night. Now the scene is suddenly shifted to South Wales, and the observations of eyewitnesses are forwarded by the correspondent of the Press Association at Cardiff, where the remarkable object is stated to have appeared yesterday morning.

Nor does this complete the incident. A man—a showman, to be exact—affirms that on Tuesday night—that is, immediately before the mysterious flight startled the men at the docks—he was crossing Caerphilly Mountain when he came across two men in heavy furs apparently repairing a "long thing on the ground." At last they jumped into a "kind of carriage" and disappeared into the air.

It may be added that at about five o'clock yesterday morning several workmen visited the office of the Western Mail, at Cardiff, and related their stories of the phantom ship of the air. Their narrations agree in all essential details, and a label, in French, found on the scene of the showman's night experience, is now in the office of our contemporary.

These are the two stories. They are printed below as interesting contributions to the mystery of the phantom ship, or ships, of the air.

The facts of the occurrence are set forth in the following official statement which has been made to the Cardiff Docks Company by Mr. Robert Westlake, signalman at the King's Junction of the Queen Alexandra Dock:

"At 1.15 this morning (May 19), while attending to my duty signalling trains at the King's Junction Queen Alexandra Dock, I was startled by a weird object flying in the air. In appearance it represented a boat of cigar shape, making a whizzing noise. It was travelling at a great rate and was elevated at a distance of half a mile, making for the eastward."

There were many men working at the time loading the [ms.] Arndale, and the airship was seen by most of them. Messrs. W. Morrison (policeman), C. Harwood (traffic foreman), W. John, C. Hayman, J. Rogers, and C. Bray (coal tippers), and the third mate of the Arndale all testified to the facts recorded above.

The airship came from the direction of Newport, took a curve over the docks, and passed over the channel towards Weston, being clearly in view for a minute or two. I could, it is stated, have been seen longer but that the lights on board were suddenly extinguished. "Had the Dowlais Works blast been on," observed one of the eye-witnesses, "we should had the airship clearly discovered, but we saw enough to put at rest all doubt about it. The night was clear, though there was no moon, and the airship could be distinctly seen, and the whizzing of its motor was heard by us all." Several other night workmen who have been interviewed corroborate the story of Westlake.

SHOWMAN'S EXPERIENCE. / AERONAUTS DISCOVERED. /

Mr. C. Lethbridge, a showman, of 4, Roland-street, Cardiff, walked into the Western Mail office yesterday afternoon and made the following statement:

"I had been to Senghenydd (a colliery village) and was crossing Caerphilly Mountain in my spring cart about eleven p.m., when I was surprised to see a long tube-shaped affair lying on the grass on the roadside, with two men busily engaged with something near by. They attracted my close attention because of their peculiar get-up. They appeared to have big heavy fur coats, and fur caps fitting tightly over their heads. I was rather frightened, but I continued to go on until I was within twenty yards of them, and then my idea as to their clothing was confirmed.

"The noise of my cart seemed to attract them, and when they saw me they jumped up and jabbered furiously to each other in strange 'lingo,' Welsh or something else, it was certainly not English. They hurriedly collected something from the ground, and then I was really frightened. The long thing on the ground rose up slowly. I was standing still at the time quite amazed, and when it was hanging a few feet off the ground the men jumped into a kind of little carriage suspended from it, and gradually the whole affair and men rose in the air in zig-zag fashion.

"When they had cleared the telegraph-wires that pass over the mountain, two lights like electric lamps shone out, and the thing went higher into the air, and sailed away towards Cardiff. I was too frightened to move for a time, but I pulled myself together, and as soon as I came home told my people about what I had seen."

"What were they doing when you met them?" Lethbridge was asked by the reporter.

"I can't imagine, but I have been thinking since that they must have been doing something to the gear of the thing, for they appeared to be picking some things up in a hurry, and they certainly did not look pleased to see me."

"Did you hear anything besides their voices?"

"Oh, yes; when the thing went into the air, I distinctly saw what looked like a couple of wheels on the bottom of a little carriage, and at the tail-end of it was a fan whirring away as you hear a motor-car do sometimes."

In order to test Lethbridge's story, a pressman was despatched to the scene of the incident, and there found signs as if a ploughshare, or some such hard contrivance, had been drawn across it. There were torn papers lying about and a red label, to which was attached a chain and small plug. On the label is printed in French a statement, containing the military term "obus," which means a shrapnel, and notice is called to the fact that a small pin attached to it is to be used to drive back the shrapnel from the valve when the shrapnel is fixed on its seat, and gives directions how to detach the pin, and fix it to a tube at a small extremity.

A glance over clips of newspapers found on the spot revealed the very remarkable fact that almost every one of them contained reference to airships or to the German army. For instance, a piece of a weekly newspaper has an article with the headings: "War in the Air; Government appoints a Committee of Experts; Bid for Supremacy; Wright Brothers have a Conference with Mr. Kaldane," &c. A piece of The Daily Telegraph has reference to the German Emperor and the Army. /

According to the East Anglian Daily Times, the skipper of the Lowestoft smack Superb, which is expected to return to port to-day, will, so it is said, report having seen an airship passing over the North Sea, with which he exchanged signals.

1909 May 21 (Fri) London Daily Express, p. 1. (card 1)

MYSTERY OF THE AIR. / AMAZING INTERVIEW WITH MR. PERCIVAL SPENCER. / THE SOLUTION. / FIVE MAN-LIFTING AIRSHIPS SOLD. / SCORES OF MINIATURE NIGHT-FLYERS. / WHO OWNS THEM? /

A statement made by Mr. Percival Spencer, the well-known aeronaut, to the "Express" last night should afford an amply explanation of the strange appearances of airships in different parts of England and WALES, account of which have been entertaining and mystifying the country since May 11.

The explanation, which is based on facts, is of a twofold nature, and provides both a comic and a serious side. The cloud of small airships which has been infesting the heavens for the past ten days can only be accounted for by the supposition that some enterprising firm in search of a colossal advertisement has been purchasing large quantities of Mr. Spencer's model airships.

These model airships are twenty-five feet in length, and are lifted by the rarefied air with which they are inflated, being heated by the flame of a spirit lamp. This flame would account for the fact that all the witnesses who declare that they have seen airships in the sky at night state that the aircraft carried lights.

MANY MODELS SOLD.

Naturally it was not to be expected that Mr. Spencer would betray the confidences of his clients, but at the same time, he admitted that he has quite recently disposed of great numbers of these twenty-five-foot-long airships, which are made on the same model as the larger man-lifting machines.

Nor, when the matter is considered in all its bearings, can it be supposed that the airship which have been seen over such places as Southend, Clacton, Teddington, and Blackheath can portend anything except the concentrated effort of some particular set of individuals or some enterprising firm.

A most profound impression, too, on a public unaccustomed to the sight of airships in the skies at night could be made at very small expense. The average twenty-five-foot model airship manufactured by the Spencer Brothers at Highbury costs only ten shillings and sixpence! On the other hand, Mr. Spencer admits that he has within the last year disposed of five large man-lifting airships.

Two of these he can still trace. One was sold to a firm of enterprising manufacturers whose headquarters are in the eastern counties—over which district it must be remembered the appearances of airships have been constantly noted—while the other was disposed of to a gentleman living at Cardiff.

WELSH INVENTOR.

This was Mr. E.T. Willows, of Cardiff, who for some years past has been perfecting his dirigible balloons, and some of whose patents have been acquired by the War Office. He recently gave specifications to Messrs. Spencer Brothers, with an order for a dirigible balloon. The order was given about a month ago.

Mr. Spencer said that by reference to his books, and by inquiries, he could probably trace the other three. In his recollections of the transaction the airships were disposed of to inventors and experimenters, who were largely prompted to make the purchases from a spirit of sport.

Whether these gentlemen retain the airships which Mr. Spencer sold to them is, of course, still to be discovered.

It is not Mr. Spencer's practice to sell an airship complete in every respect. In the majority of cases he simply builds what may be termed the "shell"; that is to say, the gas-bag with the frame beneath.

Every experimenter in airships has his own particular theories as to the proper propellers with which to work the a "shell," and Mr. Spencer's interest in the matter ceases when he has sold the gas-bag and the frame.

He will undertake to supply an airship costing £1,000, and capable of carrying six men, down to a toy model costing one penny.

MAN-LIFTING AIRSHIPS.

It may, however, be taken that the average man-lifting machine which Mr. Spencer manufactures cost £250. These airships are able to lift two men, and a certain amount of ballast or cargo.

Mr. Spencer affirmed that, given a favourable wind, an airship such as he manufactures could be made to pass across any city. He was very positive, too, as to the capacity of such an airship for causing destruction, as the following statement shows:—

"I could carry with me a quantity of dynamite, or some other high explosive, and cross London, and could, without any difficulty, cause great destruction."

Since the appearance of the mysterious airships in the sky first began to rouse the interest of the country, a good deal of stress has been laid on the fact that the strange craft might be of German origin. This is a view which has never been held by the "Express," and Mr. Spencer himself regards the idea as ridiculous, saying that it would be impossible for any airship of which he had any knowledge to cross over from Germany and return daily whence it came. Nor could he imagine the existence of any airship possessed of a means of transit so rapid that it could be seen in two different parts of the country at intervals so brief as to suggest an almost simultaneous appearance.

Asked as to the possibility of a small airship having for its headquarters a raft or a specially constructed steamer on the high seas, Mr. Spencer shook his head in doubt.

"It might be possible, but I do not think that it is in the least probable."

On the other hand, when it was put to him, Mr. Spencer said quite frankly that it was not his business to inquire into the nationality or nature of his customers. If he received an order for twenty man-lifting airships to-morrow he would do his best to execute it without delay. Nor could he tell whether those airships were purchased by a foreign country through agents resident in England. Mr. Spencer is, in fact, a Free Trader in a Free Trade country, as witness the fact that he has only recently executed certain orders for Count Zeppelin.

MANY WITNESSES.

The following list includes the names of places at which the airships have been seen:--

- Police Constable Kettle, Peterborough.
- Police Constable Hudson, Mr. J.R. Jackman, and Mr. J.A. Smith (manager Eastern Counties Dairy Institute), Ipswich.
- Mrs. Rush, Bradfield St. George's (W. Suffolk).
- Mr. C.W. Allen and Mr. Brown (manager motor garage), Market Harborough.
- Mr. Hicks and Mr. F. Harrison, farm labourers, Terrington Marsh, near King's Lynn.
- Mr. Neaverson, Peakirk.
- Mr. Banyard, Peterborough.
- Mr. Egerton Free, Great Clacton.
- Miss Boville, Southend.
- Mr. Deacon, Wisbech.
- Mr. Cole, Stamford.
- Mrs. & Warne, New Common Marsh Farm, near King's Lynn.
- Mr. Strange, Peakirk.
- Mr. Baxter, New England, Peterborough.
- Mr. L. Rubens, Westcliff.
- Mr. H. Lewis, Mr. V.D.B. Bennison, and Mr. Albert Masters, Newport, Mon.
- Captain Egeness, steamship Olva (trading Blyth-Sarpsborg).
- Captain C. A. Hervey, Broome.
- Mrs. Wigg and Mr. Theophilus Plowman, Lowestoft.
- Mrs. Fricks (nurse), Yarmouth.
- Mr. Alfred Moreton, Nunehaton.
- Messrs. C. Lethbridge, Robert Westlake, W. Morrison, C. Harwood, William John, J. Rogers, and C. Bray, Cardiff.
- Mr. Branch, Felixstowe.
- Mr. and Mrs. Turner, Catton-next-Norwich.
- Miss Gill, Mr. Duncombe, and Mrs. and Mrs. (sic) Henry Hall, Peterborough.
- Mr. and Mrs. Garth Fisher, Pontypool.
- Mr. A. Kirby and Mr. Burgess, Great Warley, near Brentwood.
- Mr. Oliver L. Jones, Monmouth.
- Mr. W. Smith, Mr. F. Simmons, Mr. Joseph Westherdon, and Mr. W.F. Pilcher, Herne Bay.
- Mr. Hadley, Framlingham.
- Mr. Chatten, Tharston, near Tasburgh.

With this evidence before one it is impossible any longer to doubt that the airships which have been described as scareships, phantom airships, and the like, did in reality exist.

If, as it must be supposed, the majority of them were simply model airships of from twenty-five to thirty feet in length, they must have been by this time either burnt up, or have fallen to the ground in some unfrequented spot, or have fallen into the sea.

ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN.

Who is the enterprising firm that has thought out this delightful method of arousing public interest before it shows its hand? That is an enrossing question, but a far more important one is this: Did or did not the authors of this flight of balloons think out their plan of campaign before the real man-lifting airship manifested itself?

For such an airship has been undoubtedly operating over the eastern counties. A fortnight before May 11 reports of a large airship came in from distant parts of East Anglia, and while it is inadvisable at the moment to give the exact whereabouts of the particular airship which was responsible for the first alarm, it may be said that a man-lifting airship is at present quartered not a hundred miles from Peterborough.

Asked as to the means whereby large model balloons could be sent up at short intervals at different points, Mr. Spencer agreed to the theory that in all probability they were worked by a couple of men in charge of a motor-car.

While he would not give the names of firms which had actually purchased model flying machines for him, Mr. Spencer did, in confidence, give to a representative of the "Express" the names of several firms who had already consulted him on the question of advertising by means of model airships.

To the point-blank question whether he, Mr. Spencer, was responsible for the whole affair in order that he might bring home to the public the fact that dirigible balloons could be manufactured cheaply in this country, Mr. Spencer returned an emphatic denial. "No," he said, "this is not an advertising scheme invented by me for my own benefit. At the same time I will be quite honest and admit that I shall not be sorry if the British public realises that if only the money were forthcoming we need not be so miserably behind Germany as we are at present."

NOT AN AIRSHIP "FENDER."

The mystery of the object found by Mrs. Egerton Free at Clacton is solved. What was stated to be an airship "fender" turns out to be what is known as a "reindeer buoy" used by warships for "marking" or in connection with target practice. It has been claimed by an officer of H.M.S. Blake, destroyer depot ship, as belonging to one of its flotilla.

The marking on the buoy, which was first understood to be Moller Fabrik ~~Bremen~~ ~~Bremen~~, is now officially stated to be "Moller Fabrik Drammen." Drammen is in Norway.

It would be interesting to know how a buoy of Norwegian manufacture came to be used in the British Fleet.

[Illustration of Spencer's man-lifting airship]

Sat. May 22, p. 7--The Phantom Airship / Discovered at Yeovil / Sketched by our Artist. / (From our own Correspondent at Yeovil).

The chief sensation of the past few days here has been the presence of a mysterious airship floating about the neighbourhood. Considerable alarm was felt last night owing to the idea getting abroad that the "vessel" was of German origin. It turns out however, that the airship is nothing more dangerous than a trim little dirigible balloon sent up by the proprietors of St. Ivel Cheese for the purpose of advertising that delicious article. ...

1909 May 21 (Fri) Daily Telegraph (London), p. 12. (card 1)

AIRSHIP MYSTERY. / FURTHER EXPERIENCES OF EYE-WITNESSES. /

There is further news of the mysterious phantom ship of the air. What it is or signifies is unknown. A hoax, a clever scheme of advertising--whatever it is, the mysterious appearances in various parts of the country continue to excite curiosity. Close upon the experiences in South Wales, which were published yesterday, came statements from Norwich, Dublin, Tottenham, and Herne Bay, where witnesses affirm that it has been seen. The stories are alike in essential details, whether they come from east, south, or west; everywhere it is agreed that the object is cigar-shaped, and travels at a great height, while many persons state that it flashes once or two bright lights, and that the whirring of machinery is audible. /

OVER THE BROADS. /

In Norwich and district various persons state that they saw mysterious lights and heard strange sounds from mid-air late on Wednesday night. All accounts place the appearance of lights at between half past eleven and midnight, and all declare that the mysterious airship was travelling almost directly from north to south against the wind. The lights appear to have been first seen at Wroxham, about seven miles north-east from Norwich.

A gentleman cycling home to a neighbouring village about half-past eleven had dismounted to relight his lamp when a flash-light of great power fell upon him from a great height. The light was so brilliant that he could not discern the body to which it was attached, and from the fact that he heard no noise, he was of the opinion that the object was a great way up. For fully half a minute the light remained upon him. It was next seen by two young men at Sproveston, a village about three miles north of Norwich, and then the airship appears to have travelled over Norwich, still going in a southerly direction. Mrs. Turner, of Traverse-street, New Catton, Norwich, tells such the same tale.

A grocer's assistant named Chatten relates that he was cycling home. When in the parish of Tharston he was dazzled by a bright light shining from right above him. "The trees and hedges were lit up brilliantly. I have seen a naval searchlight at Harwich, and I should suppose that what I saw was something of that sort, but there was a bluish tinge about it, and it did not appear to me so strong as the naval lights. It seemed to be switched off again after only a few seconds. Getting off my bicycle, and staring upwards, I saw a long cigar-shaped object, looking little thicker at the blunt end than a cigar, some 300 or 400 feet above me; it was soaring upwards, the tapering end going foremost, and was moving rapidly in the direction of Norwich. On the under side was what I should call an iron bar supporting a sort of framework, with a yellow light shining at each end. I could not see any men upon the framework, nor could I hear any buzzing sound, such as a motor would cause. But that is not to be wondered at, because, although the night was still, the thing was travelling at a great height. The sky was rather dark, but there was light enough for me to see the airship plainly outlined against it. I do not speak with any misgiving on the subject. I am confident about what I saw." /

LIGHTS AT HERNE BAY. /

People at Herne Bay declare that an airship was seen hovering over the district on Thursday of last week. Mr. W. Smith, of Flora Villa, West Cliff, states that about nine o'clock on that night he saw a brilliant light high over the sea, which appeared to be moving about ten or twelve miles per hour. He called to his wife to witness the spectacle, and shortly afterwards he lost sight of it. A neighbour at West Cliff told him he had witnessed the same phenomenon. Mr. Simmons, a photographer, of 18, Minster-drive, with his wife the same night saw brilliant lights in the sky, apparently attached to a cigar-shaped object, which was travelling south, having evidently come over the sea. The noise was like the rustling of a silk dress.

eastern coast must have been blown inland and have dropped somewhere. But no traces of any have been found.

Our Cardiff Correspondent reports: The amazing story told by Mr. Lethbridge, a Cardiff showman, of his adventure with two men in charge of an airship on Caerphilly Mountain late on Wednesday night has increased the mystery of this nocturnal visitor. Lethbridge is a very respectable man, not by any means given to romancing. He swears by his statement that he saw two men in fur coats and caps, and that when they saw him they hurriedly took flight in their airship. It will be remembered that a Press representative found near the spot a pin attached to a red label, with directions in French. It is stated that such a pin is of a type used with a motor-car tyre.

In discussing the general situation with an "Express" representative yesterday Mr. Percival Spencer said:-- "People who disregard the aerial problem to-day are lacking in intelligence and patriotism."

OSTEND FISHERMEN'S REPORT. / BRUSSELS, Thursday Night. According to the Ostend Gazette, some Ostend fishermen returning from the Iceland fishing grounds in steam trawlers declare that they saw a dirigible balloon manoeuvring on the night of the 16th inst., about ten miles from Hull.--Reuter. /

"Given a sufficient number of airships any Continental Power could invade England from the air to-morrow."

The Michelin Tyre Company, who recognize the French label found near Cardiff as one used by them, write to point out that the pin to which it is attached is a feature of their type of valve, and add: "We know by Mr. Lethbridge's statement that the airship in question is provided with a carriage, and we also know that earlier types of aerostats and aeroplanes were fitted with bicycle wheels, to give them their first impetus. It would appear, therefore, that the mysterious airship was fitted with Michelin tyre cycle tyres, all of which are provided with this type of valve. If this is the true explanation, our visitors must have come recently from the other side of the Channel, as the labels with French wording are only distributed by our French houses. The only alternative explanation would be that a motorist who had recently purchased Michelin tubes in France had dropped the label in the vicinity."

"Of course, certain favourable weather conditions would be necessary, and it is unlikely that all the airships would reach this country. In the past," Mr. Spencer continued, "England has been saved over and over again by the fact that she is an island, and this advantageous geographical position may be her salvation in the future. The sea is cold and the sun above it is hot, which results in constant strong draughts crossing and recrossing this country."

Evidently the mysterious airship is still flying in South Wales, for it was seen again on Wednesday night a few miles away from Pontypool, which is not more than twenty miles distant from Caerphilly.

PROBLEM OF THE FUTURE. "This is a state of affairs particularly antagonistic to successful aerial navigation. When, however, the aeronauts of the future have thoroughly mastered the upper atmosphere of this country they will be in a most advantageous position when they have to meet the aeronauts hailing from the plains of Europe where the winds are much more steady. We may yet live to see the day when an invading armada of airships is dispersed by the winds as was the armada of the Spanish."

A Birmingham correspondent telegraphs: For several nights people living in Small Heath, a suburb of Birmingham, have seen what is stated to be an air ship passing over the district. It is described as cigar-shaped, but carried no light. /

"It is not, however, wise to rely upon a piece of luck such as this, and I would earnestly appeal to the people of this country to give this question of aerial navigation their fullest consideration. It is true that the Germans are a long way ahead of us, but for the sum of 140,000 I would guarantee to reproduce within six months a Zeppelin airship similar in every respect to that being used in Germany. The difficulty, of course, is to find the money. It cannot be expected that a private firm such as my own could foot a bill of this description."

SUGGESTED SOLUTION. / Mr. Percival Spencer, the aeronaut of the firm of Spencer Brothers state: "These mysterious airships can only be accounted for in two ways. The first and most probable explanation is that they are model balloons, of which a large number are being sold, and which range in length from 25 to 10 ft. Occasionally petrol is used to supply the lifting power to these balloons, and this might give a luminous flame, which would light up the country for miles around, and would have the appearance, at all events to the unsophisticated rustic, of a searchlight. Reports of the throbbing of a motor in the airship can only be explained by the assumption that these model airships have been sent up by motoring parties who have been near at hand and within hearing when their vessels were seen. The other theory might be that the aerial vessels which have been seen are two or three of the man-carrying airships which have been supplied by this firm, and which the owners have been using. We have supplied no less than five during the past season, and of these two have found their way, one to the Eastern Counties and one to Cardiff. I entirely scout any idea that a foreign aerial vessel has crossed the North Sea, knowing as I do the conditions which have prevailed during the past few days."

"In the meantime I could, at a comparatively small cost, give this country a fleet of airships which would serve most useful purposes and which would form the nucleus of a future aerial fleet. Some people think that because we are surrounded by water aerial navigation is fraught with great difficulties and dangers. This, however, is not the case. I have made many balloon ascents in so small an area as that comprised on the Isle of Man. Moreover, large sheets of water are ideal spots on which to build and moor airship. The airships should be constructed on rafts and kept on rafts, and there are many inland harbours such as Chichester Harbour which, if I mistake not, will become the Portsmouths and the Plymouths of to-morrow."

1909 May 22 (Sat) London Daily Express, p. 5. (Card 1)

WED. MAY 26 P. 5--WRECKED "AIRSHIP." Some excitement was caused at Dunstable yesterday morning by the discovery of what appeared to be the remains of a wrecked airship. Men going to work found the wrecks of a cylindrical gas bag, a broken bamboo framework, and a powerful lamp and radiator lying across a hedge. The framework bore the name {Sinatre Mors.} and in a small satchel was a paper bearing a message that in case of accident the finder of the airship should communicate with Messrs. Jarrott and Letts, of Great Marlborough-street. Mr. Letts admitted to an "Express" representative last night that the "airship" had been sent up for some time past for advertising purposes. "The airship was forty feet long, and carried two lights. It was meant to descend in Norfolk, but came down at Dunstable instead."

MYSTERY OF THE AIR. / WHAT RECENT EVENTS PORTEND FOR THIS COUNTRY. / RISK OF INVASION.

The "Express" was yesterday able to establish the fact that not one firm, but several enterprising firms of manufacturers had been responsible for the flocks of model airships which have kept the interest of the country alive since May 11. Two of these manufacturers, however, were honest enough to admit that they would never have thought of this particular scheme of advertising had they not been completely convinced that a genuine dirigible airship of large size had been operating over the eastern counties. We may in the next few days witness a rush of advertisers all crying out "We did it!"

1909 June 2 (Wed.) Indianapolis Star, p. 12.

There seems to have been amazement in a good many quarters that a genuine airship could exist, but as a great authority on ballooning explained to an "Express" representative yesterday, there is really no reason for surprise. It will be remembered that Mr. Spencer the famous aeronaut, has already said that he sold five man-lifting dirigible balloons last year, three of which he has lost sight of. Again, the day is not far distant when the dirigible balloon will become a common object in the sky.

WHOLE TOWN HUNTS GHOST. / Agile Wraith Climbs Trees and Hills, Then Hides in Pond.

UNDER CONTROL. The evidence that an airship under remarkable control was appearing on the east coast about a fortnight ago is most conclusive. As has been pointed out:-- (a) The airship was seen by several persons going dead against the wind, tacking, circling, and stopping for minutes at a time. (b) The flame of the spirit lamp which lifts the model airships, though brilliant, cannot be mistaken for searchlights, especially by sailors. Nor is there a light at each end of the model airships, as the lamp is in the middle and beneath such model balloons. (c) The wind for the past month or so has been almost invariably blowing from the east or north-east, and model airships sent up on the WORCHESTER, Mass., June 1.--Northbridge has a ghost, or a ghost has Northbridge, residents of the heretofore peaceful village are uncertain which. For several nights, at about the same hour, a mysterious light, varying in size from a small bulb to that of a bushel measure, has appeared and performed queer antics on the high ledge near Wayside. First treated as a joke, continued nightly repetitions have caused the phenomenon to become a serious reality and the village and its neighborhood are discussing the affair, while scores of citizens are seriously frightened. At least three families are packing up their household goods with the announced intention of moving out of town. One night fully 300 persons assembled in the vicinity of the ledge, but when the light appeared many women screamed and hurried home, evincing no desire to continue the investigation. Half a dozen armed men had the temerity to go to the top of the ledge, and, in close formation, shoulder to shoulder, tried to catch up with the light. Like a will-o'-the-wisp the light zigzagged along the ledge, climbed up the trunk of a tall pine tree, from which point it was visible for a considerable distance, descended rapidly within a few yards of the watchers and mounting the crest of the hill, disappeared in the nearby pond. June 3, 1. German minister in NY denies Germany building arspas for war w England and says, "We have no scout balloons hovering over the English coast."

6, 20. Signal Mars w small mirrors. 1909 June 5 (Sat) Imperial Valley Press (El Centro, Calif.), p. 1.

1909 June 5 (Sat) Imperial Valley Press (El Centro, Calif.), p. 1.

FLYING DUTCHMAN OF MT. SAN JACINTO / "Is Things What They Seem Or Is Visions About?" / Many Persons Think They Have Seen a Mysterious Airship Cruising at Dusk Over Salton Sea--Theory That There is Secret Flying Machine Factory in Wilds of San Jacinto.

Ten or a dozen years ago thousands of persons in California imagined they saw an airship flying about at night, and the delusion spread until it affected ordinarily rational people and caused them to stand on the streets and gaze at the Dog Star, which they imagined to be the airship's light and which they swore they could see moving rapidly. That airship was a psychological freak, having no existence outside of the minds of the people who thought they saw it.

For the past few days persons in the northern part of Imperial Valley have been seeing things at dusk, and dozens of them are willing to make affidavit that an airship has been hovering over Salton Sea. As no airship inventor is known to be in this region and no flying machine is missing from Los Angeles, someone has offered the theory that the mysterious aviator built the machine secretly in the wilds of San Jacinto mountain and is making furtive experimental trips in the twilight. The sweet reasonableness of the theory is plain to the feeblest intellects and to no other.

There are pelicans on Salton Sea and they cruise the air at night-fall. Also it is whispered that Imperial has not been painfully dry of late.

One of the Los Angeles papers has been wiring excitedly for a "big story" of the flying Dutchman of Salton Sea "with good photographs and full details." There are some mechanical difficulties about taking good photographs of airships in the dusk at a distance of ~~xxx~~ twenty miles.

1909 June 5 (Sat) San Francisco Call, p. 1.

MYSTERIOUS AIRCRAFT OVER SALTON SEA PROVES MIRAGE

IMPERIAL, June 4.--After mystifying people in all parts of the Imperial Valley it is now learned that the supposed airship which was said by various people to have been seen on several evenings at twilight over Salton sea was a mirage. The mirage was conspicuous this evening for a few minutes and was viewed with wonderment by many people, as tonight it took the form of a row of tents and cottonwood trees inverted, that hung in clear outlines for a time between sunset and dark in the sky. Viewed less distinctly than it was tonight this phenomena might easily have been mistaken for an airship. Before there was less vegetation here the mirage was a common sight over the Salton sea.

May 25 spurious (?) report of "mysterious" comet

1909 July 25 (Sun) Indianapolis Star, p. 7.

Strange Light Frightens People at Possum Hollow / Firing at It Has No Effect and Superstitious Believe It Is Supernatural Vision.

JACKSONVILLE, Ind., July 24.--People living in the neighborhood of Possum Hollow, five miles south of here, are in a state of excitement over the appearance of a strange light that has been seen along the dark highways several times in the last two months. It is seen sometimes moving and at other times standing still. A crowd of people going home from church one night last week saw the light dancing along in front of them and moving away as they approached.

The vision was shot at several times without being affected. The crowd then became frightened, ceased firing and ran through the field the shortest routes to their homes.

A few nights ago the light was seen again and since then many people have been on its trail and it is hoped that the mystery will soon be solved.

It is thought by some that it is a jack-o-lantern, and others a supernatural vision.

Some fifty years ago a man committed suicide by hanging himself to a tree near this place and the superstitious are suggesting that the strange light may have something to do with that event.

July 24, 10. Rain of frogs, Utica, N.Y.
Aug. 8, 18. Sea serp. off Cape Hatteras.
10, 1. Live frog in brick wall, Bloomington, Ind.

1909 July 31 (Sat.) Sydney Morning Herald, p. 13.

AN AERIAL MYSTERY. / SWIFT NOCTURNAL FLIGHTS. / OVER NEW ZEALAND TERRITORY. / WELLINGTON, Friday.

Remarkable stories are coming from the South Island, from Christchurch to Invercargill, regarding mysterious lights seen at night.

The suggestion is that the light is shown by an airship. In some cases it is circumstantially declared that the light appears in the centre of a black body. One observer declares that the airship is shaped like a boat, with a flat top, and was speeding at about 30 miles an hour.

The airship has also been seen by about 30 people in the Oamaru district. Considerable excitement prevails among the population over a large stretch of country. But it is suggested that the appearances are merely due to fire balloons.

The most circumstantial reports came from Gore, Southland, stating that the reported airship had been seen there for the last four nights and that last night it was distinguished at 9 o'clock, passing at a great height, and travelling south, with a headlight attached.

Tues. July 27, p. 6. Balloon ascent, Crafton. Mr. Watts' invention of an aeroplane, which he is keeping secret. Signal fire observed on an island?

Th. August 5, p. 9. Christchurch inventor, Oswald Coates, has invented raft-shaped aeroplane called "The Long White Cloud."

Sat. August 7, p. 13. AERIAL HYSTERIA. / NEW ZEALANDER'S SCARE. / WELLINGTON (N.Z.), Friday.

Circumstantial accounts have been received from different parts of the Dominion of an airship having been seen both day and night.

One informant declares that the occupant of the airship sang out to him in a foreign language.

Generally speaking, the reports, though circumstantial, are not taken too seriously.

1909 August 9 (Mon.) Sydney Morning Herald, p. 7.

ANOTHER AERIAL MYSTERY. / MYSTERIOUS LIGHT IN VICTORIA. / MELBOURNE, Sunday.

The Rev. B. Cozens, of the Port Melbourne Seamen's Mission, tells an interesting story regarding mysterious lights which appeared in the air over Dandenong Ranges on Saturday night.

He was spending the week-end at Eltham at a farmhouse, and on going outside at 10 o'clock he saw about half a mile up in the air two revolving lights moving over the ranges. They slowed down, dipped, and rose up again. They then changed from white to red, and then to blue.

Mr. Cozens called his wife and three neighbors, and all five watched the mysterious lights till midnight, by which time one had almost moved out of sight over the ranges. The rev. gentleman got up again at 2 o'clock, and saw that the second one had almost crossed the ranges, while five more appeared in the distance, moving in the direction taken by the other two.

1909 August 10 (Tues) Concord (N.H.) Evening Monitor, p. 1.

Air Ship or Meteor. / The Heavens Afforded a Queer Spectacle on Monday Evening.

If any one is trying out an air ship on the quiet in this vicinity then it was the strange craft which was seen floating across the heavens with front and tail lights gleaming brightly, between 7:30 and 8 o'clock Monday evening. If it was not an airship then it was a double meteor, with the twin balls of fire floating in perfect alignment.

The strange apparition came out of the western sky, and floated over into the east, finally disappearing in a bank of clouds on the horizon.

Parties who got a good view say that the two lights appeared as if connected. They also say that the object was moving at a fair rate of speed and was below the clouds.

Its progress was watched with eager interest by those whose gaze chanced to be in the heavens when the lights hove into view, and speculations as to the real character of the object have been numerous and varied.

Captain Lyman Jackson got a good view of the celestial writh, and followed its flight with the eye until it was lost in the clouds. At first he thought it a balloon that was advertised to be sent up from Fitchburg, Massachusetts, on Monday, but later changed his opinion when he noted the speed at which the object was flying, and that against the wind, which he estimated at between 45 and 50 miles per hour. To his mind the object was not a meteor by reason of the fixed condition of the lights and their aligned course.

Dec. 23 p. 1--Aerial Mystery--probably fire balloon over Worch. Jan. 13--Chatta.

1909 August 10 (Tues) Sydney Morning Herald, p. 7.

IS IT AN AIRSHIP? / MYSTERIOUS LIGHT IN THE SKY. / EXCITEMENT AT MOSS VALE. / MOSS VALE, Monday.

A good deal of excitement was occasioned to-night by the appearance of a mysterious light or an illuminated body to the south-east of the town. Quite a number of people gathered in the main street, and speculation was rife as to the meaning of the strange illumination. Above the large light some large body was distinctly visible, as the rays of light were reflected upon its surface. The supposition generally held is that the mysterious floating body is either a large balloon or airship. That this object is not stationary has been proved by getting objects near at hand in line with the light, and in a few minutes it was found to move a considerable distance.

EXPRESS PASSENGERS SEE THE PHENOMENON.

Passengers on to-night's Melbourne express were afforded a view of the mysterious night-light which has been observed floating above the southern highlands and coast between Mittagong and Wollongong during the last two nights. When the express reached Hilltop quite a score of passengers crowded on to the platform at each end of the corridor carriages on the lookout for the "airship," as it was called. Their vigilance was soon rewarded, for as soon as the express hauled out from the deep cuttings a large, bright light became visible a few miles away towards the coast. Apparently it was in motion, and could be plainly distinguished from the stars, but the distance was too great to detect the nature of the floating body. Its elevation appeared to be about 2000 ft.

1909 August 11 (Wed.) Sydney Morning Herald, p. 10.

THE GOULBURN "AIRSHIP." / LIGHTS REPORTED FOR A WEEK. / GOULBURN, Tuesday.

A mysterious moving light has been seen over North Goulburn nearly every night since Thursday. Altogether, so far as is known, some half-dozen individuals have noticed it. One youth describes it as about as big as a carriage lamp. One adult saw it last night at about half-past 7 for about a quarter of an hour. On two occasions it was seen to travel towards the east, then turning to the south. Little notice was taken of the occurrence until the balloon or airship theory was advanced from Moss Vale.

The light, after being seen here last night, would easily have reached Moss Vale district by the time the express was there. Four young men saw the light on Sunday night. It came from the east. After being visible some time it returned in that direction. It was pale blue in colour. The brightness of the light attracted the youth's attention. Only the light was seen, there being nothing to show the presence of a supporting body. It was about half-past 10 when the object was observed.

Air Ship or What? / Monitor Readers Interested in the Solution of the Question.

The phantom airship of what, seen in the heavens just before 8 o'clock on Monday night, is still the subject of much speculation. It was seen over a wide range of territory and the reports coming to this office seem to agree that at first only one light was visible, then two came into view and finally the object disappeared in a cloud. The Monitor is in receipt of two communications bearing on the appearance of the mysterious visitor, which will be found of interest:

Vale Perkins, Province of Quebec, / August 14, 1909.
Editor Concord Evening Monitor.

Dear Sir:--We were very much interested in your mention of an airship or meteor, showing two bright lights, on Monday evening, August 9. At that time, from our hilltop by Lake Memphremagog, I saw what I thought was an unusually bright and leisurely moving meteor, moving from west to east, rather low in the southern sky. And what struck me particularly was that it seemed to have two distinct heads, equally large and bright: It impressed me as leaving a trail of light behind it, but I could not be sure of that, as it disappeared very soon in a floating cloud, and I had only two glimpses of it after that, through rifts in the cloud. I watched to see it reappear in the clear sky beyond but, to my surprise, saw no further sign of it.

I should be glad to hear if anyone has any further information to give on the subject. Sincerely yours, / Bertha Niles.

Editor Concord Evening Monitor:--

Considerable discussion has been excited among the residents of this town who saw the spectacular aerial phenomena last Monday evening.

People living on the west side of Mt. Lookout saw but one light, low down, floating southward, which was lost to sight by intervening hilltops. On the west side of the same hill it was seen high up and the one light soon became two, floating eastward at a rapid pace and was lost to sight beyond the city of Concord.

It has been asked if it could have been a jack-o-lantern or will-o-the-wisp that floated up here from the swamps of Panama, or was it part of the stock of luminous campaign gas left over from the last political campaign? / George E. Lord. / Hopkinton, August 12, 1909.

1909 August 14 (Sat.) Sydney Morning Herald, p. 14.

CELESTIAL PHENOMENON. / LIGHTS VISIBLE IN SYDNEY.

Considerable excitement was occasioned in all the coastal suburbs last night between 7 and 8 o'clock, when residents were afforded an excellent view of the nocturnal mystery of the air at present creating such a stir in all parts of the State. The lights were plainly visible in the north-west, and after several sharp movements to the east they slowly disappeared south. /

MORE REPORTS. / ZEEHAN (Tas.). Friday.

A number of residents of Zeehan report today having seen mysterious lights in the sky. Shortly after 7 o'clock last night there were two lights, white and brilliant, which seemed to be travelling rapidly in a north-westerly direction, against the wind, and soon disappeared behind the clouds. As the lights travelled one appeared to grow smaller and the other larger. /

"Last Tuesday night, whilst leaving Picton by the 6:50 passenger train," writes Mr. C. Bruce Nicoll, of Messrs. B.B. Nicoll and Co., "I had an excellent view of the light or lights which have caused such excitement lately in the Wollongong and Moss Vale districts. Two bright lights, like very bright stars, but with a slight orange colour, appeared very distinct. They were high up in the heavens, but still they were lower than any visible stars. The lower light was almost as large as a small moon, and being a little to the west of the higher light. The illuminations slowly travelled north by north-west, and then, later on, almost directly north. Although very brilliant, they reflected no rays on any accompanying body. To me they appeared as if they might be lights on a fire or gas balloon, which, it is known, will float about in the air for hours until the gas it contains is exhausted, and it becomes ignited or falls to the ground."

Sat. August 14, p. 10.

MYSTERIOUS LIGHTS. / ASTRONOMICAL THEORY. / A FEASIBLE EXPLANATION. / THE OPPOSITION OF MARS. /

Mr. W.E. Raymond, officer in charge Sydney Observatory, sends the following communication:--

Towards the latter part of next month--to be more precise as to time, on September 24, at 8 p.m.--a most important astronomical phenomenon will take place, the opposition of the planet Mars. Seen in the eastern sky at the present time a few hours after sunset, it has a most striking appearance, that of a ball of fire, and I think it has been mistaken by many as "some peculiar lights in the heavens," and of which reports have lately appeared in the press.

[continues with long article on Mars opposition and our knowledge of Martian features.]

1909 August 19 (Th) Providence Journal, p. 1.

(card 1)

FISHERS ISLANDERS SEE BIG AEROPLANE / Great Flier Speeds Like the Wind to the Westward. / SEARCHLIGHT AT ITS HEAD / Captain Edward P. Sisson and Assistant Coastguards See Machine in Early Morning, with Two Figures Aboard Aerial Craft, Coming from Northeasterly Direction.

Tearing along at a terrific clip before the wind, a big aeroplane, with its engines humming and a searchlight sending out a brilliant white light ahead, was sighted speeding over Fishers Island to the westward at 2:30 [7] o'clock yesterday morning, by the four men on duty at the Island life saving station.

Capt. Edward P. Sisson, in charge of the station, reported the unusual sight to Supt. Knowles of the life saving district at his home at Wakefield.

The life savers were keeping their vigil at the station, which is on the southerly side of the island off New London. Suddenly the light of the approaching machine flared up in the northeast, constantly growing brighter as it approached the astonished life savers, who could not at first guess what it was.

The Coastguards stood and watched the "stranger" as it sped on towards the station at a tremendous rate and followed it with eager eyes as it continued on until it disappeared from view to the westward.

The skies were overcast with clouds and the night was pitchy black as the big airship made its appearance. The single light at its head was dazzling white and illumined the sky as the engines propelled the craft directly over the station at a height which was thought by Capt. Sisson to be a little more than an eighth of a mile.

Those who saw the aeroplane were Capt. Edward P. Sisson, Ernest T. Newton, Prentice Lanphear and Edward M. Knapp. It was shortly before 2:30 when Capt. Sisson, looking out toward the northeast, saw the first reflection of the light at the head of the machine. He called the attention of the others to the strange sight and together the four men watched the approach.

WITH GREAT SPEED.

The reflection had hardly been noticed when the bulk of the big machine hove into view. It was coming with great speed and in a minute had reached the station, over which it passed. As it came whizzing through the air Capt. Sisson said it resembled a great bird.

The watchers could hear the heavy droning and the whir of the engines. In the centre of the aeroplane could be seen two dark figures, but the observers could not tell whether they were men. Over the station went the big flyer and soon it disappeared to the westward.

Capt. Sisson said that he and his men were able to see the aeroplane for about three minutes and in that time it covered a great distance, the engines and everything about the machine seeming to work in fine shape. The frames and wings could be seen but the watchers could not clearly make out the huddled figures in the centre.

The weather conditions at the time the aeroplane was seen were perfect. There was not a trace of fog or rain in the atmosphere and although the sky was overcast and the night as black as ink, the machine could be clearly seen, lighted up by the big headlight. There was a fine breeze blowing from E.N.E., which was the direction from which the flyer made its appearance.

There is no record of any flights having been made by any of the leading aviators and the identity of the airship and its occupants are not known. Perhaps some daring aerial voyagers were just out for a morning dash, but who they were, where they came, and whither they went, are matters of conjecture.

It is known that the famous Curtiss aeroplanes make their flights from Hempstead, L.I., which is between Fishers Island and New York and it may have been one of them on a return from some long flight. Mineola is also the headquarters of some of the big aviators and possibly the unknown flyer was from that section.

UNHERALDED FLIGHT.

The aeroplane appeared to be about 60 feet long and 20 wide, and from the way its engines seemed to be working it may be that air line records were smashed on the sly, and that some daring navigator of the upper regions stole a march on his competitors by making an unheralded flight in the night.

The report that the aeroplane had been seen caused conjectures to run riot among those who attempt to follow the devious doings of the atmospheric navigators, and they are debating the question as to where the big machine came from. It may be some of the Frenchmen just dropping in to old U.S.A. for a weekend visit or again it may be some machine from Liverpool or London, for a northeast wind might blow in something like an airship if somebody left the door open.

Others will have it that the aeroplane was from Dover. Of course, Dover is a nice little trip to make over night, but if the wind was kind and the engines didn't balk and some man had discovered a new wrinkle in air line conveyances and some one hundred and odd other "ifs," it might be from Dover, but again it might be from Kankakee, or the Isle of Hanky Panky. So what's the use?

1909 August 24 (Tue) New York Times, p. 2.

Airship Over Montclair. / Residents There Puzzled by a Mysterious Machine in Flight. / Special to the New York Times.

Montclair, N.J., Aug. 23.--Residents of the north end of this town last evening again saw a mysterious aeroplane passing over that section of Montclair. The machine was seen before several days ago. The aeroplane flew high, and as it passed over Upper Montclair it emitted a great puff of smoke that observers thought indicated an explosion. The flying machine, however, was not halted in its course, though it came closer to the earth.

A number of people thought the aeroplane was that constructed by Alfred P. Morgan and Harold H. Dodd, young men of this town. They denied, however, that they have been making secret flights. The airship, which they have at 15 Appleton Place, is not quite ready to fly. The motor arrived only today, and until this has been thoroughly tested no flights will be attempted.

The mysterious airship which was seen passing over the town last evening disappeared to the northward, and is believed to have come down in some isolated section of the country where some inventor has his headquarters.

1909 September 4 (Sat.) Indianapolis Star, p. 1.

SIGHTS STRANGE AIRSHIP / BLOOMINGDALE REPORTS EAG / Dirigible Balloon Appears from Southwest, Passes Over the City and Then Sails Westward. FORT WAYNE, Ind., Sept. 3.--(Special).--Residents of Bloomington [sic] declare that a dirigible balloon passed over the city about 9 o'clock this morning. Several hundred persons were attracted to the streets by the airship and there seems little doubt that such a machine really did pass over the city.

It is said that the craft was visible for at least 15 minutes and the car beneath the gas bag was plainly visible.

The balloon was propelled by a screw in the rear and was steered by a huge rudder. The airship came from the southeast and went directly over the heads of the watchers, veered to the west and passed from sight. The craft was first seen by Oscar Schust and George Price 12.9. Sea monster caught off N.J.; 29. Ghosts in French chateau.

18.2. Halley's Comet. / 19.25. Ghost light on RR proves to be light on xxxx advertising devices. / 26.11. Auroral interference; 12. Wild man 27.1. Ghostly apparition of casket, Peru, Ind.

Sun. Oct. 10, p. 1. Oakland City Shaken by Mysterious Noise in Sky. / Many Say It Resembled Battle, While Others Feared Approach of Halley's Comet.

OAKLAND CITY, Ind., xxx Oct. 9.--Commencing with a low rumble in the southeast and moving overhead to the northwest a noise passed over a large section east of this city, coming from a cloudless sky, today.

Farmers visiting here were interested in an explanation of the phenomenon, which some described as resembling the noise of a battle.

deep rumblings accompanied by volleys of muskets. The sound was heard for 30 miles, and lasted several seconds. There was no visible disturbance in the sky and no jar of the earth. Many persons were frightened connecting the noise with the approach of Halley's comet, and the only explanation advanced is that it probably was the near approach of a meteor. The sound appeared to be near the earth and traveled xx slowly.

Oct. 1, 9. Balloon w. people, Columbus, Ind.

4.2. Haunted house, Washington, Ind. / 6.6. Halley's comet.

17.21. Cemetery ghost hoax, Youngstown, O.

22.6. Flight in antiquity. / 27.2. English ghosts. / 31.23. Italian ghost.

1909 September 25 (Sat) Göteborgs Handels-och Sjöfarts-Tidning, p.15

An airship observed over Östhammar.

At 7 o'clock Thursday morning an airship of the Parseval type passed over the eastern part of Gräsön at a height of about 100 meters

The airship came from the northeast and went in a southwesterly direction. Any more information about the balloon has not yet happened to come in.

September 28 (Tues) p. 7.

A meteorite?--A reporter for the Göteborgs Handelstidning states that he and many other persons yesterday evening at Pixbo during (about) a minute observed in the northern heavens an intense light, which is said to have blinded the watchers. After about three minutes followed a loud noise which lasted for about five minutes.

1909 October 1 (Fri.) Indianapolis Star, p. 9.

Tramp Balloon Snaps Wires / Anchor Breaks Traction Cables and Halts

I.C. & S. Traffic.

NCOLUMBUS, Ind., Sept. 30.--A balloon supposed to be from Chicago passed over Edinburg tonight. The anchor was let down and became entangled in the high-tension wires of the Indianapolis, Columbus and Southern traction line, breaking the three wires and seriously damaging the machinery at the power house in Edinburg. No cars are being run tonight. The same balloon passed over Taylorsville, four miles xxxxnorth of this city xxx a few minutes later and it was down so low that the occupants were able to talk to the citizens of the xxx town, inquiring the distance to Indianapolis and Cincinnati.

1909 December 3 (Fri) Göteborgs Handels-och Sjöfarts-Tidning, p. 8.

Mystery.

A balloon was reported by many persons to have been observed yesterday evening in Ölskronen. The balloon was lighted and went at a great speed westward. The good observers even said a rocket was cast from the gondola.

Social-Demokraten (Stockholm) December 4 (Sat), p.

Balloon over Göteborg from the sea?

At half past 9 on Thursday evening an aerial balloon was seen passing over Göteborg at a fast speed. The balloon, which was lighted, seemed to float (hover) at a considerable height and went westward toward the sea. From the gondola a rocket was cast down, which was thought to land in Redburgs Park. It stayed afterwards only a few minutes, and then the balloon went out of sight.

1909 December 13 (Mon) Boston Herald, p. 1 (card 1)

TELLS OF FLIGHT 300 MILES IN AIR / Engineer Says He Sailed from Worcester to New York Harbor at Night in Aeroplane of Own Invention.

CLAIMS CIRCLING STATUE WHEN 4000 FEET UP / Wallace E. Tillinghast Says

He Invented Machine Under Cover and Is Going to Smash International

Records. / [Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald.]

WORCESTER, Dec. 12--Wallace E. Tillinghast of this city, vice-president of a manufacturing company here, made public a story today of his own experiences at aeroplane flying.

He says he has invented, built and tested an aeroplane capable of carrying three passengers with a weight limit of 600 pounds, a distance of at least 300 miles without a stop to replenish the supply of petrol, at a rate of 120 miles an hour.

He refuses to say where his flying machine is, because he desires to keep it a secret at present, as he wants to enter into Boston contests next year as a sure winner. He says that on Sept. 8 he made a night trip to New York and return, at which time the machine was thoroughly tested. This is his story:

270

REPAIRED IN AIR.

"On the night of Sept. 8, with two mechanics, I left the shop where the machine is stored, which is within 60 miles of Worcester and 14 [?] miles from a railroad station, and set out in the machine for

New York, which we reached, coming close to the Statue of Liberty, went to Boston and then back again to the starting point without alighting. When near Fire Island one of the cylinders ran irregularly, so the motors were stopped and the two mechanics took plenty of time in repairing it and doing a little work of precautionary nature with other parts of the machinery. Before stopping the motor we rose to an altitude of 4000 feet and scaled [?] during the 46 minutes taken in repairing the cylinder and looking over the other machinery.

"When the motor was started we were so near land that the headlight and general outline of the aeroplane with the men in it were seen by a member of the life saving crew patrolling the beach and notice of this discovery appeared in a brief dispatch in a Boston paper a day or so after the trip. This is the longest trip I have ever made, but it is sufficient to make me believe that the machine surpasses anything that has yet appeared."

In describing his machine, Mr. Tillinghast says: "It is one of the monoplane type, with a spread of 72 feet, a weight of 1550 pounds, and furnished with a 120-horsepower gasoline engine made under my own direction and specifications. It differs from others in the spread of the canvases, the spread of the plane and in stability features. Special attention is given in making it adaptable for high speed. All the import ant parts are covered by patents.

Cannot Capsize.

"Other distinguishing features are that it cannot be capsize, is easily controlled and the occupants ride on the body of the machine instead of having the body of the machine behind them. The headlight is made by the use of acetylene gas generated on the machine. I decline to say where the machine was built or is stationed, because it is the business of no one but myself and my mechanics.

"I also decline to say what is the limit of speed of the aeroplane or the highest altitude that I can reach, because I wish to enter the international races in a fair trial and without rivals knowing what this machine can do. The speed of the machine so much exceeds the speed reported at the recent meeting at Rheims that I feel sure the result will be that the Tillinghast aeroplane is more than an 'also ran.'

"The altitude records which I have made are greater than any made by American or foreign make aeroplanes. One advantage in mine is that the mechanics who have been in my employ are thoroughly competent to run the machine, and have done so with success, so that in this case it is not necessary that the inventor or owner navigate his invention.

Made More Than 100 Trips.

"I am now looking around for a suitable location upon which to build a storage shed and where I can have a starting point. I expect that the aeroplane will be brought to Worcester about the middle of February, and from then on it will be given a rigid tuning up and working out until the international races. I expect that it will show up a new wrinkle in air navigation. The machine is no experiment, as it has been thoroughly tested. All of the tests have been under the cover of night and have been considered successful."

Mr. Tillinghast says that during the past seven years he has been working on the idea of perfecting an aeroplane. The building, he says, has been financed by himself on the ground that he wants to win or lose on his merits. His present building and testing ground he has occupied for the xxx two years, he says, and its real nature never has been discovered. His last visit to the home of the aeroplane was early in November.

Mr. Tillinghast says he has made more than 100 successful trips, of which 18 have been in the perfected machine. This is the fourth machine he has built, all successful, and the second at this [p.2] secret workshop. The other two were built in sparsely settled districts in the West. He says this building and testing ground is a secret to xxx every one except himself and his workmen, and even the inhabitants of that district do not know what is going on.

NOISE LIKE AN AEROPLANE.

Fire Island Surfman Heard it in Air; Sure It Was Not Geese.

NEW YORK, Dec. 12--William Leach, one of the surfmen of the Fire

Island life saving station, believed he heard an aeroplane pass high above him while he was doing patrol duty at 7:15 o'clock one night.

First he heard a buzzing high up in the air, and whatever made it, he says, passed directly over his head, but at a height beyond his ability to estimate. The noise he heard resembled the rattle and hum of a high speed motor running wide open.

All efforts to convince Leach that he may have mistaken a flock of geese for an aeroplane only made him laugh. He says he had heard too many geese pass overhead at night to confuse the sound of their flight won't until he gets ready, and that if anybody wants to think the story is not true, it fails to interest him in the least.

"I didn't ask to have the story printed," he said. "I haven't asked the public to believe. I am not offering ~~any~~ any stock for sale. I have no axe to grind. One of these days I shall bring the big monoplane out and fly with it, then the public will believe."

"When?"
"When I get ready."
"In the meantime the public is pretty incredulous about the story of your long flight, Mr. Tillinghast. They have just had a Dr. Cook experience, you know."

Mr. Tillinghast smiled. "Believe me," he said. "It is of no special importance to me whether the public believes the story or not. (When I produce the machine at the time I decide everybody will keeping secret where the monoplane is and other details that I don't want to see in print for the present. I told him the story of my most successful flight."

Mr. Tillinghast is an alert, clean looking man, and does not appear like a person who would see any humor in putting over a gigantic hoax. He certainly does not bear any of the marks of the crank.

"We left the place where the monoplane is kept--three of us--the two mechanics and myself--after dark," he said. "No, I won't say where the place is, other than that it is more than fifty miles from Worcester and ~~sax~~ fourteen miles from a railroad. We headed directly for New York.

"It is not difficult to make 120 miles an hour with my machine, which is 72 feet across. ~~xxx~~ I have a smaller machine 3 [26] feet across with which I have made some successful ascensions. The big one will carry three people whose average weight is 200 pounds. It differs from all other types in that the passengers sit in the main body of the machine.

"It is not exactly true that I circled the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor. I went within sight of it--I should say about a mile away--and we had trouble with the machinery and I had an opportunity to demonstrate one of the things in which my machine differs from all others. I stopped the motors and for forty-six minutes remained in the air without power while the mechanics made the necessary repairs.

"During all that time we soared about in the air. The machine cannot capsize, and if it is stopped high in the air, will remain afloat for a much longer time than on that occasion. When the repairs were completed we had fallen perhaps 2000 feet.

"Then I headed for Boston. I did not pass over the city but circled it, passing over the harbor at a height of perhaps 1500 feet. Then I headed for our starting point and arrived there before daylight."

This trip was made, according to Mr. Tillinghast, on September 8. He says he is planning to bet a suitable place in the vicinity of Worcester for storing and starting his monoplane.

"Are you going into the manufacture of these machines?" he was asked.

"Whatever I am going to do," he replied, "I am not asking any one for a cent of backing. I have sufficient to complete my experiments and prove that I have the greatest and most practical heavier than air flying machine that was ever invented.

"Had I had my way nothing would have ever come out about it until I appeared at some aviation meet and demonstrated the power and practicality of the monoplane. No other machine equals it. Why, the speed of 120 miles an hour may be kept up as long as the power continues to run. The distance that can be traversed and the speed at which it may be done is merely a matter of carrying fuel."--New York Sun.

The New York World today prints the following:

DAYTON, O., DEC. 13.--Wilbur Wright was asked this evening: "Do you think it possible that any man could make such a flight as Tillinghast says he made?"

"Well, it might have been possible for Tillinghast," replied Mr. Wright with a humorous twinkle in his eyes. /

HAMMONDSPORT, N.Y., DEC. 13.--Tillinghast story interesting reading but it is unsuitable for news columns of the World. /GLENN H. CURTISS. /

LENOX, MASS., DEC. 13.--Extraordinary if facts can be proved. Reminds me of nightly visits of German airships to England last summer. Needs strong corroboration. / RENE CORTLANDT P. BISHOP. /

1909 December 14 (Tue) Boston Herald, p. 14. (card 1)

W.E. TILLINGHAST AWAKES FAMOUS / Aeroplanist Who Says He Floated at Altitude of 4000 Feet with Stalled Motor Is Besieged with Inquiries. / ARRIVAL OF GIRL BABY ADDS TO HIS TROUBLES / (Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald.)

WORCESTER, Dec. 13.--Wallace E. Tillinghast, the inventor and manufacturer, who claims to have made a flight in an aeroplane on the night of Sept. 8 to New York and return and floated around in space over Fire Island in New York harbor at an altitude of 4000 feet with a stalled motor, awoke today to find himself besieged on every hand with telephone calls and telegrams from various parts of the country relative to his alleged remarkable trip. This sudden notoriety, accompanied by the fact that he became the father of a girl baby yesterday, has kept him exceptionally busy, and early in the day he shut himself out from all interviewers regarding his aeroplane. At the Central Supply Company, where he is connected in a business way, it was necessary to cut out all telephone calls, and he rather regrets that he gave out the story at this time. He said he gave it out now because he was afraid it would become too public property later and he does not want to be bothered with the many inquiries that have resulted from his statement. "I tell you the statement about that night trip is absolutely true, and that is all there is to it," was the statement today when asked concerning further details. He said there was nothing further to say about the trip, that he did not consider it of such importance to make all this fuss about it. He said he had made many flights, all of them being in the night time, but this happened to be the longest he had taken and he thought it the most important. When asked how he felt sailing through the air at the rate of 120 miles an hour at an altitude of 2000 or 3000 feet, he said about the same as when one is running along the calm ocean in a fast motor boat. The sensation, he said, is rather enjoyable.

He still refuses to reveal the storage place of this aeroplane, but says it is guarded night and day by four men and there is no possibility of any one seeing it. He has a crew of men working on the machine all of the time and he has no doubt he can do anything he wants with it in the way of aeroplaning when he gets ready. He claims to have made in his experience in aeroplaning experimenting 100 trips in machines of four types and sizes, but in this large machine he has gone in the air 18 times.

Now that the story has been published, several neighbors of Tillinghast say that he was accustomed during the summer nights to make trips in his automobile. He owns an old-fashioned auto which is of the one-cylinder type, and makes considerable noise. His garage is directly back of his home on Orme street, and a neighbor says that two or three mornings during the week between 1 and 2 o'clock he would be awakened by the chugging of this automobile. When asked the following day what he was doing out so early in the morning with the automobile, Tillinghast would say that he was working on a little side line and had taken a long trip into the country, where he had some interests. He jokingly told a friend early in July that he was building an aeroplane, as they were becoming stylish, and he wanted to be in style.

He said one morning he sailed over New Haven when the bells were ringing for people to go to work, and another morning he made a trip over Hartford after sunrise. He says that a short time before he made the alleged New York trip he made a most successful trip over Litchfield, Ct., and when the people were going to church in that town one Sunday morning he sailed at less than 100 feet over the church spires in which the bells were ringing.

Today the people of the city have endeavored to get him on the telephone so that they might joke him about the story, but he does not take kindly to the joking, but says it is a serious matter and he has done all that he claims. 1909 December 14 (Tue) Willimantic (Conn) Chronicle, p. 8.

WHAT MR. HANNA SAW HAVE BEEN THE WORCESTER AIRSHIP / South Windham Road Man Tells of Observing What Appeared to be a Traveling Searchlight. / WAS MOVING RIGHT ALONG AT GOOD RATE OF SPEED. / Thinks Now That it May Have Been the Aeroplane in Which W. E. Tillinghast Claims to Have Made a Flight from Boston to New York and Return.

E.B. Hanna, who lives on the South Windham road, reports that in September last he saw something that he now thinks may have been the flying machine in which Wallace E. Tillinghast of Worcester claims to have made a flight in from Boston to New York and return.

In a monoplane of his own building and with two ~~assistants~~ passengers, Mr. Tillinghast says he made a flight from Boston to New York and return on the night of September 8, without coming to the ground.

He described his aeroplane as being capable of carrying three passengers with a weight limit of 200 pounds each, three hundred miles without a stop to replenish a supply of gasoline, and says he can attain a speed of about [] miles an hour. He says his machine is the monoplane type, with a spread of seventy-two feet, a weight of 1,550 [?] pounds, and furnished with a twelve horse-power gasoline engine, made under his own direction and specifications, fully covered by his own patents.

He says the passengers ride on the body of the machine instead of with the body of the machine behind them. He also says it has a search light made by the use of acetylene gas generated on the machine. He will not say where the monoplane was constructed, that being his secret, neither will he give the names of his machinists.

Business associates of Mr. Tillinghast say he never has taken them into his confidence, but knowing him to be a mechanical engineer they would not be surprised at anything he did in this line.

Mr. Hanna says that he saw what may have been this aeroplane one night in September but he cannot give the date. It was about 7:30 o'clock in the evening and what looked like a searchlight traveling through the air was first seen over Windham Center way, coming towards Willimantic. Then it veered off, going towards South Windham and Lebanon.

Mr. Hanna watched the strange object for about an hour. He heard nothing and all he could see was the bright light, which was moving along at a good rate of speed and swaying back and forth.

When he went into the house he remarked to his wife that he guessed he had seen an airship. He told some of the neighbors about it on the following day and then he forgot all about it until he read in the papers this week the story told by Mr. Tillinghast of his remarkable flight.

Whether or not anyone else saw the strange light Mr. Hanna does not know. 1909 December 13 (W) Arkansas Gazette (Little Rock), p. 2

News of the City / Airship Flies Near Little Rock, Perhaps.--A. W. Norris of Habelvale, road overseer of District No. 8, is of the opinion that an airship passed over his residence at about 10 o'clock Monday night. Mr. Norris states that he was standing in his doorway when a strange light appeared, apparently about 300 feet above him, traveling south at a rapid rate of speed and disappeared a moment or two later in the darkness. He said that the light had the appearance of a searchlight similar to those used on automobiles and it rose and fell like a bird in flight. The night was cloudy, which precludes the possibility of the light having been a star or any astronomic phenomena.

STRANGE PHENOMENON OF HEAVENS IS SEEN / Cylindrical Shaft of Light Stretching Across Southern Sky Arouses Much Interest and Speculation.

Shortly before midnight last night a somewhat remarkable phenomenon in the Southern sky was seen by belated pedestrians and unfortunates who work while others sleep, in a cylindrical shaft of light, which, arising from the southeast horizon, stretched athwart the firmament far to the east. The first intimation that the Gazette editorial force received was by telephone inquiries from several citizens, who naturally looked upon the Gazette as the fountain of all knowledge, as to what it was.

There are times, however, when the greatest fail, and the Gazette was unable to satisfy the inquirers, by reason of the staff astronomer not being on the job. It should be explained that the staff astronomer belongs to the Amalgamated Union of Star Gazers and Searchers of the Heavens, who adhere strictly to a six days' schedule and who, in consequence, refuses to astron of a Sunday.

All Try to Explain It.

Several theories were advanced. One was that it was merely a cloud, but it was held too luminous for any ordinary well-behaved cloud, and, as the staff astronomer's understudy pointed out, it was too straight, steady and regular in outline, clouds being erratic in gait and irregular in form. The reporter called by his familiars "Shorty," for short, adjudged it to be the headlight of an airship. He was excused from further guessing. The railroad reporter had a theory all his own, to the effect that the weird ray proceeded from the searchlight of a new engine just placed in the Rock Island yards, but as the light clearly pointed upwards his theory was laughed to scorn, without the engine had gotten gay and reared up on its hind wheels. Another member of the staff had it that it was the track of a comet, but a search of the various almanacs, including that of the great star prophet, Hicks, failed to reveal any comet due on schedule.

A consultation was called and it was decided to send a reporter to awaken Weather Director Alciatore and get him to give an expert opinion and incidentally contract a case of pneumonia. But just then the whole force went to the windows to catch another look at the strange heavenly visitor with a view of turning loose another assorted bunch of opinions—but the mysterious phenomenon had faded as unaccountably as it had appeared.

1909 December 20 (Mon eve) Boston Globe, p. 1.

SAILED OVER THE HARBOR / Unknown Airship Makes a Flight in Night. / Was Traveling at High Speed, Heading Southerly. / Immigration Inspector Hoe Able to Distinguish Part of Framework of Craft.

Traveling at a rapid rate of speed an airship passed over Boston harbor at an early hour this morning, coming from the direction of the north shore, cutting across from East Boston and disappearing in a southerly direction.

Immigration Inspector Hoe, who was on duty at the immigration station at Long wharf, was awakened by the sound of the whistle of the steamer James S. Whitney as she moved into her berth at India wharf. It was about 1:15 a.m., and when inspector Hoe looked out of the window he was surprised to see the airship shooting through the air. It was clear at the time and the inspector was able to distinguish a part of the framework of the air craft, which was made quite clear by the reflection of the light which seemed to be carried beneath the framework.

It was impossible, however, to distinguish the style of airship, or whether there were more than the operator in the car.

Considerable mystery seemed to have been attached to the movements of the machine, the aviator evidently preferring to make his flights in the stillness of the night.

Capt Crowell of the steamer James S. Whitney, when asked if he had seen the airship, smiled and said that his time was entirely occupied in keeping watch on ships afloat, and he did not look skyward.

It was suggested by one of the ~~xxx~~ inspectors that the unknown aviator might have been Mr Tillinghast, who is reported to have made several flights in his machine from the vicinity of Worcester, attaining a speed of 120 miles an hour.

The story told by the immigration inspector caused considerable interest among the customs officials and others who have to do with watching for incoming vessels along the water front.

1909 December 20 (Mon) Boston Globe, p. 14.

TILLINGHAST VERY MODEST / Refuses to Talk of His Flying Machine. / It Is Alleged That It Can Do 120 Miles an Hour. / And Carrying Three Stout Persons at That.

WORCESTER, Dec. 19—According to the ~~xxx~~ story of Wallace E. Tillinghast, a mechanical and consulting engineer who lives at 47 Orne st., he, as the inventor and operator of a monoplane, has the Wright brothers in the amateur class and makes Bleriot a has been.

Mr. Tillinghast says he has a monoplane which carries three persons, of an average weight of 200 pounds, which makes a speed of 120 miles an hour, and in ~~xxx~~ which he has made numerous flights, one on the night of Sept. 8, when, with two of his mechanics, he tuned up the machine and took a little jaunt from some undisclosed point "within [60] miles of Worcester," over to New York city, circled the statue of Liberty and then jogged back to New England, circled about Boston and after that ran to the hiding place of the monoplane and tucked it away where no one could find it.

Incidental to the round trip to New York, an aerial stroll of so little significance as to be unimportant and scarcely worth mentioning, Mr. Tillinghast mentioned carefully, that near Fire Island one of the motors which makes his wheels go round, ran irregularly, so he ran the machine up to a height of 4000 feet and shut down, letting the monoplane just stay around during the 45 minutes it required for the ~~machinists~~ machinists to effect repairs.

All Flights at Night.

Mr. Tillinghast says he has made [16] flights in his great machine and more than 100 successful trips in aerial craft preceding it, which he has invented, built and operated. He has been experimenting with heavier-than-air machines about seven years, and they have become so common with him that he doesn't pay any more attention to them than a commuter does to a trolley car.

As Mr. Tillinghast has made all his world record-breaking flights at night, he says that no one but himself and his trusted mechanics have ever seen the monoplane which is his latest work and which, as he related the story of his accomplishments with it, compares with the Wright aeroplane as a Shore line train does with a horsecar.

Mr. Tillinghast does not, apparently, intend that any other inventor shall swipe any of his ideas, for although he says he has every improvement in his world-better patented, he is withholding a detailed description of his machine. He did say, however, to a Worcester reporter, who got the first and, so far, the only authentic interview concerning the invention, that his machine is of the monoplane type, with a spread of 73 feet, a weight of 1550 pounds and furnished with a 120-horse power gasoline engine made under my own direction and specifications.

This description is not particularly full of detail, but is given so that if at any time Mr. Tillinghast should be delayed in one of his nocturnal flights and shouldn't get under cover before daylight, and you should see it shooting past at a height of 4000 feet, more or less, you ~~xxx~~ will know what it is. A further point of identification may be three fat men sitting nonchalantly in the three seats, their faces showing the ennui they feel over the whole business.

Mr. Tillinghast says that on the night of Sept 8, when he sauntered over to New York and then to Boston, he had, counting himself, three men aboard the wonder, and that their ~~weights~~ weights aggregated about 600 pounds, so with the machine itself weighing 1550 pounds the whole outfit tipped the scales at 2150 pounds, or a little more than a ton. This is the weight that floated around in the air 4000 feet above Fire Island for 46 minutes, as inventor Tillinghast tells it. As he says the monoplane makes a speed of 120 miles an hour, which careful mathematics will show is two miles a minute, or a mile each minute for each horse power in the Tillinghast engine, imagination fails in conception of what would have happened to the inhabitants of any house if the monoplane with the ton and something over of weight, including three stout gentlemen, had bumped them.

Doesn't Like Applause.

A Worcester paper printed Mr. Tillinghast's thrilling story some days ago, and since that time enterprising newspaper men, journalists and magazine gentlemen have been jumping into Worcester, and jumping right out again, trying to get the inventor to elucidate. Up to date there has been nothing doing beyond the first announcement. Mr. Tillinghast has been almost as hard to find this week as Dr. Cook. When he has been run down he has preserved a silence which, if not dignified, has been dense. He appears to shrink from the plaudits of his admiring fellow countrymen and refuses them his confidence through their representatives of the press.

The Globe reporter came up here with it firmly fixed in his mind that he had read that Mr. Tillinghast had been run down or into a corner by a newspaper reporter who had discovered his secret, the secret of the ages, as it were, and that Mr. Tillinghast had, with great reluctance, admitted that he was the inventor, patentee, owner, and captain of the fastest and most wonderful monoplane in all the world. With a man so modest that he would divulge his secret only as a last resort, when discovered by a trustworthy reporter, the Globe's modest representative figured he was going to have a difficult time in becoming the repository of more of the Tillinghast secret. It was worse than that, even.

The Globe reporter did discover, however, that the reporter who got the original and, as has been said, so far, the only, interview with the great inventor, didn't have to spend any sleepless nights in running down Mr. Tillinghast. As a matter of fact the reporter didn't have to do any worrying at all about securing his "scoop," which is newspaper English for an exclusive publication.

The day before the thrilling news came out in the Worcester paper, Mr. Tillinghast telephoned to the newspaper office and asked to have a certain reporter whom he knew sent around to see him as he had an idea to give out. That reporter had resigned and gone his way, but they told Mr. Tillinghast they had one just as good, and would send him. Mr. Tillinghast said, O, very well, just like that, and the substitute was sent.

No More Till February.

When the reporter and Mr. Tillinghast met the latter casually related his story of the 120-mile-an-hour monoplane, mentioned the night trip to New York, Fire Island and Boston merely as an incident, and stated that he has his aeroplane stored in a secret place which is about 60 miles from Worcester and 14 miles from the nearest railroad. He said he wasn't going to do any more flying until February, when he would bring his machine to a point nearer Worcester, and probably would make some public flights.

The reporter was made happy by getting such a nice, big story, but he was made happier than ever by the promise of Mr. Tillinghast that he would be one of the first to be given a ride. The reporter was told that any time he wanted to drop over to New York to spend the afternoon he could have the use of the 120-mile-an-hour flyer. Casually, the reporter said his folks live in Texas, and Mr. Tillinghast showed the goodness of his heart by offering to run over there with him on a visit some day when he has time.

As though the matter was of no special moment, Mr. Tillinghast cou-

...fided to the reporter that the reason he mentioned the fact of his successful invention at this time was to avoid the annoyance of being asked questions and being bothered by reporters, when he brings the mystery out of its retirement in February.

1909 December 21 (Tues) Boston Herald, p. 12.
BOSTON AIRSHIP A BOAT'S MASTS / Inspector Hoe Mistook Towering Sticks of the James S. Whitney for Framework of Mysterious Night Flyer. / STEAMER WAS MAKING WIDE DETOUR TO BERTH
The mysterious "airship" which was sighted circling over Boston harbor last night has been identified as the towering masts of the steamer James S. Whitney, which ran on the rocks of Hell Gate in New York harbor Saturday night and which arrived in this port about 1 o'clock yesterday morning. Immigration inspector Arthur W. Hoe heard the whistle of the Whitney as she came up the harbor. As is her custom in docking the Whitney makes a wide detour going up on the easterly side of the harbor and turning, coming down on the westerly side so as to back into her berth. After talking the matter over Inspector Hoe was convinced that he mistook the topmasts of the Whitney with their lights for the framework of an airship. In the darkness he did not make out the hull of the steamer.

Officers and crew of the steamer, who were on deck at just the time that Inspector Hoe had visions of an airship flying over the harbor, say they saw nothing of any airship.
1909 December 22 (Wed) Providence (R.I.) Journal, p. 6. (Card 1)

AEROPLANE IN CLOUDS DESCRIBED OVER STATE / Sky-Gazers Declare They Saw Lights and Shape of Airship. / HEADED DUE SOUTHEAST / Colonel R.H.I. Goddard's Head Gardener at Potowomut, Providence Couple and Others Tell of Strange Spectacle in Skies Streaking It Toward Long Island Sound.

Rhode Island has at last entered the list of States whose inhabitants believe they have seen airships in full flight across the country. For some time past Long Island coastguards have reported whizzes and whirrs and headlights enough to make a second aerial carnival such as was held at Nheims, but Rhode Island had been neglected in these observations.

The first two places in this State to report signs of aviation above them are Potowomut and Providence. In Potowomut the observers were not sure that it was a real aeroplane, but in this city the report has all the earmarks which characterize the life savers' reports.

One bright evening late last week, Charles J. Greene, who is head gardener at the estate of Col. Robert H.I. Goddard at Potowomut Neck, noticed a moving light in the sky somewhat to the north of the Goddard place.

He and other employes watched the light until it went out of sight to the southeast. According to Mr. Greene the light was of a rather bluish tinge. The framework of an aeroplane was not discernible at the distance, but Mr. Greene and his fellow observers were certain that it was either an aeroplane or a balloon, as the light was entirely different from that of any of the stars.

BOUND SOUTHEAST.

Had the night been darker with less interference with observation from the glow of the moon and the stars, Mr. Greene thinks it very likely that he could have satisfied himself that it was an airship. It had come from the northwest and was bound southeast when he saw it. He judged that it crossed the west shore of the bay at a point above Old Warwick.

Mr. and Mrs. William S. Forsythe of Evergreen street, near the Pawtucket line, are the Providence couple who report they saw an airship. They are as thoroughly convinced that it was a real aeroplane as they were of being awake.

The Forsythe observations occurred at about 1 o'clock yesterday morning. Mr. and Mrs. Forsythe happened to be up, making preparations for the observance of Christmas, when Mrs. Forsythe looked out of the windows.

Her attention was attracted by two red lights in the sky, which were different from anything she had ever seen there before. She called her husband to the window and both watched the strange spectacle.

The lights appeared to be covering a course that was varied, now rather close to the earth and then soaring upward, but always making toward the south. They were able to make out an object which appeared to be in front of the lights and which kept with the two red spots.

SAW TAIL LIGHT.

The Forsythes believe they saw the tail lights of a big aeroplane. It was moving at such high speed that they could get little more than a superficial view of the appearance of the object, although what they saw was enough to satisfy them as to the identity of the contrivance.

The Forsythes watched until the lights faded out in the haze on the southern horizon. When they arose in the morning they promptly told all their friends of what they had seen.

1909 December 21 (Tues) Berkshire Evening Eagle, p. 1.

Light Caused by a Toy Balloon / By the Associated Press.
WORCHESTER, Mass., Dec. 23.--That the bright light which moved over the city last night and which many thought was a search light attached to an aeroplane, was made by a fire balloon in the belief of numerous citizens. The fire balloon theory was advanced by its advocates today on the ground that the balloon moved in one direction while near the earth and that on reaching a higher altitude it entered a current of air moving in an opposite direction. No one has been found who saw anything that looked like a frame work near the light. All that was seen last night was a light about half as bright as the moon and which moved slowly across the central portion of the city and then back again finally disappearing at the end of two hours.
Jan. 14--Chatta. dirisible.

Boston Evening Transcript Dec. 14 p12--Fortunately the claimed achievement of the Worcester aviator can be proved or disproved without sending to Denmark (re Cook).
Dec. 24 pt. 2 p.2--The Worch people are diligently observing one of Dr. Hale's precepts: "Look up and not down."
Dec. 31 p. 1--Dirt is Flying on Mars--canalae novae in Syrtis Major region--Lowell before AAAS.
Mon. Mar. 24, 1910--Comet Has the Skies / Aeroplanes Forgotten by Those Who Watch the Heavenly Visitor First Discovered in S. Afr.
Walc, Tillinghast Ave, comet! The men, women and children--and a few pickpockets--who spent their leisure evenings watching for the mysterious aeroplane from Worcester will now get quite as much satisfaction craning their necks to see the comet.
1909 December 21 (Th eve) Boston Globe, p.1 (Card 1)

WORCESTER PALPITATING / All Excitement Today Over That Airship / TILLINGHAST GENERALLY GIVEN CREDIT FOR BEING THE MAN. / So Many People Saw It That No Question Is Raised of Some Craft Making Flight.

WORCESTER, Dec. 23.--If Worcesterers was awake last night at the high-in-the-air performances of a mysterious craft that plowed through the atmosphere, today the town is palpitating with excitement over the identity of the aviator, the character of his machine and the place from whence he came to circle over the city. Credit is universally given to Wallace E. Tillinghast, the man who has admitted that he has a powerful monoplane, and who has stated that his invention is so efficient that it has remained aloft for 20 minutes with the engines stopped.

Mr. Tillinghast is regarded as the pilot who navigated the airship above Worcester because he is the only person in this vicinity who is known to have an aeroplane and because he was absent from home last evening, and even Mrs. Tillinghast says she does not know where he was. But he has set the tongues a-wagging, and the sleuths are hot on the trail of the shelter where his device is stored.

Mr. Tillinghast left his office late in the afternoon and boarded a train going east from the Union station. No one was trailing him, so it is not known where he left the train. Usually when he has made evening excursions from Worcester he has journeyed by automobile, but for some reason yesterday afternoon he discarded it.

Sure There Was an Airship.

Whether the noncommittal Mr. Tillinghast is the man who startled the city last evening or not, there is no doubt that some person was navigating a heavier-than-air machine here. So many reputable persons saw it and agree in their descriptions tobt even the most skeptical is not questioning today that it did happen.

It could not have been a meteor, nor a mirage, nor any nebulous phenomenon of the heavens. On this dark night, with the atmosphere laden with snowflakes the stars could not have been a jangling, say the scores who observed the black object above the city's building line.

The demonstration began about 6:30 p.m., when policemen and Christmas shoppers on Main st. saw a brilliant ray cutting the dark. It was first observed in the direction of Grafton, southeast of Worcester, and the watchers saw the light growing brighter, indicating the approach of an object high in the air.

It seemed to be aloft 1000 feet, and the rays apparently proceeded from a lamp about the size of the searchlight of an automobile. As it came nearer it was apparent that the lamp was attached to a large black object, but the machine was so high that its form could not be distinguished.

Soon after the first man on Main st. pointed it out, the object sailed over city hall and proceeded above the main thoroughfare to above the State mutual life insurance company's building. Groups of men and women watched it as it could be traced by the light toward Greendale, where farmers and railroad men had their attention attracted.

A short time afterward the operator began to cut great circles around the center of the city, and then he headed west. He was missed for about half an hour and during that time was evidently making a flight to Marlboro and return, for authentic reports from that city have identified the aeroplane.

Between 7 and 7:30 p.m. Worcester had Another sight of the airship when it appeared over Main st from the west. This time the aviator was aggravated the curious still more by bringing his craft to a halt in the air above the State mutual building.
Hundreds Saw It.

Arthur Nichols and A.H. Wyman, in an automobile, drove through the street calling the attention of the people to the strange craft above their heads. A porter sweeping the sidewalk in front of a restaurant dropped his broom and called 60 diners to the street.

Hundreds were looking up at the black object and trying to distinguish its outlines. Others were listening for the whirr of the engines.

Though the darkness made it difficult to describe the character of the machine, there is a general agreement by the observers that it was a type of aeroplane. A policeman says he saw broad, projecting shelves that looked to him like the planes he had seen in pictures of the Wright brothers' invention. He also says it was a monstrous affair, for the dark blotch indicated a great expanse of wings. But he could not tell how many planes the craft had.

Other observers insisted that they could detect figures seated in the center of the machine. Some said there was one human form aloft and others protested that they could discern two persons, presumably men.

Many persons saw the light and described it as powerful enough to illuminate a way sufficient to enable the aviator to dodge trees and buildings, but of little service to those below in disclosing the structural form of the craft. While the populace was in imminent danger of dislocating their necks the man in the airship held his rudder true and remained for several minutes stationary about the State Mutual life building.

It seemed as if he were tantalizing the throng below, so long did he hover. All the time the sibilant note of the engines could be heard above the exclamations from the crowd.

In the midst of this tense excitement the craft got under way again and made another circle off toward Greendale. As the light grew dimmer it appeared to be traveling to the southeast again.

Wallace E. Tillinghast, if it was he, had satisfied a crowd of people that he possessed an airship possible of navigation at a great height and also capable of marvelous control.

HOW FAST DID IT GO?

No one ventures to compute the speed the ship made last evening. Many of the observers describe the flight as faster than a railroad train, and others posing as speed experts assert that at one time the aeroplane was making more than 60 miles an hour. With a heavier-than-air machine the laws of physics require an excessive speed for the attainment of a height, and the progress of ascent depends upon the rate at which the craft can be sent against the air. So the experts, calculating the height of the ship last night to be fully 1000 feet, argued that the aviator must have developed a speed of more than 60 miles an hour.

But the mystery is only deepened by this performance of last night. Perhaps it was Tillinghast, the man who says he made a record flight to New York and return on Sept. 8 and stopped for 46 minutes 4000 feet in the air while he repaired his engines. He is on record as having defied the laws of gravitation in this exploit.

But if Tillinghast is the daring conqueror of the air, the people are straining their ears for more details. Where was his wonderful machine made, and where is it being so successfully concealed? Where did he come from last night, and where did he land when his flight was over?

A hundred questions are awaiting the man credited with the exploit of last evening. Up to this time Mr. Tillinghast has given but the barest information about the aeroplane he says he constructed and with which he has made 100 flights.

Hitherto no one has seen any phenomena in the air that might have been his invention, but after last night Worcester people are ready to believe any explanation Mr. Tillinghast might offer.

TILLINGHAST SILENT.

Would Not Discuss Mysterious Occurrence of Last Night and Shut Door on Reporters.

WORCESTER, Dec. 21.--Wallace E. Tillinghast, who was thought by many to have been the aeronaut, especially after his claim that he flew to New York and back in a mysterious airship, was besieged by newspapermen upon his appearance at his office here today.

He not only refused to comment upon the mysterious light last night but after finding that he was being closely questioned shut the door of his office and refused to hold further converse with the reporters.

MARLBORO HAS IT, TOO.

Town is Airship Crazy, and Several Saw Mysterious Craft Last Night and Described its Exact Course.

MARLBORO, Dec. 21.--This city is seemingly airship crazy and in spite of the preparations being made for the celebration of Christmas, airships are greatly discussed. Wallace E. Tillinghast, the Worcester man reported to have made an aerial journey from New York to Boston is the man held responsible for this condition of things.

The mysterious airship made its appearance in this vicinity Tuesday evening, Dec. 14, and since that time has been here at least eight times. It generally appears in the heavens about 7:30 in the evening, turns around and goes in the direction of Worcester.

Several hundred spectators gathered near the city hall last night to await its coming, and little knots of people gathered in different parts of the city. Last night when it appeared it seemed to have a strong searchlight attached.

Among those who saw the ship was Guy Lane, a motorman on the Boston & Worcester street railway, who said that it kept ahead of his car which was going at a rate of speed equal to the car--30 miles an hour. Mr. Lane said the searchlight seemed to be about the same size as that used by the Boston & Worcester street railway, and the operator of the airship appeared to have perfect control. Conductor Edward Stone corroborated Mr. Lane's story.

1909 December 23 (Th) Boston Globe, p. 6.

Air Ships Seen at Night.

To the Editor of the People's Column--References concerning the Concord "Double Meteor" have been appearing lately in the press. As to this may I recount the following, seen while in camp on the shores of lake Winnepesaukee last August. Shortly after dark one evening we saw approaching from Meredith way, two bright lights in the sky a fixed distance apart, high in the air and drawing near with lightning speed. Passing our camp, whatever it was, it disappeared over toward the Ossipee hills. Only the great speed of the lights marred our belief that it was an aircraft. All doubt was dispelled the next morning by news received from two vacation people a half-mile distant--Dr. Frank Chapman of Groveton, N.H., and Dr. Walter Westwood of Beaumont. These men, it seems, not only saw the lights moving toward Ossipee, but saw them returning about an hour later. Thus the meteor theory is disposed of, and this news from Worcester as to Tillinghast offers itself as a refreshing possible hypothesis in explanation of the strange sight we saw that night. Cyril A. Herrick.

Woburn
1909 December 23 (Th) Boston Herald, p. 1.

WORCESTER AGAPE AT AIRSHIP LIGHTS / Wallace E. Tillinghast May Have Been Flying Above City; Business at Standstill While People Watch. / DESCRIBES CIRCLES AND DISAPPEARS IN DISTANCE / Appears to Be About 1000 Feet in Air: Machine Also Seen Over Marlboro in Course of

Evening. / (Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald.)
WORCESTER, Dec. 21.--Fully 2000 people stood on Main street tonight and watched a mysterious light which travelled from 600 to 1000 feet above the earth, for a time passing up and down over the entire city from east to west and later describing circles nearly over City Hall. When the light appeared there was a slight fall of snow and the moon and stars were not visible. The conditions remained about the same up to 9 o'clock, when the light disappeared to the southwest.

The only explanation that could be given tonight was that it was Wallace E. Tillinghast and his airship. Last night a strange light was seen over Marlboro. Its description tallies with the one seen over this city tonight. With the appearance of the light newspapermen hurried to Tillinghast's home. He had been at home at noon but did not return at night. No explanation of his whereabouts would be given by members of his family.

Business men, fully 50 policemen and scores of citizens will swear that they watched the light for an hour or more as it gyrated high in the air. But just what it was is another mystery. Some said it was attached to a kite, and this seemed a plausible theory, as the light moved only two or three blocks back and forth in the same general direction.

Disappeared for a Time.

Then the light sailed off to the southwest, where it disappeared. An hour later the light came back and described a number of circles high over the centre of the city. This convinced all the kite theorists that they were wrong in their conclusion, and at the same time proved that it was not a balloon.

The light was first seen by the squad of policemen leaving the central station on Waldo street at 5:40 o'clock. At about the same time a patron of a restaurant on Main street saw the light. He called to the ~~patron~~ proprietor and soon 50 patrons of the place were on the sidewalk watching the light.

From Main street the light appeared about two-thirds the size of an automobile headlight. It was about twice as bright as the moon, which at one time broke through the clouds, but not clearly enough to make it possible to see what the light was attached to. Persons standing in front of the State Mutual, the highest building in the city, said the light was fully 1000 feet in the air.

Flare at Times.

At times there was a flare of the light and it looked just as the headlight of an automobile looks at a distance when the machine whirls around a corner. At other times it could be seen side on, giving the appearance of a strong light with a reflector back of it, casting a glare into the space beyond.

The light, when it first appeared, travelled back and forth from the State Mutual building to the postoffice in Franklin square. It was about 7 o'clock when it disappeared to the southwest. It came back again about 8:40 o'clock and circled high about the City Hall, describing circles of a radius of a dozen blocks or so.

Christmas shoppers on Main street forgot their errands, and in some quarters of the city the routine of business was practically at a standstill. More than a score of policemen forgot to travel their beats and to send in their duty calls at regular intervals.

Tillinghast's Claims.

Although Tillinghast claims to have made over 100 successful aeroplane trips in machines of his own construction, of which a score have been made in the machine which, it is believed, navigated the air over Worcester and vicinity last night is was not until Dec. 13 that the story of his creative interest became public.

On that date aeronauts and others were surprised by the announcement that Mr. Tillinghast had on Sept. 8 made a trip in his aeroplane to the Statue of Liberty in New York city, thence to Boston and back to his starting ~~point~~ point, a distance of 600 miles, without once alighting.

Mr. Tillinghast says that he will make his first competitive test during the airship exhibit in Boston next summer. He describes his machine as being of the monoplane type, with a spread of 72 feet, weighing 1550 pounds and furnished with a gasoline engine of 120 horsepower, made from a particular specifications. An average speed of 20 miles an hour has been attained from its power, he says. Three persons are usually carried, two mechanics and Mr. Tillinghast. He claims that its performances exceed the best announced records for speed and altitude.

MARLBORO, Dec. 22.--An airship was sighted over Marlboro tonight about 6 o'clock, going northwest at 300 or more miles an hour. Persons in all sections of the city reported having had a glimpse of it. Its general course, they say, was in the direction of Clifton.
1909 December 23 (Th) Boston Journal, p. 1.

THOUSANDS SEE BIG AIRSHIP SAILING OVER WORCESTER / Believed to Be Wallace E. Tillinghast in His Aeroplane. / INVENTOR ABSENT FROM HIS HOME / Machine Circles City Several Times at Height of Two Thousand Feet.

Worcester, Dec. 22.--Wallace E. Tillinghast, the mysterious aviator, whose tales of flying to New York and back at a speed of 120 miles an hour on Sept. 8, in an aeroplane of his own invention, startled the aeronauts of this section of the country, was seen by fully a thousand residents here tonight repeatedly encircling the city in a huge airship Mr. Tillinghast Absent.

At least the people who saw the airship took it for granted that Tillinghast was the aviator, and a Journal reporter, with others, at once made inquiries and learned that Mr. Tillinghast was away from home and that he telephoned his house from his office at 4 o'clock in the afternoon that he would not be home tonight. Further than that, he usually goes to where he says his aeroplane is hidden in his automobile but his auto is now out of repair, and he was seen taking a train shortly after 4 o'clock this afternoon.

At 11 o'clock tonight he had not returned to his home and was not expected until morning. All this taken into consideration, together with the spectacle of the red tail-lights and the dim black form of the airship hovering about the city from almost every point of the compass leaves no doubt in the minds of all who witnessed it that Mr. Tillinghast was the operator and the airship was his own invention.

Saw Red Tail-Lights.

Mr. Tillinghast has said repeatedly that he was not ready to exhibit his craft to the world until some time in the early spring, probably next February. He has also said that he does not care whether the public believes his statement or not about his former trips. He says he always goes out in the night for the purpose of secrecy.

At about 6:40 tonight one of the employees of the Pitman & Thurston restaurant was at the door and saw the red tail-lights soaring high overhead, coming in a direction apparently from Millbury. He stepped inside the restaurant and told Paul McHale, the manager. Mr. McHale and patrons of the place went out and took a look at the thing. Others gathered and soon there was a great crowd.

There seemed no doubt but it was an airship. The red lights were unmistakable, as was the spreading black form of the machine against the sky. The airship made directly over City Hall, circled and sailed above Main street down as far as Lincoln square. Four times the aeroplane circled the city, apparently at a height of from 1500 to 2000 feet, going with great speed.

There seemed to be two forms in the 7p.3/ machine. At times they were quite plain as to shape, but by no means distinguishable otherwise. After circling the city four times the mammoth aeroplane made off in a westerly direction toward Spencer and was gone half an hour. Again it returned and circled the city, then went out toward Greendale, returned and hung apparently over the State Mutual Building. At that moment the police liquor squad under Sergt. Murray was coming out preparatory to making raids. The officers saw the airship and stopped to watch.

Daniel Ward, Arthur Nichols, A.P. Cristy and many others saw the airship and discussed its appearance. After sailing over the city a few more times it disappeared, going toward Millbury.

1909 December 23 (Th eve) Rutland, Vt., Daily Herald, p. 6. (card 1)

OTHERS SAW NIGHT FLIER. / Boston Man Tells of Fleeting Lights High Up Over New Hampshire.

Boston, Dec. 22.--Immigrant Inspector Arthur W. Hoe is wroth at the insinuations that he mistook the masthead lights of a ~~xxxx~~ steamer for airship lights.

It was from Inspector Hoe that a detailed story was obtained yesterday about the mysterious night flight of an unknown airship over Boston Harbor.

"I know the masthead light of a ship when I see it. I ought to have sufficient acumen to distinguish between the masthead light of a steamer 100 yards away and a light high in the air miles away.

"I saw the Whitney going inot her berth. The Whitney was coming up the harbor while the light I referred to was going down the harbor. The light I saw is still believe was that of an airship, because I could trace the outline of the structure."

Inspector Hoe's report of the night flyer has developed the fact that the same airship, or some other equally mysterious one, has been holding secret night flights for several months over various parts of New England.

Cyril F. Herrick of Woburn is confident that some aviator has been making successful flights. He says:

"It may not have been Mr. Tillinghast of Worcester, but somebody who knows how to do it was flying over Lake Winnepesaukee last summer while my family were camping in Centre Harbor, N.H.

"One evening in late August we saw approaching from over Meredith two lights, a constant distance apart, moving parallel to the earth and at express train speed. Passing camp the mysterious appearance swung toward the Ossipee Hills and vanished.

"But for its speed we felt certain that this must have been an airship.

"All doubts even on this score were done away with when the next morning two vacationists, Dr. Frank Chapman of Groveton, N.H., and Dr. Walter Westwood of Beachmont informed us that not only had they seen the light proceed toward the mountains across the lake but they also an hour or so later saw the same phenomenon return and vanish again over Meredith.

"This was no doubt the 'double meteor' reported from Concord and ridiculed by the press. Personally I have confidence that Mr. Tillinghast or some other navigator of the air, and one of surpassing skill, was abroad over the lake last night."

Pawtucket, Dec. 22.--An airship in the sky last night attracted a number of Pawtucket people, who thought it might be Wallace E. Tillinghast, the Worcester man, on another trip to New York. Mrs. William S. Forsythe, who first called attention to the strange lights, said they were taking a course that varied, now low, than a little higher, but all the time gradually going toward the south.

"I was enabled to single out the large object in front of the lights, for they were at the rear of the ship and it was not difficult to make out that it was a flying machine," said Mrs. Forsythe.

1909 December 24 (Fri) Boston Globe, p. 1. (card 1)

AIRSHIP IS JUST VENUS / Appears Over Worcester Shortly After 6 O'clock. / Even Boston Folk Get Glimpse of Strange Visitor. / Meanwhile Mr Tillinghast Is at His Place of Business.

WORCESTER, Dec. 23--That part of Worcester that did not see the "air ship" high up above the clouds last evening saw it tonight between 6 and 7:30 o'clock. So there would be no disappointed ones within the city or in the surrounding country either, for the brilliant object at an excessive altitude remained around for observation long enough. Just as reported last evening it came from out of the dull, black east, or perhaps the southeast, this evening. It sped over the city but far aloft, so far aloft that it traversed a celestial track behind the clouds at times, and then "the searchlight" by which the reckless nocturnal aviator was finding his way was obscured.

He was a playful aeronaut, this manipulator of the mysterious device which had conquered when others had failed. At times he turned his headlight full on until it looked like the powerful lamp of a motor car. The rays "cut the dusky pall of night," as the policeman on the corner said, as the human agent diverted the lamp from one direction to another.

Shafts of Light in Streets.

The shafts of light shone down on the street, illuminated the waving flags upon the tall department store on Main st, made the polished window panes of the office buildings alive with a weird, uncanny flame. The keen rays danced across the sky and "ever and anon," as the porter in a restaurant said, and "ever and anon" they accomplished circles.

The young woman who sits up late serving doughnuts and a coffee in the modest lunchroom was enthralled. Never in her life, said she--and she has lived some time, and most successfully--had she seen so entrancing a demonstration of the ingenuity of man in "rivalling the glorious orbs of night themselves."

So it went through the city from about 6 o'clock. Worcester was watching this evening for the ocular proof of the existence of Wallace E. Tillinghast's wonderful monoplane that can be raised to an altitude of 4000 feet and be hove to for repairs. Worcester would not let it escape this evening.

Many Scan the Heavens.

People forgot their suppers in the keen contest for the honor of being the first to hail the appearance of the air machine which had been accredited to Mr Tillinghast, although he was not seeking such generous acknowledgment of his efforts in emulation of the Wright brothers. They sat on their doorsteps and craned their necks as they scanned the heavens.

In the main thoroughfares people with bundles stood agape, and as they gazed skyward they forgot to board the street cars for which they had been waiting. Everywhere vertebrae were in danger of dislocation.

Finally the presence of the monarch of the heavenly heights was heralded from the northeast section of the city. The wise men there saw it first. Like a fire balloon, and as large as a milk pail it loomed up against the sky.

The standard of the lamp must have had a reflector, for it was turned to the east, west, north and south at various moments, and it shone with equal strength in every direction. The men in the quarters of chemical J rushed to the street and were lost in wonder.

Men and boys poured from the clubrooms and women rushed from the houses to view this phenomenon. The streets were thronged.

Country Towns Report It.

From there the news spread to all quarters of the city. Motormen stopped the street cars to take a long look at the wonderful light that must be controlled by human hand, said they. The street car men were sure the reflector was a more powerful one than the magnifying lamp carried on their forward dashboard. It was equal to the concentrated power of a dozen street car headlights, they exclaimed in admiration.

Last night's sensation was nothing like that of tonight. And every body in the neighboring country wished to notify Worcester that the "airship" was abroad again. Worcester, the supposed home of the audacious aviator, was warned from a score of sources to keep its eye on the bold navigator, who was playing with the people this way, throwing the shafts of his "searchlight" in their eyes and parading his supremacy over all terrestrial agencies.

Marlboro sent a hasty dispatch by wire that the ship had just left and was sailing toward Worcester. Look out!

Westborg said the airship had just passed with a monster light right amidships. So high in the air was it, however, that it was impossible to discern the outline of the mammoth aeroplane, even with the strongest telescopes and field glasses.

Path Indicated by Telephone.

Leominster had it "cutting athwart the azure sky," and Fitchburg, not less rhetorical, reported the monster lamp throwing its "clear, blinding yellow rays across the dome of inky blackness."

Then Maynard: "Like a pellucid stream the waves of light broke through, over, beyond, under and up against the filmy splashes white, a dazzling play in cloudland."

It seemed as if everybody in and outside of Worcester who had a telephone or could reach one was calling up somebody or other to appraise him of the great exploit of the mysterious individual who as a navigator of the unknown regions far above was exceeding even the most fanciful dreamers in the realism of his accomplishment, just as if Worcester did not know she was the name of an airship that was outdoing all that anyone ever believed would ever be imagined of such a vessel.

Moynahan Alone Fails.

Now there was one man in Worcester last night who ought to know all about that airship. High up in the tower of the fire headquarters, wherein is located the fire alarm telegraph office, the operator on duty could "view the landscape o'er" in any and every direction with but successive turns of his head. He ought to know about this ship.

So the people that remembered this man in his eyrie rang him up by telephone. It happened that the first one to think of it was a fireman attached to chemical J. He called and the alert Frank Moynihan, the night fire alarm operator, responded.

"Have you seen the airship, Frank?" asked the fireman.

"No," said Mr. Moynihan, "where is it?"
"Over to the southwest, going toward Springfield, and going like blue blazes."

Frank took a peek out of the window and, of course, he saw it. Then he went back to the telephone.

"I've seen it," said he. "Great, isn't it? It's Venus, you know; Venus, the planet. Have another look. It's great! Good night." Fireman Says Its Venus.

As Mr Moynihan turned from the telephone to take another look at the brilliant Venus, then rapidly disappearing, he gazed down across the street and into the building where Wallace E. Tillinghast has his office and drafting room, and there was Mr. Tillinghast hard at work over the drafting board in his office.

Mr Tillinghast was not talking about his airship today. He would not see anybody, not even an expert who came from New York to go over the details of his monoplane with him. He did not care if the eminent authority on aeronautics had journeyed from the gold fields of Alaska to see him. He was talking steam fitting today, was his message, for that is his business.

"By and by, when I get ready, I will tell about my monoplane," said he. "I can carry three or four persons at 120 miles an hour and do all I have claimed for it."

SEEN IN BOSTON.

Many Persons Positive They Saw the Light of Some Mysterious Navigator of the Air.

Some manner or form of aerial traveler was abroad early last evening, according to many who called up the Globe on the telephone, and passed over Boston and the suburbs to the west at an hour when the overcast and cloud-specked sky made it an impossibility for observers on the ground and rooftops to distinguish even the outlines of a flying machine, even with the aid of night glasses.

However, notwithstanding the fact that up to a late hour nobody had come forward to vouch for the truth of the assertion that an aeroplane did actually fly over the city, there are thousands who were even eager to stake their reputations that some stable and movable body carried a powerful searchlight and that the operator of the light maneuvered it in such a convincing manner that not one doubt was expressed last night but what the light was a part of the outfit of some aerial machine.

Certain it is, though, that attention was first attracted to a bright light in the sky about 6 o'clock that seemed to be moving slowly first in one direction and then another, generally east and west, and that the light remained visible to the excited watchers until nearly 8 o'clock.

When Wallace E. Tillinghast, the Worcesterman, who claims to have invented a monoplane in which he has traveled from Worcester to Boston, thence to New York and back again to Worcester, proclaimed some time ago that he had a machine that was capable of even greater things, his statements were accepted with some doubt, but whether or not it was the Tillinghast monoplane that hovered over the city last evening was not known, but there is absolutely no doubt that some kind of a flying machine carried the searchlight that was seen.

The first person who breathlessly spread the report last evening that the flying machine was abroad was laughed at, and the man who was made a somewhat exhaustive study of astronomy, after looking in the direction in which the discoverer of the unusually bright light indicated, declared that the light was but an unusually clear view of Venus. But when the telephone calls began to come asking if the light was really a searchlight carried by an aviator a reporter was sent out to find out if possible about the light and to ascertain, if possible, if it was really and truly an airship's searchlight that was responsible for all the commotion and suppressed excitement.

At Riverbank court, the large apartment hotel on the Cambridge side of the Harvard bridge, everybody was agog over the passage of the airship. Between 40 and 50 guests of the hotel had seen the light between 6 and 7:45 and some had even seen it later as it sank from sight below the western horizon.

Frank A. Arend, who lives at Riverbank court, was told that the airship was passing over the city and toward the west by a couple of friends, who as they were walking across Harvard bridge from the Boston side saw the light to the southeast, presumably over South bay. Miss Davis, another of the guests at the hotel, saw the light just about 6 o'clock and it was then directly over Harvard bridge and very high up.

When the news was passed around the hotel that the airship's light was passing by there was a general exodus, all anxious to see the phenomenon.

Mr Arend told the reporter that when he reached the Cambridge parkway, directly in front of the hotel, the light was then well to the westward; in fact, it seemed to be directly over the Cottage Farm bridge. It was in the line of vision with the top of the Charlesgate hospital and seemed to be receding all the while. Mr Arend was positive that at times the light was above the clouds, as it was sometimes obscured. To make sure that he was not the victim of an optical illusion he placed himself in line with a small shade tree and remained there, perfectly still. At first the light was stationary, but then it slowly, yet positively, moved to the right, and then rapidly disappeared in the west.

W.D. Allen, another guest at the Riverbank court, saw the light and was positive that it was not a star. He said it must have been moving in a circle, for at times it appeared to be not larger than a saucer, and again the reflection of its rays upon the clouds showed a diameter several times larger.

W.W. Davis and his wife were among the crowd that watched the journey of the bright light in the heavens from Riverbank court. "It was 10 times as large as any star," said Mr Davis, "and it seemed to stand still just over Cottage farm, or perhaps in Brookline or Brighton. It was undoubtedly a searchlight of an airship, for it certainly moved and at times it seemed as if the operator of the machine described a complete circle."

"The light was a tremendously strong one--it must have been," said J.W. Crosby. "I saw it first over Cottage farm bridge and as I stood watching it it swerved completely around. It was a simple matter to follow its path with the naked eye, as the rays were halted by the clouds."

W.U. Swan with the others watched the light intently and last night was absolutely sure that he saw the light dip and rise.

And there were others who were satisfied that they saw the flight of an airship, and among the number were Dr and Mrs George, George Coy, Charles Liffler, Mr Sawyer and almost the entire corps of clerks and attaches.

That the little knot of people living at the Riverbank court were not the only ones who saw the light, which they took for granted was that of an airship was evidenced from the number of telephone calls that reached the Globe office until well toward midnight.

Even the Somerville board of aldermen was apprised of the presence of the light, and took an adjournment that the members might watch the course taken by it. They gazed long and earnestly and had the pleasure at least to their own satisfaction, of seeing the body of light move slowly and deliberately away.

Many people were halted at the junction of West Newton st and Columbus av about 6:30, and all were gazing long and studiously at a light that was on its way toward the southward. The light was quite dim, it is true, but according to Walter Simpson of Wellington st, it moved with variable speed.

REVERE SEES ITS WINGS.

Several Observers Say They Were Able to Make Out Outlines of the Airship.

REVERE, Dec. 23--Several responsible persons of this town declare they saw an airship overhead early this evening. There is no doubt about it, they say; they saw it and they studied it and they are sure it came from the direction of Worcester and returned to that one-time dry city.

Samuel Gibby, chairman of the board of sewer commissioners, first saw two bright lights from 1000 to 2000 feet in the air coming from the direction of Boston at race horse speed.

The lights were reflected upon the wings of the airship and caused them to look like two great pillows. One was above the other and from between the two bright lights flashed another, which appeared like the searchlight of a powerful automobile. He called a neighbor, Sylvester Van Vorst, who was just driving out of his barn, and together the two watched the flight of the sky pilot for several minutes. The ship approached Revere, hovered over it, turned and went away and then returned. The lights disappeared when the ship turned away. It went over Winthrop and then disappeared rapidly to the westward.

Chief Arthur L. Kimball of the Revere fire department, who lives on Winthrop av, was just coming out of his house, where he had been to supper, to return to the central fire station, when he saw the airship. He estimated it was from 1000 to 2000 feet in the air and that it was moving with express-train rapidity. Chief Kimball said he watched the light from 7:15 to 7:30 o'clock, and he is positive it was an airship, because he was able to see its outlines.

Albert Marden of the central fire station also had a good long look at the mysterious object.

Chief Kimball said later that when he first saw the strange, bright illumination he was puzzled. He at once believed it was some new machine of the war department which had been sent up from one of the forts at Winthrop and was being tested. He suspected that it might be a fire balloon, but after studying the object for 20 minutes he was able to make out its great white wings and to see that it was nothing more or less than a heavier than air machine such as he has seen illustrations of in the scientific papers of late.

George Pratt, one of the oldest residents of the town in whom every body has confidence, was called out of the house by Chief Kimball and they watched the ship for 20 minutes, both gentlemen said tonight. Mr Pratt lives in the same house with Chief Kimball and neither will for an instant consider a suggestion that it is possible that they were mistaken.

CAMBRIDGE ALSO SEES IT.

Airship Described as Moving from West to East and Then in Opposite Direction.

A mysterious airship made its appearance over Cambridge shortly before 8 o'clock last night. It was plainly seen by passengers on the platforms of several electric cars and by people on Massachusetts av and in Harvard sq.

A very brilliant light was what first attracted attention. It appeared to come from the southwest. It moved rapidly and then came to a standstill, remaining thus for several minutes. Then it moved toward the east and reappeared again later and rapidly went west again.

No person reports making out any outlines of the airship.

AGAIN THE SEARCHLIGHT.

Willimantic, Conn, Thinks It Sees the Airship Passing Over the City.

WILLIMANTIC, Conn, Dec. 23--What is thought to have been the airship which has been seen over Worcester the past two nights was seen here tonight.

A searchlight which the ship carried was played from side to side as it passed.

1909 December 24 (Mon) Boston Herald, p. 1. (cont 1)

MYSTERIOUS AIR CRAFT CIRCLES ABOUT BOSTON FOR NEARLY SIX HOURS / Some Declare They Discern Outlines of Monoplane Bearing Two Men--Seems Under Control and Moves Rapidly or Stops. / MEANWHILE TILLINGHAST IS WATCHED IN OFFICE / Jokers Send up Hot-Air Balloons in Worcester--Many Fooled but Those Who Saw Original Say Light Is Not Same.

Boston received its first view last night of the mysterious light which for several nights has hovered over Worcester and Marlboro, and which thousands of people are willing to take oath is attached to an aeroplane of some kind.

Between 6 o'clock last evening and midnight it was trailed from Marlboro to Fitchburg and back through Worcester, thence to Boston and Natick, Wellesley, Newton and Needham. From Boston the light passed to the northeast, circling over Chelsea and Revere, through Lynn toward the Salem line, then returning as far as Framingham, where it mysteriously disappeared from the eager searchings of newspaper men, who hoped to trail the daring aerial navigator to his lair and unfathom the mystery which has now perplexed the entire eastern part of the state.

No question since the north pole controversy has stirred up general a discussion in the entire state as the present airship mystery. Is it the work of jokers who are sending up hot air balloons? Was Wallace E. Tillinghast of Worcester an airship which will be the marvel of the world? Has some one else in the quiet and seclusion of the country about Worcester constructed an airship which will outrival all competitors for aerial flight? Is there a light in the sky, or are people, amid the rejoicing of Christmas time, simply seeing things? Positive It Is Monoplane.

All these questions were put and answered last night as nearly every city and town between Worcester and Fitchburg and Boston. Those who saw the light are positive in their belief that they also made out the outlines of some aerial craft that closely resembled a monoplane of the type used by Latham and Bleriot.

They say the machine was under perfect control and that it flew close to the ground, coming as near to the earth as 100 feet in Natick, and later rising to fully 1000 feet. Some say there were two men in the craft. One was standing forward near the headlight, which has been seen by thousands of people, and the second man was in the stern, where a much dimmer light was burning. They say the craft at times attained a speed of fully 60 miles an hour, while again it remained stationary for 15(?) minutes at a time.

While all this diversity of opinion and explanation is going on, Wallace E. Tillinghast, who says he recently flew to New York and back in the night, is not disposed to enlighten the public on his movements. When asked if he was the man who was flying over Worcester Wednesday night he replied, "If I was it is my own business and no one else's." Tillinghast Uncommunicative.

Tillinghast says he has an airship which will carry three or four persons. He declines to tell where it is or to give any information to prove his assertion. He refused to discuss the matter with newspapermen yesterday either at his home or at his office in Worcester.

The appearance of the mysterious light and the avowed airship created a sensation in cities and towns over which it passed. The report of the airship headed toward Boston reached the city about 7 o'clock. Several hundred people went to points of observation and saw the mysterious lights and what they believe to be an airship.

In Chelsea, Revere and Lynn scores saw the mysterious craft and say it turned in its course over Lynn and started back over Boston. It later passed on to the westward and was last seen over Framingham soon after 11 o'clock.

If the mysterious craft is the Tillinghast airship, it is positively asserted in Worcester that Wallace E. Tillinghast was not in the craft. Newspaper men who were camped on his trail say he did not leave his office last night until after the airship was well on its course toward Boston.

Balloons in Worcester.

Worcester received some excitement at the hands of practical jokers. Two hot-air balloons were sent up from the western part of the city. There was no question as to what the lights were. Those who saw the mysterious light of Wednesday night say there was no comparison between the bright white light which circled over the city Wednesday night and the glowing red light of the hot-air balloons.

Those who had not seen the light on Wednesday night believed this demonstration to be the light of an airship and watched until the balloons disappeared to the east. The first balloon was seen at 6:45 o'clock in the southwest, and covered Worcester at a rapid rate, disappearing within three minutes in the east. Upwards of half an hour later a second balloon was seen in the west, and floated over the city more leisurely.

To make sure that Tillinghast had nothing to do with last night's demonstration he was watched every minute from 5:30 to 8 o'clock and his whereabouts are well accounted for.

Started in Fitchburg.

The trail of the bright white light, which observers liken to the glare of the headlight of an automobile, was first started last night in Fitchburg. The light came from the southwest soon after 6(?) o'clock. It hovered over the city for a short time, and its height was estimated as 600 feet. It finally disappeared in the direction of Worcester.

At [6:45] o'clock the light, which has become somewhat familiar to people in Marlboro, was seen passing over that city. Several hundred people were on the main street at the time and all watched its progress. It was brighter than during the past two nights when it has been seen in Marlboro. It was a first seen in the northwest, and passed straight over the city, going to the southeast in the direction of Westboro. No sound came from what people believed to be the body of the airship.

There were no clouds in the sky and although the object was outlined in the sky it was up so high that no detail could be made out. There was a light wind blowing at the time.

Passengers and employes of cars on the Boston and Worcester railway saw [p.5] the light soon after 7 o'clock. The crew of one car followed the light for miles and all the passengers of the car were packed in the vestibule watching its progress. It passed over Framingham, Natick, Wellesley and Newton headed directly to Boston.

At one time, when over Natick, it came close to the ground, being probably not over 150 feet up at that moment. Passengers of the car say it assumed the outlines of a monoplane of the type used by Latham and Bleriot. No sound of a machine was heard.

Some of the passengers said they could see two men in the long body of the machine. They said there was one man forward, near the strong headlight, and that the second man was aft nearer the dull glowing tail light.

At times the machine seemed to stop and remain perfectly still for a few moments, then there was a burst of speed, and some say it travelled fully 60 miles an hour. It would swoop down as if coming to earth, and then as quickly turn and go upwards to a very high altitude. It seemed to be in perfect control of those handling it.

At Sunnyside, in Natick, several scores of people saw the affair and watched it as it moved slowly towards Boston. At 7:30 o'clock it had passed over Newton and was in sight of Boston.

Seen in Boston.

Fully 1000 residents of Boston saw the two mysterious lights as they passed over this city, hovering for nearly a half hour above the Common and then swiftly making off again. Business men and over a score of policemen watched the strange lights circling high above the city.

Attention was first attracted to the lights when they were seen above the Public Gardens shortly after 7:30. At first those who saw the lights took them for some unusually bright star, shining through the hazy atmosphere. Then two strong searchlights were distinguished from the blurred outline as they flashed among the buildings on Beacon street visible for a few minutes, the lights disappeared again, and shortly after were seen above the Common, crossing over the Charles Street Mall.

Many of the skaters on the Public Gardens were attracted by the lights and left the ice to join the throng of Christmas shoppers, who forgot their errands to watch the strange sight. The lights moved so quickly that they soon outdistanced the following crowd, and serving to put at rest the belief that they might come from a large balloon.

Outline Discernible.

At times, when seen from what was taken to be the side of the machine, the lights had the appearance of strong automobile searchlights, casting a bright glow from a reflector. Then they were seen head on, and the vague outline of the aerial craft was barely discernible between the two lights, which seemed to be on either end. At the height of about 1000 feet, which the airship maintained, the lights looked scarcely a fathom apart, shining with a brightness greater than that of the moon. Long shadows were cast by the lights as they flashed for a moment and then quickly dimmed.

Above the Common the lights remained apparently stationary for somewhat less than half hour, an evident contravention of the popular principle that an aeroplane can remain in the air only when in motion.

Beacon Street People Saw It.

Among the first to see the mysterious visitor were the members of the Somerset and Puritan clubs and the residents along the Beacon Street side of the Common, who hurried to the street to witness the spectacle of what appeared to be an aeroplane under apparently perfect control hovering high in the air and performing successful evolutions.

But a short time was given to see the novel sight, however, for a little before 8 o'clock the lights disappeared in the direction of Lynn. So rapidly did they move that those who attempted to keep the machine in view saw the lights for only a few minutes as they faded into the distance.

Coming back again over the Common and proceeding in the direction of Copley square, the lights were again visible at a little after 8:15. This time they passed quickly over the Back Bay, followed by a detail of patrolmen from station 16, in case the operator attempted a landing, and disappeared in the direction of Brookline and Chestnut Hill.

Seen by Revere Citizens.

The light was plainly seen in Revere soon after 7:30 o'clock. Samuel Gibby, chairman of the Revere sewer commission, was leaving his home on Hillside avenue in that town, when his attention was attracted to the light. He saw it at an angle of 45 [?] degrees coming from the direction of Boston.

He said as it came nearer that there seemed to be huge wings on each side of the bright light. He watched it for fully 15 minutes and called the attention of A. Sylvester Van Vost, a neighbor, to the airship. They saw the machine turn and disappear in the direction of Boston.

Arthur L. Kimball, chief of the Revere fire department, was leaving his home in Winthrop avenue and was on his way to the central fire station when he saw the light. He says he watched it for 15 minutes and called the attention of Albert Marden to it. He says they are positive it was an airship of some kind.

Lynn Residents Report.

In Lynn the mysterious craft was first seen on Union street. Representative Matthew McCann, who conducts a cigar store, saw the light and went out into the street. A crowd soon collected, and the craft was seen to go in the direction of Salem, when it turned and passed over Lynn in the direction of Boston. Representative McCann says there were two lights on the machine, a bright light in the bow and a smaller light in the stern.

John Davis of Union street, Lynn, saw the light and watched it for some time. He said the airship made a noise like a flock of geese passing over the city.

In coming back toward Framingham the craft was seen by a number of people in Harvard square, Cambridge. It was well to the south of Cambridge and appeared to be over Newton.

Opera-goers Watch.

Numbers of people who were on their way to the evening performance at the Boston Opera House on Huntington avenue caught sight of the lights about 7:30 o'clock. When first seen the craft appeared to be many miles away, but gradually came in the direction of the city. The sight of the huge machine moving in the air caused the people to gather in large numbers outside the opera house.

As it came nearer the headlight became brighter, and when it appeared to be only a few miles away gave the appearance of being a strong searchlight.

It was almost 10 minutes before the operators lost sight of the machine, which proceeded from that point along Beacon street toward the Common, where it hovered for several moments before moving off again in a northerly direction.

Tillinghast's Claim Attacked.

The claim of Wallace E. Tillinghast of his flight from Worcester to New York, during which he said he attained an altitude of 4000 feet, and remained in the air 45 minutes while his motor was being repaired, is attacked by Dr. Arthur G. Webster, professor of physics of Clark University, who recently, at the Worcester Club, gave a talk on astronomy and astronomical propositions by which he showed that Dr. Frederick A. Cook's north pole data were faulty.

It is folly, he says, for any airship to start away from the ground from a standstill. This, in substance, is what Dr. Webster thinks of the Tillinghast airship story.

There was much comment in Worcester yesterday concerning what was seen Wednesday night. The theory is not accepted by the public that an airship could stand practically still in mid-air, or run under such slow speed it would require 15 or 20 minutes to make the distance of a city block, as well as the description of Wednesday night's experience.

In order to have remained in the air it would have been necessary for the airship to have been running at a speed not less than 35 miles an hour. If the speed was less the aeroplane would have come so low that it would have been below the tops of the buildings over which it was floating.

One theory is that some practical joker sent up a hydrogen balloon, to which was attached a strong light, which would produce the effect experienced, and which would have floated about the city in the direction and manner as described by being tossed about in the varying currents of the upper air, the wind blowing as it was from the east at a high rate of speed would have brought such a balloon from Marlboro to Worcester in the half-hour which elapsed between the two dates of time, as shown by the statement of spectators.

In Worcester last night it is estimated some 50,000 people thronged the streets until late in the evening, watching for the light. The passage of the trolley cars was seriously impeded by the crowds.

The light was smaller and less brilliant than Wednesday night. This was due, probably, to the fact that it was much farther away and did not pass over the city proper at all.

SEEN OVER WILLIMANTIC.

WILLIMANTIC, Ct., Dec. 23.--What is thought to have been the airship which has been seen over Worcester the past two nights was seen over here tonight. A searchlight which the ship carried was played from side to side as it passed.

1909 December 24 (Fri) Boston Journal, p. 1. (card 1)

SKYSHIP OF MYSTERY FLIES ABOVE BOSTON / Revere Man Gets Close Enough to See Framework and Hears the Engine--Worcester Man Again Absent From Home All the Evening.

The mysterious aviator, again presumably Wallace E. Tillinghast of Worcester, who circled his home city Wednesday night, startled the people of Greater Boston last night with his marvelous airship, which circled about Boston, East Boston, Lynn, Nahant and many other places between this city and in the west to that unknown "somewhere" where he keeps his wonderful monoplane hidden.

The airship was first sighted in Boston about 7:20 last night when thousands of Christmas shoppers saw the strange headlight of a powerful blue-white tinge and the lesser tail light, apparently green in color. These lights circled in the outskirts of East Boston, Chelsea, Lynn and Nahant.

Of Unusual Size.

The most remarkable feature of the whole affair is the statement of Alex Randall of Revere, who is considerable of an expert in aeronautics and motors.

"I saw not only the lights of the airship," he told a Journal reporter, "but I saw the frame quite plainly, and it seems to be of unusual size. I should say the wings have a sweep of seventy feet and the tail and propeller seemed about forty-five feet in length. I could plainly hear the engines whirr and from the explosions of the motor I should say it was with a six or eight-cylinder."

Mr. Randall was surprised when informed that the Tillinghast machine, according to Mr. Tillinghast's statement of some time ago, had wings of a seventy-two foot sweep and carried an eight-cylinder engine.

Thirty Miles An Hour.

"It was a few minutes after 10 o'clock when I saw the airship," continued Mr. Randall. "It was flying quite low, not more than 400 feet I should say, and was over Nahant, coming in my direction. I thought for a moment it was going to land on the aeroplane station I have constructed on my garage, but the thing gradually swerved upward as it got over where I was standing, and it was then I saw it distinctly and heard the engines. It carried a searchlight at either end and the operator seemed to have no difficulty in keeping any course he desired or in keeping dead against the wind which must have been blowing nearly thirty miles an hour at that time.

The whereabouts of Mr. Tillinghast during all these hours when the airship was sighted by so many thousands was a mystery. At that time nothing could be learned in Worcester of his whereabouts, although it was claimed he was away from home.

Mechanic Exhausted.

Still another of the series of striking incidents that make it almost certain Mr. Tillinghast is the mysterious aviator of the marvelous airship is the fact that when he returned to his home yesterday morning after the ship had been seen about Worcester, his eyes were a terribly bloodshot and his face was cut and wind tanned, showing every evidence of having been out in a strong high and cold wind for a long while.

As usual, Mr. Tillinghast was noncommunicative. To a Journal reporter he said: "If I feel inclined to fly about in the air with my invention I will do so and thank the Lord I am not molested up there in the air with newspapermen or uninterested parties. Where I have my machine is a personal matter and you men of the press will have one fine time finding it."

The Journal reporter overheard Mr. Tillinghast in conversation with one of his partners, a Mr. Clark. In this conversation Mr. Tillinghast was heard to tell Mr. Clark that "one of my mechanics was so exhausted after the flight last night he fainted on landing."

Flight Very Successful.

He also said his flight (Wednesday night) had been very successful and he was going to make another right off. At this point he saw the Journal reporter standing in the corner of his office, and so remained silent.

"Tell the public," was Mr. Tillinghast's parting remark, "that when I get ready I will make a public demonstration."

There is no doubt but what there was an airship circling about Greater Boston last night. There is the evidence of the eyes of thousands of reputable citizens who saw the lights sailing round and about under perfect control. Rumors went out during the day yesterday that the lights seen in Worcester Wednesday night were from a fire balloon are laughed at by experienced aviators, inasmuch as these lights were seen to travel swiftly against the wind time and time again.

Last night these lights were under perfect control and circled and turned back and made many unusual movements, going at times dead again at the terrific wind which was blowing from thirty to thirty-five miles an hour. Then again there is the testimony of Mr. Randall of Revere, who saw the wings of the mammoth monoplane, saw the propeller and tail, saw the headlights and heard the whirr of the engine, and also the explosions of the motor with such clearness that he was able to judge as to the number of cylinders it carried.

But if all this were not sufficient proof for the most skeptical, the reports from various towns and cities where this was sighted, reckoned by the time given in each place when it was seen, dovetail perfectly, so that in no case was the airship reported in two localities at the same time.

First Seen at Marlboro.

As far as known the first seen of the airship last night was at 6:43, when residents of Marlboro saw the lights, but at so great an altitude that it was impossible to see the framework. From Marlboro the airship was traced, going in a southeast direction, toward Westboro and Worcester. It was next reported over North Grafton, which is where it would naturally be seen next if it traveled away from Marlboro in the direction reported.

It was then traced from North Grafton over Grafton and Hopedale to Milford, when it was lost to sight for a little while so far as reports that have been received in Boston are concerned. At 7:30 it was seen by people in Mattick, going toward Boston, and a few minutes later thousands of people in Boston were looking at it, seeing only the lights as they circled majestically about over the city.

Seen From The Journal.

Just after 7:30 some people in the business office of The Journal saw the lights through the window. Going to the Washington street door these lights were plain to be seen and appeared as though circling high over the city out toward Brookline or between Boston and Brookline. Like wildfire the news that there was an airship overhead spread down Washington street among the Christmas shoppers, and up and down the streets thousands paused and looked skyward. Excited groups gathered and shouted when they beheld the lights.

The airship was sighted in more than a dozen other towns not named such as Ashland, Wellesley, Winthrop, Beachmont and smaller places of that order. In Beachmont further proof that it was an airship was furnished when Chief of Police Kimball saw it sailing quite low. Just as it seemed over his head the searchlight was plainly turned as though on a swivel and a powerful ray of light was shot down directly upon him.

Thus far the ship has been reported as seen sailing through the heavens at 6:45, 7:30, 7:45, 8:10, 9, 9:50 and 10:15, and without question must have covered hundreds of miles in its wonderful maneuvers.

Down in Lynn more than 3000 people, the police estimate, saw the lights of the airship, and all these people, or most of them, were fortunate enough to see it when it was flying so low that they were able to hear a faint whirring of the engines. The ship was then headed west at an almost incredible speed.

People at Hotel Somerset watched the airship for 45 minutes. Captain Garland and Policeman Fitzpatrick at police headquarters heard the whirring of the machinery as they watched the lights of the great monoplane which has already startled the world.

Charles J. Glidden, president of the Aero club of New England and the most prominent man in aeronautics in this section, was among the doubters when Tillinghast's story was first made public some days ago, but he is now thoroughly convinced. He called The Journal by telephone last night and eagerly sought information concerning the airship and the mysterious aviator, Mr. Tillinghast.

"It is nothing short of marvelous," said Mr. Glidden. "Any man who has perfected an airship, especially a monoplane, as he says it is that will buffet such terrific head winds as these tonight and operate under such perfect control, and travel with such speed, has surely invented something that will revolutionize aviation."

Headed West at 10:30.

"You know we are headquarters for information on these things here in New England and we have received queries from all over the country from France and Germany and other places abroad, and it really is embarrassing to us to be unable to give any information concerning Mr. Tillinghast's invention. I can only say it is simply marvellous, almost miraculous, and I sincerely hope Mr. Tillinghast will soon put his invention before the public."

The last report of the monoplane sighted by so many thousand people in Greater Boston last night, was when it was heading almost due west about 10:30

How Press Agents Earn Their Salaries.

One of the property men of one of the theaters located right on Washington street

It must be the airship everyone about town was getting excited over. Forgetting that he really had no business to leave the theater while the performance was on he rushed in and told of seeing the airship. Someone who heard him went out and told the head usher, who told the press agent, who told the manager, and they went up on the roof.

They all saw the lights circle majestically about the city and they all marveled. Something dropped lightly on the roof. It was a cap. The press agent, who saw it. Picking it up, he silently disappeared and soon had the telephone busy. "Yes," he exclaimed. "Sure thing, honest, you know me, you know I'm no 'con' artist. This is no press agent yarn. We were watching the airship and just as it was over the theater a cap dropped right down at my feet, right out of the sky. Came from the airship head of one of the esculators--no, I mean aviators--only clue. Really, I thought you people ought to have the story.

Of course he said a lot more. A reporter went over, solemnly looked at the cap, heard the story and took the cap away with him. After a while quiet reigned behind the scenes. Something, however, was missing and the stage manager exclaimed, "Where is that property man?"

"Aw, he's up on the roof, looking for his cap," was the reply.
1909 December 24 (Fri) Daily Eastern Argus (Portland, Me), p.2. (cd.1)

WILL-O'-THE-WISP. / Again Those Strange Lights O'erhead. / Whole of Worcester in the Streets. /

Boston, Dec. 23.--Following the report from Worcester last night of the discovery above that city of a strange moving light, apparently the searchlight of a dirigible air craft, tonight brought stories from many points of the observance of similar lights this evening from villages east of Worcester and even from Boston Common. People in the towns of Marlboro, South Framingham, Natick, Ashland, Grafton, North Grafton, Upton, Hopedale and Northboro turned out in throngs tonight to view the mysterious lights in the heavens.

Many declared that the light had all the appearance of a strong searchlight and while they could discover no frame work behind it such as an aeroplane would have they were positive that the light could not be that of a balloon, as it moved as if under control.

Meanwhile Wallace E. Tillinghast, the Worcester man who recently claimed to have invented a machine in which he had covered the distance between Worcester and New York and return, and who, it was thought, might have been the navigator of the supposed air craft last night, remained non-committal today. In an interview he said:

"I was out of Worcester last night. Where I was is my own business. It may be that I flew over the city, but that is my own business too.

"When I said recently that I had flown from Boston to New York and return I said nothing but what was true. I have an airship which will carry three or four persons and will make the speed I claimed for it--that is, about 120 miles an hour.

"When I get ready I shall speak fully and not till then."

While thousands of eyes in Worcester scanned the skies tonight a mysterious light, which many believe to have come from a fire balloon, passed over the city to the southward. Throngs stood in the streets to watch the light.

As soon last night the light was first reported passing over Marlboro about 6:45 o'clock. The light, which was at a height so great as to make impossible a view of its support, disappeared to the southwest in the direction of Westboro and Worcester. It was traced from North Grafton, not far from Worcester, through Grafton, North Grafton, Hopedale and Milford, and then after being lost sight of reappeared in Natick about 7:30 o'clock going in the direction of Boston. Observers are positive that it was a searchlight. At 7:45 it was seen from Boston Common, according to a number of people, among them men who were at a prominent club house on Beacon Hill.

At Hillsboro and Ashland, early in the evening, the population turned out en masse to watch the light pass overhead.

Observers at several points report that while the light was generally steady, occasionally it flashed and once or twice disappeared suddenly.

In Worcester it is estimated fully fifty thousand people thronged the streets and all points of vantage until late in the evening, watching for the light. The passage of the trolley cars was seriously impeded by the crowds.

The light appeared shortly before 7 o'clock, far to the south of Worcester, and after being in view for less than 10 minutes disappeared from the sight of persons on the highest places in the city. It went rapidly to the southeastward. It was smaller and less brilliant than last night. This is due probably to the fact that it was much farther away and did not pass over the city proper at all tonight.

279

Wallace E. Tillinghast was known to be in the city all the evening.

Willimantic, Conn., Dec. 23.--What was thought to be the airship, which has been seen over Worcester the past two nights, was seen over here tonight. A searchlight, which the ship carried, was played from side to side as it passed.

Augusta Joins the Rubber Necks.

Were the strange phenomena confined to the city of Worcester, our Prohibitionist friends might advance one of their bright arguments and claim the spectacle was a delusion occasioned by the Massachusetts city have again taken to drink. But this explanation would not hold water, so to speak, inasmuch as the residents of some of the longtime dry towns of the Bay State are no less positive of having seen the airship, or ships, or whatever it is, or they are, as well as the people of Worcester. And to still further discredit any such argument, now come the abstemious residents of the arid capital of the notoriously dry State of Maine, who last night were gazing skyward in the direction of two strange lights that appeared to be attached to either end of a flying machine of some sort. Those in a position to have witnessed the performance aver that the supposed airship cavorted around the dome of the Capitol several times, kicked up its heels and put off in the direction of the city of Lewiston. Up to the time of going to press the Androscoggin metropolis had not been heard from.

1909 December 24 (Fri) Daily Kennebec Journal (Augusta, Me), p.9 (cd.1)

STRANGE OBJECT / Passes Over Augusta Early Thursday Evening. / Believed to Be Air Ship or Dirigible. Balloon. / Moved as if Being Steered Rather Than Wafted by Wind. /

That either a big balloon or an airship visited, circled about and passed over Augusta in the direction of Lewiston between 6 and 7 o'clock Thursday evening is the belief of a number of persons who saw a strange object in the sky at that time, which seemed to be brilliantly lighted, while others are found who claim that it must have been a planet of peculiar shape and one man is found, who avers that he saw it in about the same place in the sky on the previous night. The airship or balloon theory seems to be the most reasonable on account of the distance which the object was seen to traverse, while its course was being watched.

One of the first persons to see the object was Charles F. Flynt, one of the proprietors of the Journal. He first saw the strange object in the sky at about 6 o'clock when leaving the Journal office. It seemed to him to be in shape like a big balloon, although little could be seen above the light on account of the distance away. It was apparently a great deal higher than it was wide. The object when he first saw it was moving from northeast to southwest. Mr. Flynt and others whose attention was called to the object by him watched it until it almost disappeared. An hour later he again saw it from a location near his residence on East Crescent street where the view was entirely unobstructed. It gradually settled down over Betsy Howard hill and a second time disappeared. The height in the sky of the object could not be estimated, but it seemed all the time to be moving away from the city and when last seen seemed to be as far off as Lewiston if not farther. The object appeared to Mr. Flynt to be much larger than a star and his attention was attracted to it by the flashes of light coming from it. Later it seemed to swing around in the sky and the light appeared in a different direction.

A member of the Journal staff, who saw the mysterious object at about the same time, felt quite sure that he could discern two wings with a larger object in the middle and a brilliant light at the rear of the center, while a second light shed its rays upon the wings. He states that the settling of the object was perceptible and seen at so great a distance he thinks that it must have been moving at a good rate of speed to make the settling noticeable.

Half a dozen of the Journal "Nought Owls" climbed to the top of the Journal building and viewed the object and its movements until the trees on Grove street obscured it from view. The light or lights were seen to move swiftly, both up and down, seemed to circle and made several long gliding sweeps. The direction from the Journal office was in a line bearing over the top of Bines hill.

Robert Morang, who lives on Western avenue, and who was able to see the strange object later than any of the other observers, watched it for some time with a field glass after it had passed over in the direction of Betsy Howard hill and he is confident that it was a big balloon of some sort.

Horace E. Bad Bowditch, who saw the object at about the same time that Mr. Flynt saw it, stated that it had a peculiar sparkle and appeared to him to be diamond shaped. He is of the opinion that it was a peculiarly shaped planet and says that a friend of his saw what was apparently the same object on the previous night in nearly the same position in which he noticed it Thursday evening.

Reports are awaited with interest by those who saw the strange object in the sky of its appearance in some other section. Experiments have been made in various sections of the country with airships recently so that it is quite possible that the object in question may have been either an airship or a dirigible balloon. Whatever it may have been, most of those who saw it say that it moved as if it was being steered in a certain direction rather than wafted by the wind.

1909 December 24 (Fri) Evening Gazette (Worcester, Mass.), p.11 (cd.1)

AEROPLANIACS RUBBER WHILE VENUS WINKS / Brilliant Evening Star Eclipse: Toy Balloons Cut Loose by Some Unknown Practical Joker. / Geo. Cutting Says It's Halley's Comet Giving Curtain Raiser in Honor of Mayor Logan.

The ancient love and evening star, Venus, received more attention last night from the men, women and children of Worcester than has been bestowed upon her by all the seers and astrologers combined in the last three generations. Incidentally, a couple of toy balloons, with special lights attached, received a deal of attention.

The planet Venus is evening star at this time and has been for some weeks. It sets early in the evening, in fact is about the first star visible as twilight comes on. Then it swings slowly toward the west and gradually disappears beneath the horizon.

From the first appearance of thy star last night there was a crowd of people along the street from the City Hall to the Worcester market on the east side of the street. In fact, the airship bug seemed to have stung everybody, with the possible exception of Wallace E. Tillinghast, as he was not observed among those who were stretching their necks to the limit. He was quietly working in his office at the corner of Commercial and Foster streets while the crowds were craning.

"B'Gorry, I kin see the tail on the dum thing," said one observer as he squinted toward the moon by mistake.

"Tillinghast will make the city of Worcester famous," said another as he gazed in admiration at the steadily glowing planet.

"Wonderful, isn't it?" remarked one woman to another, who had a Christmas tree under her arm.

"I should say it was," answered her companion. Do you suppose they can see us?" And she waved the Christmas tree around her head, and nailed an inoffensive looking man on the pate.

"Yes, very wonderful," he murmured as he picked up his hat.

At the Waldorf dining room a big bunch of men were busy with the grub proposition when a man came rushing in with the information that Tillinghast was bearing down upon the town. Everybody dropped his hash and did a Dosando to the front door, to observe the star.

"It moves," said a fat man.

"Let us hope so," said a thin man behind him trying to pass.

By this time the street was fairly lined with the aeroplanists, so that it looked not unlike a labor parade in the 30th century.

Finally Rev. Francis W. Gunn, S.J., instructor of astronomy at Holy Cross College, was called on the phone. Fr. Gunn was ill, so Rev. George L. Coyle, S.J., took a look and without hesitation pronounced it the planet Venus, as did several other students of the subject later in the night.

One peculiar phase of the matter was that there was a wind blowing light clouds over the star frequently. Thus this occasional disappearance and reappearance of the star caused many to think that it was really an aeroplane. The whole affair strongly brings to mind the old saying attributed to P.T. Barnum that the American people like to be humbugged.

George B. Cutting spied the mysterious spark in the sky last evening. "It must be Halley's comet," said Mr. Cutting. "I know it is no not yet time for that heavenly stranger to put in its appearance, but I believe it is playing a curtain raiser in honor of Worcester Christmas shoppers and Mayor Logan's re-election." His version has not as yet been controverted even by the astronomers.

1909 December 24 (Fri) Hartford, Conn., Daily Times, p. 3.

MYSTERY AIRSHIP JUST LIKE VENUS (from Worcester special to Boston Globe)

MACHINE HOVERS OVER WILLIMANTIC--EVOLUTIONS. / Outline of Something Trailing Behind--The Mayor Thinks It Was an Airship. /

Willimantic, December 24.--Shortly after 7:30 last night, when the Christmas shopping trade was crowding the streets of the city, there suddenly came from the east a large searchlight. As it approached the city it grew larger and larger and attracted much attention. When over the southeastern part of the city it came to a standstill and then performed a number of evolutions.

For a few minutes the big light stood still, then its rays were thrown to the earth and remained there for a few seconds. Then there was a sudden turn to the west. Then the rays were thrown east, and for a few seconds the light revolved as though its director was looking for something. In a few minutes the light, which looked as big as a bucket, came forward a little and there could be seen the outlines of something trailing behind.

The airship with its dark outline suddenly started upward and after a few seconds it came down again. It hovered over the city for about fifteen minutes and then turned eastward, starting in the direction of Boston. It is generally believed here that the air ship was that of Wallace Tillinghast of Worcester.

Mayor Daniel P. Dunn saw this strange sight. He said that there was no doubt but that it was an airship.

John Millhouse and others who saw an airship pass above this town on the night in September that Wallace Tillinghast says he went from Boston to New York and returned in his airship said that it was the same.

P.D. Donahue saw the airship in Baltic, a few miles east of this city, and said there were two men in the machine when it passed over Baltic.

Light Seen in Hartford, Also.

Several in Hartford noticed the unusual glow in the eastern heavens last evening. The light was especially brilliant around 9 o'clock and later had the appearance of the milky way, although much more noticeable and of considerably wider area than that celestial phenomenon usually assumes. But whatever was in the heavens was unusual and attracted the attention of quite a few, particularly because of the otherwise clearness of the sky.

1909 December 24 (Fri) Willimantic (Conn) Daily Chronicle, p.1. (cd. 1)

CRAFT OF MYSTERY FINALLY TRACKED TO ITS LAIR--PERHAPS! / Home of the Worcester Aeroplane Located in West Boylston, Massachusetts, It Is Believed. / SHED IS IN DEEP WOODS ON J.B. COUGH ESTATE / While Trying to Get Close to the Place United Press Representative Was Captured, Hauled Before a Justice of the Peace, and Fined for Trespass. /

Worcester, Mass., Dec. 24.--The home of the mysterious aeroplane which has been cruising at unheard of altitudes over Massachusetts for the last two nights and causing wonderment to thousands, it is believed has been found.

Scouring the country about Worcester in a search for the home of the Tillinghast machine, a United Press representative discovered at West Boylston, six miles from this city, that fourteen men in the employ of Paul B. Morgan of the Morgan Construction company of Worcester, were busy in some secret occupation on the old estate of John B. Cough, the old-time temperance lecturer. On this estate, and situated in dense woods, there is a shed more than 100 feet long which, it is believed contains the aeroplane that is to startle the world. No aeroplane was seen by the United Press representative, however. As he was advancing through the woods to reconnoiter he was captured by some of the men employed on the estate, haled before a justice of the peace and fined for trespass.

This, so far, is the only clue to the aeroplane. That it is pregnant with possibilities, however, is certain from the fact that Paul B. Morgan is known as an intimate of Wallace E. Tillinghast and is also known to be interested in aerial navigation. Two years ago Morgan spent $15,000 on the aeroplane of a Swedish aviator but later abandoned it as unsatisfactory. It is now thought that with Tillinghast he has perfected the machine which has been sailing over New England, the same that Tillinghast declares he used in a flight from here to New York and return on September 8.

Though Tillinghast himself is believed to have been himself in Worcester last night thousands all over Massachusetts today declare the aeroplane associated with his declarations and was probably manned by his mechanics was winging its way through the skies up to last night. Between six o'clock last evening until midnight its flashlight were trailed from Marlboro to Fitchburg and back through Worcester thence to Boston via Hattick, Wellesley, Newton and Needham. From Boston the light passed to the northeast, circling over Chelsea and Revere, through Lynn toward the Salem line, then returning as far as Farmingham, where it mysteriously disappeared from the eager searchings of newspaper men who hoped to trail the daring aerial navigator to his lair and unfathom the mystery which has now perturbed the entire eastern part of the state.

Many of the 10,000 people who saw the light are positive in their belief that made the outlines of the same aerial craft that closely resembled a monoplane of the type used by Latham and Bleriot.

They say the machine was under perfect control and that it flew close to the ground, coming as near to the earth as 100 feet in Hattick and later rising to fully 1,000 feet. Some say there were two men in the craft. One was standing forward near the headlight, which has been seen by thousands of people, and the second man was in the stern, where a much dimmer light was burning. They say the craft at times attained a speed of fully 80 miles an hour, while again it remained stationary for fifteen minutes at a time.

1909 December 24 (Fri) Willimantic (Conn) Daily Chronicle, p. 1 (ed1)

"COME, RIDE IN MY AIRSHIP" INVITATION AWAITED BY MANY! / Bright Light in the East Had Willimantic Folks, Hundreds of Them, Guessing. / TWINKLING LITTLE STAR SOME SAY IT WAS. / Others, and Plenty of Them, Sure It was Tillinghast's or Some other Aerial Craft That Had All Eyes Turned Towards the Eastern Skies Last Night. / Twinkle, twinkle little star, / How I wonder what you are, / Up above the world so high, / Like an airship in the sky. /

There was a bright light in the east last night and the wise ones sized it up for Tillinghast's mysterious airship. It was about 7:30 o'clock that the light was first noticed and it was then in the southeast, appearing to be above the thread plant as viewed from the foot of Railroad street but a long ways off--from twenty to thirty miles in the opinion of some of the people who saw it. Patrol policemen and some other matter-of-fact persons winked the other eye when the airship was mentioned but there were plenty of people who were quite willing to declare, and did so declare, that what they had seen in the eastern sky answered in all particulars the descriptions sent out of the mysterious aerial craft that has been creating such a sensation in Worcester and other Massachusetts cities and villages.

There were several hundred in Willimantic who saw what they believed to have been an airship and others said it was Halley's comet. Whatever it was it caused considerable excitement for a while and the curious ones spent several hours with their eyes riveted on the heavens.

The light in the southeast looked like a powerful searchlight. Because of its size and the rays it threw out it attracted wide attention. It remained stationary for a few minutes and then it seemed to shoot upwards, then circled around as though the person manipulating it was trying to get his bearings.

As usual Mayor Dunn's store was crowded about that time and Benjamin Murphy, time-keeper on the New Haven road, came into the place calling the men out to see the airship. Mayor Dunn was among them and he stated last night when seen by a Chronicle reporter that he would not swear it was an airship but it certainly did look like one. Others who saw it were of the same opinion.

The light was miles away apparently and quite high in the air. It played in the east for about fifteen minutes and then vanished. Later there appeared a brilliant star in the firmament and those who had not seen the first light and saw this star were of the opinion that both lights were one and the same, but those who saw the first light said it was not star.

People who had come down street to do their Christmas shopping forgot what they had come for and stood on the sidewalk and even in the middle of the street looking to the east, hoping to see the return of the airship. Some of the skeptical ones, just because they did not hear the buzzing of the engine or get an introduction to the man running the ship, laughed at those who claimed it was an airship they saw. The skeptics could not account, though, for the strange light and its peculiar actions.

It was too bad that the airship, if it was one, did not come nearer the city so that the people could inspect the machine. The scoffers would then have had no ground for scoffing.

One of the skeptics had a lot of fun during the evening putting the credulous ones "wise" to the "airship." Pointing to the bright star he would say "See it? It's the airship, stopped for repairs. The fellow running it dropped a monkey wrench overboard and it struck a man on the head, and they've taken him to the hospital!" And strange to say, to such a pitch of excitement had the crowd been wrought up that even this story found believers.

Reserved seats for this evening's performance are now on sale. A few choice ones left for the early comers.

A dispatch sent out from Boston says: Following the report from Worcester Wednesday night of the discovery above the city of a strange moving light, apparently the searchlight of a dirigible airship, Thursday night brought stories from many points of the observance of similar lights Thursday evening from villages east of Worcester and even from Boston Common. People in the towns of Marlboro, South Framingham, Natick, Ashland, Grafton, North Grafton, Upton, Hopedale and Northboro turned out in throngs and viewed a mysterious light in the heavens.

Many declared that the light has all the appearance of a strong searchlight and while they could discover no framework behind it, such as an aeroplane would have, they were positive that the light could not be that of a balloon, as it moved as if under control, and apparently against the wind.

If the lights seen last night were those of an airship, Mr. Tillinghast was not the navigator of the craft, for he remained at his home in Worcester.

It is estimated that fully fifty thousand people thronged the streets of Worcester watching for the reappearance of the visitor in the skies. The passage of trolley cars was seriously impeded by the gaping crowds in the main thoroughfares. For most of the curious the watch was unrewarded. People on the tops of buildings told of seeing a light pass rapidly at some distance south of the city, but it was smaller and much less brilliant than the one seen Wednesday night.

1909 December 25 (Sat) Boston Globe, p. 1.

(cont'd)

CERTAIN AS THE STARS / Airship Again on Route. / Even Skeptics See Its Changing Lights. / Only the Few Believe It's Castor and Pollux. / Many Streets Filled With Skygazers. /

Christmas eve in Boston was made memorable by the thousands upon thousands of people that [stood on] the sidewalks, street corners and squares from noon after dark till well on toward midnight, contemplating the mysterious airship that has caused such a sensation the last three days.

Lower Washington st, Dock sq, Scolay sq, Tremont row, Court st, Bowdoin sq, Court sq, Tremont st. and the Common were haunted by large groups of more or less excited and awe-struck belated Christmas shoppers, many of them laden with bundles, all gazing well up into the zenith at the gleaming lights marking the bow and stern of the courser of the sky, according to those possessed of the greatest amount of information on the subject.

At the corner of Washington and Summer sts the elevated roadw w starter had the hardest job he has had since the last big fire in his district, all owing to the crowd of sky gazers that would persist in obstructing the car track.

On the Common a policeman got extremely angry at a bystander who /p.2/ undertook to argue against the genuineness of the airship and to suggest that the ~~two~~ signal lanterns might be stars. "Haven't I seen the airship go away out of sight and come back again while I've been standing here?" demanded the bluecoat with an asperity that discouraged argument of the point.

Red and Green Lights.

Another man plainly distinguished that one of the twin lights was green, the other red, as they should be to conform to the rules of navigation, and he flatly told an observer at his elbow that he must be blind not to be able to see the difference in the color of the lights.

Another man expressed doubt whether the airship was really moving, but he was assured in gentle but firm tones by another that undoubtedly the operator had temporarily shut off his power, but that the machine had been moving unmistakably a few minutes before.

A large ~~new~~ majority of observers commented on the frequent ascent or descent of one end of the airship. Now it appeared to be gliding higher in space, then taking a chute downward in a gradual and graceful plane.

A large group at the corner of Bromfield and Tremont sts showed the most marked agitation seen during the evening, for at one time, from that point, the airship appeared to be a few feet lower than the top of Park-st church steeple and so near that everybody felt sure that it was certain to crash into the steeple.

Just when the nervous tension had reached its most critical stage, apparently, the operator appeared to see his danger, for the machine approached no nearer and appeared to be at a standstill as the crowd uttered a concerted sigh of relief and dispersed, to be succeeded by others a moment later. / Skeptic Convinced.

At times one or both of the lights on the airship grew dim, indicating that the operator was having trouble with his electric power, and each new flashing out of the lights to their full power was greeted with exclamations of satisfaction and an accession to the ranks of those who were confident it was an airship they had in view.

A well-dressed, intellectual-looking elderly man, whose whole air breathed wisdom in an unusual degree, expressed to a crowd that surrounded him the deep satisfaction that possessed his soul at being able to see before he died a real flying machine soaring miles above the earth on wings swifter than the wind.

"I was a bit skeptical about its reality at first," said he. "I thought possibly the two lights were stars, but you will observe that not a star is visible in the sky. So it is perfectly obvious that two such brilliantly gleaming lights of those in the midst of a starless sky can be nothing but the lights upon an airship." This argument about there being no stars visible was used continually with telling effect by many others, to silence the skeptics.

There were many disputed whether the machine was actually moving or not, but the doubters were invariably quelled by those who had seen it go from a quarter to half way around the circle of the sky during the time that it took them to walk a block or two.

In one group there was an animated dispute as to the visibility of the flying machine. Several men were insistent that they saw something dark between the lights, and that it was the body of the airship. Just a word for Castor and Pollux.

Tired sure enough, they did see something dark between, for the two lights they were looking at were the stars Castor and Pollux, the heavenly twins, in the constellation Gemini, which, owing to the haziness in the upper air happened to be the only stars visible west and south of the zenith, which was the only portion of the heavens visible from the points where the crowds were gathered.

The something dark between the lights was the blackness of the sky.

The two stars mistaken for the bow and stern lights of an airship are reckoned by conservative astronomers to be at least a million-million miles apart. Being in what might be called a straight horizontal line with regard to the observer from the earth, they convey the idea of the airship on a level keel when seen with the head held erect. With the head cocked on one side or the other, the light of the left hand star seemed to be elevated or depressed.

As the observer moved about through the crowded downtown streets the apparent location of the stars changed materially, according to the point of observation, and when the haze came to some degree between the eye and the stars a slight illumination of the haze at once suggested beams from the airship's lights reflected from the otherwise invisible white wings of the machine.

The two stars are unusually prominent in the sky simply because they are near the zenith, where haziness, by a law of nature, is always a great deal thinner than lower down toward the line of the horizon.

HEAR WHEELS GO 'ROUND.

Seeing is Believing With a Lot of Newton People--And Then Ears Help Out Where Eyes Fail.

NEWTON, Dec. 24--Newton looked up tonight, and many persons whose reliability has never heretofore been questioned declared that they saw the mysterious airship continuously for more than a half-hour; in fact, were even enabled to watch its maneuvering, as it hovered over Mt. Ida and then struck out on a new westward course with wind-like speed.

In West Newton 30 passengers got out of an electric car to watch the airship. They heard the "whirr" of its motion, they said; saw its single headlight flash and watched it sail away.

The statements of persons in widely separated parts of the city agreed as to the time of the appearance of the strange craft over Newton. It was first seen shortly after 7. It disappeared in the western sky at 7:45.

The big phantom craft was first sighted from Newton by Walter E. Mars, who once mistook the US mail automobile for an ambulance.

A fireman who looked through a night glass said he thought he could distinguish steam or smoke arising from the airship at frequent periods.

Alfred W. Rees, one of Newton's leading business men; Daniel O'Connell, chairman of the democratic city committee and George M. Cox, the newly-elected democratic alderman, saw, or thought they saw.

Passengers on an electric car of the Newton-Waltham line said they had a fine view of the big, dark-colored craft at 7:30. The car had come to a stop on the River-st turnout, when a man heard a noise overhead and went out on the platform to investigate, and no sooner over than "There's the airship!" he exclaimed.

Everyone in the car, about 30 persons, hurried to the street and watched the airship a quarter of a mile above their heads. After hovering overhead several moments, the passengers said, they could distinguish the "whirr" of the motor as the big craft swung around and sailed away toward Wellesley.

A possible explanation of the presence here of an airship was offered by Alderman Thomas J. Lyons, who pointed out that plans were made some months ago for a station in Newton Center for the proposed airship line between Boston and New York. He didn't see the airship himself; he was busy decorating a Christmas tree.

LYNN WITNESSES.

Many People in That City Ready to Subscribe to the Airship Mystery. LYNN, Dec. 24--Hundreds of Lynn people strained their necks and cast their eyes skyward tonight, eager to catch a glimpse of the mysterious aviator who has been reported as touring about the state during the past few nights.

Away off toward Revere, high up in the air, they saw a bright light, which at times seemed to them to follow the line of the Boston & Maine railroad, and about everybody, including 200 or more who gathered in Central sq were satisfied that the light was attached to an airship.

Patrolman Rufe Greene tried to convince people that the light didn't move at all, but this theory did not appear popular.

STILL "SEEING THINGS."

Newburyport Confident It's an Airship With Lights Something Like a Drugstore.

NEWBURYPORT, Dec. 24--Hundreds of people here watched a mysterious light in the sky tonight, which they say first passed over the city to the North shortly after 7 o'clock and returned at 8:20 in a south-easterly direction. It is described as about 1800 feet in the air, with brilliant rays of the light changing from white to colored.

Most people agreed that the light resembled a searchlight and the aeroplane theory was the popular explanation.

1909 December 25 (Sat) Boston Herald, p. 1. (card 1)

JOKER'S BALLOON SETS GARAGE FIRE / Sent up in Worcester to Simulate Airship, Hot Air Craft Drops and Starts Blaze in the Centre of the City. / MANY CITIES REPORT SIGHT OF LIGHT AGAIN / Asserted in Providence That Outline of Machine Is Seen; Tillinghast Refuses to Discuss Aerial Flights. / [Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald.]

WORCESTER, Dec. 24--A hot air balloon, sent up by practical jokers in an attempt to keep at fever heat the nightly airship mystery, dropped about 9 o'clock tonight upon the two-story wooden building in Franklin square, where the Franklin Square garage has stored over 30 valuable machines and a large amount of gasoline. Before the fire was discovered it had secured a start that caused fears of a serious fire.

Quick work by the fire department put out the blaze before it had done much damage. Had the blaze been undiscovered a few minutes longer the flames might have eaten through the roof and caused an explosion in the gasoline. The garage is in the heart of the business section of the city, near City Hall.

Although many of the crowds of Christmas shoppers stopped in little knots to scan the sky in search of the headlights of the mysterious craft, there was a noticeable decrease in the excitement and in the belief that an airship was making nightly tours over the city.

Most of the people who stayed out last night and saw lights in the sky which they half-believed were displayed by an airship, seemed inclined today to think that after all it may have been a brilliant star or two. The general tone of the comments heard about the streets tonight showed that the most of the people are sceptical of the real existence of the airship, although they find it hard to answer the evidence of Wednesday night, when many claim to have seen some aerial craft.

The sending up of hot-air balloons, which started Thursday night, was continued tonight, and after the fire, which started in the Franklin garage, there was considerable indignation against the jokers who have been sending them aloft, for it is felt that one may easily cause a disastrous fire.

All day today Mr. Tillinghast, who has become widely known, almost famous, as the probable inventor of the probable airship, refused to talk to any one and kept himself shut up in his house or his office. Letters and telegrams of inquiry have come from all parts of the United States and men interested in finding out about his asserted airship have come to Worcester from as far west as Chicago.

MANY WAITED ON COMMON.

Some Thought They Saw Airship Hovering Above City Again.

The mysterious night-riding "airship" refuses to lower its colors or extinguish its lights at the behest of science or the ridicule of the unbelievers.

The clear, calm, all-revealing rays of a moon that promises to get full at the height of the holiday season, shining through the soft, velvety black depths of a cloudless sky, failed to deceive, and the frosty, tingling, snappy atmosphere could not chill the ardor of those who, having seen, believed, or believing that they had seen refused to doubt, or not having seen, had not and talked with those who had seen, or believed they had seen or had met those who had seen.

On the Common, between 5 o'clock and 8:25, last night, there assembled from time to time groups of six, seven, ten or twenty people, with feet rooted to the frosty turf, or to the granolithic pathways, with eyes aloft, and all thoughts, beliefs, hopes and faith hitched, not to a star, but to a witch-like, ether-conquering "rakish looking craft" that they averred, asseverated and professed to believe was circulating, paraboling and generally cutting up holiday antics in the westerly offing of the skies.

A husky, materialistic patrolman from the Laprange street station watched with zealous eye for a chance to hand a summons for trespass to the terrestrial traveler, should he land upon the withered, frost-bitten grass of the people's playground.

Standing near the entrance to the Tremont theatre, he told the reporter that shortly before seven o'clock a hack driver had called his attention to the weird, nightly mystery of the skies. Off towards the southwest, over the roof of Steinert Hall, could be seen a clear, violet tinted light, "half the size of a bowl" traveling towards the west and finally sinking behind the Back Bay building sky-line. No, indeed, it was not the flickering, blinking, make-and-break electric device on a Boylston street hotel.

At least a dozen observers had seen the light in the west or southwest, and all agreed that it moved slowly towards the west, disappearing from sight about 8 o'clock. It was generally described as of the color of an arc light and about half the size of an arc light globe.

Finally the penetrating chill of the December night, or the call of holiday eve festivities at home, thinned the ranks of the curious ones, and the reporter was left alone with the moon and the stars and the policeman. On the top of Soldiers' hill were discerned two silent figures seated on a bench. It looked like one figure, but it was two. Like the figure in Gibson's picture, they seemed to be saying "good-bye," and to have been at it since the middle of the summer, oblivious of the banshee-like moaning of the winter wind in the bare branches of the trees. They contributed nothing to the cause of science, however much they might have held out for the student of gentler things. They had seen no airship; the stars and the moon held enough of glory for them.

A bundle-laden family man making a bee-line for the Worcester car at Park square, stopped long enough to swear upon his family honor that he had seen the airship cross the city and disappear in the direction of his native home. He was allowed to continue his flight.

From the direction of the West end a portly colored man hurried. Breathless and with popping eyes, he stopped before the investigators. "Where's it gone, boss? I most nigh bust my head a-chasin' it of it up Joy street."

No section of the city had been [p.1] neglected in the meteoric course of the "night rider"; no line of color or class or religion was drawn in making his evening calls.

Nor was Boston alone favored. From Winthrop, Brighton, Brookline and other sections came the story of the flying lights. By telephone and telegraph [pic.--Some Saw Two Men In It.] and messenger was dispatched the news of the heavenly mystery.

The conservative unromantic astronomers who nightly sweep the skies with powerful telescopes at the Harvard College observatory are apparently the only blind and unbelieving observers in the community. Told of the marvels nightly visible to the naked and unprofessional eye, they coldly reply that Venus in its nightly transit across the heavens would be seen at this time of year during exactly the hours used by the airship operator for his evening journeys, that the brilliancy of the planet is at times very great, rendering her easily visible in daylight and early evening, that the maximum brightness occurs 26 days on either side of inferior conjunction, the condition of maximum depending on the planet's phase and proximity to the earth.

It seems probable to these skeptics that the airship man will spend his nights at home in an orderly manner and take his flights with the lark in the limpid air or the morning, when Venus is between the inferior conjunction and the next superior conjunction.

WHEN VENUS AVIATES.

Solution of the Mystery Light; It Is a Star in Airship Flight.

Two nights ago a brilliant orb, zigzagging up and down, was seen by faithful eyewitnesses from Hull to Watertown. Some said 'twas Constock searching for an impropriety, and others that 'twas Cook escaping notoriety. A certain known authority predicted it was Santa, but a well sustained majority has classed this talk as banter. But while this apparition held all the world aghast, one calling it the comet, and another Tillinghast, each theory succumbing to a later one's corrective the mystery was ferreted by our lynx-eyed detective.

Suspecting what the truth was from the first, he ascertained, himself in spite of strict official secrecy maintained, from a visit to Olympus in the guise of Santa Claus, a fact significant enough to make the dullest pause. That Mr. Vulcan's villa, from some unheeded-of reason, had been closed and abdicated in the very height of season. From a certain maid of all work in Olympus, one Miss Iris, the reporter soon discovered that which he was most desirous of finding out--that for some weeks her mistress, Mme. Venus, had been acting in a manner which the neighbors all called heinous. (He do not comic pic.--Some Said They Saw a Man Astride a Huge Searchlight.) a need herewith recall--'twas town talk, mercy on us!--her scandalous elopement with that fast young man, A. Donis, and other little episodes too numerous to mention, to which we were among the first to call public attention.)

Now, as it seems, the lady, once again in public view, being completely ennuied from not having much to do, and from her husband's jealousy, has gone upon the stage. And as a first-class star, indeed, 'tis Venus was the rage. But an ambition mounted into the lady's head, from foot to head lights she has turned her active mind instead, and, forsaking her refining art of pre-Hellenic dancing, she turned her thoughts to the idea of woman's rights advancing.

Three weeks ago, an interview by private telescope, she expressed to our reporter her enthusiastic hope that the gentler sex should take a brace and rise up in its might, aerial monopoly to wrest from Wilbur Wright. A rival star called Talia was persuaded to declare that young woman Venus always was way up in the air!

However, latest news appears that Venus getting flighty, careened about from Cambridge out to Worcester in her flight!

So the baffling light so plain in sight from half-past five to eight, was only Venus in her first attempt to aviate. Now Isadora's had the fad of dancing sans her stocking, but for a star of Venus' par, the notion is--well, shocking. [Comic pic--Others Say it Scooped Down on Them.]

POSITIVE OF AIRSHIP.

Machine Appeared Above Providence While it Was Still Light. / [Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald.]

PROVIDENCE, Dec. 24--The mysterious airship made its first appearance over this city early this evening, and at such an hour, 6:30 [?] o'clock, that there was sufficient light thoroughly to dispel all doubts of even the most sceptical that it was really and surely an airship.

The visitor appeared from the northwest, passed over the center of the city in a southerly direction to a point over the Providence river, then swung around and circled several times around the big chimney, nearly 115 feet high, of the Narragansett Electric Lighting Company's plant. Then it started off toward the southwest, rising higher and higher in circles, and then stood nearly still, as if just drifting on the wind, for quite a while. Then it started off again, making side movements to right and left.

It remained over the city about an hour and then disappeared in a northwesterly direction. It was so near the earth at times that those who saw it assert that there is no possible question but that it was an airship.

Officers at the 3d precinct police station who saw the strange visitor when it first appeared had a splendid view of it and are sure it was an airship and apparently under perfect control of its operators.

NEWTON VISITED AGAIN.

Residents See Lights; Car Passengers Declare They Hear Engine.

The light of the supposed airship was seen again last night in Newton. The first appearance was at 7 o'clock, and people said it was plainly visible until 7:45 o'clock. Among those to make out the light of the supposed airship were W.E. Mara, A.W. Rees and Daniel O'Connell. They said the lights were first seen in the west, and that they came nearly over the town, circled round several times and disappeared in the west.

At 7:30 o'clock an electric car bound from Waltham to West Newton was stopped to allow the passengers to alight and get a view of the mystery. The car was in charge of William Galway, motorman, and Otto Ramley, conductor. The passengers said they could hear the noise of the engine of the airship.

LIGHT SEEN IN ROWLEY.

[Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald.]

IPSWICH, Dec. 24--About 7:40 o'clock tonight Thomas P. Hale of Rowley, on leaving the Boston train at the Rowley station, saw a bright white light in the sky that seemed to travel ahead of him as he went toward his house, some distance from the depot. The general direction traversed by the light was northward, and it moved with noticeable speed.

About the same time William Hawksworth of Dole's Corner, Rowley, saw the light travelling toward Haverhill at a rapid rate of speed. He estimated its height at 300 feet and says that it was travelling against the wind. No sound could be heard, and there was nothing to indicate the presence of the body or framework of an airship.

NEWBURYPORT EXCITED.

NEWBURYPORT, Dec. 24--Thousands of people tonight observed the mystery that has excited so much attention of late. The bright light, which at times presented different colors, circled over Newburyport and finally disappeared in a western direction.

1909 December 25 (Sat morn) Daily Eastern Argus (Portland, Me), p. 10.

Westbrook. / Aeroplane Flew Over City Last Night.

There was a rumor about town last night to the effect that a bright light, having the appearance of a big search light, was seen by a number of people living on Brackett street and although this is some distance from Worcester it is believed by many that Wallace E. Tillinghast, the Worcester inventor, was taking a ride 'way down East in the machine that is creating such a sensation in Massachusetts. The first appearance of the strange light was about 5:45 when it was seen by a few people. From that time till it disappeared some two hours later, it was the object of great interest of hundreds. The light was apparently a number of miles to the southwest of the city and the distance was so great that had it been attached to an airship the outlines of the latter would have been indiscernible. For a time after the first discovery the light appeared to be stationary, but later began to either descend or fade rapidly.

Jan. 24, p. 5--The Comet--people thought they were seeing Halley's Comet "About the best thing was when somebody saying he was out to Scarborough asked if the comet was not an air ship or some fire balloon."

1909 December 25 (Sat) Providence Journal, p. 2.

(card 1)

CITY IS AIRSHIP MAD. / All Kinds of Aeroplanes Flying About, According to Reports.

The police were searching the city early this morning for a man who stopped on the corner of Westminster and Eddy streets shortly after 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, tipped his head back and took a long, lingering glance skyward. They say it was this man who set all the city airship mad last night, and they want to find him before the heavenly voyager really shows up.

The epidemic of infected vision that has turned Massachusetts upside down struck town with a bang late yesterday afternoon. From the time that the sun went down until the last shopper had found his way home this morning all kinds of aerial craft circled over the city. Everybody had a look at the fleet of ships, not a few had several looks.

On the streets the greeting wasn't "Merry Christmas." It was "Did you see it?" Christmas shoppers forgot what they were going to buy, simple strollers made a fringe all along the curb on every down-town street and even motormen disregarded rules about blocking traffic in their anxiety to see the peculiar light in the sky.

When the light first appeared it looked like a sure-enough glim on the front end of a flyer. The best view of it was obtained on Westminster street and hundreds stopped to gaze at it. The light didn't move overfast, but that made no difference. It was also pretty close to where Venus is at present, but no one had any use for astronomy in solving the problem.

"No doubt about it," declared one man, staggering under a load of bundles, "that's an airship all right. I can almost see the wings of the machine."

"Airship nothing," snorted another. "You're loaded too deep to be able to distinguish a star from a searchlight. Just because Venus tries to look a bit brighter than usual at this time of the year you want to make her out as part of some aerial craft. You'll be seeing Santa Claus coming down the chimney with his reindeer if you don't watch out."

Hundreds looked Venus all over until she set at 8 o'clock. She went toward the horizon pretty fast after she got started, but her speed wasn't anywhere near that 120 miles an hour Mr. Wallace E.

Tillinghast of Worcester and the heavenly regions tells about. It was 287 the stately progress of a lovely woman; and you can't say that resembles an airship on the wing.

After Venus disappeared the star-gazing bugs looked around for other stars to conquer. The sky was full of possibilities; and the rabid ones were not long in picking out the best and brightest, Sirius, the dog star, was an especial favorite. Some of the gazers got so dizzy looking upward that they had Sirius making circles, turning corners and behaving just like Wilbur Wright's finest.

With most people the aeroplane became a joke as the evening wore on. There were a few, however, who persisted in seeing the flying craft.

And what was worse, they persisted in telling their friends about it. One big crowd over on Mathewson street stood for a half-hour watching two stars side by side and commenting on who was manipulating them.

"Huh, I don't see a thing but stars," said one passer-by who caught the fever and stopped to crane his neck.

"You have an excellent eyesight," returned one of the crowd as he put his collar button in place and started to walk on.

Providence was not the only city that was afflicted with "airship-itis." Newport was also all agog, its inhabitants developing unsuspected capabilities of sight and seeing in one large, brilliant star a full-fledged aeroplane with a gigantic searchlight.

One man standing near the City Hall was the first to describe what he was sure was an airship. He told two or three of his friends about it, and the rumor sped about the town that an airship had chosen to spend the night just outside Newport harbor. Pretty soon everyone who was awake had his eyes glued to the most brilliant spot he could find in the sky.

One man declared emphatically that he could see not only the frame of an airship, the outlines of which were not particularly strong in his memory, but also a flag waving from the top. He could not say what kind of flag it was.

1909 December 25 (Sat) Providence (R.I.) Journal, p. 14. (card 1)

PROVIDENCE MEN SEE SEARCHLIGHT IN SKY / Mysterious Airship Appears Over This City During Night. / MANY TELL OF AERIAL SIGHT / Wallace E. Tillinghast's Aeroplane or Some Other Fly-by-Night Machine Arouses Great Interest Hereabouts. One Man Makes Out Seeming Body of an Airship.

Providence has joined the list of the favored few who have seen the mysterious night flying airship. Either Wallace E. Tillinghast's aeroplane or a second one equally as mysterious appeared above this city Thursday night about 9 o'clock.

The flying machine, or whatever it was, was seen by many persons. It was at a great altitude and was rushing along at a about a mile-a-minute clip.

It came out of the north like a shooting star. As it approached this city the glare of its headlight grew larger and larger until it appeared as one of the most powerful searchlights, its rays penetrating the dark darkness at a great distance.

Those who saw the brilliant object say their attention was called to it first by the brightness of the headlight. That light at a great distance threw out a reddish ray which grew in length and width with amazing rapidity.

The power behind it was of terrific force, it is said, and the speed with which the structure supporting it travelled was so great as to strike a degree of fear in the hearts of some who gazed in wonderment.

When Rhode Islanders first caught a glimpse of the show, it was far up the Blackstone Valley. Its course appeared to be southeasterly. From the time it was first seen, and it is figured that it was about over Woonsocket, to the time it appeared directly overhead in Pawtucket, was but a matter of six or seven minutes.

The light shot through the air over Pawtucket at great height, veered to the south over the north end of this city, and when at a point almost over the State House turned sharply to the east and at terrific speed continued over College Hill, and over East Providence. When last seen, it was following a general course in the direction of Taunton.

Those who testify that they beheld this mysterious flying object are of the opinion it was the same that was seen earlier in the evening at various points in Worcester and Middlesex, Norfolk and Suffolk counties, Massachusetts, and Windham and Tolland counties, Connecticut.

The machine was seen by many at Boston Common about 7:45 p.m. It did not appear hereabouts until nearly an hour later, and during that time there seems to be no accounting for the actions of the aerial visitor. Whether it went up out of sight or landed to get its breath is not known.

TWO LIGHTS ON FLYER!

Fifty-five minutes elapsed between the time the great light was seen over Boston Common and its appearance near Woonsocket. It is thought it might have been during that interval that the airship was making its flight between Boston and Willimantic and return to Worcester county.

While it is recorded that thousands of persons saw the great light, but one man has been found who claims he saw two lights, and he says also that while the machine or whatever it was was at a great altitude, he thinks it flew sufficiently near the ground for him to distinguish the underbody of some sort of an airship.

The stronger light, this witness says, was the headlight, but to the machine there was fixed a second light, in the rear of the searchlight. To him it appeared to be a tail light. It is thought it might have been a light used by mechanics aboard attending to the ship's engines.

Maj. George S. Tingley of Pawtucket was one of the men who saw the light flyer. He was standing near his home on South Union street at about 8:40 o'clock when he saw a very bright light in the heavens approaching the city. The light came with terrific speed. He called his wife and other members of his family and the neighbors. They watched the fast sailing object.

As it passed over the company Maj. Tingley discovered a second and smaller light attached to the machine. The mysterious flyer changed its course to the south, passed over the north end of the city and then making a sharp turn to the east soon disappeared over East Providence.

OTHERS ADD TESTIMONY.

At about the same time Henry C. Thresher of Waite, Thresher & Co., of this city, was passing between his home and a neighbor when his attention was called heavenward by a brilliant glare. To him the light appeared very high. The glare was reddish in color. The high speed with which it travelled impressed him more than anything else.

He saw it come from the northwest, pass over Pawtucket and this city and turn to the eastward. From the time he first saw it to the time it disappeared was between five and six minutes. During that time the light made several miles. It was going at a rate of a mile in about 30 seconds, it is said.

H.W. Fitz, Treasurer of State Trust Company, Pawtucket, was walking in company with his wife on Summit street, that city, at about 8:45 o'clock, when he discovered the swiftly sailing light. He says he doesn't know whether or not it was the headlight of an airship, but he was impressed with the great rapidity with which it shot across the heavens.

Albert Jenks of Fales & Jenks of Pawtucket also saw the moving luminary. He thinks he could make out the lines of an underbody of an airship, although indistinctly. He does not care to say that he is positive on this point. "It was going fearfully fast. Its speed was terrific. It was moving at a rate of more, a ~~xxxx~~ deal more, than a mile a minute," he remarked.

Other ~~xxxx~~ persons yesterday came forward with claims that they beheld the awesome spectacle, the reports coinciding as to the sharpness of the rays darted by the light, the velocity with which it pierced space and the great area it covered while in view.

1909 December 26 (Sun) Boston Globe, p. 14 (card 1)

AIRSHIP STORY WORRIES THEM / Worcester Merchants to Solve Mystery. / To Apply "Missouri" Test and Demand to Be Shown. / May Ask Mr. Tillinghast to Answer Some Queries.

WORCESTER, Dec. 25--Tillinghast's reputed airship and the mysterious lights which have agitated the good folks hereabouts for the last 10 days have brought a visitation upon Worcester that is extremely unpleasant and to the solid people who form the backbone of the community.

An avalanche of newspaper correspondents from all parts of the continent are quartered at the various hotels, and there are aeronautical sharps from many places in America as well as representatives of foreign interests in the city. All of these visitors are sending out broadcast the information that there seems to be no foundation for the many fantastic stories that have been wired all over the world.

The rather ridiculous advertising which is coming to Worcester in this way annoys the staid folks who are proud of the commercial reputation of their city. They have awakened to the fact that the weird stories of flying marvels is not simply local in its effect and therefore are planning to take action. Several members of the Worcester automobile club, who are affiliated with the Worcester board of trade, propose to ask the board to take steps either to justify the stories that have gone all over the world or to ask for some reasonable explanation. Plan a "Missouri" Test.

They feel that the board of trade should ask Wallace E. Tillinghast to corroborate the wonderful tales of his aeroplane. It is their intention formally to put it up to the steamfitting expert that he must back up his statements with some reasonable proof or deny that he is responsible for the stories. It is their purpose to prove to the world whether there is a wonderful airship in the vicinity of Worcester or that the whole thing is a hoax and that the city does not sanction the peculiar brand of notoriety in which it has basked.

These representative citizens do not take the position of questioning the Tillinghast airship. Their attitude is that they simply do not know anything about it. They don't know even if Tillinghast is responsible for the "marvels" which have furnished so much interesting reading lately. Their purpose is to find out. And they want to find out who is responsible for the stories. They want to settle the thing once and for all time.

If the plan that has been suggested be carried out, a committee of the board of trade will call upon Mr Tillinghast and ask him to say whether he asserted that he flew from Boston to New York and back on Sept. 8. If he says that the story is true he will be asked to furnish proof of his assertion. The committee will ask that he produce the mechanics who were with him on the trip. Should it be feasible to do so, ~~Tillinghast~~ Tillinghast will be asked to show his machine to a reputable delegation of citizens and some newspaper men. If he really says ~~xxxx~~ that he has some kind of ship and wishes to protect it, provision will be made to insure him profound secrecy as to his plans.

Tillinghast Constantly Watched.

The main point is that the citizens who are interested in the move believe they should protect the reputation of their city. They think they ought to do this, even at the risk of exposing any individual to momentary embarrassment. If there be absolutely no basis for all the airship worries which have descended upon New England they want to publish the fact to the world and close the incident. It is planned to have this proposition before K Sec Davison of the board of Trade on Monday.

Tillinghast, in the meantime, is absolutely incommunicado. Even his closest friends don't say airship to him these days. When he hears the word he is apt to say things that don't sound charitable at Christmas time. The notoriety that has followed him since the mysterious lights were ~~fixx~~ seen has seriously interfered with his business and with his home life. He has not been permitted an hour's peace.

At his office there are constantly two or three persons who want to know something. At the door of his place of business and at his home he is closely watched by mysterious men. When he is at home his telephone rings constantly. As his wife has only recently recovered from an illness the constant clang is not conducive to his good nature.

But to every person who can get close to him he asserts that he has made the flight from New York to Boston. J. Walter Flagg, a member of the Aero club of New England, who called upon him on Thursday afternoon, says that Mr Tillinghast asserted he had not only made this remarkable flight, but that he had done far more wonderful things. When Flagg asked the nature of these things Mr Tillinghast declined to make any further statement. He reiterated he could fly as no one had ever flown before, and that in his own good time he would show everybody what he said was absolutely true.

1909 December 26 (Sun) Boston Sunday Herald, p. 15 (card 1)

AIRSHIP OWL IS WORCESTER TALE / D.C. Rawson Says He Hitched Lights to Birds and Let Them Fly on Nights Skycraft Was Seen. / SOME IN TILLINGHAST'S HOME CITY BELIEVE IT / [Special Dispatch to the Sunday Herald.]

WORCESTER, Dec. 25--The secret of the mystery surrounding the light above the said said to be attached to an airship took on an additional [absurdity] today through the statement of C.D. Rawson, an organizer of an order of Owls, who confesses to sending up [two] owls with lanterns attached to their [legs]. This explanation actually found a few believers who accept the story as the solution of the mystery.

Rawson says he sent up Wednesday night, the first night the strange lights were seen, a large white North Carolina owl, to which he attached a light and reflector. He says he is sure the lanterns and reflectors on the two owls he sent out Wednesday and Thursday nights are what people thought to be the lights of an airship.

He says he ordered three owls from H.H. Stevens, Southern Pines, N.C., and when they came they were alive when he wanted dead owls to be treated by a taxidermist. What to do with the owls he did not know, and as there was so much interest in the airship story he decided to have some fun. Here is what he says in a fact:

"I sent my first owl up from the roof of the building on Mechanic street Wednesday night just before 6 o'clock, and it sailed over the Slater building and cut circles for about 45 minutes. I was where I could watch it all the time and the lantern blazed up and dropped out of sight. The owl flew with and against the wind and acted as a person would expect an airship to act.

"I went down to Millbury Thursday night with the other owl and released it about 6 o'clock. It started straight toward Worcester against the wind and seemed to be traveling fast. What became of this owl I do not know, but I watched it fly away and out of sight rapidly."

This statement by Mr. Rawson is considered a joke a little better than the others of the week, but he tells it with all seriousness and seems to believe owls are record holders as birds of passage.

AIRSHIP OVER NEW HAVEN

Capt. Barron Had Just Dined, but Is Sure He Saw It. / [Special Dispatch to the Sunday Herald.]

NEW HAVEN, Dec. 25--Tillinghast's airship supposed ~~xxxxxx~~ to have passed over this city at 11:40 a.m. The airship was seen by Capt. George S. Barrons and several other men. It was going in a north easterly direction. It was about 1000 feet up and seemed under perfect control.

The captain when he first saw the object questioned his eyesight, for he had just returned from his Christmas dinner, and called the attention of several other men to the air craft. At the time the airship was over the western part of the city, Capt. Barrons declared that he could see the planes and the rudder. It was too high to see any occupants.

1909 December 26 (Sun) Providence Sunday Journal, sect. 11, p. 5 (cd 1)

VENUS AND THE PUBLIC EYE.

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal: The general ignorance of the public as regards the science of astronomy has often been noted and deplored. Garrett P. Serviss, in his well-known work entitled "Astronomy with an Opera Glass," tells of an instance in which the planet Venus was mistaken for an electrically lighted balloon by the greater part of the population of New York city. This occurred in 1887, yet the following incident tends to illustrate the lamentable fact that the public knowledge of celestial science has advanced little, if any, since then.

While in the business section of this city on Christmas Eve, at about 6 p.m., the writer noticed excited groups of people on the street corners, and mystified individuals everywhere, pointing to the western sky. Following the direction of the many upraised fingers he beheld the planet Venus, which was shining with great brilliancy, and appeared to be the centre of attraction. This great apparent concern in astronomy seemed encouraging, to say the least, and the writer began to believe that the general apathy concerning astronomical matters which the public usually exhibits was being thrown off, and that an awakening of scientific interest was taking place within the breasts of the population, when this belief was shattered by remarks overheard from a knot of cultivated and apparently well-educated men.

It seems that the general idea existed that the planet was nothing more or less than the searchlight from some airship, either that which was recently purchased by a local merchant, or that supposed to be owned by Wallace E. Tillinghast of Worcester, Mass. Upon further listening the writer heard many remarks as to the "perfect control to which the aeroplane must be subject, in order that the light shine so steadily," and many estimates of its "distance above the earth," varying from half a mile to two miles. When apprised of their error, the gentlemen of the aforementioned group exhibited only mild surprise.

Such a revelation of general ignorance is depressing in effect. In-all probability the reports of strange lights lately seen in the sky have caused the multitude to turn their gaze heavenward, and to seize upon Venus, which is by far the brightest of all star-like objects, as the searchlight of the supposed "airship," for which they really look in vain.

Yet, actually, the appearance of Venus should not cause people of intelligence to indulge in such suppositions, as its brilliant presence in the heavens is by no means uncommon. Even now it is not as bright as it will be next month.

The moral of the preceding is that is the general public will not avail itself of the astronomical information afforded by the publication of Prof. Upton's excellent articles in the Journal on the first of each month, suitable free lectures should be provided to impart such knowledge to it.

H.P. LOVECRAFT. / Providence, Dec. 24.

1909 December 26 (Sun) Seattle Sunday Times, p. 1.

FLIES AROUND SUMMIT OF MT. RAINIER

(Reginald Weatherby, 22, of Tacoma, claims to have invented an aluminum aeroplane propelled by undulating planes rather than by propellers, and used the plane to fly around Mt. Rainier.)
Bon. Dec. 27, p. 3.

(No foundation in fact is found for the claim. The story came from a man who apparently jumped the gun, saying the youth had done already what he planned to do in the near future when his invention was perfected.)

"It is known in Tacoma, however, that some sort of kite or flying machine has attracted much attention in the southern part of the city."

(Both articles are so faded they are barely legible.)

1909 December 26 (Sun) Tacoma Sunday Ledger, p. 1.

MYSTERIOUS SKY VOYAGER COMING WEST / Will Probably Make First Public Demonstration at Los Angeles Aviation Meet. / TO PROVE HIS CLAIMS / Believed Worcester Man Has Accomplished Great Achievement of Flying in Air Without Use of Motor. /

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 25.--The executive committee of the aviation meet today received word from an Eastern representative that W.E. Tillinghast of Worcester, Mass., probably will make his first public demonstration of his aeroplane in Los Angeles.

A communication received here today by Dick Ferris, the general manager, stated that Tillinghast has said that he will probably go to Los Angeles and participate in the meet.

It is said that Tillinghast declared that he would appear and prove his claims and at the same time make other airships entered look like children's toys.

Flies Without Motor.

"Word has been received," said Ferris, "from our New York representative that Tillinghast has stated he will bring the machine to Los Angeles and demonstrate for the first time in public what he has been proving for himself by night flights."

"It seems certain that Tillinghast has accomplished what aviation authorities regard as the next great achievement, that of remaining in the air without the use of the motor."

"The Wrights and others believe that it is possible to soar just as a buzzard does, and in consequence utilize the power of the fuel supply only for getting off the ground and in emergencies."

"Experts on aviation have been looking for such an achievement, but have rather expected it from men already famous. Tillinghast will have every facility in Los Angeles for demonstrating that he has discovered the next great step in aeronautical progress."

May Make Long Trip.

"Our informant in the East says he understands Tillinghast has been seriously hampered in the results he can actually accomplish because of weather conditions and a desire to protect his machine by secret flights. It is also stated he will be able to remain in the air 24 hours or longer, and at Los Angeles he can easily do this without discomfort."

"If it is true that he can fly 120 miles an hour, carrying himself and two men, it will be easily possible for him to make a trip to San Francisco without the slightest discomfort. We understand he wishes to do something of this sort and we are preparing every facility to aid him in these flights."

1909 December 26 (Sun) Wheeling, W.Va., Register, p. (card 1)

TILLINGHAST IN HIS SHOP, NOT IN HIS AIRSHIP / New Englanders Probably Mistake Venus for a Soaring Flying Machine and Get Excited. / SCIENCE DISPROVES THE INVENTOR'S ASSERTIONS. / Worcester People Take No Stock in the Professions of the Steamfitter. /

WORCESTER, Mass., Dec. 25.--Go where you will in New England today and you will hear them talk about Tillinghast and his mysterious airship. The majority of New Englanders don't believe in Tillinghast. And this in spite of the fact that there have been some peculiar aerial doings herabouts for the last three nights.

On Wednesday night, as has already been told in the dispatches, there appeared a mysterious light above this city. A light snow sifted down like a crepe mantle, and the wind blew briskly from the east, but there are many good souls who will sincerely tell you that they saw a red light approach the city from the south, hover over the shopping centre of the town and make several circles, finally disappearing again in the south.

Although the thousands who thought they saw the same manifestation last night were informed that they were simply gazing at the brilliant star Venus, they steadfastly adhere to their opinion that it was the same airship light they saw the night before. So excited are the people here that last night and tonight they jammed the broad streets to such an extent that it was impossible for the street cars to run for a time.

"There It Is."

As the huge, glittering evening star made its appearance the cry went up, "There it is." Many persons are willing to make affidavit to the fact that they saw the star move. It is known that at least three hot air balloons were sent up from different points. These toy air craft travel with uncertain direction through the air and at night gleam brilliantly through the murk. Their appearance added much to the hysteria prevalent.

But the people of Worcester as well as the eager spectators in the rest of the New England towns stretching from Willimantic to Lynn are gravely dubious as to whether Wallace Elmer Tillinghast has anything to do with the phenomena. It is known now that the expert steam fitter has not been out of Worcester any night during the past week. On Wednesday night, when he was supposed to be traveling through space in the fantastic craft with the luminous tail, he was working in his office in Commercial street in company with an associate, Ben Clark. Last night the place was guarded by several newspaper men who distinctly saw Tillinghast at work in his office while the mysterious light was agitating the crowds in Main street.

A "Wonderful" Machine.

The steam fitter expert told a reporter that he had built an aeroplane having 75 feet spread and 10 feet depth. He said he had only a single plane to support his craft in flight and that he carried an engine of his own make developing 120 horse-power. He said the total weight of his craft was 1,550 pounds, exclusive of passengers. He said he carried a strong searchlight in front of the machine, fed by acetylene gas, which was generated on the craft. On his trial long distance flight from Boston to New York and return he said he had carried two passengers besides himself, each weighing in the neighborhood of 200 pounds. As Mr. Tillinghast himself weighs about 200 pounds, this gave him 720 square feet of lifting surface over 2,000 pounds to carry.

This in itself is a violation of all the fundamental rules established in the structural science of aeronautics. It has become recognized that it takes two feet of lifting surface to carry one pound of weight. Tillinghast reverses the formula. He carries almost three pounds of weight to one foot of lifting surface. But even this would have been swallowed without much protest if Mr. Tillinghast had not asserted that he rose from the ground with a few yards of starting. Also he professed to have attained a speed of 120 miles an hour and that his machine had risen to heights of 4,000 feet and more.

Practically Impossible.

Dr. A.G. Webster, one of the leading authorities on physics, who holds that chair at the Clark University here points out that it is practically impossible for Tillinghast to do what he has been quoted as declaring he did. He points out that Tillinghast professes to have done more marvelous stunts in getting initial speed and in maintaining flight than even the most perfect soaring birds known to science.

Tillinghast also says that his machine can soar at almost any height. In corroboration of this statement he told James Aylward he stopped his motor 4,000 feet above the statue of Liberty in New York Harbor and soared around for 46 minutes while his 2 helpers were repairing the engine. If he has really accomplished this he has done the thing which the Wrights have been attempting to achieve all their lives. To learn the secret of the S. American condor and the albatross has been the aim of every man who has ever studied the secret of flight.

1909 December 27 (Mon) Hartford (Conn) Daily Times, p. 8.

New Haven Believes/(New Haven Palladium.)

It was on the Christmas day just passed that New Haveners witnessed for the first time in their home city an exhibition of the aeroplane, the invention of which was the real conquest of the air. A mysterious heavier-than-air machine circled the city during the morning of Christmas day, and at such a height that its real form, its pilot and its mechanics were not discernible, but it was properly enough within our vision to leave no doubt as to what the stranger was. It circled the air in a manner that is impossible for the balloon or the dirigible, and it was too large for any of the now known feathered inhabitants of the globe. Many of us have seen the aeroplane on exhibition in trial flights at low altitudes, but those who saw the mysterious stranger of Christmas were treated to the real thing in air conquests. It was a great spectacle in the skies. The aeroplane was generally believed to be the one which has been flying for many months past in New England, traveling incognito as it were, for the stranger, while owned in Worcester, comes to earth and leaves it in parts yet unknown to the public. The owner claims that it is the greatest of all heavier-than-air contrivances, and after what we saw the other day we agree with him. If the Christmas day visitor was really Mr. Tillinghast in his greatest of airships. It was a stirring sight and encouraged our thoughts to the great achievements of mankind. In all of the seriousness of the incident there was also the humorous side to it, and no better shown perhaps than in the statement of the little newsboy who exclaimed, "That is nothing, only Santa Claus going home after a hard night's work."

1909 December 27 (Mon) Hartford (Conn) Daily Times, p. 11.

WILLIMANTIC LAUGHS AT THE AIRSHIP FAKING. /

Willimantic, December 27.--There has been a big furor locally over a strange light in the heavens to the south for the past few evenings. Last Wednesday dispatches appeared in the papers concerning the Tillinghast airship, which is said to have attracted the attention of hundreds of Worcester and other people in that vicinity, and with that ~~was~~ story in their minds people who witnessed for the first time last Thursday night a strange light south of this city believed they saw an airship, and ~~it~~ concluded that Tillinghast was hovering over this territory. The report that this light was an airship last Thursday night found many believers, but the belief gave way to doubt when the same light was seen again in the same ~~xxxxx~~ position the next evening, and the doubt did not vanish when again on Saturday night between 6 and 7 the light was seen again, for Saturday night it had begun to storm, and around the light was a halo which would be occasioned by such atmospheric conditions, and it was not a proper night for an airship to be disporting way down here in Connecticut unless it had a good windshield and a storm top with side curtains. One ambitious news writer in this city sent long dispatches to two New York papers, telling how hundreds had stood out and watched the airship maneuver, and the metropolitan papers printed the story along with the story of Tillinghast's ship, giving the impression that it was the Worcester man down this way. It has certainly been an interesting topic for the past few days, and many people have stood gaping at the sky for hours at a time in hopes of seeing some further stunts in the airship line. More conservative persons, however, cannot see anything more than an unusually large and brilliant star which, without doubt, is Venus.

1909 December 27 (Mon) Providence Journal, p. 11. (cont'd)

WORCESTER ANGRY OVER AIRSHIP / City, Tired of Notoriety, Wants Tillinghast Asked to Prove Assertions.

Worcester, Mass., Dec. 26.--Tillinghast's reputed airship and the mysterious lights which have agitated the good folks hereabouts for the last 10 days have brought a visitation upon Worcester that is extremely unpleasant to the solid people who form the backbone of the community.

The rather ridiculous advertising which is coming to Worcester in this way annoys the staid folks who are proud of the commercial reputation of their city. They have awakened to the fact that the weird stories of flying ~~xxxxxxx~~ marvels are not simply local in their ~~xxxx~~ effect and therefore are planning to take action.

Several members of the Worcester Automobile Club, who are affiliated with the Worcester Board of Trade, purpose to ask that body to take steps either to justify the stories that have gone all over the world or to ask for some reasonable explanation.

They feel that the Board of Trade should ask Wallace E. Tillinghast to corroborate the wonderful tales of his aeroplane. It is their intention to put it up to the steamfitting expert that he must back up his statements with some reasonable proof or deny that he is responsible for the stories.

It is their purpose to prove to the world either that there is a wonderful airship in the vicinity of Worcester or that the whole thing is a hoax and that the city does not sanction the peculiar brand of notoriety in which it has basked.

These representative citizens do not take the position of questioning the Tillinghast airship. Their attitude is that they simply do not know anything about it. They don't know even if Tillinghast is responsible for the marvels which have furnished so much interesting reading lately. Their purpose is to find out. And they want to find out who is responsible for the ~~xxxxxx~~ stories. They want to settle the thing once and for all time.

If the plan that has been suggested be carried out a committee of the Board of Trade will call upon Mr. Tillinghast and ask him to say whether he asserted that he flew from Boston to New York and back on Sept. 8. If he says that the story is true he will be asked to furnish proof of his assertion. The committee will ask that he produce the mechanics who were with him on the trip.

Should it be feasible to do so Tillinghast will be asked to show his machine to a reputable delegation of citizens and some newspapermen. If he really says that he has some kind of ship and wishes to protect it provision will be made to insure him profound secrecy as to his plans.

The main point is that the citizens who are interested in the move believe they should protect the reputation of their city. They think they ought to do this even at the risk of exposing any individual to momentary embarrassment. If there be absolutely no basis for all the airship worries which have descended upon New England, they want to publish the fact to the world and close the incident.

It is planned to put this "proposition" before Secretary Dabidson of the board of Trade on Monday.

Tillinghast in the meantime is absolutely incommunicado. The notoriety that has followed him since the mysterious lights were seen has seriously interfered with his business and with his home life. He has not been permitted an hour's peace. At his office there are constantly two or three persons who want to know something. At the door of his place of business and ~~xxx~~ at his home he is closely watched by mysterious men. When he is at home his telephone rings constantly. As his wife has only recently recovered from an illness, the constant clangor is not conducive to his good nature.

But to every person who can get close to him he asserts that he has made the flight from New York to Boston. J. Walter Flagg, a member of the Aero Club of New England, who called upon him, says that Mr. Tillinghast asserted he had not only made this remarkable flight but that he had done far more wonderful things. When Flagg asked the nature of these things Tillinghast declined to make any further statement. He reiterated that he could fly as no one had ever flown before, and that in his own good time he would show everybody that what he said was absolutely true.

1909 December 28 (Tues eve) Boston Globe, p. 2.

LOOKED FOR AIRSHIP. / As They Did, Others Were Busy Differently. / Two Men Charged With Attempting to Pick Pockets in Crowd.

Policeman George H. McCaffrey told Judge Murray in the municipal court today that many well-known crooks have been reaping a harvest lately while curious people were looking heavenward nightly to get a glimpse of the supposed mysterious airship.

McCaffrey and special officers O'Donnell and Flynn had in court Joseph McDonald and Samuel G. Scott, who were charged with attempting to pick the pockets of several men in a crowd last night in the North end.

Someone thought he had seen two lights on an airship going out over Boston harbor, and in a very few minutes there were at least 50 men in a group, all looking heavenward for the airship.

McCaffrey said that he saw McDonald and Scott trying to go through the pockets of several in the crowd. McDonald and Scott were found guilty and sentenced to three months each at the house of correction.

1909 December 28 (Tues) Burlington, Vt., Daily News, p. 1.

AIRCRAFT SEEN AT ESSEX JUNCTION? / MYSTERIOUS LIGHT WATCHED BY GREAT CROWDS LAST NIGHT / Watcher with Glass thought He Dibly Made out Aircraft--Others Believe Aerial Visitor Merely Bright Star / (Special Despatch to the News.)

Essex Junction, Dec. 28.--The aircraft which has created such a sensation at Worcester and neighboring Massachusetts towns was seen from this place last night in the opinion of many of our people. The theory is that the mysterious traveller of the skies was on the way from Worcester to Montreal, making one of those marvellously swift flights of ~~xxx~~ which we have been told.

Another theory is that it was the Evening Star. Against this it is urged that the Evening Star is not visible as early as 4:30 p.m., which was the hour at which the supposititious aircraft first became visible, nor does it disappear in an instant, like the flame of an extinguished ~~xxxx~~ lamp, which was the case with last night's aerial visitor.

The first person to notice the light, as far as heard from was a lady who, while driving home from Colchester, observed it at about 4:30. She describes it as very bright, and travelling rather rapidly.

By 7 o'clock the streets were full of people watching the light. It was then in the western sky, well above the horizon.

The crowds gathered in groups and the apparition was discussed. Some thought it was the evening star, and others are sure that what they saw was the searchlight of an aircraft.

From the time it was first observed the star or aircraft steadily arose until it reached a considerable height, where it remained for half an hour or more. It then began to grow dim and finally went out. It did not seem to fall, but expired like the light of a candle, extinguished.

The light was very bright and appeared to be about four times the size of the largest star.

W.C. Stevens observed it through a glass and thought he could discern the outlines of some sort of a craft.

Mrs. J.J. Raine saw a brilliant light in the western heavens early in the evening as she alighted from the electric car from Burlington. She thought at the time that it was the evening star, but noticed that it was particularly bright. Later when ~~she~~ the airship rumors were abroad she recalled that she had seen the light.

J.E. Donahue said that he also noticed the bright light, but believed it to be a star.

Rev. C.C. Adams was another one who watched the phenomenon with interest and with wonder. Rev. Mr. Adams thought if it was a star it was unusually bright. It had the appearance of moving a considerable distance in the course of a half hour.

Watchers will be out in force tonight, and the mystery may be solved. If the strange light is visible it must be accounted for by some stellar phenomenon; if not, the nocturnal visitor may perhaps be identified with the Worcester aircraft.

The aircraft was not seen in Burlington and apparently elsewhere in this region. One or two persons claim, however, to have seen it Christmas eve.

1909 December 28 (Tues) Willimantic (Conn) Daily Chronicle, p.1. (cont'd)

AIRSHIP PASSES OVER CITY OF NORWICH. / Many People Saw It but They Were Unable to Tell How Many Persons Were in It.

That the "airship" that many Willimantic people saw, or thought they saw, last Thursday night may have been an airship after all, and that the stories sent out by local newspapermen were not such complete "fakes" as some persons would have the public believe, is indicated by the following account of an airship printed by the "Norwich Bulletin" this morning in its Norwich news:--

"Between 7:30 and 8 o'clock Monday evening there were many in the central part of the city who were watching an airship as it passed over the city, going in a southerly direction. There was no noise to be ~~xxxx~~ heard and no particular demonstration with the searchlight, but the fact that the lights were moving attracted attention, and it was watched until it disappeared. It was not very high, but it was impossible to tell how many were in it. That it was not a star is the positive statement of those who saw it.

"It was not a steady level flight like that of a bird, but there was occasionally a dip to the airship and as it went along a second light now and then hopped into view. It was a fine, clear bright night for a flight, but the operator must have been clothed like Peary on his Arctic trip to defy the cold of the night."

The "New Haven Palladium" says: It was on the Christmas day last passed that New Haveners witnessed for the first time in their home city an exhibition of the aeroplane, the invention of which was the real conquest of the air. A mysterious heavier-than-air machine circled the city during the morning of Christmas day, and at such a height that its real form, its pilot and its mechanics were not discernible, but it was properly enough within our vision to leave no doubt as to what the stranger was. It circled the air in a manner that is impossible for the balloon or the dirigible, and it was too large for any of the now known feathered inhabitants of the globe. Many of us have seen the aeroplane on exhibition in trial flights at low altitudes, but those who saw the mysterious stranger of Christmas were treated to the real thing in air conquests. It was a great spectacle in the skies. The aeroplane was generally believed to be the one which has been flying for many months past in New England, traveling incognito, as it were, for the stranger, while owned in Worcester, comes to earth and leaves it in parts unknown to the public. The owner claims that it is the greatest of all heavier-than-air contrivances, and after what we saw the other day we agree with him, if the Christmas day visitor was really Mr. Tillinghast in his greatest of airships. It was a stirring sight and encouraged our thoughts to the great achievements of mankind. In all of the seriousness of the incident there was also the humorous side to it, and no better shown perhaps than in the statement of the little newsboy who exclaimed, "That is nothing, only Santa Claus going home after a hard night's work."

1909 December 29 (Wed) Hartford (Conn.) Daily Times, p. 4.

Some Think It Is a Balloon.

Word comes from Norwich that an airship was seen hovering over that city Monday evening between 8:30 and 9 o'clock. The report says that there were many who saw it going in a southerly direction. There was no noise to be heard and no particular demonstration with the searchlight, but the fact that the lights were moving attracted attention, and it was watched until it disappeared. That it was not a star is the positive statement of those who saw it. Local people who saw the strange light in the sky Friday night have stated that they think now it was a balloon. It is possible that someone to the south of us is sending up a balloon some of these evenings and rejoicing in the commotion it has caused the observers.

Willamantic Daily Chronicle, Jan. 7 p. 3--That Mysterious Airship / A Number of Norwich People Believe It to Be a Large Paper Balloon.

A number of Norwich people, who saw sailing over the city what was supposed by a few to be the mysterious airship which has been reported so often of late declare now that in their opinion it was nothing but a large paper balloon, the kind that is put up on Fourth of July. It traveled with the wind, which strengthens their belief. There was a ribbon of smoke in its wake, such as the burning torch of a paper balloon gives forth. It would not be surprising if someone is trying to hoax the public in this way.

1909 December 30 (Th) Boston Globe, p. 13.

WEIRD AIRSHIP MAN IS FOUND / Says He's G. F. Russell of Marblehead / Flies at Night with Gyroscope Rig to Escape the Curious. / Starts From Near Salem With New Invention.

NEW YORK, Dec. 30--The American this morning prints the following: G. F. Russell, who arrived in this city yesterday from Marblehead, Mass., announced that he was the pilot of the phantom airship which mystified the residents of Worcester, Mass., and other places last week by flying with huge flashlights.

"Russell, who is only 21, claims that there was no mystery surrounding the flights, but that he and his associates had sought an isolated section of the country in which to try out a new gyroscope-equilibrium invention of A. Herring without interference.

Russell admitted that he had made several flights in the dark from a point near Salem and that, aided by a huge fire set up in the sand, he was able to make a safe landing after being in the air for more than an hour.

The new invention, according to Russell, will work wonders in airship flying, as it will tend to balance the aeroplane in a stiff breeze, thus preventing the aeroplane turning over, which so many navigators fear when they are in the air.

Although Russell refused to give a detailed description of Mr. Herring's gyroscope invention until after the patents had been granted, he explained that the additional machinery was very light and that it was run by the aid of the regular motor which runs the propeller and was located in the body of the aeroplane, under which the pilot sits.

Russell denied that Wallace E. Tillinghast had any connection with the flights over Worcester.

1909 December 30 (Th) Boston Herald, p. 1.

SAYS HE PILOTTED PHANTOM AIRSHIP / G. F. Russell, 21, Arrives in New York from Marblehead; Declares He was Trying Gyroscope-Equilibrium Invention. / SAILED ON TRIPS FROM A POINT NEAR SALEM. / (Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald.)

NEW YORK, Dec. 29.--G. F. Russell, who arrived in this city today from Marblehead, Mass., announced that he was the pilot of the phantom airship which mystified the residents of Worcester last week, by flying over the city with huge flashlights.

Russell, who is only 21, claims that there was no mystery surrounding the flights, but that he and his associates had sought an isolated section of the country in which to try out a new gyroscope-equilibrium invention of A. Herring without any interference.

Russell admitted that he had made several flights in the dark from a point near Salem, and that aided by a huge fire set up in the sand he was able to make a safe landing after being in the air for more than an hour.

The new invention, according to Russell, will work wonders in airship flying, as it will tend to balance the aeroplane in a stiff breeze, thus preventing the aeroplane turning over, which so many navigators fear when they are in the air.

Although Russell refused to give a detailed description of Mr. Herring's gyroscope invention until after the patents had been granted explained that the additional machinery was very light and that it was run by the air of the regular motor which runs the propeller and was located in the body of the aeroplane, under which the pilot sits.

Russell denied that Wallace E. Tillinghast had any connection with the flights over Worcester.

1909 December 30 (Th) Boston Journal, p. 1, 4.

(card 1)

AIRSHIP MYSTERY TO BE CLEARED UP BY TILLINGHAST / Will Exhibit His Phantom Monoplane in Hub in February. / DOUBT OF EXISTENCE IS CLEARED AWAY / Facts Come to Light Which Prove Worcester Man Was Flying Machine

Wallace E. Tillinghast is to unveil in Boston the mystery which has shrouded his now famous airship, when he exhibits the monoplane that has stirred Greater Boston by its strange night flights at the aero show to be given at Mechanics' Building from Feb. 16 to 23.

This he has practically promised through his superintendent of construction, William Hunt, and the officials of the aero show believe implicitly they are to have his machine among their exhibits.

This belief comes as a result of a visit paid Tillinghast at Worcester by Percy Edgar of C.I. Campbell's office, representing the promoters of the show. Edgar called on Mr. Tillinghast and put his proposition up to Superintendent Hunt, who appeared for the inventor. Edgar says Hunt told him Tillinghast would exhibit at the February show.

Airship Story Confirmed.

Men prominent in aeronautics in Boston are firm in their conviction that Tillinghast has a monoplane as he has stated. Facts leaked out yesterday which confirm these opinions, aside from the statements of scores of people who have seen a mysterious air craft plying its way, like a Flying Dutchman of the skies, over a number of towns and cities in Greater Boston.

A. B. Wilson, a New York inventor and engine expert, has stated that Tillinghast came to him while he was stopping at Bar Harbor, Me., a year ago, and asked him if he would enter his service. Tillinghast hinted at his construction of an airship, but Wilson refused to enter an agreement with him because he himself was deeply interested in a patent on an airship he was then planning, and he thought that he would rather pursue his own course. Wilson has since said to persons of note, but who do not wish to be mentioned, regarding this matter, that he feared, or rather, thought at that time, his own patent might be better than the one Tillinghast might promote, and he wished the credit for his own device alone.

To further emphasize their theory that Tillinghast is not bluffing in the matter of an air craft, it has been ascertained that a few months ago the Worcester inventor had shipped to him from France, via New York two aerial engines. One of these is an Antoinette motor and the other a Curtiss 30.

Tillinghast had these engines transported to his workshop in Worcester, and from there he had them taken secretly to the place where he has set up and housed the machine which has caused to much speculation in aero circles.

In spite of the eager watch which has been kept upon Tillinghast, he has so far eluded the people who have sought his place of hiding. There is nothing very mysterious about that end of the affair, as it would be the simplest thing to keep under cover even such a prominent thing as an airship. An acre lot, located a distance from any habitation, and upon which might be some barn-like structure, would be all that is necessary to aid in keeping his secret.

No Patent Granted.

Coming out at night, the aviator, with his searchlights shut off, could sail upward and miles away from the place of concealment before the lights were turned on. The muffled puffing of the exhaust would not attract attention a half mile away, and appearing only at night time the chances of any one being in the neighborhood would be small in a sparsely settled, out-of-the-way place.

After the nocturnal flight, a descent could be made in the same manner. The lights turned off and the engines shut down to the lowest notch possible, and the landing made in utter secrecy.

Tillinghast has not been granted a patent at the United States patent office at Washington for an airship of any nature, and this is believed to be another reason for his secrecy regarding his invention. Whether he has applied for a patent or not cannot be learned, as the patent office is not allowed to divulge any information of this sort, but it is intimated from good sources that not even an application has been made.

Refuses to Be Seen.

Tillinghast has stated that he did not care for anybody's opinion regarding his conduct in the matter, and that when he gets ready to show his goods before the public, he will do so, and not before. He has the utmost confidence that his place of concealment cannot be found, and so far this reliance has proved good.

To see Tillinghast is today one of the hardest propositions imaginable. His office force is trained to make all kinds of evasive answers to the applicant for an interview, and at his home one is no more successful.

The inventor wants to be left alone, and contents himself in his already expressed opinion that in the fullness of time proper publicity will be given his flying machine.

Anyway, Boston people rejoice that it is to this city the craft which has awakened their curiosity will be finally brought to bay.

1909 December 30 (Th morn) Rutland, Vt., Daily Herald, p. 7.

News of Vermont

Essex Junction populace was out in full force Monday night to view what was thought to be a mysterious airship seen in the eastern sky. A brilliant light rose and fell, and finally went out.

31, 4. It is possible that the Essex Junction airship failed to "pass through" Brattleboro.

23, 4. The story of that man Tillinghast about an airship flight by night across a good slice of New England ought to have been hidden in a brass tube and lost in the unknown. He has a chance to prove it at Los Angeles, however.

29, 4. Meanwhile, Tillinghast is doing a silent specialty that is attracting much attention.

1909 December 30 (Th) Tillinghast Daily Chronicle, p. 1.

SOLUTION OF THE AEROPLANE MYSTERY PROMISED BY HUNT! / Manager for Tillinghast Says the Latter's Airship Will be Exhibited at Boston in February. / WORCESTER MAN STILL MAINTAINS RESERVE. / Reiterates His Statement That He Has the Aeroplane, That It is a Wonder, and That He Will Show It to the World When He Is Good and Ready and Not Before. /

Boston, Dec. 30.—Wallace E. Tillinghast's mysterious aeroplane, which by flights over New England cities during the past month has stirred a curiosity almost unparalleled, is to be exhibited at the Boston Aero show, to be held here next February 16 to February 23, at least that is the declaration of William Hunt, manager for the Worcester aviator.

Hunt's promise comes as the result of a visit paid Tillinghast at Worcester by Percy Edgar, a representative of the show's promoters. Edgar did not confer with Tillinghast, who is still keeping in the background, but Hunt, who represents him, declared that when the show opened the mysterious monoplane would be on hand for exhibition, this being in line with previous promises by Tillinghast that he would come out into the open in the spring. The promoters of the show have implicit confidence that when the doors open, the solution of the aeroplane mystery will be given to the public.

That Tillinghast is not springing a gigantic hoax on the people of New England, but that he really has a wonderful aeroplane is rapidly becoming the general belief here. It has been learned that a few months ago Tillinghast had shipped to him from France via New York two aerial engines, one an Antoinette motor and the other a Curtiss 30. These engines are not now in Tillinghast's Worcester workshop and it is believed they have been transferred to his secret aerodrome and are, perhaps, being used on the night flights which have so stirred New England.

Despite the importunities of scores of newspaper men and other interested persons Tillinghast still maintains his reserve. When cornered and asked flatly when he will come out in the open he still reiterates his statement that he has the aeroplane, that it is a wonder, but closes the discussion with the old declaration: "I'll show it to the world when I'm good and ready, not before."

1909 December 31 (Fri) Boston Globe, p. 3.

MARBLEHEAD STIRRED UP / Over Story About the Airship Flights. / No Aeroplanes There That Are Fitted Up With Motors. / Russell There to Set One Up for W. S. Burgess.

MARBLEHEAD, Dec. 31.—The people of this town are somewhat stirred up over the story from New York that C. F. Russell claimed to be the man who made the flights which have been reported from eastern Massachusetts on various nights of this month.

Mr Russell is quoted as stating that he made the flights from here, starting each evening from near the Salem border from a sandpit, but this not so, as during the stay of Russell in Marblehead, which was only for two or three days, the only aeroplanes known to be in town were not fitted with motors.

Mr Russell was sent on to Marblehead by the Curtiss-Herring Co to set one of their biplanes for W. Starling Burgess. After finishing this work he left for New York and nothing more was heard from him until the story of his alleged flights was published in the Thursday morning papers.

It will be two weeks more before the aeroplane at Burgess' will be in condition to fly, and by this time the new biplane designed by W. Starling Burgess will also be ready for its first flight. This biplane is to be much like the Curtiss machine and is to be equipped with one of the Curtiss motors.

It will have different shaped side planes for balancing and much less skeleton. This latter fact will lighten the aeroplane considerably. In the Curtiss flying machine the frame is of bamboo connected with piano wire.

Mr Burgess will construct his from built-up spruce which will be much lighter than the bamboo. These will be made up of five fibers, one a core and the other four wound around. This makes a very light pole of great strength.

As soon as the new aeroplane is constructed two men from the main office of the Curtiss-Herring company will be sent over from New York to try out both machines. These first flights will take place within the next three weeks at Marblehead or at Chebacco lake.

1909 December 31 (Fri) Wheeling (W. Va.) Register, p.

THE COUNTRYSIDE IS AWAKENED BY GIANT METEORS / Startling Phenomenon Lighted the Heavens for Miles Around Triadelphia Town. /

The residents of Triadelphia and vicinity were somewhat startled shortly before 10 o'clock last night by the appearance of three giant meteors, all descending to the earth simultaneously and with great velocity. According to members of the family of Joseph Green, the meteors were first seen at apparently thousands of feet in the air, and as they swiftly came earthward the heavens were brilliantly lighted for miles around. It was stated that some of the residents of the vicinity declared that the meteoric shower, confined as it was to three parts of apparently equal size and close together, was the visitation of a comet. This supposition was strengthened when it was learned that the meteors made a loud report and a jarring sound when they hit the earth.

According to many scientists on the subject, a comet is but a meteor, and in this some of the persons who witnessed the meteoric display last night were fairly right, after all. According to Rev. Irl R. Hicks, meteoric showers are frequent in cold weather.

1909 December 31 (Fri) Worcester, Mass., Evening Gazette, p. 1.

AIRSHIP ON MORGAN'S FARM SKY PILOTS' LATEST DOPE / Tillinghast Reported to Be Directing Construction with Backing of Paul B. Morgan.

A new idea airship is now being constructed on the Charles H. Morgan farm in Boylston, where the Carl Ostergren flying machine met with disaster during the trial last spring, and the work is being directed by Wallace E. Tillinghast, according to the latest story to be circulated by the local sky pilots.

It is reported that Mr. Tillinghast is being backed by Paul B. Morgan and that the work is being done in the barn where the old Ostergren machine was stored in Boylston preparatory to its trial flights. The stories also have it that Mr. Ostergren is also working on the proposed new machine.

In response to a recent request from Charles J. Glidden, president of the New England Aero club, J. Walter Flagg, the Worcester balloonist has been trying to get some inside information, and he has had talks with Mr. Tillinghast, who declared that he has something that will make the people take notice when he gets ready to show it.

What is considered to be reliable sources of information is authority for the statement that when the old airship was removed the job was done by Prentice Bros. acting under orders from Mr. Tillinghast, and that he has kept up his interest since that time.

[Cartoon: It's easier than lying! Ananias jumps Mt. Ranier holding hot air balloons, while Baron Munchhausen flies with triplane devices in his hands—the Essex transcontinental hot air race stretches from Worcester to Tacoma.]

1910

1910 January 1 (Sat) Hartford (Conn) Daily Courant, p. 14.

Winstead Gets Shower of Airship Handbills. / Then Message from Tillinghast Turns Out to Be Joke. / (Special to The Essex Courant.)

A shower of hand bills bearing the inscription "January 1, 1910, on my way to New York," and signed "Tillinghast," falling apparently from the heavens just as what appeared to be the mysterious Worcester airship appeared over the borough, caused a wave of excitement here this evening and incidentally kept many persons gazing skyward for some time. It finally leaked out, however, that the airship was a New Year's joke perpetrated by Warden Edwin Hitchcock and a few friends.

The airship, a large fire balloon, purchased at a local drug store was sent up from the top of Mr. Hitchcock's block on Main street while the supposed messages from Tillinghast were gotten up by a local printer and were scattered from the top of other blocks by friends of the warden.

1910 January 2 (Sun) Springfield Republican, p. 6. (eds)

People continue to see things in the air. That mysterious airship which had all Worcester county by the ears and eyes a while ago, and eastern Massachusetts later, has appeared in New Hampshire and West Virginia almost simultaneously. It was observed by "reputable citizens" in the former state, who saw lights and a framework and heard voices; and in West Virginia it moved with great rapidity with lights like blazing meteors:—

As stars with trains of fire and dews of blood, / Disasters in the sun.

These must, indeed, be times sorely troublesome to the human imagination, but not as they were "a little ere the mightiest Julius fell," or as a thousand and more years later when all Europe began to see signs of the world's end, precurSED by "fierce events." What taxes the human mind today is not an ignorant supernaturalism, but such rapidity in achievements for the industry of the powers of the earth and all as to make the natural appear as fairly supernatural in its possibilities. The past year's developments in air navigation, attended also by the sudden extension of human knowledge to embrace conditions obtaining at the northern pole of the earth, have no doubt brought the popular mind under no little strain and made it more susceptible than common to seeing phantoms in the air if not ghosts on the earth.

1910 January 4 (Tues) Hartford (Conn.) Daily Times, p. 2.

Andree

William Irvin, who for 57 years has had charge of the Hudson bay post at Good Hope on the Mackenzie river, is in the city, and he says that one night a light appeared over the country and on the following morning all the Chippewas in the district flocked to the Hudson bay post to tell of the large, mysterious star that had appeared over the heavens so near to their tents.

They said they could hear voices; also that the light was traveling very low. They could see it for several hours after it first came down into view. It is generally believed here that this was Andree's balloon.

ANDREE'S DEATH DUE TO ESKIMO SLAYERS / Missionary Priest Advances New Theory as to His Fate. / TRACE IS FOUND OF BALLOON / Indians Tell of Large White House Which Fell From the Heavens. Danish Government May Send Explorers to Bring Back Relics of the Ill-Fated Explorer.

Prince Albert, Sask., Jan. 4.--That Andree and his companions in their balloon dash to the North Pole may have been slain by Eskimos, is the theory advanced by Rev. Fr. Turquetit, missionary for Northern Saskatchewan and Mackenzie river districts.

Bishop Pascal of the Roman Catholic Church announced yesterday that he had several official dispatches from Fr. Turquetit, telling of the finding of Andree's balloon (900) miles north of here, near Reindeer lake in the Arctic Circle, by the Eskimos and Indians.

This has led to a theory that after all Andree may have reached the pole. The Danish Government talks of sending an expedition to get records, etc., of Andree's trip.

Many are of the opinion that the large white house covered with ropes which fell from the heavens, as described by the Indians, is the balloon in which Andree, accompanied by Dr. S.T. Strindberg and Herr Fraenckell, sailed when they left in quest of the Pole over 12 years ago.

Fr. Turquetit speaks Cree, Chippeva and Blackfoot fluently and readily understands the Eskimo language. He is stationed in the Far North. At Reindeer lake, a settlement which is almost entirely inhabited by Chippeva Indians and within about six days' travel by dog sleigh from Reindeer lake, or seven days' travelling in a northerly direction from Fort Churchill, is the Eskimo land.

The missionary was very anxious to visit this new territory and to learn something of the customs of the Eskimos and the superstitions of the Indians tribes. A number of Chippeva Indians offered to accompany him and the trip was made, the district being reached after about eight days travelling.

He carried a small revolver and by this weapon he first received information of white men having before visited the country. The natives were greatly interested in the weapon and examined it closely.

"That looks like the thing that white man had," said one of the Eskimos in his own language to his companion.

"What white man?" inquired Fr. Turquetit. The Indians hadded back the gun and drew away without saying anything. They refused to speak of the white man and appeared superstitious about their new visitors, but the Chippevas again talked with them and found out what they could.

They were told that "a white house had fallen from the sky, that it was covered with ropes and that three were in it." The Eskimos also told where the house had fallen, adding that the men who were hungry had died shortly after their arrival. The Eskimos said they had used the ropes and were still using them in padding their canoes and fixing their tents.

All the time they appeared to be hiding something and were not at all anxious to speak of their former visitors. Fr. Turquetit, in relating his story, said that he was of the opinion that the white men had shot some deer or other animals after they had arrived, and the Indians, becoming angry, killed them.

William Irvin, who for 57 years has had charge of the Hudson Bay post at Good Hope on the Mackenzie river, is in the city, and he says that one night a light appeared over the country and on the following morning all the Chippevas in the district flocked into the Hudson Bay post to tell of the large mysterious star that had passed over the heavens so near to their tents.

"They said they could hear voices; also that the light was traveling very low. They could see it for several hours after it first came into view. It is generally believed here that this was Andree's balloon.

It is well known that the Eskimos to the north of here have a quantity of ropes and they will not explain how they came by them. They admit they have other relics from the same source which are carefully hidden away.

The Danish Consul at Montreal telegraphed to this city several times yesterday in regard to sending out an expedition to bring back the remnants of the explorers and it is said the Danish Government has agreed by cable to pay all the expenses of such a trip and provide men to take charge who are well versed in northern exploration.

1910 January 7 (Fri) Willimantic (Conn) Daily Chronicle, p. 1.

"SEEING THINGS O' NIGHTS." / This Time It Was a Chain of Lights, High up in the Inky Sky, and Not a Star in Sight.

Several persons who were out very late last night report a most unusual sight in the heavens. It was what appeared to be a chain of lights that were stationary and became very bright at times, while at other times they were very dim. Policeman Hanley and Manager Gray of the Opera House saw the strange lights and they stood on Main street, in front of Mr. Gray's house, and watched the lights for about ten minutes, this being about 1 o'clock this morning. Mr. Gray says the lights resembled electric lights and the chain of them looked to be about fifty feet long. They were high up, directly above the Kimbel building, and except for these lights it was inky black in the sky at the time; rain was falling and there was not a star in sight.

Perhaps it was a comet, or an airship stopped for repairs that Messrs. Hanley and Gray saw, or perhaps the strange effect was produced by a mirage; certainly they saw something most unusual and neither one of them had imbibed anything that would make it easy for them to "see things."

1910 January 8 (Sat) Hartford (Conn.) Courant, p. 1.

WILLIMANTIC MEN SEE THINGS AGAIN. / Perhaps 'Twas an Airship Hung Up for Repairs. / (Special to The Courant.) / Willimantic, Jan. 7.

Willimantic people have been "seeing things" again. Manager John H. Gray of Loomer Opera House and Policeman John Hanley reported today that about 1 o'clock this morning, while they were standing in front of Mr. Gray's residence on Main street, there appeared to them from out of the black sky something that resembled a chain of electric lights hitched together with a strand of fire. It was raining at the time and there was not a star in sight.

The lights appeared to be up very high and Mr. Gray says that as near as he could judge they formed a chain about fifty feet long. They were directly over the Kimbel building, and would become very bright at intervals, remaining quite dim the rest of the time. Mr. Gray says that what he saw may have been an airship stopped for repairs, or it may have been a comet. Whatever it was, he is quite sure he saw it and he was very much in earnest when telling about the wonderful sight. He declared that he and Patrolman Hanley stood and watched it for ten minutes.

1910 January 10 (Mon) Rutland (Vt) Daily Herald, p. 4.

THE INEVITABLE AIRSHIP.

The expected has occurred, the inevitable has come to pass. Rutland county has seen the airship. The report comes, not from a lady getting off a car backwards or from some person looking through a moistened glass, but from Mr. R.W. Tyler, a sober and serious citizen of East Poutney, whose plain, unvarnished tale is as follows:--

Have read with interest two articles in your paper about the balloon or airship that started from Rutland, also about the mysterious light in the heavens near or about Worcester. Should like to enquire through your paper if any one has seen a strange light in the sky in this vicinity. Mrs. Tyler called my attention to a bright light in the sky this evening about 7:30. First it looked like a very bright star. After watching it seemed to move along. Looking through a telescope, it was plain to be seen that it was no star, but a curious machine of some kind. Would be interested to know if any one else saw it and what it was.

The date of the letter is Jan. 6th., and the Herald gladly gives it publication. Whether it was an airship, the result of "retinal accommodation," or an emanation of the sub-conscious mind, the constant recurrence of these stories is certainly very peculiar.

Is it possible that some aerial traveller is braving these brisk zero temperatures for the purpose of trying-out an airship? Is Tillinghaast actually demonstrating his epoch-making flyer in the first weeks of 1910, as he promised, or is the extraordinary brilliancy of Venus, assisted by a prefixed impression of the mind, misleading all these good people?

Frankly and seriously, the Herald would greatly like to know if any other observer saw this "great light" in the frosty heavens last Thursday evening about 7:30, that Mr. Tyler so circumstantially describes.

1910 January 11 (Th) Daily Times (Chattanooga), p. 7.

Airship in the Air / Many See Strange Craft Pass Over Chattanooga.

An unknown aircraft passed over Chattanooga yesterday morning about 9:30 o'clock, proceeding in a northeasterly direction and in a straight course, as if on a long journey. The unusual sight was witnessed by many people in this city. Starting point or destination of the mysterious aerial craft is not known.

Some who saw it described the vessel as cigar-shaped, which would indicate that it was a dirigible balloon. These people say they did not see it through rings of cigar smoke, either, and that they were not victims of a pipe dream.

The airship seen yesterday above the city is thought to be at least the second to pass over this region within a few weeks. Some Chattanoogaers saw a strange object in the sky recently and strongly leaned to the opinion that it, like the unknown visitor of yesterday, was an aerial machine.

1910 January 13 (Th eve) Nashville Banner, p. 9.

AIRSHIP PASSES ALMOST DIRECTLY OVER HUNTSVILLE / Special to the Banner.

Huntsville, Ala., Jan. 12.--An unknown airship passed almost directly over Huntsville yesterday afternoon, coming from the southwest and continuing its course on a straight line to the northeast. The craft appeared to be making a long journey and it passed in its course without making any signal or other demonstration and so swiftly did it move that it was out of sight before the crowds in the street could provide themselves with glasses. Those who saw the craft say it was too high for them to distinguish whether it was an aeroplane, an airship or a dirigible balloon. The craft was not traveling with the breeze that was blowing on the surface of the earth because the breeze on the surface was coming from the west. The speed appeared to be greater than any wind short of a hurricane.

14/8 Some Chattanoogaers have seen a strange object hovering over their city. It is said to have looked like a balloon, or maybe like a whale. / 14, 13--mention of 3rd passage of arsp over Chatta.

1910 January 14 (Fri) Daily Times (Chattanooga), p. 6.

Another Airship Flying / Wonder If Aviator Has Sinister Designs Upon Chattanooga Territory.

Another flying machine, or perhaps the same one, was seen to pass over the city yesterday. Those who saw it said it came from the southwest, and after maneuvering around, sailed away toward the north, keeping parallel with Walden's ridge. From all that can be learned of the craft, it appeared to be a dirigible balloon similar to that one which passed over this section Wednesday morning. Many think it is the same one, and are at a loss to account for its visitations. Some are inclined to think that the mysterious airship is the craft of a sky pirate who has sinister designs upon Chattanooga. At any rate, the aeronautically inclined gentleman who is hovering so mysteriously over the city is causing a great many people to sit up and think.

Sun. Jan 14 p.6--Knoxville is also seeing airships. Still they say prohibition prohibits up there.

p. 21--Cartoon: The Aeriptor: "Pardon--My Mistake" (Man in flying machine crashes through window where man is shaving.)

Paulhan, Curtis set records at LA aviation meet.
Jan. 19p2--New comet brighter than Venus
20p1--Zeppelin planning Hamburg-London passenger service.

Tues Dec 28 '09, p.8--No Flight in Airship to Mt. Ranier Summit.
SEATTLE, Wash., Dec. 27.--Careful investigation fails to disclose the slightest ground for the widely publicized report of a flight to the summit of Mt. Ranier by Reginald Wetherby, an aeroplane. No person of that name is known in Spanawa, where "Wetherby" is alleged to have perfected the machine.

Dec. 29--Santa Claus arrived in an airship.
1910 January 15 (Sat) Knoxville Journal, p. 7.

Positive That They Saw an Airship.
Several well known citizens are positive in assertion of the belief that a large airship passed over the city last night shortly before 7 o'clock, bound in a southerly direction. Two gentlemen who declare they saw the airship were on Summit hill at the time and claim that its outlines were fairly distinct, that sparks could be seen from its motors and that the hum of the machinery could be heard. The airship appeared to them to be a dirigible balloon, and may be the same one which has been seen several times of late in the vicinity of Chattanooga.

1910 January 17 (Mon) Chattanooga Daily Times, p. (card 1)

"AIRSHIP" IS CAPTURED / It Alighted Yesterday in the Ninth Ward. / 'SQUIRE BASS AND OTHERS PERPETRATED THE JOKE / With Other Small Boys He Fooled People for Whole Week--Nothing But Paper Balloons Sent Skyward for Fun.

Airships, aeroplanes, dirigible balloons, biplanes and aerial craft of all kinds must take a tumble in the minds of Chattanoogaans for the time being. Those things in the sky which thousands of people in this city and vicinity have been accepting as the real, genuine all-wood and a yard wide airship were not real airships at all. They were no more than toys sent up as a practical joke. The perpetrator was 'Squire Ed Bass and some more of the small boys out in South Chattanooga.

The 'squire and a very few others who must have been "on" have had lots of fun. The gullibles whose name is legion, may have enjoyed the stunt, but just how much they will appreciate the humor of the situation now remaineth to be seen. It will depend largely on the temperament of the victim. A joke's a joke, but when the victim gets wise the effect is more or less doubtful. Doubtless the joking 'squire's ears will burn with an exceeding warmth today, because of the many he so thoroughly fooled there will be some to express themselves plainly, forgetting the Sunday school lesson yesterday.

Murder will out, doncherknow, and other matters not as serious do not always remain a mystery. The cat has scratched and chewed her way clean out of the bag of the dirigible balloon business. Truth once more reigns supreme and sits at the tiller of the aeroplane, having ousted the spirit of humor and falsity which has been steering the airships all over the sky in the region roundabout Chattanooga. The cat got out of the bag and the genius at the steering gear gave way to the truth yesterday when a cigar-shaped paper balloon, some fifteen feet long and four feet through, at the maximum, alighted calmly, peacefully without shame or embarrassment, in the neighborhood of the Ninth ward fire hall.

It was not long before the presence of the strange object was discovered by the natives, and they began to congregate.

There was much interest and amusement manifested, coupled with a certain form of admiration of whoever it was who had succeeded in fooling the people for so long. For it was very apparent that in the collapsed paper structure lay the secret of the airships which had been seen over the city.

Now, the good people of Highland Park who saw the paper balloon and realized its significance did not know who was back of the joke. Even before this discovery in Highland Park The Times had learned the identity of the juveniles who perpetrated the joke and was preparing to inform its readers on the subject. Then word came that the inevitable Ninth ward had come again to the fore and had material evidence of the nature of the airships which have been causing so much commotion and talk for the last few days.

My, what people in a dry town will see, and, seeing, what mountains they will make out of mole hills that come into their line of vision. Chattanooga can console itself in the knowledge that other towns, dry like Chattanooga, have been victimized lately in the matter of sky-craft. Dry Knoxville has been a seein' airships lately. Dry Huntsville has been peering aloft to the detriment of its necks and collars at strange craft in the big dome.

Amid the commotion caused by the frequent appearance of what seemed to be an airship with a strong liking for this vicinity, 'Squire Bass and his fellow conspirators have been saying nothing and laughing up their sleeves at the mystification of their townspeople: Like Mr. Hyde, they have stood around among the wondering victims and hearing accounts of their Dr. Jekyll doings.

'Squire Bass, arch-conspirator of them all, perhaps had the biggest share of amusement in this way. It was no unusual thing for him to hear people describe the airship in the minutest detail. His amusement was in their gullibleness, and the power of their optics. Some of them declared that the craft was a biplane and that they could plainly discern the man at the steering gear, and even hear the chug-chug of the machinery.

That so many people were successfully deceived by the toy balloon was due to optical delusion. Tricks which the eye will play in certain circumstances are certainly delusions and snares.

In reality a 14-foot affair, the little balloon, perhaps a few hundred feet high, looked like a monster affair. And, then, too, like looking at the Pelades, the more one looked the more there was to see. The man in the rigging, and other details described by some were natural consequences.

'Squire Bass' joke was simply that and nothing more—a practical joke. It has been the opinion of many that the alleged airship, or whatever it was, would resolve itself finally into some sort of an advertising didge. But the worthy 'squire has no brand of soap, panacea, cigar or breakfast food to hoist upon a purchasing public, so far as known. The craft which abided into the camp of the Wiggles Highland Parkers yesterday bore no advertisement. It was very inconsiderate of that balloon to land in an enlightened community like Highland Park, anyway. Had it gone further the 'squire's joke might have lasted longer. But in the midst of thousands of wide-awake and strenuous folk it could only result in the discovery and limelight. It was a case of "If we're discovered we're lost," as 'Squire Bass may have said.

'Squire Bass' balloon was not made lighter than air by the use of hot air about the prison commissioner's job, either. The balloon which landed among the Parkers owed its powers of navigation to the gases arising from a bunch of waste soaked in some liquid, presumably gasoline, kerosene, benzine, or some other old sene, and ignited.

By perpetrating such a joke upon an unsuspecting public, especially as the joke was so successful, 'Squire Bass lays himself open to a variety of more or less succulent and pithy flings. Any time today it will be pertinent to eject sarcasm and hitting sentences about the airship man. There will be some to say that he was trying to get high enough up to get his grasp on the prison commissioner plum. Others may hint that he was looking around for more love-smiten couples in order that he might join their two lives in one, and get a nice fee.

The balloons of the Bass persuasion were sent up from the rear of Stong's drug store, Main street. The forests, mountains and streams of the vicinity could probably divulge the landing place of the others, the ones turned loose before that which opened the Ninth warders' eyes.

1910 January 17 (Mon) Nashville American, p. 2.

Airship Carrying a Light / Passes Over Paragould, Ark. Arkansas, at Night, Apparently Under Perfect Control.

PARAGOULD, Ark., January 16.--A large airship carrying three or four passengers and a powerful headlight of some sort, passed over Paragould early last evening, appearing from the north and headed south. The airship was about 1800 feet high. Thousands saw the air craft, which appeared to pause while passing over the south part of the city and to circle about. The airship, to all appearances, was a dirigible balloon and under perfect control. No signals were given out from the ship. It carried a brilliant light. Memphis Commercial Appeal 1910 January 19 (Wed) Daily Arkansas Democrat (Little Rock), p. 9.

AIRSHIPS WERE TOYS / Mischievous Boy Started Story of Balloons and Imagination Did the Rest.

Paragould, Jan. 19.--(Special.)--The story sent out from here Sunday to the effect that a large airship was sighted passing over this city Saturday and purporting to give a minute description of the craft and the number of occupants in it is a hoax pure and simple. A mischievous young Paragouldian who had several toy balloons left over from the holidays, sent one of them up Saturday night and then came down town and started the airship story and had hundreds of people straining their necks looking at a dim object somewhere in the heavens. Their imaginations got busy and they thought they saw people in it and were even able to tell the dimensions of the alleged airship and the color of the paint.

The publication of the story did nothing more than to create a hearty laugh.

1910 January 19 (Wed) Boston Herald, p. 1x 14.

TILLINGHAST PAYS VISIT TO BEVERLY / Worcester Man Who Told of Night Aeroplane Flight Looks for Plant in Which to Build His Motor.

Wallace F. (sic) Tillinghast of Worcester, the man who startled the country with his story of making a night aeroplane flight from Worcester to New York, was in Beverly yesterday, looking for a plant to manufacture a 45-horsepower, six-cylinder motor of his own design.

He was in consultation with an automobile building firm, and it is probable the Tillinghast motor aeroplane will be built in Beverly. Mr. Tillinghast visited Ryday Side and looked over several fields, which will be used for a tryout of the machine.

The Herring-Curtiss aeroplane, which is being built at the Burgess yards at Marblehead, will be tried out at Chebacco pond within a few weeks. The accents will be made by Augustus Herring and W. Starling Burgess.

1910 January 19 (Wed) Hartford (Conn) Daily Times, p. 9. (card 1)

FAIR HAVEN SEES PHANTOM AIRSHIP. / People Watch Strange Lights From the Drawbridge Over Quinnipiac River. / ASTRONOMER HAS SOLUTION.

Fair Haven, January 19.--Mysterious and insolvable as have appeared the wild tales of a phantom cloud-craft of the night, which have kept the entire state of Connecticut in a state of excitement for weeks, it now appears that if the belief of an astronomer of considerable repute who lives here, is not mistaken, the story of the apparitions may soon be stamped a hoax as curious as the state has ever known.

The explanation of the mystery as advanced by this man, who withholds his name from publication until he has carried his investigations further, lies in the simple fact that Sirius, the Dog Star, rises at 6:15 in the evening and Venus sets at 7:53 these evenings. The manner of his discovery of this possible solution of the whole problem is found in the account of the deception of a number of Fair Haven people by these tricky heavenly bodies Sunday evening.

The astronomer was crossing the Quinnipiac river, when he encountered a small crowd of residents of the village pointing excitedly off to the southwest in the direction of Lake Saltonstall. There, not far above the blackly vague horizon, to all appearances, hung the bobbing lights of the ghost-ship, flickering faintly and giving forth the semblance of a headlight and the side arcs of such a craft as has been described in all of the varied and strange tales which have originated at different points in Connecticut, since the claim of a Worcester man, that he was scouring the ethereal regions in an airship, and since the many queer sights of this kind observed by reliable witnesses.

But the man who knows something of the heavens at long range and who doesn't pretend to be so intimately acquainted with the celestial regions as the Worcester man, saw right away what was affecting the vision of the Fair Haven folk, who stood wonder-struck upon the bridge gazing at the oft-heard of sight. As a matter of fact he knows the habits and the wanderings of the Dog Star so well that the consteller canine could not lose him for a minute. He perceived that the "airship" was nothing save frisky old Sirius cavorting about near the skyline. It is a well known fact among astronomical observers, he exclaimed, that the Dog Star at certain periods and under certain atmospheric conditions seems to hang very low and to be magnified in size so that it looks to be quite close. This is just what happened Sunday night, he declares, and he further believes that perhaps the entire commonwealth has been fooled in just the same manner though possible with different stars. For, as stated, Venus, too, sometimes takes on an unnatural aspect. But the Dog Star more than any other may be mistaken for some xxxvixx traverser of the upper atmosphere.

When the astronomer went to his home in Fair Haven Heights Sunday night he soon received a telephone call from an acquaintance in another part of the town, inquiring about the airship. Upon request he took another look at the lights and became still further convinced that the formidable array which had the appearance of a ship was only the Dog Star Sirius in his antics, possible in conjunction with another star or two.

1910 January 22 (Sat afternoon) Birmingham (Ala) News, p. 1.

Eutaw Sees an Airship; Flies Over the Town. / Special to the Birmingham News.

EUTAW, Ala., Jan. 22.--For the first time in its history Eutaw was given the opportunity of witnessing a real airship in flight Friday morning. As the town was just awakening from sleep, with a few early risers already out, the inhabitants were disturbed by the peculiar chug-chug of a motor in the heavens just overhead, and those who were fortunate enough to be out or could get out in time, saw a big dirigible aircraft flying about 100 feet high, just above the roofs of the houses, pursuing an easterly course. The ship was coming from the west, with the wind, knocking off the miles at a lively clip. It could not be seen how many persons were aboard. It is not known where the ship started from nor for what point it was bound.

The strange inhabitant of the skies was seen by two or three responsible parties of the town, who vouch for its genuineness.

1910 January 24 (Mon) Berkshire Evening Eagle (Pittsfield, Mass) p2

MANY THOUGHT THE DAYLIGHT COMET AN AIRSHIP / Spectacle in Southwestern Heavens Visible to This City Early Last Evening.

The new Innes comet was plainly visible to Pittsfield for some time in the southwestern heavens between 6 and 7 o'clock last evening. A large number of people about the city stopped to view the sight. On West street many people stood for some little time in their shirt sleeves to witness the spectacle.

The comet is known as the Daylight comet. It was discovered in South Africa by an astronomer and it was at first thought that it was a new star. It did not take long, however, to determine that it was a comet. The astronomer communicated with London and that place was surprised to see it. This is the first time in years that a comet has been visible in daylight and it can be seen just about sunset far down in the southwestern sky if one looks sharply. Immediately after sunset the comet is the plainest. The tail, which is visible is about 12 times as long as the width of the moon and astronomers are now trying to find out what comet it is and when it was seen before. There are now about 600 comets in the space surrounding the earth. Halley's Comet is now attracting special attention and is barely visible to the naked eye. It is traveling now at a rate of 2,000,000 miles a day and in about one month will be quite bright. During April it will be the most prominent. The astronomers are able to determine the path of the comets with as much accuracy as the path of the moon and so accurate are their calculations that they claim that there is no danger of any of them coming anywhere near the earth. Halley's comet, at its nearest point, will be 7,000,000 miles away from the earth.

Many local people who saw the comet last night were wondering for a time what it really was. The first reports were that an airship was in the western part of the city. The tail of the comet was mistaken for the searchlight of an air craft and it was thought that the Worcester airship was in this section. Then it was said that it was Halley's comet but the latter is not due to the naked eye just yet.

The comet was visible before last evening but last night it was unusually bright. This evening if the sky is clear the comet should be visible to the naked eye. How long it will continue to be visible to the inhabitants of the earth the astronomers have not yet determined.

1910 July 13 (Wed) Providence Daily Journal, p. 1.

"Phantom" Airship a Reality. / Secretary of Worcester Board of Trade Sees Tillinghast Machine.

Worcester, Mass., July 12.--The phantom airship, which attracted so much attention last winter at scattered localities between Boston and New York, seems to have a certain tangible substance, according to Arthur M. Davidson, Secretary of the Worcester Board of Trade.

The airship was reported to have been seen last winter at many places in the vicinity of Worcester, as well as over Boston, Long Island Sound and New York.

Secretary Davidson said he paid a visit yesterday to the secret workshop of inventor Tillinghast, the airship's builder, and that he was shown the airship, which he describes as a monoplane.

Secretary Davidson did not see the airship make a flight, but he expressed the belief that it could fly.

1910 August 4 (Th) Sydney Morning Herald, p. 6.

MYSTERIOUS LIGHTS. / SEEN FROM STEAMER'S DECK. / PUZZLED SEAFARER. / ADELAIDE, Wednesday.

Captain Neilson, of the coastal steamer Wookata, the second engineer, Mr. S. Arnold, and helmsman, Mr. G. Hudd, are at a complete loss to explain the meaning of curious lights which they witnessed when the vessel was passing Althorpe Island on the way to Port Adelaide early the other morning. "Bright lights as distinct as masthead light of a steamer, but high up in air," were observed by the trio, and a strange thing was that they circled around the Wookata in a tantalizing way. "It was about 3 o'clock," says Captain Neilson, "that the helmsman said, 'Do you see those lights flying about?' I replied, 'Yes, there are a great many more lights about than I have ever seen here.' Just then I saw a mysterious light off Cape Spencer which disappeared as suddenly as it came into view. Presently the helmsman said, 'It is strange, but I have seen lights on the port side.' I stepped inside the wheelhouse, and on coming out again saw two lights just over the starboard bow, no distance away, but high up. They seemed to pass us. They were as bright as our masthead lights, and as far as I could judge, were 200 or 300 yards distant. The lights appeared to be 10 yards apart, one a little above the other. I could not make it out. I said to the man at the wheel, 'Did you see that?' He answered, 'Yes, they are like German airships flying about.' I did not know what to think. I feel sure I saw something unusual--something which in my 45 years' experience at sea I had never observed before."

The second engineer also declared he saw the STRANGE LIGHTS. 1910 August 19 (Fri) London Times, p. 6d.

REPORTED EXPLOSION OF A BALLOON.

A somewhat mysterious disappearance of a balloon is reported from Dessau. A number of labourers who were employed in the forest to the east of the town state that while at work yesterday evening they observed a balloon which was passing some distance away suddenly burst into flames and the car fell into the forest. They at once informed the Chief Forester of the occurrence and a search on a large scale was organized. According to telegrams from Dessau this afternoon no trace of the balloon has yet been found. This may, however, be explained by the fact that the forest is of very large extent. But since the various aeronautical societies of whom inquiries have been made state that none of their balloons is missing, the explanation has been put forward that the supposed balloon was nothing more than a large toy balloon filled with hot air heated by burning kerosene spirit.

1910 August 31 (Wed) New York Tribune, p. 1

FLIES TO MADISON SQUARE / Unknown Aviator Circles Tower, Makes Dips, Then Departs.

A biplane visited Madison Square last night. It came from somewhere in the east, and when its little social diversion was over disappeared in the direction whence it came.

It was heard before it was seen. The whirring sound of a motor high in the air caused many necks to be craned toward the Metropolitan tower at 8:45 o'clock when a long black object was seen flying through the air toward the tower. The vague bulk, as it came into nearer view took on the semblance of a biplane. It swung past the tower, then turned and described one graceful circle after another around the illuminated structure, its outlines standing out clear in the lights from many windows.

Round and round it circled, until the observers lost count, and then it swerved slightly toward the northwest and disappeared for a moment over the roof of the Flatiron Building, only to come into view xxx once more to the west of the building.

It returned to Madison Square and hovered over the little park, swinging in a long, beautiful curve, until it had circled it, and then began a series of "swooping" circles, a la Hamilton, and dipped down so that it seemed to brush the tops of the trees.

Soon afterward it disappeared. 1910 September 18 (Sun) Providence Sunday Journal, p. 2. (cont 1)

SEEKONK SKY GAZERS SPY STRANGE AIRSHIP / Sure It Was Large Craft, Cigar Shaped and Flying High. / OTHER DATA ARE CONFUSING / May Have Been Grand Trunk Survey Party Trying to Get Over New Haven Road, or River Odor Investigators, or Perhaps Lost Warren Ball Team.

A cigar-shaped airship was seen by several voracious Seekonk residents about 4:35 yesterday afternoon flying south southeast, about over the State and town line that divides Seekonk and East Providence.

The witnesses of the sky cruiser were sure that the thing was very high, and although no larger than a toy, as seen from the earth, was still so high that it could not have been seen at all if it had been a toy.

Several others in the town agreed to the general proposition that the ship was there or thereabouts. Details related depended considerably on the accuracy of observation or relation of the beholders. Efforts to obtain by telephone some information of the cloud scalar's appearance in towns further south were rewarded by reports more amusing than satisfying.

JULES VERNE OUTDONE.

Taking all the evidence thus obtained and putting it together in a composite mental view of the airship produced a craft rather more fantastic in appearance and eccentric in conduct than anything that Jules Verne ever conceived.

It was tolerably certain that the aerial auto was as high as the price of living; about twice as long as "from here to that gap in the fence;" that it closely resembled "one of these what-yer-call-its, moneyplane, an airyplane, or a digable balloon; that its nose was panted straight for Poppasquaah," North Swansea, Annawomscutt, New York or New Orleans, and that as to speed it beat the electric express passenger train for Fall River only because the express stopped at [48] flag stations in 2 1/2 miles.

Telephonic inquiry of an oyster concern in Warren brought a reply from a waterfront habitue evidently of the vintage of 1840, whose sky gazing in his youth had been directed to observing how the main to 'ga' ne'l was drawing. This veteran repeated the question: "What did yer say? That air ship? Well, that 'ere ship about 4:30 was the Polly going down river with oyster shells; leastways that air's the only ship I seen."

BALL TEAM SUSPECTED.

A drug store clerk in the same town answered promptly: "Airship, eh? Our ball team is up in the air to-night, and by gee! I guess that's what struck 'em."

An East Providence man claimed that he recognized the sky pilot in the ship as a Grand Trunk surveyor, and he opined that it indicated another effort to get a location line to tidewater without making a grade crossing of the New Haven road.

The private secretary of the city's Chief Executive would neither confirm nor deny the report that Mayor Fletcher was making an air trip to ascertain how far, in a vertical way, the atmospheric pollution of the Providence river now reaches, but suggested that returning vacation tourists were taking to flight to get away from the Woonasquatucket odor.

Tuesday, Sept. 20, p. 16: AIRSHIP ONLY HOT-AIR BALLOON. / Seekonk Mystery Solved by Report of Children's Entertainment.

The mystery surrounding the appearance of a supposed airship over Seekonk that part of Seekonk near Luther's Corners on Saturday afternoon has been dispelled. Instead of a Wright aeroplane or a Zeppelin dirigible, the cause of all the excitement was an ordinary, paper, hot-air balloon.

Saturday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bridgman entertained a number of the children of St. Mary's Orphanage at their estate on Pleasant street, in East Providence Centre. It is an annual affair for the children, and one to which they look forward with considerable pleasure. Mr. Bridgman, as a part of the entertainment, released several hot-air balloons, and the northwest breeze swept them rapidly out of sight, in a direct line for Luther's Corners, Swansea and Warren. The air was clear and the balloons mounted very high, where some of them assumed a peculiar shape. It was undoubtedly one of these balloons which was seen in Seekonk, and was reported as a strange airship, cigar shaped and moving rapidly.

1910 September 21 (Fri. morn) Buffalo (NY) Express, p. 2.

Balloon Over Lake. / Dunkirk Men Say They Saw Airship Descend at Point Gratiot. / Special. / Buffalo Express.

Dunkirk, Sept. 22.--Engineer Ready of the Dunkirk waterworks says he saw a balloon over Lake Erie, about two miles off Point Gratiot, at 6 o'clock tonight. He watched it for an hour through a strong field glass. It was cigar-shaped with a basket below. He did not distinguish any persons aboard.

The airship seemed to be attempting to reach land, and was slowly descending till at last it suddenly dropped and disappeared behind the trees on Point Gratiot. About twenty other persons watched it at the same time. After it disappeared, Mr. Ready telephoned the police so that assistance could be rendered if necessary, but nothing further could be learned of the balloon.

1910 September 24 (Sat.) p. 2.

Airship Seen by Dunkirk People Was a Large Kite.

Dunkirk, Sept. 23.(Special.)--It developed today that the airship scores of residents thought they saw over the lake yesterday was a large box kite being flown by a young man at Point Gratiot.

In the evening another airship joke developed, due to a swaying light being seen high in the air. It turned out that several boys had sent up a large kite with a small lighted lantern attached.

1910 October 7 (Sun) Providence Journal, 2nd sectn, p. 1.

OBJECT LIKE COMET SEEN. / Luminous Hazy Shape in Sky Puzzles Oakland Beach Observer.

If an Oakland Beach observer may believe his own eyes, both unaided and with the help of marine binocular glasses, a luminous, hazy object, resembling a good-sized comet minus its head, was rushing through the northern sky Friday night about 8 o'clock.

The suspected comet was in the neighborhood of the Great Bear, but whether it was in pursuit or was being pursued could not be determined. The juxtaposition, however, suggested that the Great Bear might have bitten off the comet's head.

If the object was not a comet, then it might have been a detached shaft of light from the aurora borealis, or a flashlight signal from Dr. Cook, reputed to be in the vicinity of the North Pole.

The object was first seen by the Oakland Beach observer with the unaided eye at 8 o'clock Friday night. At 8:08 it was obscured by clouds. He located it as about 2 degrees west of north and 15 degrees below the Polar Star, or, stated in astronomical terms, east of the constellation Ursa Major, a little nearer Polaris, that constellation's largest star, than the northern horizon, and very near the Lynx group of stars.

The observer telephoned Ladd Observatory, Brown University, Friday night, but at that hour the astronomers, who were taking observations, were unable to pick up the mysterious object. Their suggestion was that a bit of cloud may have caught the light in some way and deceived the Oakland Beach man.

The unidentified light was wasily the most luminous object in the sky and brighter than Halley's comet when that body was visible without a telescope on its first appearance in the early evening in the western sky. Its position was perpendicular, its length about one degree and its width nearly one-eighth of its length. It was not sharply defined, but had the appearance of a light shining through a mist. No head could be distinguished, and it was of uniform size its entire length.

No greater detail could be made out when viewed through marine binoculars than when seen with the naked eye.

1910 October 30 (Sun) Providence Journal, p. 1.

(card 1)

AVIATORS SEEN HIGH UP IN AIR NEAR CITY / Birdmen in Frolic Over East Providence at Early Hour. / THEIR IDENTITY NOT KNOWN / Aerial Machines Reported from Several Points "Resemble Pumpkins."--May Have Been Aviators from Belmont Park on Unheralded Journey Across Rhode Island.

Daring birdmen in a supposed race of two or more ships through cloudland, with one of the aviators doing all sorts of aerial stunts, were seen by a favored few early risers and late retires who looked skyward from this city about 5:30 yesterday morning.

With the leading sky pilot cutting pigeon wings, looping aerial loops, circling and diving like birds and generally doing skylark stunts, but all the time making progress toward the southeast, the two air craft passed at a high rate of speed and at a great altitude over the city's eastern suburbs in the direction of Riverside, and appeared to have passed over this city.

About half a score of newspaper workers, comprising mailers, whose trick in the Journal Office had just ended, or route carriers, whose trips had just begun, were passing through Dorrance street when one espied an object apparently "straight over" the Hanigan building, evidently an airship of some description. He called the attention of the others to the object and had no sooner done so than a second flying machine hove in sight, in pursuit of the first. When the leader began to describe fancy figures the interest of the skygazers became intense.

As their view was circumscribed by the proximity of high buildings, the party ran for the open space and higher elevation in front of the Union station, and from that point of vantage watched the two aviators for 20 minutes or longer.

THIRD AIRSHIP SEEN.

An hour or more later a third aerial traveller was sighted in East Providence in the direction in which the earlier two had disappeared, which gave strength to the theory that a night race by birdmen had been undertaken.

The two aviators sighted by the newspaper workers apparently were racing. One had a good lead over the other, and so sure was he, it appeared, that he could maintain the lead that he caused his craft to swerve in huge semi-circles and then return to long, straight-ahead dashes, to be varied a moment later by more circling. If the man at the helm of No. 1 airship did not feel like a bird he certainly was a good actor.

The second ship held on practically a straight course. At first the spectators in front of Union station, watching the leader, thought that he was tacking to get favoring currents of air, but as the second machine kept steadily on a straight course the conclusion finally was that the leader was feeling frolicsome and was bound to show his competition that he could play tricks and still have time left in which to beat him in a speed contest.

RESEMBLED PUMPKIN.

None of the spectators being well posted on the different types of airships, they were not agreed as to what class to place the two aerial cruisers in. One of the Journal men declares that the craft resembled a pumpkin in the air, but he realizes that probably he was getting a rear end view, as they were moving away from him.

The ships were plainly at a great height and only slowly lowered toward the horizon as they passed to the southeast on a course that would lead toward Fall River.

Early risers on Beacon avenue saw the two airships, and persons on Broad street saw one, which was too far off to be distinguished as to kind. Both of these parties said the airships were over Riverside when first seen.

It was with great regret that the spectators at the Union station saw the two navigators of the skies disappear, because the manoeuvres were getting interesting. The head navigator was so frisky and appeared so sure of being able to hold his lead, however, that there were no takers for wagers offered on his success.

SEES LAGGARD, PERHAPS.

Patrolman Burgess of the East Providence police, reports that about 7 o'clock yesterday morning he saw what appeared to him to be a hot-air balloon coursing over the town. The difference in time precludes the likelihood that he saw either of the two airships seen by the Providence party, but the fact suggests whether there was not a flight of at least three airships from some common point, all bound in the same direction, and whether the East Providence policeman did not see a large ship in the great race above the clouds.

Patrolman Burgess was on the high land on Taunton avenue when he saw the supposed air balloon and reports that it was sailing across the town to the southward in the direction of Riverside. If this is correct the object seen was pursuing a course approximately the same as the two earlier airships. The patrolman reported the facts at the station, but for obvious reasons did not undertake to arrest the air-tramp, although it was plain to the most casual observer that the traveller was without visible means of support.

As few of the people of Providence are familiar with the rules of the cloudland game, it is not known whether the 7 o'clock birdman fell behind the distance flag. Had it been realized, however, that more than the first two seen were in the race, the party of Union station spectators would not have broken up so soon, for what they saw had all the elements of good sport in it, and they would have remained to cheer the "also fliers" if they had been knowing to the true situation.

FROM BELMONT PARK, PERHAPS.

No flights or races which would take birdmen in a course over this city have been reported, and there is no idea as to what could have been the identity of the early morning flyers. The only aviation meet on the East now is that at Belmont Park. It is thought that some of the birdmen from that place may have soared up across Rhode Island in an unheralded flight.

According to some of those who report having seen the aeroplanes over Riverside yesterday morning, one was larger than the other, and both were apparently biplanes. The sky was very clear at the time, and in spite of the fact that the aeroplanes were a long distance off, they say, it was discernible that there were no dirigibles attached.

1912-1913

1912 November 22 (Fri) Times (London), p. 8.

The Alleged Visit of a Foreign Airship.

Mr. Churchill stated yesterday, in reply to Mr. Joynson-Hicks, that he had caused inquiries to be made and had ascertained that an unknown aircraft was heard over Sheerness about 7 p.m. on the evening of October 14. Flares were lighted at Eastchurch, but the aircraft did not make a landing. There is nothing in the evidence to indicate the nationality of the aircraft.

Our Sheerness Correspondent telegraphs that there is no evidence, as far as can be ascertained, that any person actually saw an airship over Sheerness between half-past 6 and 7 o'clock on the night of October 14, but it is an unquestionable fact that many townspeople on that evening heard a buzzing noise in the air which they took to be the sound of an airship's motor. The general impression at the time was that an aeroplane attached to the Naval Aviation School at Eastchurch was making a night voyage to Sheerness, but inquiries made there revealed the fact that no machines were out that night.

Mr. Joynson-Hicks asked the First Lord of the Admiralty whether we have any airship equivalent in size and power to a Zeppelin or any airship capable of travelling at the rate of 60 miles an hour, and Mr. Churchill replied in the negative.

Wed. Dec. 4, p. 6--Airship Over Portsmouth.

An airship, flying a White Ensign and carrying a crew of four, visited Portsmouth yesterday afternoon. The vessel came from a northerly direction and, after remaining almost stationary over the town for over a quarter of an hour, returned northward.

1913 January 1 (Wed) Le Temps, p. 6.

Espionage in Russia. / St. Petersburg, December 31.

The Novoye Vremia publishes a telegram according to which two aeroplanes have flown over Kamenetz-Prodorsk, and they came from (departed toward) the Austrian border. (L'Information Agency).

Jan. 11 p. 6

Russian Military Precautions. / (Dispatch from Our Special Correspondent.)

The measure taken against aviators forbidding them to cross the over the western frontier under pain of the most severe repression (reprisals) was decided upon following several attempts at reconnaissance of Russian Poland by Austrian aeroplanes.

1913 January 6 (Mon) The Times of London, p. 6.

Unknown Aircraft Over Dover. / Reported Night Visits of a Lighted Machine.

It is reported from Dover that a flying machine, which, it is believed, was an airship, passed over that town before daybreak on Saturday morning. The craft, it is stated, was carrying a light and proceeded from over the sea in a northeasterly direction.

According to a Dover Correspondent, it was impossible to distinguish the shape of the machine, but owing to the fact that it carried a light and the noise of the engines it is believed to have been an airship and not an aeroplane. It came in from over the sea and appeared to be going in a north-easterly direction. The wind at the time was very strong from the westward. John Hobbs, a corporation employee, states that he saw the machine about 5 o'clock. His attention was first attracted by the noise of the motors, which is well known at Dover, and on looking in the direction from which the sound came he saw a light moving at a great speed from the direction of the sea. The throb of the engines as the machine passed over the town was very distinct. The noise of motors was also heard by Mr. Langley, a local tradesman, and Police-constable Pierce.

Jan. 10 p. 5--airmen forbidden to fly into western Russia (were they having an airship scare?)

Jan. 13 p. 5--Joint German-British airship expedition planned, aims to fly across New Guinea.

Jan. 13, p. 6--The Airship Mystery.

There is reason to believe that the mysterious airship which visited Sheerness at night, and more recently Dover, is the Hansa, a Zeppelin airship which is not in possession of the German Government.

1913 January 6 (Mon) (London Daily Express, p. 7.

AIRCRAFT FROM THE SEA. / MYSTERIOUS FLIGHT BEFORE DAYBREAK. /

A mysterious aircraft which was carrying a light flew over Dover in a wind which was blowing half a gale in the early hours of Saturday morning.

It was not sufficiently light at the time to distinguish the shape of the flying machine, but from the noise made by the engines it is believed to have been an airship and not an aeroplane. It came in from the sea and travelled over the town in a north-easterly direction.

John Hobbs, a Dover corporation employee, who was inspecting the roads to see whether they required graveling, saw the aircraft about 5 a.m.

He stated afterwards that his attention was first attracted by the noise of the motors. On looking in the direction whence the sound came he saw a light travelling at a great speed from over the sea.

The noise made by the aircraft in its flight was also heard by Mr. Langley, a local tradesman, and Police Constable Pierce.

The craft must have been fitted with powerful engines to fly in such a wind, and the pilot must have been an intrepid aviator.

1913 January 6 (Mon) London Daily Telegraph, p. 10.

MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP. / FLIGHT OVER DOVER. /

Mystery attaches to the identity of an aircraft which flew over Dover in the early hours of Saturday morning. It was not sufficiently light at the time to distinguish the shape of the flying machine, but owing to the noise of the engines, and the fact that a light was carried, it is believed to have been an airship, and not an aeroplane. It came in from over the sea, and appeared to be going in a north-easterly direction. The wind was blowing nearly half a gale from the westward.

Mr. John Hobbs, a Corporation employe whose duties had taken him out early saw the aircraft about five o'clock. He stated yesterday that his attention was first attracted by the noise of the motors--a well-known sound at Dover, where there has been so much flying. On looking in the direction of the sound he saw a light travelling at a great speed coming from the direction of the sea. The drone of the engines as the machine passed over the town was very distinct.

The noise made by the airship was also heard by Mr. Langley, a local tradesman, and Police-constable Pierce, with whom Mr. Hobbs was afterwards in conversation. It could only have been a powerfully engined aircraft to have flown in such a wind, and daring airmanship was also involved in the flight.

1913 January 7 (Tues) (London Daily Express, p. 5.

Mystery Airships.

Mysterious lights, which are thought to be the lamps of an airship, have been observed over the Bristol Channel in the neighborhood of Nell's (?) Point, Berry, and Lavernock, where there are important forts

These forts form links in the chain of defences of the coal-shipping ports.

The identity of the airship which passed over Dover on Saturday has not been discovered.

Tues. Jan. 21, p. 5--Cardiff Airship Mystery

The latest "mystery airship" has appeared over Cardiff, where it was seen on Friday evening by Capt. Lionel Lindsay, the chief constable of Glamorganshire.

"Although it was dusk, I could see that the airship was much larger than the Willows airship," Capt. Lindsay stated. "It was travelling rapidly and disappeared in the direction of Swansea, leaving in its track a dense volume of smoke.

"I called the attention of a bystander to the mysterious craft, but I have not yet been able to find anyone else who saw it."

1913 January 9 (Th) Frankfurter Zeitung, pt. 1, p. 3.

Aviation. / Firing on German Balloons.

Berlin, 8 January. Firing on German balloons in Russia, over which there has been repeated trouble in recent years, is now officially acknowledged by the Russian government, [a fact] which has caused the Berlin Society for Aviation to warn its members against flying over the border. The Russian government has ordered that aircraft which fly over the border should be fired upon immediately and sharply, if they do not land at once on the sign of a red flag and by night on the signal of a red light. If under such trying conditions as these presented it happens that the German aeronauts, especially free-balloonists, cross the Russian frontier--unless, so it is to be wished, that by diplomatic steps a weakening of this Russian measure is obtained,--it will probably take effect against airships which involuntarily cross the border, if they lose their bearings or through unfavorable weather conditions a legitimate landing is prevented. What the Russian government has accomplished by this stringent measure is evident without further ceremony. In any case German aeronauts have given no cause for it.

1913 January 20 (Mon) Journal des Debats, p. 2.

Aviation Day by Day / Aviation Tragedy. / A Russian Aviator Falls and Is Killed in Galicia.

Berlin, Jan. 18.--According to the Cazette de Breslau, Russian aeroplanes crossed and recrossed the Austrian border several times during the night and were able to inspect, thanks to powerful searchlights, the principal forts in Jaroslaw and its surroundings.

Last night one of these devices fell in the outskirts of the town and the pilot, an officer of the Russian general staff, was killed.

In the wake of frequent nocturnal incursions of this type, the Austro-Hungarian military authorities have given the order to fire cartridges at aeroplanes undertaking these nocturnal flights.

1913 January 21 (Tues) Times of London, p. 10.

An Airship Over Cardiff.

It is stated that on Friday evening last an airship was seen passing over Cardiff in the direction of Swansea.

Captain Lionel Lindsay, Chief Constable of Glamorganshire, says: "At a quarter to 5 I noted the object. It was dusk and foggy so that one could not define it. It was much larger and moved faster than the Willows airship and left in its trail a dense volume of smoke. I called the attention of a bystander to the object, and he agreed that it was some large object. It disappeared quickly."

Jan. 22, p. 10--The Airship at Cardiff.

The report made by Captain Lionel Lindsay, Chief Constable of Glamorganshire, that an airship passed over Cardiff, is confirmed by other eye-witnesses. It is stated that after leaving Cardiff the course of the airship was altered from due west to north-west. It is said to have carried a light and travelled at a considerable speed.

Jan. 22, Engineering Supplement, p. 3--progress in aeronautics, strange.

Jan. 23, p. 8--Army aeroplane flies to London & is seen by several people.

1913 January 22 (Wed) (London) Daily Express, p. 5.

Two Mysterious Aircraft

Mr. H. A. Pertwee, of the engineering firm of Messrs. Pertwee and Beck, Great Yarmouth, says that on Tuesday of last week, about midnight, he heard an aeroplane or airship pass over his house, on the outside of the town, at a tremendous speed. Three or four minutes afterwards he heard it again.

Mr. Beck, Mr. Pertwee's partner, also states that on the day previously in the early morning he heard a similar sound over another part of the town.

Several people at Cardiff confirm the statement of Capt. Lionel Lindsay, the Chief Constable of Glamorganshire, that an airship passed over the city on Friday evening. They state that it was travelling westward, and after passing over Cardiff changed its course to northwest.

1913 January 23 (Th) (London) Daily Express, p. 5.

Welsh Airship Mystery.

Reports have been received from many parts of Wales confirming the statement by Capt. Lionel Lindsay, Chief Constable of Glamorganshire, that an airship passed over Cardiff on Friday night.

The mysterious aircraft has been seen or heard at Merthyr, Aberdare, Neath, and Skitty.

Mr. E. T. Willows, the famous Cardiff airman, suggested yesterday that it might be one of the seven or eight large German aircraft, which are quite capable of making the trip from the German coast to the Bristol Channel.

1913 January 27 (Mon) (London) Daily Express, p. 7.

Airship or Geese? / Midnight Mystery of the East Coast.

Another airship is reported to have been seen to pass over Yarmouth and out to sea.

Samuel Harris, who is employed at the corporation pumping station at the south end of the town, states that a few minutes before midnight on Thursday he saw a long airship, with a cradle attached, travelling at a considerable height.

He states that it passed over his house and proceeded in a south-easterly direction over the sea. He estimates that it was travelling at between 40 and 50 miles an hour, and is perfectly convinced that it was an airship.

He called his daughter out, and she just caught a glimpse of it as it was passing out of sight.

There are some incredulous people who are loth to believe the stories of mysterious night airships, and an ingenious explanation offered is that the noise which has been taken for that of the motor has really been caused by flocks of wild geese passing over Yarmouth.

1913 February 28 (Tues) Berliner Tageblatt, p.

The Explanation of the Phantom Airship (ghost balloon). / Glowing Fire in a Rubber Balloon.

The mysterious airship, which for some time has disquieted anxious public opinion in the island kingdom of Great Britain, has now been found to have a harmless explanation, as we have already reported in the morning paper. It turns out that these supposed balloons, as communicated to us by a scientific source, are nothing more than small rubber balloons, several of which, for purposes of observation to determine wind direction, were released during the night. To be able to observe their flight direction it was necessary to attach a light. A small electric bulb with an attached battery was chosen, which hung inside the balloon. In this manner it takes on the appearance of a large electric light which has been mistaken for the phantom airship. Imagination may then have led fantasy-endowed people to convert some other incidental noises to that of propellers and motors. [Because of the popularity of these supposed balloons with English and French observatories did phantom airships of this and other kinds descend]. Previously the excitement over all this had brought on an English governmental crisis over extraordinary measures to put airship travel and aviation under regulation.

1913 January 28 (Tues) (London) Daily Express, p. 3.

Elusive Aircraft / Mysterious Night Light Over Liverpool.

Five persons report having seen a mysterious aircraft over the north end of Liverpool on Saturday night between seven and half past eight o'clock.

They say it was travelling about 25 miles an hour, and that it carried a very brilliant light.

Two members of the Liverpool Aviation School were out on Saturday afternoon, but did not leave the neighborhood of the shore at Waterloo, and were not in the air at the time stated.

As stated in the "Express" yesterday a Yarmouth man reports that he saw an airship pass over Yarmouth at midnight on Thursday last.

Airships have recently been reported to have been seen or heard at night over:--

Dover, Jan. 4 / Yarmouth, Jan. 15 / Cardiff Bristol Channel and Cardiff, Jan. 18.

The Dover and Cardiff reports, like that from Liverpool, stated that the craft carried a light or lights.

1913 February 28 (Fri) London Times, p. 3.

The Airship Rumours. / Fire Balloon Found in Yorkshire.

While further reports of the appearance of lights in the sky, which are supposed to be those of an airship, continue to be received, it is stated that a fire balloon has been found in the East Riding of Yorkshire, and that this may have accounted for a light seen in the district last week. It is suggested that some one may have been experimenting with fire balloons.

An under-gamekeeper, named Walter Moore, in the employment of Colonel Longdale, of Houghton Hall, two miles south of Market Weighton and about 14 miles from Selby, found a fire balloon on Houghton Moor on Sunday morning. He paid his first visit to Market Weighton for several days on Tuesday, and had heard of the rumours which associated the lights which had been seen in the district with foreign airships. He then stated that the balloon was the size of a 36-gallon cask and just like those sent up at galas. The cover was marked in blue and yellow stripes, and the fuse when found did not appear to have been long extinguished. The balloon was half-deflated and was resting against a small hillock. He completed the process of deflation, and wrapped up the cover and took it home. It is thought that the light of this balloon may have been seen on Friday evening.

An airship is reported to have been seen over Portland Harbour on Wednesday night. A postman declares that he saw the clear outline of the airship, which was carrying a dazzling searchlight. It was also seen by a Government official, and the propeller was plainly heard. A night nurse at a residence at Burcleaves says she watched the lights, which were occasionally extinguished, for some time. A coastguard states he saw lights in the sky near St. Alban's Head, and entered the fact in his log-book.

A police constable stationed at Hucknall, Notts, reported that yesterday morning, about 2 o'clock, he saw an airship with a powerful searchlight travelling from the direction of Nottingham towards Mansfield, and a similar statement has been made by a number of colliers who were leaving work. At Papplewick witnesses state that they watched a light travelling for five minutes, when it disappeared.

The steamer Orcadia on arrival at the Kirkwall yesterday afternoon from the north Isles of Orkney reported that an airship was seen at 5 p.m. off Sanday Isle on Monday night.

Tues Mar. 4, 17. (Adv. for North British and Mercantile)--dirigible words old age, death, fire, burglary, accident--labelled "The Real Peril."

1913 January 28 (Tues) Times of London, p. 13.

Aircraft Over Liverpool.

It is reported from Liverpool that an aircraft, which it was not possible to identify, has been seen over that city. A resident in the Clubmoor district says that on Saturday night between 7 and half-past 8 o'clock an aircraft was seen overhead, travelling at the rate of about 25 miles an hour. It carried a very brilliant light. There were five persons in the house at the time and they watched it for some time.

It is stated at the Liverpool Aviation School that none of the airmen there were out on Saturday night.

Th Feb 20, p. 4--Letters on Aerial Navigation Act.

Defense Against Airships. / Meeting of Grand Council of the Navy League.

Mr. Arnold White called attention to the need of immediate action by the Govt. in the matter of airship defence. Parliament, he said, had lately rushed through both Houses without discussion an Act for the purpose of enabling troops on the coast and elsewhere to fire upon airships in the habit of suspiciously visiting this country at night. They knew from reports of the enormous progress made in the direction of bombs from airships, and seeing that the Navy League desired to maintain the power of the Navy, it came within their duty to urge on the Govt that at all costs this country must catch up other nation which had passed them in this struggle in the air.

1913 January 30 (Th) London Daily Express p. 1.

MYSTERY AIRSHIP. / AGAIN SEEN WITH ITS SEARCHLIGHTS. /

The mystery of the elusive airship grows more mysterious.

It has been seen again, flying by night as usual, and this time on the coast of Mid Wales.

An "Express" correspondent at Aberystwyth states that it was seen by country people approaching the village of Chacery, a few miles south of Aberystwyth, at 8.25 on Saturday night.

The movements of the airship were witnessed by a number of the villagers. At first it headed for Cardigan Bay, but its searchlights, which swept the hills, evidently revealed the nearness of the sea, for it turned south and left in the direction of Carmarthenshire.

This is at least the fifth time this month that the mystery airship has been seen flying by night, yet no one has seen it rise or descend, and no one knows whence it comes or whither it goes.

On Tuesday the "Express" reported that five persons declared they had seen it going over Liverpool "between seven and half past eight" on Saturday night last. Yet at 8.25 it was seen near Aberystwyth! At Liverpool, as in Wales, it carried a light, or lights.

The previous night flights of the mystery airship were reported from--

Dover, January 4.
Yarmouth, January 15.
Bristol Channel and Cardiff, January 18.
Yarmouth, January 23.

The Dover and Cardiff reports both stated that the "fly-by-night" carried a light or lights.

1913 January 30 (Thurs) Times of London, p. 12.

A Mysterious Aircraft.

An aircraft was seen at 8:25 on Saturday night by inhabitants of the village of Chancery, a few miles south of Aberystwyth. It was proceeding toward Cardigan Bay, but its searchlights, which swept the hills, evidently revealed the nearness of the sea, and it turned south and proceeded in the direction of Carmarthenshire.

It will be remembered on Saturday evening last an aircraft, carrying a bright light, was reported to have been seen over Liverpool.

1913 January 31 (Fri) London Daily Express, p. 5

IS IT A GERMAN AIRSHIP? / STRANGE CRAFT SEEN AT NIGHT OVER MANCHESTER.

Is a German airship making flights by night over England? That is a question which is being asked by many people in view of the repeated reports of a mysterious night aircraft from various parts of the country.

The latest appearance of the mystery craft has been noted at Manchester. This was on Monday night. A flight over a village near Aberystwyth on Saturday night was recorded in yesterday's "Express."

A leading resident at Stretford, Manchester, states that he saw an aircraft, which at first looked like a huge ball, passing overhead in a southerly direction about nine o'clock on Monday night. He estimated its height at 700 feet, and saw that it carried a light, which at first seemed yellowish, but afterwards light red.

It seemed to be travelling at the rate of about forty miles an hour, and when over Eccles turned westward in the direction of Liverpool. It was, in the opinion of the onlooker, an aircraft of "huge" size. No sound was heard, but that is attributed to the wind.

It will be recalled that just before the end of last year an airship was said to have been seen at night over Sheerness, and this was afterwards stated to have been the Zeppelin airship Hansa.

Subsequent reports of an airship flying by night have come from--

Dover, January 4.
Yarmouth, January 13.
Bristol Channel and Cardiff, January 18.
Yarmouth, January 23.
Aberystwyth, January 25.
Liverpool, January 25.

Several of the reports stated that the aircraft carried a light or lights, and the chief constable of Glamorganshire said that it left a trail of smoke behind.

The Hansa can travel at the rate of fifty miles an hour, and has a range of 1,000 miles. It is about 500 miles in a straight line from Friedrichshafen, on Lake Constance, where the Zeppelins are kept as a rule, but there are airship garages further north in Germany and the German coast is less than 500 miles from Manchester.

1913 January 31 (Fri) Manchester Guardian, p. 9.

"Russian Aeroplane" Scare in Roumania. (Reuter's Correspondent) / Bucharest, Thursday.

It is reported from Jassy, near the Russian frontier, that at 8 o'clock last evening an aeroplane with a powerful searchlight was observed over the town coming from the direction of Russia. It manoeuvred over the town for ten minutes, afterwards making towards the barracks. Troops were ordered out, and signals were made to the aviator to come down. The command was not obeyed, and two guns were fired at the machine. The aviator immediately put out his lights and disappeared. The affair has caused a great sensation.

March 14 p. 10 German airship to be fitted with searchlight with range of 1,500 meters.

1913 February 3 (Mon) Berliner Tageblatt, p. 11.

The Phantom Airship Over England / (Telegram from our Correspondent.) / London, 3 February.

The mysterious airship, which began its trips over England on January 4, and was seen over Dover, Yarmouth, then the Bristol Canal, Cardiff and still later over Yarmouth, Liverpool and Manchester, will not let the English super-patriots sleep. It was noticed February 1 over Cardiff and yesterday over Croydon. It has not yet been seen so near London, and the excitement is so much the greater. In Croydon, which lies 16 km. south of London, yesterday evening before 9 many people saw a very large airship, from which rays (of light) went out to the right and left and also upwards. The worried people remember that at the end of the previous year an airship was seen over Sheerness, which in their (opinion) was the "Hansa," and the "Hansa" is also generally believed (to be the cause) of the new string of mysterious airships.

1913 February 3 (Mon) London Daily Express, p. 7.

MYSTERIOUS FLY-BY-NIGHT. / STRANGE AIRSHIP SEEN AT CARDIFF AND CROYDON / BRILLIANT LIGHT.

The mysterious airship which has visited many parts of the country this year was seen at Cardiff on Saturday night, and at Croydon last night. This is the first time that it has been reported so near London.

"An airship passed over here at a quarter to nine," said Mr. Trubshaw, of Fairfield-road, East Croydon, to an "Express" representative last night. "It came from the south-east, and moved overhead, disappearing rapidly to the north-west.

"I could not make out the exact shape of the envelope, but it must have been an airship of great size. Rays of light issued from it to the right and left, and also downward. There was quite a considerable volume of light altogether."

The airship was seen by others at Croydon. It was moving with the wind.

Its appearance in the Cardiff district on Saturday night is reported by Captain Lindsay, the Chief Constable, who saw the strange aircraft there on January 18.

A list of the places where the airship has been seen this year is as follows:--

Dover, January 4. / Yarmouth, January 15. / Bristol Channel and Cardiff, January 18. / Yarmouth, January 23. / Aberystwyth, January 25. / Liverpool, January 25. / Manchester, January 27. / Cardiff, February 1. / Croydon, February 2.

An airship which startled people at Sheerness at the end of last year was stated afterwards to be the German airship Hansa.

The Hansa can travel at the rate of fifty miles an hour, and has a range of 1,000 miles. It could cross the North Sea in a few hours with a favourable wind. / ... /

AEROPLANE FIRED AT. / "Express" Correspondent Lemberg, Feb. 1.

An aeroplane, believed to be of Russian origin, was observed last night over the town.

Several shots were directed at it while it was hovering above the fortifications, which were illumined by a strong light from its reflector.

The aeroplane disappeared from view, however, without being hit.

1913 February 3 (Mon) Times of London, p. 6.

Another Mysterious Airship.

Captain Lionel Lindsay, Chief Constable of Glamorgan, reports that an airship was again seen over the district on Saturday night.

Tues. Feb. 4--The Mysterious Airship.

The servants of Colonel Henry Lewis, of Greenmadow, Cardiff, state they saw an airship about 10.45 on Saturday night travelling in a westerly direction, and a constable at Aberavon reported that he observed, at 7.30 on Sunday night, an airship going over Swansea Bay and the Mumbles. Several other people declare they observed the outline of an airship carrying a light.

Thurs. Feb. 6, p. 12--The Thames Aeroplane Accident. ... /

It is again reported that an airship has been seen in South Wales. Numerous observers at Newport, Cardiff, Neath, and intermediate places stated last night that they observed a dirigible, carrying a bright light, pass overhead and some spectators, including a police sergeant, declared that the outline of the vessel was clearly visible. The night was bright with very little wind. The supposed airship took a north-westerly course.

Feb 11, p. 16--Aerial Navigation Act--against aircraft flying over coastal defenses, etc.

p. 14--"prevent mischievous persons, possibly from overseas, from hovering over places where combustibles were stored."

Feb. 13, p. 14--German gov. owns 13 araps, private Germans own 10; British gov 3, private 0.

Death of Scott in Antarctic expedition tragedy.

Revolt in Mexico, prospects of Serbia-Turkish war.

News of flying almost daily.

Feb. 17, p. 6--darkness at noon in London.

1913 February 4 (Tues) London Daily Express, p. 1.

TWO MYSTERY AIRSHIPS.

It seems clear that two mysterious airships were out during the week-end.

Mr. R. Lawrence Thornton, of High Cross, Praefield, Uckfield, writes to the "Express" that he saw an airship pass over his house--which is about eight miles north-east of Leves--about 9.25 p.m. on Sunday.

This is no doubt the airship which, as reported in yesterday's "Express," was seen over Croydon at 8.45 p.m.

The airship which visited the Cardiff district on Saturday night was seen near Tongwynlais by two messengers of Colonel Henry Lewis. They watched it for four or five minutes, and noticed a red light at the rear.

An airship, presumably the same one, was seen at Port Talbot, near Swansea, about 6.30 p.m. on Sunday, by a policeman and several other people. It could not have reached Crovdon by 8.45 p.m.
1913 February 5 (Wed) London Daily Express, p. 1.

AERIAL KIDNAPPERS. / RUSSIAN MAYOR CARRIED OFF BY FOREIGN SPIES. /
"Express" Correspondent, / Vienna, Feb. 1.

The "spy fever," which is again epidemic on both sides of the Austro-Russian frontier, is responsible for several extraordinary incidents.

The mayor of a small town near Plock, in Russian Poland, declares that he was kidnapped by an Austrian air scout several days ago. According to his story, he heard the sound of an aeroplane late at night, and when it descended in a field near the town, he went to capture the occupants, armed only with the insignia of his office.

He alleges that the two airmen turned the tables by binding him hand and foot and lashing him to the body of the aeroplane. They entered their seats, warned their prisoner not to struggle, and resumed their flight.

The terrified mayor was finally brought to earth near the town of Bar, sixty miles away, and before he could give the alarm, his aerial kidnappers vanished.

Frontier guards continually report the passage of Russian aeroplanes at night. An Austrian aeroplane which had to descend in Russia two days ago was confiscated, and the airmen arrested.
1913 February 5 (Thu) Manchester Guardian, p. 9.

THE "MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP" / SEEN IN SOUTH MANCHESTER.

The mysterious light in the sky which has been reported from several parts of the country lately, and which has been generally taken to be the searchlight attached to some form of airship, was observed over the south of Manchester last night. Mr. Marshall, of Dudley Avenue, Whalley Range, explained to a "Manchester Guardian" representative that he and several of his family first noticed the light about 6.30 last evening, and watched it from the garden of his house for a matter of twenty-five minutes. Nothing was visible, he said, except a brilliant light at an altitude which he estimated at about 900 feet. It appeared to be moving over Chorlton. From 6.30 to 6.40 its movement was rapid and in the direction of the north. For the rest of the time that it was under observation its movement was very slow, though still in a northerly direction, and it swayed a little as if the airship supporting it was being buffeted by the wind. During this period the light was switched out twice, reappearing, with equal brilliance, after an interval of about a minute. The light itself was all directed downwards, but its exact angle seemed to be varied several times. When the light disappeared for the last time it had still been moving towards the north.

Many observers at Newport, Cardiff, Neath, and intermediate places report that they saw the craft pass overhead, and some, including a police sergeant, declare that the outline was clearly visible. The night was bright with very little wind. The airship appeared shortly after eight o'clock, and was in view for a considerable time.
1913 February 24 (Mon) London Daily Express, p. 7.

THE ELY-NY-NIGHT. / MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP VISITS YORKSHIRE. /

A number of persons in Yorkshire declare that they saw a large airship on Friday night.

Mr. C.H. March, a Selby solicitor, states that about 9.25 p.m. he was looking out from his residence when he noticed in the direction of Hambleton what he thought at first was a very bright star. The light began to go up and down, and appeared to go out at times.

He kept it under observation for three-quarters of an hour, and came to the definite conclusion that it was a dirigible. It was lost sight of going in the direction of Leeds.

Mr. John Collinwood, an insurance superintendent, says that about 10 p.m. he was on the station platform at Church Fenton with a party of Selby business men when they observed an airship with a strong searchlight playing on the railway lines. After about twenty minutes it left at a high speed, going in a northerly direction, and then they observed a starboard an-port light of red and green.

Mr. J. Cressor, a Harrogate fruit and potato merchant, living at Mical, in the East Riding, about 8 p.m., and the whirr of its engines could be heard.

A man named Sanderson saw the airship over Wide-street, Selby, between 8 and 9 p.m., and he could distinctly hear the whirr of machinery, and noticed that it had a powerful headlight and rearlights. Two Selby ladies saw it over Selby Common between 9 and 10 p.m., and it was then throwing its searchlights on the hedgerows on the common.

Another airship was reported on Friday night near Nuneaton, in Warwickshire, which is about 100 miles by air from Selby.
1913 February 24 (Mon) Daily Telegraph (London), p. 8.

MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIPS. /

Our Selby Correspondent, investigating a statement that on Friday night an airship carrying a powerful flashlight was hovering over the town, says Mr. C.H. March, a prominent Selby solicitor, who said that he was certain from what he saw that a dirigible balloon or airship was over and round the vicinity for forty-five minutes. At 9.25 p.m. outside his house he saw what he thought was a very bright star. He called his wife's attention to it. At the same time the object began to go up and down. Another Selby business man, Mr. John Collinwood, said that he was at Church Fenton Station about ten o'clock on Friday night with a party of Selby gentlemen when they saw an airship with a powerful searchlight coming along the [lines]. At times it would be very high, then it would swoop down almost to touch the housetops. After manoeuvring for about twenty minutes it suddenly turned in a northerly direction. They then saw that it carried both a port and starboard light of red and green.

Our Nuneaton Correspondent states that considerable excitement was occasioned in several parts of north-east Warwickshire, particularly Exhall and Longford, on Friday night about ten o'clock, by the passage of an airship. Policemen and coolies on their way from work sighted the strange craft, which came from the direction of Leicestershire and went towards Birmingham. It was carrying two headlights and one in the rear.
1913 February 25 (Tue) Berliner Tageblatt, p.

Nervousness in Belgium / (Telegram from our Correspondent.) / Brussels 25 February.

In Belgium there is always circulating a mood of uneasiness that friction between the European great powers might endanger the small country. Whenever a rumor circulates in Germany, in Belgium there is fear of an invasion of German troops in particular, so distorted do the facts become (?). In all the newspapers appear--to say the least, provocative--reports of sightings of mysterious maneuvers of French officers on the western border of the country. Mystic airships appear with searchlights, and airplanes soar every night now over the Belgian-French border. On the whole, however, it is only an irresponsible Journalist in Belgium who incites against Germany with (his) very weak arguments. These incitements in Belgium however were hazardous and also (shot down), as in Germany, the screamer-half of the all-German press (!). Very () and rightly is Belgium disturbed for a month and a half by expectations of a general conflict. Even now part of the country stands in a serious domestic crisis. In the coal regions of the Vorinage (?) the retail merchants declared today that no one would sell his wares any more. The crisis in this economically well-favored area of the country today had an effect on all business. One of the great industries (heavy industries) today tried to fend off a strike, though the result of the attempt is very uncertain, and also the king is still now not yet coming out of his reserve (!).

Neue Preussische Zeitung Wed. Feb. 26, pt. 2, p. 2.

--Yet again the Phantom Airship. A PT Telegram reports from London, Feb. 26: The whole evening and morning press fabulater still about the German airship which is asserted to cross over the British Isles. Yesterday newspapers mentioned that it appeared in Portsmouth, Wm Ipswich and Hull. Especially in Hull it was observed by a great number of people. Also in these various places did it operate a searchlight. Also in Paris all the press speaks of the appearance of the phantom airship over England and expresses strong disapproval against Germany.
1913 February 25 (Tue) Berliner Tageblatt, p.

(card 1)

The English Phantom Airship / (Telegram from Our Correspondent) / London 25 February.

The reports of the appearance of the mysterious airship which was seen over Yorkshire and northeast Warwickshire, which in general opinion is German, produces genuine desolation in the conservative press. They do so as if now the whole national defense through a considerable masterful, built-up and always enlarging fleet had become absolutely nought (worthless). This exaggeration condemns itself, but it occupies much space in the press. It cannot be denied that especially the report of a 13-hour trip of the Ersatz Zeppelin I, which for the whole time maintained contact with the radio station, called forth a bewilderment bordering on amazement here. It was wholly unnoticed in any of the press utterances which came through that it always came to (returned to) the same point. These papers, which before had made fun of those afraid of ghosts and seers of ghosts, thus believe that the time has come that it is dangerous for the wellbeing of England to any longer close its eyes to the threatening danger. Everyone is furthermore fully convinced that England is wholly unprepared for an energetic air struggle. The quality of work in the royal airship building division has never been in question, except that up till now the material [they had to work with] was marked by laughably poor quality. [Well as the division has done in the past, so will they be distinguished in the future.] But for the moment, at the present time it so happens that Germany has a splendid fleet of absolutely first-class and admirably equipped war airships, beside which none other is worthy to stand. Concerning what these airships can do, there persists not the slightest doubt and it is known that the most modern of them, as it is here called, none other than the mysterious airship which appears to be seen over England, travels through the air with 27 tons (!). England, so it is understood, is by the sea absolutely separated from attack from the sea, and Germany recognizes England's right to keep a secure force for safety. That was the case, however, until England's maritime superiority lost its whole significance, as superiority in the air [now] brings mastery of the world with it. Superiority in the air rests with Germany, however. The trip of the mysterious airship Sunday evening, a newspaper wrote today, which all the others of the 20 large German airships likewise is ready to make, was a splendidly lucky discovery which gave England the proof that against an aerial attack it is unprotected and helpless. "Dreadnaughts can only fight dreadnaughts and airships can only be fought by airships." It is a pleasing circumstance that the new air laws so quickly went through Parliament quite without discussion and now at least against the taking of information by foreign airships offers a certain guarantee.

The Airship Panic in England / (Telegraph from Our Correspondent.) / London, 25 February.

Anywhere there is a military magazine or a marine depot, on dark nights now airships probably will be seen flying. That is the latest word in the newspapers. Tonight people in Portsmouth on the Gosport side of the harbor saw something high in the air, which in their opinions could only be an airship with a powerful searchlight. What else would move around in the air over the naval barracks? The report is found in the opposition "Pall Mall Gazette," and it is certain that the opposition press will not soon let drop such convenient agitation material against the (in their opinion) careless and negligent government. Naval minister Churchill is in any case of the opinion that something must be done for aerial defense.

1913 February 25 (Tue) London Daily Express, p. 1. (card 1)

NIGHT RAIDS BY AIR. / GERMAN DIRIGIBLES' FLIGHTS OVER ENGLAND. / THE NEW PERIL. / WANTED, £1,000,000 TO MEET IT. /

It is clear now that the fears which caused the Government to rush through both Houses of Parliament a fortnight ago a Bill giving officers power to fire on any mysterious aircraft were absolutely justified.

The Bill was passed with little or no explanation by the Government but it was surmised that the naval and military authorities had received confidential reports which assured them that the airships of foreign powers were making reconnaissances over the fortified positions on our east coast.

The "Express" printed yesterday morning a number of statements showing that a mysterious airship passed over Selby Abbey, Yorkshire, on Friday night. A number of other persons stated yesterday that they saw an airship over the east coast of Yorkshire on Saturday night.

Mr. James Boyce, a member of the Scarborough Town Council, states that on Saturday night he watched a bright light moving over the Suffolk heights to the north of Scarborough. This eventually disappeared in the direction of Cloughton.

Mr. Boyce first saw a bright light coming towards Scarborough, and then it turned slightly round. Later he saw a second light on its side, and also a searchlight glancing downwards.

Mr. Boyce has no doubt that the lights were those of an airship, and several persons have come forward to corroborate his evidence.

Mr. Fred Head, a North-Eastern Railway driver, stated that on Saturday morning an airship with a powerful headlight kept alongside his express from Winstow Gates to Selby until it was lost in the fog between Burton Salmon and Castleford.

FLIGHT OVER NAVAL PORT.

SHEERNESS AIRSHIP MYSTERY EXPLAINED.

A special correspondent of the Manchester Courier gives a vivid description of the voyage of the German airship N L 1 last year, which makes it clear that it was this craft which was seen over Sheerness on October 14 last. It will be remembered that Mr. Churchill stated in the House of Commons that on that date an unknown aircraft passed over Sheerness, and that "it was not one of our ships."

According to the official German report, the MLL after leaving Friedrichshafen shaped a course to the North Sea, and passed over Borkum, Helligoland, and Hamburg, and then returned to Berlin.

"Assuming the Sheerness report to be quite trustworthy," says the "Courier," "it would appear that the German naval airship, after passing over Borkum, did not head at once for Helligoland, but made a digression towards the English coast, and reconnoitered the Fleet base at Sheerness.

"If this be so, it is evident that the vessel travelled at a much greater speed than was officially admitted, for the Sheerness visit would have added at least 600 miles to the total distance.

"Whatever the truth of the matter may be, it is worth noting that no member of the crew of the airship would either deny or affirm that the digression had been made. For six hours during the journey the vessel travelled at an altitude of 5,400 feet. From every point of view this trip is the most remarkable in the annals of aerial navigation up to date."

LONG-DISTANCE JOURNEYS

GREAT POSSIBILITIES OF THE GERMAN AIRSHIPS.

Mr. A. F. Berriman, the technical editor of "Flight," the leading journal devoted to aviation, is convinced of the feasibility of a Continental airship making a successful flight over the shores of Great Britain and returning safely to her moorings.

"Germany," he said to an "Express" representative yesterday, "has specialized in the construction of long-distance airships, and, therefore it is a natural to associate her with the appearance of any mysterious aircraft in this country. Yorkshire is, it is true, about 400 miles from the nearest point in Germany, and a journey from Germany to Yorkshire leaves little margin on the longest record that has been made known to the public; but it is far from certain whether the best work of the German airships really is known abroad.

"The fact, however, that journeys of thirteen hours or so in duration have been accomplished, likewise the fact that the speed of the latest Zeppelins probably exceeds forty-five miles an hour, which would account for a journey of 600 miles or so in the time [?], leaves no question that aerial navigation could be carried out over a considerable portion of England and the return journey made in safety.

"The reported appearances of airships by night is also exactly what one would expect of an airship. One of the great points in favour of the airship for the purpose of military reconnaissance is that it could perform the greater part of its journey under the cover of darkness, so as to be in readiness to make its observations in the early dawn and retreat before it had attracted too much attention.

"Another thought that suggests itself in connection with the report is presented by the coincidence of the passing of the Aerial Navigation Act, which empowers the authorities to fire at such craft, after giving some predetermined signal. It would have been a singularly opportune moment at which to try the efficacy of the new measure in its power to materialise the aerial visitor. It would be an interesting experiment, even if it only precipitated dust.

"According to the Act 'it shall be lawful for the officer to fire at or into such aircraft and to use any and every other means to compel compliance.'

"At the present moment it will be easier to fire at than into, for if we may judge from the general trend of a discussion on p. 5 of the subject recently held by the Aeronautical Society, it would appear that the land artillery expect to experience very considerable difficulty in hitting aircraft, both on account of their lack of practice at high angle elevations and also on account of the high speed of such machines as travel by air."

OFFICIAL RETICENCE. / "Express" Correspondent. / Berlin, Monday, Feb. 24.

All the competent experts in aviation in Germany believe that it is quite impossible for one of the new type Zeppelin airships to fly from Germany to Yorkshire and back, provided the wind is favourable.

Nevertheless, no one will admit that it was a German aircraft that was seen in the neighbourhood of Selby last Friday night. This reticence, of course, is quite in accord with German policy. The greatest secrecy is observed in official circles regarding the movements of the Zeppelin airships, and while all who are acquainted with them admit their possibilities, no one is prepared to give any definite details regarding the actual flights they have accomplished.

It is stated unofficially that the Zeppelin L.2.1 made a flight extending over thirteen hours on Saturday, and was in wireless communication all the time with her headquarters at Carlshagen.

1913 February 25 (Tue) London Daily Telegraph, p. 11. (card 1)

AIRSHIP MYSTERY IN THE EAST OF ENGLAND. / A GERMAN VISITOR? / EYE-WITNESSES' STORIES. /

Remarkable reports are current with regard to the mysterious airships, supposed to have come over from Germany, which are alleged to have been seen by many persons at Selby, Scarborough, and other places in the east of England during the end of last week.

It is at present impossible to establish definitely the truth of these assertions, but, taken in connection with the appearance of an airship at Sheerness last October and the urgency with which the Government only a few days ago hastily rushed a bill through Parliament authorising the authorities to fire upon any dirigibles which omitted to descend when signalled to do so, there certainly seems some cause to think that visitors of this kind are not entirely imaginary. / STATEMENTS AT SELBY. / From Our Own Correspondent. / SELBY, Monday.

The airship mystery was the principal topic at to-day's market. Various farmers declare that they saw it, in Stillingfleet, Escrick, Cliffe, and Barby. A Selby manufacturer says he saw the airship's lights again on Saturday night for under five minutes. The light was very powerful.

A North-Eastern Railway Normanton mail driver named Fred Head reported on Saturday morning that an airship with a powerful headlight kept in front and at the side of the express from Winstow Gates to Selby until it was lost in the fog between Burton Salmon and Castleford.

Mrs. McClure, a dentist's wife, stated that she was driving a lady friend from York, and between Riccall and Selby saw two lights, a powerful head and rear lamp. They disappeared north-west of Selby, and seemed to come from nowhere.

In the course of conversation Captain Lilley, who is in charge of the Government ordnance stores at Barby, said that inquiries made from all the men on duty on Friday night elicited the reply that nothing out of the ordinary was noticed. Sergeant Skyrme, who has twenty years' service, when shown the statement by Captain Lilley, replied, "Well, I was not mistaken." He then related that shortly after nine p.m., from his house at Green-lane, Selby, he saw what he thought at the time was an aeroplane carrying powerful front and rear lights. He concluded at the time that an Army airman was making a flight to York. His statement carries great weight. Searching inquiries are being made by the military authorities to solve the mystery in the district where the lights were seen.

SEEN AT SCARBOROUGH. / From Our Own Correspondent. / SCARBOROUGH, Monday.

Lieutenant James Boyce, a member of the Scarborough Town Council, to-day stated that on Saturday night, about 9.40, he was standing in his garden in Queen's-parade, North Cliff, when he saw a moving light in the sky. It was over Selby village, and towards Suffolk Heights, and finally vanished in the direction of Cloughton. When he first saw the airship--and he was most emphatically of the belief that the light was on an airship--there was one light only, but afterwards--he had the object under observation altogether about a quarter of an hour--two were visible. The lights were of a glowing character, and not of the diamond type of starlight.

Lieutenant Boyce drew the attention of one of his servants to the light, and she, too, is most emphatic in corroboration of her employer's statement. Whilst in his bed-room later Lieutenant Boyce heard a whirring noise. It was not that of a passing motor-car, but proceeded from the air.

This constitutes the third time this month that a absolutely credible witnesses have justified to the presence in the air in the immediate vicinity of Scarborough at night of an airship. The previous reports were to the effect that a searchlight had been manipulated on the vessel. As is well known, Scarborough is regarded as a most important strategical point, and on the borough boundary, near the racecourse, the Admiralty have a wireless telegraph station. /

AIRSHIP'S POSSIBLE ROUTE. /

According to reports from various sources an airship was seen on Friday night passing over Selby in the West Riding of Yorkshire, some forty-five miles inland from Grimsby. The time at which the craft was noticed appears to have been between 9.15 and 9.25 a.m., and the vessel seems to have cruised in the air for about half an hour before disappearing. About ten o'clock, according to other reports, an airship was noticed in north-east Warwickshire, particularly at Exhall and Longfords. She came, it is said, from the direction of Leicester, and went towards Birmingham. Bridlington is another town from which the airship was seen.

Of course, in the absence of trustworthy information as to the time of the various observations, it is practically impossible to reconstruct the route taken by the mysterious aircraft. One indication is the time reported from Selby and that from Exhall, and another is the direction from Leicester to Birmingham. A presumable route might, therefore, be Bridlington, Selby, Leicester, Birmingham. From Bridlington to Selby is a distance of about forty miles as the crow flies; it is about eighty miles from Selby to Leicester, and thirty from Leicester to Birmingham, in which direction the airship is reported to have been heading. This makes a total distance of about 150 miles, which is easily within the capacity of a powerful airship carrying a plentiful supply of fuel. /

JOURNEY TO SHEERNESS. /

The Manchester Courier yesterday published an article giving what it states are the facts about the visit of a German airship to Sheerness. It says:

On Oct. 13 last year the ML 1 left the shed where it had been built for acceptance trials. The vessel was expected back at Friedrichshafen the same day. What actually happened, however, was that the airship rose from Friedrichshafen, on the borders of Switzerland, and did not descend before the aerodrome at Johannisthal, near Berlin, was reached on the following day.

According to the official version the airship, after leaving Friedrichshafen, shaped a course to the North Sea, which was reached the same evening (Oct. 13), and passed over Borkum, then turned north, and held on in this direction till the lights of Heligoland were sighted. Again the course was changed, and this time towards Schleswig-Holstein, and the vessel soon reached the Baltic Sea, passing over the war harbour of Kiel at dawn on Oct. 14. From there she turned to the south-west and came in sight of Hamburg, performed some evolutions at an immense height for the edification of early risers, and finally steered for Berlin, which was passed shortly before three p.m. The landing was made at Johannisthal a few minutes after three o'clock, after an uninterrupted flight of thirty-two hours, during which a distance of 1,065 miles was covered.

By a curious coincidence, however, some people at Sheerness testified that on the night of Oct. 13 they heard the engines of an unknown airship above the harbour. This circumstance was reported on the following morning, at which time no one in England knew anything of the German vessel's remarkable trial trip.

Assuming the Sheerness report to be quite trustworthy, it would appear that the German naval airship, after passing over Borkum, did not head at once for Heligoland, but made a digression towards the English coast, and reconnoitered the fleet base at Sheerness. If this be so, it is evident that the vessel travelled at a much greater speed than was officially admitted, for the Sheerness visit would have added at least 600 miles to the total distance. Whatever the truth of the matter may be, it is worth noting that no member of the crew of the airship would either deny or affirm that the digression had been made.

From every point of view this trip is the most remarkable in the annals of aerial navigation up to date. The efficiency of the three motors was demonstrated by the fact that they ran at high speed for thirty-two hours on and without a moment's pause or hitch. The normal fuel capacity of the x naval airship supplies for a sustained flight of 1,000 miles.

1913 February 25 (Tues) Die Neue Preussische Zeitung, pt. 2, p. 2.

Belgium--The Phantom Airship in Belgium. A Pt.-Telegram reports from Brussels, 25 Feb.: Yesterday in the area of Poperinghe, as the paper reports from there, there has been observed a large airship which seemed to come from Germany. The population was very stirred up over the visit.

England.--The Phantom Airship. The "Manchester Courier" reports the rumor that it was really a German Zeppelin which this time undertakes nightly excursions over the Arsenal. Lately the British Admiralty has been occupied with information which proves that a German manned balloon nightly flies over the North Sea, crosses over Britain and returns to Germany. It is also established that Friday night an airship was seen in Warwick and Yorkshire. Since this airship had red and green lights it is believed, according to an H-B report, that it (was) British.

1913 February 25 (Wed) Berliner Tageblatt, p.

The Airship Psychosis in England. / (Telegram from our Correspondent.) / London, 25 Feb.

To the conservative press now comes irrefutable evidence for the presence of foreign airships in England at Hull. An airship was seen over the city for an hour yesterday evening, after previously being observed over Hornsea. Great excitement reigned in Hornsea, reported the correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Co., and great crowds gathered in the center of the city in order to observe the mysterious airship, which after about an hour disappeared in a westerly direction. In Hornsea the aerial watch also saw the airship, which, as was immediately explained to notables among Hornsea's city officials, showed a red and a white light. Another man from Hornsea explained with precision that the airship had come from the North Sea and seemed to fly quickly westward. From Ipswich in Suffolk it is now reported also that a (fellow-visionary) saw an airship on Monday evening which operated a powerful searchlight in methodical exercises. For everyone it is determined that the airship which has carried out all these flights is the new Zeppelin. That this airship must first carry out a day-long flight through Germany does not trouble the purpose of the excited English conservative patriots. They want to have their air fleet, and are prepared to (assent and complain) a million pounds out of the pocket of the Government for it (!), which is necessary because in this, England's fate depends (!). Very reasonably said a department man (!) to a Reuters representative: "The whole mysterious airship rumor is based in the head and in the end (on) what people want to see. A Zeppelin, which manages a night trip to England, would under no circumstances show a light. The next hindrance with which it would ~~xxx~~ have to deal is the moon. Light in the cabin is all that is needed in the ship, and it can be so masked that it cannot be seen from the ~~xxx~~ ground." In no case, either, as the nervous super-patriots maintain, can the airship be English, since the "Delta" is in the airship hangar in the London Olympia (!) and "Beta" and "Gamma" are being repaired.

1913 February 26 (Wed) London Daily Express, p. 1. (Card 1)

WHOSE IS THE AIRSHIP? / MYSTERIOUS CRAFT HOVERS OVER HULL FOR AN HOUR. / SEEN BY HUNDREDS / DEFENCE COMMITTEE AND THE PROBLEM.

The strongest and most irrefutable evidence of the presence of mysterious airships in this country comes from Hull, where a strange craft hovered over the city for about an hour last night.

That this airship is the property of some Continental Power is certain. An official statement issued by the War Office yesterday affirms that of the three Army airships, the Delta is at the Aero Exhibition, while the Gamma and the Beta are being overhauled at the Royal Aircraft's factory.

Last night's mysterious visitor to Hull was first seen over the town of Hornsea, a little watering-place between Hull and Bridlington. The coastguards at Hornsea first saw a bright light about eight o'clock. It appeared to be travelling in a westerly direction. They kept it under observation through their glasses, and have reported the occurrence to the Admiralty.

OUTLINES PLAINLY SEEN.

Mr. Jameson Falconer, one of the principal residents of Hornsea, also watched it through his glasses, and says he succeeded in making out the outlines of an airship, which was carrying two lights--one white and the other red.

Another resident of Hornsea says that the craft came from the direction of the North Sea, and travelled westwards.

A little later the airship appeared over the city of Hull. Crowds of people assembled in the centre of the city and outside the Paragon Station, and watched with keenest interest the movements of the mysterious craft for upwards of an hour, when it disappeared in a westerly direction.

The airship's x lights were easily distinguishable. At times they appeared to be quite bright, while occasionally a patch of red was visible. The ship altered her course frequently, while at times she appeared to remain stationary.

The lights were first visible coming from the eastwards about 8.30 and it was an hour later before they disappeared from view.

VISIT TO NAVAL PORT.

A number of people in Portsmouth are positive that they saw a mysterious airship pass over Gosport on Monday night.

Soon after eight o'clock a very bright light was noticed in the sky in the direction of Fareham. The light approached towards Forton Barracks, where the Royal Marine Light Infantry is stationed.

Scores of people claim to have seen the light, and to have noticed it hovering over the neighbourhood of St. John's Church and Forton Barracks for about an hour.

The light was seen to turn in various directions and to move about over a considerable area.

Finally it disappeared, after making an apparently straight course in the direction of Hardway and Portsdown Hill.

Mr. Edgar Moore, of Henniker-road, Ipswich, claims to have seen the searchlight of an airship passing over Ipswich in a south-westerly direction on Monday night.

GREAT BRITAIN'S TASK.

These appearances have one pregnant lesson for the British people--and for the naval and military authorities.

That lesson is the paramount necessity for Great Britain to bring her aerial fleet up to the standard set by other countries.

That this subject is engaging the attention of not only the greatest aviation experts of the country but the naval and military authorities as well is certain. The vital problem is whether the Government will vote enough money to give us an ample margin of security. Nothing less than a vote of £1,000,000 will suffice.

At this season of the year the Committee of Imperial Defence reviews all that the foregoing twelve months has revealed concerning the progress of military science in other countries, and the ever-changing possibility or likelihood of an invasion of Britain.

The "Express" understands that the mysterious appearance of an airship at Selby, in South Yorkshire, on Friday night last is regarded by the authorities as being distinctly a factor for their consideration. The theory held by highly placed experts--in view of the official denials made in Germany concerning such a flight by a German "sewice" dirigible, and more particularly in view of the fact that the movements of such vessels are closely watched by unofficial observers--is that the dirigible in question was one of the privately owned airships of which Germany boasts ten or a dozen.

Such a flight would have the desired effect of stimulating enthusiasm in Germany for dirigibles without committing the authorities in any way--although, unofficially, the private German dirigibles are regarded as a reserve which the army would not hesitate to use in war time.

However, the lesson of the Yorkshire dirigible's visit--whatever its ownership--has not been lost on the Committee of Imperial Defence. All that now remains is for the public to show sufficient enthusiasm to justify the authorities in making that increase in Britain's aerial service which they are believed to desire.

This point is clearly dealt with in an article printed on Page 4, by Mr. G. Maxxi Holt Thomas.

As will be seen, Mr. Holt Thomas considers even £1,000,000 too little for Britain's present need.

GERMANY'S ALIBI.
ALL KNOWLEDGE DENIED OF THE YORKSHIRE MYSTERY.
Berlin, Tuesday, Feb. 25.

German officials and German newspapers are very sarcastic about the appearance of an airship over Yorkshire on Friday night and the suggestion that it was a German craft.

It is pointed out that out of the four Zeppelin airships which might conceivably attempt a winter trip to England and back, the naval airship is at Johannistal, the Hansa is at Potsdam, the Victoria Louise is at Frankfurt, and the new military Zeppelin is at Oos, near Baden-Baden.

None of them could have reached the Yorkshire coast by nine of Friday evening /p.5/ without a long daylight flight across Ceramany and Holland, during which observation would have been inevitable.

Even if the ship had flown at its utmost height of 10,000 feet it would not have been invisible, as the consequent loss of gas would have so shortened the radius of action that a 900 or 1,000 mile flight to England and back, which at present is about the theoretical maximum for any Zeppelin, would have been impossible.

The particular ship which seems to be suspected in England, the new army Zeppelin, would have had to start from Oos about ten in the morning.

Allowing that it could average fifty miles an hour all the way, and flew as the crow flies, this airship, which started on a twelve-hour night flight on Saturday evening, flying as far as Frankfurt, where it turned back, would obviously not have been ready for such a performance if it had returned from a twenty-four-hour trip to Selby and back on the same morning.

A competent critic with whom Reuter's correspondent talked this morning pointed out that the evidence for the existence of a phantom airship depended on head or tail lights, which are alleged to have been seen by a number of persons.

The Zeppelin making a night cruise over England would not carry lights, as there is nothing nearer than the moon to come into collision with. A head and tail light are useless to those on board, lights in the cabins being all that is needed for navigating the ship, and they can be masked and cannot be seen from below.--Reuter.

1913 February 26 (Wed) Daily Telegraph (London), p. 11. (card 1)

AIRSHIP MYSTERY. /FRESH APPEARANCES REPORTED. / VESSEL SEEN AT HULL. / WATCHED BY CROWDS. / INCIDENT AT PORTSMOUTH /

Telephoning at 11 o'clock last night the Hull correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Company states:

"Great excitement was caused here this evening by the appearance over the city of the mysterious airship previously reported as having been seen over Hornsea. Crowds of people assembled in the centre of the city and outside the Paragon station and watched with the keenest interest the movements of the mysterious craft for upwards of an hour, when it disappeared in a westerly direction.

"The airship's lights were easily distinguishable. At times they appeared to be quite bright, while occasionally a patch of red was visible. The ship altered her course frequently, while at times she appeared to remain stationary. The lights were first visible coming from the eastwards, about 8.30, and it was quite an hour later before they disappeared from view.

"Late to-night I succeeded in getting into telephonic communication with Hornsea, a quaint little watering place on the East Coast, between Hull and Bridlington, and ascertained that coastguards there had had the light of the airship under close observation for an hour or so.

"Mr. Falconer Jameson, one of the principal residents of Hornsea, informed me that on seeing the light he followed it with his glasses, and succeeded in making out the body of an airship of cone shape. The craft, so far as he could observe, was carrying two lights. The principal light was white in colour, while the other was red.

"Another resident stated that the airship came from the direction of the North Sea, and proceeded westwards at a good pace.

"The Admiralty have been advised."

SEEN AT PORTSMOUTH. / From Our Own Correspondent. /PORTSMOUTH, Tuesday

The appearance of a light from what was evidently an airship floating over Portsmouth Harbour, soon after eight o'clock on Monday evening, occasioned a good deal of excitement, both at Portsmouth and Gosport. The mysterious stranger was observed coming from the south-west. It moved over the dockyard and harbour, and then towards the Royal Marine Light Infantry Barracks, passing over the oil fuel depot tanks.

That it was an airship was deduced from the fact that the light turned in various directions, and was at times obscured by what was concluded to be the large balloon body of a dirigible. It eventually disappeared in a northern direction.

The naval authorities have had no report of any dirigible or other form of aircraft having been in the vicinity of Portsmouth at the time in question.

A VISIT TO IPSWICH /

An Ipswich telegram says: Mr. Edgar Moore, of Highfield, Henniex-road, Ipswich, reported yesterday that on Monday evening, at about half-past nine, he saw an airship manoeuvring to the west of Ipswich. He stated that it carried a powerful searchlight, and after moving about in a methodical manner it disappeared at a great speed in a south-westerly direction. Mr. Moore, who lives on the outskirts of the town, declares that several persons saw the aircraft at the same time.

THE SELBY EPISODE. /

Our Selby correspondent writes: After a search of three days, and interviewing hundreds of people, I have been able to run down an eye-witness who described the shape of the airship seen near Selby on Friday night. Mr. George Daniels, a grocer, of Riccall, some five miles from Selby, stated that between nine and ten o'clock on Friday night, he was at the village reading-room when a noise like that made by an aeroplane engine was heard. On the party going out they saw a bright light approaching, and as the airship was travelling fast it was soon right over them. The night was very clear. Mr. Daniels and the others could easily discern the shape of the craft, which he described as a long cigar-shaped envelope. The airship was using a searchlight, which it flashed in several directions. It also carried a small rear light.

Mr. Daniels was positive about the shape of the envelope, which, he says, was of dark material. The airship was going in the direction of Market Weighton and at a great rate. /

BRITISH AIRSHIPS IDLE. /

The weekly report issued from the War Office of the work of the Royal Flying Corps states that last week, "owing to Delta being at the Aero Exhibition, and to Gamma and Beta being in the Royal Aircraft Factory for inspection and overhaul, no airship ascents have been made this week," i.e., the week which ended on Feb. 23. / GERMAN RIDICULE. / From Our Own Correspondent. / BERLIN, Tuesday.

In the Press here ridicule is cast upon the suggestion that the mysterious airship reported to have been seen at various places in England came from Germany. The Tägliche Rundschau states that the company which runs the Zeppelin excursion airships once contemplated making a surprise visit to England with one of them, but eventually abandoned the project at the wish of the Ministry of Marine, "as such a joke might have had a bad end."

To-day the Hansa and the naval Zeppelin manoeuvred in the neighbourhood of Berlin for the purpose of exchanging messages by wireless telegraphy.

1913 February 26 (Wed) London Times, p. 8. (card 1)

The Reported Visits of Airships. / Capabilities of German Vessels. / (From Our Own Correspondent.) / Berlin, Feb. 25.

Most of the London correspondents of German newspapers continue to make merry over the reports that airships have been seen at night in various parts of England. Their remarks are of no interest as regards the explanation of these mysterious apparitions or as regards the need for aerial defence, but it is probably true that the capabilities of Germany's existing airship fleet are exaggerated in many quarters in England. A secret cruise from any of the places where the German airships are stationed to the English coast--to say nothing of an additional inland voyage--and back to Germany is at the present time extraordinarily improbable. There are, apparently, only three Zeppelin airships which could perform the voyage at all from Berlin or from Baden-Baden and back, and none of them could perform it between sunset and sunrise. Even if secrecy could be guaranteed on this side of the North Sea--which is improbable in peace time--the airship would be sighted either in England or at sea. Even if such an adventure were practicable, it would seem to be extraordinarily unattractive and to involve many risks without offering any gains. It is pretty certain that before, if ever, a German airship visits Yorkshire in the dead of night and the authorities publish either no reports or false reports about its movements there will have been a great deal more cautious practice in harmless overseas cruises.

As regards the new military Zeppelin called Ersatz ZI, which is at present undergoing trials, especially of her new wireless telegraphy apparatus, there is no reason to doubt that during the whole of Saturday night she was cruising between Baden Baden, Frankfurt-on-Main, and Karlsruhe, being all the time in wireless communication with Karlsruhe. Nor is there any reason to suppose that either the Hansa or the new naval airship has been far away from Berlin. These two ships made flights here this afternoon, and exchanged wireless messages with one another and with the Johannistal station.

Bright Lights in the Air.

It is reported from several quarters that bright lights, presumed to be those of airships, were seen in the air on Monday night and last night.

On Monday night, about 8 o'clock, a bright light was seen moving over Gosport. Although no sound of machinery was heard and nothing seen of the envelope of the vessel it is believed that the light was that of an airship which remained at a great height.

Mr. Edgar Moore, who lives in the western part of Ipswich, declared yesterday that with several friends on Monday evening he saw an airship manoeuvring to the west of town. The airship had a large searchlight, and after various manoeuvres had been executed the vessel proceeded in a southwesterly direction. He added that it was at too great a height for its outline to be clearly seen.

It is also stated that an airship, with a bright light, was seen by the coastguard over Hornsea between eight and half past last night.

sailing in a westerly direction.

There was considerable excitement at Hull last night owing to the appearance over the city of what was believed to be the airship which had previously been seen over Hornsea. Crowds of people assembled in the center of the city and outside the Paragon Station and watched the movements of the craft for over an hour, when it disappeared in a westerly direction. The lights of the vessel were easily distinguishable. At times they appeared to be quite bright, while occasionally a patch of red was visible.

1913 February 26 (Wed) Manchester Guardian, p. 6. (card 1)

THE "GERMAN AIRSHIP" SCARE / Incredulity in Berlin / "John Bull's Powers of Seeing Visions" / ~~XXXXXX~~

The accounts of the latest German airship scare in England are being received in Berlin with profound amusement, although the German newspapers are too much used to stories of phantom airships showing green and [red] lights over English cities to comment on the subject beyond sarcastic headings or a [brief] tribute to John Bull's long-unsuspected powers of seeing visions. It is pointed out (says Reuter's correspondent) that any out of the four Zeppelin airships which might conceivably attempt a winter trip to England and back the naval airship is at Johannisthal, the Hansa is at Potsdam, the Viktoria Luise is at Frankfurt, and the new military Zeppelin is at Oos, near Baden-Baden. None of them could have reached the Yorkshire coast by nine on Friday evening without a long daylight flight across Germany and Holland, during which observation would have been inevitable. Even if the ship had flown at its utmost height of 3,000 metres (nearly 10,000 feet) it would not have been invisible and the consequent loss of gas would have so shortened its radius of action that a [900] or 1,000 mile flight to England and back which at present is about the theoretical maximum for any Zeppelin, would have been impossible. The particular ship which seems to be suspected in England, the new Army Zeppelin, would have had to start from Oos about ten in the morning, admitting that it could average fifty miles an hour all the way and flew as the crow flies. This ship which started on a twelve-hour night flight on Saturday evening, flying as far as Frankfurt, where it turned back, would obviously not have been ready for such a performance as it had returned from a twenty-four-hour trip to Selby and back on the same morning.

A competent critic with whom Reuter's correspondent conversed yesterday morning pointed out that the evidence for the existence of a phantom airship depended on the head or tail lights which are alleged to have been seen by a number of persons. The Zeppelin making an illicit night cruise over England would not carry lights, as there is nothing nearer than the moon to collide with. A head and tail light are useless to those aboard, lights in the cabins being all that is needed for navigating the ship, and they can be masked so that they cannot be seen from below.

MORE MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP REPORTS.

Mr. Edgar Moore, of Henniker Road, [Ipswich], reported yesterday that on Monday evening at about half-past nine he saw an airship manoeuvring to the west of Ipswich. It carried a powerful searchlight, and after moving about in a methodical manner it disappeared at a great speed in a south-westerly direction. Mr. Moore, who lives on the outskirts of the town, declares that several persons saw the aircraft at the same time.

It is also reported that an airship carrying a powerful light appeared on the Gosport side of Portsmouth Harbour on Monday night. It could not be easily distinguished, nor could its machinery be heard, as it was high in the air, but policemen and others declare that the light manoeuvred about so that they had no doubt about the presence of an airship. It came from the north, and after hovering above [about] the Marine Barracks returned in the direction it came.

A LIGHT OVER HULL.

A light thought to be that of an airship is reported to have been clearly observable over Hull last night. Its movements were followed by ~~xx~~ for half an hour by pedestrians in the centre of the city. The light was also seen by coastguards and others at Hornsea.

1913 February 27 (Th) Berliner Tageblatt, p. (card 1)

The Consequences of the English Phantom Airship / A Propaganda Campaign over the Mystery of the Air--"A Million Pounds for Air Weapons." / (Telegram from Our Correspondent.) / London, 27 February.

The mystery of the airship, which for some days past has by night crossed over various parts of English territory, has not been solved. The eyewitness accounts have always been full of contradictions, and when newspapers asked astronomers to explain, they could not agree whether it was an airship or else a star which was seen. People should only be a little better observers. Every time this airship, which came from Germany and went back there, disappeared in the east, while Venus moved to the west. Psychologists also have been asked by the newspapers about the exciting mystery, and they have enlarged themselves very wisely on self-deception and the like. The Berlin correspondent of the "Times" finds the whole story very unfortunate and naturally charges the German press [to declare] that it is a fully harmless thing or (crass) senselessness built up by a few people in a state of panic or nervousness in England. The man has read a small part of the German press, or none at all of the English, or else he would know where the excitement is; but then it is known that in general the man has not taken the truth far enough. Since the observations were made at places seemingly far removed from one another at the same time, the "Daily Telegraph" came to the conclusion, after an investigation into the airship crisis, that perhaps now it is again as it was two years ago, more people have made an attempt to interest the ~~press~~ public in airship travel by sending up lighted models. The next to last airship panic [came down to this.] Major Sykes of the Royal Flying Corps took moreover the present excitement as the starting-point for a meeting on military airship travel in the Aeronautical Society which he addressed yesterday evening. He declared: "Great Britain is no longer an island. Since Nelson defeated the united fleet at Trafalgar, Great Britain has held the mastery of the sea in hand and an invasion was always improbable, if not even impossible. But the airplane has destroyed the inviolability of the English air." In the near future Sykes stated, there was already the [Bright] airplanes which make 192 mph. He [showed] a war plane which carries the pilot and his copilot, also a bombardier and observer, and makes 160 mph. He showed a troop transport plane which carries troops, provisions and munitions and five times a day travels back and forth over a stretch of 50 km. "The nation," said Sykes, "which commands the air at the beginning of a war wins the struggle. If a nation which rules the air begins a war against England, [England] can never hope to make good any harm against it [?]. To strike the first blow, by him which has mounted into the air, and who has won unconditional mastery of the air, will probably be attempted before the first ground operations begin. The warplanes naturally have [greater] hardships to suffer in the whole matter. In France the whole nation is interested in it, in England it is no different. Without interest of the public nothing can be done. With the support of the public will England gain first place in the air as it now has on the sea." So says Major Sykes. [He has given something to think about.] The performance of English fliers is at present poor, as was seen in the Great Aviation contest which the "Daily Mail" sponsored. Sir John French, the chief of the general staff, therefore said at the conclusion of Sykes' ~~address~~ address that it is undeniably necessary for general staff officers to be instructed in aviation, and the general staff will seriously concern itself with this question. In the "Daily Express" is made in this connection a motion for establishment of a sum of at least 20 million marks to [support] military aviation. 1913 February 27 (Th) Journal des Debats, p. 2.

Holland. / Rumors of German Espionage.

The Journal des Debats has published in due course the news that the German steam yacht Porthos, after having stayed here and there in Dutch waters... has been followed to Tuident [?] by the Dutch torpedo boat GIII....

About the same time it was reported in the newspapers of Bois-la-Duc that there passed over the Noord-Brabant six dirigibles, all carrying the German flag and ascending in passing. This incident has produced a definite commotion and confirmed the suspicions of espionage which [have come to light.]

(Berlin newspapers published a letter from the captain of the Porthos saying he wasn't spying, but was blown off course while on a pleasure cruise.)

1913 February 27 (Th) London Daily Express, p. 1.

INVASION BY AEROPLANE. / THE STRANGE LIGHTS ON THE EAST COAST.... NIGHT LIGHTS OF THE AIR. / MORE EVIDENCE IN DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE COUNTRY.

The presence of a mysterious airship in the south of Yorkshire has set people all over the country seeing serial night visitations.

Mrs. Case, the wife of a caretaker at Raxham Portishead, near Bristol, says she saw an airship on Tuesday night, which carried a strong blue light.

Several people in Plymouth declare they distinctly saw the outline of a great shadowy shape circling over the town in the dusk on Tuesday night.

The crew of a steam trawler off Grimsby say they saw an airship on Tuesday night. Several people in the Norfolk watering-place of Hunstanton also believe they saw one.

The interesting theory is put forward that the lights which so many people claim to have seen were those shown by airships owned by private firms in Germany, and that the lights were shown purposely to attract attention.

When attention was publicly called to the lights the pilots and owners of the vessels would know the towns over which they passed and which they would, of course, have been unable to distinguish in the darkness.

"MONSTROUS SUGGESTION." / Cologne, Wednesday, Feb. 26.

In a long telegram to the "Koelnische Zeitung" its Berlin correspondent points out that the fastest German airship, the L.I., would take twelve hours to get first from Friedrichshafen to the North Sea coast.

In any case, he adds, care would be taken to show no lights if such a secret visit were undertaken.

The telegram concludes with an expression of regret that neither English experts nor the British government, who must be aware of the facts, have yet attempted to rebut such a monstrous suggestion as that the mysterious visitors are German craft.--Reuter.

1913 February 27 (Th) Daily Telegraph (London), p. 12. (card 1)

AIRSHIP MYSTERY. / MORE "APPARITIONS." / NO DEFINITE EVIDENCE. /

The mystery of the supposed airships which have appeared at various places in Yorkshire and at Portsmouth and Ipswich is no nearer solution. That something which a large number of people took to be a dirigible was seen to manoeuvre over Hull on Tuesday evening about half-past eight to half-past nine there seems no reason to doubt. Shortly before that the craft had been reported over Hornsea, a village between Bridlington and Hull, about fifteen miles from the latter port, and it is interesting to note that one observer asserts that he actually made out its cone-shaped body.

We now hear from a correspondent at Hunstanton, in Norfolk, that on Tuesday night, about 8.30, a postman while walking from Old Hunstanton "saw three bright lights approaching rapidly from the eastward at a considerable height." It is said that his statement "is verified by numerous reliable residents." The body of an airship was not discernible, but the lights, "which attracted considerable attention," remained in view for some thirty minutes hovering over the town. They finally disappeared seaward in a north-westerly direction. Similar lights, it is added, were observed on Wednesday and Friday last.

Now it is quite obvious that if the apparition seen at Hull and Hunstanton were really aircraft they could not be one and the same vessel. Even dirigibles, speedy as they may be, cannot be in two places at once, and as Hull and Hunstanton are seventy miles apart as the crow flies, it is tolerably clear that the object, whatever it was, could not have been over both towns at the same hour, namely 8.30 p.m.

Much the same remarks apply to the airships which are alleged to have been seen over Portsmouth and Ipswich "soon after eight o'clock" and "about half-past nine" respectively on Monday evening. The distance between the two towns is some 180 miles, and no airship yet produced could travel from one place to the other in an hour and a half or less. It is doubtful whether the fastest aeroplane in existence could do it, even under the most favourable conditions.

There is, in fact, no trustworthy evidence to hand that these objects were airships at all. In aviation circles it is suggested that some persons are engaged in an attempt to interest the public in the aeronautical problem by sending up illuminated kites or model aircraft which have been mistaken by persons with vivid imaginations for the real thing. As will be remembered, the airship "scare" engineered a year or two ago was effected in this manner. / APPEARANCE AT GRIMSBY. / From Our Own Correspondent. / GRIMSBY, Wednesday Night.

Very strong evidence is adduced that the Grimsby district was visited on Tuesday night by the mysterious airship. It was first seen at Waltham, near Grimsby, where the Government have an important wireless station. It was noticed about nine o'clock, and came out of the north-east.

Mr. Sid Hartland, a local gardener, states that he saw the airship approach until it seemed to be over the centre of Waltham, and a search light was brought into operation. Seen through powerful night-glasses the searchlight appeared to have a red centre, with a white rim. There is no regular searchlight in the district.

The crew of the Grimsby trawler Bermuda state that they saw a moving light whilst coming up the Humber. It was at a great altitude when first seen, but later on descended some distance, and then went up again. It hovered above the pier for a few minutes, and afterwards disappeared in the direction of the Yorkshire coast. There may be no connection between this and the light near the Grimsby Pier, but it is significant that at present a wireless station is in course of erection there for the Admiralty. / OTHER REPORTS. /

Mr. James Case, caretaker of the recently dismantled battery at [Portishead], on the Somerset coast, yesterday reported to the military authorities at Bristol that whilst in his absence his wife was locking the gates on Tuesday night, at about eight o'clock, she was startled by a strong blueish light which she believed came from an airship. The light travelled slowly in a westerly direction. No Bristol aeroplane was flying at the time. /

Writing under date Feb. 25, from Laverton, near Broadway, Worcestershire, a Correspondent says: At 8.30 last (Monday) night a farmer's son and daughter were driving home from Broadway in this westerly direction when they saw what was evidently an airship flying towards them. It carried a brilliant light, and appeared to be travelling very rapidly. It came from the direction of the Bristol Channel, circled over Broadway, and passed them again, flying rather to the north-west, possibly to Gloucester; so it skirted the Vale of Evesham. You may hear of this x from other correspondents, and this will, perhaps, help to confirm their statements. / ARMY AIRCRAFT. / ...

VESSLS NOT GERMAN. / COLOGNE, Wednesday. In a long telegram to the Kölnische Zeitung its Berlin correspondent refutes the inferences of some of the English papers that the mysterious airships alleged to have been seen manoeuvring over various English towns at night are German craft. He points out that the whereabouts of all German airships is widely known, that their movements are reported in the Press, and that it would be impossible for one of them to travel to England and back without being seen by a single soul while passing over the most thickly populated part of Europe.

Even the length of a winter night would be insufficient for such a journey. The fastest German airship, the L 1, would take twelve hours to get from Friedrichshafen to the North Sea coast. In any case, moreover, care would be taken to show no lights if such a secret visit were undertaken.

The telegram concludes with an expression of regret that neither English experts nor the British Government, who must be aware of the facts, have yet attempted to rebut such a monstrous suggestion. / Reuter. /

1913 February 27 (Thurs) London Times, p. 6. (Card 1)

Airship Rumours. / Germany and the Recent Reports. / An Official Disclaimer. / (From Our Own Correspondent.) / Berlin, Feb. 26.

In German official quarters it is stated most emphatically that the mysterious aerial apparitions in England cannot possibly have proceeded from Germany. The German Government seems to be really anxious to disprove of all the legends on this subject, and is inclined to treat the matter as a potential peril to Anglo-German relations. The Cologne Gazette declares to-night that no German military or naval airship has ever visited England, and that no cruise of a German ship has been the cause of any of the rumours. This is undoubtedly an official denial which ought to be accepted as such.

The writer of the inspired article goes on to prove that a secret cruise to England and back is an impossibility. He observes that the location of all German airships is known, that their movements are published, that thousands of people see every cruise, that any German ship which could be in question would have to pass over the thickly populated districts of Belgium and Holland, as well as of Germany; supposed to be those of an airship, which were seen over various parts of England on Tuesday night. According to some accounts the shape of the vessel could be discerned and the noise of its motor heard.

It is declared in Liverpool that what was believed to have been an airship was seen in the district again on Tuesday night. It will be remembered that a similar report was made about two weeks ago. A resident in the neighbourhood of the Old Swan tramway terminus stated yesterday that he saw a bright light in the sky on Tuesday night. The supposed aircraft was seen from 8.15 to 9 p.m., and disappeared in the direction of Seaforth. The observers declare that they distinctly heard the throbbing of a motor and the whirring of a propeller. When first noticed the vessel was at a great height, and its light was taken for that of an exceptionally bright star. This assumption was, however, completely dispelled when later the form of the vessel could be seen. It circled over the district at a great speed before finally heading away towards the north end of the city.

A Hunstanton message says that about 8.30 on Tuesday night a postman walking home from Old Hunstanton saw three bright lights approaching rapidly from the eastward at a considerable height. His statement is verified by numerous residents. The body of the airship was not discernible, but the lights, which attracted considerable attention, remained in view for some thirty minutes. They finally disappeared seawards in a north-westerly direction. Similar lights were observed on Wednesday and Friday last.

At Grimsby, it is stated, numerous persons both heard and saw the airship over the town and port. It was first traced from the Humber by the crew of the steam trawler Bermuda, who watched its bright white light pass towards the town, descend, and rise again until it disappeared in the direction of Hull. The fishermen reported the occurrence immediately on entering the port. At Hull the view is expressed that what was seen on Tuesday night was a star, but on the other hand it is pointed out that the light moved. The opinion is also given that the light was the military searchlight at the mouth of the Tees.

Aerial Defense (letter). Siry—While, in default of more convincing evidence, there is no reason to be alarmed at the vague reports that, even in winter, a cruise to England and back could not be accomplished between sunset and sunrise, that a ship engaged on a secret mission would not have lights, and that, apart from all the difficulties and risks, Germany could have nothing to gain whatever by such an adventure, which would, at most, provide only material for the agitation against Germany.

It will be seen that these arguments, which doubtless proceed from the German naval and military authorities, coincide almost completely with the observations which I telegraphed last night without any consultation with the German authorities.

As the German authorities are now paying so much attention to the subject, they may do well to observe that it is the German and Russian Press which exploits every, either innocent or ignorant, suggestion in England in order to show that England is in a perpetual state of nervousness or panic.

...[German naval arsp has accident; several pilots killed in Germ.]

The Reported Lights.

Further statements were made yesterday as to the bright lights, of mysterious airships hovering over the country at night, yet such stories draw attention to a matter of utmost importance to this country, a matter which most of those who discuss our defenses are apt to ignore.

Even with a strong army and navy, the risk of aerial attack is now a threat. A few years ago airships were few and incapable of an invasion; now Germany and others are building real aerial fleets. 1500,000 invested in airships in Germany, for maybe twenty new vessels, with speeds over fifty miles per hour, and can carry two tons of explosives and machine guns, and can cruise 24 hours. France building eight equally good. These might attack London, etc., and currently couldn't be stopped by airplanes—War in the Air by H.G. Wells.

England is not warlike and doesn't want attack ships, but needs to concentrate on defense against aerial attack. This is more important than a new dreadnought or 50,000 new men. A hundred airplanes or 12 new dirigibles may make the difference between peace and defeat.

B. Baden-Powell, Major.

1913 February 27 (Th) Manchester Guardian, p. 6.

(CARD 1)

GERMANY'S AERIAL FLEET. / THE "MENACE" TO OUR NAVY. / To the Editor of the Manchester Guardian.

Sir,—A great part of the press of this country has lately devoted a large quantity of space to accounts and rumours of visits to these shores by dirigible airships, presumably German. In your columns reference to the matter has been confined to your London correspondent's invitations to the Germans to make their visits in the daytime without fear of the Aerial Navigation Act and with the assurance of a pleasant welcome, and to a repetition of German denials of such visits. Now the statement of Reuter's correspondent that "out of the four Zeppelin airships which might conceivably attempt a winter trip to England and back the naval airship is at Johannisthal, the Hansa is at Potsdam, the Viktoria Luise is at Frankfort, and the new military Zeppelin is at Cos, near Baden-Baden," may be perfectly true, and your argument, based on the accuracy of the statement, that "none of them could have reached the Yorkshire coast by nine on Friday evening without a long daylight flight across Germany and Holland, during which observations would have been inevitable," is doubtless irrefutable. But, sir, I would draw your attention not to reports of the actual accomplishments of German airships but to the infinitely more disquieting rumours as to German air-mastery and British defencelessness.

Will you permit me to ask quite bluntly whether it is true or whether there is reason to believe

a) That Germany possess 12 State-owned dirigibles and 250 war aeroplanes, and in addition ten privately owned dirigibles. That a great proportion of these dirigibles are capable of making flights across the North Sea and back without taking fresh fuel on board;

b) That Great Britain possess only three dirigible and 30 aeroplanes, and that these aeroplanes are not equipped with guns capable of destroying a German dirigible;

c) That the freight-carrying capacity of the German dirigibles is such that within eight hours after the making of a signal in Berlin anything between 40 and 100 tons of high explosives could be dropped simultaneously at twenty different selected spots in England;

d) That there are 300 airships in course of construction in Germany capable of carrying five tons of war material?

These statements, which have the authority of the military correspondent of the "Standard" and of many leading articles in the press, seem to me to demand either admission, refutation or straightforward correction. The country will not be satisfied with a reassurance that the Admiralty has the matter in hand. The War Office has the Territorials in hand, and look at them! The country will not be satisfied with a Liberal expression of conviction that Germany could not possibly be so wicked or so foolish as to wish to attack us. The country is entitled to know how far, in the event of Germany becoming wicked and foolish, that country's capacity for attack in the air exceeds our capacity for defence. The public knows the relative strength at sea; it is entitled to know the relative strength in the air.

The matter concerns party politics very little. Still there must be very many men like myself who, with a strong dislike of party, have broad Conservative sympathies and yet considerable respect for Liberal opinion in the matter of Free Trade and the desire for European peace. Only, we realise that beneath the blarney and jingoism of the Conservative party there is the party's deep feeling that the last misfortune is a defeat by Germany, to avoid which we, as Conservatives, would sacrifice whatever was demanded, even if it were the whole of our domestic legislative programme. We lack the full extent of possible sympathy with the Liberal party, we are alienated from Liberalism by some uncertainty as to the depth of Liberal conviction in this matter of national safety. There is the uneasy feeling that the Liberal view as to what constitutes a reasonable margin of national supremacy at sea and of safety in the air is capable of being modified according to the calls upon the national purse of domestic and more grateful legislation. The country is not perfectly assured that there is not, at the back of the Liberal idea as to what constitutes national safety, some temptation to play with the theory that a defeat by Germany would still, if the price of avoiding it were prohibitive owing to the entailed sacrifice of domestic legislation, simply serve to brace up the country and endow it with a higher and nobler moral. The defeat of France by Germany admittedly made a new France. The country is surely entitled to know that Liberalism as well as Conservatism is not tempted to consider a new England on those terms.—Yours, &c.

James E. Agate. / 15, Minshull Street, Manchester, / February 26.
THE PLANET VENUS RESPONSIBLE. / To the Editor of the Manchester Guardian.

Sir,—I am glad to see the sensible message on the "German airship" scare, affording absolute proof that it is impossible for any German aircraft to have been manoeuvring over this country during last weekend. It is lamentable that the English people are so easily led away by scare headlines, and one can readily understand the amusement created in Berlin. On examining the various reports which have been published during the past few weeks it is easy for one to discover the origin of the "scare." No actual craft, seemingly, has ever been seen, but only its headlight, and no sound of propelling machinery has ever been heard. The headlight has been seen, with one or two exceptions, always in the western sky, and the exceptions may not improbably be due to ignorance of position on the part of the observers.

When will those interested learn that all these circumstances point unerringly to the fact that the so-called "mysterious airship" is nothing more nor less than the planet Venus approaching greatest easterly elongation, when it must of necessity appear in the western sky in the evening as an extraordinarily brilliant object? The sudden disappearances of the light can be accounted for, of course, by temporary obscuration by wisps of cloud. As regards the reports of the alleged manoeuvrings of the airship, if the actual sources of thereports could be got at I think it would probably be found that the intricate manoeuvrings would degenerate into a simple steady movement towards the west. I gave expression to these opinions at a public meeting a few weeks ago, and as a result I confirmed then the opinion I had formed a long time before, that a very small percentage of people indeed are acquainted with the apparent diurnal movement of the heavens, due, of course, to the actual axial rotation of the earth. In a few weeks Venus will have got past inferior conjunction with the sun, and if the English people have not appreciated the truth we shall then have another series of "mysterious airships" appearing in the early morning in the eastern sky.—Yours, &c.

27, Turnbull Road, Longsight, Manchester, 26th February.

William Porthouse.

"E. J. P." writes—The reports of mysterious lights on the Yorkshire coast remind me of a strange experience in the neighbourhood of Robin Hood's Bay some ten years ago. A friend, who rented a cottage in the "Bay," had walked with me along the coast to Hayburn Wyke, and in the dusk we started on our return journey by a route which curved inland. When a mile or so from the village of Thorpe and facing a valley, which seemed to be about two miles away, we saw a point of light which seemed to swing slowly right across the valley and then swing back again to the position from which it had started. The light was like a fairly bright star, and it seemed as though it were fixed to the lowest end point of a gigantic invisible pendulum. The distance apparently travelled on each swing was about two or three miles. We stood watching the phenomenon for half an hour, and the more we tried to account for it the more puzzled we grew. We finally agreed that the illusion must have been caused by shifting mists in the valley, though I don't think we felt that this theory really squared with all the appearances—for instance with the remarkable regularity of the swings.

1913 February 27 (Th) Neue Preussische Zeitung, pt. 2, p. 2.

England.

—What is the "Phantom Airship"? On the English fantasy of the nightly appearance of German airships over the English island realm writes the correspondent of "Heer und Politik" in Paris: Recently a new French airship from (Top Elément-Bayard) has made a long (aerial) journey from Paris to northern France as far as the coast, etc., not only by day, but also by night. Why should this airship not stray intentionally or unintentionally into England? Or why should not, as has been said already, the whole "airship" story in general be founded on a fantasy, this English (disorder) of night trips of a phantom-manned airship seen out from the coast as it flew at a great height over the (Bristol) canal? This view, which is affirmed by reasonable French, moreover, rests on no error, so it can be said with certainty: the English "phantom airship" is neither a German Zeppelin nor a French Elément-Bayard. That the firm did not give out this explanation, and that the French newspapers, which doubtless know about the matter, themselves remain silent about the events, leaves little room for wonder that France's understandable self-interest in it is that in England the alarm over German armaments (will) continue to grow.

Fri. Feb. 28, pt. 2, p. 2.

—The German phantom airship. An H-B Telegram from London, 28 Feb., announces: The report given by the air watcher to the admiralty of the observation of airships has led the marine administration to relate that on Monday no English balloon went up. It was thus known that only a foreign airship acted. The captain of the steamer "Arcadia" declared that Monday at 5 in the afternoon he saw an airship at Sandu (I) Island. Yesterday evening at 9 o'clock an airship was again seen in the English sky. These reports have been quite alarming to the government.

Feb. 28 - Berliner Tageblatt, London Times - See p. 294.
1913 February 28 (Fri) Daily Telegraph (London), p. 12 (card 1)

AIRSHIP MYSTERY. / A GAMEKEEPER'S FIND. / FIRE-BALLOON ON A MOOR. /

It looks very much as though the great airship mystery has been cleared up, at least so far as the strange apparitions which are said to have hovered over certain places in Yorkshire are concerned.

As is well known to most people, a well-constructed fire-balloon, such as can be purchased for a few shillings from any of the firms dealing in pyrotechnical goods, is capable of travelling long distances in a favourable wind; in fact, its range is practically limited only by the quantity of methylated spirit, the heat from which gives it its power of ascension, which it can carry.

Last night we received the following telegram:

From Our Own Correspondent. / LEEDS, Thursday Evening.

The discovery of a fire-balloon right in the centre of the district of East Yorkshire where the aerial lights were seen was made known to-day to a reporter from Leeds. The balloon was picked up on Houghton Moor by a gamekeeper in the employment of Colonel Longdale, of Houghton Hall, while on his round on Sunday morning, and, on his afterwards hearing of a conversation about the presence of airships in the vicinity, he recalled the discovery, saying he should not be at all surprised if the fire-balloon were the key to the mystery. The balloon was as big as a 36-gallon cask, resembling those sent up at gales. It would easily have been seen at Selby, sixteen miles from Market Weighton, where the aerial lights were, as is alleged, visible to a solicitor.

It has been suggested that fire-balloons have been sent up by Germans living in various parts, with the view of hoaxing the English people. Be that as it may, the gamekeeper's story has apparently laid the aerial ghost, and the country people all round are making merry over the fact. /

While this telegram does not dispose of the reported appearances at Hull and elsewhere on Tuesday night, it is quite likely that the practical joker who sent up the fire-balloon found on Houghton Moor also despatched others on their deceptive mission on earlier or later evenings.

As we said yesterday, there is no evidence that any real airships have been seen, with the exception of the one at Sheerness, the appearance of which Mr. Churchill recently confirmed in a reply to the House of Commons. /

The steamer Orcadia, on arrival at Kirkwall yesterday afternoon from the North Isles of Orkney, reported that an airship was seen at five p.m. off Sanday Isle on Monday.

HOAX AT HARTLEPOOL.

A West Hartlepool correspondent writes: Whilst the Corporation Finance Committee were busy with the annual estimates a member entered the room in a state of suppressed excitement, and, whispering to two or three others, took them outside. Other members, their curiosity aroused, followed. Soon the room was empty, and the whole committee were standing in the roadway gazing intently to the westward. Some averred that they saw an airship, and it was only after an excited argument that they were convinced it was the planet Venus.

Various other vague reports are to hand. For example, early on Thursday morning several people "observed a large searchlight" in the sky over Portland Harbour, and "distinctly heard the buzzing of a propeller, evidently from an airship." After a time the light was extinguished.

A police-constable stationed at Hucknall, Noits, reported that yesterday morning, about two o'clock, he saw an airship showing a powerful searchlight, travelling from the direction of Nottingham northwards towards Mansfield. His story was confirmed by a number of colliers leaving the night shift at Linby Colliery. A similar story came from Papplewick, witnesses stating that they watched the light travelling for five minutes, when it disappeared. A mix police sergeant on duty in the same neighborhood, however, declared to a representative that the airship was a myth. "I saw a brilliant star to the north," he said. "It was very low down, and the clouds drifting rapidly across it gave it the appearance of a brilliant light travelling in the sky."

1913 February 28 (Fri) Manchester Guardian, p. 4.

AIRSHIPS BY NIGHT. / To the Editor of the Manchester Guardian.

Sir,--I was passing along Moseley Road, Fallowfield, about three weeks ago at 6.30 p.m. when a lad excitedly called my attention to "an airship." There was a bright light in the sky about 20 degrees above the horizon and almost due south from where I was.

My first thought was: "It cannot be an aeroplane because it moves too slowly; it cannot be an airship because there is no hull visible. It certainly was not a planet. I doubt if it could have been mistaken for one even if it had been stationary, but the most noticeable thing about it was its steady movement to the right, exactly that of a drifting balloon. During the five minutes or so that I watched it its position changed from south to west-south-west, and it became perceptibly dimmer and more distant.

I concluded that the light was carried by a toy balloon which had probably been sent up by someone wishing to enjoy himself at the expense of the "jumpiness" of his fellow-citizens.—Yours, &c, E.G. HERBERT.

89, Northen Grove, West Didsbury
Manchester, February 27.

1913 February 28 (Fri) Manchester Guardian, p. 7.

THE STRANGE LIGHTS IN THE SKY. / FIRE BALLOON DISCOVERED.

An under-gamekeeper on the Houghton Hall estate, Market Weighton, Yorkshire, found a fire balloon on the moor on Sunday morning. It was still half inflated and about four feet in height. The fuse, which was dry, seemed to have been extinguished not long before the discovery was made. The finder, when questioned about the matter yesterday, declared, says the Yorkshire "Evening Post," that the balloon was exactly like those sent up at galas. He deflated it, wrapped it up, and carried it home.

Possibly the lights seen in different parts of Yorkshire during the nights of last Friday and Saturday are explained by this discovery.

A letter from a Manchester correspondent, which appears on page 4, gives an account of how his attention was recently called to a fire balloon by a boy, who believed that he had seen an airship.

POLICE SERGEANT AND AN AIRSHIP REPORT.

Yesterday's airship report came from Hucknall, Nottinghamshire. A constable states that in the morning about two o'clock he saw an airship showing a powerful searchlight travelling from the direction of Nottingham northwards towards Mansfield. His story was confirmed by a number of colliers leaving a night-shift at Linby Colliery. A similar story is told at Papplewick, a village near by. People there say they watched a light travelling for five minutes, it then disappeared; but a mere matter-of-fact police sergeant on duty in the same neighborhood declares the airship a myth. Speaking to a correspondent, he says: "I saw a brilliant star to the north. It was very low down, and the clouds drifting rapidly across it gave it the appearance of a brilliant light travelling in the sky."

1913 March 1 (Sat) Daily Telegraph (London), p. 9.

AIRSHIP HOAX. /

The discovery of a fire balloon on the Yorkshire moors has been verified by others than the undergamekeeper of Colonel Longdale, of Houghton Hall. It was, the gamekeeper states, in blue and yellow stripes, and he has kept it in his cottage as a relic of what he regards as a great hoax.

Further investigations have led to the discovery that several fire balloons have been bought at Leeds, and the shopkeeper who sold them admitted on being questioned that it was strange that at this time of the year purchase of the kind should be made. It has also been ascertained that box kites have been sent up freely of late in Yorkshire, and these, it is suggested, may have been lighted. One spectator, Mr. W. Appleyard, of Leeds, declares that when on a tramcar within a short distance of the Leeds city football grounds on Thursday night he and others distinctly saw an airship. It is, moreover, regarded as a new derelict fire balloon, and the fire balloon theory is now considered to have solved the mystery.

1913 March 1 (Sat) Manchester Guardian, p. 9. (cont'd)

SEEING AIRSHIPS. / "EVERYBODY'S DOING IT."

Every day new reports arrive of more airships (or "the airship") having been seen. It has been seen in all parts of the British Isles from the Orkneys to the Bristol Channel. On Tuesday night, for example, it appeared in Yorkshire, in Lancashire, in the Midlands, and in the South. From the following statement, in which the places of appearance and what appeared are set out under the days whereon the "airship" was observed, no conclusion can be drawn except that nearly a score of airships are flying over England by night or that not one is doing so, for there is no reason why the evidence for some appearances should be accepted and that for others rejected.

FRIDAY.

- Scarborough (searchlight seen and engine heard).
- Bridlington (lights and dim shape seen).
- Selby (long cigar-shaped body, searchlight, and other lights seen; noise of motor heard).
- Hunstanton (rapidly moving lights seen).

SATURDAY.

- Scarborough (lights and dim shape seen).
 - Corbridge-on-Tyne (lights seen).
- MONDAY.
- Sanday, Orkney Isles (airship seen).
 - Witherness (lights and, by help of the lighthouse, body of vessel seen).
 - Portsmouth (lights seen).
 - Ipswich (ordinary lights, powerful searchlight, and body of the vessel seen; throb of engine heard).

TUESDAY.

- Hornsea (white and red lights and cone of airship seen).
- Hull (lights seen).
- Grimsby (lights and dim shape seen).
- Leeds (bright light and dim shape seen).
- Seaforth, Liverpool (bright light and outline of vessel seen; whirring of propeller and throb of engine heard).
- Portishead, Somerset (lights and outline of airship seen).
- Castle Donington, Derbyshire (lights seen; engine heard).
- Dover (lights seen; engine heard).
- Hunstanton (bright lights seen).

WEDNESDAY.

- Portland Harbour (dazzling searchlight and clear outline of airship seen; sound of propeller heard).
- Hyde (flicking lights and long, dark, moving object seen).
- Romiley (nine distinct flashes of vivid searchlight seen).
- Avonmouth, Bristol (two lights seen).

THURSDAY.

- Hucknall, Nottinghamshire (airship and powerful searchlight seen).
 - Kirkcaldy and Rosyth (brilliant light and dimly outlined airship seen).
 - Liverpool and New Brighton (bright lights and dim shape seen).
 - Ardwick, Manchester (two head lights and a tail light seen).
- Fire Balloons Found.

SUNDAY.

- Market Weighton, Yorkshire (half deflated, with fuse burnt out).

FRIDAY.

- Seacombe, Cheshire (undamaged, with all fuel consumed).

THE MYSTERIOUS LIGHTS. / WHY SHOULD GERMANY SEND AIRSHIPS HERE? / (FROM A CORRESPONDENT.) / Berlin, February 26.

Some time ago the company which still owns the two Zeppelin cruisers, the Hansa and the Victoria-Luise (the Government itself owns only three, the Z 1, the Z 2, and the Naval Airship 1), was said to be planning a single journey over to England. The plan was dropped, however, at the request of the Admiralty. The general impression here is that these scares are being skilfully used by a certain group of "patriots" to hurry on the construction of an English air fleet. It is likely, it is asked, that the German authorities would help on this propaganda by allowing a midnight flight of its own Zeppelins over English territory?

NEED FOR COMMON SENSE.

(Reuter's Correspondent.) / Berlin, Friday. The "Kölnische Zeitung," in an article on the airship scare in Great Britain, finds the most likely explanation of the matter in the desire of the Conservative press to work up a popular sentiment in favour of the great demands for armaments, which presumably would be among the first undertakings of a Conservative Cabinet in case of a change of Government. It dubs the airship scare "the new English sickness," for which, it says, the country's own common sense is the only physician. The reference is to the infantile complaint rickets, which the Germans call "the English sickness."

FIRE BALLOON FOUND IN CHESHIRE.

Another fire balloon, similar to those used at galas, was yesterday discovered at Seacombe, Cheshire. The balloon was undamaged, but all the fuel used for heating the air had been consumed. It dropped on waste land by the railway station and was captured by several boys. The discovery is believed to yield the solution of the "airship" mystery at New Brighton and Liverpool on Thursday night, when several people declared they saw a swiftly moving bright light coming from the Irish Sea and passing over the batteries.

IS IT AURORAL LIGHT?

"Aurora" offers the following explanation:—This is the season of the year when auroral phenomena are frequently observed, and I myself during the past fortnight have witnessed flashes of light from the western and northern parts of the sky. They have not been very marked but similar phenomena may have been more pronounced in other parts of the country. The "searchlight" is one of the commonest forms of the auroral light. It may remain apparently stationary for a time, suddenly disappear and reappear some distance away, and inasmuch as it generally emanates from a dark nucleus the illusion of an airship is easily produced.

1913 March 3 (Mon) London Daily Telegraph, p. 12.

AIRSHIP MYSTERY. / VESSEL SEEN AT GRIMSBY. / LINER CAPTAIN'S STATEMENT. / From Our Own Correspondent. / GRIMSBY, Sunday.

Any possibility of the mysterious airship being an hallucination is now eliminated by the definite statement of Captain Lundie, commander of the Great Central Railway Company's liner City of Leeds, when the vessel arrived at Grimsby yesterday from Hamburg. Captain Lundie reported that on the previous Saturday night, whilst outward bound from Grimsby, he and his chief officer, Mr. Williams, both saw an airship crossing the Humber, from the Yorkshire to the Lincolnshire coast. There was no probability of any mistake.

I interviewed Captain Lundie to obtain further details, which were readily given.

"It was a fine moonlight night," he said, "and the craft was clearly marked through the moon's rays. Directly I saw it I took the time, and it was 9.15. It was at a fairly high altitude and travelling at a somewhat fast pace. Apparently it had come from over the land, and not from the North Sea. We were less than two miles from Grimsby Docks, and the airship, which had come from the direction of east-north-east, was heading west-south-west. It left the Yorkshire coast and proceeded to cross the Humber, from about Patrington, which is almost Grimsby Pier. I am not so acquainted with the different types of airships, and therefore, cannot describe it in technical terms. I noticed it had wings on either side and something in the shape of a tail. To put it broadly, it somewhat resembled a shark. I was the first to notice it, and, after I had directed the attention of Mr. Williams to it, studied it more closely through the binoculars. Like myself, he had no doubt about the matter. We had it in sight five minutes before it disappeared over Grimsby, in the direction of Immingham."

1913 March 3 (Mon) Times (London), p. 7.

The Airship Rumours.

Captain Lundie, of the Great Central Railway steamer City of Leeds, which arrived at Grimsby from Hamburg on Saturday, reported that just after the vessel had left Grimsby for Hamburg on Saturday night, February 22, he saw an airship overhead, some distance up, heading west-south-west from the North Sea.

He said it was coming directly towards Grimsby. Second officer Williams, who was on the bridge with him, saw the airship at the same time. The moon was shining brightly at the time, and they saw the vessel quite distinctly for fully two minutes. There were no lights visible on the airship, and there could be no suggestion that they were deceived or misled.

A naval officer with two seamen of the naval wing of the Royal Flying Corps, after making a flight in a balloon, came down on the Surry hills near Guildford. They proceeded to deflate the balloon, and, while the gas was escaping, detached the car. The envelope, released of the weight and not more than half deflated, escaped from their grasp and went away in a southerly direction. Nothing has since been seen of the vessel.

1913 March 3 (Mon) Manchester Guardian, p. 9.

ZEPPELIN AIRSHIPS AND THE NORTH SEA. / POSITIVE ASSURANCES FROM AN OFFICIAL.

Dr. Eckener, the director of flights of the Zeppelin Company, telegraphs from Friedrichshafen to the "Frankfurter Zeitung":--

"In view of the doubts which have arisen I can give an absolute and emphatic assurance that none of the Company's airships, not the Schwaben nor the Victoria Luis, nor the Hansa, have carried out any voyage to England or extended their North Sea flights to the vicinity of the British coasts. I am equally certain that none of the other Zeppelin ships in carrying out their flights over the North Sea have approached the British coasts or flown over England. Nor do I think that any prudent airship master would in the present international situation have deemed it wise and proper to undertake such a voyage. Once in the summer of 1911 we did think of visiting London on the Schwaben from Dusseldorf, but we communicated for this purpose with the British Aero Club in order to prepare British public opinion, and carry out the voyage by invitation of authoritative British quarters. At that time, however, arose the great tension over the Morocco affair, and we spontaneously abandoned the plan, and deferred its execution to some quieter time.

ANOTHER MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP. / GRIMSBY CAPTAIN'S REPORT.

Captain Lundie, of the Great Central mail steamer City of Leeds, which arrived at Grimsby from Hamburg on Saturday, reported the visit of an airship to this country "from over the North Sea." "We had just left Grimsby for Hamburg on Saturday night, February 22," he said, "and when passing the Burroon boys I saw an airship overhead some distance up heading west-south-west from the North Sea. It was coming over the narrow strip of land forming Spurn Point direct towards Grimsby. Second Officer Williams was on the bridge with me. He saw the ship at the same time and got it under observation with the bridge binoculars. The moon shone brightly for a time, and we saw the hull with perfect distinctness, with its wing attachments, for fully two minutes. There were no lights visible on the airship at any time, and there could be no suggestion that we were deceived or misled. The moonlight was beautifully clear, and only when the moon was obscured did we lose it from view. Arriving at Hamburg I reported the facts by mail to my superior, Captain Boothby, at Grimsby."

1913 March 4 (Tues) Daily Telegraph (London), p. 13.

MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIPS / A FRENCH VIEW. / From Our Own Correspondent. / PARIS, Monday Night.

The airships which did or did not appear by night over the British coast were, if they existed, at all events not French. The two dirigibles, L'Adjudant Resu and L'Adjudant (Visconne), for instance, did not leave their port of Verdun at the time named. French airships cannot travel about secretly, and their movements are duly prearranged and recorded afterwards. It is also a question whether any French airship is at present capable of accomplishing the feat of travelling to England and back without a stoppage.

As a matter of fact, M. Capaman (?), who is one of the great French authorities on aerial navigation, tells me that the only airships capable of making such a trip are the Zeppelins. He personally seems entirely convinced from all the evidence that a Zeppelin certainly has lately performed the journey once—or perhaps several times—from Germany to England and back. He does not believe in the theory of "collective hallucinations." He thinks that the evidence given by the numbers of witnesses is conclusive. It would be the easiest thing in the world, in his opinion, for one or several of the Zeppelins to perform the journey in question, and he is persuaded that they have performed it.

M. Capaman, it may be remembered, piloted a French airship from Mantes, near Paris, to Aldershot some years ago. His opinion of the value of the Zeppelins is very high. He considers them greatly superior to French airships. "As for the British airships, they do not exist."

1913 March 5 (Wed) Times (London), p. 7.

The Airship Rumours.

Since the publication of the report of Captain Lundie, of the Great Central Railway steamer City of Leeds, that he saw an airship over the Humber, an Admiralty representative has seen Captain Lundie and his second officer and taken detailed statements from them.

Mr. J. H. Parker, skipper of the Hull trawler Othello, states that on February 28, when 170 miles north-east of the Spurn, an airship with a powerful searchlight, circled twice around the trawler and then rising, proceeded in a westerly direction. This statement is confirmed by members of the crew of the Othello.

1913 March 6 (Th) Daily Telegraph, p. 13.

AIRSHIP MYSTERY. / NORTH SEA INCIDENT. / HULL SKIPPER'S STORY. / From Our Own Correspondent. / HULL, Wednesday.

Skipper Parker, of the Hull steam-trawler St. Othello, is very clear and definite in his statement that he saw an airship manoeuvring over the North Sea last Friday evening on the Dogger Bank. He states that when about 170 miles north-east from Spurn Head a huge airship, having a powerful searchlight, was seen.

Mr. Parker stated to-day that it was about quarter-past eight on Friday night when he and the chief engineer were on the bridge that they first observed the light in the sky. In about five minutes the airship was practically over the trawler, and came so close, and was so low down, that he was afraid it would come into collision with his vessel's mast. At this moment he sounded the trawler's siren, whereupon the airship sverved round to the west, and twice circled round the Othello, keeping its powerful searchlight on the trawler all the time. It then rose up in the air and departed in a westerly direction.

The skipper said that the light from the airship was very dazzling and prevented them more particularly identifying it, but he was able to make out that it had two brilliant lights about 15ft aft, and 5ft or 6ft apart. When it departed he gave as a parting-shot a "cock-a-doodle" blast on the siren, to which the airship responded by a flash of its light.

Asked as to the state of the weather, Mr. Parker said that it was a fine night, with only a slight breeze. It was, however, very dark, there being no moon or stars, but otherwise it was quite clear. There was no difficulty in observing the aerial visitor, whose engines could be distinctly heard. The brilliant light centred on the trawler made it very difficult to see the airship at close quarters, but as it departed its outline could be easily distinguished. The weather before and after was good sailing weather and fine. The position was less than 120 miles from the nearest point of the German coast, viz., Emden.

Skipper Parker has made reports to the Customs authorities at Hull of the circumstances, which are confirmed by the engineer and other members of the trawler's crew. / A GERMAN "SCARE" / BERLIN, Wednesday.

A mysterious airship was seen last night at Tarnowitz, Prussia. It is feared that the airship came from Russia, and Count Linsburg, Military Governor of Silesia, has promised a money reward to any person giving information which will lead to the arrest of the airmen, who are supposed to be Russian spies.—Exchange Telegraph Company, 1913 March 8 (Sun. eve.) Neue Preussische Zeitung, p. 2.

—About the Airship Ghost. An IR telegram reports from London, 8 March: Yesterday evening between 7 and 7:30 o'clock a manned balloon appeared for the first time over London. The airship went at a height of about 200 meters and took a course toward St. Paul's cathedral. This time it was without doubt established that it really behaved like a manned balloon, but it was assumed that it was only the balloon "Delta." However, public opinion in England has calmed, since in the place where it was believed that a foreign manned balloon had appeared, merely a hot air balloon from Schweinflasen [carnival?] had been observed.

Mon Mar. 9(?), p. 4.

--Moreover (in an HB report from Paris) the famous French astronomer Flammarion was found to demonstrate in an article that the shining light, which in England has set off the rumor of the visit of foreign airships, was only Venus, on closer examination.

Sun. eve. March 29, p. 3.

Russia--An Austrian Airplane Shot At. Petersburg, 29 March. The "Petersburger Telegraphenagentur" reports from Kjelyh[?]: Along the border formed by the Vistula an aerial balloon from Austria flew into Russian territory. Half an hour later an airplane appeared. The border guard shot at the airplane, which immediately thereupon turned back to Austria.

1913 March 13 (Th) Berliner Tageblatt (no. 131), p. 3.

An Airship Catastrophe near Potsdam? / The Woman of Caputh and the Burning Airship.--Firemen and Guard Rangers in the Search.

Yesterday evening the rumor was spread in Berlin that in the forests between Jerch and Caputh, three travel hours south of Potsdam on Lake Schwielow (?), a serious airship accident had occurred. It is said that an airship in the air burst into flame and plunged to the ground. This rumor was founded, as it was soon shown, on the story of a woman who had observed the occurrence from the vicinity of [Arden]berg. The woman told that the gondola of the airship was lost in air and fell burning on the Caputh side of Lake Schwielow. The account of the woman seemed so believable that the head official (Mayor) of Caputh saw fit to call out the fire departments of Caputh and Michendorf. These rushed immediately to the place indicated by the woman. Meanwhile the head official informed by means of telephone the commander of the Guard Ranger battalion in Potsdam to make him aware of the matter. Within half an hour forty guard rangers were at work looking for the alleged wrecked airship and burst balloon. At the same time the commander sent an ambulance, doctor and many nurses to Caputh. Almost till midnight was the search for the accident continued.--According to a second report sent us from another source, it was not an accident to an airship, but rather it happened to an airplane which burst into flames in flight and fell with both passengers.

Up till 1 a.m. the search for the alleged wrecked airship was unsuccessful, although the fire department and the detachment from the guard rangers battalion had searched [continually] the forest terrain for many hours. Neither could the military automobile from Potsdam find any trace of the airship or its passengers. The woman who saw the explosion of the airship [is known] in the whole area as thoroughly trustworthy and creditable. Also the head official of Caputh holds that mystification [tale-telling] on the part of this woman is completely excluded.

1913 March 13 (Th) Berliner Tageblatt (no. 132), p. 4. (card 1)

The Tale of the Airship. / No Catastrophe at Caputh.--The Woman's Vision.--Fire Department and Guard Rangers in the Forest at Night.

A.F. A young lady in the little [boundary] village of Caputh near Potsdam, a field worker, who heretofore longed for strange English ways, has now successfully imported the British fashion for airshipery to us [?]. Yesterday evening she and a [female] friend saw the fall of a burning airship and described it with many details. Likewise the Maid of Orleans portrayed the fiery vision which appeared to her in the treetops very closely--whereby it can be seen that the women in Dourrémy and Caputh seem to be alike.

We have already told in today's morning paper that on the report of the women the head official immediately led a far-ranging rescue operation, called up the fire departments of Caputh and neighboring Michendorf, and also made a report to the commandant in Potsdam about the alleged catastrophe. The fire at horns blared at once in the villages and a detachment of Guard Rangers set out from Potsdam [to offer help].

In Caputh however there was in many cases the opinion that this was a false alarm. An old man whose importance in the village is unshakeable on the grounds that he possesses a telephone, shook his head this way and that: "Children around here are simply not as [purposeful] as in Strassburg." Then a second prominent Caputher listened to the skeptic, the night watchman. He, who is used to seeing clearly in the dark, explained [] to everyone who would listen the story about the matter of the blue mist. And whichever inhabitant listened, with the firehorn blaring, the large alarm flute on the breast and the little trill-flute [piccolo] of Col. Paletoknopf, bent before so much authority and believed that burning hydrogen really had been the blue mist.[?]

But the fire department had already marched out and disappeared into the deep impenetrable darkness of the woods stretching between Caputh and Jerch. Through the night plunged suddenly soundless gliding forms. Under an officer's leadership the Guard Rangers went on their rounds in deep silence on the unlighted Potsdam highway past a couple of Caputh lanterns, further into the gloom. The work of this helpful silent body of men seemed surrounded with death and sorrow; it made the slowly chatting groups in the village streets [for the first time] more aware that here in this area had occurred a catastrophe destructive to human life. Through the air of this nighttime adventure was everything forgotten. Now speechless [was] the lively woman who had defended with great nerve against all masculine attacks her position that a woman always rightly observes and never can err. She wanted to have her catastrophe with all her wifely being--only she suddenly realized that she was carrying on a joke with human lives.

The rangers were submerged in the forest darkness and heard nothing at all for hours. While Caputh was usually a place with a police [detail], last night it was the place where the fire department had its headquarters till daybreak. Here the searchers gathered and drank un[] Potsdam strong beer. At 2 o'clock a youth appeared who had been in Jerch. He immediately became the center of the gathering, was for five minutes a hero, and all eyes hung on his mouth. He told that nothing definite had been found, but one place in the forest swelled distinctly of gas--he meant illuminating gas. That must be something important. Every man had a serious expression. But soon there sounded hollow laughter over the naivete of the youth. Since manned balloons are always filled with odorless hydrogen gas, and moreover [since] it is wholly impossible that gas could stay near the ground so long, because it follows from its light weight that as soon as the balloon hull was destroyed it must have dissipated.

395

Not till 4 o'clock did the brave firemen turn homeward and restore themselves in a restaurant after their difficult labors. They had not found the slightest trace of an airship. Everyone present was very tired and spoke badly of the visionary women. Only the night watchman's dog was happy. For a very long while people fed the frisky animal with good fresh wurst from Jauer [] the whole night through. Today he was the only airship enthusiast in Caputh and vicinity.

Also the search, which by this morning [covered] the whole Kunnerns dorf Forest as far as the Beeliss [Hospital], got back to here without success.

The supposed accident of the flying machine requires a very harmless explanation, it is believed. As was already said, Lt. Zwickan, in order to field test a machine, flew from Doberitz toward Leipzig [at first] in the advancing evening. Since the darkness was closing in, from time to time he had to go lower in order to orient himself. In the darkness the jets of flame and sparks shot out from the exhaust pipe of the motor were plain as day, and so the [women] workers presumed that the gliding machine, whose motor may have shovled some smoke, too, was a crashing, burning flying machine.

1913 March 14 (Fri) London Daily Telegraph, p. 15. (card 1)

PHANTOM AIRSHIPS. / A HOAX NEAR POTSDAM. / ALL-NIGHT SEARCH. / From Our Own Correspondent. / BERLIN, Thursday Night.

Spectral airships have now begun to appear in Germany. Only a few days ago a reward was offered for information that would lead to the arrest of aerial visitors who had been seen cruising about over one of the Eastern provinces, and last night elaborate official apparatus was set in motion quite close to Berlin by a story just as well authenticated, and apparently even more baseless, than those which recently attracted so much attention in England.

It was shortly after nightfall that two women returned from work in the fields to Caputh, a large village some miles to the west of Potsdam with a tale that they had seen an airship catch fire and blow up over a vast fir forest that covers the greater part of that district. As they both have a high reputation for intelligence and veracity, and as they described what they had seen with complete unanimity, no one seems to have thought of doubting their word. The close circumstantiality of their narrative was also very convincing. They said the exploded airship was very similar to the Hansa, which has for some time been stationed in Potsdam, and which they had repeatedly seen. The vessel, they stated, had two cars, and while they were watching it a black cloud of smoke suddenly rose from one of these. Then flames appeared, and quickly enveloped the hull of the airship, which began to fall rapidly towards the earth. Just before it reached the tree-tops one of the cars became detached, and the vessel, thus lightened, soared rapidly upwards.

A FRUITLESS QUEST.

It was particularly this last detail which convinced the local authorities that the tale was true, and induced them to communicate with the military headquarters at Potsdam and the fire-brigades of the surrounding villages. Soon a couple of fire-engines, a company of Jägers mounted on bicycles, and a motor ambulance arrived at Caputh, and under the guidance of the two women who had seen the vision proceeded to search the woods for the debris and the victims.

The quest was carried out most methodically. What was taken to be the probable area within which the doomed airship had descended was mapped out and systematically beaten by lines of men, who kept in touch with one another by means of vocal signals. The hunt was maintained until between three and four o'clock this morning, without yielding any positive result, and it was resumed at a later hour, and carried on for some hours with no more success.

Meanwhile the telephonic and telegraphic inquiries had shown that all the airships in Germany were lying safely in their sheds, and that the women must have been either the victims of an illusion or the authors of a hoax. The former view seems to be generally taken, and there is a good deal of speculation as to what was the burning object which it is believed they actually did see. One theory is that it was a registering fire balloon, such as was responsible for a good deal of the airship mystification in England; but the most favourite hypothesis appears to be that what they took to be an airship was a military aeroplane, which in reality did pass over Caputh about the time of the vision, en route from Doberitz to Leipzig. It is no uncommon thing for the motors of flying machines to emit considerable quantities of smoke, and the flames are supposed to have been nothing more serious than sparks from the exhaust, which probably looked a little terrifying in the gathering darkness.

1913 March 14 (Fri) Times (London), p. 7.

Alarm Near Potsdam. / (From Our Own Correspondent.) / Berlin, March 13. The fire brigades of three villages near Potsdam, some forty riflemen from the garrison on bicycles, and a strong force of police and of medical attendants in motor-cars were all engaged last night and until about 4 o'clock this morning in searching the woods south of Potsdam for a mysterious "airship" in distress, of which two working women had brought home a sensational report. They told the beadle of their little village that they had seen at 6 o'clock in the evening an airship first smoking, and then flaming, in the sky. Her forecar had dropped off and had a fallen burning into the wood. A few old men of the village were skeptical, but the beadle instantly gave the alarm, with the result that the reinforcements described above soon arrived on the scene. No trace of a car or of its inmates was found, but a small boy brought to the village inn the news that in one spot in the wood there had been a distinct smell of gas. It has turned out that no airship ~~was seen~~ ~~xxxxxxx~~ can have been in question, and the most plausible theory is that what was seen—if anything was seen—was the trail of sparks from the motor of an aeroplane. Two military biplanes flew yesterday evening over Potsdam and near the scene of the search.

1913 March 14 (Fri) Manchester Guardian, p. 6.

MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP NEAR BERLIN. / SEEN ON FIRE IN THE AIR.

Reuter's Berlin correspondent says that a detachment of the 8th Chasseurs of the Guard spent yesterday morning searching for the remains of a mysterious airship which, according to a story told by peasant women, caught fire, exploded, and fell to earth over the woods at Kaputh, near Potsdam, on Wednesday evening. The women, who were positive they saw the disaster, reported it to the local authorities, who promptly telephoned for help. The Commandant of Potsdam set out with an ambulance column, with doctors and fifty Chasseurs. The fire brigades from Potsdam and other places in the neighbourhood hurried out and troops and firemen spent the night seeking in vain for the wreck of the airship. Yesterday morning another eighty Chasseurs took up the search without result. All the known airships were reported safe and sound in their various sheds. Nevertheless the women adhered to their story, and insisted that they saw the fire spread from one end of the ship to the other, then a sudden explosion occur, wrapping in flame the whole ship, which plunged headlong to the ground.

1913 April 4 (Fri) Manchester Guardian, p. 9.

German Z4 accidentally flies into France and must land. / French mounting searchlights on motorcars as means of detecting airships; test on French airship successful.

"Various rumours have been current regarding the mysterious flight of airships over the eastern frontier, but the inhabitants of Lunéville were nonetheless startled to perceive... a large yellow dirigible in the mist (24)
5,9 Also seen flying over Vesoul and forts of Epinol, covering total 24 mi. of French territory (?).

Wed. April 9, p. 9. The Cardiff Aerial Mystery Again.

Our Cardiff correspondent sends a report that again last night an aircraft was seen at Cardiff, where one was reported to have been seen frequently at the beginning of the recent airship scare. The Chief Constable of Gloucestershire (Capt. Lindsay), who previously issued a description of the circumstances under which he saw a supposed airship, and asked for reports from anyone who had made observations, is said to have seen the one last night, with the Deputy Chief Constable and others, from the county police station. Many people also saw it from the streets. It is stated that it travelled at a high speed, and passed over the western district of Cardiff. It was first sighted at 8.23 coming from the north and was last sighted at 8.25 going in a southwesterly direction toward Weston-Super-Mare. It had a powerful searchlight beneath it, and its speed is estimated by the police as being from 60 to 70 miles an hour.

1913 April 9 (Wed) Times (London), p. 10.

Supposed Aircraft Over Cardiff

Some excitement was caused at Cardiff last night just before 9 o'clock by the passage over the city of what was believed to be an aircraft, whether dirigible or aeroplane could not be discerned. It carried a brilliant light, and travelled at from 60 to 70 miles an hour at considerable height. Crowds in the streets watched the flight, and the Chief Constable of Glamorgan (Captain Lionel Lindsay), who was one of the spectators, telephoned to Penarth Police Station to record the flight. The route taken was from the north-west to south-east, the light disappearing over the Bristol Channel towards Weston-super-Mare.

Apr. 4 p. 6—mysterious arsp over France lands, turns out to be Z. 4, which lost its bearings ("grey dirigible arsp of the Zeppelin type").

Apr. 5 p. 8—when realized they were over France, decided to come down and show their voyage an accident & not due to political or military motives. Crowds observing landing were ugly, believing arsp had come to photograph forts in area. / Apr. 7, ed. also 1913 June 30 (Mon) (Lansing, Mich.) State Journal, p. J.

Strange Aircraft Passes / Over Lansing at Great / Rate of Speed Sunday

What is thought to have been either an airship or a very fast traveling balloon passed over Lansing about sunset Sunday evening and created some little excitement owing to the mystery surrounding the aircraft. The object appeared in the southeast and was first sighted a mile south of the race track. The craft traveled swiftly through the air, taking a direct course north until it had reached about the central western part of the city when it altered its course to the northwest.

So w swiftly did the strange craft travel that it was not more than three minutes from the time it was sighted southeast of the city until it had passed from the vision in the northwest. The aerial mystery carried no lights of any description and was too elongated for an ordinary balloon, it is said. The craft was at a great height and when it passed to the northwest of the city had reached a still higher altitude.

1914

1914 August 15 (Sat) Cape Times (S. Afr.), p. 7.

CAPE TOWN AND THE PENINSULA. / MYSTERIOUS AEROPLANE FLIGHTS. / Seen in the Peninsula. / At Two Different Points Early Yesterday Morning.

During the past few days there has been a good deal of discussion in the Peninsula as to rumors regarding an aeroplane which has been sighted at various points in the neighbourhood of Cape Town. A week ago rumours reached Cape Town as to an aeroplane which had been seen in the North-Western districts of the Province. Then came persistent and evidently authentic accounts of an aeroplane which had been seen in the Clanwilliam district. We may quote the following from a letter received in Cape Town yesterday from Clanwilliam:

"We are all very excited on account of an airship that passes over here almost every night. Last night a lot of young fellows watched for it, and when it came one of them rushed to call me, but when I got out it had passed on in the direction of Lambert's Bay. The idea is that it belongs to German South-west Africa, and that it is sent to spy upon the sea coast."

Three or four nights ago the aeroplane was reported as heading South. Since then its movements were not recorded until Thursday night, when several residents at Sea Point reported that they had seen it flying over Table Bay at about half-past seven o'clock. There is no reason to suppose that their information is incorrect, as wholly independent reports seem to establish the fact that at an early hour yesterday morning the aeroplane was seen at not less than two different points in the Cape Peninsula.

1914 August 18 (Tues) Cape Times, p. 3.

Aeroplane Sighted. / Flying Over Worcester.

WORCESTER, Aug. 17.—(Reuter South African Press Agency.)—It is stated that at Ashton Station last night an aeroplane was distinctly seen to the west, over Worcester, by about fifteen different people. The machine is stated to have had a very strong headlight, such as is used by motor cars.

This morning, about 5.30, the aeroplane is stated also to have been seen in the direction of Mossel Bay.

p.4—An aeroplane, carrying a strong headlight, has been seen flying over Worcester.

p.5—News of the Day

In view of the numerous specific statements which have been received by the authorities, there is no longer any reason to doubt that an aeroplane—and presumably a hostile aeroplane—has been seen in the neighborhood of Cape Town and other districts of the Western Province during the past few days. It would be well if any first-hand information as to its movements could be communicated to the military authorities or the police without delay.

1914 August 18 (Tues) Cape Times (Cape Town, S.Afr.), p. 5.

Aeroplane Sighted. / Flying Over Worcester.

WORCESTER, Aug. 17.—(Reuter South African Press Agency.)—It is stated that at Ashton Station last night an aeroplane was distinctly seen to the west, over Worcester, by about fifteen different people. The machine is stated to have had a very strong headlight, such as is used by motor cars.

This morning about 5.30, the aeroplane is stated also to have been seen in the direction of Mossel Bay. also Cape Argus 17/5

p.5—News of the Day

In view of the numerous specific statements which have been received by the authorities, there is no longer any reason to doubt that an aeroplane—and presumably a hostile aeroplane—has been in the neighborhood of Cape Town and other districts of the Western Province during the past few days. It would be well if any first-hand information as to its movements could be communicated to the military authorities or the police without delay.

1914 August 19 (Wed) Cape Times, p.5.

Aeroplane Seen at Vryburg. ditto Johannesburg Star 19/4

VRYBURG, Aug. 18—(Reuter South African Press Agency.)—Reuter's correspondent is reliably informed that an aeroplane was seen flying from east to west over the farms about thirty miles from town last week.

Aug. 22—Germans from G.S.W Afr. invade Union of S.Afr.

Mon. Aug 28, p.8—Zeppelins Cruising in Holland. / (Reuter's Special War Service.) / ~~xxxxxx~~ LONDON.

Friday.—Zeppelin airships are reported to be constantly cruising in Holland. One followed the course of the Rhine working a searchlight. Dutch soldiers fired at one Zeppelin which disappeared across the German frontier. Other Zeppelin airships are using searchlights at Maastricht and elsewhere.

1914 August 19 (Wed) Rand Daily Mail (Johannesburg), p. 5.

AERIAL SCOUTS! / GERMAN AEROPLANE NEAR VRYBURG / The Reuter—S.A. Press Agency / Vryburg, Tuesday.

Reuter's correspondent is reliably informed that an aeroplane was seen flying east to west over farms about thirty miles from the town last week. /

REPORTED SKY VISITOR AT CAPETOWN /

A thrill of excitement was experienced by residents at Sea Point the other evening when it was reported that an aeroplane had been seen by several local residents.

Of late many such rumours have been freely circulated, but the story referred to possessed such a strong element of truth that an "Argus" representative had an interview with one of a trio of ladies who were reported to have been actual witnesses of the disquieting sight.

"It was about twenty minutes to seven," she said, "when a friend and myself were on our way home to dinner. We were near the 1914 August 19 (Wed) Daily Mail (Johannesburg), p. 5.

AERIAL SCOUTS / GERMAN AEROPLANE NEAR VRYBURG / The Reuter--S.A. Press Agency / Vryburg, Tuesday.

Reuter's correspondent is reliably informed that an aeroplane was seen flying east to west over farms about thirty miles from the town last week. / Natal Advertiser 19/1

REPORTED SKY VISITOR AT CAPE TOWN / Argus 14/5

A thrill of excitement was experienced by residents at Sea Point the other evening when it was reported that an aeroplane had been seen by several local residents.

Of late many such rumours have been freely circulated, but the story referred to possessed such a strong element of truth that an "Argus" representative had an interview with one of a trio of ladies who were reported to have been actual witnesses of the disquieting sight.

"It was about twenty minutes to seven," she said, "when a friend and myself were on our way home to dinner. We were near the post office at Three Anchor Bay when I chanced to look upwards. For a moment I could scarcely believe what I saw, and my startled examination having attracted the attention of my companion, she also looked up and saw what looked like two large pieces of wood about twelve feet long gliding horizontally through the air at a great height. At the time we saw the biplane--for such it must have been--it was between Robben Island and Nouville Point. It was travelling at a great speed, and we gazed at it wonderingly for about the space of ~~xxxx~~ two minutes when it disappeared in the mist over the far side of Signal Hill. [Cape Argus Fri. Aug. 14, p.5, continues:]

The matter is the subject of much speculation to-day, but, of ~~xxxx~~ course, there is nothing in the report to occasion alarm. 1914 August 20 (Th) Cape Times, p. 5.

THE AEROPLANE. / FURTHER FLIGHT WITNESSED LAST NIGHT. / On Table Mountain.

The aeroplane whose flights over the Peninsula have been causing so much comment, was again seen at Simon's Town last night at 10.30, flying high in the direction of Cape Town.

The caretaker in charge of the Wynberg Reservoir on the mountain reported to the police that he saw what he took to be an aeroplane last night at 9.20, proceeding in the direction of Hout Bay. It carried a strong head light, and as far as he was able to judge it was flying a course a little way out to sea. A few minutes afterwards he telephoned that the aeroplane was returning, and evidently making towards Table Bay. He lost sight of it as it passed behind the higher portion of Table Mountain.

1914 August 20 (Th) Cape Times (S.Afr), p. 5

Aeroplane Reports. / Seen at Various Centres. Cape Argus

CALEDON, August 19.--(Reuter South African Press Agency).-- Railway engineers on construction work at Kykoedie report that an aeroplane was seen by them last night passing them with headlights.

It is suggested that people in the country may have mistaken the searchlight of a man of war at Simon's Town for that of an aeroplane, as the reflection of the searchlights is visible in various parts of the district at night.

A Robertson message states that an aeroplane was distinctly seen at Bonnie Vale and Ashton last night about 10. It is also said to have been seen here by some people at the same time, but not so distinctly.

A Calvernia telegram says: Several reliable people saw the aeroplane over here last night.

1914 August 21 (Fri.) Cape Argus, p. 5.

THE AEROPLANE. / Seen at Porterville. / Reuter's Inland Service. / Porterville, Friday.

An aeroplane with a searchlight was distinctly seen by several people last night approaching from Mooresburg direction. It passed over Bridgetown, Honigsberg and Porterville Road, and disappeared in the direction of Herman.

Aeroplane on the Coast. / Reuter's Inland Service. / Humansdorp, Friday.

The Jeffreys Bay fishing fleet recently reported the appearance of an airship early one morning, travelling in the direction of Cape Town, in sight of the coast. The report was discredited locally. Yesterday and last night, however, it was distinctly seen at St. Francis Light-house, Camtoos Ferry, and at Humansdorp and the surrounding places.

25.20. Zeppelin Seen in Denmark. / [Reuter's Cable Service.] / London, Thursday 2.50 a.m.

The Paris newspaper, "Le Temps" publishes a Copenhagen dispatch saying that a Zeppelin airship was reported to have passed over ~~xxxx~~ Borbjerg, on the west coast of Denmark, at a height of 1000 feet, going ~~xxxx~~ northwards.

1914 August 21 (Fri) Cape Times, p.

THE AEROPLANE. / REPORTS FROM COUNTRY DISTRICTS. / Powerful Headlights.

PORT ELIZABETH, August 20.--(Reuter South African Press Agency).-- Reports have been received from police officers that the mysterious aeroplane was seen in the vicinity of Camtoos this evening.

The machine carried powerful head lights, which were flashed alternately to a searchlight. /

Seen Near Caledon. /

The statement contained in yesterday's telegram that railway construction engineers at Kykoedie saw the headlight on what they took to be an aeroplane on Tuesday night has been corroborated by a telephone message from Caledon.

One of the engineers at Kykoedie, who paid a visit to Caledon yesterday, telephoned to say that several people saw the headlight to the northwest of the camp, about ten miles distant. The light travelled towards the camp, and then turned and disappeared in the direction it had come. Those at the camp who saw the light are convinced that it belonged to an aeroplane. This gentleman combats the suggestion that they mistook the reflection of the Simon's Bay searchlights, visible in certain parts of the district, for the light of an aeroplane. He pointed out that the reflection of the searchlights are seen in an entirely different direction. /

Reported From Riversdale /

A Riversdale correspondent writes: "I wish to inform you that the headlight of an aeroplane was distinctly seen through the clouds at Riversdale on Saturday night about 10.15. The machine flew in the direction of Mossel Bay. It was seen by myself and about 12 others." / POWERFUL AIRCRAFT IN G.S.W.A. / Biplane that Achieved the World's Record. / Description of the Machine. /

An article which appeared in a recent issue of the German paper, "Kolonie Und Heimat," contains some interesting particulars with reference to the air craft supplied to the German colonies, and deals more particularly with the two machines sent to German South-West Africa, which are in that territory at the present time. It appears from the article that the first attempt on the part of the German Government to supply the colonies with machines was made at Kiao Chau, the naval station in China, which has come into the limelight in connection with the present war. A Rumpler monoplane is stationed there.

It seems that the German Imperial authorities, in their endeavour to carry out this scheme, have been greatly aided by various private societies. The contributions for the purpose were so large that the authorities were enabled to experiment a good deal and build special machines to suit the conditions obtaining in each centre.

Incidentally, it might be mentioned that residents in German South-West Africa interested in aeronautics took up the matter so enthusiastically that £5,000 was sent to Berlin to be added to this special fund. In April last two machines were sent to German South-West Africa, and it was intended, in the course of the next few months, that further machines should be sent to that quarter and one to Kamerun.

The air craft forwarded to German South-West Africa comprised a ~~Ra~~ Roland double-decker biplane and a double-decker biplane from the factory of the Automobil und Aviatik Company, Mulhausen. The article states that the machines were to be used for certain experiments, such as the carriage of mail matter, the carriage of diamonds, and for the purpose of rendering medical aid to settlers in outlying portions of the territory. The machines selected for German South-West Africa were constructed by firms which had been eminently successful in important competitions on the Continent.

The Aviatik double-decker last autumn gained the £5,000 prize offered by the National Flying Union. The machine put up a world's record for a flight of 2,100 kilometres (roughly 1,400 miles) within a space of 24 hours. The Roland double-decker is a sister machine to one which, in February of this year, gained the reliability record, and shortly afterwards, made a 16 hour overland journey. Both machines are fitted with 100 h.p. Mercedes motors, and are specially constructed to suit the variable climate. Steel tubing was largely used in their construction.

Each machine is fitted with a patent military compass of the latest pattern. Should, however, the aviator lose his way in spite of the compass, he can fall back on the "signal mirror and light," a recent invention of Professor Donath. By means of this he could signify his presence to a distance of from 30 to 50 kilometres. Both machines, in addition, are specially fitted with receptacles for carrying a considerable stock of provisions, water and petrol, racks for small arms, and a comprehensive repair outfit.

The machines are in charge of the Commandant of the Troops in German South-West Africa (Lieut.-Col. Von Heydebreck), who has under him an army aeronautical officer and a staff of experienced pilots. The Roland double-decker is stationed at Keetmanshoop, and the Aviatik at Karibib. There is another machine in the territory, which was sent out for exhibition flights by the firm of Rudolf Hertzog, but this does not compare with the Roland or the Aviatik biplanes. 1914 August 21 (Fri) Johannesburg Star, p.4. (card 1)

MYSTERIOUS 'PLANE. / The Seapoint Spectacle. / What Two Ladies Saw. / (From Our Own Correspondent.)

CAPE TOWN, Thursday.--A thrill of excitement was experienced by residents of Sea Point yesterday evening, when it was reported that an aeroplane had been seen by several local residents. Of late many such rumours have been freely circulated, but last night's story possessed such a strong element of truth that an "Argus" representative had an interview with one of the trio of ladies who were reported to have been actual witnesses of the disquieting sight.

"It was about twenty minutes to seven," she said, "when a friend and myself were on our way home to dinner. We were near the Post Office at Three Anchor Bay when I chanced to look upwards for a moment. I could scarcely believe what I saw and my startled exclamation having attracted the attention of my companion she also looked up and saw what looked like two large pieces of wood about 12 feet long gliding horizontally through the air at a great height. At the time we saw the biplane--for such it must have been--it was between Robben Island and Moulli Point. It was travelling at a great speed and we gazed at it wonderingly for a space of two minutes, when it disappeared in the mist over the far side of Signal Hill."

The matter is the subject of much speculation to-day, but, of course, there is nothing in the report to occasion alarm.

Still Speculating. / Later. There is still much speculation about the mysterious aeroplane said to have been seen flying over Capetown lately. This morning quite a number of Sea Point residents declare that it was easily visible over Signal Hill. It is highly improbable, however, that it is a hostile aeroplane as in that case it could hardly have remained so long in the vicinity. Some believe that it belongs to the military; others hazard the conjecture that it is a large box kite. Anyhow it does not seem to occasion much alarm. /

At Ashton. / (REUTER'S SOUTH AFRICAN SERVICE.) CAPETOWN, Thursday.--Last night at Ashton Station, on the new Cape Central Railway, an aeroplane was distinctly seen to the west over Worcester by about fifteen different people. The machine had a strong headlight, such as are carried by motor-cars. This morning, about half-past five, the aeroplane was seen in the direction of Mossel Bay by the same people.

Seen at Gamtoos. / (REUTER'S SOUTH AFRICAN SERVICE.) PORT ELIZABETH, Thursday.--Reports have been received from Police officers that a mysterious aeroplane was seen in the vicinity of Gamtoos this evening. The machine carried powerful headlights, which were flashed similarly to a searchlight. Cape Argus 21/7 1914 August 21 (Fri) Pretoria News, p. 5.

Mysterious (?) Sky Visitor. / Quite a sensation was caused in town about 8 o'clock last night when a light was seen moving in the [sky] towards the north. Word quickly [spread] around that it was an aeroplane, and groups of people were [to be seen gazing] at the mysterious light. [A pair] of night glasses however, revealed the fact that the light was nothing more than a fire balloon, probably sent up as a joke. 1914 August 21 (Fri) Rand Daily Mail, p. 5.

THAT AEROPLANE / The Reuter--S.A. Press Agency / Capetown, Thursday. At Ashton station on the New Cape Central Railway last night an aeroplane was distinctly seen to the west over Worcester by about fifteen different people. The machine had a strong headlight such as is carried by motor cars. This morning, about 5.30, an aeroplane was distinctly seen in the direction of Mossel Bay by the same people. / The Reuter--S.A. Press Agency Port Elizabeth, Thursday. Reports have been received from police officers that a mysterious aeroplane was seen in the vicinity of Gamtoos this evening. The machine carried powerful head lights, which were [flashed] similarly to a searchlight. 1914 August 22 (Sat) Cape Times, p. 7. (card 1)

AIR PILOT IN GERMAN SERVICE Some Interesting Particulars. A young aviator, who is hurrying back to England to join his corps, in the course of an interview yesterday, was good enough to communicate to a representative of the "Cape Times" some particulars which came under his notice while a fellow-passenger on board ship with the German aviators bound for German South-West Africa in April last. He said: There is reason to believe that a Mr. Buchener, who is a professional aeronaut, and who approached the Durban Municipal Council on the question of giving flying exhibitions during the present season is now in German S.W. Africa, ~~xxxxxxx~~ or may be the aviator who is now perplexing the military authorities at the Cape. He was commissioned by the German Government to carry out a series of experiments on the behaviour of aeroplanes in high latitudes, as well as to compare the machine he was interested in with others of military make. He was flying a biplane of a heavier type than those used in the French and British armies, and in this class of machine he went through the Balkan war. He arrived in German S.W. Africa at the end of April last, and it is understood that his exhibitions there were highly successful. It is believed that he flew from Swakopmund to the German Possessions in East Africa, following the coast line up to Dar es Salaam, where he also gave exhibition flights. Another German who came out at the same time was Herr Von Scheele. He was also sent by the German Government to experiment with a view, it was said, of ascertaining the utility of the flying machine for the conveyance of diamonds and the establishment of a post between the coast and Windhuk.

STRENGTH OF GERMAN MACHINES. There was also a third, in the person of Herr Von Zech, who represented the Automobil and Aviatik Co., Mulhausen. He was not, however, an aviator, but had with him an expert pilot, Von Zech filling the role of passenger. With this variety of machines, no doubt exhaustive experiments were carried out, the principal idea being to find the best class of machine capable of carrying a heavy load in the practically unknown air conditions of these latitudes. One of the chief difficulties to be overcome was the overheating of the engine in a hot climate like German West Africa, and while the machines are now water cooled, aviators prefer to do most of their flying by night. Our informant was unable to say whether the experiment of flying under tropical conditions was found practicable or not.

"The difference between our aeroplanes (English and French) and the Germans is that the latter are built on much stronger lines, with a larger spread of plane, but this has to be purchased at the cost of speed, their specialty being endurance flights. They seldom fly at a higher speed than 60 miles per hour, while our machines are very fast and are built much lighter."

Their military aeroplanes, he continued, have made continuous flights of 800 kilometers, roughly 500 miles, remaining eight hours in the air.

"Yes," he replied in answer to another question, "all modern aeroplanes have a self-starter attachment, and are able to carry at least one passenger."

NIGHT THE TIME FOR FLYING. Asked if he thought it was possible to complete the journey from Windhuk to the Cape Peninsula in one continuous flight, our informant thought it was hardly likely, pointing out that it would be necessary in any case to have a depot where the aviator could get a refill of petrol for the return journey or to continue his flight, as no machine at present is able to carry an indefinite supply.

Replying to another question, he said: "Night is the time to fly in these latitudes, not only for the reason already mentioned, but also from the fact that the bright skies of the Southern Hemisphere also make it possible to discern the contour of the country, particularly so in the case of the Peninsula, where land and sea unite. You can always distinctly make out the coast line on the darkest night, the difference between land and water being unmistakable."

Asked for his opinion about the present aeroplane scare, all our informant could say that if they were enemy machines, it follows that there must be depots dotted about the country from which petrol supplies were drawn.

1914 August 22, (Sat) Cape Times, p. 7. (CARD 2)

AEROPLANES IN THE UNION. PENINSULA FLIGHTS. / Great Excitement at Sea Point. There was considerable excitement at Sea Point yesterday morning, when an aeroplane was sighted in the neighbourhood of Signal Hill. The news that the mysterious machine was in the neighbourhood spread like wildfire, and hundreds came out of doors and gazed up to the sky, while a battery of field glasses were trained on the visitor. Those who saw it between nine and ten in the morning say that after remaining stationary for a brief space it suddenly shot towards the Lion's Head.

Then it came back to the first position, disappeared behind Signal Hill, to reappear at the Cape Town end. Though at a considerable height those who trained glasses on the visitor were emphatic on the point that it was an air machine. Between eleven and twelve it made a further appearance, and again residents by the score rushed out of doors to see all there was to be seen and discuss the situation.

Shortly after one o'clock it hove in sight again, but at a greater altitude. At five o'clock on the previous afternoon many rushed out to "see the aeroplane." People who used powerful glasses emphatically declared that they saw an aeroplane, but there were others who were not disposed to make a definite statement on the point. On Monday morning a lady resident of Sea Point declared that not only did she see the machine, but that she caught the noise of the engine. One evening early in the week several residents saw the headlight and reported the matter.

FLIGHT OVER THE PENINSULA LAST NIGHT. At 7.35 last evening the headlight of an aeroplane was seen at St. James by a number of residents. Seen against the edge of the mountain it advanced and retired three times. Previously it had been observed for several minutes.

At 8.20 p.m., the aeroplane was seen by a number of people at Observatory. Another Appearance at Port Elizabeth. The following Reuter messages on the subject were received yesterday.

Port Elizabeth.--Reliable reports were again received this evening as to the mysterious aeroplane. The police officers at Gamtoos, who described the machine in flight last night telegraphed in this evening that it had crossed the heavens again. Hard on the heels of this report came reports from well-known farmers at Kragga, Kama and Bushy Park, about 20 miles from Gamtoos and a few miles from the city, that they had also seen the machine in the early part of the evening.

Porterville.--An aeroplane, carrying a headlight, was distinctly seen by several people last night, approaching from the Moorreesburg direction. It passed over Bridgetown, Honigberg, and Porterville Road, and disappeared in the direction of Hermon. SEEN AT HUMANSDORP.

Humansdorp.--The Jeffreys Bay fishing fleet recently reported the appearance of an airship early one morning, traveling in the direction of Cape Town, in sight of the coast. The report was discredited locally. Yesterday and last night, however, it was distinctly seen at St. Francis Lighthouse, Gamtoos Ferry, and at Humansdorp and the surrounding places.

Tulbagh.--The aeroplane, whose doings have been reported lately, has been seen here by several trustworthy people. Mafeking.--This morning, shortly before eight o'clock, an aeroplane was observed by a number of people. It came from the North, and in approaching the town turned off in a westerly direction. 1914 August 22 (Sat) Natal Advertiser (Durban), p. 1.

The Mysterious Aeroplane. / [Reuters.] Port Elizabeth, August 21.--Reliable reports were again received this evening as to an aeroplane being seen. The police officers at Gamtoos, who described the machine in flight last night, wired in this evening that it had crossed the heavens again.

Hard on the heels of this report came a report from well-known farmers at Kragga-Kama and Bundy Park, about 20 miles from Gamtoos and a few miles from this city, that they also had seen the machine in the early part of the evening.

1914 August 22 (Sat) Rand Daily Mail, p. 5. Cape Argus 22/5

THE MYSTERIOUS AEROPLANE / The Reuter--S.A. Ag Press Agency / Port Elizabeth, Friday.

Reliable reports were again received this evening as to an aeroplane. The police officers at Gamtoos who described the machine in flight last night, wired in this evening that it had crossed the heavens again. Hard on the heels of this report come reports from well-known farmers at Krugga Mama and Bushy Park, about twenty miles from Gamtoos and a few miles from the city, that they also saw the machine in the early part of the evening.

AEROPLANE SEEN AT MAFEKING / The Reuter--S.A. Press Agency / Mafeking Friday.

This morning, shortly before eight o'clock, an aeroplane was observed by a number of people. It came from the north, and on approaching the town turned off in a westerly direction.

1914 August 24 (Mon) Cape Argus, p. 3.

THE AIRSHIP AGAIN. / [Reuter's Inland Service.] / Graaf-Reinet, Saturday.

Several well-known residents in town report that last night about 11.30 they saw what they believed to have been an aeroplane passing over the town. The various accounts all state that a bright light (like a head light or search-light) was seen high up passing at a fast rate towards the south-east. Some eye-witnesses state they heard a loud whizzing noise. I give these reports for what they are worth, but considerable excitement has been caused in the town.

Tues. 25, 3. THE AEROPLANE AGAIN. / [Reuter's Inland Service.] / Port Elizabeth, Monday.

The aeroplane which was previously reported as having been seen was again seen last evening at Zuurberg, making in the direction of Blue Cliff, on the Graaff-Reinet line, about forty miles north of the city. The report comes from a reliable source.

Wed. 26, 2nd ed., p. 5. THAT AEROPLANE. / Seen at Hoetjes Bay. / [Reuter's Inland Service.] / Hoetjes Bay, Wednesday.

An aeroplane was seen at 8.30 last night travelling from Langebaan in a northerly direction. The red and white lights on the stern were quite plain.

1914 August 24 (Mon) Cape Argus (2nd ed), n. 5.

THEY SEA POINT AEROPLANE. / (To The Editor, "Cape Argus.")

Sir.--I was pleased to read your sensible remarks re "Aeroplanes" in last night's "Argus." You would do a kindness to the public if you would further explain that the supposed Sea Point "aeroplanes" are myths. There is a hawk or similar bird that flutters over the hill, and there is a toy kite being flown by a little boy who has snooded the public. Do aeroplanes flap their wings, remain stationary, or are they connected to terra firma by a plect of string? These silly rumours are on a par with the idea spread around that there are 20,000 German soldiers in German South West Africa, the actual amount being less than 3,000.--Yours, etc., / H.P.A.

1914 August 24 (Mon) Star (Johannesburg) Star, p. 4.

NIGHT LIGHTS / Probably a Box Kite. /

Inquiries made in many quarters as to the appearance of an airship over the town last evening do not help matters materially. A light or lights were undoubtedly seen by residents of the western and eastern Suburbs. As the lights ultimately disappeared in the Sachsenvald Plantation, it is believed they were attached to a large box kite. No solid matter of any kind was observable, as would have been the case if the object had been anything in the nature of an airship of any dimensions. Parents who know that their children have box kites should not allow them to experiment with such playthings while the war crisis lasts.

1914 August 24 (Mon) Pretoria News, p. 5.

Germany's Preparations. / Torpedo and Airship at Orkney Islands. /

The following cuttings from "The Orkney Herald" of July 22, kindly supplied by a correspondent, goes to show that the Orkney Islands have been visited by foreign torpedoes and airships of late. This is of importance, as there is always a likelihood of trouble in that quarter: GERMAN TORPEDO BOAT AT SCAPA. [A German torpedo boat docked for a day at Scapa (the war having not yet begun), and the German Vice-Consul along with two town officials were received aboard by the commanding officer.]

MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP AT SANDAY.

Last Sunday evening, about 9.15 o'clock, Mr. Thomas Drever, Colligarth, Sanday, observed a light well down on the skyline on the east side of the island, which he at first took for a particularly bright star. After looking at it for a few moments he came to the conclusion that it was moving towards him. It rapidly approached the island from the southeast until it was near his farm, about 500 feet or thereby overhead. It then stopped and began to circle in the direction of the doctor's house and the East U.F. Church, the light at times being obscured. Gradually it came down until it was about 300 feet up. By this time a faint humming noise could be heard, and the beams of the light were visible to the naked eye. Mr. Drever went into his house and brought out a night glass. Upon looking through the glass he could discern a dark mass above the light, which resembled a small cloud pointed at each end. After remaining a considerable time in the vicinity it mounted up to a great height and went out of sight to the southward shortly before midnight. Several people were with Mr. Drever at the time, and all are firmly of opinion that it was a flying machine of some kind that they saw. The light was fine and clear, and the light was seen by people in other parts of the island. What the object of the visit was one can only surmise, but to the observers it appeared as if observations were being taken to verify the position of the airship. It will be remembered that some time ago mysterious lights were seen flickering over this island, as well as over other parts of the coasts of England and Scotland, which have never been clearly accounted for. On these occasions the lights were visible for only a brief period, but this time the visitant was seen for an hour and a half, which disposes of the idea that was first formed, that it was an aeroplane that was seen, as an aeroplane can only remain a short time in the air. An airship, and one that was well under control, might have been manoeuvred as the late visitor was, and is the most feasible conclusion that can be arrived at after hearing the evidence of those who were privileged to see it.

1914 August 24 (Mon) Rand Daily Mail, p. 3.

AEROPLANE MYSTERY / MYSTERIOUS NOCTURNAL VISITORS / (From Our Own Correspondent.) / Bloemfontein, Sunday.

The mysterious nocturnal aeroplane has at last made its expected appearance in Bloemfontein in the small hours of the morning.

According to eyewitnesses, it has been seen hovering in the sky with a powerful searchlight displayed, and as far as can be gathered, it has only been seen by three or four favoured persons. On the first occasion it was seen close to the Victoria Park, but it disappeared rapidly out of sight. The following night it was again observed hovering round the western portion of Bloemfontein with its powerful searchlight plainly visible. Early on Saturday morning it made its appearance once more in the direction of the racecourse. This happened about 4 a.m., and the humming of the engine was plainly heard. Once more the flying visitor disappeared over the horizon.

That the aeroplane must be German is the popular conception. That its occupant is utilizing the darkness of night to carry out his spying operations preparatory to a German invasion of the Free State is also an accepted theory. Up to the present the advent of the mysterious aeroplane has been received with a good deal of scepticism. The outcome of the investigations made, however, point to the fact that it is quite possible that an aeroplane has been seen by the persons concerned.

Mr. W. A. Maher, of the railway school, Providence Siding, district [Bethulie] writes to the "Friend," stating that two railway employes testify to having seen an aeroplane with a strong headlight flying at a great height in the direction of Steynsburg (C.P.) on Thursday night, August 20, at 11.20 p.m.

Strangely enough, an aeroplane was also seen in Bloemfontein early on Friday morning.

1914 August 25 (Tues) Cape Argus, 2nd ed., p. 5.

STAR OR AEROPLANE. /

There is a report in town, states the Oudtshoorn paper, that an aeroplane was seen flying towards the east to the north of the town on Sunday. On Tuesday night at about 9.30 a bright star, behind which was a bank of clouds coming up from the west, was thought to be the headlight of some flying machine. As the bank of clouds worked up from the west it appeared that the star was travelling westward. A Greek gentleman, however, proved this to be an optical illusion. Leaning his arm against a tree and keeping the point of a knife in line with the supposed headlight, he found that the bright star was quite stationary.

1914 August 25 (Tues) Cape Times, p. 5.

That Aeroplane! / Return Visit to the East

PORT ELIZABETH, Aug. 24.--(Reuter South African Press Agency).--The aeroplane, which was previously reported as having been seen, was again seen last evening at Zuurberg, making in the direction of Blue Cliff, on the Graaff-Reinet line, about forty miles north of the city. The report comes from a reliable source. (1st shots fired in the Union) 1914 August 25 (Tues) Star (Johannesburg), p. 5.

THAT AEROPLANE. / Seen Again. (REUTER'S SOUTH AFRICAN SERVICE.)

PORT ELIZABETH, Monday.--The aeroplane previously reported was seen again last evening at Zuurberg, making in the direction of Blue-cliff on the Graeff-Reinet line, about forty miles north of the city. / (REUTER'S SPECIAL WAR SERVICE.)

CARMARVON, Tuesday.--It is reported that an aeroplane was seen on Sunday night passing southwards over the farm Bitterpoort, one of the farms at Olifantvlei. Pretoria News 25/5

'PLANE OR BALLOON / Worcester Prohibition. /

Interest attaches to the subjoined notice posted at the Worcester Courthouse in view of the repeated reports of an aeroplane flying over various parts of the Cape Province. Notice: As it has come to my knowledge that kites and air balloons to which Chinese lanterns and other lights are suspended, are being sent up a nighttime in this town, notice is hereby given that this must cease, as it causes needless excitement and unnecessary alarm at the present time.--J.W. Kuy's, Magistrate, August 19th. We understand, says the local paper, that some Worcester lads have lately been indulging in this form of amusement.

1914 August 25 (Tues) Rand Daily Mail (Johannesburg), Sect. II pl.

WHEN STARS CONSPIRE / THE "MYSTERIOUS AIRCRAFT" /

This time of war scares is responsible for some fearful and wonderful imagining, but one did really think that the stars would be left alone in their courses. As usual on Sunday evening Venus and Mars made their usual appearance in the heavens, Venus in all the bright array of her white beauty, and red, fiery Mars close in hot pursuit. They ran their everlasting race across the western sky, Venus shining gloriously in the clear heavens, and Mars glowing redder in his martial ardour.

In these beautiful and harmless demonstrations of the heavens our morning contemporary chooses to find the semblance of a German airship, full of bombs and blood-thirsty airmen. We think the public will strongly resent this wholesale libel of our pet evening luminaries.

In view of the serious allegations against the heavenly bodies enquiries were made by the "Rand Daily Mail" at the Government Observatory yesterday morning. It was found that the astronomers were at work with their instruments as usual on Sunday evening. Venus—a large white light—and Mars, a ~~big~~ bright red light—were unusually brilliant on Sunday night, and their movements were obvious to the naked eye. The reason for the unusual brilliance is found in the fact that Johannesburg is but little lighted on Sundays, and the heavenly bodies stand out more clearly. The use of opera glasses or field-glasses would, stated the expert at the Observatory, tend to make the stars appear to move. It is impossible to keep such glasses steady. The Government officials saw no airship, and we are inclined to believe that a hostile vessel would scarcely display lights while reconnoitering. A needless scare seems to have been raised.

1914 August 26 (Wed) Cape Argus, p. 3.

THE SEA POINT AEROPLANE. / (To The Editor, "Cape Argus.")

Sir,—I read in your issue of the 24th inst. a letter about the above addressed to you by a gentleman who signs himself "H.P.S." in which he desires you to be good enough to explain to the public that the aeroplane seen at different times at Sea Point recently is a myth, and that in all probability what the public have taken for an aeroplane has been nothing more than a hawk, which frequently flutters over the hill, or a box kite flown by a little boy.

Now I would just like to disillusion the mind of "Mr. H.P.S." and inform him right here that what has been seen by various people at Sea Point is an aeroplane. There are some people, thank goodness, who still can discriminate between a box kite and an aeroplane, and who do know that hawks don't fly about with strong headlights.

I would just like to assure "Mr. H.P.S." that I, together with four other gentlemen, saw the aeroplane or hydroplane, last Thursday evening at about 9.45. At the time it was seen it was travelling at a good height over the sea in an easterly direction. It subsequently slowly descended and disappeared from view in the course of its flight it displayed at intervals red and green lights. We saw it distinctly with the naked eye, but had a better view of it with field glasses which we were using. I am quite aware that a box kite is to be seen occasionally at Sea Point, but then, as I have said before, a box kite is not an aeroplane, at least to

ONE WHO KNOWS.

1914 August 26 (Wed) Cape Times, p. 5.

Aeroplane Reports.

DARLING, Aug. 25.—(Reuter South African Press Agency.)—A mysterious aeroplane was seen by a well-known farmer here, residing near the coast, on Friday last, at 10.30 p.m. It was traveling fairly high up and along the coast line in the direction of Cape Town. It had a strong headlight, which was visible all the time.

CARNARVON, Aug. 25.—It is reported that an aeroplane was seen on Sunday night, passing southwards over the farm Bitterpoort, one of the farms at Olifantsvlei.

1914 August 26 (Wed) Johannesburg Star, 2nd ed., p. 4. (card 1)

AEROPLANE MYSTERY. / East Rand Story. / (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.) / GERMISTON, Wednesday.—A story was circulated in Germiston that an aeroplane was seen over Clebe Station, near Germiston, at four o'clock in the morning. Most people are sceptical, but what foundation there is for the rumour is hard to trace.

Something Seen in January.

Yesterday I received the following interesting communication from a former resident of Pretoria, now of Benoni, which is not without some piquant interest: In regard to the presumed German aeroplane said to have been seen over Pretoria, I should like to relate to you a little experience of my own while in that town. One evening in January, between 9 and 10 p.m., the children called me to the verandah to see a shooting star. We all went to the gate and watched. The supposed star proved to be a powerful light or lamp attached to what appeared to be an aeroplane in shape. For some time the machine circled over the town and then descended about 11:30 p.m. as far as I could guess on to the roof of the Law Courts, not far from where we were. As the machine circled in the air it made a loud swishing kind of noise. I spoke of the matter next day, yet, strange to say, the only one who had noticed it was an old native man. / Plane or Kite? / Golfers' Game Interrupted. /

A correspondent of the "Cape Argus" wrote on Saturday: "Do we sleep, do we dream, do we wonder and doubt? Are things what they seem, or is visions about?" asked Bert (sic) Harte's "Truthful James" many years ago. Something is certainly about, but whether it is a vision, an aeroplane, or a harmless box kite, which some benevolent old gentleman is experimenting with in the neighborhood of Sea Point has yet to be proved. Venus by night, box kite or bird by day, be it what it may, the resident of Sea Point, who claimed to be "a bit of a hermit with an eye like a hawk," and he was sure the thing he had seen flying about various parts of the Peninsula was "an eagle." Another sea and star gazer of some celebrity said with Sairey Gamp he didn't believe there was any such thing as an aeroplane flying about the place at all. I have it on the very best authority that yesterday afternoon a very interesting match between the ladies of the Metropolitan Cold Club and the Royal Cape had to be abandoned through a box kite.

The match was set down for decision on the former's links, near the fort at Green Point. The grounds were so crowded, it being purely a ladies' day, that the gentlemen could not manage to get a chance of a game till nearly six o'clock.

Like a Bir Bird.

While the match was in progress one of the ladies was seen hurriedly leaving the links. She was quickly followed by the others, all making for the gate near the first tee. Someone had ordered them to abandon play. It was said the instruction came from the fort nearby. One lady, a prominent golf player, said an officer requested her to leave the links, at the same time pointing out an aeroplane (?) which was then visible about five hundred feet high, and not appearing much larger at that distance than a big sea bird, owing to the falling background of light and dark clouds. Alternately, said a well-known city professional gentleman, who was present to the writer this morning, the object, whatever it was, certainly gave one the impression that it grew bigger and more distinct every now and then, but its bearing remained absolutely unaltered. And, to use a military expression, it "marked time" at the same spot for almost an hour, simply swaying gently in the light breeze. Naturally, though, there was some excitement, for the lady in question said she had been told by the officer that the aeroplane was expected to come within the range of shell fire, and that it would be dangerous to stay on the links. She informed her opponent that she would have to abandon the game. Other ladies resigned, being too nervous to finish. The few gentlemen present then took advantage of the unexpected opportunity of a clear course, which had the effect of bringing some of the ladies back. The majority of those present were convinced the object seen in the sky was nothing more or less than a large box kite and ridiculed the suggestion that an aeroplane was about.

1914 August 26 (Wed) Pretoria News, p. 5.

Another Sky Visitor?

There have been numerous rumours abroad of [hosts] of mysterious lights seen in the sky over the Pretoria district, and stories of foreign aeroplanes and Zeppelins have been freely circulated.

To-day another story came from Dorrdepoort, where it is stated that natives witnessed something mysterious in the air. It is described by one native as "a great big thing, with red and blue lights, and another big bright light which shone down to the ground."

1914 August 26 (Wed) Rand Daily Mail (Johannesburg), p. 3.

THAT AEROPLANE /

The "Worcester Standard" records the appearance of an aeroplane at Worcester, Swellendam, Robertson, Goudini and Nuy, and concludes by saying that the following is posted up at Worcester Court house—

Notice: As it has come to my knowledge that kites and air balloons to which Chinese lanterns and other lights are suspended, are being sent up at nighttime in this town, notice is hereby given that this must cease, as it causes needless excitement and unnecessary alarm at the present time.—J.W. Kuys, Magistrate, August 19.

The paper understands that some Worcester lads have lately been indulging in this form of amusement.

1914 August 27 (Th) Cape Argus, 2nd ed., p. 5.

THE MYSTERIOUS AEROPLANE. / What East London Saw. /

East London, and particularly Oxford-street, was agog with excitement on Saturday evening. At every corner, states the "Dispatch," were to be seen groups of men, women and children, with eyes goggling, fingers pointing heavenward, and tongues going twenty-four to the dozen as they gazed at an alleged aeroplane in the western heavens. There it was sure enough, visible to all but the blind; at least, a very brilliant light was visible. An aeroplane it was, and that there was no doubt, for according to various observers it went through all the tricks in an up-to-date airman's repertoire. It looped the loop, squared the circle, spiralled up and spiralled down, volplaned, Tangoed to the right and one-stepped to the left, advanced, retired, set to partners, hands down the middle, did everything except come nearer and descend in the Recreation Ground of the Market Square. And that searchlight, what did that not do? It waxed and waned, appeared and disappeared, twinkled, winked the other eye, and signalled in the Morse code in English, French, Dutch, German, Sanscrit, Volapuk and Pitman's shorthand. And all the time it was getting further and further away, though never diminishing in brightness, so that it must have been carried in the tail of the machine.

And oh, the theories that were advanced. Men laid down the law, all at once, nobody listening. Ladies became alarmed and wanted to go home and protect their babies from bombs and children danced around and thought it fine. At the Olympia Rink a fuse thoughtfully blew out, dousing all the lights, so that patrons might have a better view of the wonder. And it was not until it disappeared behind a heavy bank of clouds in the west that East Londoners breathed a sigh of relief at another happy escape, and went home to dip their pens in the candle and write to the "Daily Dispatch" to describe in letters of fire and words of flame the dastardly attempt to blow up an undefended city.

Judge of the general surprise when the same aeroplane appeared yesterday in about the same place. However, it is safe to predict that it may be looked for again to-night and for several following nights. As a matter of fact what was seen was the evening star, Venus, which happened to be particularly brilliant. A heavy bank of clouds fringed with flying acid and aided by vivid imaginations accounted for all the evolutions and manoeuvres, and we have to hesitation in assuring everyone that they may sleep in peace, for if it depends upon this particular aeroplane, no bombs will be dropped on East London. Twinkle, twinkle, little star, / How I wonder what you are. Up above the world you fly / Like an airship in the sky.

NATIVE RESTLESSNESS / The Folly of Wild Rumours /

We are informed that there is a very considerable restlessness among the natives in ~~the~~ Durban, and that large numbers are returning to their kraals in great haste, because they fear that some disaster as the outcome of the European War will befall them.

It appears that they have been led away by false rumours and are confident that German aeroplanes are about to deal death and destruction from on high, that their kraals will be burnt up and their people killed by falling bombs. The matter has also engaged the attention of prominent chiefs, who also appear to dread that something unusual is about to happen.

There can be no doubt that this scare among the natives owes its origin to the wild and foolish rumours which are being circulated by ignorant alarmists. White men are able to listen to such rumours with calmness, well knowing that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, they have no foundation in fact, but with the natives it is entirely different. They have not all got access to the newspapers and are easily led astray by false and exaggerated rumours.

It will be remembered that on August 10 the Union Government felt constrained to issue a reassuring message to the natives, and this was published in the columns of the daily Press. We do not know, however whether the message has been conveyed to them through the ordinary channels, and certainly no reports of any large gatherings of natives being publicly addressed by the Native Commissioners or magistrates have reached us.

Although there can be no doubt, from the information at our disposal, that the scare has got hold of the Durban natives. It may not be too late for those who have dealings with them to allay their groundless fears. In view of the importance of the matter, we re-produce the text of General Botha's official message as wired from Pretoria on August 10, which read as follows:--

"General Botha feels that as some concern may be felt by the natives in regard to rumours which may have reached them as to the existence of a state of war in His Majesty's Dominions, it is desirable to send them the following message:--

"A state of war with Germany does at present exist, and the forces of the Empire in Europe are actively engaged with His Majesty's enemies. There is, however, little probability at present of any trouble which need seriously affect the natives in the Union of South Africa, though there may for a time be a considerable disturbance in commercial conditions, curtailing in certain directions, the opportunity of employment for natives.

"The Government, therefore, trusts that the natives will display their customary loyalty to His Majesty and the Union of South Africa, by going quietly about their daily work, and paying no heed to idle rumours, resting assured that the Government, as heretofore, will carefully watch over their interest in common with those of the other inhabitants of the Union.

"General Botha will at all times be prepared, through his offices to furnish any further information which may be sought as the situation develops, and to explain, as far as lies in his power, any point which may seem obscure."

1914 August 20 (Fri) Cape Argus, p. 4.

SEA POINT AEROPLANE. / (To The Editor, "Cape Argus.")

Sir.--I read with much amusement a letter signed by H.P.S. appearing in your issue of the 24th inst., wherein he very kindly informs us that the hydroplane or aeroplane that has been seen flying over and around our city lately is a hawk or a box kite flown by some little boys. Now I would just like to ask H.P.S. if he has ever heard of, or seen a hawk flying about at night showing a very strong head light, or of little boys putting out to sea at nine o'clock at night to fly a kite? I happened to be one of the four gentlemen mentioned in a letter of last evening's issue, signed by "One Who Knows," who had the pleasure of seeing this aeroplane, and can corroborate all "One Who Knows" has said.--Yours, etc.,

ANOTHER WHO KNOWS.

Cape Argus 8/28, p. 5.--222 Appendix p.
1914 August 28 (Fri) Johannesburg Star, 2nd ed., p. 3.

AEROPLANE OR PLANET? / Bright-Burning Venus. /

Residents all over the Peninsula (says the "Argus") have been excited for the past week or more about the mysterious aeroplane. Those who say they saw it are positive that it is an aerial craft and we have ~~had~~ even had telegrams from the country saying that residents in the Clanwilliam and Robertson districts have seen it. The movements of this aircraft have caused a certain amount of perturbation. A suggestion has now been put forth by the astronomers at the Royal Observatory. Almost invariably this aeroplane, when seen at night, has been observed about nine o'clock, bearing a strong headlight. Well, at the present time the planet Venus is very bright and it is suggested that people with strong imagination, might be inclined to think they were looking at the headlight of an ~~air~~ aeroplane. / [continued by Cape Argus, Fri. Aug. 21, p. 6.] Last night down at Observatory several residents were watching the planet, no doubt under the impression that it was the air vessel which has been causing so much speculation for the past week.

If the aeroplane was a hostile one then it could only come from G.S.W. Africa, and would not betoken its presence by carrying a headlight.

1914 August 28 (Fri) Natal Advertiser, last p.

ALLEGED NATIVE RESTLESSNESS / What the Officials Have Done.

We are glad to learn from an authoritative source, with regard to the statements appearing in this paper yesterday, that more than a week ago the magistrate at Pinetown, who is a fluent native linguist, was sent round the Umsazi locations, and got into personal touch with the chiefs and headmen of every tribe, and that he explained the position to them.

The natives in town have also had the position explained by competent interpreters.

We are glad to be in a position to state that these ~~taxi~~ definite and necessary steps have been taken by the local officials to allay the not unnatural alarm of natives, who, of course, are easily led to believe the rumours which they hear from white men. There is every reason to believe that such mischief has been done by employers who talk foolishly to their native servants, and repeat silly rumours, and it was mainly with the object of drawing attention to this that we referred to the matter.

We have caused inquiries to be made in such quarters as are likely to furnish facts, rather than rumours, and as a result we can fully confirm the statements made in this paper yesterday.

We are informed that the authorities took fresh steps to warn the natives this morning against the folly of being scared away by false reports. It is nevertheless acknowledged that our article was timely and that it is eminently desirable that a general endeavour be made to quieten the needless uneasiness of the natives. Officials closely in touch with the natives states that the railway authorities are experiencing difficulties in coping with the traffic, so many natives demanding train accommodation, and it is expected that the end of the month will see a larger exodus.

A well-known compound manager at the Point has been advised by his Indunas to place extra guards on the compounds in order to prevent the growing cases of desertion. One of the whaling companies at the Bluff is reported to have lost as many as sixty boys recently.

There cannot be any doubt that the natives are exhibiting signs of restlessness and leaving for their homes, but it must be clearly understood that there is a vast difference between "restlessness" and "native unrest," as it is commonly understood. The present attitude of the native is simply a scared feeling and a desire to get to his home in case of coming danger. We have not suggested that the officials charged with the duty of warning the chiefs have failed in that respect, but the fact remains that the natives are to a large extent unconvinced. Perhaps the ~~tax~~ wisest course would be for the European population to refrain from repeating the senseless rumours which are flying about.

1914 August 29 (Sat) Cape Argus, p. 8.

THE SEA POINT AEROPLANE. / (To The Editor, "Cape Argus.")

Sir.--In reply to "Another Who Knows," I would state that personally I have not seen hawks ~~fly~~ flying about at night with green lights attached to their tails, but I have heard of people seeing such things, some even seeing snakes flying about with terrible illuminations. In my letter to you I referred, of course, to the "aeroplane" supposed to have been seen by day. I stay at home at night.--Yours, etc.,

H.P.S.
1914 August 29 (Sat) Cape Times, p. 8.

Defense Department and Aeroplanes. / No Union Machines. / Citizens Requested to Fire on All Visitors.

PRETORIA, Aug. 28.--(Reuter's South African Press Agency.)--Report having been made in the Press and elsewhere during recent weeks of aeroplanes having been seen in flight in various parts of the Union, it is officially notified by the Government that as there are no Union aeroplanes in South Africa, any which may henceforth be seen are enemy aeroplanes.

Anyone, therefore, seeing an aeroplane in flight anywhere in the Union, is requested to fire on it, and attempt to bring it down, or, should it be seen in repose, is invited to capture and to report the matter forthwith to the nearest police post.

1914 August 29 (Sat) Natal Advertiser, p. 7.

ONCE A WEEK ...

Discussing the phantom aeroplane, a "Witness" humorist makes one or two pertinent remarks, as for instance:--

Whether it is a British or German aeroplane nobody knows. Where it comes from is equally a mystery. Where it goes to we cannot guess. How it lands for re-petrolling and where the pilot gets his food are insoluble mysteries.

Nevertheless, it has been flying about Natal every night for nearly two weeks, and has been seen by respectable citizens hovering over Maritzburg long before they have tasted their sixth whiskey.

Why it should carry headlights is hard to say. There is no rule of the air yet, and no policeman up there to enforce it if there were. There are no other aeroplanes in the Natal heavens to run into, and it is not likely to bump into a meteor without seeing it.

Why, too, should it fly by night. Much more useful and interesting observations could be made by daylight. It could be seen for instance whether the last horse had come to hand for Royston's or whether the Carbineers had managed to get hold of uniforms. Then the enemy would know the war was to begin.

And why, if it dare not appear by day, does it advertise its whereabouts by exhibiting a giglanzo after dark?

There is a baffling mystery about it all. If it is German, it is doing poor scouting high up in the air of nightfall, and exhibits bad judgment by lighting up and giving itself away. If it is British why make a mystery at all? It is if it is imagination, why not turn itself into a Zeppelin right away, and give us all a bigger tonic to talk about?

Most sensible people will agree with me in deploring the absence of any legal machinery by which people can be prevented from spreading false and malicious rumours. It is absolutely maddening to be compelled day after day to listen to the amazing rumours which people get hold of, and sometimes I think it is more a case for the doctors than the police. We have all heard the ghastly things which were said about some of the bravest and best of British commanders, how they had fallen victims to disaster before they even got to the front and while no one believed the stories, they were yet told with detail which almost pointed to an authentic origin. Where do these weird yarns come from? Who invents them? and why? So far as public opinion goes, it is not a matter for concern when the subject of the rumour is merely an alleged disaster but when the personal honour of highly-placed persons is concerned, it is a different matter altogether, and I certainly think the authorities should make some effort to trace the origin of the canard, or at least make an example of one or two who have repeated it. People have a most objectionable way of saying afterwards that they "really did not believe it," but all the same the mischief has been done by repeating the scandal.

Then again, these heedless creatures who seem to feed on rumour as a vulture feeds on carrion, never pause to think of [the] effect of their lying twaddle on other people. If you see a statement in the newspaper from a duly accredited agency, you can feel sure that there is some foundation for it, but when it is labelled clearly as a "report" or a "rumour," or what one correspondent on one side or the other supplies some sensation-mongering paper with, you naturally take it for what it is worth. But when a man comes to you and says that he has heard, for instance, that a liner with three hundred nurses on board has been sunk off the English coast, you are apt to get a shock. No one can tell you where the report comes from, only that every one has heard it. These things do not affect men very much, but we forget the women. Many a tender-hearted woman heard that particular rumour during the week, spent sleepless hours thinking of the horror of it, perhaps drawing a mental picture of the same, perhaps only falling asleep to indulge in vivid dreams of some such awful catastrophe. Shock after shock of that kind tells upon the nerves, and it is no relief to find afterwards that the rumour was only a pitiful lie. By that time the mischief is done. People should be sternly discouraged from spreading false rumours, and I certainly think it is a pity that the police cannot take action in the matter.

The unfortunate part of the aeroplane rumours is that the natives have taken them quite seriously, and departed in hot haste to their kraals. One can hardly blame them, for if white men are led away by such stupid tales, we cannot expect natives to discredit them. How any man can be so infernally stupid and unreasoning passes my comprehension. Those who mix with Buller's Brigade during the last war in this country, will remember the "Boer signal" that followed the camp, and always appears shortly after sundown as soon as the tents were pitched—that is, when there were any tents to pitch. What bets were made, what quarrels took place, how men argued and argued that the falling light was a signal to the Boers to show where the camping ground was. It took a long time to convince the men that what they saw was the planet Venus going to bed.

1914 August 29 (Sat) Pretoria News, p. 5.

Day by Day. ...

Among the places visited by the nocturnal aeroplane was Capetown, where it soared over Table Mountain. The caretaker in charge of the Wynberg Reservoir on the mountain reported to the police that he saw what he took to be an aeroplane at about 9.20 one evening, proceeding in the direction of Mout Bay. It carried a strong head light, and as far as he was able to judge it was flying a course a little way out to sea. A few minutes afterwards he telephoned that the aeroplane was returning, and evidently making towards Table Bay. He lost sight of it as it passed behind the higher portion of Table Mountain.

1914 August 29 (Sat) Rand Daily Mail, p. 5.

THOSE AEROPLANES / PUBLIC INVITED TO CAPTURE THEM/ The Reuter S.A. Press Agency / Pretoria, Friday.

Reports having been made in the press and elsewhere during recent weeks of aeroplanes having been seen in flight in various parts of the Union, it is officially notified by the Government that as there are no Union aeroplanes in South Africa, any which may henceforth be seen are the enemy's aeroplanes.

Anyone therefore seeing an aeroplane in flight anywhere in the Union is requested to fire on it and attempt to bring it down, or, should it be seen in repose is ~~requested~~ invited to capture it and report the matter forthwith to the nearest police post.

"AEROPLANES" IN NATAL / (From Our Own Correspondent.) / Durban, Friday
Reports of aeroplane appearances are coming in from many parts of Natal.

In this district opinion ~~is~~ appears to be growing that there is something in these accounts, and that the aeroplanes concerned are Union machines.

1914 August 31 (Mon.) Cape Argus, p. 3.

THAT AEROPLANE. / (TO THE EDITOR, "CAPE ARGUS.")

Sir,—That aeroplane again? Having more than a nodding acquaintance with the technicalities of flying I could point out a dozen reasons why none of my correspondents have seen a hydroplane or an aeroplane flying at night in or around the Peninsula. But to avoid technicalities I will point to one thing only—that headlight.

A headlight is, after all, a headlight. The Motor Ordinance, I think, would not apply aloft, so that our aviator would not have his number taken for flying at night without a tail light. We will take it as a head light. But for your correspondents to see a headlight it must be coming towards them or backing away. As it could not disappear and approach at the same time, I think it must have been backing away. Going away something like one leaves royalty—tail first.

If the four stargazers will send a rough sketch of the scene, with the exact time and place to the Observatory they will tell them which particular star "caught them bending."—Yours, etc., / HEADLIGHT. / (TO THE EDITOR, "CAPE ARGUS.")

Sir,—I give the following as it was told to me to-day. Perhaps you may think it worth while printing.

When on her journey from Durban to Cape Town on Tuesday week the s.s. Kathlaur sighted an aeroplane as it came nearer and nearer to the ship it appeared to be about to swoop down upon her. Eventually it came so close that it touched the wire that is strung from the mast to that of the vessel, and forms part of the wireless apparatus that the ship carries. One of the passengers on board asserts his belief that it was the intention of the aeroplane pilot to cut the wire, but that he failed, and so hurried away. All the passengers of s.s. Kathlaur, as well as the officers and crew, saw the aeroplane, while a number of Indians on board were so alarmed that they knelt down and prayed on deck.—I am, sir etc., / A.E.P. / Cape Town, August 29, 1914.

F.S.—My informant in connection with the above has, I believe, some knowledge of G.S.W. Africa, and made the statement that it is not an uncommon thing there for a doctor, in case of urgent sickness, to be taken by aeroplane to visit his patients. Perhaps some of your readers may be able to support or contradict either of these statements, which are both distinctly interesting, if true.

1914 August 31 (Mon) (Johannesburg) Star, 2nd ed., p. 3.

Coloured Planet.

The other night, writes the Brandfort correspondent of the "Bloemfontein Post," a strange phenomenon was noticed before 9:30. Venus was setting, and the light of the planet changed into a bright red, about every thirty seconds, changing again to a greenish one and then to the natural colours. This was witnessed by ten different people at the Wesleyan Manse. As Venus, when near the horizon, appears to set very quickly, it is possible, if this change has taken place on previous occasions, that she may have been mistaken for an aeroplane? 1914 August 31 (Mon) Natal Advertiser (Durban), p. 1.

The Mysterious Aeroplane. / [Reuter's Special Service.]

UMHATA, August 29.—A gentleman who can be relied upon, has just arrived from the coast and says that on Monday, from a hole in the wall, in old Morley District, two aeroplanes were seen to arise from the vessel, and make an inland incursion, afterwards returning to sea. The vessel has been observed cruising between the rivers St. Mark John and Xera.

Sept. 1, p. 1. Aerial Spy. / Aeroplane Over Middleton. / [Reuters.] SOMERSET EAST, August 31.—An aeroplane passed over Middleton this morning and was seen by the residents and by the passengers in a train. Mon. Aug. 31, p. 5. Cape Argus. THE AEROPLANE AGAIN. / Reuter's Inland Service. / Somerset East, Monday.

An aeroplane passed over Middleton this morning, going in the direction of Cookhouse. It was seen by the residents of Middleton and by passengers in the up train.

1914 August 31 (Mon) Pretoria News, p. 5.

AEROPLANE AT SKINNER'S COURT. / (To the Editor.)

Sir:—Last night a gun shot surprised us. A Mr. Cronje living close to Skinner's Court came up to the hotel and called us out to see the lights of an aeroplane up in the sky.

It was about 8:45 p.m. when it passed over, but I did not see it till it was probably flashing [a] searchlight over the Leper Asylum. About 9:15 p.m. it disappeared north-west, evidently making for German West Africa.

It was travelling at about 50 miles an hour as nearly as I could judge, and was seen by 5 persons.

I also believe it was seen by more of my neighbors, who rushed out to see what was the matter on hearing the warning report of Mr. Cronje's gun.—I am, etc.

Alfred Allen,

1914 September 1 (Tues) Cape Argus, p. 5.

THAT AEROPLANE. / Farmer's Fruitless Shot. / (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.) / Pretoria, Tuesday.

The German aeroplane in South Africa threatens to outdo the sea serpent at the present time as a scare lines, when things are dull. It has now been seen travelling diverse ways in the Pretoria district, and one enterprising farmer a night or two ago, taking advantage of the Government's injunction, tried a pot shot at the aerial object, failing, of course, to hit it.

It is undeniable that real aeroplanes have been seen in various parts of South Africa since the outbreak of war, but it is equally undeniable that most of the objects reported as having been seen are figments of overheated imaginations.

The most disquieting phase of the matter is the apparent ease with which the journeying aeronaut can replenish his supplies of petrol without having to go outside this country for it.

1914 September 1 (Tues) Cape Times, p. 5.

Aeroplane Seen Again.

SOMERSET EAST, Aug. 31.—(Reuter South African Press Agency.)—An aeroplane passed over Middleton this morning, going in the direction of Cookhouse. It was seen by the residents of Middleton and by passengers in the up-train.

Friday Sept. 11, p. 7—Vryburg Aeroplane.

VRYBURG, Sept. 10.—(Reuter South African Press Agency.)—A mysterious aeroplane continues to be seen in different parts of the district.

22, 5a—bright new comet visible near Archernar.

Wed. Nov. 25 p. 7--Aeroplanes in South Africa / A Newspaper's Opinion. Tuesday.--The "Morning Post," [London] in a special article dealing with the reports that the Germans are using aeroplanes in South Africa, says there is every reason to assume that the British forces in South Africa will be given an aeroplane service as up-to-date as that operating on the Continent.--Reuter.

it down to imagination, but in order to corroborate this statement, the names of the parties concerned will be furnished if desired.-- Yours, etc., / "ALERT," / Sea View, September 2, 1914. 1914 September 5 (Sat.) Cape Argus, p. 7.

Tues. Dec. 22 p. 7--"Taube" at Work in German West. / Scared Away by Big Gun Fire. / No Shells Dropped. / (Reuter's Special Correspondent with Sir Duncan McKenzie's Force.)

THAT AEROPLANE. / Natal Reports. / (From Our Own Correspondent.) / Durban, Friday.

Tschaukaib, G.S.W.A., Dec. 20... A Taube monoplane came from Aus this morning about 6 o'clock, but was unable to get near this or any other of our camps, owing to our big gun fire. The airman went as far as Rothkuppe, and then returned flying extremely high, also wide of us. He dropped no shells.

A Verulam correspondent to the local press writes that there is sufficient evidence to believe that aeroplanes pass through the Verulam district every two or three days, approximately in a direction from Tongaat beach to Inanda and beyond, returning in about the same line, viz, due east and west. It is also reported by several residents at Sea View and South Coast Junction that an aeroplane with a strong head light was seen moving across the sky about 9 o'clock on Wednesday night. Another writer states that some of his Indian employees, 20 or more persons in all, saw what they are convinced was an aeroplane over Sydenham, a suburb of Durban, on Monday night about 9 o'clock. He contends that it is time some steps were taken to stop these mysterious flights. 1914 September 5 (Sat) Cape Times, p. 5.

Dec. 25--Zeppelin sighted in Holland & Norway.

1914 September 1 (Tues) Natal Advertiser, last p.

The Mysterious Aeroplane / SEEN AT BELLAIR LAST NIGHT. / The mysterious aeroplane which has set all South Africa talking by its peripatetic proclivities, has now made its appearance nearer home, and it was said to have been seen by some of Bellair's most respected residents a last night. According to our informant it would appear that he was getting ready to retire for the night at about 11 o'clock, when he heard a buzzing noise in the air. With the aeroplane in his mind, he at once went out, and with the aid of a powerful pair of field glasses he made out the shape of something in the air which, with the buzzing sound he heard, convinced him that the aeroplane which has been seen all over South Africa was paying Bellair a visit. He could not make out the form of the machine, but could distinctly see the light it carried and the noise it made was that of an aircraft. Our informant states that presently the light disappeared over the hills in the direction of Isipingo (?), and was seen no more, and from what he saw and heard he was convinced that an aeroplane had passed over Bellair.

AVIATOR DISCUSSES AIR VISITORS. / JOHN WESTON'S VIEWS. / "Searchlights" and Long Distance Flights. / BLOEMFONTEIN, Sept. 4.--(From Our Correspondent.)--"There are no Zeppelins nor any other airships in the Union or German South-West Africa, and aeroplanes are still far from having attained a degree of reliability that would warrant belief in the stories that are reaching us." That is what John Weston, aviator, says in a letter to the "Post."

We learn that the driver and fireman of a train that passed through Bellair at about the same time reported that they also saw the aeroplane. 1914 September 1 (Tues) Rand Daily Mail (Johannesburg), p. 5.

Concerning the phantom aircraft, he points out that the distance from the German border to places where aircraft are reported to have been seen varies from 400 to 500 miles or 800 to 1,000 miles for the double journey, and gives particulars to show that aeroplanes could not have travelled the distance several nights in succession, or remained in the air for several days. Moreover, he says, aircraft could not fulfill any useful purpose by paying us visits in the night. His opinion is that Venus, small fire balloons and illuminated kites, are responsible for all the hubbub. It only requires a little imagination, he adds, to see strong searchlights in Venus, especially when clouds are moving along, as in that case the searchlight would appear to travel in the sky, the apparent speed being proportioned to the velocity of the clouds, and inversely to their distance from observers. Fire balloons are known to have been released in Bloemfontein, and Weston relates an amusing incident which occurred at Brandfort recently when what appeared to be aircraft proved to be a kite to which bicycle lamps had been attached. 1914 September 5 (Sat) Natal Advertiser, p. 7. (card 1)

AEROPLANE NEAR SOMERSET WEST / SEEN IN DAYLIGHT / The Reuter--S.A. Press Agency / Somerset East, Monday.

An aeroplane passed over Middleton this morning, and was seen by residents and passengers in the train. "AEROPLANE" FIRED ON AT PRETORIA / (From Our Own Correspondent.) / Pretoria, Monday.

The crop of baseless rumors grows and flourishes, and there seems to be no chance of stifling it. Not many weeks ago people were going around about with a story that the "Iron Duke," with Admiral Jellicoe aboard, had been sunk in the North Sea. They had the very same rumour in London, and I do not suppose you could have convinced anyone here that it was false. And yet we now know that there was no truth in it whatever. It was only one of a hundred stupid reports circulated broadcast through the town, and honestly believed by many sensible people. It was repeated to me with great detail and circumstance. But none of these senseless rumours have had so disastrous an effect on the mind of the public as the yarns from all parts of South Africa about the "mysterious aeroplane." I have referred to it before, but it crops up with nauseating frequency and strains one's instincts of politeness to breaking point. A man comes up to you and says, with all the solemnity of a judge, that he has seen what he calls "the air-eoplane." You know that he has not, but you cannot very well tell him that he is a blithering idiot. Here, for instance, is one of the latest variations, actually printed in cold type, in the form of a Reuter's message from Umtata:-- "A gentleman who can be relied upon, and has just arrived from the coast, says that on Monday, from a hole in the wall, in the old Morley district, two aeroplanes were seen to arise from a vessel and make an inland incursion, afterwards returning to sea. The vessel has been observed cruising between the rivers St. John and Xora." / "Would the gentleman who can be relied upon," kindly explain how any vessel could possibly be "observed" cruising between the rivers St. John and Xora? That particular part of the Indian Ocean is the highway between Durban and East London, and British ships are passing to and fro daily. It is, therefore, difficult to imagine how any vessel can be hovering about there fooling with an aeroplane. I have my doubts about that "hole in the wall, in the old Morley district." / If I wanted to practice on the credulity of the Durban public, and walked down West Street to-morrow and told one or two people that Lord Kitchener and the Kaiser had been seen engaged in mortal combat on Folkestone Beach, the story would be all over Johannesburg by Monday night. / Apropos of phantom aeroplanes a Reuter's wire from Somerset East on Monday informed a gaping world that "an aeroplane passed over Middleton this morning and was seen by residents and passengers in a train." This is somewhat vague, but that is a characteristic of aeroplane rumours. What one would like to know is whether the residents were in the train or whether the aeroplane was seen in the train by the passengers, or whether--but what is the good of worrying, here I am, wasting time when I ought to be moulting bullocks. 1914 September 1 (Mon) Natal Advertiser, last p.

The authorities are concerned with the appearance of an aeroplane in the Rustenburg district, where it was seen twice last week. The reports come from reliable quarters, and are accepted as correct.

An aeroplane is also reported to have appeared over Pretoria last night, and to have been ineffectually fired on. When such a visitor makes its appearance, those who see it are earnestly requested to report on the spot to the police or Defence Headquarters. 1914 September 2 (Wed) Pretoria News, p. 5.

Our Aeroplanes. / (To the Editor.)

Sir.--We have now been regaled for some time upon the exciting news that aeroplanes have been seen at night over various places in the Union. The news is of such an important nature that these surprise visits have been distributed in a most generous way--so we have it that places upon the extreme east coast are also being visited by these mysterious craft. These latter are said to come from the sea, whilst the western visitants are credited to German South West Africa. Now, one thing is certain; aeroplanes from German South West Africa cannot go the distances alleged to have been travelled and succeed in going back again. Besides, mishaps must take place sometimes. None of these have occurred, and these phantom craft have been seen eight and nine hundred miles away from the border of German South West Africa--I had--supposedly to cover up to eighteen hundred miles in and out. This is sheer nonsense, in the case of aeroplanes.

The possibilities and probabilities must then be looked for elsewhere. We are either being victimized by various bodies of practical jokers in the Union, or there is another explanation, which has quite a serious value. Balloons may be made automatically dirigible, and they may even be so governed by certain machinery carried by themselves as to be destroyed after a certain time in the air. There is no insurmountable difficulty to send balloons off with certain prevailing winds to carry news to German South West Africa. A computation of the air-current, the adjustment of the clock-explosive, and a balloon may carry a batch of very instructive letters and drop them in German South West Africa, if the explosion be well timed. I am, etc., H.C. Marais.

1914 September 4 (Fri) Natal Advertiser, p. 5.

AEROPLANE SCARE / (To the Editor, "Natal Advertiser.")

Sir.--It will perhaps be interesting to your readers to learn that the much-talked of aeroplane has just passed over Sea View, and was witnessed by a party of seven (five ladies and two gentlemen). It was travelling in a westerly direction, and carried a large bright light in the rear. No doubt there will be many who will discredit the above and put

That Aeroplane! / Reports were freely circulated in Durban this morning that the mysterious aeroplane that has so much perturbed all South Africa since the outbreak of hostilities, was seen flying over the town last night. According to eyewitnesses, who claimed that they saw the machine, the aeroplane crossed over the racecourse from the direction of the sea, at about nine o'clock, and its noise brought a large number of the D.L.I. from their tents. It was said to have carried three lights, which were plainly visible, whilst the whirr of its propeller was distinctly heard. The aeroplane travelled at a great pace direct from the sea over the Berea, where it was lost to view.

1914 September 9 (Wed.) Cape Argus, 2nd ed., p. 5.

MYSTERIOUS AEROPLANES. / A Natal Report. / (From Our Own Correspondent) / Durban, Wednesday.

Reports as to the passage of aeroplanes over the Natal coast districts persist, and one statement, with apparently some authenticity behind it, is that soon after the appearance over his plantation of this supposed object, a considerable quantity of a planter's growing sugar had been found to have been burned during the night. There is no data as to the base from which these apparitions are conjectured to operate.

1914 September 10 (Th) Rand Daily Mail, p. 2.

THAT AEROPLANE / SEEN AT WARBATHS /

On Sunday evening, just before dusk, an aeroplane was seen flying over the Warbaths district from west to east.

The incident was noted by a number of white people, and was officially reported to the local postmaster for the information of the Government. The airship was calculated by the local Fieldcornet to be about 600 yards high when flying over his house.

One Dutchman, who had both seen and heard the aeroplane, described it as a flying motor car. When asked why he did not shoot at it he replied that he was afraid it might drop a bomb on him.

Our informant draws attention to the fact that there are several German mission stations in the Waterberg district.

1914 September 18 (Fri) Cape Times, p. 5.

AEROPLANE PROBLEM. / Maritzburg Optician's Solution.

PIETERMARITZBURG, Sept. 17.—(Reuter South African Press Agency)—A well-known optician and meteorologist is emphatic in stating that he has discovered the solution to the latest "aeroplane" problem. In the course of an interview he stated that he satisfied himself last night, with the aid of a powerful Goertz glass, that the latest aeroplane was nothing more or less than a brilliant planet.

The appearance, disappearance and reappearance were easily accounted for by the fact that as the planet was low on the horizon at 8 o'clock in the evening the wind from the opposite direction, sent all the moisture, or vapour, towards the west, and this would hide the star every now and then. Just at present the air is carrying an unusual amount of moisture. The meteorologist commends this explanation to other discoverers of supposed aeroplanes in South African skies.

1914 September 21 (Mon) Cape Times, p. 8.

(SOUTH AFRICA AND THE WAR) / AEROPLANES IN GERMAN SOUTH-WEST. / ONLY ONE EFFICIENT. / Military Machine Damaged Last Month. /

The Reuter South African Press Agency learns on reliable authority that, of the three German aeroplanes in the southern portion of Africa, at the outbreak of hostilities, only one is now efficient. One which was imported for show purposes, and piloted by Lieut. Duchner, is of little practical use, and is now at Dar-es-Salaam.

The two other machines are high class military aeroplanes, and are in German South-West Africa, but one was irretrievably damaged at Keetmanshoop early in August, while the pilot was attempting to alight

Rand D. Mail, same date, p. 5, almost ident.

Sat. Dec. 19, Cape Times p. 9.

OPERATIONS IN C.S.W.A. / SHELLS DROPPED FROM ENEMY MONOPLANE

...The Germans flew a Taube monoplane over our camp this morning.

After the previous day's fight, such a visit was more or less expected and everybody was on the qui vive.

(The airman flew at a high altitude, above the mist, and was heard a long distance away. He dropped two shells, injuring 9 men, and sending a few fragments through a Red Cross tent.)

1914 October 11 (Sat) The Star, Johannesburg, p. 5.

RUSSIAN GENERAL'S STORY / VISION IN THE SKY. / Night Before Augustovo. / (Reuter's South Africa Service.)

LONDON, Friday.—A Russian General, in a letter which he has written home, says: "The soldiers saw a wonderful vision in the sky on the night before the Battle of Augustovo. The vision was that of the Virgin Mary with the infant Christ in one hand, while with the other she pointed westward. The soldiers knelt till the apparition faded."

1915 February 15 (Mon) Globe (Toronto), p. 1, 2.

OTTAWA IN DARKNESS AWAITS AEROPLANE RAID / SEVERAL AEROPLANES MAKE A RAID INTO THE DOMINION OF CANADA / Entire City of Ottawa in Darkness, Fearing Bomb-droppers / Machines Crossed St. Lawrence River, Passing Over Brockville—Two Over Gananoque—Seen by Many Citizens, Heading for the Capital—One Was Equipped With Powerful Searchlights—Fire Balls Dropped / (Special Dispatch to The Globe.)

OTTAWA, Feb. 15, 2 a.m.—(Special.)—Up to 2 a.m. no further reports of aeroplanes had been received, but precautions were still being continued, no lights being shown on Parliament Hill.

OTTAWA, Feb. 14.—Sir Robert Borden received a telegram from Brockville to-night at 10:30 stating that three aeroplanes had passed over Brockville proceeding in the direction of Ottawa. Col. M. Sherwood, Chief of the Dominion Police, was summoned, and at 11:15 ordered all lights out on Parliament Hill, and at 11:20 the city lights were also turned out.

There is considerable excitement among the members of Parliament, and while some are inclined to doubt the possibility of raiders, it is believed by others that the Government is in possession of information which has led it to take extraordinary precautions.

DROPPED "LIGHT BALLS" ON CANADIAN SIDE.

In an interview, Col. Sherwood stated that he had received an official communication from the Chief of Police at Brockville, stating that three or four aeroplanes had crossed the St. Lawrence River from New York State near Morristown about 10 o'clock to-night, and had dropped several "light balls" on the Canadian side of the river. They then headed in the direction of the capital at Ottawa.

Col. Sherwood stated that the measures taken were precautionary, and was not disposed to be unduly apprehensive.

THE MINT IN DARKNESS.

Lights were also turned out at Rideau Hall, the residence of the Governor-General, at the Royal Mint, where the gold of the Dominion is minted. This is the first night in its history that the mint has been in darkness.

The Duke of Connaught is away on a trip to Winnipeg to inspect the troops of the garrison there, but the Duchess and Princess Patricia are in the capital.

OTHER PLACES WARNED.

Notice has been sent to Perth, Smith's Falls, Kemptville and other intermediate places on the supposed route of the aeroplanes to keep a sharp lookout.

SUBJECTED TO GUN FIRE.

A few months ago a Government order was issued to the effect that aeroplanes flying over Canadian territory without authority would be subject to attack from the guns of officers and troops. / BROCKVILLE'S STORY OF THE AIR CRAFT / Dropped Fireballs as They Crossed River—Many People Saw Them / (Special Dispatch to The Globe.)

Brockville, Feb. 14.—Four aeroplanes passed over this city at 9:15 to-night and sped in the direction of Ottawa. The city was wildly excited by the sight of the aircraft, which seemed to burst into sight almost right overhead. The first machine was flying very rapidly and very high. Very little could be seen, but the unmistakable sounds of the whirring motor made the presence of the aircraft known. Five minutes later the second machine could be heard. In crossing the river three fire balls were dropped. They were dropped at one minute intervals. In dropping they left a streak of light from where they had been thrown out, and it was this that attracted the attention of the residents. Hundreds of feet, the three light fell. They dropped into the river and extinguished. It is not thought that they were explosive, although, if they had been, they would not have exploded in the river. They were apparently dropped to show the airman their direction.

A few minutes later another machine passed over the east end of the city. In another interval a machine came over the other end of the city.

High Up: Flying to Northeast.

Constables Storey, Thompson and Glacier all saw the machines or heard them. They saw the lights, and immediately reported to Chief of Police Burke. The Chief said to The Globe: "I immediately telephoned the Mayor," he said, "and afterwards called up the Mayor of Ottawa. We also got in touch with Premier Borden. The machines were very high up, and we know nothing of where they came from. They came directly over the river, and departed in a /p.2/ northeast direction, which is the direct way to Ottawa. They all followed practically the same course. Mayor Donaldson also saw them, as did scores of other people. It was not long after churches were out, and there were still many people on the street."

"Will you have the lights put out in the town?" asked The Globe.

"No; I think not yet," said the Chief.

"Why?"

"I do not think there is any necessity, so far as Brockville is concerned."

Heard at Gananoque.

"Have you received any word from any surrounding towns?"

"Yes, the Mayor had a telephone message from Gananoque about 9:30, which stated that two machines passed over that town. They could not be seen, although they were heard distinctly."

The Chief told The Globe that a lookout would be kept for more machines, or for a return of any of those which had passed through. Had a Searchlight.

Mayor Donaldson said: "The three supposed aeroplanes passed north flying over our town and were sighted by many of our citizens. The last machine had powerful searchlights."

1915 February 15 (Mon) New York Times, p. 1.

(Card 1)

Scare in Ottawa Over Air Raid / Parliament Buildings Darkened on Report That Three Aeroplanes Crossed the Border. / Marksman Also Posted / Story Came from Brockville, on the St. Lawrence, but Police Chief's Report is Vague. // Special to the New York Times.

Ottawa, Ont., Mon. Feb. 15.—Warned from Brockville, on the St. Lawrence River, that three or four aeroplanes had flown over from the New York side about 10 o'clock in the evening, apparently heading for Ottawa, the Dominion capital had a few hours' spell of excitement last night and this morning, with plenty of speculation as to a possible raid by German sympathisers.

Up to an early hour this morning nothing had been seen of the aircraft here, but a searchlight on the roof of one of the local theaters was sweeping the sky for the invaders.

The report of the sighting of the aeroplanes came from the Chief of Police at Brockville, which is sixty miles nearly due south of Ottawa. He informed Col. Percy Sherwood, Chief of Dominion Police, that the aeroplanes had crossed the St. Lawrence from New York State near Morris-town and had passed over Brockville. They were traveling in a north-eastern direction, presumably toward Ottawa.

He said that one of the aeroplanes while crossing the river dropped some fire balls or light balls, he was not sure which. He understood that these fell into the river.

Premier Sir Robert Borden also received a telegram from Brockville giving the same information.

The police and military authorities were directed to take measures they thought best and at 11:15 o'clock orders were issued to darken the Parliament buildings. Every light in the grounds was extinguished and every blind was drawn.

Lights were also turned out at Rideau Hall, the residence of the Governor General, and at the Royal Mint.

The Duke of Connaught is away on a trip to Winnipeg to inspect the troops of the garrison there, but the Duchess and Princess Patricia are in the capital.

Sharpshooters were posted at various points of vantage on Parliament Hill. All the picked shots from the Dominion Police are fully armed.

The premier and Cabinet Ministers kept in touch with the preparations to receive any attack. The Duchess of Connaught was also kept informed.

The report about the aeroplanes spread quickly among the members of Parliament, and several of them made their way to the roof of the main building to watch for the "visitors."

Notices have been sent to Smith's Falls, Perth, Kemptville, Merrickville and other towns in Eastern Ontario to keep a sharp lookout and report at once if any aeroplanes are seen.

An order was issued by the Government a few months ago and notices were posted that any aeroplanes flying over Canadian territory without authority would be dealt with as enemies.

Were Also Seen At Gananoque.

Syracuse, Mon., Feb. 15.--A telephone message from Brockville, Ont., to the Post Standard this morning stated that four aeroplanes passed over that town, the Mayor being the first to see them. Officials say the lights they saw were certainly those carried by aeroplanes. The machines were first seen at Gananoque, Ont.

Ogdensburg Heard of This Friday.

The Chief of Police of Ogdensburg, N.Y., which is twelve miles down the St. Lawrence from Brockville, told The Times last night over the telephone that no echoes of the passage of aeroplanes over Brockville or of consequent excitement had reached Ogdensburg. He said, however, that last Friday morning a farmer, living five miles outside of Ogdensburg, had reported the passage of an aeroplane over his farm, headed toward the Canadian side of the river. No fire balls or bombs were seen or heard at that time.

1915 February 16 (Tues) Globe (Toronto), p. 1, 2. (card 1)

WERE TOY BALLOONS AND NOT AEROPLANES! / Brockville's Latest on Sunday Night's Scare; Parliament Hill Again Dark / (Special Despatches to The Globe.)

Brockville, Feb. 15.--The excitement over an alleged raid by aeroplanes in which a number of Brockville's citizens returning from church last night grew almost hysterical was converted into a joke this afternoon when there were hung in a local newspaper office window the remnants of a burned toy balloon picked up on the Ayclum grounds during the afternoon. As a toy it is large, and no doubt created excitement during the flashes of real lightning through its ingenious make-up. Three of these balloons were sent out by Morristown youths, no doubt as commemorating the centenary of peace. Another remnant of the toy balloons has been found on the ice two miles east of the town. The third is still unaccounted for.

Parliament Hill in Darkness.

Ottawa, Feb. 15.--To-night for the first time since its installation in 1892 the tower light on the summit of Parliament Hill did not shine while the House was in session. The light was extinguished by order of the militia and police authorities, as a precautionary measure against the reported aeroplane raid which was alleged to have been inaugurated against the capital from the other side, via Brockville, last night. The lights on the approach to the buildings were also extinguished, as were those at Rideau Hall and before the Royal Mint, and the blinds were drawn on the Parliamentary windows.

Though these precautions were taken, however, it was decided that there should be business as usual, and /p.2/ in the Commons the debate continued until the usual late hour.

Despite reports from Morristown, N.Y., that what the people of Brockville saw were toy balloons, the authorities here do not seem to be satisfied that the Mayor of Brockville and its Chief of Police were so deceived. It is said that the wind was blowing in such a direction that toy balloons would not drift across the river. So the precautionary measures are still being continued for a while. There is no semblance of panic, however, at the capital.

Premier Could Not Explain.

When Parliament met this afternoon Sir Wilfrid Laurier inquired for such information as may be deemed in the public interest concerning the reported aeroplane invasion, which had caused Parliament Hill to be plunged in darkness during the preceding night.

Premier Borden replied that he could not give information as to the point of departure of the aircraft. Shortly after 9 o'clock last night the Mayor of Brockville had communicated to him the information, that three aeroplanes had crossed the St. Lawrence River, and one had turned a powerful searchlight on the town. The Premier had at once communicated with the Chief of the General Staff and the Commissioner of Dominion Police, and the matter was now in their hands. More than that Sir Robert could not say at the present time.

1915 February 16 (Tues) Toronto Globe, p. 1.

AIR RAID FROM THE STATES IMPROBABLE / SO SAYS J.A.D. M'CURDY, WHO ADVISES AVIATION CORPS FOR CANADA. /

Mr. J.A.D. McCurdy, aviator, in an interview yesterday regarding the airship story, said the thing was possible but not at all probable, for unless the machines were built secretly for a raid it would not be possible to get four high-powered machines in any town in the United States. Apart from machines at the factories and those held by the military authorities there are only about twelve machines in the States which could make such a flight, and these are flying boats. An important reason why the story seemed wrong was that aeroplanes are practically never used at night. This is because of the great difficulty of landing after a flight.

Talking on the subject in general Mr. McCurdy said: "There is no reason why we should not have a squadron of at least twelve 'planes here in Canada to assist the militia."

Mr. McCurdy has come to Toronto to start up a company to build aeroplanes for military and naval purposes.

Mr. W.A. Dean of the Dean Aero Flying School, anticipating some move on the part of the military authorities, has sent to the States for three machines for immediate delivery. They will arrive in a week, and he will have them armored when they arrive.

1915 February 16 (Tues) New York Times, p. 4. (card 1)

Ottawa Again Dark in Fear of Air Raid--People Do Not Believe Toy Balloons Caused Scare and Demand a Search on This Side. / Special to The New York Times.

Ottawa, Feb. 15.--The Parliament buildings are again in darkness tonight. Blinds are drawn to prevent the light from within revealing their position to any hostile airman who may decide to make an attack on the Capitol.

Rideau Hall, the residence of the Governor General, is also in darkness, and there is no light to show the position of the Royal Mint.

The light upon the tower of the Parliament buildings, which has shone when the House is in session ever since Confederation, is out tonight for the first time.

The militia and authorities have been in communication with Washington, and the most thorough inquiry has been set on foot to discover the base from which aeroplanes are supposed to have started for Canada.

The militia and police place no confidence in the stories emanating from American cities along the St. Lawrence that youngsters sent up fire balloons and that these were the cause of the scare.

Morristown and Syracuse dispatches to Ottawa in particular say that the fire balloons were sent up from those towns. This reduces the story to absurdity, according to the view here. The aeroplanes traveled toward the northeast, the wind, according to the Dominion Observatory here, was blowing from the east and fire balloons would have been carried west. With the wind in this direction it was impossible for fire balloons to have passed over Brockville or traveled to the northeast.

Sir Robert Borden in the House today made the following reply to Sir Wilfrid Laurier:

"Last night at 9 o'clock I was called up on the telephone by the Mayor of Brockville, who told me that three aeroplanes had been seen to cross the St. Lawrence River from the U.S. He said that they had been seen to pass over Brockville, and that one of them had turned a powerful searchlight upon Brockville, which had strongly illuminated the streets for some minutes, and added that the aircraft had proceeded northeast in the direction of Ottawa. I at once gave the information to the military authorities."

There is a considerable force of militia in the city at present who are in training to go to Europe. Some of the best marksmen are on duty tonight with orders to fire upon any air craft which may appear.

Orders have been issued to the guards along the Canadian border to keep a sharp lookout for airships and fire upon any that show themselves.

1921 March 19 (Sat) New York Times, p. 8.

Mysterious Airplane Rouses Eris Curiosity / Meteorological Office Puzzled by a Machine which Left a Trail of Smoke. / Copyright, 1921, by the NYT Co. / By Wireless to the NYT.

PARIS, Mar. 18.--A mysterious airplane which flew over Paris on March 5 has aroused for some obscure reason the curiosity of the French meteorological office. The office has communicated to the press a notice which reads:

"An airplane flying at a great height passed over Paris about 9:45 on March 5, making a semi-circular tour of the city from the southwest to the west-northwest side. As it went the plane left behind it a trail of smoke which at times resembled a ribbon and at other times a feather-like cloud."

A mystery is being made as to why meteorological experts should wish to know about this airplane, but they are apparently very anxious to learn its type and characteristics, its exact trajectory, its height and speed between 9:45 and 10 o'clock and, lastly, the direction and speed of the wind at the altitude of flight. It is said that probably the reason for the inquisitiveness is in the last question, but Paris, with its memory of air raids, is wondering whether after all it might not have been something special in the Gotha line or perhaps a Bolshevik airplane making smoke signals.

brighter than the noonday sun. This great light and its wonderful power is supposed to have been a searchlight.

While passing over the city the speed of the airship was from five to fifteen miles per hour. It slowed up just before reaching the business part of the city, and in passing over this portion its speed was not above five miles an hour. It was travelling almost due east and the stream of light was shut off just after passing the city limits. The opinions regarding this mysterious ship are about as numerous as the population. Some who did not see it are inclined to brand the story as a fake, but the character of the men who saw it can not be questioned. It is impossible to give all the opinions, but one that seems to be worthy of consideration is that the airship is the property of a gang of cracksmen, who by the aid of the searchlight and X-rays under the management of scientific experts, sail over a town and look through the walls of the houses and bank vaults and locate the booty; then they return on a later date and secure it, and then disappear by the aid of their airship.

Another solution offered is that it is an exploring party sent out by some other planet. The most plausible theory seems to be that some inventor has succeeded in solving the problem of aerial navigation and with a party of his friends is out on a trial trip.

Seen at Belton.

Belton, Texas, April 20.--Last night quite a crowd of responsible people of this place assembled for the purpose of watching for that much-talked-of airship, and at 11:30 o'clock it was seen coming from the southwest at an immense velocity. It dipped and but for the fact of bearing just a little to the left of the "New Surprise" show tent, directly in front of Peay [Peay's?] hotel, the tent would have suffered great injury, judging from the velocity of the ship. Missing the tent, it passed by the northwest corner of Peay's hotel and rising passed from view. The passengers on board this aerial wonder spoke as they passed, but could not be understood on account of the velocity.

Belton people have been skeptical heretofore, but they now believe. The race was so swift that no proper estimate could be formed as to the dimensions; however, about ten persons were distinctly seen. At Longview.

Longview, Tex., April 20.--Last night about 9:30, The Post correspondent and family on returning from church saw the so-called airship. A bright light, seemingly about the size of Venus, moved swiftly to the northwest, disappearing beneath the horizon. In a few minutes it reappeared, rising nearly to the zenith and rapidly traversed the heavens in an easterly direction. The light emitted a series of intermittent flashes, of a steel color. No car was seen. At Groesbeek.

Groesbeek, Tex., April 20.--Mr. B.F. Johnson saw the mysterious airship last night, as did several of his neighbors.

1897 April 22 (v.) Houston Post, p. 15.

That Air Ship. / It Passed Over Bryan Sunday Night, Going North.

Bryan, Texas, April 19.--The mysterious airship of which so much has been said of late, passed over Bryan last night. A number of people declare they saw it. It was going north.

Rice, Texas, April 19.--This morning at 5[8?] o'clock what is supposed to be the "airship" touring in the South was seen at this place moving in an easterly direction at a very rapid rate. Several citizens of this place viewed it with perplexed curiosity. It was only in sight a few moments and disappeared as quickly as it came.

1897 April 23 (Fri) Austin Daily Statesman, p. J.

SOME SIDEWALK GOSSIP ... / SOMETHING MORE ABOUT THE AIRSHIP

Engineer John Smith has returned from Yoakum, where he is to put in a system of sewers.

A Statesman reporter has had a talk with him, and he referred to the airship, about which he has dreamed some, but not seen. Mr. Smith has been down on the Rio Grande, and he says at almost every Mexican house you see a white cross. It is either on top of the house, on the door, or somewhere about it. "A priest went through that part of the country some time ago," said Mr. Smith, "and he told the Mexicans that the time was at hand for the devil to appear as some great monster and that the only protection against him was a white cross, and promptly the cross went up." Mr. Smith said he had no confidence in the airship business, but it was seen, all the same, in Louisiana, Tuesday night, at Nachitoches. The newspaper account says about 1:30 that night, as a gay crowd were returning from a reception given by Company I at the Armory Hall, they were treated to a strange sight, coming from the western heavens. That spectacle consisted of a massive airship, the first story being of balloon shape, and the under car being of conical or cigar form. When first seen it seemed but a faintly animated spark, which, as it came nearer, gradually grew brighter. After a few moments its entire form was clearly perceptible, and developed a structure of strange proportions. It seemed to have been illuminated with a fluctuating light, which ranged from brilliancy to semi-darkness. Its destination appeared to be northerly, and it gave indications, from its course, of coming from Texas. It was evidently a machine of unique invention, as its movement was of an undulatory character, and bore striking resemblance to the movement of some huge bird. It was visible, though about 1000 feet high, nearly half an hour, and was a rare curiosity to those who had the good fortune to witness the phenomenon. The remarkable fact in connection with its visitation was that, as its course neared the city, the light that illuminated it became suddenly low, and did not again rise until the city was left in darkness.

1897 April 23 (Fri) Fort Worth Register, p. 6.

AIR-SHIP AGAIN. / SEEN UP ON THE FORT WORTH AND DENVER. / Investigating the Panhandle--Some Fort Worth Nimrods Frightened Away From Harmon's Lake by the Sight of the Phenomenon. /

A Register representative came in yesterday from a tour up the Denver as far as Wichita Falls, and brings affidavits from a number of responsible gentlemen along the line who, on last Wednesday night, saw the airship "Dauntless," manned by Captain Nemo and crew.

The gentlemen's signatures as they appear upon the affidavits are as follows:

U.T. Simmons, Charles West, employes of the Fort Worth and Denver. James Murphy, George Clark, conductors of the Fort Worth & Denver. W.S. Rea, chief train dispatcher at Wichita Falls.

G.S. Levey, assistant train dispatcher at Wichita Falls. Col. C.B. Donaldson of Childress, proprietor of Hotel Goode. The phenomenon was seen at Wichita Falls at 9:50 p.m., and at Childress at 1:10 a.m.

Charles West and Colonel Donaldson assert in the affidavit that they talked with Captain Nemo, who, it appears, had brought the machine to earth for repairs, and who made a confidant of them as to the objects and purposes of the expedition upon which he was on, and swore them to secrecy, threatening dire vengeance should they even breathe his purpose, and so averted were they by the terrible captain that no amount of persuasion will induce them to betray his confidence.

It is further said that it was because of their kindness to Captain Nemo that he imparted his secret to them.

SEEN BY FORT WORTHITES.

Messrs. W.H. Nanny, W.T. Gray and Sam Butler returned yesterday from Harmon's Lake, where they have been on a fishing trip. On their arrival it was whispered that they had seen the airship near Calif about 12:30 o'clock Wednesday night. Mr. Gray, being seen by a reporter, said: "Yes, I saw it, but my horse got frightened and I didn't get a chance to see much of it, anyway, am not in a condition today to tell you about it." Messrs. Butler and Nanny say they are satisfied that Mr. Gray saw it, as they had to jump out and stop his horse. Mr. Gray's reputation for truth and veracity is very good, and it is generally believed that he really saw the airship, and that he was perfectly sober.

1897 April 23(Fri) Galveston (Tex) Daily News, p. J.

SAW THE SHIP. / A Brehmamite Describes His Experience With the Aerial Bird.

Brenham, Tex., April 22.--The airship passed over Brenham about 6 o'clock, going south just as the cook started the fire in the galley and began preparing the morning meal for the passengers. Among those who saw it here was Mr. John R. Pennington.

He says it was pretty high and he could not clearly distinguish all of its features, but it was like several of the published descriptions. He heard a roaring sound like the approach of a cyclone or a hundred buzzards sailing with set wings and looking up saw the lights and hulk of the ship and heard a noise on board like the rattling of glassware.

He was out at his horse lot and hastened to the house to awaken the family that they might see the ship, but before they could be awakened and get to the front gallery it had vanished in the distance, and this was not surprising considering the apparent speed at which it was sailing.

There are people here that could tell airship stories all day and the public would scarcely pause to hear them, much less to give the story more than a passing thought, but Mr. John Pennington is a man of unquestioned and unquestionable integrity and not in the habit of talking to hear himself talk.

An Operator Saw It.

Sabinal, Uvalde Co., Tex., April 20.--The famous airship which has been putting in appearance in various parts of the country was seen directly over this place at 2 o'clock last night by Charles McGar, night wax operator of the Southern Pacific company. Mr. McGar is a highly responsible gentleman and no one doubts his statement of the matter. He says that the ship was not more than 300 feet above the earth and traveling in a westerly direction. His description of the nocturnal flyer tallies with the one in The News, save that its bottom resembles the keel of a steamboat. Its passage through the air was accompanied by a strange whirring sound, not unlike the buzzing of an electric battery.

1897 April 24 (Sat) Austin Daily Statesman, p. 8.

AIRSHIP RESOLUTION. / A Proposition to Have the Commission Regulate Them

Yesterday morning, in a spirit of fun, Mr. Brigance offered the following resolution about airships:

"Whereas: There is an airship sailing around Texas, carrying freight and passengers; and

"Whereas, The owners or incorporators of said airship pay no taxes for said traffic, and

"Whereas, The railroad commission have been derelict in their duty in fixing rates for said airship, and

"Whereas, The state of Texas is badly in need of funds to run the state government; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the advocate of revenue measures, Hon. J.T. Curry, the representative from Van Zandt county, be and is hereby requested to lay the matter of making rates for the government of said airship before the railroad commission of Texas and request that said commission proceed at once to make rates and charges for the transportation of passengers and freight in Texas, and, in default of the payment of said 1922 September 11 (Mon) (London) Daily Express, p. 7.

Fell in the Sea. / Mystery of a Vanished Aeroplane. / "Daily Express" Correspondent.

Barmouth, Sunday.

Mr. William Jones was on the coast at Barmouth yesterday when he observed that an aeroplane over the sea was in difficulties.

He called the attention of Mr. John Morris, coxswain of the Barmouth lifeboat, to the predicament of the machine, and Mr. Morris, by means of his binoculars, saw the aeroplane nose dive and disappear into the sea with the engine in motion.

The incident happened about seven miles away, in a northerly direction.

The coxswain and others jumped into a motor boat immediately and raced to the spot. They cruised over the place for several hours, but could find no trace of the aeroplane or its occupants.

It is feared that there has been loss of life.
1923 February 13 (Tues) London Daily Express, p. 7.

Ghost Lights. / Eerie Sight Scares Three Villagers. / "Daily Express" Correspondent.

LEAMINGTON SPA, Monday.

A ghost in a habit of disappearing when investigators chase him is preventing nervous inhabitants of the village of Fenny Compton, North End and Burton Dassett, from leaving their homes after dark.

Bright lights, appearing suddenly among the Burton Dassett hills travel from a church, by an old beacon, to a disused and deserted farm. Nobody remembers the last tenant of the farm, but many witnesses connect the ghost with him. The will-of-the-wisp theory has been investigated and found insufficient to account for the phenomenon.

"I have seen it nearly every night," said William Neale, an aged shepherd, to me today. "I tried to frighten it by moving like a cat, barking like a dog, hooting like an owl, and baying like a hound, but the ghost took no notice."

I asked him why he did not shoot it.

"I am not a superstitious man," he replied, "but I should not like to run such a risk."

DISAPPEARED.

Mr. George White, an estate carpenter, made a journey into the hills with Mr. Ernest Lovell, resolved to lay the ghost. The light passed over them and disappeared into the ground.

Mr. Harold Cotterel was returning to Fenny Compton after taking a coffin to Northend, when his horse suddenly stopped. He saw what he described as a "mysterious and eerie form" floating around a pool called the Grantlets.

Mrs. Westacott, wife of the vicar of Burton Dassett, was a sceptic until she and her sister attempted the journey to the vicarage late at night. A bright light appeared near them, travelling in a wide circle and they fled the spot.

1923 February 14 (Wed) London Daily Express, p. 1.

Ghost Ray Mystery. / Railway Haunt of an Illuminated Spook. / "Saw the Body." / Weird Story by a Farmer. / "Daily Express" Special Correspondent.

FENNY COMPTON, Tuesday.

The ghost light of Warwickshire has taken to haunting the Great Western railway on the main line to Birmingham and the north. This is the latest authentic testimony of two unemotional signalmen.

A telephone call came last night to Fenny Compton Station from a lonely signal cabin three miles away.

"I can see the light," reported the signalman. "It is moving toward the cabin at about two feet from the ground."

He gave bulletins from time to time to the station master of how the light turned itself full on him and kept approaching.

"What will you do if it comes up the cabin steps?" he was asked from the station.

"I have something in my hand ready for it," replied the signalman. Thereupon the light disappeared.

CHURCHYARD.

The centre of the light-haunting is Burton Dassett. It is the right sort of place for ghosts. An infrequented hill and ruined farmhouse and an old churchyard are the spots where the light has been seen most frequently.

The light is intense. Sometimes it is turned on people, and flares like a headlight. It will perch on gateposts and lights cottage windows. It leaps hedges and haunts the meadows. It has no beams. It is just a bright circular radius.

Efforts are being made by organized parties to catch it, but, when such a thing is done, and the light surrounded, it disappears, and then flickers up again at some spot a mile or so away.

THE BODY.

Mr. Page, a local farmer, has seen the body behind the light.

"I was awakened last Saturday at 2 o'clock in the morning," said Mr. Page to me, "by my wife, who declared that the light was shining in at our window. I peeped through the curtains and there was the light flashing along the front of the house."

"I saw behind the light a dark figure in a long cloak. Suddenly the figure sped quickly away down a lane in front of our farmhouse."

1923 February 15 (Th) London Daily Express, p. 2.

When the Ghost Walks. / Reward If You Catch Him.

Warwickshire is worried. Farmers and tradesmen are terrified. Housewives and children are horror-stricken.

A ghost is to blame. He is no common spook, this marrow-freezer who flits about the Warwickshire fields and lanes with an eye of Doom(?)

in his head as large as a motorcar headlight, but a Highly Horrible Person.

Ghost hunting has in consequence now(?) become the sport of the county. It was even rumored that members of the local Federation of Foxes have handed in their resignation to the Master of the North Warwickshire Hounds.

1928 June 14 (Th) Miami (Fla) Herald, p. 1.

Miami Astronomers Unable to Identify Phenomenon in Sky / Enormous Light, Resembled Comet, is Not Believed to Be One.

Miami astronomers were trying to decide last night and this morning the classification of a phenomenon which appeared in Miami skies, directly overhead, last night.

The phenomenon, closely resembling a tailless comet, was visible for more than thirty minutes between 9 p.m. and 10 p.m. It appeared to be several hundred times the size of nearby stars.

In appearance it resembled a great blurred electric light. Mrs. Eddy Starr, 926 S.E. 10th avenue, who observed it throughout its appearance, said that after twenty minutes or so it took on some color, such like the colors of a rainbow, but these resolved themselves again into the blurred gray.

The phenomenon contracted and disappeared quite suddenly. R. C. Fahrion, 711 S.W. 5th avenue, an astronomer of note, observed the phenomenon without his telescope for a short time, but it disappeared while he was setting up his glass.

"It had every appearance of a comet, except that it had no tail," he said. "I do not believe it was a comet, since one of that size would have been listed and would have had word of its coming. In addition this thing did not move and it disappeared too suddenly. It was of such enormous size that if it had appeared before it should have been studied and recorded."

"Because of its great size I am certain that it was not a star distorted by mist in our atmosphere. It may be we will hear something more about it later from someone elsewhere, or from some large observatory that had a glass trained on it. It has me stumped."

James J. Marshall, secretary of the Southern Cross Observatory, which operates in Royal Palm park during the winter, did not see the phenomenon. He said that sometimes mist in the earth's atmosphere will cause unusual astronomical appearances. The reported size of this phenomenon, he said, makes it wise to await reports from large observatories and astronomical magazines before drawing conclusions.

1928 June 15 (Fri) Miami (Fla) Herald, p. 4.

Second Sky Mystery Presented to Miami / Woman Tells of Seeing Moving Light, Emitting Colors, Passing Through Heavens.

Apparently there was two mysterious lights in the heavens Wednesday night. When Mrs. W. F. Carterette of 5437 N.W. Second Avenue saw the story in The Herald yesterday morning about the light seen overhead the previous night she wondered if it were the same thing she had seen.

"I was sitting on my porch about 11 p.m. waiting for my son to come home from work," she said, "when the earth suddenly was illuminated. I looked up and there was a light almost directly overhead but moving rapidly westward. As it moved it emitted sparks of red, blue, white and green hues. The sight was indescribably beautiful. The ball of fire seemed to be about as big and as long as a joint of stovepipe. The light disappeared behind a clump of trees and apparently came down in the vicinity of Hialeah."

The light was seen by Mrs. Carterette was not the light that attracted the attention of other Miamians as she saw it an hour or more after the other light had disappeared. The first light remained motionless and was not bright, though it was easily visible to the naked eye being approximately the size of the moon though not as brilliant as the moon when it is full. The fact that stars near it were plainly visible disproved any theory that it might have been a star distorted in appearance by mist and its great height made it impossible to be any reflection of a light in Miami.

1928 June 16 (Sat) Miami Herald (Fla), p. 2.

Plane Lights Bring Queries to Mystery/Flier—Advertiser's Appearance Leads to Incorrect Surmises of Sky Phenomenon.

Miamians who had not seen the comet like phenomenon in the skies Wednesday evening, or the meteor that lighted the skies later the same night, were certain last night that they had solved the mystery of both appearances.

Many called The Miami Herald and others visited the office to explain their solution. It was that an illuminated airplane was responsible for the mysterious sky appearances.

They told of an airplane that appeared in the skies for about two hours last night with the word "Stutz" in large illuminated letters beneath it. They were correct in their surmise that last night's sky visitor was an airplane, but they were incorrect in supposing that it solved the Wednesday night appearances.

The airplane in advertising service for the Stutz Florida Company, Miami, motor car agency, was flown by Ernest Robinson, pilot for the Miami Waco Company, Bird and Ludlum roads, Coral Gables. It had not been in the air Wednesday night, Ben Jones, owner of the company said. Last night was its first appearance since the political campaign when it flew to advertise a North Florida candidate with S. A. Shevaker, co-pilot in charge.

The illuminated word form of advertising is an innovation Mr. Jones said, last night's exhibition being its first use in this part of the state.

The letters under the airplane are set with electric bulbs, illuminated by battery and generator current, and are forty inches high and 28 inches wide. The [sic] can be seen at a height of 2,000 feet, it is claimed.

In the meantime, astronomers are awaiting word from large observatories and astronomical magazines to explain the comet-like mystery of Wednesday night, which remained in a fixed position throughout its appearance, while it is generally agreed that the illuminated speeder which seemed to fall west of Hialeah later that evening was a large meteor.

June 17, 28 p.5--~~xxxx~~ "dinosaur" carcass found in San Salvador 1928 June 20 (Wed) Miami (Fla) Herald, p. 6 (ed).

Strange Lights

These reports of strange stars or sweep of light across the Miami skies sound something like the imaginative fantasy in a new book, "Green Fire." It is a picture of 1990 with scientists in battle for control of the world and the universe.

Through the manipulation of the rays that will break up the atom, they expect to command unlimited energy or else destroy all matter. The villain seeks the latter and sets loose his power by shooting his rays off millions of miles. They begin their work of disintegration. The fire in the heavens alarms the masses as portions of the system are wiped out and the rays come rushing upon the earth. But just in the nick of time the reactionary wave is set in motion and save the old world for a few more fiction writers.

Possibly the book prediction is belated. Maybe science is fooling with the universe. Or it's just a plane signal flashing across the sky
June 7 p. 4 (eds)--German pilot named Raab is planning rocket-plane trip to moon.

Robert Condit is an American planning to go to Venus in a rocket.
Death Ray.

1930 August 6 (Wed.) New York Times, p. 4.

'Jersey Devil' Returns as Applejack Mellow, / And Dry Agents Investigate the Coincidence / Special to the New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., Aug. 5.--Berry pickers in Leeds ~~xxxx~~ Point and Mays Landing reported today that the "Jersey Devil" was back, spry as ever despite its century of haunting the woods and highways of South Jersey. He always appears early in August, when berries are ripe and applejack takes on its mellowest flavor.

Some say that there is no "Jersey Devil." They insist that the monster was created by an imaginative berry picker long ago to combat competition by scaring rival berry pickers from the field. But the legend seems to hold and there are many old residents who are certain the devil does exist.

This time the persons who seem to be most interested in the phantom's appearance are the prohibition agents, practical hard-headed men who argue that devils--especially the kind that have not only cloven hoofs and tail, but feathers and claws and a hoot like an owl--can originate only where the Volstead act is flagrantly violated.

According to the earliest legends the Jersey Devil was the son of the wife of a South Jersey fisherman who had twelve children and fervently hoped that if a thirteenth came he might go to the devil. The child arrived and--according to the legend--was transformed into a fearsome monster and fled screaming into the night.

It is a perennial phantom, apparently able to change its personality at will. In Swedesboro last August it was "large and speedy as a fox, with four legs, but also having feathers and a cry that is partly bark and partly the hoot of an owl." Sometimes it sings lone solos in the berry patches of dark woods at midnight and sometimes it chases motorists.

And occasionally it varies its schedule and appears out of season, leaving hoof prints in the snow. One pink-nosed official in South Jersey, returning to his home from a visit with genial company down in the village, encountered the phantom and actually wrestled with it. The devil usually spends about a fortnight in the berry district and then moves northward.

1931 October 11 (Sun) New York Times, p. 26

Report a Dirigible Falling in Flames / Search Party Hunting Near Gallipolis, Ohio--Akron and All Goodyear Blimps Safe.

POINT PLEASANT, W. Va., Oct. 10 (AP)--A searching party organized by Point Pleasant police tonight started toward hills back of Gallipolis Ferry, West Virginia, behind which a blimp was reported to have fallen in flames.

Robert P. Henke, his wife and Dr. and Mrs. Claude Carter of Gallipolis, said they saw the blimp cross the Ohio River and that it fell while Henke was watching it through field glasses. Henke said the blimp was between 100 and 150 feet long and flying at an altitude of about 300 feet when it burst. A moment before it fell he saw something white, which may have been a parachute, floating downward.

Dr. Charles E. Holzer of Gallipolis, Ohio, who owns the airport there, at dawn will send airplanes into the air to search for the wreck of a dirigible.

Special to the New York Times.

AKRON, Ohio, Oct. 10.--U.S. Navy officers and officials of the Goodyear-Zeppelin Company said tonight that the U.S.S. Akron and three blimps belonging to the Goodyear-Zeppelin Company were safe in their hangars. The Akron returned this evening after passing over Sandusky, Toledo and out over Lake Erie.

Mon. Oct. 12, p. 22--'Blimp Wreck' Search Vain / Nothing to Substantiate Crash Rumor is Found in West Virginia.

POINT PLEASANT, W. Va., Oct. 11 (AP)--Search for a blimp reported to have crashed and burned in the hills south of this city was abandoned tonight after a fruitless all-day search afoot and in the air.

Some persons who said they witnessed the accident described the blimp as plunging to the ground in flames, men leaping from it in parachutes as it fell. No reports of a missing blimp were received from any source, however.

SEARCH FOR FLIER IN JERSEY SWAMP / Hamonton Residents Say Man on Parachute Fell Into Vast Quagmire. / NO TRACES OF PLANE SEEN / 200 Volunteers Aid Firemen and State Troopers In Night Hunt In Perilous Bog. / Special to The New York Times.

HAMMONTON, N.J., Dec. 5.--State troopers, local fire companies and 200 volunteers searched tonight through the Folsom Swampland, one of the densest sections of bog, quagmire and woodland in the Southern part of the State, for an aviator reported by residents to have dropped into it on a parachute.

The search began shortly after 5 o'clock tonight when Elmer Craig, a resident of this village, and residents of Weymouth, on the other side of the swamp, informed Troop A of the State police here of seeing the aviator float into its depths from a high altitude. None saw the plane, but it was pointed out that it could have dropped previously.

Every available trooper was pressed into the march, to be joined by Chief Henry M. Phillips and twenty members of the Hamonton Fire Department with lighting apparatus.

Near-by residents, familiar with the outskirts of the miles of morass, also joined the hunt, but when darkness fell no trace of the man had been found.

The search was entered between ~~xxxx~~ Second and Third Roads, paths cut through the jungle-like section one mile apart, in the vicinity of Ninth Street, a two-mile area. But progress was slow, since members of the searching party had to pick and cut their way through the underbrush, skirting numerous dangerous areas.

The search would continue all night, however, unless the aviator was found or accounted for, Chief Phillips and police officials declared. At a late hour tonight, the fire chief prepared for the setting of two large bonfires guarded by ~~xxxx~~ the firemen to prevent a forest fire, as a guide for the aviator and the searchers.

The swamp, said to be one of the most treacherous in the State, contains areas never penetrated before except by Indians, according to the police.

1933 December 13 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 18.

Luminous phenomenon lurks [;] Sorsele sees an airplane. / Fantastic story of a landing field in the mountains. / (From our Correspondent.)

UMEÅ, Tues. From Fjällsjöns in Sorsele parish is reported a fantastic story about a mysterious airplane (flying machine), which has paid daily visits to a mountain field (valley) in this neighborhood for just under a week's time. The machine manifests itself often by a gleaming [forward] lantern [light] with a strong beam projector (i.e., searchlight) with which it (the plane) illuminates the snow.

The newspaper Västerbottens-Kuriren has been investigating the matter and finds out that the "flying machine" simply might be a ~~xxx~~ strange luminous phenomenon. Landsfiskalen (district prosecutor, i.e., some kind of officials) in Sorsele have in this manner heard a forest ranger, Aigren, who explained that he observed only an unusual light on the horizon, which repeated a turn [in the] night. He was not able to get close enough to make out what it was, [nor at any time heard any] motor noise, and the [landsfiskall] are convinced that the story of the flying machine is a pure fantasy. The inhabitants in the district also have observed the unusual light, but no one knows if it arises from the northern lights or has some other origin. That it should result from a flying machine at work, indicates that standard judgment holds with some loose prattle.

1933 December 20 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 17.

Luminous phenomenon in Stockholm.

An uncommonly bright and splendidly colored meteor was observed about 9:30 p.m. Monday night from South Mälarstrand above Fälsundsparken. The ball of fire resembled ~~the~~ fireworks though it roved itself in the opposite direction, from heaven toward the earth. The meteor was observed in the north and described as almost plummeting down with some inclination toward the west. Colors turned blue, red and green, and the fireball happened to have a diameter three to four times greater than the evening star. A Svenska Dagbladet reporter discounted any confusion with the planet Venus, which at this time already a puzzle low down on the horizon, as out of the question. That this phenomenon could be an airplane with on without scrappers of liquor of that sort observed for the past several days in Lapland seems even less likely once the course is considered.

1933 December 20 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 21.

(card 1)

That Mysterious Airplane Reappears Once Again.

UMEÅ, Tues. (TT)--Realization that it must be an airplane making passes over the Västerbotten Lapp country at night seems, according to the [newspaper] Umebladet, even better confirmed. Such is the word from the village of Bure, between Arvidsjaur and Sorsele, one night at the end of November as seven times in the evening there was observed a "glaring light" in the sky, which with great haste moved in a direction from Arvidsjaur westward. At the same time was heard in the village a strong motor noise. In connection with this, the liquor smugglers for which police kept a close lookout the last few days [and] tracked from Lapland, down along the coast, probably came from Arvidsjaur.

Landsfiskal (i.e., district prosecutor) F. Leiden in Steasele has sent word today that on Tuesday at Blaiken in Storuman he held a police (court) examination because of a statement that an airplane was supposed to have passed over the village on Monday night. A number of persons reported that at about 9 o'clock last night they saw a gleam of light move rapidly up in the sky in the north. At the same time was perceived a very powerful motor noise heard also by the persons who stayed inside. Also the hearers was also found the well-known skier Thule Persson, who said he entertained not the slightest doubt but that it was an airplane which passed over the village. He knew full well the difference between airplane noise and the sound of any other motor. It was later found out that a little while after this observation [was made] in Blaiken the residents of the village of Fjällbosjö, located two miles further north, saw as well the light and heard the motor noise. The [landsfiskal] reports that the persons he heard from are so completely reliable that he finds to reason to assume a mistake.

[Landsfiskal] Leیدن examined himself in both Boden and Östersund, where it was reported that from there a flight was undertaken over the said area on Monday.

From Oslo has the [paper] Umebladet learned that an investigation on the Norwegian side is at hand, as a fisherman along the coast about straight out from the boundary of Västerbottens, at the same time as forest ranger Agren made his familiar observations in Fjällsjönäs, observed light signals from a mysterious ship [craft], which lay a little ways out at sea. It is held likely in Norway that somebody from the ship with a signal light directs an airplane which varies in [its] nightly maneuvers.

In connection with what experts on flying have to say about this, a seaplane with pontoons does not have a chance of landing on snow but could land on ice-covered ground, say newspapers, which have learned from Amarnaäs that Guvert plateau lies under sleet this winter.

1933 December 27 (Wed) New York Times, p. 2.

'LOST' PLANE HEARD IN SNOW OVER CITY / Sound of Engine is Reported at Intervals for Five Hours, but No Flier Lands. / RADIO AID IS ATTEMPTED / Advice on Landing in Storm Is Broadcast--Identity of Airman Remains Mystery.

With New York blotted out from above by the snowstorm yesterday, an airplane was reported wandering blindly above the towers of Park Avenue and Harlem's tenements. Although many heard, or thought they heard, an airplane engine, no one reported seeing the plane.

The first call came from C.V. Gedroyce, owner of a radio store at 1,755 Park Avenue, at 122d Street. He said he heard the engine first about 9:30 A.M. and at intervals for the next hour. Impressed with the plight of the pilot, he telephoned to the National Broadcasting Company.

An announcement over the radio brought other calls from Park Avenue further south, and from Riverside Drive and Harlem. Evidently the pilot was circling in an attempt to find out where he was. Using short wave, the broadcasting company sent out a message, on the chance that the flier had a receiving set, informing him of his approximate position and giving him the wind direction.

All airports were notified, and at Newark Airport the radio operators for the Department of Commerce and air lines joined in offering what help they could. Beacons on the field were lighted and searchlights flashed through the white smother of snow.

An hour after the first Manhattan reports, dwellers in Jersey City notified the Newark Airport that they heard the plane. At that time the visibility over Newark Airport had increased slightly with a ceiling of perhaps 500 feet. Pilots grounded there by the storm watched in vain for the mysterious flier.

A check of the various calls indicated that the flier had gone as far as Seventy-second Street, circled above Central Park and then proceeded north to the vicinity of 231st Street and Sedgwick Avenue, the Bronx.

For a time no further reports came in, but about 2:25 P.M. the sound of a motor was reported over Riverside Drive and 155th Street. At that time several airports announced visibility of a mile, and pilots said that, if he had wished, the unknown flier could have found a safe landing in New Jersey or Long Island.

All fields in the metropolitan district reported that there had been no flying during the day and that no stray plane had dropped down from the snowy skies.

1933 December 27 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 13. (card 1)

Smuggling by air to [in] Kalix? / Flying machine observed on Christmas Eve. Not mistaken for ambulance plane.

The mysterious flying machine in Lappland has now been viewed complete with searchlight in Kalix of the Skärgårds, where it was decided to dismiss every suspicion of confusion with the ambulance plane or with stars. It was believed full and firm that it was a Finnish liquor smuggler who had passed by. The latest says that a flying machine on Christmas Eve between 5 and 6 o'clock from Bottenhavet passed Skagsudden and continued onward due westward.

Now it is reported that the flying ambulance was seen in Boden on the holiday passing outward by two expeditioners (travellers), both of whom were going on the stretch to Juoksengi, a village near the Torne River, but that was on Christmas day, a matter of which there is more to read below. In Kalix of the Skärgårds it was asserted that a flying machine was distinctly seen on Christmas Eve.

The Svenska Dagbladet has sought to gain clarification in this mysterious affair, and thereby we have established to begin with that no one in Kalix saw any flying machine at all. Inquiries at Storön in the Skärgårds likewise gave a negative result. No one said any flying machine was seen on Christmas Eve or Christmas Day or since the beginning of December, more exactly on December 2 at 11:30 o'clock in the evening. It came from the east and headed westward. The machine also was observed in the village of Rossbält. Earlier still it was said in the fall that a flying machine, which passed Hesta cutting straight eastward against the Malören (lighthouse, power station) "fire place". In Berghamn on the other hand the flying machine was observed on Christmas Eve. It was watched by three other persons, who declare that it circled several times over the island and made a straight-line play over the landscape. While it is said in Kalix that people believe that it was Finnish smugglers, people here make [the same] of it. People are commonly of the understanding that a considerable quantity of liquor has been smuggled in to a landing on this stretch of coast. Most of it probably went to the ore fields. A certain benzine container, which was transported by car from Gällhare to Kiruna, was thus mistaken for containing "smuggled liquor." / Sergeant Gunnerfeldt's Exploit. / "If somebody hadn't been sick I would not have continued."

Ambulance plane pilot Sgt. K. Gunnerfeldt, with whom this newspaper had an interview, declared that none of his trip touched on the areas which are in question here. In flying to Juoksengi he passed within 6 or 7 miles' distance with extinguished lights. He started from Boden at 9:15 on ~~xxxx~~ Christmas Day night (Eve!) and returned at 11:18. The machine at Kalix of the Skärgårds made its appearance on Christmas eve between 5 and 6.

[He started the trip on a call about a boy with a gunshot wound, and the trip was difficult because of fog and mist, but he succeeded.]

The other ambulance plane on Christmas Day took a course to Arjeplog and set out early in the day. It started out at 1:15 o'clock and came back at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

1933 December 28 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 6. (card 1)

Liquor by air from a depot outside Norway / The mysterious airplane in the mountains receives its explanation. / Sharp lookout on the coast. / (From our Helsingfors correspondent.)

HELSINGFORS, 27 December. Authorities in Vasa think they have established that the mysterious airplane which for the last few days has attracted so much attention in Sweden, is a smuggler's newest method of operation, against which an even sharper watch is being kept on the Swedish and Finnish coasts. For the sake of slipping through blockades [traps, checkpoints] has the smuggler had recourse to a flying machine. Therefore an alarm for the whole coast lookout was given from Bottniska. All the men who had permission were summoned to take up the struggle against this new form of smuggling. It is thought that the smugglers established liquor bases on both the Swedish east and Finnish west coasts. Till then the smugglers transported per flight about 1500 liters of liquor in taking from the distant depot ~~the~~ ship, which lies off the Norwegian coast. Through such use of flying smugglers can go a long way down the nearer coasts to reach the liquor ship. People have in certain areas observed a liquor flood [?] [smell, runoff?] when no one had any idea where it came from. People then surmised that the liquor was brought by air.

The chief of the coastguards, Commander-Captain Pietinen, refutes in a most decisive statement the conviction in Sweden that a Finnish coastguard machine flew over Swedish territory. The coastguard flying machine in Vasa already has been stored away for two weeks' time and is undergoing repairs for the present, since it is out of order. If a Finnish flying machine had crossed the border into Sweden, the Swedish government naturally would have registered a protest, but no such thing has come about. All reports of that Finnish machine flying over Sweden are without basis.

Liquor storage on the Norwegian coast reported in Finland. UMEA, Wednesday (TT). The coastguard chief in northern Finland, Commander-Captain Enquist in Vasa, responded to the [newspaper] Umebladet's inquiries [by saying] there was not any evidence that liquor had been smuggled in by flying machine into northern Finland from the Norwegian coast. He [said] however that it was much more likely that smugglers through here escaped the sharper watch in Botten harbor. That liquor is stored on the north Norwegian coast during the past weeks, said the commander-captain, had been reported again.

A flying machine also observed on the Norwegian side. NAMSOS, Wednesday (TT). According to what was reported on Saturday in the vicinity of the customs station at Frostviken on the Swedish side a flying machine was seen coming out of the south and it is said that it swung in toward Norway and up toward the Nordlands boundary. Police and customs officials in the boundary district have passed the word. In the morning it was reported from Naröv that a man at 9:30 on Tuesday morning saw a flying machine which came up toward Naröv and swung westward.

1933 December 29 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, pp. 3, (21). (card 1)

The flying smuggler leaves tracks. / Landing field on island off the north Norwegian coast. / Liquor or Silk? / Eager search by cruiser and policemen.

According to definite reports from Oslo, off the north Norwegian coast at last has been found the landing field of the mysterious flying machine which for a rather long time has been observed over northern Norway and northern Sweden and set in connection with smugglers. A telegram from Oslo on Thursday evening reports that the chief of police in Mosjøen, Ole Olsen, confirms that the machine really exists and was not wholly some robber story. The machine was observed by many people on the streets outside at Vik in Helgeland and has puzzled [people] down in Syngvaer in one of the outermost islands, an area long reputed to be a smugglers' nest. Later the machine was heard and seen on ~~xxxx~~ Christmas Day near the border. Norwegian police investigated an Lyngvaer, which lies 12-15 miles toward the sea, hindered Thursday by a violent storm, but as soon as there was a lull, they came to nearby islands to investigate.

Police chief Olsen reports that the machine was both seen and heard by trustworthy persons; on December 12 by a female telephone operator in Honhorne and on the 14th by tradesman Wikjörd in Vendesund. It was a large flying machine with pontoons, but of an indiscernible type, as it was [the weather was?] considerably spuming (strong, unsettled). The police chief took for granted that the machine was Swedish or Finnish and that it fetched liquor from a storage out on the islands for transport onward to Sweden or Finland.

The machine was also observed over Joesjö on the Swedish side of the border. From here and eastward it flew to the river, where the machine could [may] have gone down. Presumably it is also equipped so that it can land on ice. The police chief gave out that the flier may have made contact with some kind of smuggling vessel and [promised] a continued investigation along this line, as soon as there is a lull in the storm. Toll crossings [inspection stations] on the Nordland side, which came to assistance, lie in a valley in Vendesund. For the rest they seek collaboration with the local Swedish police authorities to find the flying machine, if possible. /

Smuggling plane over Sorsele on Thursday. / Night flying in Västerbottens mountains fully laid bare. / (From our correspondent.)

UMEÅ, Thursday. Reports of the mysterious ghost flying machine up in the Västerbottens mountain areas continue to trickle in. Last night came a report from Kradssele in Sorsele saying that at 3:45 o'clock a mysterious light was observed flying through the air. The observation was made by no fewer than fifteen persons, but it was strange that none of them could hear any motor noise. Some time earlier, meanwhile, a woman and her son had plainly heard motor noises and people in Kradssele were completely convinced that the light and sound derived from a flying machine. Earlier from Kradssele people also perceived the mysterious sound in the middle of the month of November and it was thought for certain that the mountain mass nearby the village served as some sort of operations base or holding place for the flier's purposes. Inhabitants have seen lights from the machine tinged with red, white [vitt?] and green (or, diffused and green).

They flying ambulance pilot in Boden, Sergeant Knut Gunnerfeldt, is for his own part convinced that smuggling with a flying machine in the Västerbottens mountains is fully feasible. Flying ambulances have often made nighttime flights in the mountains without encountering even the slightest misfortune. As a rule, however, ambulance pilots have concern for [choosing] a place where landing shall be partly through [the help of] pylons [markera] and partly through [compass devices] on the wings of the machine [?]. Some lighted lanterns ~~are used for navigation~~ have no purpose at all in night navigation. The only occasion when lanterns are used lighted for night trips is in passing telephone stations so the plane will be observed. It can be thought that a smuggler's flying machine lights its light in order to give a signal to the station on the ground.

The machine carries liquor or silk.

Concerning what the expense for an aerial transport is, Sgt. Gunnerfeldt reports that an average airplane may consume fuel (at a rate) of about fifteen kroner per hour. A plane like that bears a cargo of at least 500 kg. Though it thus can be thought likely that a flying machine smuggler is in the mountains, no one knows anything of what kind of smuggling is in question. Nearest to hand lies the guess that it is smuggled liquor which moves and it is clear that this [is something] that can be smuggled in this manner at a rather good profit. The peculiar thing is, however, that people in the whole [landfiskals] district in Lappmark [Lappland], where people observed this flier, neither during the Christmas holiday nor earlier [noticed] the least supply of smuggled liquor. It has been calm and silent [since that] mysterious transport [for car] has been observed. In one village in Stensele people said however that for two weeks since a larger private car gas went out through [the] village with extinguished headlights, but no one knows if they were extinguished with intention or if the lights themselves were at fault.

Custom house officials inform that one can also make [a profit] at smuggling in other articles, for example, silk. Stolen silk is so high that a flying machine's cargo of 500 kg. should be able to bring in a profit for the smuggler of no less than 15,000 kroners. It is known that Finnish smugglers have plans for how to procure their own airplane, up to and including the training of their own fliers.

Mountain passes in Över-Uman the old way [?] / Bureau director Sandström looks for the smuggling machine.

England has its giant crocodile in Loch Ness and Sweden has its giant airplane over Sorsele, which with every day grows to ever greater proportions and now allegedly conducts regular trips between Vasa in Finland and Mo in north Norway with a cargo of many thousand liters. Comparison stops without much doubt, because the sea serpent seems to be a relic from a prehistoric epoch while that Lapland airplane is a hypermodern phenomenon. Yet it remains something in a high degree strange, not to mention fantastic too, these stories about the great flying machine circling over the barren, snow-covered mountain tops. That liquor smuggling ~~progresses~~ progresses on a grand scale, by airplane as well, from the Norwegian side to the Finnish side of the border, is indisputable. What happens to be strange is that the smugglers should undertake an intermediate landing on some of the mountain tops in the Swedish Lapp country.

--It is without doubt extraordinarily strange, said village director J.W. Sandström, who in the capacity of senior mountain [patrolman] and meteorologist is well acquainted with this country. Mountain passes in Över-Umans valley meanwhile have [been since olden times] the way over the border from the Swedish side to Mo in Norway in winter as well as in summer [?]. This country is also very good in relative smoothness and an even mountain plateau on which a flying machine would be able to land comparatively easily. The territory is more [very] thinly populated and there can be many miles to the nearest human residence. It is wholly secure in many important respects in a possible smuggler's eyes!

--It is guessed that people perhaps confuse a flying machine with some kind of luminous phenomenon; does not St. Elmo's Fire usually appear over mountain tops? [Is this not suggested as probable because of] that large number of mysterious flying machines people have seen but not found?

--People in this country are very isolated and rather primitive. Yet an airplane is such a rare phenomenon up there and must attract so much attention that I can hardly believe in any confusion. During my many travels in the area I have [for my part] never heard reports of any luminous phenomena, whether real or imaginary, which should be able to correspond to the observations related in the press.

Very mysterious things happen, and one gets to expect well enough that smugglers are what has been seen and reported near those mountain passes [intakes].

Minesweeper with 20,000 liters now in Botten harbor. / The fast-moving boat has eluded capture in the Ålands. [?]

UMEÅ, Thursday (TT). A fast-moving liquor racer of the minesweeper type has, according to the Umebladet, during the Christmas holidays under cover of darkness luckily stolen away to escape capture in the Ålands and is now found in Bottniska Bay. On Christmas Day it was visible from Holmögdads light[house], from where it veered southward and passed by at only 100 meters distance. From Snipån it went back to the north. Customs guards on both the Swedish and Finnish sides were alarmed ~~skrämt skrämt~~ [alarmed]. The chief of coastguards in northern Finland, Commander-Captain Enqvist in Vasa, considers it likely that a smuggling vessel which is able to carry a cargo of about 20,000 liters of liquor, made land somewhere on the Finnish side directly north of Vasa.

1933 December 30 [Sat] Svenska Dagbladet, p. 1.

(card 1)

All Lappland has observed a flying light. / A ghost machine over Stensele on Friday morning, over Iärna [?] at night. / (From our correspondent.)

UMEÅ, Fri. In spite of everything being reported on Norwegian and Swedish radio and set out in the daily press, ghost airplanes over the Västerbottens mountain country are daily [sights]. This morning at half past 7 o'clock the thing was seen over Gunnarsburg in Stenseld parish and then was seen to fly towards Sorsele bay, where it was seen on Thursday night. ~~At~~ At about 6 in the afternoon was reported in the Västerbottens-Kuriren from Joesjö in Iärna that people saw the mysterious light fly in over the Norwegian border against the Hatfjälldalen [valley] in Norway. It overcame a driving snowstorm and the populace could not understand [why] fliers ventured out in such weather. It so happened that it had difficulty in orientation, because it set a course on the highest mountain top and [flighted] where its searchlight played [or, let it...play.] Landfiskal Lidman in Sorsele on Kixå Friday performed an investigation in Kradssele for the reason that the people there on Thursday night saw a machine flying southward. The result was that the landfiskal was convinced that the populace heard and saw a flying machine, but which way it took has been impossible to ascertain. No sign that there was a depot could be discovered, and people found it very strange, that a flier so often crosses away over this country where people believe with certainty they can say that no smuggler has been found.

A very great quantity must have been smuggled by flying machine. Landfiskal Lidén of Stensele has personally stayed around in the villages of this parish where people have made such good observations every day during the last two weeks. He declared for the Västerbottens-Kuriren that it was impossible to ascertain if any landing occurred in the [deep] snow which is found in this area. Since the first observations were made as far back as November 17, the flying machine must, if it is out for smuggling, have been able to transport a ~~great~~ very great quantity and been able to travel over vast stretches. People have seen the flying light in nearly all the Lappland parishes, in Arvidsjaus, in Malå, in Vilhelmina, in Dorotea, in Åsele, in Tärna, in Sorsele and Stensele. One day at the end of November, more precisely, on the 27th, it is believed that people observed it also over Örnsköldsvik.

The flier must be well directed [oriented]. / Norwegian customs authorities make an investigation out at Lyngår. / (From our Oslo correspondent.)

OSLO, Fri. Stories of the mysterious flying machine which is believed to go on a regular route between the Norwegian Helgeland coast and Finland, are as mysterious as ever. At night a telegram came in from Mösjoen [saying] that a sheriff's officer in Hatfjälldalen had seen a flying machine at 6 o'clock p.m. over Joesjö on the Swedish side of the border east of the Krutvatnets mountain cottage [station house?]. The machine at the time had a course in a south-westerly direction, toward Norway. The police chief in Mösjoen had warned all sheriff's officers to keep a sharp lookout. The place where the flying machine was observed is the same place where the machine first passed on Christmas Day and was observed by trustworthy people. Judging by the course, its destination could well have been Lyngår on the islands thereabouts.

The Aftenposten that evening had an interview with police chief Olsen in Mösjoen. He reported that a sheriff's officer in Hatfjälldalen, his wife and many another person had seen lights from a flying machine at night. It flew very high over the mountain and with a course toward Vik- or Rindalen, which is to say, in the same direction as the former took.

--It is a strange story, said the police chief. I found out really nothing at all about it. It is remarkable that the machine can operate in darkness here in this dangerous terrain. The flier must be very well oriented [have a good sense of direction (or experience)?]. At least for now the weather has improved (?). It is calm and clear. Nordland customs officials have gone out and [searched] for the present in the vicinity of Lyngvär. People come to undertake an investigation tonight, and it is then possible that a definitive explanation can be found during the course of tomorrow, but the flying machine can very well be in various other places even in Lyngvär. All around are found many small islands with smooth waters where a machine can land.

Sheriff's officers in Mattfjellålen stay now in constant contact with landsfiskalen in Tärna on the Swedish side. The police chief reports that in the last few days it was observed [once] by partly suspicious persons in Rörvik and Brännövsund. These persons are familiar to police, but have just now disappeared. The police are searching for them.

1933 December 31 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, p. (24).

Flier X has returned from Norway. / At a great height over Tärnaby. Norwegian and Swedish aerial search organized.

"That Flier X" smuggling plane up over northern Sweden and Norway [no longer keeps its raids out of sight.] On Friday night it disappeared far over the mountains towards the Norwegian side and was observed there directly before 6 o'clock over Vefsu by three or four persons. These people followed the "ghost flier" a long time with a telescope, but it went altogether too high--2-3000 meters--for anyone in the gathering [prevailing] twilight to be able to make any worthwhile observations; the machine held a southwesterly course in the direction of Brännövsund, but no one has given the Norwegian police any lead in the search which is going on along the coast. The distances are so great considering the equipment at their disposal that it is hard to conceive of how to bring about an orderly investigation. Earlier the Aftenposten [said] also [] that the customs authorities must have an airplane at their disposal for a search--and this plane must cross into Swedish territory as well.

"Flier X" visit on the Norwegian side was not lengthy this trip: Clearly on Saturday the machine came back, it can be supposed with a full cargo of smuggled goods, to Sweden, and passed over Tärnaby at a great height and the air was beautiful and clear to view, and the machine was seen plainly by many persons besides Petty constable Dahlberg. The machine came, reports have it, from the Norwegian side where it disappeared Friday night behind Joesjö. After it had passed Tärnaby it set a course due eastward along the coast where the thing was observed by watchers for twenty minutes time. Which way it then went is unknown. In Stensele or Sorsele parish it is not thought in every case to have landed. It has, it is thought, evidently some hidden station where it goes down and keeps hidden. On the Swedish side people know just as little about the machine's landing place as the Norwegians.

The chief of the Swedish air force accepted on Saturday the announced proposition from the general customs director on the flying search assistance [group] for clearing up the mystery and gave the chief for the Fourth Air Corps, Major von Porat in Östersund, a telegraphed order to gather detailed [information] and send in a report [making] proposals for possible measures. According to what Major von Porat reported to the Västerbottens-Kuriren, a plan was worked out which shall be made public in full [clearly] on Monday morning.

1934

1934 January 1 (Mon) Daily Telegraph (London), p. 14.

A MYSTERIOUS FLIER OVER SCANDINAVIA / SMUGGLER OF ARMS? / From Our Own Correspondent / STOCKHOLM, Sunday.

An aeroplane believed to belong to a smuggler engaged in the arms traffic has mysteriously appeared in the last few weeks several times over Lapland and North Sweden, puzzling both the authorities and the inhabitants of those regions. Military machines from the garrison town of Östersund will to-morrow or on Tuesday start a pursuit of the aeroplane over the snowfields, mountains and wild forests of Lapland.

The machine has always been seen at the same time in the afternoon, coming from the coast of Norway. It flies over Lapland and, after landing on a nearly inaccessible plateau, continues its flight to the Swedish coast and across the Gulf of Bothnia in the direction of Finland. On the first few occasions witnesses only saw red and white lantern flares and heard the engine. But in the last few days the aeroplane itself has been seen.

The authorities believe that, if the witnesses' stories are true, the machine is smuggling alcohol and silk. But an evening paper today publishes a telegram from Umeå saying that it is more likely to be smuggling arms, as it is known that weapons have been conveyed secretly into Norway and Sweden for the Communist party. The Communists in some districts of Northern Sweden have lately been very active owing to the progress of the Nazi party there.

1934 January 1 (Mon) New York Times, p. 21.

Mystery Plane Is Hunted by Swedish Army Fliers. / Wireless to the NYT. STOCKHOLM, Dec. 31.--Swedish army aviators have been ordered to chase a mysterious airplane which has been sighted for several weeks over Lapland. It is believed to land among the mountains, making flights at night.

The pilot was recently heard flying toward Norway in a heavy snowstorm. It is thought he is a smuggler carrying silks and narcotics and possibly weapons.

Flier X [] high over Sorsele. / Large monoplane makes three [slow?] passes over the community. Aerial search in broad daylight! Plans of Swedish origin to send an aerial expedition to Nordland for the reason of clearing up the mysterious story of the flying smuggler are beginning to take definite form. The chief of the Fourth Flying Corps in Östersund, Major von Porat, was on New Years Day ready with his report and despatched it to the chief of the air force. In response to the Svenska Dagbladet's inquiry on New Years Day, on the basis of the investigation made by Major von Porat, and all the information gathered from landsfiskals, plans now were drawn up for the chase. People can at last get out into the wild blue yonder on this very expensive and risk-filled expedition.

Communications about the "flier X" expeditions continue to come in. On Sunday was lively activity in this respect and it was observed both early in the morning and [late] at night. A discerning and reliable person, manager for Presbyrån in Vilhelmina, O. Hedlund, [about] 4 o'clock on Sunday morning, when he found himself on an inspection trip in a Sorsele community, saw the machine. It went on at a height of only 400 meters and was seen plainly. The view was notably good and the full moon [was up]. Hr. Hedlund observed plainly that the airplane was a [monoplane] and as large as a passenger machine. Hedlund is a Stockholmer and often has gone to see Aerotransports and large service machines, therefore he can easily make comparisons. The "ghost machine" is thus, he says, a large machine of about the same type as Aerotransport uses, [and] is then considerably larger than an army machine and appears gray in color and provided with skis or pontoons. These distinctive marks are well in accord with those [of planes] which have been reported about the same time from Norway.

The flying machine occasionally travels without a light and goes with a [silent] motor, while it made three large passes over the community. Herr Hedlund is the first Swedish observer who plainly was able to see the machine and leave some description of the same. Then the machine circled over Sorsele, set a course for Arvidejaur, where according to statements it was also visible. From Amarnä it was reported as well that people on Sunday heard noises from a flying machine motor.

The last report from "flier X" came in from Horra Fjällnäs in Tärna parish. There the machine was seen between 5 and 6 on Sunday afternoon and flew then directly toward the Norwegian border. Also in Björkbacken in Tärna people observed a machine at about the same time. 1934 January 3 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3. (card 1)

"Ghost planes" have been observed along two courses in Sweden, on the map returning once by the whole, once by the broken line. The former goes from the Norwegian border in Kradssele, the latter from Gunnarberg to Amarnäs. (map on p. 3).

"Flier X" hides in the snow in Amarrfjället? / Customs action expected against smuggling. / "Expensive story," says flying chief.

The mystery about "ghost fliers" lying up in the north has thickened without relief during all the last few days, and the growing shower [of] reports produced [by] witnesses from different quarters has brought out that people even begin to lean toward the opinion that it is not only one "flier X" in action but two machines. On that subject people have meanwhile not found any definite evidence. The most important report for the day comes from a place much farther north, namely north of Porjusbanan. It was only December 19 but competent observers quite recently had heard talk of "ghost flier" expeditions. On a trip along the sea [of] Maskajaur these two aforementioned men came across clear tracks left behind by a flying machine which was equipped with two pairs of skids. The marks in the snow showed clearly a machine's landing and takeoff. Information about the flying machine's course could [be had] by following along the two streaks--namely [from] Krutvatn in Norway-Kradssele and Amarnäs-Gunnarberg. Whether a decision was made to search on the part of the Swedish air force was not known on Tuesday night--on the part of the authorities it is a matter of course to conceal such a step as long as possible.

--I have gotten a report from Major von Porat on the mysterious flying machine, said the chief of aerial defense, General Virgin, to the Svenska Dagbladet. I sent it immediately to the general customs officials. The air force itself has no reason except if customs [officials] ask for help such as we can furnish. It is a rare and serious business to send our machines up in these vast wastelands, where it is ten miles between communities. Benzine depots must first be prepared, and that, in this expanse, makes it no light matter [for] the suspected airplane(?). It is the nearest thing to looking for a needle in a haystack. People cannot make anything of the airplane without having followed it to see if it goes down on the Swedish side [?]. Plainly in every case it has its base in Norwegian territory and is reported to seek to find this place. Until further notice, to always keep up a watchful hunt is the general customs director's stated opinion on the matter.

General Customs Director Wohlin reports for this reason that at the present state of the matter he does not wish to make any pronouncement.

In his report Major von Porat says that several persons on repeated occasions saw an airplane and searchlight. Among them were found two men liable to military service [?] from the fourth flying corps, who are also accustomed to see airplanes. The airplane evidently has come in over Norway and went over snowy, remote Storusan. It has been observed within a triangle bordered by Tärna--Stensele--Sorsele. From the Norwegian coast and out to Storusan is found a watercourse which offers fliers a possible landing field, if it should be needed. Down in the coastal area with their greater and greater population no one has heard or seen an airplane. The destination of the airplane's journey has not been established.

At midday Tuesday, Major von Porat received a telegraphed order that only if the provincial government requested an aerial search shall such [action] be undertaken. / Mysterious flier back over Sorsele. / Farmers (heidsmen?) hears "Flier X" start from his hidden landing place.

From Umeå it is reported that on Monday night about 8 o'clock a flying machine passed near to Sorsele. The observer, hunt master (?) Torsten Karlsson in Sorsele, says he is absolutely certain about this matter. The machine did not show any light, and the sound went away in a southerly direction. Whether it was made by a smuggler machine or not was not cleared up.

Director of the press bureau in Vilhelmina, Olof Hedlund, has given the Västerbottens-Kuriren some further details about his observation on Sunday morning, when he saw "Flier X" over the Sorsele railroad station. The machine went over at full speed, near the circle roundhouse, and it is possible that its height was even less than 400 meters. The machine disappeared in the direction of Ammarån, and it is believed that it landed in Ammarfjället. A farmer, Linus Strömdal, heard motor sounds on Sunday night, which he is certain came from a flying machine. The sound of the motor started and stopped, twice went inward and back coming and going, also came from Ammarfjället. Chances are the machines are hidden somewhere during the day between four o'clock in the morning and four in the afternoon, but where the landing place is located for the present evades all discovery. Investigations by landsfiskalen in Sorsele have clarified that it is not the movements of the ambulance plane or military fliers.

If you study the route on a map along which the flying light was seen during the past month, you find that it certainly moves capriciously and irregularly but yet especially appears along a certain general course which is outlined by the triangular path between Tärna--Sorsele--Stensele. One of these courses and the one which seems to be without a doubt the most actively travelled goes as far down (?) as Krutvattnet (and) up to the Norwegian border at Tärna. A cluster of observations have been made here along a line (from) Josefs--Joestrom--Tärnaby--north Fjällnäs and up to the stretch Björkbacken--Kradsele with the surrounding country (Guverteplatån). Another path seems to go from Ammarån and its accompanying Tjulträsk over Guverteplatån with mountain-peaked Valle--Kilixx village of Tallträsk--Fjällbonas--Abborrberg in Stensele--Cippmökshobben. The line should be stretched over Fjällbonas--Blaken in Inlandsbanan, where people in Gunnersberg saw a ghost machine coming from Sorselehället. Any further comparison of the sounds themselves cannot be made on such a meager basis, such as stands at our disposal.

"Flier X" also at (in) Gällivare.

According to a report in the Norrbottens-Kuriren the "ghost flier" was observed on December 30 from a highway at Nuorjevara, a couple of miles east of Gällivare. The flying machine went at a low altitude, 50 to 60 meters, and was observed in full view by two motorists. It was ascertained that it could not have been a question of the ambulance plane in Boden or any military flier, and, since there are no private fliers to be found anywhere nearer than in Jämtland, there seems to be no doubt about it, that what moves about is an unknown flying machine.

1934 January 4 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 5.

Flier X is everywhere in Norrland. / Pull-fledged mass psychosis mixes up the people. Make reliable statements.

"That Flier X" has continued to play hide-and-go-seek on through Tuesday and Wednesday and the popular imagination is so aroused that people speak of a full-fledged mass psychosis. Reports are coming in from various places, and it is clear that many observers confuse diverse unusual signal lights with the evening star. At one o'clock at night on Wednesday some patrolling constables heard it and several other persons from various places in Umeå (heard) flying noises over (their) towns. The machine happened to come along following the railroad from M Vännähället and went presumably along the coast southward toward Nordmalings. A beam of light sent from it lit up the opposite side of the sky and (seems) to have come from a searchlight.

After the reports from Umeå people expected that information about the machine would come in from Ornsköldsvikshället. But instead the machine was seen as usual in Lappland. It was still just barely daylight and the time could well have been about 9, when people in Skansnäs in Vilhelmina parish pointed out a flying machine circling around the southern part most slope of Gardfjället (Mt. Gard). Most of the village's inhabitants saw the machine and heard a noise and all of them were convinced that it was not an optical illusion. People believe that it descended on the snow of a small mountain. Later it was asserted the machine had passed over Rönnbäck in Tärna parish on its way to the Norwegian side. Reports about the machine also from a number of other places have produced complete confusion, says the Västerbottens-Kuriren, and people don't know what to believe.

The provincial government, so far as is (known), still on Wednesday had not made any reclusion in the question of calling in military planes for an aerial search for the mysterious flier.

Machine observed on Norwegian side on New Year's Day.

According to reports from Mosjöen a flying machine was observed at 4:30 o'clock in the morning on New Year's Day by many persons at Mo in Ranen. The machine disappeared in a northeasterly direction. It was also observed later in the day and then flew westward.

Customs (service) investigations at the fishing village of Lyngvaer has now concluded, but people have not found any suspects. In Ursfjord there had not been any suspicious craft before Christmas.

according to a report from a fish buyer(?). This place is very suitable for smuggling, since distances between houses are great. Here are found as well good landing places for flying machines. In Ursfjord mysterious lights also have been observed, and this observation with mountains for a background, excludes confusion with a star.

1934 January 5 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 12.

(card 1)

Does the air force hunt Flier X today? / Swift flier of impressive size goes at low altitude over Gällivare.

"That Flier X," about which whose flights reports are untiringly strewn from different places up in the north, is now to be chased by Swedish air force machines. According to reports coming from Luleå provincial government (officials) have been seen in contact with the military command in Boden fort for (any) protective measures (is) may take on the ground that a strange machine reveals itself in Norrbottens land. The provincial officials' intervention is merely the cause of an order by which air traffic is forbidden within a certain territory east of the national boundary course without royal permission (?). Provincial officials have undertaken to initiate an investigation with the persons who say they have observed fliers and who (can) furnish descriptions of the type of machine.

As regards the machine which on December 30 was observed by a motorist and his passenger flying at a low altitude over the highway near Muorjevara one and a half miles east of Gällivare, they report it was a monoplane, were able to observe its single motor and in the colored light it shed (saw it) also was equipped with skids. It had a remarkable breadth between wingtips and flew very fast. A pair of hunters from Håimberget saw it the same day at 2:30p.m. from a mountain close by the community, the plane coming flying over the low-lying bog banks around Lineålv. For observers with a much clearer view (it was) plainly an airplane, which was light gray. A motorist in Luleå has reported on the day in question at the coastal village of Hjörfjärden in Raneå parish at 9:15 o'clock p.m. observed a flying machine, which steered in over the coast from the sea. The machine was seen plainly in the partially lighted sky. The motorist set out at high speed and could see the machine (as far out as) Persön, two miles from Luleå. There the airplane turned southward and was seen taking a southward course, briskly travelling east toward Luleå at a distance of 8 to 10 km.

After the Wednesday observations people have acknowledged as true that there has to be two machines, and hence one is presently operated on the coast and the other kept up in the mountain area. The machine in the coastal area was observed on Thursday at Rusale in Lycksale parish by two lumberjacks (?), who at 6 o'clock at night saw a light come (flying) in the air and heard motor noise. No other observations were made during Thursday in Västerbotten. The flying weather has been poor with severe storms and overcast sky.

Machine heard on Wednesday evening on the Norwegian side.

MOSJÖEN, Thursday (TF). Many reliable persons in Mosjöen reported that at 11 o'clock on Wednesday evening they heard motor noise which is definitely thought to have arisen from a flying machine. The sound was thought to have disappeared in a westerly direction.

From Brönöysund is reported that people at Toft in Brönöy on January 2 observed a mysterious light, probably coming from a flying machine. The light moved in a circle and disappeared repeatedly. Now and again people saw a strong light like that from a searchlight. At times it was altogether extinguished, so that confusion with a star is excluded. The light finally seemed to go down south of Torghatten.

1934 January 7 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 12.

Flier X on an expedition in Bottenhavet / The machine was observed along the coast, passes Holmögadda lighthouse.

The mysterious airplane continues constantly its expeditions without any final solution to the riddle coming any nearer. On Saturday night it was observed once again in two places, the last time at 8 o'clock at night when it passed Holmögadd. The earlier observation during the night (directs to our attention) that the machine flew along the coast from some place in the south.

"That Flier X" was seen at 6 o'clock in Nordmalings, where a great many persons observed a light out at sea, which moved in a northerly direction. When the machine was seen passing over Holmögadda light, it was observed by the director (keeper), who has said that the light came from an airplane. Earlier no one on the island observed any similar light. The machine went at about 400 meters high, but when it was directly east from Holmögadd, it sank down to 100 meters. Due to the prevalent storms and (lightening?) it was impossible to hear motor noise--the wind speed was estimated to occasionally reach as much as (1) 18 meters per second--but the lighthouse keeper plainly could discern two side lights, one red and one green. Meanwhile the machine carried no searchlight.

Also from the Skellefteå country comes reports that a light from "X" was seen there, that is, in Storkåge village. The machine flew from a starting-point straight southward, made thereafter two passes over the country and disappeared finally inland. In Skellefteå the mysterious light was observed at half past 5 o'clock by some cab drivers. The light seemed to come from the south and went northward. The roar of the airplane motor also could be plainly discerned.

1934 January 8 (Mon) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 4.

The ghost flier has been heard again in mountain villages. / Up at the Norwegian border Saturday night. / (From our correspondent.)

UMEÅ, Sunday. Since the ghost flier disappeared on Saturday night out toward the sea outside Holmögadd in a driving snowstorm, which measured (wind speeds of) 22 miles/sec. (ca. 45 mph), people have believed that it landed in safety on the Finnish side. Meanwhile sightings of the machine continue over the Swedish hill backwoods, [as] twice on Sunday morning people in the little mountain village of Borgafjäll in Dorotea parish heard up at the Norwegian border a loud motor noise from a flying amachine. The inhabitants declare that they are sure that they have not confused it with any other noise.

People have guessed that the confiscated liquor which during the past few days has [been captured] on the Swedish coast, possibly has a connection with the ghost flier's appearance. Aboard the Gretel, [captured by the smuggler-chaser(?)] outside Örnsköldsvik, was found 4000 liters of benzine. An investigation meanwhile has shown that this quantity of benzine was solely set aside for the "Gretel's" own use. No especial sign has been forthcoming, says customs authorities, which indicated that the flier has been dealing in liquor smuggling. It still continues to be a problem for them and a riddle, for which a solution has not been forthcoming.

1934 January 9 (Tues) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 10. (card 1)

Has Flier X newly altered his course? / In Dorotea people often hear the mysterious machine's noise among the mountains. / (From our correspondent.)

UMEÅ, Monday. The question as to whether there are one or two "flier X's" over the Västerbottens parish continues to remain open, but to judge by the hundreds of reports which have been strewn over the course of the [past few] days, there would have to be a whole squadron. Without a doubt, however, is [the fact] that flier X today at daybreak made a pair of sweeps along the coast at Bottniska Bay. Up in Bureå outside Skellefteå people saw it following the shore at Bjuroklubb [the Bjuro Club?]. Later it was seen in Lövsånger, passed Sävar and Täfteå, was observed by people in Umeå town and at 7:30 o'clock went out to the harbor [sea] outside Norrbyckär. According to the Västerbotten-Kuriren, observers there have seen the red and green lights on the wings and could follow the flier on its journey toward Nordmaling, where it began to take a wide turn over the notorious smugglers' dens, Bredvik and Kirke. There the light disappeared for a while, and observers were convinced that the machine had ventured a landing on some of the forest lakes with long projecting points (arms) or went down in the [lee]ward shelter of open water.

From the little village of Öre people saw at the same time a machine come spying with its searchlight. Noise from the motor was not heard [due to] the harbor [sea] sounds, but a foreman, Forsran, who stood out in the yard and made the observation, did not expect to hear any motor noise for the reason that it was a flying machine[?]. That flier X set a course out from [for] the sea in an easterly direction and at the same time there was perceived from land two strong lights out at sea. They must have been masthead lights on a steamer or else lights on two boats which lay out at the limit of [territorial waters] or else a piece inside Swedish waters.

Later it would have been dangerous for pilots to enter the old ordinary route over Tärna and Storuman, had he directed his journey along a southerly glen which runs quite ~~near~~ near the Jämtland border. Up in the villages in Dorotea people heard it nearly nightly come roaring out from the mountain tops and disappear on the Norwegian border. However there was the possibility that the mountain flier was a machine which for its own part works especially in the mountains while the coastal flier has its own set territory. That these [crafts] in such a case should lie hidden during the day is as yet uninvestigated.

Fliers also observed from state (provincial) icebreaker. Also from the state icebreaker M Ymer has, according to the Skelleftebladet, been confirmed the mysterious light. When the state icebreaker was thirteen days ago on its way from Luleå to Skelleftekenen the crew observed at 5 o'clock a strong light due southward near the horizon. The light changed color and was seen to hastily move away until it suddenly disappeared.

1934 January 10 (Wed) New York Times, p. 11.

Mystery Plane Reported/Seen Again in North Sweden--Searcher and Three Lost. / Wireless to the New York Times.

STOCKHOLM, Jan. 9.--A mysterious airplane variously said to belong to narcotic smugglers, Japanese spies and Russian spies was reported again today over Westerbotten in North Sweden. The Swedish Air Force has already lost two airplanes, without loss of life, in efforts to locate the base of the strange plane. Concern is now felt for Lieutenant Wanberg, who disappeared on a scouting expedition afoot on Christmas, and for a party of three skiers forming a rescue party. Military headquarters reported today that search for the four along the Norwegian border had been fruitless.

1934 January 10 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3, last. (card 1)

Is Flier X's base Leningrad? / Russian flier exercises in long night flight. / Prominent Swedish aviation expert on the mysterious trips. / SMUGGLING EXCLUDED.

Flier X is a Russian airplane!--that is the latest theory. One of the most prominent aviation experts said in stalk with the Svenska Dagbladet that it is nonsense to talk about smuggling or the like. What would be smuggled, anyway? Liquor, narcotics or silk--they wouldn't pay.

--No, he continued, there cannot be any doubt about the mysterious flying machines over Norrland--it is clear that it is a matter of more than one machine--belonging to the Russian air force.

--Why is the flier over Sweden? Simply because it is out on a practice flight, where it is a matter of an expedition which is intended to give the pilot training in unknown terrain, in the dark and fog. It is no difficulty for a modern flying machine to go out in darkness and fog. And the distance from Leningrad or any air base in Karelia is by no means so great that it need deter a military flier from making a visit over Norrland or even into Norwegian territory. There still remain, continued the Svenska Dagbladet interviewer, various circumstances which speak directly [in favor] of accepting that, but for other reasons was not able during the time of the official investigation was still in progress, to better develop this point of view. He was reminded meanwhile of all the wide-eyed people which saw the mystery machine, and spoke of a metal machine like a Junker plane, and pointed out that a great many of the Russian military planes are metal machines of a type like the Junkers.

It is clear, he added, that its moves [are] simple training flights--provided that the presently proposed theories hold true--that it is a matter of testing materials and ~~is~~ piloting skill.

X maneuvers for an hour's exhibition at Holmön. / Pilot saw machine in the night go in spirals up and down. / (From our correspondent.)

UMEÅ, Tuesday. That flier X came in this evening ten minutes before ten from Sävarkället [from the direction of S...?] over Holmön. It was observed by all the lighthouse personnel at Holmöredd. When the flier came a mile from the sea, about at Gråssgrundet, it turned and began to go up and down in spirals. This way it continued during all the time the four persons made observations, totalling an hour and ten minutes. The machine never went down in the water, since it [stayed over] the high sea and the searchlight was never in use. On the other hand people at the lighthouse were able to discern the wing light[?]. How it circled around in that manner for an hour was a complete mystery for the lighthouse personnel. It may be, said lighthouse master Rutqvist, the machine circled in that manner to give some signal towards something unknown out ~~in~~ ~~the~~ ~~sea~~ at sea. People from the lighthouse could not see any ship and no light appeared either. The machine disappeared very gradually, and at five minutes past 11 o'clock Kvarken lay as dark and stormy as usual. For the lighthouse personnel the observation was a nightmare [dream]. Hundreds of reports of fliers. / A machine in the morning over Örnsköldsvik [Bay], at night at Härnösand.

Reports about the mysterious flying light came in on Tuesday from a great many places where people observed it. A reliable person at Örnsköldsvik, engineer [?] Linus HERNFELDT, heard at half past 7 o'clock in the morning a flying machine and could plainly observe both its faint glow [like fragas?] lights and a green light on the [front tip]. The machine circled five minutes over the town and disappeared at last in the valley [clef] between Asberg and Varvsverget. At 6 o'clock at night the populace in Blåsgon[?], north of Jorm in Frostviken, heard a flying machine which made a pass over Brattfjället[?] and disappeared in a southerly direction. Just before 7 o'clock two persons, whose reliability is said to be free from all doubt, discovered a strong light which moved hastily to the southeast. The light was tinged with red and moved in a circle over the Ljungaverks community and disappeared finally behind the mountain on the southern side of Ljungan. From the fourth air corps [it was found out] that none of its machines were at the time in question, in this area. About 100 persons, according to the Västerbottens Allehanda, have seen the machine in different places in the Härnösand area between 6 and 7 o'clock in the evening.

The pursuit plane from the air corps in Östersund has set up with a share of harshness during the search for "that flier X," with two machines put out of working condition for the time being. The solution to this [situation] has already come about, and for that second matter it is hoped that it will again be clear in a few days[weather]. As the aforementioned machine was searching the country around Årmarås, both motors happened to cut out, and it had to make an emergency landing. A new motor is on its way to the air field.

1934 January 11 () Manchester Guardian, p.

MISCELLANY / Old Story Readapted

There are reports from Helsingfors of what is described as a "spook aeroplane" flying over Northern Sweden and Finland. The ghost of an aeroplane would seem to be rather a novelty in the records of the supernatural; one feels sure that Headless Hubert and his pack of Spectral Hounds would regard the apparition as a most undesirable upstart. But ghost who came over with the Conqueror may be reassured; the machine may be new but its application is at least as old as the writers of adventure stories. The Swedish authorities have come to the conclusion that the "spook aeroplane" is really engaged in "transporting contraband spirits and drugs" into Scandinavian countries and that the tale of its ghostly activities has been put about merely in order to conceal the real business in hand.

And that, of course, brings the affair into line with one of the most grey-whiskered of all old "ghost" stories. How many tales of apparitions which have had their setting on the coast of the English Channel, have ultimately resolved themselves into a case of smugglers who provided the "ghost" in order to keep the curious away from their importations of "spirits" in [liquid] form? The "spook aeroplane," if used for that purpose, is scarcely an example of progress. It is rather a reminder that the wit of man devises new machines some-what more rapidly than new methods.

Also: Ye Monster Day by Day: Fytte III (Loch Ness) 1934 January 11 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p.3, last. (card 1)

Flier X carries out eighteen-year old Russian idea. / A connection from Murman (Murmansk) to the Atlantic. / Commission examining what the possibilities would be during a war. / NEW FLIGHT OVER ÖRNSKÖLDG-VIK.

The Svenska Dagbladet's report in yesterday's issue that the mysterious flying machine ~~is~~ is a Russian military plane, which at night undertakes exercise trips over Swedish territory, has received strong support in a statement by a Finland aviation expert. It may quite simply be the case, he said, that the Russians are resurrecting an 18-year old idea of an aerial connection between the Atlantic and Archangel. In the year 1916 a secret Russian commission was busy with examining the possibility that an open aerial connection route between the Atlantic and Murmansk during the time when the Eastern Sea and Frozen Sea harbors were blocked by ice. It was a matter of the greatest military significance for the Russians to be able to open this connection during a war, and their need [explains] the opinion of the Finnish expert. That which now furnishes the sensational reports was itself reported by the commission. [This sensational report comes fr that commission].

The greatest difficulty for the earlier idea was that airplanes had such a short range of action and at that time [could] not take hangar ship [?], but already people came to make plans about the connection [which] were not impossible or too hazardous. With the present-day airplanes, however, explains all the flying experts, it is no longer at all impossible for Russian machines to start from Russian territory and after a visit in the northland mountain territory to turn back hom without landing in between.

It is not incredible that the Russians now have a hangar vessel in the North Atlantic, probably an icebreaker, equipped so that it could take up airplanes. Through it could the occurrence of airplanes in Tarna and Lapland and the rest on the Norwegian side be explained. People have also thought that the proper people [authorities] should have interest to let our fliers procure more detailed information about how they should seek out the northland works [industries] [who] in case of an outbreak of an eventual war first and foremost could paralyze northland industries through a well planned aerial bombardment. As people know from the Nobile tragedy, there was as on the "Krasen" a flying machine [aboard].

The Russians have experimented very carefully on the possibility to open safely an aerial route to the Atlantic, for the occurrence [availability] of all other routes besides that one would be blocked. It is [likely] for them to train fliers who in all weather could take themselves out to the Atlantic over Murmanbaran klf[?]. That people in Finland have not observed Russian fliers is explained best due to their route going over the vast wastes in the north. A thing which ought to be surprising is that the flier uses a searchlight, [though it is] believed that he would carry out his experiment in greatest secrecy; but it has always been impossible in the winter darkness to [see clearly] without it.

On the map you see that the route of the ghost flier follows exactly coincident with the Russian layout [Krasen] (from) during the World War. There it was opined that some secret landing [field] was established up in the Norwegian mountains or on some deserted place on the Norwegian coast on the way to make connection with vessels in the Atlantic.

A further and more remarkable circumstance to mention [is that of] the Finnish member of the secret Russian commission, the person who in 1916 led the Russian investigation, now [has a] position in the Russian diplomatic service. He is at present Russian minister in Helsinki.

People here take the position that [they are] altogether incapable of judgment [and] the Swedish report that the ghost flier could have smuggled spies from Finland. From highest military sources it is declared that we in Finland, however, do not have so terribly many spies, [and] that they should go towards the moon in a flying machine flying them from this place, and besides arrangements have been made for all spies to take this way to fly out of Finland [?].

Report about the search [given] today to the defense ministry. On Thursday the air force chief came to the defense ministry to deliver a report about the measures which the air force has taken to carry out the search after the mysterious flier in Norrland.

Major Virgin: "The machine's depot lies out from the land." (From our correspondent.)

ORNSKÖLDSVIK, Wednesday. The Ornsköldsaviks-Posten has turned to the air force chief, Major General E. Virgin to hear his opinion on the matter.

"We know [for all] practical purposes nothing about what reason [it] really moves about, but I do not believe that it is truly a liquor smuggler, emphasized General Virgin. It occurs to me that it should take a very strong effort to go against liquor smuggling by air, when customs officials have too small resources at their disposal to fight against ordinary sea smuggling [?]. I am also certain that it must be a question of more than one machine, but what the true case is, I will not venture to say. A flying machine must have some depot, and according to opinion, this lies offshore but cannot be found in Russia.

--Could it possibly be on the Norwegian coast or somewhere in the Gulf of Finland?

--Yes, it could very well be like that. Meanwhile I answer for myself that the flier is not really headed for Sweden but that this country is only passed by the flier.

--And theories about an eventual future aerial bombardment of Norrland industries?

--I do not believe such a thing at all," concluded the general. Flying light seen over Bøden. / Ornsköldsavik area thought to especially interest the flier.

On Tuesday night many persons observed a strange flying machine which in gliding flight passed in an easterly direction over Boden fort and city. The military officer in command for upper Norrland, Major General Reitersavård, reported, however, that it was unlikely that it was a matter of any machine. It is said wholly to be restricted to a report of one of the fort watchmen, who observed a suspicious light moving in the sky. Meanwhile no motor noise was heard. Many versions [of the report] were in circulation, said the general, which on closer examination showed themselves to be founded on particularly unsound observations.

The Ornsköldsavik area is thought to an especially high degree to have begun to be favored by Flier X. On Tuesday morning an observation became known of a mysterious flying machine over the city by an engineer, Hörnfeldt, and it was reported that other persons of reliable judgment observed the flier at Bäckfjärden. A light was seen and at the same time a loud motor noise was heard. The machine, which was thought to come from out at sea, descended quickly after a short pass and went down on the bay [fjord], [where] people could plainly see how the snow cover [?] of the bay was lighted up a good bit as by a search light. Thereafter it became completely dark again. Furthermore a person in No parish during the last three evenings between 6 and 7 o'clock saw and heard a flier. Finally many persons in Ornsköldsavik reported that before 7 on Wednesday evening a loud motor noise was heard over the city.

Mysterious machine in the night over Älvkarleby. A person in Upplandsbodarna reported on Wednesday evening that an airplane passed over Rotskar in Älvkarleby during the night. The landsfiskal has listened to twelve person who with one voice declare that a very strong motor noise was heard over the little community at the Dalälvens outlet at 11:30 o'clock Tuesday night. All of them are convinced that the sound proceeded from an airplane.

Whole village sees machine on Wednesday evening. UMEÅ, Wednesday. (TT) In Oltokken in Tärna two persons on Wednesday night observed an airplane with lighted lights. About an hour later came a report from Arjepplana to the Västerbottens-Kuriren that people there also saw a light pass. The whole village had come out and looked.

Lighthouse master Rutqvist at Holmögadda light explained that on Tuesday night he saw with a telescope the ghost flier circle-dance over Grossgrundet. He had the impression that the airplane was double-decked (a biplane). The machine came from Sivar and had passed Burträsk, Iärn and Norsjö with a starting point probably from the Mala area or the mountains in Arjeplog. 1934 January 12 (Friday) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 7.

Flier X goes back down [lands again] outside Norway. / Customs cutter directed to the place.

The mysterious "Flier X" continues its raids, about which nothing has been done, and people have not found [xxx] out the slightest thing about the machine's possible landing place far up in the north. This machine, which the air force sent out to hunt for the mysterious plane, still has not succeeded in turning up any trace. Defense ministers, who on Thursday called in reports from the air force aerial search announces that no reason has been found to take any extreme defensive measures. They [it] will wait for information which could come in the very near future.

The machine again observed in Norway. / It is alleged to have gone down along the coast in the vicinity of Rörvik. / (From our east correspondent.)

OSLO, Thursday. From Rörvik it is put in [that] a 9:30 o'clock in the evening people are reported to have observed a flying machine at Fjukstad in Vikna. The machine was going so high that people could not hear the motor. Shortly afterwards it was reported from Mr. Kvalög in Vikna that people there also saw the machine. It went not so high, though, and people could hear noise and see plainly the two lights. The information comes from a merchant (businessman), Sönderlund, who is a very trustworthy person. Somewhat later in the night your correspondent had a telephone conversation with Mr. Sönderlund, who reported that another person, Oliver Kvalög, saw the machine go down in the sea. People could see the light from the machine during a quarter of an hour. Thereafter people saw plainly that the machine lifted [died] and disappeared in the direction of Sörmannen. From Rörvik was sent immediately a call to the various [other] telephone station[s] in Vikna so that people would keep up a careful lookout for the machine.

Directly afterward, about 10:30 o'clock, came in a report that the machine had come to Sörgjeslingan at 9 o'clock and that it went down on the sea at a place called Sleipkjäret. The customs cutter Ornen, which came to Rörvik at 6 o'clock in the evening, had been notified and was able almost immediately to go out to Sleipkjäret at Sörgjeslingan. From Nörøy in Vikna is reported that a flying machine was observed there on a course toward Sörgjeslingen, and in about 20 minutes people saw it there. The rest of the communicated information agreed. 1934 January 13 (Sat) New York Times, p. 3.

Secret Night Flying Is Laid to Russians / Finns Believe Trips Over Northern Scandinavia Are to Seek Atlantic Outlet. / Wireless to the NYT HELSINGFORS, Jan. 12.--The riddle of the mysterious airplanes that almost nightly for two weeks have been flying across the northernmost parts of Sweden and Norway to the Atlantic coast, causing attention over the whole of northern Europe, is believed here to have been solve by a Finnish expert.

He discards the popular theory of "ghost aviators" engaged in smuggling liquors and drugs on a large scale, and asserts the aviators are Russians in the service of the Soviet Government, who have been entrusted with the task of exploring a new and important air route between Russia and the Atlantic in order to enable Russia in case of war to maintain connections with Western Europe and America.

According to the Finnish expert, the Czarist Russian Government during the World War was anxious to establish such a route, but failed. He suggests that the proposed Russian route lies between Leningrad, Archangel, Murmansk and the Atlantic, and that the Russians possibly have stationed a mother ship in Arctic waters. That would explain why the aviators are never seen landing in Scandinavian territory.

Mon. Jan. 29, p.6--Sweden to Sift Air Mystery. / Wireless to the NYT. STOCKHOLM, Jan. 28.--The "phantom" fliers over Sweden and Finland were the subject of interpellations in Parliament today, and the government ordered an investigation by the Swedish Air Force. The nationality of the mysterious airmen is not yet known, but it is generally believed the aviators are bound on Soviet test flights to Arctic ice-breakers.

1934 January 13 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 7. (card 1)

Flier sightings are mass psychosis, ~~he~~ believes Virgin. / Haparanda customs [officials] reports confirm however that flier X exists after all. /

HÄRNOSAND, Friday. (TT) The air force chief, General-Major Virgin, has ~~repeated~~ spoken about the mysterious aerial visitor which is believed to have been observed in different places in Norrland. It may be taken as a fact, declares General-Major Virgin, that a strange flying machine was observed over Västerbotten for some time lately. ~~XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX~~ This was so in spite of the fact that nothing is remarkable about the fact that an airplane with proper markings has the right to fly over Swedish territory. It is a common mistake that such things do not happen. Only the vicinity of fortresses constitutes an exception [to free flight].

Major-General Virgin found it strange that this misconception about the appearance of airplanes arose with the direction [because of] the more or less mysterious light which people believe they see in the sky. It must be clear to each and everyone that it was [would be] pure childishness for a flier who ~~is~~ [knows] anything about telescopes to incessantly appear above thickly settled country with searchlight and lights in full view. It all must indicate a rarely occurring mood of panic and mass suggestion which has [disturbed] the reason of the Swedish people to react in the presence of such mysterious stories. It is quite clear that the sooner this mass suggestion disappears, the better.

A motor cutter still shall search.

The customs cruiser Ornen returned tonight to Rörvik without having picked up any trace of the machine.

Just after the "Ornen" came back five men who work on a ship in the harbor saw the mysterious flying machine between Grinna light and Värövsund [sound] at a distance of about eight kilometers. It carried three lights, one red, one green and one white. Plainest to see were the red and white ones. Motor noise was heard plainly. One of the men hurried to the "Ornen," aboard which a crewman also heard noise from the flying machine. A moment later the machine disappeared behind Rymsödden, but the motor noise was heard for an hour. The motor cutter Norland also has now come to Rörvik and will take part in the investigations.

District Surveyor of Customs' observation is something to hold onto.

On account of district surveyor of customs Ström's report in Haparanda to the county government in Luleå of the appearance of an airplane moving over the vicinity of the border town, county secretary [?] Sundberg declared that no positive results had been extracted by the investigation, which on the initiative of the county government was undertaken by one of the landsfiskals in Norrbotten, within whose territory the [supposed] ghost flier has been observed. The first report, which really was something to hold onto, and which indistinctly pointed out that the mysterious machine really carries on its activities even here in the country, is, continued the county secretary, the report which I received last night from district surveyor of customs Ström in Haparanda.

Ghost flier once again seen in Norway.

In Isfjord at Andalsnes was observed on Thursday a flying machine, which at high speed and great height disappeared towards Romsdalsfjord. The machine was observed by many persons and the [floating motion] of it was well seen. It is likely that the movements [were those] of the [supposed] ghost flier.

1934 January 14 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, pp. 3,14 (card 1)

Rörvik the ghost flier's base. / Two airplanes observed on Saturday. / They went down in the islands [Skärgårds] outside Rörvik. / Customs officials have had luck. / The one crosses [the lake], the other on the ground[?].

Two of the mysterious flying machines which haunt the northern borders of Sweden and Norway is said on Saturday night to have gone down in the vicinity of Rörvik, a Norwegian fishing village [place] which lies on about the same latitude as Skelläfteå. At 7 o'clock in the evening, one landed in Kvalsundet [sound] at Conj Vikna, and the other a little while later went down at Oksbosen in Flatanger. So soon did the news about this reach Rörvik, the customs cutter Ornen set out in order to investigate. In the crossing a man from the state police followed as well. When people many days before saw the flying machine in this area, people believed that the ghost flier had its base in the islands [Skä skargården] outside Rörvik.

The Svenska Dagbladet succeeded later in the night getting in telephone contact with farmers in Rörvik, who reported at a time of 8:30 when the Ornen went out. ~~It~~ [is] opinion was that it should first go to Kvalsundet and then to Oksbosen. Meanwhile it came no farther than the area of Kvelpspår, where it ran aground. Assistance was requested from Rörvik, but the rescue steamer stationed there had boiler damage and therefore could not go out. Instead a fast motor boat was sent out. The Ornen succeeded after several hours in being able to break free by itself, but sought the harbor, since it received some damage and examined it closely[?]. Whether the police sent out got over in some other boat and continued out to Kvalsundet, the farmers did not know. People have not heard anything at all about it.

The machine which went down in Kvalp Sound was observed from many places in Hamdalen. People heard motor noise and saw a light against a mountain crest, at which moment the machine may have landed. If it remained, no one knew. It is possible that both one and the other which went down at Oksbosen returned separately. People have seen the mysterious machine also earlier in this area, and last Friday the "Ornen" together with another customs cruiser, Nordland, were on the look-out. The "Nordland" sprang a leak and sailed in. The cruiser had to be run aground to keep it from sinking. The crew, six men, went over to the Ornen. Later a salvage steamer came to the place, stopped the [hole in] the "Nordland" temporarily, dragged it from the ground and brought it in to Rörvik, [all of] which happened on Monday.

Night flier seen in Örnsköld Bay.

Ninety percent of the reported observations of a flier X moving in Norrland are surely pure suggestion phenomena. According to what the Svenska Dagbladet learned, peopled at Örnsköld Bay are said meanwhile to actually have seen a flying machine night before Saturday [Friday night]. A person who sat at home and read, heard motor noise, extinguished his light and ran over to the window. Then he [was able] to see a flying machine at a right low altitude outlined against the lighted night sky. The machine carried no light, but the contours of the plane's body were plainly outlined, though no details could be discerned. The plane left swiftly in a northerly direction. The observer in question immediately awoke his wife, but before she [reached] the window, the flying machine had already disappeared.

Observations are confirmed by many persons [who] all perceived a sound from a flying machine at the same time of night and also hurried over to the windows but without seeing anything. Among these [people] in question is found one person with skilled judgment about motors, who [is] automobile inspection engineer Gösta Westman, who with his extensive activity in the automobile department [perhaps] ought to be able to distinguish between the sound of an airplane motor and an automobile motor. "I am fully convinced," said engineer Westman, that it was a flying machine I heard, but the view from my window was especially limited, and when I hurried over to the window there was nothing I could see [?]." Major von Forst in Östersund reports on inquiry that the machine could not have been any army flier. Venerström gives new instructions.

Provincial Governor Gärdes' telegraph to request search assistance from the air force on Saturday [received] close consideration within the defense department. State Minister [?] Venerström commented this morning on a notice from the Svenska Dagbladet on a report from Haparanda which caused the provincial governor to propose that what happened was reasonably uncertain [?]. Later in the day the state minister reported that the air force had made a certain further directive. Who this went out to, he [regarded] as unsuitable to speak of, however.

That light, which district customs surveyor Ström in Haparanda saw Thursday, is said by other persons in the place to be a [mis]interpreted star.

--It must have been a flying machine, said the district customs surveyor when the Svenska Dagbladet asked him about it. I sat in the middle room in the customs yard [house]. It was 5:15 o'clock in the ~~XXXXXX~~ afternoon, when a loud motor noise reached my ear. I went to the window and [due] westward saw a light moving in the air. I didn't see the machine itself--it was too dark and the distance was very great. I imagined meanwhile that the light came from the stern light on the machine. Five other revenue officers were summoned, and they had the same idea [about it] as I. What is more, I rang up Kalix, and there the customs officials also had seen the light from the flying machine.

--Did people see anything on the Finnish side?

--No, I have just been over and talked with several persons in Torné, but no one there has seen any flying machine.

Conference in Oslo on the ghost flier.

OSLO, Saturday (TT). Yesterday a meeting took place between defense minister [in the cabinet] Kybro and Commander-General Laake concerning reports about the mysterious flying machine appearances. The conference resulted in its [members having] had their attention directed to the matter and took the measures the situation required. What these measures provide, the general would not speak about. General Laake has said that if the reports of the flying machine are correct, it is likely 1934 January 15 (Mon) Svenska Dagbladet, pp.3, last p. (card 1)

Ghost flier's radio signals heard in Norway. / The machine passes a place outside Ureå. / "Sputtering" from motor plainly made out. /

The air in the country where the mysterious ~~fix~~ airplanes are observed was barely favorable during Sunday for their expeditions, and they seem to have kept still. In ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ any case no reports came in from Norrland that it was observed again. On the other hand an additional pair of reports have since been sent in about a ghost machine flying over Norwegian territory on Saturday evening, which passed over Hitra at 2 o'clock at night on Sunday. As usual with lights burning, and now could be perceived motor din as well. At the same time the radio picked up certain mysterious signals. A later observation was reported from Bjurholm, several miles west of Ureå. A machine had already passed over the area on Tuesday and then was heard plainly a series of reports from the motors.

Airplane goes down outside [near] Kristiansund. / (From our correspondent) TRONDHEIM, Sunday. From Opdal it is reported that two reliable men at 7 o'clock on Wednesday night observed a light which doubtlessly issued from an airplane. They saw only the light, and heard no motor noise. The flier disappeared in a southerly direction. From Hitra it is reported that an airplane was observed at 2 o'clock at night by four credible men. The airplane followed the usual flight line southward. The men saw the machine itself ~~XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX~~ with Two lights (?), a green side light and a strong stern light. Likewise a weak motor noise was heard. Signals which the flier sent out were picked up on the radio.

From Kristiansund it is reported at 11 o'clock on Wednesday evening three reliable men in Kristiansund observed a peculiar light in the direction of Stavnes lighthouse. There were three lights, which by all judgments came from an airplane. One was made out to be a bright searchlight while the other was white and green. The lights moved in a northeasterly direction and disappeared at sea outside Grip. At 4 o'clock this morning a group of people observed a mysterious light which went low in the sky between Fröja and Tustna.

The customs cruiser Ornen, which yesterday ran aground, has succeeded in taking itself loose by its own engine and has returned to Rörvik. The vessel had not suffered any injury. The customs cruiser Nordland has now been stocked with provisions and went northward Sunday morning to go into the Crepairing ship, dock). Eight "shots" from the nightly flier. / "Flier X" passes Bjurholms parish with backfiring motor. / (From our correspondent.)

UMÄ, Sunday. During the past three days no reports of ghost fliers have come in from any area of Västerbotten, so people had started to think that their activity in this area had ceased, at least temporarily. It may be due to the onset (passage) of the unfavorable weather, the storm and abundant snowfall has made aerial travel somewhat risky.

From Bjurholm has come in a report that a man on Tuesday saw a ghost plane fly over the parish. In one village it was [stated] that people heard eight reports discharge from the machine. With greatest probability the observer confused the reports from the motor, which arose through the "sputter" which occurred when the machine went in a gliding flight, with a backfiring motor. What interests the observer in this matter is the clearly formed indication for accepting as correct that what passes is an ordinary [i.e. mortal] flying machine.

1934 January 15 (Mon) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 4 (ed.) (card 1)

The Unknown Airplane.

While the first reports came in about the so-called ghost flier over Norrland, expert opinion appeared to take its place on the skeptical side. A flier, which principally appears at night and which makes landing attempts up in the middle of the wastelands, represents something so fundamentally strange that people first took any other supposed explanation for the observed luminous phenomenon, before it became the strange aerial visitor (in earnest). Since then so many confirmed observations have been reported that no doubt is any longer possible. A great part of what has come in certainly could be written off as fantastic alarm accounts, but what remains is sufficient to convince even the skeptics.

The past seems to be that there are really many airplanes repeatedly making passes over the southern Lappland mountain area, especially the vicinity Tärna-Sorsele-Stensele, and it is further strongly believed that it also travels the coast where there have been observations as far north as [the vicinity of] Haparanda. Corresponding observations have been made on the Norwegian coast. The flier has set out somewhat along the parallel where the district between the Atlantic and Karelia are shortest.

To get any clearer understanding about the purpose of the flier has proved unfeasible. From both the Swedish and Norwegian sides attempts have been made to come in closer contact with the mysterious flier but (without any) results. The Norwegian customs vessel which was sent out has been pursued by unparalleled bad luck, and on the Swedish side there have not been observations over and above what the local people have been able to make (?). People at this time ought to pause to remember that no other coercive means remain at our command (?).

Were it a strange civilian flier with nationality markings on his machine, he would have full right to take his chosen flight over Sweden, provided he did not pass the forbidden zones of fortifications. Were it a military flier, (in that case it would be a different matter), but it cannot really come into question that from our side it sets out to attack (our own fortresses). What under favorable circumstances can be established is its nationality, and with luck, by one way or another, procure knowledge of its mission.

The method which lies nearest to hand for obtaining this information ought to be a ration through-search of Norrland by the air force. Such attempts are recommended for other places, since it is said even that the cost need not go to any great sum. The opinion seems to be that all fliers should set out with the purpose to spy out and locate the uninvited flying guest over the Lapp mountains. Can this purpose be carried out by and large?

The difficulties are considerably greater even than most people realize. To begin with, to send out all Swedish search planes is out of the question (unreasonable). Their greatest range is 160 km at a time, and probably the foreign flier is technically better equipped. Before the Swedish search planes had reported in and made themselves ready to set out [again], the chance to do anything worthwhile would surely already be past. The searchplane with the greater speed should have the better prospect, on the other hand. But the plane, which is of the Jaktfalken type, could; though its construction is Swedish, it is not supplied with skids and is consequently useless for flying in mountain areas. The searchplane which Sweden owns in another type, could well enough do the job, though the task is so extensive that the "busted" Norrland couldn't succeed. [Furthermore] personnel in training for night flying are useless for very extensive night search undertakings. For the rest even the equipment question is very troublesome. So much can be shown about this, that it is not merely a matter of money when satisfactory equipment for the necessary number of airplanes offers an unsolvable problem. With respect to all this must it be certain that the whole flying capacity during the present limitations is not in a position to go on a careful through-search of Norrland as would be required to solve the ghost flier riddle. This judgment is overwhelming and cannot be disputed.

As a background to these limitations appears the state political bill (passed) against the air force as the right explanation. Yearly State operations proposals, quarterly estimated, are very characteristically kept quiet. Under the rubric of "[?] cost for procurement of air material etc." shows as a regular budget of 1,614,900 kr. The air command (hoped) in August that the sum for the budget in 1934-35 might amount to 4,085,000 kr. The defense minister said, "With respect to the state budget (situation) I do not think I could approve, that for the [?] cost of procurement of air material etc for the next budget to show a higher amount than 2,100,000 kr." Is it surprising that the air force has stayed so long at this level, which was set firm in the last defense plan? The air force also has an ordinary (regular) grant for air material, out of which all compensation for sea damage shall come out. Next year this fund will expend 2,252,000 kr. The air [ministry] requested a raise to 3,987,000 kr. The defense minister, who knows that sea damage was increased a mere 150,000 kr., still cannot recommend a higher fund than 2,250,000 kr.!

Because of this funding politics Sweden has an air force which on essential points is wanting. If it should be [expected] from this unforeseen situation [to get out] in the middle of winter nights to search through Norrland on a hunt after some unknown aerial vagabond, then the air force is in a position to accomplish the following. It can under normal circumstances undertake tactical and strategic searches and to a much more limited extent take military action by means of pursuit planes. The limitation is settled by the scarcity of airplanes. But the central offensive (force) which carries out aerial bombing is every bit left out from the Swedish air force scope of activity. It is still in fact completely without any bombers. It strikes us that airplanes are necessary if the air force is to be able to carry out independent operations. Weakness depends only on material deficiency, and responsibility rests solely on the funds-granting authorities.

Not far from our land lies Soviet Russia, which for years has put mighty sums into air force building and which according to information commands the world's most skillful airplane constructors. Whether the unknown Norrland flier is of Russian origin or not is uncertain, but irrespective of that, witness those appearances of technical equipment and flying skill which at least in the aforementioned reference leaves our air force far behind. In the modern way of conducting war, who has possession of an air force comes to be a matter of greatest significance.

Sweden is dangerously falling behind in worthwhile aerial defense, but this deficiency can be remedied without all too great a cost. The episode with the unknown Norrlands flier comes, if chances are not favorable, to remain as an insoluble problem. But it ought to be a warning and thought provoker for those who have the responsibility for the modern Swedish defense policy.

1934 January 16 (Tues) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

Occultist exposes the ghost flier. / Defense minister gets information from [spiritualist] medium.

Mr. minister and chief of the defense department received on Monday an (in some respects) highly remarkable visit in connection with investigations of the so-called ghost airplane. Already on Sunday the ~~defense minister~~ had sought to obtain a meeting with state minister Vennerström in order to make delivery of his most significant and most urgent information about the matter. When he on Monday had occasion to visit the defense minister's official office, ~~for~~ himself that the informant was one of the city's most famous occultist. He had gotten his inside information through a [spiritualistic] seance, which hardly can surprise anyone.

Minister Vennerström received a detailed relation. He is said however not to have thought for the present (that he) ought to carry it further, which will not be any surprise either.

1934 January 16 (Tues) Svenska Dagbladet, pp. 3,20 (card 1)

A PHANTOM / Chase in Norrland? / ~~Many~~ Pure mass suggestion, people should now believe. / Many wide-eyed stories corrected and contradicted. / RESULT OF A CRITICAL EXAMINATION. /

HÄRNOSAND, Monday. Norrland during a month and a half has only lived for one reason, the ghost flier. Wherever two or three people meet the ghost flier has been on everybody's lips. The Norrland heavenly mystery has overshadowed everything else. Far up in the murky uninhabited [regions] without a village, without [even] a distant homestead, without a cottage or lumberman's shack, where man is unknown, there flies a strange, daring and extremely skillful ghost flier over the desolate treetops. The mystery, which otherwise brooded [pregnantly enough] over midwinter settlements in upper Norrland, has brought forth a phantom whose rumbling motor soon [declared itself] in every Norrland village and whose jaunty light flashed over well-nigh every mountain crag, where sightseers gather at the new witching hour (spooking time), 5-7 o'clock in the afternoon.

What is it people see and what is it the Swedish military fliers hunt now with risk to life and equipment? The ghost flier is the answer. But [by] now it has gone on so long that people have to ask themselves if it ever existed. There is in every case [of] short glimpses the probability that it appeared over Swedish during the past fourteen days. The investigation our correspondent carried out sets it beyond all doubt, that people here only have to do with a gigantic [case of] mass suggestion, but now with any flier. It should be about time to stop this hysteria before it costs more money and before all, before it costs men's lives. [We have clearly had a narrow escape.]

The Swedish flier unfortunately is not at all equipped for night flying and besides lacks any air bases in mid-Norrländ.

It can be observed that the reports were vague, that it was always under perfect control whatever happened in the area in question(?), and it might not hurt for people to clarify for themselves how depopulated Norrländ is [still] a possibility for effective encroachment on the part of the air force. But this does not likely affect anything (?) which shows itself to be mass suggestion.

The supposition of a ghost flier doubtful.

Even the supposition of a ghost flier is in a high degree doubtful. Nightly espionage, often in driving storms and blizzards, over entirely deserted mountain barrens for nearly two months a time from a flying machine which drives around with a pair of side lights and a stern light and now and then takes a trip over a town where a hundred passers-by observe it and hear it, ought, one would think, even from the beginning to have been assigned to the fantasy world. If the purposes of a flying machine like that are an absurdity, the reports are not much better. Examine them closely and you find hundreds of equally incredible observations from two-thirds of the country.

In the investigation our correspondent carried out about the first definite evidence for the ghost airplane's existence the man certainly met a string of contradictory reports, but the pervading tendency is so plain that there scarcely can prevail any doubt that the hunting ought to cease. It is namely [definitely] neither a ghost airplane or a Swedish military plane, which [should] settle the matter [but not for] the public itself, [so it seems!], [So great is the circumstantiality of all this that it is said] that 99 percent of the reports do not stand up in the presence of a careful examination. The question ought to be if we should say 99 or 100 percent.

The confrontation with the mysterious flier, which our correspondent went through in the area of this village recently may be indicative of the ghost's character. For some time since the populace in Häggdängers parish reported that the ghost flier was seen there for a second time. This visit established that it sank in [imitation of] Sirkus. Early in the evening another village saw Venus vander toward the horizon "like a torch now swinging over the horizon." In Härnösand the planet Venus was observed several days later by a hundred persons. Most of them and among them engineers and other people of good judgment, declared with positiveness that it must be an airplane moving about. With the assistance of astronomical experts it was possible to establish that it was Venus people had seen.

First wide-eyed relations exaggerated.

We are called upon meanwhile to speak about the first [sightings], from which statements the whole ghost flier story built up. The first observer of the mysterious false light was a ranger (forester) Gunnar Ågren in Sorsele. At the end of the month of November he found himself up at Lake Fjora fields on a service job. During the course of several weeks he saw the light a total of four times. He stated frankly that the light looked like the light from a star. It appeared every time between 5-7. The times he observed it, it moved over a mountain. He had the impression that this movement was irregular. It can be mentioned that at the aforesaid observation in Häggdängers people also declared with certainty, that the light people saw moved irregularly. The light appeared in the northwest. It moved considerably faster than a star. Meanwhile Ågren did not perceive any motor noise, and believes that one of the evenings when he observed the light was starlit(?) and he could see nothing of an airplane body but only a light. On returning to Sorsele he reported his observations in a companionable way and suggested the hypothesis that it could have been an airplane. It was not his intention to forward the observation to the press, but after several days the newspapers nevertheless picked up the matter. There are reports found there, declared Ågren with certainty, which he never gave. His reports had been exaggerated to a serious degree.

Many persons who saw the light at the same time as Ågren thought equally readily that it could move about in the heavens [could move like a heavenly body]. The very beginnings of the ghost story was thus already considerably deviant from truth.

Concerning this and the following light-observations it deserves to be pointed out that Major G. Lunding, officer in command at the Hansö fortress territory, declared that it hardly can be thought that an airplane light could be sighted from the ground without the motor's noise being picked up at the same time.

Once again [sharp eyes] find an entirely new mystery.

The witness, forester (ranger) Carlsson in Sorsele, who also added to the first report, declared that for his part [there was little to come by, evidence-wise]. Seventy percent of the observations, he acknowledged were learned to be mistakes, and the whole thing has become an unprecedented exaggeration. He himself has heard only a noise from the sky. Forester Carlsson will declare ranger Ågren's observations of the sort that, if people would now abandon the ghost airplane theory, they would see it was a reflection of an automobile headlight he saw in the sky.

News vendor (?) Olof Hedlund in Vilhelmina is one of the connecting himself [key] links in the evidence for the machine's existence. He found in Sorsele the day before New Years Eve [evening?] for [the sake of] inventorying a Pressbyråns stand [kiosk]. He maintained continually [still] at the same time with our correspondent that he saw an airplane which he took to be the flying ambulance from Boden. He stayed in the stand [store] in Sorsele till just before 4 o'clock a.m., and then he stepped out, saw a machine which came at 400 meters high without lights and with the motor shut off. It made three passes around the stationhouse still with the motor shut off and later in this gliding flight went out toward the north (?). This evidence should be the strongest, as one of the better observations of the plane's body. Hedlund says himself that(?) during a whole quarter of [an hour] he observed the flying machine in the moonlight it was able [during this time to keep itself in the air without [running] the motor. He could not [get over] how great a part of the heavens the machine moved over. The evidence clearly has only to reckon with whether the motor really was shut off, because a station man who was who was in the vicinity declares that he most certainly should have heard if an airplane motor worked at that time. A postman, who was out at the same time and concurred with Hedlund, without any of the morning observations being mentioned, made the same observation. Since Hedlund's evidence falls from a clear technical impossibility, that the machine probably should have been described as falling in its flight (?), is a little matter to be reckoned with. Our correspondent's asking how Hedlund—he has exercised with the air force—thought that the machine could keep itself up in the way he described, he answered short and to the point that it was a "mysterious" business.

Venus taken in Haparanda for an airplane light.

The last binding link in the chain of evidence considered worthy is the observation of district surveyor of customs in Haparanda. He tells he heard a machine over Haparanda town at 5:15 o'clock and then together with several customs men he saw a stern light and heard motor noise. The first person, a customs overseer who called in the district surveyor, threw doubt on whether what moved here was an airplane. The observations were thus dubious from the start.

Our correspondent has [expected this to be the solution] and informed persons in Haparanda about this matter. Fire Chief J.O.

Råthfjell declared that he hardly believed in this ~~strange~~ thing. Nobody had observed an airplane over the town in spite of [the fact] that it was supposed to have appeared at midday. When the fire chief reached the place for observation, people had stood and watched the phenomenon for fifteen minutes. A whole lot of the observers thought in fact that what it was, was Venus. Everybody there said that what passed here the other time was a heavenly body. The phenomenon was also seen here at the same moment as at another place. Hr. Råthfjell informs us also that he made an automobile trip to search in the Kallix area following "airplane observations" and he himself came to the conclusion that they all had nothing to do with any airplanes. People in all the areas he visited had confused the evening star with an airplane light. The fire chief did not discover any men, outside the customs men, who made the same observations as those in Haparanda. Indeed he has seen the "ghost airplane" himself and came to the conclusion that the whole thing was a mistake.

No one in Haparanda has seen the body of the plane.

Apothecary Bergner in Haparanda declares also that neither he nor the apothecary personnel came in contact with anyone who will bear witness to observing the airplane. His audience in the apothecary after the observation has concurred with the district surveyor of customs and thereby regretted that no one hitherto chanced to see the body of the airplane. The apothecary lies about 300 meters south of the customs house. At the Stadshotel in Haparanda neither has anyone seen nor heard an airplane, and people likewise have come into contact with few persons who believe they witnessed an aerial visit over the town. It is clear from what goes out from here, that the Haparanda link in the evidence [is broken]. Two military planes meanwhile have flown up to the latest ghost district today.

By reason of this investigation people may with impunity (believe) [accept?] that the ghost flier plays out its role in Norrländ. By this material evidence at hand people can most likely not build up a tenable theory either about spying or smuggling flights. Had a flier passed Lappland, which has not been flown [over] many times, then these observations could be made, and even if he would reveal himself, it would not thereby as a matter of course increase [evidence for the reality] of this daily hallucination(?). It is really easy to dismiss as well the other possible reports from wilderness areas of other parts of the country as a fragment out of a mass suggestion, which in the question of duration and intensity [there has certainly never been the like of this] Norrländ mystery story. In closing it can be added that people ought only to make themselves more skeptical about the whole thing, [and these] reports of new sightings would quite cease to flow in.

Ghost flier over Lycksele yesterday? / A driver asserts he plainly saw the machine / (From our correspondent.)

UMEA, Monday. For the first time in several days has one of the Flier Xs appeared on the southward side, this time over a Lycksele country town. At 3 o'clock this afternoon, according to the Västerbottens-Kuriren, a driver, Vilhelm Fjellström, observed an airplane going at about 1000 meters altitude on its way down the coast. The machine could be plainly seen in the prevailing daylight and ~~the~~ the observer believed the machine was a biplane. Meanwhile at this distance he could not see any badge [identification] or any markings. [As far as motor noise goes], he discerned how the engine sputtered a couple of times. The newspaper has verified that no known airplane passed over this above mentioned area at ?

1934 January 17 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 12.

(card 1)

Is the ghost flier guided by shortwave? / Nordlundsbo (village?) intercepts a message: "Go down to the sea and stay at Niskallha."

Reports about the mysterious ghost flier have done anything but become scarcer than before. Every day has produced a couple, which it appears, mark reports of new observations on both sides of the national boundary. A witness report which on the Norwegian side is given great significance, was made by a [female] teacher outside Rorvik, who called out the yard crew in order to have more witnesses. The most notable information—if it is in fact correct—comes from a worker outside [from] Nordmalig who in the past weeks says early in the morning he had intercepted a message in broken Swedish. It went out to a plane ~~directing~~ to direct it down on the water in a certain place to "hide something." (?)

A workman, whose name is Hjalmar Hedström, living on the island of Norrbyskärr, off Nordmalings, has reported to the Västerbottens-Kuriren that on Thursday morning of last week immediately before 5 o'clock he happened to tune in his radio and then came in contact with a radio broadcast on the long wavelength which sent out the following communication in broken Swedish: "The sea is calm, two degrees warm, so you can land on the water and stay [if you have to]. Return at quarter till 8 for further communications." In addition it accounted for the direction of the wind and conditions which the listener however was unable to remember. At the announced time for the later communication the same word was picked up by Hedström's father and a neighbor. On Friday morning Hedström attempted again to make contact with the sender. It happened that this time the communication was so weak and indistinct that words could not be made out. Hedström however was of the opinion that it was the same sender [transmitter] which he had [contacted] the day before.

Many persons on Monday of this week are said to have observed a bright gleam of light at sea outside Norrbyskärr and it is asserted as well that some also heard motor noise.

A [female] teacher [from outside] Rörvik sees the light move back and forth on the Norwegian coast. / (From our correspondent.)

RÖRVIK, Tuesday. Teacher Miss Martha Megard observed at 6 o'clock in the evening a light which moved over [her] house [in] Vikestad, circa 6 kilometers from Rörvik. She summoned the household people at once, whom also took notice of the mysterious light. It moved in a northwesterly direction and thereafter back and forth. People saw a varying red and green light. Miss Megard and a boy from the house climbed up to a nearby high place and there saw the light plainly. Sometimes it moved with great speed, sometimes with less. The light moved back and forth, and after a short disappearance behind [Mt.] Borgarfjellet, then [moved] out to sea. City policeman Konstad thinks that this is one of the most important reports which have come in about the matter.

1934 January 18 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 13.

(card 1)

Aerial searchers do not doubt flier X. / Man has [had to] follow it this way through long distances (!). / THE CHASE SUSPENDED / (From our correspondent.)

ÖRNSKÖLDSDVIK, Wednesday. The ~~xxx~~ chase for the Norrland phantom has been suspended. According to what our correspondent gathered, [members] of the Fourth flying corps which during recent days carried out the search for the ghost flier and its air base in the Västerbottens mountains, have received the order to break off the work and return to Östersund. The machines are expected to arrive there today.

That the mysterious ghost flier really exists can be thought to stand beyond all doubt, emphasized Captain Zachrisson, chief of one of the search parties from Östersund, which went out to search [in order] to come to grips with the flier X mystery.

He is certain, as [shown] also from the emphasis he placed, that in all probability the evening star and atmospheric phenomena played an important role in many cases when people thought they saw a "ghost flier," but this reason still cannot explain away much of the significant evidence at hand [about] peculiar things [from] reliable persons. In some cases people actually have been able to follow the ghost flier a very long way, to judge by the news a reporter showed him, and even if secrecy never loosened and the ghost flier never lets us know who he is, people can still never [escape the fact] that he or another [machine] has for a couple of months' time amused himself to fly around over the northland boundary territory.

--To which of the many theories on the origin of this dark affair does Capt. Zachrisson subscribe?

--To none of them, really. When you don't know what you should believe, it's sure you won't beat your brains out too long. This much I can say, however--that in the beginning I was convinced that it was the activities of liquor smugglers, but since the traffic continued some bit, why people must inevitably see that no smuggler can find it an economically paying [venture] to fly night after night over the country's most uninhabited areas for the sake of some paltry barrels of liquor.

A skillful flier and unparalleled daring.

--And theories of a flying photographer?

--It is naturally possible at nighttime, but I am not able to comprehend why a strange power should put itself to so much trouble to attempt in an illegal way to make an aerial map over the country, when as a matter of fact we have such excellent maps which we have made accessible for those who will buy them, and on the level and entirely out in the open. Whatever you believe, you have to admire the flier's skill, because many flights there surely must have been, [and] they are not only skillful but also unparalleled in daring, because flying up in the Lappland mountains with quick changes in wind conditions is not child's play during winter, [as we know too well].

--What does the captain believe about the Finnish theory that the Russians have been engaged in setting up a connection with the North Atlantic?

--Yes nothing is impossible. The Russians, according to what [is said], [have worked] especially so long on the question of flying and have laid down great expense to get out first-class equipment. Already during the world war there was experience enough to [make] skilled pilots and it is so possible that now there is no longer any doubt. A direct flight from some point in Russia to the northern coast is naturally not impossible. It must only be remembered that people can fly over the Atlantic, but a depot vessel must in such a case if stay somewhere on the northern coast, and it is of course remarkable that it has not been found, if the new theories are right.

--It has [been suggested] that if an aerial route should be [esablished] over this area the authorities would not have need to persist as long as they actually have! (?)

--[I don't know anything to contradict the theory], concluded Capt. Zachrisson. It is only necessary, I think, that there should be trained as many people as possible for this special information. It is in every case tragic that we cannot succeed in exposing the ghost flier during this search. It has been an appropriate [job] for us to establish whether the flier has any depot on land or not, and [so far as] we could find, such has not been the case. Sheriff's officers see flier X after Venus goes down. / (From our Oslo correspondent.)

Oslo, Wednesday. From Høsjøen is telegraphed that sheriff's officers in Vik yesterday evening at ten minutes before 7 observed an airplane which passed in a southwesterly direction. Venus had then gone down, so that confusion with this star must be thought out of the question. Also sheriff's officers in Bindelen say that all the people in Holm and Helgeland as well saw the airplane at the same time going in a southwesterly direction. An hour and a half later the machine was seen coming in a northeasterly direction. Jumping Venus is the ghost flier--believes everyone. / (Special to the Svenska Dagbladet.)

BERGEN, Wednesday. The mystery surrounding the mysterious airplane in Nordland and Trøndelagen has shown itself to be a pure farce. The ghost airplane has, according to the captain of the "Dronning Maud," been exposed as Venus. ~~xxxx~~ Through careful investigation and sound thinking the captain himself could ascertain this with certainty. On ~~xxxx~~ Sunday evening the star was observed carefully in Trondheimsjarden, says the captain. It went down in a cloud and brought to mind an electric arc light. The star was going down and stood only 15 degrees over the horizon. While we expected that the star would disappear, [we] saw it go out as if it suddenly made some [sudden pitch], and if we had not kept track of it daily, then the three of us on the bridge would have been willing to take a oath that it was a flier which went down. Thus it all reduces to a strange optical illusion, the same illusion which has been taken for the ghost flier observed.

1934 January 21 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 11.

The "ghost light" a delusion which grows ever worse. / Fantastic reports from three Norwegian farmers. /

That mysterious ghost light--it is perhaps no longer worthwhile to speak about a "ghost flier," since it is no longer known what it is--continues to get itself talked about.

Thus it is reported from Sundsvall that a man in Edsikers village in Ljustorp, Madelpad (!), at 5 on Saturday afternoon observed a bright gleam of light which quickly moved to the southwest. Almost all the inhabitants of the village were on their feet in order to get a look at the phenomenon. Furthermore there was also heard a distant noise, which was "like motor noise from an airplane!" After a quarter hour the light disappeared behind the horizon toward the southwest.

Yet not only Sweden but also neighboring countries continue their (astronomical?) observations. Thus Tornea reports that a man on Saturday morning at 4 o'clock saw an airplane over Torne River. It was a signalman on the railway, two miles north of Raparanda, who saw the flier in question. Furthermore a farmer in Övertorneå has confirmed that on Tuesday he observed an airplane over Torné Valley.

Finally comes ~~xxxx~~ Norway with its own ghost light. At Hammarfoss a man on Saturday saw a "ghost flier" circling about at 50 meters altitude. Meanwhile it whirred around there, for which reason the man had the idea that the pilot had lost his bearings. A very strong wind with a snow-fog was raging and the machine lay on its side, fighting the storm, concluded the Norwegian communication.

To return to Sweden, it was ~~xxx~~ reported from Umeå that an air army search plane undertook a five hour long trip along the coastal area in Bottniska parish. Nothing remarkable was discovered, which is why the men (who took part in) the search are convinced that the trip have ceased.

All these reports are truly not suited to make the darkness lighter. It is well only to wait and watch for this solution to reveal itself in one form or another.

1934 January 22 (Mon) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 7.

"Ghost plane" at low altitude over mountain village / Reports of "ghost light" taking a new trip. /

During Sunday reports of a "ghost light" began to dribble in once again in Västerbotten after last week's quiet when a snowstorm came down at its worst. Then on Wednesday when the air cleared, from several places in the district was reported a mysterious light over the top of the woods.

Two reports, which presumably like many foregoing ones on closer examination showed themselves untenable, have come in from Vindeln and the little mountain village Virisjaur at Lake(?) Virisjön. In Vindeln it was said the church sexton and his son saw an airplane at a great height over the community in the forenoon just before high mass. Motor noise was plainly audible, and it was thought that it was a Swedish machine. None were to be found in this area at the stated time, however. In the mountain village Virisjaur a man is said to have seen at 2 in the afternoon an airplane with a course toward Norway. The machine did not go at a particularly great height but no sign or other distinctive mark on the machine could be observed. The "ghost light" was thought to have been seen on various occasions on Sunday evening. At 6 o'clock it showed itself in Umeålvu glen and was seen in a number of places in Degefors parish going along the woodlands, now following the river and there the main [railroad?] line.

General believes unconditionally in "Flier X." / Motor sound over 120 barracks. / The machine x seen in the middle of the day at Tromsø.

It may be thought to be fantastic that the unknown flying machine actually flew over the forbidden region in Norrbotten, said the military commander for upper Norrland troops, General C. P. Reuterswärd in Boden, and referred to reports from absolutely trustworthy persons, military as well as civilian, [who have] observed the mysterious flying machine. Ever since the Swedish search began a close collaboration has been advised between the provincial government in the Norrbotten district and the military command, and measures have been taken in common, but, said the general, effective [measures] have not been possible, since airplanes have largely not been available.

A notable report came in on Friday from a Norwegian place about a machine in the middle of the day at a low altitude passing over Tromsø and setting a course out to sea. The Swedish news says only that a man heard a machine; no one saw it. According to a statement, a man heard motor sounds even over the Västerbottens regiment barracks on Friday morning.

Gen. Reuterswärd continued with his statement which he gave to the Västerbottens-Kuriren that even with recourse to a great number of airplanes and a better developed watch system it would be difficult to investigate and keep out an airplane from the vast area which is in question in upper Norrland. On the other hand it might not be a bad idea which the state can and must see to, for fliers (by law) to keep watch over forbidden areas [?]. This is especially true of the area over and around Bodens fort. This area must of necessity effectively be a place wholly free of unauthorized fliers and this can be done only through [supplying] the fort with a sufficient number of fast chase and fighter planes which in speed could match themselves with the machine, with the man included, which for some reason or other happen to find it of interest to fly over this area. Through the military authorities' care ever since the first reports about the airplane within the defense area they have been carefully investigated in order to come closer to clearness about how much importance ought to be attached to reports, when among other things, the commandant's intervention in connection with the report-givers [?]. Mysterious machine again seen from Helmögdads light[house]. / (From our correspondent.)

UMÄÅ, Friday. At Helmögdads light, lighthouse master Rutkvist at half [past?] 2 o'clock on Thursday evening saw a flying light go out to sea toward [?] Finland. He believed that it was a flying machine, which went between Holmöns church and Holmögdads lighthouse and then set a course toward either Jakobstad or Gamla Karleby. How long the machine flew outwards to sea he could not say, however, because the light was observed only during [less than five minutes'] time.

On Friday morning several serving girls heard motor noises over the Västerbottens regiment barracks house in Umeå. The sound grew little by little and finally passed over their heads. A dense morning fog lay over the house and made impossible any visibility. The regiment at this time was on yearly holiday [?].

Great excitement prevailed on Friday evening in Gammelstad, where thirty-odd persons were absolutely sure that they heard motor noise. The landsfiskäl established after a basic investigation that the ~~xxx~~ sound issued from noise in telephone lines.

1934 January 28 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, pp. 3,6.

(card 1)

Burning mass from ghost flier over Siljansbygden. / Burning object thrown down on Siljan's ice and recovered a while before the fire went out completely [?]. / Paper and tangle [of string?] dipped in paraffin.

The ghost flier enigma becomes still more complicated each day than it was before. The most remarkable observation to date was the one made Saturday evening in Siljansbygden, where several persons in Rättvik and Leksand at 7:30 o'clock observed an airplane. No mistake can be in question here, since people in Leksand observed that from the airplane a burning object fell down [from the engine] and landed on Siljan's ice, where people then found the object--paper and a tangle [of string] soaked in paraffin--very well charred but not yet fully burnt out.

In Haparanda several trustworthy persons on Friday night observed a mysterious airplane which seemed to circle back and forth over the city. This very latest arrival [came as] news from Finland, which during Saturday was supported as the most likely [candidate] in the argument of Supreme Admiral Lindman gave, when on Saturday in the national parliament he questioned the state minister on the matter.

Thus during Thursday [to?] Friday evening it is asserted that trustworthy persons observed an airplane at a high altitude over Rättviks and Ledsand villages. At 7:30 o'clock on Saturday evening the mysterious flier was seen again at many places in Leksand, and it made many believe firmly that it really was an airplane which passed. A sixteen-year old daughter of farmer Lasses Lars Larsson in Grytnäs, Leksand, observed at the stated time a pair of lights which came out of the northeast and approached the place. She was on this occasion out in the garden and hurried in to her father. The machine had then sank to a low altitude. Just then farmer Larsson came out in the garden, [and] was able to see how a burning object was thrown out from the airplane and dropped down on the lake Österviken at Siljan. As soon as the burning object, which was like a parachute, was flung out into the air, the machine climbed high and steered a course over Käringberget and disappeared. Larsson, whose yard runs all the way down to the lake, hurried out onto the ice with a kick push [bicycle?]. When he got out to the burning object it had already cooled off [?]. Diverse fragments of vari-colored paper and one of the strings [?], soaked in paraffin, ~~xxxx~~ were found. For the reason that a thaw had formed water on the lake and that the thrown-down object had fallen down into it, [the object was] partially extinguished.

The airplane spoken of in the telegram cannot be any of [our] air force's planes, it was declared to the [?]'s [?]'s inquiry [in this direction?]. No Swedish military machines have stayed just now in the area where people saw the mysterious machine on Saturday evening.

Do Finnish authorities have a solution? / Mysterious light on the ice outside Kemi.—Is the flier of Russian nationality? / (From our Helsingfors correspondent.)

HELSINGFORS, January 27. Reports of the ghost flier's activities have come in all afternoon and during the night from up north. It is now reported with strongest & definiteness that the Finnish authorities are [close to] a final solution to the ghost flier riddle. Secrecy is observed, however. Through on-the-spot investigations definite information has been gotten about the machine, and people should be able to decide even both the nationality and type of engine. By reason of the turn things have taken, the general staff chief has ordered a general staff officer to Kemi for the sake of following the continued investigations, and Flyget [the air force?] has also gotten the order to immediately send an aerial search when the ghost flier appears again. Ortsborna [local officials?] hear tell that people have come to the conclusion that the ghost flier is of Russian origin.

One of the most remarkable discoveries people & have made is a mysterious clandestine light out on the ice outside Kemi. Discovered made on Friday evening by several fishermen, who immediately sent the news on to Kemi, from which several persons were sent to investigate the unknown beacon. It is built on [of] snow, which was covered & over with water so that it froze into ice. The beacon is a meter high, and at the beacon's top end is found a storm lamp and a ten liter oil holder. The lamp had gone out, but when it was lit it can be said that it gave a very strong light which was visible at ten kilometers distance from the sea-side.

Light on the ice burns from 11 till 14 January.

Fishermen in the area undertook an immediate investigation, and then it was stated that the lamp became lighted on January 11 but was extinguished already by January 14. It had probably been repaired by someone who went out from the coast and who after the 14th did not venture to light it again. [In] neither place [could] fishermen or liquor smugglers have gotten any light [?]. On the ice before the lamp was found a mass of ski and foot tracks which led toward the mainland. A thaw had meanwhile progressed so that an airplane could not get to land close to the lamp. People have come to the conclusion that the lamp serves as a rendezvous place for ghost fliers, of which reports have been delivered, whose light could reach to the coast [?] which lies only a half kilometer from the lamp's place. The lamp is well placed [since] it is located at a place which cannot be observed from coast guard stations. At 19.20 o'clock in the evening was observed the ghost flier over Simo station in Kemi and Uleåborg. It was seen there by three persons who reported their observations to the sheriff's officers. From Uleåborg it was also reported that the machine was sighted in the evening by a youth who was on the way to a party [soirée]. During the course of the day an investigation was carried out on the mysterious lamp, but with the people who were out there, no one yet has made the connection. Over Haparanda a machine was sighted late in the night. Customs inspector Ström declared that ~~fixxxx~~ there was not any [reason] to especially doubt that the ghost flier flew over the city [?]. The machine flew straight over Haparanda, and [its] motor sound was so strong that it pushed right into rooms. Likewise all the persons who Hr. Ström called out observed the machine. There is already a total of several hundred persons up in the north who have observed the machine, and a commission has been sent out from the general staff to examine them [?]. It is also in the first place through reports by them that people can come to a conclusion whether the ghost airplane really exists.

The whole Haparandabladet's [staff] personally observes an airplane HAPARANDA, Saturday [TT]. The Haparandabladet reports that the newspaper's whole editorial and typesetting (as well as some other) personnel just before midnight Friday night observed an airplane which appeared ~~fix~~ plying back and forth over metropolitan Haparanda. Because of fog no light could be detected, but motor noise was very loud. Already an hour earlier nine other persons in Haparanda, six of them drivers, had observed an airplane which in a similar manner was seen making turns back and forth over the area.

According to what one of the Haparandabladet correspondents in Finland reported, the Finnish authorities should now have solved the ghost flier riddle. Meanwhile they refuse [for now] to release any more intimate [details]. According to the reports even the Finnish newspapers have received a strict order not to mention the matter.

The Haparandabladet turned on Friday evening to the chief of the Lappmark border defense division in Rovaniemi, Col. Willamo, to check this rumor[?], to which the colonel answered: I can't say anything yet. We act more than we talk.

1934 January 28 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 5.

(card 1)

The "ghost flier" in Norrland has scrambled through the night [until] Swedish people have begun to open their eyes about how things stand with our defenses, declares now the Skånka Dagbladet (bf):

People have found in particular that we were [either] so little able to stop it once and for all at the door. Should we be able to do something about it, so should it be [done] with our [own] airplanes but then does the question arise: is it enough [do we have enough]? Our search planes are still too slow, and our chase planes have too little range of action to chase the "ghost flier" with success. When one known as "Bulldoggarna"--the other type of chase machine which is known to [take part] in aerial [search parties]--been equipped for blind flying.

Unfortunately people are rather forced to reach the conclusion [?] that the Swedish air force, for reasons of inadequate materials or deficient flying qualities and equipment, is not at present in condition to prevent flights of the kind which are offered by the "ghost machine." These overwhelming results come whether the territorial defense functions or not.

How about experience in blind flying? [?]

To this must still be added the contributing factor which must be taken into account--the flying personnel's skill in blind flying. Instruments alone are not enough for such flying; it requires first and foremost that the personnel have obtained very basic training in flying of this kind and likewise the requisite confidence gained through frequent blind flying. This alone makes an unflinching self-confidence for fliers. The results otherwise can be loss both of equipment and of human life. The chase after the "ghost flier" must mainly go on over terrain and under weather conditions which are very [trying]. It is not known whether the air force has sufficient trained personnel in blind flying for the ~~max~~ manning of the number of machines which is required to chase after the "ghost plane." Very likely this is not the case.

To conclude people must also think that separate steps must be taken at the places where the airplane is located; it requires as well special equipment [for] illumination control for night landing. It can be strongly questioned whether (or not) our permanent military [landing fields] are [equipped] with illumination [gear] of suitable quality for night landing.

It will thus seem as if our air force today is much poorer equipped to take up a struggle with the "ghost flier." Which of the measures under these circumstances should be taken up by the responsible authorities? [?]

1934 January 29 (Mon) Svenska Dagbladet, p 2(0). (card 1)

Ghost flier nearly collides with Norwegian sailing vessel. / The machine directly over the mast. / Searchlight played, then flier put back out to sea. / Mysterious yacht near the place.

From Norway comes in very definite reports about the mysterious airplane, and there all doubt has now dispersed about this occurrence since a ship's crew said that a machine at night was nearly in a collision with their vessel. And shortly afterwards was seen a mysterious vessel putting out to sea at full speed. In Robertsfors the landsfiskal and another person heard the engine. The "Eldbomben" [fire-bomb] in Leksand on the other hand has been exposed as a joke by a Leksand inhabitant. Swedish air force machines may not have the chance to expose the "ghost flier"; that purpose demands swift machines with a long range of action and pilots skillful in flying blind over dangerous terrain. These matters will be discussed in greater detail at another place in the paper.

According to a private telegram to the Svenska Dagbladet from Tromsø the captain of the freight vessel Tordenskjold, from Tromsø, which went with a cargo of stone between Kabelvåg and Tromsø, reports that on the way to Kabelvåg on ~~Tuesday~~ Tuesday he saw a [bright] light at a great height above Hekkingens lighthouse. It moved at a good pace and increased in strength, and in the first moment the captain thought of the possibility of a comet. He gave a cry of alarm, at which one of the two men below deck came springing up in the belief that the captain had fallen overboard. The cry of alarm [was] really too strong for the occasion. Both seamen could hear motor noise and understood that it was a flier which drew near. When the machine was quite near to the vessel, [as it] went on its way [?] (the plane) sailed slowly forth through the air, while two strong searchlights played over the vessel. The time was then between one and two a.m. The observers could plainly see the machine, which was a biplane gray and with two propellers. The pilot was seen well, and there were several lights in the cabin [?]. Soon the machine rose again [and] the searchlight dimmed. All this lasted only several minutes. The two men on the "Tordenskjold's" deck had seen Amundsen's airplane Latham, and on its way to Tromsø and they assert that the "ghost flier" was much like the Latham, though probably somewhat larger. [The pontoons] were placed the same way.

On the way to Kabelvåg through Brettesnes and Svolvær there was observed from the cutter a large, white-painted vessel which [was] low and . . . It was very powerfully illuminated and happened to be a large pleasure yacht. When the "Tordenskjold" approached, the vessel then set out full speed ahead and disappeared out to sea.

In Tromsø it was stated that the crew on the sloop are known as fully dependable men.

On Friday evening a telephone assistant in Nordbynes saw an airplane, which with several lights lighted blazed and drove toward the fjord. After a short while the powerful motor was set in motion and the plane set a course out into the fjord with rapid speed. The fire bomb a "joke" of Leksand village. / A dentist sends up a balloon to "entertain the kids."

BORLÄNGE, Sunday. Dalarna's special ghost flier, or at least Siljansbygden's, which during the past week stirred minds and the eyes and ears of the public opened for a chance to hear or see a glimpse of it, has now been killed. It all has the [appearance] of a joke in an attack of [high]low misplacèd humor. It was dentist Albert Holand in ~~the~~ Leksand, who entertained himself by sending up a balloon, according to what he said, to "entertain the kids." That it was improper under the present circumstances to send up such a balloon, even if it was done to "entertain the kids," goes without saying; while it appears a little strange that Herr Holand said nothing earlier, as the public clearly confused the light from the "ghost flier" with the light from his joke, when such confusion took place already earlier in the week.

--That I so suddenly should attract everybody's attention was certainly not my intention, said Herr Holand. Certainly I do not deny ~~that~~ that I sent up this latest balloon with the intention to joke a little with the Leksand people, but that the thing should take on such proportions, I had never ~~believed~~ ~~believed~~ would have believed.

The landsfiskal in Leksand has reported in the balloon ascension to the provincial government for the measures which they might find warranted. He answered that the "bomb" could cause such damage if it fell down on some building.

"Flier X" at 30 meters height over Robertsfors.

UMÅ, Sunday. At midnight Friday night a mysterious airplane passed at a low altitude over the Robertsfors manufacturing district with a course toward the north. It was observed there by many near the place of businessman Teodor Fryckholm, who from his veranda saw the machine pass at scarcely more than 25-30 meters distance and scarcely a few meters over the treetops. It swept by at a great speed and everything happened so fast that Fryckholm in his astonishment was not able to observe any details. Landsfiskal Lieden ~~in~~ in Robertsfors has reported that at precisely the same moment he heard motor noise. ~~From~~ From his house the visibility was too bad to be able to see the machine.

1934 January 30 (Tues) Svenska Dagbladet, last p. (card 1)

Is weapons transport the ghost flier's main purpose? / Extensive defense [military] organization in North Finland.--Russian base, thinks Finnish expert. / (From our Helsingfors correspondent.)

HELSINGFORS, 29 January. Reports about the ghost machine continue to [trickle] in. Today an airplane was seen over Torné and Haparanda and on Sunday evening the inhabitants of Kemi were startled by a large unknown three-motor plane which circled over the city for an hour. There now no longer prevails any doubt that the ghost flier really exists. Of these things neither can the Finnish authorities up in the north any longer doubt. People have perfectly clear evidence that it really exists, and it amounts to even that the leader for investigations himself saw a machine, not just the light without the machine itself. But on this point the authorities observe inflexible secrecy. The chief of the general staff stated to our correspondent's inquiry that every statement in the newspapers at this stage only could damage investigations. But when at last clarification comes about [?], an extensive account shall be delivered to the press.

The powerful defense organization up in the north is now in readiness. The staff is [stationed] in Kemi and from there directs patrols out in the territory. All the local ski corps are alerted, and military patrols range over the places where the machine is most observed. The patrols have orders, when a ghost flier is sighted, to go report it at once to the staff in Kemi, and from there are sent ~~some~~ one of the two fast Fokker planes which are stationed there. Furthermore the fliers have the mission to undertake nightly reconnaissance trips to ascertain if many secret lights [still] exist outside Kemi.

Was the lantern bought [?] in Kemi?--Swedish construction.

The light out from Kemi has moreover set a massive puzzle in the lap [head] of the authorities. It was possible to prove that no flier went down there, but it can ~~only~~ be thought that the downcast ~~was~~ reported [quite simply served] as a guide light. The lantern is of Swedish construction. It has a brightness of 300 standard candles [?] and of a perfectly ordinary type which people can buy for 200-300 marks [where hardware is sold]. The police will investigate to ascertain where it was bought and who [it was] who bought it. In this way it is expected that meaningful results will be reached.

Reports of the ghost flier's trips show that at least one machine tonight undertook a trip on the path Jaatila-Hirttas-Tapiokylä. From these places have reports been received ~~that~~ ~~ghost~~ flier of ghost flier observations, and [considering the timing], the [conclusion was reached] that a flier flew just this path. At 7 o'clock p.m. a machine flew over Torné. All observations from tonight indicate that the machine flew eastward.

The Finnish territorial flight [?] captain Bremer has made a pronouncement about the ghost flight. He thinks that it is a Russian undertaking and that the fliers have their base on Russian territory. The repeated trips could mean it is a question of a steam transport [ship]. Since no tracks were found around the mysterious light outside Kemi, he thinks it means that it only was used as a guide light so the ghost flier could find its way around in the winter darkness.

Increased activity of the flier in upper Norrland. / Airplane plainly observed by many persons in Skellefteå parish. / (From our correspondent)

UMÅ, Monday. During Monday evening many reports of the ghost flier's activity have come in here, meaning that air raids have resumed with renewed energy. Eighteen minutes before 7 o'clock in the evening farmer Valdemar Karlsson in Rusele, Lycksele parish, was able to see two lights, one red and the other green, floating in the air and moving in the direction of Lycksele. The man sent word [to the local small] town that a ghost airplane flew in its direction, but in town people could neither see nor ~~hear~~ hear a thing.

Two o'clock Monday afternoon a forest worker [lumber jack], John Israelsson, found himself on a mountain outside Rusele village. Then he heard a powerful motor noise from the air. He tried to see the airplane, but there was much cloudiness and he saw nothing, although the sound continued loudly for a long time. Israelsson guessed that the airplane went at such a great height that it disappeared among the clouds. At the same time a schoolgirl came home to her parents in Rusele and reported that while she stood out on the ice on Umeååven, she heard a noise as from a separator up in the air. It deserves to be mentioned that the Rusele area appears to lie in a flight path during recent days.

Landsfiskal Johnsson in Vilhelmina, who on Sunday afternoon found himself out on a ski tour at Bakajön, one km. east of the community of Vilhelmina, then heard airplane noise which passed in the direction southwesterly direction. Johansson reported that people suddenly saw a very powerful searchlight lighted in the machine. The searchlight played back and forth as if it sought something on the ground. Johansson sprang to the telephone and rang up Hornby, which lies about eight kilometers from Knafte. He bade people there to watch for the airplane. In Hornby people began to perceive the airplane almost immediately, which showed the searchlight but soon extinguished it. Thereafter people in Hornby could see a flame extending from the machine, plainly issuing from the exhaust pipe. In Hornby observations were made by many people. The cited newspaper has confirmed that no Swedish machine flew over Lycksele today.

In Anåset three persons heard the sound this morning of an airplane which passed the community going north. Later a farmer, Magnus Fahlgren in Ersmark, Skellefteå parish, reported to Landsfiskal Gärding, that Saturday night he saw an airplane go over Käsefjärden.

At the police examination Fahlgren has reported that at 12:30 o'clock p.m. he saw from his back yard a small bright light on the horizon due east, therefore out at sea from Käsefjärden. The light moved slowly in the direction of the observer. When the light came nearer, Fahlgren found that it issued from an airplane. He has seen enough airplane bodies on the wing, but the distance was so great that he could not see details. It had looked as if the machine climbed higher and higher, the closer it got to Ersmark. The light on the machine did not change color. By the time the machine reached the seaward skerries [?] it had changed course and continued southward toward Skellefteå city. On changing course the man plainly saw the airplane body and its contours. The cone of light from the machine continued, and the movement went slowly toward the south. Fahlgren's wife and man-servant also saw the machine. At this time a fog had formed around the airplane, which disappeared for the watchers during five minutes time. Fahlgren found it strange when clear weather and bright moonlight prevailed [?].

1934 January 31 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 16.

[During discussion of the so-called ghost flier the air force has also discussed its own progress in instrumental or blind flying. There have been comments that air force planes do not have searchlights.]

1934 January 31 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 16.

[During discussion of the so-called ghost flier the air force has also discussed its own progress in instrumental or blind flying. There have been comments that air force planes do not have searchlights, and thought these were tried, the weight and cost were prohibitive. Magnesium flares have been substituted.] Finnish fliers have not turned up certain results. / Any statements about the observed flier are probably, however. / (From our Helsingfors correspondent.)

HELSINGFORS, 30 Jan. From Kukkola on the Swedish side of Karungi comes to hand tonight a report that the ghost flier was seen. It was observed by a peasant, Åke Niskalo, and his family. The observation was made at 17.40 o'clock.

Otherwise today all was rather quiet on the ghost flier front. All watch organizations now lie in readiness to take (action) against a new visit by the ghost flier, but as well as they have organized, the ghost flier has done better [?]. The only plane seen up in the air today over Finnish territory was the Finnish army plane which undertook reconnaissance flights. They were meant to perform experiments in night flying and lighting lights to inspect the range of distance of a guard patrol. At the same time the patrol officer in command of flights has been interested in the skill of separating airplane lights from stars.

Investigation about the mysterious light outside Kemi has continued and may also have led to results. Authorities have been carefully secretive about this observation, however. The general staff this afternoon let out the first reports about the steps which have been taken and the results which have been obtained. There is not much to make known. In this guard service participate the Lapland and Uleåborgs district defense and border guards, the snow guard corps and military authorities. From these and partly as well from civilian persons have numerous reports about the mysterious airplane come in, but it has been shown that the greater part of these reports were quite untenable. Reports of the airplane are a guide to those who make observations since they in some respect put the flights under the control of persons who have the job of carrying out air defense [?]. The general staff officer who went out to north Finland to investigate the ghost flier's appearances has regarded a couple of cases as doubtful, though the reports he received regarding these cases were perfectly probable. T.V. [TT] could confirm neither this case nor any other, therefore people continue to affirm with the same uncertainty regarding the ghost airplane appearing over Finnish territory.

1934 February 1 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 16.

Alarmed village sees the coming ghost flier [?]. / Lookout [maintained] in Lycksele village after striking searchlight is extinguished [?].

News about the ghost flier is reported constantly, now most lately from the area of Lycksele. There a machine was observed both on Wednesday forenoon and in the evening by many persons. One place informed a neighboring community, and watchers there after a little while caught sight of a machine, about which no doubt was entertained (as to whether) it was a real machine.

According to a telegram from the Västerbottens-Kuriren in Umeå a deliveryman for a Umeå brewery observed a machine just before 10 o'clock in the forenoon when he found himself at a railroad station in Lycksele. The machine went at a great height in a northerly direction. People first heard motor noise and while and then caught sight of the machine itself, which passed over the north part of the town. Furthermore people in Knafte in Lycksele at 5 o'clock in the afternoon saw an airplane. Business manager Öste Johansson had just sat down and listened to the weather report on the radio, when his wife called his attention to motor noise off in the air. Both went out and had a third person for company. All of them saw clearly and plainly in the moonlight an airplane go in a direction toward Hornby, thus in a southwesterly direction. Johansson reported that people suddenly saw a very powerful searchlight lighted in the machine.

The searchlight played back and forth as if it sought something on the ground. Johansson sprang to the telephone and rang up Hornby, which lies about eight kilometers from Knafte. He bade people there to watch for the airplane. In Hornby people began to perceive the airplane almost immediately, which showed the searchlight but soon extinguished it. Thereafter people in Hornby could see a flame extending from the machine, plainly issuing from the exhaust pipe. In Hornby observations were made by many people. The cited newspaper has confirmed that no Swedish machine flew over Lycksele today.

The first reports about the ghost flier in Västerbotten all came in from the mountain area up at the Norwegian border at the place located at Inlandsbanan.

During November and December this flier passed almost daily and reports came to hand that the traffic goes along the large mountain lakes and valleys in a general east-west direction and vice-versa. No definite clue about the purpose of the flier can be found by geographic comparison, but the evidence in every case is quite plain that a method is discernible in its [apparently] meaningless wandering to and fro.

Japanese cruiser in Ishavet. / British trawler reported news to "Fridtjof Nansen" back in November.

OSLO, Wednesday. (TT) Some time past it was reported that a British trawler inforced (coast)guard vessel Fridtjof Nansen that [the trawler] at a [secretly confided] position was in contact with a Japanese support cruiser [?] and sold fish to them. According to the Tidens Tegn the meeting of the trawler and the cruiser took place back at the beginning of November, [while] the first ghost flier was not reported before the end of the month. What is particularly interesting about the affair with the trawler is the fact — writes the newspaper — that we have reason to believe that the trawler belongs to the British admiralty. People can ask themselves if England already at this moment know that something happened up in Ishavet and if the trawler had a mission to closer investigate the situation.

1934 February 3 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3. (card 1)

The ghost flier in parliament. No clarification. / The state minister has answered questions. / Air squadron to Boden. /

The ghost flier riddle was solved on Friday by the state minister — so it is believed without a doubt by the greatest part of those who at Friday noon filled to overflowing the second chamber's listeners' gallery, where Admiral Lindeman's questions were answered. Unfortunately expectations were hardly met; the audience and members of parliament vent their ways no wiser than they came.

The state minister began his answer by pointing out that one still could not "with certainty" declare that the supposed flights over Norrland really occurred. One part of the forthcoming reports ought not to earn respect. In certain cases the observer obviously has made a mistake and in other cases it seems that fantasy has been given too free a play. Other reports are ~~of a nature~~ of a nature, however, that is worthy of credit and consideration.

Reports that flights occurred over Boden appeared about January 20 and were reported in officially the 26th. But before then investigations were set in motion.

During the first half of January an aerial search took place, first within the Västerbottens Lappmark and afterwards in lower Västerbotten and over a certain part of Bottenhavet (Sea). As a result of this search it could be ~~that~~ ~~as~~ proved that no base or station for foreign airplanes [existed] within the Västerbottens country area, along ~~the~~ the upper Norrland coast or out in the Botten Sea. No landing field for strange airplanes on Swedish territory was confirmed, either.

Effective air defense in the territory has paid off with negative results, and [on] January 30 three airplanes were ordered to Boden. Details of the search measures the state minister did not wish to report, but [he] explained that the government also later on [would] come to step in, in order to prevent prohibited flights over Swedish territory.

Herr Lindman was thanked for the responses to questions and it was stressed that information has come forth which has not been dismissed for example, when a military command officer in upper Norrland reported that it is established that an airplane advanced within forbidden territory. It seems wholly unsatisfactory to know that flying can be done over our country without being able to ascertain [whence the airplane hailed and whither it flew]. The most uncomfortable [thing] is that such flying should be done over Bodens fort. In this defense [station] it should be possible at every moment to ascertain whether it is the case that an airplane approaches, and if so, through illumination with a searchlight or firing to make it stop from flying further.

The state minister stressed in a new statement that defense personnel in Boden did not see anything. The man supported himself with reports from civilian personnel and from observers whose [reports] were made by half a troop during exercises. At the close of debate [spoke up] two communists, [namely] hr. Kilbow, who wanted to assert that it all [amounted to] political ghost flying and [saw filing], and hr. Hagberg of Luleå, who asserted that the reports arose from a joke among newspapermen in Umeå. Through information which was supplied through Tidens Tegn on Friday evening it was established meanwhile that the fictitious bad telegram was published in the Västerbottens Kuriren the first day after the Umeåbladet made public the first serious report from inhabitants in Sorsele. Hr. Hagberg put an end to debate.

Airplane observed in Eastern Finland. Reports about a mysterious airplane have come in again on Friday. Thus it was reported from Suojärvi north of Ladoga that an airplane at 5 o'clock in the morning was observed flying at 150 to 2000 m. high along the railroad line and then turned toward the north and disappeared. From another place in the same parish it was reported that an airplane was observed at 8:45 o'clock. The assertion was made that it could not be a question of any machine belonging to the Finnish aerial fighting force.

The Soviets swear they are free of ghost fliers. MÖSKVA, 2 Feb. (TT). Soviet Russian telegram bureau TASS reports: With reference to statements especially in Finnish but also in other newspapers that it was a Soviet Russian airplane undertaking the mysterious flights in northern Scandinavia, the Soviet Russian telegram bureau TASS is authorized to deny these reports, which are pure invention. Obviously no Soviet Russian airplane flew over Finland. Swedish or Norwegian territory.

1934 February 3 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3. London gets a ghost flier. / Two-hour long exhibition over the city's central part. / No service (military) plane. / Wild conjectures. / (From our London editor.)

LONDON, 2 Feb. Even London now has its ghost flier. Late on Thursday evening an airplane was observed which for two hours circled over the city's center. The loud machine noise gave to hand (revealed) that it was a large machine, and it went so low that it appeared in the hazy night-darkness. People guessed wildly what this night bird could be [?], and the air ministry said it did not have any knowledge that a service machine had undertaken the flight in question. Investigations at the nearby aerodromes in Croydon, Lympne, Heston, Brooklands etc. gave no clue, either.

One experienced flier who observed flier X in the evening, said that it must be a two more motor plane with great wing breadth. The last time England had an air mystery of a similar nature was just before the war, when Sir Clement Kinlock-Cooke repeated times put questions to the lower house (commons) about a mysterious airplane which was heard and seen over southern England at night. Then the so-called "flying sausage" [?] was ridiculed by the socialists, and even Sir Clement's friends thought that he went a bit too far. Then came the war, and many were sorry that Sir Clement did not go far enough.

1934 February 4 (Sun) New York Times, p. 9.

Finnish Alarm Grows Over "Ghost" Planes / Vast Military Survey Hinted in Mysterious Night Flights Over Northern Europe / Wireless to NYT.

HELSINGFORS, Feb. 3.--Continued night flights over Northern Finland, Sweden and Norway by so-called "ghost" aviators, which have caused such apprehension here as to prompt the general staff to organize reconnoitering on a wide scale by army planes all over northern Finland, still remains a deep mystery. Many eyewitnesses have been unable to identify the planes.

Mysterious lights over Helsingfors and Viborg have caused alarm. Last night at least one large unidentified airplane was sighted over Eastern Finland, close to the Russian frontier, apparently scouting the district.

As the authorities are extremely reticent the newspapers have interviewed aviation experts, who state the mystery fliers show exceptional skill, undoubtedly superior to that of Northern European aviators. According to one expert's theory, the first of the "ghost" aviators was a Japanese scouting the Arctic regions whose activities caused the Soviet to dispatch airplanes to watch the Japanese. The Soviet authorities, however, refuted this theory.

The appearance of a mysterious airplane over London has strengthened the belief that the flights constitute an extensive scheme to explore the aviation possibilities for a future war. Apprehension is expressed in Finnish newspapers.

1934 February 5 (Mon) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 4.

The ghost flier buzzes yet, but less often. / Red light and noise in Lycksele parish. / (From our correspondent.)

UMÄ, Sunday. Reports continue to come in, though sparser than before, about observations made in connection with the presence of ghost airplanes within Lycksele parish. From Vornasele in Lycksele parish it is thus reported this evening that people there at 8:45 o'clock observed a strange light in the air. It moved over the tree tops in a southwesterly direction and (looked most nearly like) a strong paraffin lamp, which was red in color and became less and less (smaller and smaller) as if it went away. It was reported from Rusksele in Lycksele parish to landsfiskal Ritzen that people there on Friday evening heard a powerful noise in the air, which was believed to descend from a flying machine, which passed the village in a northerly direction. Somewhat later in the evening it was reported that a similar noise was heard over a village located north from there, Rxx Dragnäs, in Norsjö parish.

1934 February 6 (Tues) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

Ghost flier seen and heard over Transtrand. / Passed off over the Norwegian border, was observed by reliable people.

FALUN, Monday (TT) Landsfiskal J. Järns in Transtrand in a letter to the provincial government has reported that many fully reliable persons reported to her that on Wednesday morning January 31, they observed a large unknown airplane over the mountain within Transtrand parish. The machine went over the mountain in a northwesterly direction toward Norway. The persons in question had plainly viewed the machine and heard motor noise. Some days earlier a pair of lumbermen in Starbacksstrand at Västra Dalälven had observed a machine sail out over the mountain mass in much the same direction.

1934 February 7 (Wed.) Svenska Dagbladet, pp. 3,(22). (card 1)

Ghost flier makes emergency landing (crash-lands) on Norwegian mountain field but disappears again. / Snow shovelmen viewed through a telescope. / Search party finds no trace of the flier. / Inaccessible mountain. / Successful takeoff (of the machine) on Tuesday evening!

The ghost flier, which has hitherto according to all the more or less unreliable reports been able to defy snowstorms, fog and darkness, for the first time has had to make an emergency landing. This sensational report came on Tuesday evening from Tromsø. The place the landing is supposed to have been in the inaccessible Mt. Fager in Målselv and the landing was supposed to have taken place in storm and snow back on the Monday evening. On Tuesday many persons with telescopes had observed how the plane's crew worked to shovel snow in order to get started once again. A search patrol was sent out, but according to the latest reports has found no trace and four persons assert that they saw how the plane took off in the night and passed over Målselv. In Norway it is supposed that it could have been a Swedish military plane, but the air force declares that no Swedish machine has undertaken any flights in the area for the present.

kiik Airplane seen again on Tuesday night. / (From our correspondent.) TROMSØ, Tuesday. A flying machine of unknown nationality was seen on Monday evening over Målselv, and many persons in Fugelli have reported to the proper deputies of observing how the machine went down on a place on the inaccessible Mt. Fager. On Tuesday morning it still lay there, and a person with a telescope could observe how two men tried to shovel snow out of the way around the plane, presumably to make it able to take off.

Mt. Fager is very steep, about 600 meters high and in the dark nearly inaccessible. A violent storm all during Monday had raged over north Norway.

An expedition with deputies in the lead made its way up the mountain but before darkness fell had not found any of the sought-after tracks. A new expedition will be sent out on Wednesday.

Later on during Tuesday night came in a new report that people at Målsnes, which lies five miles further out on the fjord, there observed a machine passing in a southeasterly direction. The flier was also able to take off and get away in spite of the storm and darkness. The report has not been confirmed, however. Capture of the flier also strongly demanded. / (From our Oslo correspondent.)

OSLO, Tuesday. At 5 o'clock in the afternoon the chief of the Tromsø regiment, Col. Faye, gave a report to Lt. Nilson, who was stationed in Målselv, that an airplane had landed on Mt. Fager, and that reliable people had stated that at least two persons had come out of the plane. These two were observed through a telescope at several kilometers distance.

Lt. Nilson immediately sent the deputies and a lot of people to the place in order to attempt to capture the strange flier and if it were necessary, use force. At the same time police chief Pedersen in Tromsø gave an order to leave for Målselv. Col. Faye did not wish to speak his direct opinion about what [army's] airplane it could be, which had landed on Mt. Fager. He thought to exclude, however, that it could be a Norwegian airplane. Mt. Fager fills up a large peninsula between Senja and the mainland on the one side and Malangen on the other. It is a wild, broken mountain area which only in the lower parts is sparsely wooded. On the eastern side if found deep depressions with ice ravines.

Fruitless search. At 11:30 o'clock this evening the Aftenposten received the following telegram from Tromsø: The expedition, which the deputy in Målselv had been leader for, returned tonight before 10. The deputy's assistant, who had led one of the expeditions, reported that the expedition had been altogether resultless. They had started out with eight men altogether and had later split up into two groups which had made investigation of every possible place. Hans Jørgensen, one of them who had seen the airplane, officiated as guide and he led the way to the place where the airplane had been observed. All the place was investigated where it was thought that the airplane could have landed, but nothing at all was seen. It made not a single trace in the snow. The men were finally almost up to the top of Mt. Fager and had only one last plateau left. It was at that point impossible to continue any longer since the terrain was impossible and it had in addition begun to get dark. The person who had seen the airplane believed in addition that the machine could not have landed so high up.

The plateau was a steep hill. When the men came up the mountain they saw, meanwhile, that the plateau on which, according to the observers the airplane should have landed, was not any plateau but instead a moderately steep hill. The deputies have interrogated three persons, all of whom confirm they saw the airplane on the mountain in broad daylight. Early on Wednesday a new expedition will start.

Another ghost flier in a full storm over Sivar. / (From our correspondent.)

UMÄ, Tuesday. According to a report at 6:30 o'clock tonight a ghost machine flew out of the east past the village of Frunnäs in Sivar parish. The machine went low and also very quickly, going away over Botten Bay. It carried a green and red light, which could be plainly observed. The observation was made by four persons at the same time. A full storm raged on the occasion.

1934 February 8 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, pp. 3,(22). (card 1)

Ghost flier's track found. / Crust was torn up on the mountain. / Storm and cold interrupt investigations. / CURIOUS FOOTPRINTS / Clear at first on the night of the hard freeze [?] / (From our correspondent.)

OSLO, Wednesday. The expedition which sheriff's deputies in Målselv sent out during the course of the day to seek out the mysterious flying machine on Mt. Fager, came back without results. Meanwhile at 1500 o'clock another expedition returned from the mountain, and they could report that they had found some suspicious tracks in the snow, which probably were from an airplane. This expedition consisted of five men. In a talk with one of them, Hugo Larsen, he related that the [snow] crust on the mountain in question had been hard as a rock.

--We set a course toward the place where the airplane was supposed to keep itself, he said. After that we divided ourselves and investigated the terrain carefully. About four meters from the slope [I] we reached a place where the crust of the snow plainly had been torn up by some heavy object. There were three large holes which led out over the slope. The intervals between them were very small. We had the impression that it must have been a very heavy object to be able to strike through the crust. Whether it resulted from an airplane is difficult to say, but the crust on all the other places was everywhere hard as a rock and smooth, and it must also have been very easy for an airplane to take off here. The tracks were found on the plateau where people [a man] from Fugleli had seen the airplane give a pair of hops over the snow.

Hard crust but tracks nevertheless.

The crust was so hard that it was difficult to go on it and it did not mark after boots. Therefore people became very surprised when on the side of the middlemost mark was found deep and plain tracks [from a pair of boots?]. The men had the impression that these tracks were made in wet snow, probably a couple of days ago. The crust was cut through so that there must have been loose snow underneath. There was a whirling snowstorm and it was biting cold on the mountain and therefore there was not as long a time as they wished to investigate the tracks. It is quite precluded that any of the village folk were up on the mountain the last time.

At 7 o'clock this morning people again saw an airplane over Målselv. Many persons at Lerbaksmoen saw the machine follow the river up over the valley. This morning anew expedition was sent up to the mountain.

Sea captain witness of the ghost flier.

OSLO, Wednesday. (TT) The newspaper Tidningen Dag states that a captain reports in the Nordenfjeldske Dampskibsselskab that a short time ago on two different occasions he saw an airplane at Helgeland, to which so many other witnesses could attest, that not the slightest doubt remains but that an airplane exists.

1934 February 9 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. (22)

Ghost flier's tracks do not stand up [?]? New examination. / Impossible to start from the stated place. /

TROMSØ, Thursday (TT). Marine lieutenant Kjfall and some policemen on Thursday were up on Mt. Fager together with two ski runners, who the day before found tracks of an airplane and undertook a careful investigation. The people came to the conclusion that it was impossible for an airplane to start from the stated place. The tracks, which were found [furrowed] in the snow, originated from a violent storm, it is thought.

The police chief has investigated those who asserted they saw an airplane on the mountain. All uphold their earlier statements.

Airplane over Sigerfjord Wednesday night.

TROMSØ, Thursday (TT). From Sigerfjord it was reported to the newspaper Nordland Nytt, that the ghost flier was seen at half past 1 o'clock at night Thursday morning circling over Sigerfjord about 500 meters high. The airplane used [availed itself of] searchlight light along both sides of the mountain. People were able to observe for an hour the machine's red signal light, till it disappeared in a south-westerly direction. A [school under-officer] in Harstad has told of the observation.

Mysterious vessel observed in the North Sea (Arctic).

VARDØ, Thursday (TT). The police chief in Vardø reports that the lighthouse watchman at Makkaur light at Tuesday noon saw a vessel which was like a warship, on an easterly course. It turned and went westward and set a gradual course out to sea at 10:20 o'clock on Wednesday morning. The vessel came back in from the sea, stopped about four nautical miles from Makkaur and later steered back to sea. It brought to mind very much the inspection ship Fridjof Nansen and was about the same size as that one. No foreign inspection ship has requested permission to put in at the Norwegian harbor.

1934 February 10 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 6.

Ghost flier was a haunted rock [?].

TRONDHEIM, Friday. (TT). One of the participants in yesterday's investigatory expedition to Mt. Fager, State police assistant [?] Haugli, reported in a telephone interview which the Adress-Avisen had with him, that the "ghost plane" on Mt. Fager shoved itself to be a large rock, six meters long and four meters high, which lay up on the plateau.

1934 February 12 (Mon) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 4.

Finnish plan to catch the flying ghost. / Sweden, Norway and Finland should collaborate. /

HELSINGFORS, 11 February (TT). Many well-known Finnish civilian fliers, who until further notice do not wish to come forward for publicity, have for the Hufvudstadsbladet made a statement about the "ghost flier" in the north.

It is thought that up till now nothing effective has been done to bring a conclusive clarification to the mystery. Since it is obvious that at least three countries take the ghost flier seriously, according to the fliers there ought to be established a common patrol up in the northern regions with a sufficient number of airplanes.

If one or two airplanes succeed in disturbing the defense forces of three countries, these [countries] together should be able to bring about effective measures, provided that the respective governments in fact perceive that it is time to remove the ghost flier from the order of the day. Regarding air bases, the Finnish position is immediately affected in this case. A main base ought to be established, for instance, at ~~Maare~~ sea in the north and another at ~~Kemi~~ marsh with a thought to [keep an eye on] the eastern national frontier.

In Sweden, Boden or more likely Torne marsh may be fit for bases and Norway commands, as is known, all the northernmost coastal boundary which likewise can offer advantageous bases.

Besides this natural point of departure for action, of necessity further air bases should be established nearer the actual "ghost [haunted] place." Particular stress is laid upon the course of action for the three nations which the machine visits, one and all. Naturally the patrols ought to go on both day and night, at night to maintain contact with "ghost fliers" or to obtain responsible observations, by day to search for an eventual depot (base).

All this supposes meanwhile a swift and effective collaboration between the three nations' air defense forces, a statement which does not seem like a useless exercise even during peacetime. Through positive experimental measures, which furthermore are suited to bring worthwhile experience for the Norwegian national air defense force, should bring the specter to disappear with certainty within a few weeks.

1934 February 15 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3 (mar 15) (card 1)

The ghost flier has been exposed. / All the time an advertisement. / A smartly staged rogue-comedy. / Jan Mayen's territory to be sold to Norway, Russia or Japan. / Speculation on an eventual war. / From our Oslo correspondent. /

OSLO, Thursday. The ghost flier has been exposed. It quite simply has never existed. The airplane which people believed they had observed in Norway, Sweden and Finland has been the creation of a very lively imagination, and the mysterious radio signals which people picked up here in Norway have been declared to come from the German civilian air lines [I] and from Russian military stations' communications during training flights. But it also seems to have come clearly enough from a beginning in ghost flier fantasy, and that is a totally fantastic story. It is a real rogue's comedy which exceeds the most you can think up in this line. It all [turns out] to be a smart staged advertisement, one is tempted to say. It comes out that people wanted, through the ghost flier stories, to make an arctic island--Jan Mayen Land--tempting from a military point of view for different governments. The one which paid best would get to buy it.

The police have discovered that there are some gentlemen in Oslo who fabricate stories about the mysterious ghost flier. These stories became believed and people's fantasy got into action. It is thus not long before people imagined they saw airplanes all over the place.

For some years past the little polar island Jan Mayen was turned over to a private person after a lengthy process (trial) with the Norwegian government. The owner hoped to sell the island to the Norwegian state, but when this hope was not fulfilled, some persons hit on [the ideal] that the man should try to sell the island to Russia or Japan. In trying to make the two countries interested they trumped up the crude farce of the mysterious flier. The man succeeded in making many to believe in Jan Mayen constituting a base for the flight. The island was to be offered for sale to Russia and Japan through the respective legations in Oslo.

The man tried to interest Japan through the suggestion that flight could be undertaken from Jan Mayen to Russia and back to Jan Mayen without intermediate landing. The man sought to interest Russia on the other hand through a suggestion that it was Japanese airplanes which appeared over Scandinavia to get experience in bombing flights for an eventual war. It therefore should be advantageous for Russia to come into possession of such a perilous and worthwhile base as Jan Mayen was. From the Norwegian side it was not learned that this original sales method caused some steps to be taken [?].

On the other hand how it will go with other stories connected with the ghost flier in the future is plain. A fellow-worker with the Tidens Tegn has published in his newspaper an allegation that a Norwegian businessman had sought to bribe her so that the newspaper should put in his investigations concerning the mysterious airplane. He would pay 3000 kr. so that they will no longer [press the issue]. The proper authorities have investigated how it happened and the affair has been [taken] to the police. He denied all knowledge of the matter, and he stated that he now intends to bring charges against the newspaper. During Friday a communique from the justice department about the whole ghost flier affair was expected.

1934 February 16 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 7.

Mysterious Flier over Oslo. / Large biplane machine observed in snow fog [blizzard] at Lofoten. / (From our Oslo correspondent).

OSLO, Th. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon today a strange airplane was observed over Mellbo in Lofoten. The machine, which came from out at sea, was a biplane [2-decker] and a larger machine than people have seen earlier in this place. Later the machine was observed over Stokmarknes and Svolveaer. The airplane was observed by a multitude of people. A snow-fog [blizzard] raged, but it was not so bad that people could [not] plainly see the machine, which flew very low.

At 8 o'clock this evening was observed a strange flier over Oslo. The machine came from the east and made a large swing over the city and disappeared again toward the east. It carried white and green lights. To begin with, what people were inclined to believe, was that what passed was a Norwegian airplane, but neither the army nor the navy air corps knew about the machine. Neither were private Norwegian fliers up this evening. The strange machine was observed by many persons, (such as) by Commander Ostby. People this evening have not succeeded in solving the mystery, and the reports make it more and more likely that there was one of the ghost fliers about.

1934 February 17 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 5.

Ghost flier piloted by a robot? / Not an English machine, (says) denial. /

In Norway a new hypothesis about the always unpredictable ghost flier has been suggested. It is able to go out by the action of an English robot mechanism(?). Through investigations in London the Svenska Dagbladet has sought to ascertain, if any grounds can be found for such a supposition. It has then come forth that experiments with unmanned airplanes are going on in at least several countries. That English experiments of this kind should have been carried on over foreign territory, however, has been denied with firmness.

In the air department in London it was declared that it is absolutely precluded that English fliers are operating over Skandinavia and in the foreign department this was indicated as inconceivable. No experiment of this type has taken place, said a man in their department. If the opposite were the case, it should not have been carried out over foreign territory. It would not be necessary, the empire is spacious enough. The man was then informed that activities of the unknown machine took place in several countries. A question whether similar activities went on within the English air force, the answer was not a denial. The man then pointed out that the unknown machine was little suited for purposes of warfare, because it could not defend itself and consequently could easily be shot down. Automatic control on the other hand is of greatest importance for long-distance flying, because through it pilots get the chance to rest during the trip. Then it would be possible to arrange passenger flights without intermediate landings between, for example, London and Cairo, (when) the automatic controls really come to pass.

1934 February 24 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 5.

Mysterious Russian steamer off the Norwegian coast. / Seeks no admittance to the harbor. / (From our Oslo correspondent.)

OSLO, Friday. From the northern district in Tröndelagen has arrived a report about a mysterious Russian steamer which has been regularly observed since January 2. The vessel is probably of about 3000 tons and (fitted) out as a passenger steamer or as a large tourist ship. It lies very high in the water and is painted black with white overlay and with four lifeboats on each side. Fourteen days ago it steamed low for two days off Brekstad but did not try to make contact with land. Also outside Hestvik on Hitra has it made several trips, for many days at a stretch, but neither there has it sought contact with land. The steamer has Russian marks on the smokestack and has a name in Russian letters, but those who have seen the steamer were not able to read it.

A while later, as the steamer lay at Hestvik, the Russian cargo ship Kola came and laid by the side of the vessel. The two steamers laid side by side for a day. Two days later one steamer went north past Hitra and yesterday the other went southward. The steamer went much faster. (It goes) thus with ease past express steamers along the coast. The steamer has been observed many times in waters where ships never usually go.

When the mysterious airplane was seen out there some time past, the Russian steamer was also there, and when any kind of telegraphing took place (involving) disturbed radiow contact, it was around.

March 2 (Fri.), p. 3.

Mishap for a flier in Norrland. / Many machines put out of action by emergency landings at night. /

The air force has had bad luck lately with its machines in Norrland, where about ten airplanes during the past week were stationed, partly for winter maneuvers and partly to chase after the so-called ghost flier. Departures have been much delayed: even if the totally disabled number is limited to two, four or five machines at least are at present put out of action.

1934 March 29 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 12.

The mysterious radio signals. / Either military or illegal dispatches

OSLO, Wednesday (TT). The Tidens Tegn writes regarding the mysterious radio signals, which were intercepted off the Tröndelag coast that it must be taken for granted that what happened was, either military or illegal dispatches of one kind or another were transmitted. After a close examination of the apprehended signals the newspaper succeeded in establishing that at least a part of them were worded in Russian. The listener who intercepted the signals has classified the sender station's sound strength at x between 4 and 5. Fancie Radio, which was heard at the same time as the signals, has a signal strength of 3. This means, reports the director for Oslo radio, that the unknown station was being near to the listener or at his frequency and 50-odd kilometers distance.

1934 April 1 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 6.

Ghost flier buzzes over Norway. / Three-motor plane on the coast. / Code solved. /

OSLO, Thursday. (TT) The mysterious airplane at Sandnessjøen has, according to the Tidens Tegn, been observed by a group of five persons and by a 16-year old youngster, who reported that at 8 o'clock on the night of a clear (full) moon he plainly saw the machine over Altenfjorden. Well-known farmers who heard the youth state that his assertions were very convincing and the youth was quite certain of his facts and answered clearly and concisely to all questions. He had gone to bed and lay and read when he heard a noise which became louder and louder. Suddenly however the noise ceased, and the youth got up and went over to the window, from which he had a view over Altenfjorden. He then saw a large airplane which descended toward the fjord with the motor shut off. The machine did not go down on the water without making a pair of luffs (dips, banks), however, so that the youth could see it from every side. He saw how it was lighted in the cabin windows. So exactly did he (pay attention) to details of the machine that he denied that it had three propellers.

"Passage risky," declared in Russian (on) radio.

The Tidens Tegn has interviewed Col. Mork in Mosjøen who lately had a hand in the search for the ghost flier. The colonel emphasized that there cannot be any doubt that there really was one or more strange airplanes, which on several occasions during the past months passed along the Nordland coast.

The radio conversation in code, which the above-mentioned newspapers for some days past was in a position (to take up), has now quite silenced (?). (For example there) was intercepted the order "avotanker," which was something to wrack the brains of the code experts. One person well (versed) in the Russian language stated to the newspaper that a man is likely to make himself guilty of wrongdoing and that the order should be "aviotanker," which can translate to "bensinaeroplan." Furthermore people have pondered over what "passvrisij" means. The above-named experts think that it is an abbreviated form of "passage rishavenij," which translated into "passage risky."

1934 April 14 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 4.

"GHOST FLIER" EXPOSED AT SKELLEFTEÅ. / (From our correspondent.)

UMEÅ, Thursday. In the Skellefteå area people have been mystified by a balloon which on Tuesday descended in Stavatråk village. A boy took hold of the balloon and handed it over to the landsfiskal (sheriff) Burman in Skellefteå. The balloon filled up to about one meter in diameter and on a hanger hung an electric lamp with attached battery, and people believe that it was sent up for the purpose of representing the "ghost airplane."

1934 April 30 (Mon) Svenska Dagbladet, pp. 3, 6.

The ghost flier was real. / Can not be explained away as an illusion. / General Reutersvärd has closely examined the report. / Unauthorized air traffic over Bodens fort. /

While reports about the ghost flier arrived, there arose in many quarters the misconception that a case of mass-suggestion existed. It was also evident that a great part of the "observations" were erroneous. After the close examination of the report material, which was carried out by General-Major Reutersvärd, people no longer can doubt the ghost flier's existence. If various persons, independent of each other, make reports which make possible a marking of the flight route and if reliable persons see the machine at short distance, the demonstration should be as strong as anyone could require. The immediate conclusion is that our own air (force) must be strengthened. In any case Bodens fort must be equipped with the possibility to turn away or at least identify such unwelcome strangers.

LULEÅ, Sunday (TT). The military commander for upper Norrland, Major General Reutersvärd, has reported (to) the Norrbottens-Kuriren the results of the measures which were taken to gain clarification concerning the so-called ghost flier.

A rich material for questioning judgment(?) exists. During the months of January as well as February the incoming reports were subjected to an extraordinarily close examination by the county administrators and military authorities in Boden. A comparative study of these reports shows, says the general, that there cannot be any doubt that during the month of January, (which is to say) before the military air guard order, unauthorized air traffic to a great extent was observed within wholly military areas, even within the areas forbidden to air traffic and over Bodens fort. A number of reports exist from reliable persons who with open eyes saw the airplane and even in certain cases at such close distance that it was possible to declare that the plane was not furnished with nationality markings. People in many cases through statements and observations made by persons in different places have been able to follow the flier's route. Whether, since the military air defense (guard) (appeared) in force February 1, unauthorized air traffic (went away?), on the other hand, has not been settled with full certainty. The striking curtailment in the number of reports after the time for the taking of military search and safety (measures), thought the general, was remarkable (for reasons) of giving support to the idea that it or them, which carry on the air traffic, thought it advisable to curtail themselves. Over the forbidden area and over Bodens fort it seems that no flights (took place) during February.

It is, said the general, preposterous to try to explain the thing away as a delusion. It is not possible to deny that flights took place over our country which are offensive to the nation. The question of who or what carried out the flights in question meanwhile stays continually open and people are regrettably enough in this respect obliged to (accept) more or less probable suppositions and guesses. Should flights resume, and (there is no guarantee that such a thing cannot happen), it is of greatest importance that countermeasures immediately and with a force should be taken. In this defenseless condition for aerial enterprise which is now prevailing and which plainly appears with passing time, must come a change as soon as possible.

1934 November 9 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 26.

"Ghost flier" opens the season.

VARDO, Thursday (TT). The mysterious ghost flier seems now to have turned up again. Persons in Berlevåg observed on Wednesday evening at 7:30 o'clock an airplane which came from Tana and remained outside Berlevåg till finally 1:30 o'clock a.m., when it disappeared eastward past Kjølness lighthouse). The airplane communicated [many] times three light signals with a ship. On Thursday evening the machine was again observed from Berlevåg. Many observers declared themselves to be perfectly certain about this thing.

1934 November 10 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3. (card 1)

The ghost flier mystifies Finnmark. / More signals in code to a ship on the coast. / (From our Oslo correspondent.)

OSLO, Friday. Today two reports came to hand in Oslo, which people must unconditionally must ask themselves if they have any connection with one another. [The first is about] the mysterious airplane, flier X, once again seen over the Finnmark, which went over Berlevåg, where it was observed by many persons both Tuesday and Wednesday nights. People saw the light signals from it and heard motor noise as well. The first time the airplane was observed was on Tuesday evening, when repeated disturbances occurred on the radio while people sat and listened to the program. When people immediately thereafter heard motor noise, they dashed out and saw the airplane's light disappear in a northeasterly direction. Later in the night at 1 o'clock the airplane returned, and it is declared with definiteness, that it sent out Morse signals in code. It is declared also that the airplane must have communicated through this code language with a ship which lay off the coast. Those who knew the area declare that the ship lay three miles from land and that it lay and signalled with a white light. The ship was without nationality marks and other characteristics, and people did not successfully identify it.

The other report is a telegram from London, where it is said that Scotland Yard has intercepted unencoded [?] code signals from a ship in the North Sea, and they are clear about it that many persons shortly after these signals were picked up disappeared from their usual places of residence in the dock area and that a rich man, who is known to be connected with the international weapons business (trade), disappeared from London in a northward course in an automobile. For the present the police have set every city between London and Newcastle under surveillance. The director for the weapons firm Soley Armament Company said that the only explanation he can give is that someone has bought a weapons cargo from the continent, which is a very simple affair, to export weapons out to any country, since a ship was on hand in Hull. Another side can be imagined, according to a telegram—that a weapons smuggler has his customers in England and sought to supply the weapons cargo to a receiver off the coast. In every case it is thought to be certain that a weapons cargo ship in the North Sea sought to come in to the English coast.

The ghost flier appears at night also in Västerbotten. / (From our correspondent.)

The same time people in Norway again believed they beheld the much discussed ghost flier, people in Västerbotten also began to fantasize about the same thing. Farmer A. Jonsson from Nätansjö in Va Vilhelmina parish has sent the Västerbottens-Kuriren the following letter, dated 8 November. "Once again the mysterious airplane has been in view. Can the newspaper say what airplane was out and flew the night of November 5? At 3:45 was heard a powerful motor noise which came from the westward and steered a course toward the east. I lay and thought that it was an automobile which came along the road, but no automobile went through the village that night. The day after I hear from many persons that they also heard the same sound. Now I wonder if it could have been the flying ambulance." The newspaper has made certain that neither the flying ambulance in Boden nor the flying ambulance in Östersund made any trip over Vilhelmina parish on the night in question or the day after. The observation in Nätansjö was made the night before Tuesday, while the Norwegian observations were made the night before Wednesday.

1934 November 11 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 17.

Meteor blinds Sassnitz ferry passengers. / (From our Scania editor.)

MALMO, Saturday. A large meteor seen at half past 6 this morning from the Swedish ferry steamer on the way from Sassnitz to Trälleborg, was reported to the Svenska Dagbladet's Scania editor. The meteor went in a direction toward the northwest and its glare was so bright that the passengers were almost completely blinded. The light was like a searchlight with a blue-violet sheen, a most peculiar sight, declared the eyewitnesses.

1934 November 13 (Tues) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 1 (LEST 17)

"Ghost flier" seen again in Norway. / Lively signal communications with a strange ship.

VARDO, Monday (TT). The mysterious airplane is asserted to have been seen again in Berlevåg. Both on Saturday and Sunday evenings the machine came out of the east and flew westward, whereupon it returned after an hour. Many persons say they both saw and heard the machine, and there is not thought to be any doubt placed on the truthfulness of this. People thus are said on three times to have seen it communicate by light signals with a ship.

The reports have been presented to the military authorities, who state that they still have not received any reports about the matter.

1934 November 15 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 17.

Ghost flier seen in Norway at 100 m. altitude. / The machine set a course out to sea. / (From our Oslo correspondent.)

OSLO, Wednesday. A man, who last night passed over the mountains between Skonaving and Berlevåg at Vardö in Finnmarken, saw an airplane which passed at about 100 m. altitude and had a westward course toward the sea. It was a biplane which went fully lighted and on the cabin was found four windows. The airplane had only one propeller and in front stood a name which began with A.

The event was reported telegraphically to the chief of the 6th division, General Ericksen in Harstad, and this report he forwarded to the commander general. General Ericksen confined himself in the Aftenpost's inquiry to say that the report is a very positive piece of information [evidence]. Moreover the Aftenpost learned that the commander general during yesterday received a report that an airplane for several days past was observed over Ankenes in Ofoten.

1934 November 16 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 17 (card 1)

Ghost flier gives Norway a new sensation. / Statement about bribe attempt set the [district attorney] in action. / (From our Oslo correspondent.)

OSLO, Thursday. It unquestionably stirred a sensation when the newspaper Tidens Tegn reported today that one of the newspaper's reporters who this winter gave reports concerning the airplane, this July was exposed to a bribe attempt by an Oslo businessman.

In the article in the Tidens Tegn, which is provided with headlines over the whole first page, it is clear that the businessman concerned addressed himself to the journalist and told that the mysterious airplane now and then could be seen at a nearby stated place. After that the concerned man offered 3000 kr. to stop further investigations concerning the airplane and giving out a code message, which the journalist said he had come into possession of and which had been sent out from the airplane's radio. If the journalist was not content with the offered sum, an additional amount could be paid to his wife. The article in the Tidens Tegn is somewhat unclear. It is clear, however, that the journalist in order to gain time, [asked for] time for reflection. Afterwards he went on vacation and on his return home he found that the businessman had travelled to Macedon[ia].

The Aftenposten reports the remarkable disclosure and emphasizes the striking [fact] that the story was not published till now, but to this the journalist swears that he immediately reported the event to the general staff, where people however [deny] repeatedly [anything he said which made them give the matter] any attention[?]. The general staff emphasizes that the journalist was directed to the police detectives, since the military authorities did not have the jurisdiction to make arrests or institute examinations. The journalist stated, however, that he had not gotten any recommendations to apply to the police. The justice department meanwhile today has taken steps to clear up things and requested the district attorney [?] to make an inquiry.

The [distinctly] well-known [notorious] businessman in Oslo. The first [thing] the police did was examining the journalist [?]. The person who was referred to for his accusation for a bribe attempt is a well-known businessman here. One of the theories which [is circulating] concerning the mysterious airplane has gotten out that it has its operations base on Jan Mayen. The above-mentioned businessman has been interested in the title to this polar island, and he has had a controversy because of it. The businessman is found at present on a trip to Mediterranean countries as a representative of one of Norway's largest industrial firms.

The Aftenposten this evening had a conversation with his wife, who is not certain if she should laugh or cry over this high politics story her husband [is involved in]. The husband is now on his way home and thus soon will get a chance to speak for himself.

Airplane seen in Lofoten on Thursday evening. / (From our Oslo correspondent.)

OSLO, Thursday. A telegram has just been received by the Aftenposten that the mysterious airplane was seen this evening passing from north to south over Ostvågö in Lofoten. The airplane flew at a low altitude and at very great speed. It was illuminated by a white, a red and a blue light.

1934 November 18 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 9. (card 1)

Does the ghost flier keep a base in Finland? / The mysterious signals identical with last year's. / (From our Oslo correspondent.)

OSLO, Saturday. Radio signals from the mysterious airplane have been picked up in Berlevåg between 10 o'clock yesterday evening and 2 a.m. These signals have been heard regularly night after night, but in general they begin first the [second or third hour]—on night first at 4 o'clock, however. The signals varied in strength, however always plainly audible, and sent out in code form. The north Norwegian authorities have telegraphed them on to the general staff in Oslo. Here it is reported that two of the signs in the code communications occurred among those which were overheard last winter when the mysterious airplane appeared.

There are still persons, however, who remain skeptical toward [against] the assertion that there should be any special connection of them with the flights. Captain Motzfeldt, chief of the Norwegian army flight school, suggested the theory that what has happened is simply a matter of examination flights for Russian fliers. He [offered] as final proof of this the information that the [flier goes] straight over Scandinavia to the Arctic Ocean and there finds a ship. whose position was known from the start [?]. [It is his duty to get to know] the ship through an agreed-upon code signal and returns when it makes contact. Though Russia is not connected to the international air travel convention, it is not illegal so much as it is not probably [that it is a military machine rather than a civilian plane] [?].

The "Tidens Tegn" gave out today what was, as the newspaper called it, a sensational report that two foreign tourists, who last summer were on a walking tour in north Finland, on one occasion came to a remote farm where they to their astonishment discovered in an outbuilding a large modern airplane. On asking the owner of the farm, a man about 50 years old, if he was a flier, he replied that the machine belonged to a Swedish friend of his who the day before unexpectedly had come flying. The friend now had travelled to Helsingfors. The tourists expressed their surprise at what appeared to be a very useful machine being allowed to stay behind so far away in the wilderness--it was many miles to the nearest railroad station. The farmer answered jokingly that his friend was a little strange (about it himself) and "doubted if it (would) go." The whole situation was really very remarkable, not less with thoughts of the winter's business.

If the report is correct (true) and after the investigations we undertook, writes the newspaper, no reason was found to doubt it, the supposition is confirmed to a high degree that the mysterious airplane had its base in Finnish territory. The forested wilderness in Karelia, for example, offers an ideal hiding place for an airplane. In this connection it should be noted that the machine, which last winter was seen over middle and northern Sweden, as a rule held to a northeasterly course to the Swedish-Finnish border. Only one was seen to go out over Botten Sea (-southern part of Gulf of Bothnia)--though one which so strikingly revealed itself over Umeå only six hours after the Swedish flier, which was ordered out to hunt the ghost flier, left the city. During the whole week air defense was stationed there, the flier was not seen, but as soon as the flier returned to Stockholm, the uninvited guest came flying down along the Ume river. The only time a westward-going machine was noticed, which came direct from Bottniska Bay, [was] probably from the Finnish coast.

1934 November 19 (Mon) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 20. (card 1)

"Quz" and "Quy" mystify all Scandinavia. / Swedish, Finnish and Norwegian stations seek in vain to disclose the sender.

The radio signals QUZ and QUY heard once again with very strong loudness last night at 850 meters wavelength. On sounding, which was undertaken by Swedish radio stations, it seems that the signals did not come from the north but with great certainty the sending station is located in a southerly direction from Stockholm. The station's exact place, however, still has not been established by sounding, reported department engineer Lemoine in the telegraph office. That the signals should be incorrect on the ground that they begin with Q is mistaken, however, he said. It is found [approved] in the international and telegraph regulations certain signals which begin with Q, but the signals now heard are not recorded there. Moreover the 850 meter band is open for military traffic, and the military, which always broadcasts in code, can very well use signals which begin with Q without it being an incorrect signal. Norwegian Finn country disturbed. / Powerful and plain signals heard time and again. / (From our Oslo correspondent.)

OSLO, Sunday. To the Aftenposten it was telegraphed from

it was ed
Gjetbergen that the report from Sund in Lofoten, that the local telegraph personnel lately intercepted repeated times strange radio signals which must be set in connection with mysterious flight activity. The signals were first picked up quite by chance last Thursday at 22.45 o'clock. It was broadcast on a wavelength of 845 m., something like the same which a Finnmark station uses for its ordinary radio broadcasts, and it was so strong that it completely drowned out every thing else from 100 m. over and 100 m. under the wavelength. The signals were very plain. It was the letters ZQU and QUZ which were repeated [several] times.

On Friday the mysterious signals were heard again, but now it was only QUZ which was sent at the same time as on Tuesday. On Saturday evening people listened with interest for a signal at the usual time but nothing happened then. Meanwhile people continued to listen and after a short lapse of time, then at 23.05 o'clock strong signals were heard again on the [old] wavelength. This evening it was the signal QUY which was sent, however. It was easy for the experienced telegrapher, who picked up the signals, to hear that it was not sent over time by the same hand, and it should be a certain argument that there are two mysterious stations which communicate with one another in this incomprehensible way. As is well known many times also in Finnmarken people have picked up on frequency 845 incomprehensible signals which people have connected with the mysterious flight activities [since] the signals as a rule have been sent at a time when the flier was being observed by many persons. Everything points to [the fact] that the flier now also has broadened his activity to Lofoten in likeness to what happened last year.

Hangö radio out hunting. / (From our Helsingfors correspondent)
HELSINGFORS, 18 Nov. The mysterious radio signals have been picked up even by the Hangö radio station, where people Saturday night about midnight time plainly picked up [with the receiver] call signals from two strong senders on a wavelength of 840-850 meters. One of the stations sent out the letter group QUZ, the other QUY. The difference between the stations' wavelength was about 10 m. The sounding station sought immediately to locate the signals' point of origin, from which people came to the conclusion that QUZ was located 10° eastward and QUY 43° eastward. According to these results the first-named station should be found somewhere off the north Norwegian coast and the last in the area of Kolahalvön.

1934 November 20 (Tues) New York Times, p. 16.

'Ghost Flier' Revives Alarming Rumors of New Soviet Armaments in Arctic / Wireless to New York Times.

HELSINGFORS, Nov. 19.--Resumption of the so-called "ghost fliers" activities in northernmost Scandinavia, which greatly mystifies the public in all north European countries, has revived alarming rumors of Soviet naval armaments on the Arctic coast.

Much attention was created by newspaper statements that Russia has dispatched four large destroyers to a new naval base at Alexandrovsk. It is learned today in reliable quarters that this detachment consists of small submarine cruisers, of the "O" type, which the Soviet War Commissariat as early as October, 1933, directed to proceed from Leningrad through the newly completed White Sea-Baltic Canal to demonstrate the canal's usefulness in war time.

Equally deep mystery surrounding wireless signals supposedly of military nature, in the Arctic, was today solved by Finnish radio experts. They located the sending stations on the German Baltic coast near Koenigsberg. The signals are believed here to have been in connection with German experiments to perfect military aviation.

BERLEVAAG, Finnmark, Norway, Nov. 19 (AP).--The mystery of the "ghost" airplanes and ships at sea deepened tonight when it was reported two warships, not Norwegian, were observed last night from the most islands in the Arctic Ocean to the north.

1934 November 20 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 6.

Norway and Denmark take a bearing on QUZ and QVZ. / Two strange warships observed at Lofoten. / (From our Oslo correspondent.)

OSLO, Monday. The mysterious radio signals could be heard this evening as well in Oslo, Bergen, Melto and at many other places in Norway. It is the signals QUZ and QVZ which are sent out. The wavelengths are between 840 and 870. It is reported this afternoon that the navy intends to send an airplane northward, but it has not been possible to confirm this with the authorities. The general staff has instructed telegraph operators to send in reports. It is intended to attempt through cross-soundings between two or more stations to locate the broadcast stations.

At Berlevåg in Lofoten was observed Sunday night two strange warships four quarter-miles(?) from land, going with slow speed westward. The nationality is unknown, but the ships could scarcely be Norwegian when for the present the navy only has one inspection ship on the Finnish coast.

(From our Copenhagen correspondent.)
COPENHAGEN, Monday. At Kastrups airport this evening with the assistance of the airport radio bearing equipment a man sought to locate the mysterious radio signals QUZ and QVZ. But he came to the conclusion that the sending station was located east or southeast of Copenhagen, which does agree with the Swedish assumption that the station is located on the German Baltic coast. In Kastrup the man was only in a position to judge the direction and of the distance to the sending station the man cannot say. Also an amateur listener in Copenhagen this evening has intercepted the mysterious signals on his apparatus. He was not in a position to undertake any soundings, but he said that the sending station either must be very powerful or located at a proportionately short distance from Copenhagen.

1934 December 29 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 8.

Ghost flier's radio signals ^{ST. U} remain insoluble. / Norwegian general staff forbids private [soundings]. / (From our Oslo correspondent.)

OSLO, Friday. The Tidens Tegn today publishes a sensational article about the fortunate ~~Ekstrøms~~ newspaper that through radio soundings the riddle of the mysterious flights over north Norway has been solved. The newspaper had arranged soundings from three points in north Norway and during a long time received radio signals which the newspaper asserts came from Russian Karelia. From this the newspaper draws the conclusion that it is a Russian military flier which is occupied with practice flights and that this possibility has a connection with the vessels (ships) which are stationed in the Arctic Ocean (!).

On account of these reports the Aftenposten has learned that it is most certainly correct that the Tidens Tegn attempted to [set up] a private inquiry through radio sounding but that this plan was stopped by the military authorities. The 6th air division for a long time has pursued an investigation because of rumors about the mysterious airplane. During this time the air division has even arranged radio soundings over north Norway. The general staff was given notice that the Tidens Tegn also arranged to [make] radio soundings, [and] issued a prohibition against all private meddling in the official investigation. Meanwhile there has come about no solution to what the secret radio communications go out for, and neither has the Tidens Tegn been able to get this. Commander General Laake said to the Aftenposten that the radio communication, which [does] take place, certainly is not of any direct military significance. Neither is there any fixed point [good reason] to set them in connection with reports of the airplane. General Ericksen in Harstad reported on Christmas Eve a pair of reports of radio communication to which he added a certain weight. These reports have not yet been handed over to the commander general, but taken as a whole the inquiry, which was carried on, does not give any alarming result. If no results come about within the very near future, there is the intention to undertake a search.

1935 January 12 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 9.

The ghost flier search an expensive entertainment. / Cost truly not less than 133 500 kr.

Appropriations for unforeseen expenses taken up [amount to] 1 million kr. Of the regular account for use of this appropriation during the foregoing calendar year it is clear that claims take up about 711 000 kr. Out of this, for the strengthening of our departments' committee funds 250,000 kr. was spent, for payment of shipwreck costs (m.m. [?]) [about] 168 000 kr., for repair work on our buildings about 139 000 kr. for alleviation of food shortages in Västerbottens district 25 000 kr. and for the search for the so-called ghost flier ca. 133 500 kr.

1935 October 1 (Tues) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 7.

Firing at Russian airplanes / Circling over the border at Karelska Point (Isthmus).

HELSINGFORS, 30 Sept. (TT) Sunday night one or two Russian airplanes circled over the border area on the Karelska isthmus. At the same time large military maneuvers went on between Kronstadt and the territorial border, and eyewitnesses reported that three searchlights from Kronstadt followed the machines and showed the way. Furthermore people had the idea that cannon shots were fired from Kronstadt as a signal to the fliers. They flew very low and made some daring maneuvers. They disappeared only when soldiers from a pioneer company opened fire on them. When the machines passed the border, firing was heard from the area of Syntelbäck.

1935 November 11 (Mon.) New York Times, p. 9d.

Addis Ababa Is Baffled by Its Daytime Star / Wireless to the NYT.
ADDIS ABABA, Nov. 10.--All eyes here turned today to a more minute inspection of the mysterious daytime star that is visible, but never very clearly, in the morning. Crowds of merchants and warriors parading before Emperor Haile Selassie halted and gazed at the star for several minutes, and after the Negus had a servant bring powerful field glasses he ignored the troops to peer at the sky.

No one here has a logical explanation for the phenomenon, and the absence of any astronomical talent precludes a scientific opinion. Some contend it is not unusual to see stars in daylight in high equatorial altitudes.

Sun. Nov. 17, IV, p. 9c. Venus. (Expts from Letters)

I read in your paper that Ethiopians have been observing a star in the daytime at Addis Ababa. It may interest you to know that the star they have seen is Venus. On clear days, within the last month, I have frequently seen it at noon with the naked eye. It is getting fainter now as its distance from the earth increases. I don't expect to be able to see it much longer until it becomes an evening star again.--R.H.

KENT, Aberdeen, Md.

1935 December 4 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 1.

Russian flier over Finnish territory.

VIBORG, 3 Dec. (TT) At Tuesday noon a Russian airplane circled over Finnish territory over an area of about 5 km radius near the border railroad station, Rajajoki. The machine flew around ten minutes over Finnish territory at a low altitude. It was intended to fire with a machine gun, and the plane probably was hit with many projectiles, because it faltered in the air and must have force-landed directly behind the border. The airplane was a search plane with two [seats]. By all judgments it did not carry photographic apparatus.

1936 April 16 (Th) London Times, p. 9c[1].

Watch for Mysterious Aeroplane

Our Folkestone Correspondent telegraphs:--

A mysterious aeroplane has caused the authorities in the Folkestone district to keep a watch at Capel le Ferne during the past fortnight. It was reported that a machine had flown low over the village, which is between Folkestone and Dover, on two successive Thursday evenings. On the second occasion it appeared to land at a remote spot, but within a minute or so it was seen making its way across the Channel again. A large grey motor-car was seen to come from the place on the second occasion, and to go toward London. Since then the aeroplane, which is said to be of foreign origin, has not been seen.

1936 November 19 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 9.

Ghost flier again in north Norway. / Reports from different directions.

HARSTAD, Wednesday. (TT) Reports of ghost fliers have started once again to arrive from the northern regions. The observations come now in connection with the foreign warships, supposed to be Soviet Russian, which has been observed many times until recently along the north Norwegian coast. Four road workers from Kvåfjord reported that at half past nine on Tuesday evening and during the next quarter hour they saw a powerful light, which moved westward over Gullefjord. A nuclear view prevailed at the time, and the light and direction of movement for it could be accurately ascertained. The explanation which no doubt prevails is that the light issued from an airplane. People in a yard in Kvåfjord and fishermen who the week before were out on the fjord, say likewise that the sound of an airplane was plainly heard, and on Tuesday evening the sound was heard again.

Sat. Dec. 5, p. 7.

MYSTERIOUS PLANE FALLS IN SOUTHERN FRANCE.

(An airplane crashed in a ravine in Haute-Savoie, and wreckage indicated that it was a Lufthansa plane.)

Sv D. Dec. 17, 1936, p. 11. BRILLIANT METEOR IN ANGERSMANLAND

ORNSKOLDSVIK, Wednesday (TT) A brilliant sky phenomenon was seen at 16.23 o'clock on Wednesday in the firmament in a west-north-westerly direction from the city. A shining body appeared to rapidly approach the earth. At first it had a globular shape, but after several moments seemed to suddenly burst apart and become surrounded with a gaseous cover, gleaming in bluish and red-gold, after which it finally disappeared. By all judgments it was a meteor.

1936 December 30 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 12.

The ghost flier appears again over Byske. / Unknown machine observed at many spots in the vicinity. / (From our correspondent.)

SKELLEFTEÅ, Tuesday. For the first time in a couple of years a "ghost flier" has been seen over Byske parish. Two Elfström brothers saw an airplane at 9 o'clock in the evening, with a course from the west toward the sea, and an investigation by police authorities has further confirmed this observation.

Clear moonshine prevailed at the time, which made observation easy. The machine went at a rather great height and according to the Elfström brothers' understanding it had cut off the motor, as if it wanted to orient itself during its slide-flight out to sea. It could be plainly seen that the machine was a large biplane but of course could not locate marks [to indicate] the plane carried any insignia.

The brothers reported the matter to landfiskal Kröger of Byske district, and he testified that the two brothers are very truthful persons. After analysis confirmed the brothers' observation he initiated an investigation in order to find out whether still more people in the area saw the mysterious machine. According to what was learned from Boden the air ambulance was not out, nor any of the four airline machines in Östersund. It is reported that the military flight activity was suspended during the days between Christmas and New Years.

1936 December 31 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p.

"Ghost flier" must be carefully considered. / Authorities should look into reports.

By reason of the reports coming out that an unknown airplane passed over Utterstfors and Byske, the military officer in command in upper Norrland, Major General Reuterswärd, stressed, on the Tidens Tean's inquiry, that out of the reports--of which there have been only [quite?] a few--which during the present autumn have come in to military command about the appearance of "ghost fliers," it seems that these last reports are the ones which give the strongest likelihood that something is really going on. Major General Reuterswärd was reminded in connection therewith of the address which sometime earlier he gave to the provincial government as well as to the customs service and railroad administration in Vasterbotten and Norrbotten, to promptly report observations to him [so something can be done] with regard to secret flights over Swedish territory. The military command should thereafter be able to undertake quickly the investigation of the matter, which will be possible with the [investigators] he has under his command.

1937 January 5 (Tue) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

Ghost flier over Byske a reality. / Investigation carried out through the military command.

LULEÅ, Monday (TT) The military command for upper Norrland, with the help of field-flier (literal.) Gunnerfelt in Boden, has performed an investigation on account of reports about the known [notorious?] flights over Byske on 28 December. On that occasion flights really seemed to take place, according to statements of the Norbottens-Kuriren. Statements that it could have been a large bird, which flew over Byske on that occasion has no [credit] with those who observed the flight in question. /

Observations in Finland unreliable. / Extensive investigation material presented by the general staff. / (From our Helsinki correspondent.)

HELSINGFORS, 4 January. On Monday the general staff presented for newspaper representatives a concentrated description of investigation records concerned with the so-called ghost flier. The [contention] of the presentation is that most of the observations are quite unreliable, and this being especially true of the luminous phenomenon. As concerns the sound phenomenon, the general staff seems to be inclined to credit it with a greater significance, and it appears as if the ghost flier in Finland cannot yet definitively be declared as written off. By the material it is clear that many of the observations were such that it could be immediately concluded that there was not question of any airplane, [while in other cases the suspicion of a strange airplane at close range yet proved on later investigation to be untenable.] In order to ascertain to how great an extent an ordinary military airplane is observed in the region exposed to ghost fliers, Finnish fliers have been allowed to fly over the area and imitate "ghost fliers." The response (effect) has been overwhelming. The plane was observed immediately, and the sound of it was heard plainly and for many minutes, and all in all this plane showed itself to be much easier to observe and localize [locate?] than the ghost airplane.

The chief of the investigations, Colonel Siilasvuo in Uleåborg, states in a letter to the general staff that it is reported at well-nigh every investigation how many people choose to say they have been witness to some light or sound phenomenon but who, when it is really examined really have nothing to report and no [worthwhile information] other than that in their own imaginations.

1937 January 14 (Wed.) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

Mysterious flier again over North Norway. / Reliable report to the Sixth Division.

HARSTAD, Tuesday. (TT)--On Tuesday the Sixth Division received a report about a mysterious airplane observed Sunday evening from Nattvannstuen, between Skoganvarre and Karasjokk. The machine was observed by two persons, who saw a light and heard motor noise. The machine's course could be seen by the light of the night sky. It went at a great height in a westerly direction. The reports may be fully trusted. For the past 14 days similar reports have come from the same area.

1937 January 15 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

Does a bomb find confirm the ghost flier? / Military authorities in Harstad investigate.

HARSTAD, Thursday (TT) An interesting find was made today on the western side of Andöya. On request of a Norwegian telegram bureau correspondent the commanding officer of the Sixth Division in Harstad stated that the sheriff's officer in Dverberg had reported several days ago that an object, which was like a torpedo, drifted ashore. The object, which was very large, has now been investigated by personnel from the navy, who recognized it as a smoke bomb of the type fliers use on the open sea. The bomb, which is over half a meter long, could not have lain long in the water, since it only recently began to rust. The find must carry a definite meaning, since it indicates that the so-called ghost flier really exists. Just from the district where the bomb was found, there was reported to the Sixth Division many times in December that people believed they saw or heard an airplane.

1937 January 24 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 11.

Ghost flier observed at Åberget? / Two soldiers see a luminosity and hear motor noise.

LULEÅ, Saturday (TT) To the fortress police in Boden has been reported an observation made by a quartermaster-sergeant and a conscript on 1.19.

While on guard duty at Åberget at about half past 10 on Wednesday evening they heard motor noise from the air and for five minutes observed a luminosity coming out of the xxxxxx south, which at a considerable height moved over Kalasjöberget in the direction of Ådberget. The light disappeared in a northwesterly direction. Both are firmly convinced that the luminosity as well as the motor noise issued from an airplane. The sick-transport plane was not on this occasion on many flights. Again a mysterious airplane on the Norwegian north coast. /

SVOLVÄER, Saturday (TT) From Gimsöy it is reported to the Lofot-Posten that on Thursday evening about half past 9 four fishermen observed an airplane which went in a westerly direction from Lauvik over Gimsöy out to sea, where it disappeared. Immediately after that the fishermen saw a large ship come in toward land at great speed on a northerly course, whereupon it suddenly turned and again set out to sea. They saw two white lights, a large and a small one, while however no side lights could be discovered.

1937 January 2 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 12.

Ghost flier seen in Savar. / Two persons observe a flight of an airplane / (From our correspondent.)

UMEÅ, Friday. On Thursday it was believed that the ghost flier was seen again in Västerbotten. The merchant Sandgren of Ytterboda, Savar parish, reported that on Thursday evening at 10 minutes past 8 he observed a light in the evening sky, which could not have been anything other than a light on an airplane. The light seemed much brighter than an ordinary star, and it was in front of the full overcast of the evening. Confusion with a star he thinks is completely excluded, since the light moved quite rapidly in a horizontal direction. It looked as if the light came from Holmsundshället, then from outside (över) Bottenhavet (lake, sea?) and proceeded in the direction of Umeå city. While Sandgren watched the "ghost flier" there also came another person, named Torsten Jonsson, from Ytterboda, who made the same observation as Sandgren. As far as is known no Swedish airplane flew over this area on the evening in question.

1937 February 3 (Wed.) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 11.

Ghost flier again observed over Vännäs. / Passes the old campsite on Monday evening. / (From our correspondent.)

UMEÅ, Tuesday. The ghost flier has not ceased with its raids over Norrland, if a report can be believed which came in to landfiskal Thorelli on Monday evening. There it was announced by a policeman named Fritz Karlsson that at 25 minutes past 8 in the evening he saw a ghost flier over the market town of Vännäs.

Karlsson had come driving a car on the highway between the village of Vännäs and the [business section] of Vännäs and then saw a light in the sky which he at once connected with an airplane. It is not very unusual for an airplane to pass over Vännäs, because an airfield with hangars is located on the old campsite. Only the fact that the machine was out in the evening darkness made the policeman curious. He followed the machine's movements, and believed he found that it came from the north, following a main line with a course somewhere around Vännäs church. It went directly into a turn and descended as if in a glide it would land on the airfield. Karlsson believes what happened is that some military plane intended to spend the night in Vännäs and to gas up by going up to the campsite. His curiosity was awakened and he wanted to see who it was who came at this time of the evening. During the trip to the campsite Karlsson lost the light to sight on account of topographical conditions, but when he came near the camp he was able to see the light go away in the west along the Umeå river valley. He estimated that when the machine disappeared from his field of view it was located in the vicinity of the Koksele ferry. Karlsson admitted that he could not see the machine itself, but he could not think that the light issued from anything else but an airplane. He had gotten in contact with the landfiskal by telephone, so that he might also be able to observe the light, but he was out on official business.

Landfiskal Thorelli states that he reported in the matter to the commandant in Boden, where there was no knowledge that a Swedish machine had flown over Vännäs in the evening.

1937 February 10 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 14.

The ghost flier again seen in the neighborhood of Umeå. / Two persons observe a mysterious light at low altitude. / (From our correspondent.)

UMEÅ, Tuesday. It is believed on Monday as well a strange airplane was seen in the region of the city of Umeå. A person, Täfteå, farmer Erik Johansson, saw at 5 minutes past 9 in the evening a brilliant light in the sky, which moved from the north and turned toward the west, as if it went in the vicinity of the city of Umeå.

The witness said he could see the light, which was mixed with red, during a period of about four minutes. It moved rapidly in relation to the stars and went at a relatively low height along the forest edge. After the light died away Johansson met on the way another person from Täfteå, who at once related to him that he too had seen the same light. Neither of the two witnesses had heard any motor noise, though they had stood in the vicinity of a power line, which buzzed loudly. They believed, moreover, that the machine was found at an especially long distance from Täfteå.

1937 February 12 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

The ghost flier seen by military men from Boden. / General Reuterswärd proposes special measures.

On January 4 at 1900 hours many officers and men along with two fortress [guards] in Boden, who were in various places within the garrison area and nearby, heard loud motor noise and in some cases saw a light over the fort area, going in a northwesterly direction along the Lule River. The reports, taken together with a report of an analogous observation at 19:15 o'clock on the river approximately three miles northwest of Boden, and with a report later that night from the watch at Fort Degerberg, who at 1:30 o'clock noticed plane motor sound and a light over the fort, going in a southeasterly direction, must be considered to imply that in all likelihood flights took place over the Boden fort and its restricted area on January 4. This seems to be much more probable than the reported explanation of a January 5 training flight of the ambulance plane [and] xxxxxxxxxx this conviction seems to be further strengthened by the observation of January 4. [?]

The military commander for upper Norrland, General Reuterswärd, stressed this in a letter to the defense minister and pointed out that the ambulance plane was not in action at the time for the observations. So far as can be determined neither did any other flights take place. In a separate letter (address) the general requests measures against aerial activity.

Outside the above-mentioned reports there have been a great number of accounts of high flights coming in from various parts of the military district, and a report from Matfors, Tuna parish. With careful investigations, in which ambulance plane pilot Sgt. Gummerfelt assisted, in no case have the observations shown themselves to depend on optical or auditory illusions, while the other observers appear trustworthy. Of these later observations there is thought to be no room for doubt but that unauthorized flights took place, said the general.

Along with the observations are separate reports attached to Gen. Reuterswärd's letter. In these appears, for example, that a master carpenter in Björkelunde north of Boden discerned [clearly] an aerial body which flew through the sky, but he does not remember whether the airplane was a biplane or monoplane. He saw red, white and green lights, but he could not remember in what order the lights appeared. The observer, who according to reports is understood to possess full physical and mental vigor and is fully trustworthy as well, believed it was the sick-transport plane. This episode took place on December 18.

1937 February 12 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 14.

Card 1

The ghost flier irritates a pacifist. / Impertinent questions in the Second Chamber by Mr. Lindberg.

On Thursday Mr. Lindberg in the Umeå (s) Second Chamber requested permission to question the defense minister concerning the ghost flier. Mr. Lindberg asked: Does the state minister intend to have carried out a fully objective investigation on account of reports of forbidden flights in upper Norrland? If such is the case, is the state minister willing to see that such an investigation calls on the cooperation of persons outside professional military circles and who could think unaffected by wishes that are outworn, to look into the alleged forbidden flight activity unmotivated by the demand for sabre-rattling[?]

The questioner reminded in his argument that since the general staff chief confirmed that summer that unauthorized flights over Scandinavia occurred, the matter had attracted great attention in foreign countries as well. Many German and French newspapers had declared that there could hardly be any doubt but that Russian fliers undertook search trips over Norwegian, Swedish and Finnish territory.

In autumn too have reports come in of ghost fliers in Norrbotten and Västerbotten. Military authorities in Boden, with the same certainty in the beginning of 1934, have given it out as true that such flights really occur. In Finland, on the other hand, stated Mr. Lindberg, has the position been taken of responsibly holding an extreme skepticism on ghost flier theories, and just a few days ago Finnish general staff chief Oesch gave a statement to a Swedish newspaper of [noteworthy] content. The general cited as an example that the reports of ghost fliers which seem best [established] and well-documented on closer examination showed themselves erroneous.

Mr. Lindberg stated further that according to reports in the press, the military commander for upper Norrland, Major-General Reuterswärd, in a written report and a personal call on the defense minister has demanded extraordinary measures for prevention of the mysterious flights. In this it should still be demanded that in this investigation persons should take part who remain quite independent of the natural professional military interest that [their] military organization get as much reinforcement as possible. For many reasons it is hardly strange that the ghost flier activity, to the extent it actually occurs, is a provocation intended to make the Swedish people willing for further air force armament. / *

For a person like Mr. Lindberg's opinion it is self-evidently excluded that the military authorities' pronouncements on the cause of the so-called ghost flier could in any way suggest how to bring about further air force armament. That hitherto no demands have been made in this direction naturally was passed over without comment. He does not so much as [hesitate for a moment] to throw out reckless insinuations about flying with a provocative aim. It ought not to cause the defense minister any trouble to quickly provide an answer which can be understood by the majority of our people who do not see eye to eye with Lindberg on the defense problem. It should not trouble the others for information from the government side, [which obviously requires confidentiality] to inspect the measures which so far have been taken up at the investigation of the ghost flights. [?]

Austria too has its ghost flier. / Appears over Vienna. "Soviet symbol" or practice in skywriting?

WIEN, 15 February (Times) Austria too has now had its ghost flier. It appeared for the first time on Saturday over Vienna, and then showed itself again on Monday, and like on Saturday began to "write" with smoke in the sky. (While) a police plane, two military machines and two private airplanes went up to attempt to identify it. They could not come very close before the mysterious machine took flight and disappeared. The Deutsches Nachrichten bureau reported on Saturday that the machine had written Soviet symbols in the sky and disappeared "in the direction of Czechoslovakia."

Your correspondent observed the machine on Monday from the moment it began to write till it disappeared, but the "message" was indistinct like a photograph shown in a newspaper. In spite of this there were people who saw in the mass soviet symbols and various signs in the sky. What some people took to represent a hammer and sickle, others believed to be a soviet star, while yet others interpreted it as the initials K.P.D. (Kommunistische Partei Deutschlands) and more as "U.S.S.R.," but all agreed that the smoky pillars were communist signs. A cyclist was so interested that he collided with a car and was seriously injured.

Newspapers have hurried to direct sharp accusations against Czechoslovakia, which now stands to find itself subjected to the most peculiar charges. High-standing advisers in official circles ~~xxxxxxxxxxxx~~ in Czechoslovakia and police and military authorities there will all work to identify the "ghost flier" in order to demonstrate Czechoslovakia's innocence. The affair is a marked example of the power of political propaganda and mass suggestion, [because on Monday evening the certainly credible rumor was stated that stirred up the Austrians was simply an exercise in skywriting.

Wed. Feb. 17, p. 6. It was skywriting! / The ghost flier over Vienna now cleared up.

WIEN, 16 February (Times) The Vienna police let it be known on Tuesday that the airplane which on Monday wrote mysterious signs in the sky over the Austrian capital city, was flown by an Austrian pilot for the sake of practice in skywriting. [At the same time the fact remains that the air police in Vienna are incapable of identifying a rank impostor.] It was not a question of a political demonstration, and the soviet symbols and letters which many Viennese thought they saw on the vault of heaven, were entirely due to mass suggestion.

1937 February 17 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

Norwegian trawler startled by a "ghost flier." / The machine disappeared after it throws out a smoke bomb. / (From our Correspondent.)

OSLO, Tuesday. In connection with the arrest of the Russian spy in Finnmark and the many reports of mysterious airplanes over northern Scandinavia is the sensational matter that a fishing boat came into Aalesund and reported that a large gray airplane was seen to land on the water not far from the boat. The airplane carried red, green and white lights. It stayed off the coast of Sunnmore, and everyone aboard the fishing boat was witness to the affair. The captain said that he thought to investigate closer what the airplane carried, but when it was noticed aboard the airplane that the fishing boat set amourse his way, all the lights were extinguished. Meanwhile the man from the fishing boat could see that the cabin was lighted within. The captain set out at full speed for the airplane, from which a smoke bomb was thrown out and under cover of this the machine took off and disappeared in a northwesterly direction. [Norwegian spy Belgonen had large radio apparatus and signalled the Soviet Union.]

1937 February 25 (Thu) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

Does the 'ghost flier' get its bearings from Belgonen? / The mysterious night-flier gets its explanation. / (From our Oslo correspondent.)

OSLO, Wednesday. The Aftenposten proposes the theory that the mysterious night flier over northern Scandinavia is only intended to prove secret radio navigation stations effective.

The espionage affair in Tana ~~xxx~~, writes the newspaper, has developed into an affair whose significance is not to be underrated. According to Belgonen's story, at appointed times he would send signals on his shortwave radio to his chief contact in Murmansk. Even if he had nothing to report he had to maintain contact. It is very likely that he is not the only one in northern Norway who is equipped with a radio transmitter. If it is considered that there are many of Belgonen's type, equipped with radio transmitters and in a foreign country's service, then the many reports of mysterious airplanes becomes more credible.

A radio transmitter can be used for other things than the transmission of reports, however, the newspaper points out. It can transmit for navigation. For night flying over great distances toward a set ~~xxxxxxx~~ destination navigation stations are an invaluable help. Thanks to a network of transmission stations an airplane or air squadron can find its way in darkness as easily as if the flight took place in broad daylight. Darkness then becomes only a cover and a time of no inconvenience, whether the true objective is by land or sea. What follows from this theory is that the mysterious flier--if it now really exists--is not only an exercise in flying but likewise of the effectiveness of control by radio navigation stations.

1937 March 2 (Tues) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 7.

That mysterious airplane at Andalsnes.

OSLO, Monday (TT) The Tidens Tegn has had a conversation with the skipper from More, who last week had the sensational encounter with an unknown airplane between Alesund and Molde. The skipper confirmed the previously provided statement and reports furthermore that the airplane headed from Andalsnes. He answered that Andalsnes, as endpoint for the Romsdal Highway, can be a very strategic point and a place that can be thought of to be the object of special attention for the nightly flights.

1937 March 12 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

A ghost flier which was not a ghost flier.

In the Boden area and in Luleå during Thursday there was lively discussion of the wild rumors about a new ghost flier in vogue because of the particularity that the air force organ in Boden Fortress devoted on Saturday to a report of an observed flight. But after a ~~xxxx~~ thorough investigation it has been declared that no great doubt would remain about the fact that the observed flier was one of the three Swedish airplanes from Östersund, which came up to Boden to take part in winter field exercises. The machine which caused so much needless excitement was aloft to observe the pathways which were laid out previously through the woods by the engineer troops.

The commandant of Boden, Gen. Lagerfelt, ~~xx~~ also released a clarifying communique on the matter this afternoon, which ~~xxxx~~ renders the rumor null and void.

1937 October 3 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 5.

The mysterious visit of a German ship. / Report turned over to the foreign (affairs) department.

From the defense department to the foreign (affairs) department has been turned over the report about German warships which visited off our southern coast last week and flights over Swedish territory connected with this.

Wed. Nov. 3, p. 18. Meteor explodes at Söderby hospital.

At 5 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon there was observed in the vicinity of Söderby hospital a phenomenon which was believed to be a comet. It was a shining fireball which was thought to come in a direction from north to south. The brilliant light appeared to dissolve after a minute, when it ~~xxx~~ broke apart into many small particles.

--It was truly enough a meteor, a typical fireball which people saw, declared Prof. Bertil Lindblad of the observatory in Saltsjöbaden. It is not an unusual event for a large meteoric body like this one to enter into the earth's atmosphere, where it shortly explodes. Reports of similar observations come in to the observatory quite often.

Wed. Oct. 6, p. 11. Meteor turns night into day in area of Malmö. / 1936 " " 15, p. 3, last. Giant meteor seen in Gottland, Stockholm.

1936 Dec. 23, last p. German Zepps seen supplying Franco in Spain.

1938 February 1 (Tues) (London) Daily Telegraph and Morning Post, p. 13 (Letters to Editor).

(card 1)

Northern Lights.

Sir--In your accounts of the Northern Lights no reference was made to the appearance of two glowing spheres, resembling large red stars, which appeared in the western sky at the same time. These objects, which were due west of Winchester, were at a great height which formed an angle of approximately ~~xx~~ 30 degrees with the earth's surface.

I first noticed them at 7:30, and with the aid of field-glasses could see that from each ascended a great column of white smoke or steam, which ultimately joined and continued in one column for a considerable height. As I watched--when one of these objects appeared to drop and the other to disappear.

About three or four minutes later they reappeared in the original position, where they remained until about 7:50, when they again disappeared. These spheres were yellowish-red in colour, increasing and decreasing in brilliance.--Yours faithfully, A. SEARLE BUCKLEY. Winchester, Jan. 29.

(Aurora on Monday. Also, letter that aurora makes sound, esp. in north. Th. Feb. 3, p. 11 (Letters) Aurora Phenomena / From / The Hon. Mrs. R. Morgan--Greenville.

Sir--In reference to your readers' letters about the "Northern Lights," I should like to say that from this house at 7:30 p.m., looking due west, we saw a strange yellowish-red light suddenly appear on the horizon.

We thought at first it might be only a motor headlight in some unusual place. It slowly rose, floating in a northerly direction, and ~~xxxxxxxx~~ appearing then like a large reddish planet. Your correspondent mentions two such phenomena. From here only one was visible.

It slowly moved, until at about 7.50 it disappeared, as if suddenly blown ~~xxx~~ out. It heightened the already rather strange feeling of the supernatural caused by the unusual brilliance of the aurora.--Yours faithfully, / Elizabeth Morgan-Greenville / Hammerwood, Midhurst, Feb. 1. (5 p. 11, noise)

1938 February 8 (Tues) Daily Telegraph and Morning Post (London), p. 13 (Letters to the Editor).

Aurora Curiosities

Sir--Like Mr. Sirlé A. Buckley I was surprised that no mention has been made of the extraordinarily brilliant star we saw during the display of the Northern Lights.

We face north. At 7.30, on going upstairs to look round our almost uninterrupted horizon, there shone to our northeast what might have been an enormous shield of ~~xx~~ brass, lighted up by a searchlight.

Before another minute passed it went out. Next day a friend who called asked us if we had seen the star. It is to be wished that next time the Northern Lights appear the B.N.C. would announce the fact.--Yours truly, / B. BOND / Ringwood, Hants, Feb. 5.

(Letters confirming a correspondent's account of "glowing spheres" accompanying the recent display of the "Northern Lights" have been sent by L.F. Grove, B.Sc., and Alec H. Crocker, B.Sc., A.G. Brown and R.C. Mitchard, from Andover, Hants, Swindon and Bath respectively.)
Wed. Feb. 9, p. 13 Aurora Curiosities

Letters confirming a ~~xxx~~ correspondent's account of "glowing spheres" accompanying the recent display of the "Northern Lights" have been sent by A.P. Larkham and K.J. Randall, Ringwood, Hants. Other letters on the "Northern Lights" from W.E. Wilmer, Littlemore, Oxford; Norman Fawkes, Monkseaton; H.J. Ross Bell, Ewell, Surrey; E. Doreen Iale (?), Haslemere; Mrs. R.I. Iremonger, Bristol; Miss F.M. Marwood, Blackburn, Lanes; and John Shelley, Salisbury, are acknowledged with thanks.
Fri. Feb. 11, p. 13 Aurora "Phenomena"

I think I can offer an explanation of the exceedingly brilliant star seen on the night of the aurora borealis by readers at Winchester Ringwood and other places in this vicinity. I happen to be chairman of the RAF Association at Salisbury, and at our meeting last Monday last I was informed that on the night in question the RAF at Boscombe Down were experimenting with parachute calcium flares. I gather that, provided there is little or no wind, the parachute will suspend the flare for a considerable time. I saw the flare on the night of the aurora, but did not associate it with that phenomenon.--CHARLES MOUNT-FORD, 4, Bourne-Avenue, Salisbury.

1942 February 26 (Th morn) Los Angeles Times, ppl. A. (card 1)

ARMY SAYS AIR ALARM REAL / Roaring Guns Mark Blackout / Identity of Aircraft Veiled in Mystery; No Bombs Dropped and No Enemy Craft Hit; Civilians Report Seeing Planes and Balloon

Overshadowing a nation-wide maelstrom of rumors and conflicting reports, the Army's Western Defense Command yesterday insisted that Los Angeles' early morning blackout and anti-aircraft action were the result of unidentified aircraft sighted over the beach area.

In two official statements, issued while Secretary of the Navy Knox in Washington was attributing the activity to a false alarm and "jittery nerves," the command in San Francisco confirmed and reconfirmed the presence over the Southland of unidentified planes.

Relayed by the Southern California sector office in Pasadena, the second statement read:

"The aircraft which caused the blackout in the Los Angeles area for several hours this a.m. have not been identified."

Insistence from official quarters that the alarm was real came as hundreds of thousands of citizens who heard and saw the activity spread countless varying stories of ~~xxx~~ the episode.

The spectacular anti-aircraft barrage came after the 4th Interceptor Command ordered the blackout when strange craft were reported over the coast line.

Powerful searchlights from countless stations stabbed the sky with brilliant probing fingers while anti-aircraft batteries dotted the heavens with beautiful, if sinister, orange bursts of shrapnel.
CITY BLACKED OUT FOR HOURS

The city was blacked out from 2:25 to 7:21 a.m. after an earlier yellow alert at 7:18 p.m. was called off at 10:23 p.m. The blackout was in effect from here to the Mexican border and inland to the San Joaquin Valley.

No bombs were dropped and no airplanes shot down and, miraculously in view of the tons of missiles hurled aloft, only two persons were reported wounded by falling shell fragments.

Countless thousands of Southland residents, many of whom were late to work because of the traffic tie-up during the blackout, rubbed their eyes sleepily yesterday as they agreed that, regardless of the question of how "real" the air-raid alarm may have been, it was a "great show" and "well worth losing a few hours' sleep."

COAST STAYS ON ALERT

The Army's Western Defense Command in San Francisco issued a non-committal statement to the effect that there was a blackout and shooting, and added that no bombs were dropped and no planes were shot down.

The text of the official announcement read:

"Cities in the Los Angeles area were blacked out at 2:25 a.m. today on orders from the 4th Interceptor Command when unidentified aircraft were reported in the area.

"Although reports were conflicting and every effort is being made to ascertain the facts, it is clear that no bombs were dropped and no planes were shot down.

"There was a considerable amount of anti-aircraft firing. The all-clear signal came at 7:21 a.m."

The announcement brought no relaxation of the Pacific Coast's vigilance in the wake of an Axis submarine's shelling of a Santa Barbara County oil field Monday night.

ROUNDUP OF ENEMY ALIENS PRESSED

While military aircraft patrolled the land and sea approaches to this strategic area, authorities pressed their roundup of enemy aliens and other persons whose activities during the emergency period were questionable.

Thirty persons, 20 of whom were Japanese, were arrested during the night and morning.

Police and Sheriff's deputies who rounded up the Japanese /p.A/ acted on complaints by air-raid wardens and citizens that some of the Nipponese were either attempting to signal with flares or other means, or refused to cooperate in making the blackout effective. Some were turned over to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, others were fined, still others were released to await court hearings on their accusations.

Authorities reported the blackout generally successful and promptly inaugurated after the warnings were issued. The 10,000 air-raid wardens in the Los Angeles area responded to the emergency almost to a man, although it was the first time they had been called out under actual air-raid conditions.

Deputy Police Chief Ross R. McDonald, in charge of the department's war activities, credited the wardens with helping to prevent countless accidents in traffic during the blackouts.

The blackout was not without its casualties, however. A State Guardsman died of a heart attack while driving an ammunition truck, heart failure also accounted for the death of an air-raid warden on duty, a woman was killed in a car-truck collision in Arcadia, an air-raid warden chasing a suspicious character he thought might be a Jap fell and broke an ankle. A Long Beach policeman was killed in a traffic crash en route to duty.

CIVIC CENTER GUARDED

Sheriff's deputies guarded Civic Center buildings with new machine guns of tremendous fire power throughout the night.

Various observers claimed they saw high flying planes numbering one to hundreds during the terrific clamor of the anti-aircraft barrage. Some thought the objectives of the busy gunners was a dirigible, a balloon or possible a drifting barrage balloon.

Other observers, equipped with powerful night glasses, asserted they were ~~xxx~~ unable to see a single aircraft or other object in the sky.

LIVES SAVED

In one instance, the attraction of the aerial display of gunnery paled the night sky possibly saved the lives of two persons.

As the clangor of the anti-aircraft barrage got under way Mrs. Blanche Sedgewick and her niece, Josie Duffy, 14, left their bed in a rear room of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh G. Landis, 1738 W. 43rd Place to watch the firing.

From high in the sky an unexploded shell whistled down onto the concrete apron in front of the Landis garage. The glass in the rear windows was shattered and shell fragments screeched into the dwelling.

One jagged fragment tore through the bedroom wall and ripped the bed where the woman and girl had been reposing.

Other dwellings in the immediate vicinity were pocked by shell splinters.

Whether American interceptor planes took off during the barrage to hunt the unidentified aircraft could not be established.

REPORTS CONFLICT

One official source which declined to be quoted directly said American planes quickly went into action. Another said no United States Army planes took off because of the danger from anti-aircraft fire.

Still another source expressed the opinion that if the unidentified planes were hostile they might have flown from a carrier so far at sea they had no accommodations for bombs in addition to capacity fuel loads, and therefore were on reconnaissance. This, it was said, would explain why no bombs were dropped.

From Akron, O., home of American lighter-than-air experts, came opinions that the Japanese would not employ blimps because they could not obtain fireproof helium.

For the first time in their lives, Southland aircraft workers labored behind blacked-out factory windows while anti-aircraft guns on the roofs hammered projectiles into the sky at intervals.

COAST BATTERIES FIRE

Much of the firing appeared to come from the vicinity of aircraft plants along the coastal area of Santa Monica, Inglewood, Southwest Los Angeles and Long Beach. Batteries in the San Fernando valley aircraft production area remained silently on the alert.

From Santa Barbara, area of the submarine attack Monday night, Dist. Atty. Percy Heckendorf said he would appeal to Lieut. Gen. John L. DeWitt, commanding officer of the Western Defense Command, to make Santa Barbara County a restricted area for enemy nationals and American-born Japanese as well.

"There is convincing proof," Heckendorf asserted, "that there were shore signals flashed to the enemy." Heckendorf said the people would hold Gen. DeWitt responsible if he failed to act.

Army ordnance officers meanwhile were studying more than 200 pounds of shell fragments from missiles fired by the submarine which caused only $500 damage in the Elwood oil field near Santa Barbara.

1942 February 26 (Th) Los Angeles Times, p. (card 1)

Reporter Reacts Like One Sitting on Volcano / Police With Hallucinations See 150 to 200 Planes in W Sky, but Saner Ones Only Seven / BY RAY ZEMAN

Sitting on the lid of a bubbling volcano is just like awakening during an enemy air raid.

"You wonder in Inglewood whether bombs will fall on the airplane plants or--and here a great big lump comes into your throat--in that pretty yard beside your bedroom window.

The "voooo ooooh" of the sirens first sounded like "just another ambulance." My wife and I wondered whether to go back to sleep.

SEE ANSWER IN SKY

Instead we went to an open window and saw the answer. There would be no sleeping.

We were visiting at the home of her father, Police Judge Frank D. Parent.

"Should we take the baby down to the basement?" she asked me. I thought of running to cyclone cellars in Nebraska, and it sounded like a good idea.

Then I thought of The Times. This might be the biggest story in years. And it might center--that lump popped up again--right here on the aircraft factories.

GET QUICK START

~~xxx~~ Quick conversation, snap judgments and we were started.

The judge guaranteed to watch our son. We didn't turn on any lights. We tripped over shoes in the closet. We couldn't find the right clothes. We stood by an open window instead of lying flat on an interior floor.

Out of all this confusion, we were on our way by foot, to the Inglewood City Hall a few blocks away. There was no chance of backing an automobile uphill in the dark from a strange garage, let alone violating the rules by driving it.

FALLS IN DARK
We walked and fell off curbs in the dark. We noticed two police officers. They were staring at the long fingers of light stabbing the sky.

"Have you seen any planes?" we asked. "Plenty. They must be 25,000 or 30,000 feet high, out of range of the ack-ack guns," one replied.

"How many planes?" we continued. "Oh, 150 or 200, I guess," another officer answered. "They came in great dark clouds. We haven't heard any bombs dropped, though."

CONVERGING BEAMS
The officers were on a hill overlooking a huge area. The converging beams of perhaps 40 giant searchlights would have stunned Cecil B. DeMille in his wildest dreams of motion-picture grandeur.

We shuffled along. Market and Commercial Sts.--Inglewood's principal business thoroughfares--were inky black. A belch from anti-aircraft batteries broke the silence. The crisscrossed beams were crawling southward.

MAYBE ONLY NINE
The enemy planes were moving toward Palos Verdes. We held hands at more curbs and reached the Police and Fire Stations.

Police officers greeted us like old friends. My wife, before newspaper days in New York, was a Times correspondent in Inglewood and other Centinela Valley cities. They remembered her.

"Two hundred planes?" they asked us. "Why those men had hallucinations. There were seven planes, maybe nine."

With masculine shrewdness they pointed to the jail patron for verification. "Seven," she said. "I counted them."

It was a big day at headquarters. Extra shifts of police and firemen were on duty. Practically every other street block in the downtown area had two officers on the sidewalk. Standing by. Preventing robbery by black-out vandals. Waiting. Waiting for that bomb.

There was another roar. Another. Another. The officers told where the ack-ack guns were hidden that sent this death into the air. "Military secret, though," they warned. "Don't print that."

Sheet lightning poured in the general direction of Redondo Beach. BRILLIANT FLARE

"What's that?" we asked. The brilliant flare brightened the wall here, many miles from the guns. "Must be the Coast Guard," guessed one officer. "After a submarine, I suppose."

"Hope, it's just some bigger shells," insisted another. My wife shivered. She had been unable to find her hat in the dark. A wind was whistling.

There was a lull. The lights went dead. All was black again. "Kill that cigarette," officers called to each other. They recalled what they had seen. One believed he saw American ships take off and engage in several dogfights with the invaders.

CONFUSED STOREIES
Others denied this. Confusion punctuated their stories. Police and fire cars stood ready to dash to trouble. We stood ready to ride along.

The clock ticked on. The show went on for another performance as lights pierced the skies at Los Angeles Harbor and Long Beach. A ring of shells burst around the point marked by the beams. Then all was quiet.

We called the Times from a pay phone booth in a strangely darkened office building. The telephone company's long distance operator wanted to know the number from which we were calling.

CAN'T SEE NUMBER
"It's dark in here. Can't see the number on this phone. Have no idea where I am."

There was a burst of a shell. The operator must have interpreted that as a number. The call was put through. We went to bed around 4:45 a.m. We had wild dreams. At 7 a.m. we heard bugle calls in an Army camp a few hundred yards away.

Overhead were endless American planes. Outside was a pretty lawn. Sunlight was pouring on. We gave the baby his orange juice and hugged him. Revell was spelling a new day.

LOWER CALIFORNIA AIR BASE ALLEGED.
WASHINGTON, Feb. 25. (UP) Chairman Robert R. Reynolds (D.) N.C. of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, today said that if the planes reported over Los Angeles were Japanese they "no doubt" were based in the Lower California Peninsula.

He also said in a Senate speech that the Gulf of California would afford an excellent location for "sheltering of enemy ships" and that the sparsely inhabited peninsula could be utilized for establishment.

1942 February 27 (Fri) Los Angeles Times, p. 1, 5. (card 1)

Stimson Says 15 Planes Over City / Secretary of War Declares Craft Flown by Enemy Agents Over Los Angeles Area May Have Been From Commercial Sources

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26. (AP)--An Army report that as many as 15 planes may have been operated by "enemy agents" over the Los Angeles area, where an air-raid alarm early yesterday sent anti-aircraft guns into action, was made public today by Secretary of War Stimson.

Coming a day after Secretary Know had told reporters that Navy Department information indicated the episode was "a false alarm," the Army report said the unidentified craft may have been commercial planes flown over the area by enemy agents to spread alarm, disclose anti-aircraft gun positions and test the effectiveness of blackouts. NO BOMBS DROPPED

No bombs were dropped, there were no casualties among American forces, no planes were shot down and no American Army or Navy planes were in action, Stimson said.

The Secretary announced that the report came to him from Gen. George C. Marshall, Army Chief-of-Staff, and apparently was based on information relayed by West Coast Army officials.

The conclusion that the planes may have been obtained from commercial sources, he said, was based on the varying speeds of the planes and the fact that no bombs were dropped.

"As many as 15 planes may have been involved," said the report, "flying at various speeds, from what is officially reported as being 'very slow' to as much as 200 miles an hour, and at an elevation of from 9000 to 18,000 feet."

FIRE 1430 ROUNDS
Elements of the 37th Coast Artillery Brigade, composed of anti-aircraft forces, fired 1430 rounds of ammunition between 3:12 and 4:14 a.m. P.W.T. during yesterday's alarm, Stimson said.

The Secretary said the only comment he wanted to add to the report was that "perhaps it is better to be too alert than not alert enough. At any rate, they were alert there."

Stimson said the Army's investigation of the incident is continuing. REPORT ON RAID

A stenographic report of the memorandum read by Stimson said: "From details available at this hour:

"1.--Unidentified airplanes, ~~with~~ other than American Army or Navy planes were probably over Los Angeles and were fired on by elements of the 37th Coast Artillery Brigade (that is, anti-aircraft gun) between 3:12 and 4:14 a.m. These units expended 1430 rounds of ammunition.

"2.--As many as 15 airplanes may have been involved, flying at various speeds, from what is officially reported as being 'very slow' to as much as 200 miles /p.5/ per hour, and at an elevation of from 9000 to 18,000 feet.

"3.--No bombs were dropped.

"4.--No casualties among our troops.

"5.--No planes were shot down.

"6.--No American Army or Navy planes were in action.

"Investigation continuing. It seems reasonable to conclude that if unidentified airplanes were involved, they may be some from commercial sources, operated by enemy agents for the purpose of spreading alarm, disclosing location of anti-aircraft positions, or the effectiveness of blackouts. Such conclusion is supported by varying speed of operation, and the fact that no bombs were dropped."

THEY WERE ALERT!

Stimson added: "The only comment I, myself, have to make is perhaps that it is better to be too alert than not alert enough. At any rate, they were alert there."

To a reporter's question, "Is that a report from the West Coast?" Stimson replied:

"It came to me from the Chief of Staff, and it is evidently a report from out there."

1942 February 28 (Sat) Los Angeles Times, pt. II p. 4. (card 1)

Letters
Appreciation (TELEGRAM)

AIR RAID WARDENS OF WALNUT PARK DISTRICT SINCERELY APPRECIATE YOUR EDITORIAL "INFORMATION PLEASE" HOPE YOU WILL CONTINUE TO PRESS ISSUE TO REESTABLISH CONFIDENCE IN CIVILIAN DEFENSE EFFORT
W R LARGE PRECINCT WARDEN / C S BREFKA WARDEN

Raid
I never knew how many important citizens we had until last night when serving as air-raid warden.

Despite the fact that we have heard over the radio, read in the papers and through circulars which wardens distributed throughout the city that in case of an air raid to "keep off the street," with dawn many left their homes and then our troubles began. Few accepted our explanation that we were following orders in stopping traffic, and with few exceptions all were imbued with their importance which they attempted to verify through some printed card bearing their signature. In short, all wanted to become a law unto themselves. To hell with the other man!

To the public I am taking this means of again advising it that daylight dawn not mean a raid has ceased, to obey the law and keep off the street until the all-clear-siren is sounded, day or night.

To my fellow wardens, I would suggest that in the future if a driver refuses to stop, to get his number and report him to the police. He will be punished. The law is back of you! LEON RAINES, Los Angeles.

What's Wrong?

Can you tell me what's wrong with the military in Southern California? All day long we have fast, sleek planes overhead, but when the Japs come over not one of them leaves their hangars. Can't our planes fly as fast and as high, and why can't our pilots pull alongside these visitors and speak to them in a language that they will understand? I saw that if we can't hit them with anti-aircraft that our pilots should take a crack at them, and if they can't down them at least trail them to their hideout--at least I would identify them. EK.O.L. SWIDER, / North Hollywood.

'No Real Air Raid'

Ordinarily Secretary Knox and I do not see eye to eye, but this time he was right. There was no real air raid over the South Bay District early Wednesday morning. This writer has been a deep sea sailor through the years and knows his stars. It was clear aloft and not a speck of an airship in sight. across Besides, Tuesday it was being whispered around the bar (not sand bar) that an order had come down from San Francisco for a local blackout. Folks here got busy buying blackout shades. / HUGH GREY, Redondo Beach.

Fireball!

Wednesday morning a friend told me that he had witnessed the first "dogfight" between airplanes over America. Later it turned out that what he had seen was a dogless dogfight, for no enemy airplanes had been "seen or even heard, and that what looked like a balloon had been spotted by searchlights and fired upon. The photograph in Thursday's Times shows the alleged balloon clearly, illuminated by nine converging searchlight beams, and with half a dozen blobs of light from bursting anti-aircraft shells near it. This "balloon" has a nearly hemispherical top, and possibly a similar base. That it was not a balloon seems probable because the escape of no balloon has been reported, as well as because it failed to collapse under intense and apparently accurate shellfire. What, then, was it?

The answer is that it was probably an approximately globular cloud of exceptional character. There is a well known, though rare, meteorological phenomenon known as a fireball. Occasionally such a luminous ball drops out of a thunder cloud and drifts away, looking like an incandescent balloon. The astonishing features about a fireball are two, first its almost perfect sphericity, and second, its incandescence. / HALBERT P. GILLETTE, / San Marino.

Disappointment

Secretary Frank Knox, / U.S. Navy, / Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Secretary:

I wish to convey to you my disappointment on reading your remarks concerning the alertness of our Army.

We are proud of the "jittery nerves" of the Fourth Interceptor Command which prompted them to fire at unidentified planes and ask questions, if any are needed, later.

Incidentally, have not the Army and Navy yet learned to work together? Latest information attributed to Secretary Stimson reports that 15 enemy planes flew over Los Angeles. FRED W. SWITZER, / Los Angeles.

A New One!

May I congratulate you upon your splendid editorial entitled "Information Please" regarding our recent supposed enemy air raid and ~~his~~ blackout?

An announcement has just come over the radio that Secretary Stimson admits that there were unidentified planes over the Los Angeles area Tuesday night.

If this is true Secretary Knox's inference that our Army wasted all that ammunition because of "jittery nerves" was most unwise and unfortunate and might have a harmful effect upon the co-operation of the people of this area. Secretary Knox implied that this alarm was a "wolf, wolf" affair.

Perhaps we should have a Secretary of the Navy who would keep himself better informed as to the true condition of our West Coast and whose comments would be constructive and not destructive especially when speaking to the gentlemen of the press. JANE E. TOWAR, / Pasadena.

1942 March 3 (Tues) Los Angeles Times, pp. 1,6

(card)

Raiders Believed Planes Off Subs / Army Confirms Fact Three to Five Enemy Craft Flew Over Los Angeles on Feb. 25; Interceptors Waited for Mass Assault / BY KYLE PALMER / Times Staff Representative

WASHINGTON, March 2.--From three to five light enemy scouting planes--presumably launched from plane-carrying Japanese submarines operating in Southern California waters--are believed to have made reconnaissance flights over Los Angeles and nearby beach communities in the early-morning hours of Wednesday, Feb. 25.

Listening devices operated by the Army clearly detected the approach of a small number of unidentified planes.

Interceptor planes, their motors running, their crews at their posts, waited a signal to go aloft.

FEARED HEAVY RAID

Orders to repel the sky marauders were withheld pending a possible attack in force--which did not come.

That today represented in brief the War Department's tentative conclusions about the most controversial war episode that has occurred since Pearl Harbor.

Supplying the first comprehensive report on the mystery air raid alarm that caused the anti-aircraft defense of Los Angeles to roar into action for more than two hours Maj. Gen. Mark Clark attached to the Army's general staff, officially confirmed the fact that enemy planes were actually overhead during the alarm.

JAP PROBLEM DEBATED

His explanation of what the Army now believes took place during the dramatic episode, which ended with no bombs dropped and no planes downed, was given to a special defense committee of West Coast senators and representatives.

All phases of Pacific Coast defense problems--defensive and offensive, including disposition to be made of Japanese residents in strategic areas--were discussed.

Present at the conference was Secretary of the Navy Knox, who was closely questioned regarding his own "false alarm" version of the raid alarm.

ARMY'S PROBLEM

Knox did not satisfy his questioners on this point, nor did he disclose the source of the information--if any--upon which he based the remark.

Knox took the position that the air defense operation is the Army job and that the Army should have the last word on what actually transpired.

Asked also to explain in the committee what was meant in his statement last week that West Coast defense industries are to be moved "piecemeal" to interior points, Knox asserted that he had been "misquoted."

Or at least misunderstood.

He said he had intended to convey the thought that vital industrial units should be decentralized with provisions for locating different operations of the same plant at distances separate from each other sufficient to prevent any large-scale destruction from sabotage or air attack.

Knox assured the Senators and House members from California, Oregon and Washington that--so far as he knows--the government has no active plans for moving established industries from their present locations.

Discussing the Japanese submarine shelling of the Elwood oil field near Goleta, Knox asserted that the defense of this area as well as other points along the coast is the Army's responsibility. He told committee members that the Elwood field was one of the few stretches of the coast not adequately defended at the time of the shelling.

The fact that the enemy submarine attack at the time and the place the committee was informed, demonstrates the effectiveness of Japanese espionage operations on the Pacific Coast.

SABOTAGE DISCUSSED

The comment opened up the general question of the danger of fifth column work and sabotage by American-born and alien Japanese and led to assurance from Army representatives that large numbers of both aliens and Japanese with citizenship status will be moved within a few days from defense areas near the coast.

Many of the evacuees will be moved to new homes in communities to be constructed by the government and to be under supervision of the Army. The largest of such communities is expected to have a total population of approximately 40,000.

Thousands of others whose services may be accepted for special wartime activities will be allowed to remain in a secondary zone paralleling the first zone and extending far inland. Curfew regulations and other restrictions may be imposed in both zones.

Both Secretary Knox and Gen. Clark expressed strong conviction that recent changes in Army-Navy relations have brought about complete unification of purpose and effort between the two military branches. In some commands--notably in the Western Defense Command--it was said the Army and Navy occupy the same offices and operate under a coordination never heretofore even attempted.

Reverting to the Los Angeles air-raid alarm, Gen. Clark said the Army's listening devices were fully manned and on the alert when the strange aircraft approached. At all times during the alarm, he said, the Army knew that only a small force was in the air.

Had the detecting instruments shown the approach of a larger force our own air defenders would have immediately gone into action.

SMALL CRAFT USED

Such facts as the authorities have been able to assemble, Gen.

Clark indicated, show that the strange craft were of light construction such as might be carried for quick assembly in a large submarine--that not more than five were in the air at any time and that these probably did come from Japanese submarines lurking near the coast.

American naval and military experts have long known that the Japanese possessed a score or more of long-range, plane-carrying submarines. Whether this knowledge was the sole reason for assuming the Los Angeles sky raiders were launched from submarines, or the Army has more definite information, was not disclosed.

It is understood that the Army and Navy will issue a joint statement on the subject during the week.

1942 March 4 (Wed) Los Angeles Times, part II, p. 4 (eds).

OUR AIR RAID CONTINUES TO REMAIN A MYSTERY

The latest official theory advanced to account for the mysterious Los Angeles air raiders at whom we fired more than 4000 shells a week ago this morning is that they were planes released from Jap submarines lurking off the coast. This replaces the earlier Army theory that the very enemy piloted reconnaissance craft from commercial fields in this hemisphere and (perhaps) that of Navy Secretary Knox that they were figments of someone's fevered imagination.

While more satisfactory in some respects than either of the preceding hypotheses, this new one does not seem to be entirely hole-proof, either. So far as known, no submarine has yet been built to carry more than one plane. So, if this explanation is the correct one there must have been as many subs offshore as there were planes overhead. Secretary of War Stimson and Army Chief of Staff Marshall estimated the number of the latter at 15, proponents of the submarine theory at from three to five.

At the very least, then, there must have been at least three and probably more of the oversize plane-carrying submarines here. Presumably the one which appeared off Goleta the night of Monday, Feb. 23 was one of them. But if so, what have they been doing for the past week? One is reported to have attacked a tanker south of San Francisco.

co Saturday night, but to have been driven off by the latter's deck gun. This is the first known instance in the war when an American merchantman has been able to so defend herself. Theact authorizing commercial ships to carry guns was signed by the President Nov. 18, but more than thirty of our ships have since been sunk without benefit of arms--presumably because of the scarcity of guns and the time required to mount them.

In any case, the San Francisco incident, the air raid incident and the Goleta incident all put together are a pretty small crop for a fleet of superbugs in so rich a hunting field as California's coastal waters over a period of more than a week. Of course they may be here for the climate, but it does not seem likely.

1944 December 14 (Th) New York Times, p. 6

Floating Mystery Ball Is New Nazi Air Weapon

SUPREME HEADQUARTERS, Allied Expeditionary Force, Dec. 13--A new German weapon has made its appearance on the Western air front, it was disclosed today.

Airmen of the American Air Force report that they are encountering silver colored spheres in the air over German territory. Sometimes they are semi-translucent.

SUPREME HEADQUARTERS, Dec. 13 (Reuter)--The Germans have produced a "secret" weapon in keeping with the Christmas season.

The new device, apparently an air defense weapon, resembles the huge glass balls that adorn Christmas trees.

There was no information available as to what holds them up like stars in the sky, what is in them, or what their purpose is supposed to be.

1944 December 15 (Fri) New York Times, p. 13c

B-29's Over Japan / By HANSON W. BALDWIN. / ... A Guess About Spheres

The "silver-colored spheres" that our airmen have reported encountering in the skies above Germany may be new types of floating "windows" intended to confuse the bombing aim of our electronic "magic eye." During the winter months our bombers, more often than not, have been bombing "blind" through overcasts. The target is picked up by radar and the bombs dropped by aid of this "magic eye."

In the past, ground radar, which is used to pick up approaching bombers (even though they be unseen) and to control anti-aircraft fire, frequently has been confused by the dropping of "windows." "Windows" consist of thousands of little strips of tinfoil. As they flutter to the earth, these strips often appear on the radar screen as hundreds of blobs, and it is sometimes impossible to identify the raiding planes.

The new "silver spheres" might represent--but this is only an "educated guess," and there is no certainty that they are--the reverse of this idea. Such spheres, drifting about in the sky, might interfere with and confuse the radar in the attacking planes, thus making "blind" bombing impossible, or far more inaccurate than it normally is.

Th Dec. 21, p. 5f

BERLIN'S DEVICE FUTILE / Silver Spheres Above City Have No Effect, Capital Says. / Special to the New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20--No "detectable effects" have been noted from the mysterious "silver balls" that American pilots recently reported, were floating over Berlin, an official Army Air Force spokesman said today.

The objects were described as silver, or silver-colored, but the Army Air Force does not know whether they are metal, the spokesman said. He added that the descriptions had been contained in newspaper reports and that headquarters here had no reports from the theatre.

1945 January 2 (Tues) New York Times, pp. 1 & 4.

Balls of Fire Stalk U.S. Fighters in Night Assaults Over Germany / By the Associated Press.

AMERICAN NIGHT FIGHTER BASE, France, Jan. 1--The Germans have thrown something new into the night skies over Germany--the weird, mysterious "foo-fighter," balls of fire that race alongside the wings of American Beaufighters flying intruder missions over the Reich.

American pilots have been encountering the eerie "foo-fighter" for more than a month in their night flights. No one apparently knows exactly what this sky weapon is.

The balls of fire appear suddenly and accompany the planes for miles. They appear to be radio-controlled from the ground and keep up with planes flying 300 miles an hour, intelligence reports reveal.

"There are three kinds of these lights we call 'foo-fighters,'" Lieutenant Donald Meiers of Chicago said. "One is red balls of fire which appear off our wing tips and fly along with us; the second is a vertical row of three balls of fire which fly in front of us and the third is a group of about fifteen lights which appear off in the distance--like a Christmas tree up in the air--and flicker on and off."

The pilots of the night-fighter squadron--in operation since September, 1943--find these fiery things the weirdest thing that they have yet encountered. They are convinced that the "foo-fighter" is designed to be a psychological as well as a military weapon, although it is not in the nature of the fireballs to attack planes.

"A 'foo-fighter' picked me up recently at 700 feet and chased me 320 miles down the Rhine Valley," Lieutenant Meiers said. "I turned to starboard and two balls of fire turned with me. I turned to the port side and they turned with me. We were going 260 miles an hour and the balls were keeping right up with us."

"On another occasion when a 'foo-fighter' picked us up, I dove at 360 miles per hour. It kept right off our wing tip for a while and then zoomed up into the sky."

"When I first saw the things off my wing tips, I had the horrible thought that a German on the ground was ready to press a button and explode them. But they don't explode or attack us. They just seem to follow us like will-o'-the-wisps."

[An American Press report from Paris on December 13 said that the Germans had thrown silvery balls into the air against day raiders. Pilots then reported that they had seen these objects, both individually and in clusters, during forays over Germany.]

Lieutenant Wallace Gould of Silver Creek, N.Y., said that the lights had followed his wing tips for a while and then in a few seconds, zoomed 20,000 feet into the air out of sight. Lieutenant Edward Schleiter of Oshkosh, Wis., said that he had seen the "foo-fighters" on two occasions and it "looked like shooting stars." In his first experience with them, Lieutenant Gould said, "I thought it was some new form of jet-propulsion plane after us. But we were very close to them and none of us saw any structure on the fireballs."

1945 June 13 (Wed) Dallas Morning News, p. 12-1

Etex Boys Explain How Balls of Fire Flew on Buzzards

MARSHALL, Texas, June 12.--The mystery of who tied oil-saturated rags to buzzards and set them afire near Linden, Cass County, has been solved, it was announced Tuesday.

Sheriff V.L. Hawkins of Cass County said three boys who live near Linden were responsible. The weird blazes were seen last Thursday night. The boys climbed a forestry tower, caught the buzzards and set fire to the rags they had tied to them," Sheriff Hawkins said. The Sheriff's investigation began the next morning when three women reported they had seen strange balls of fire in the sky the night before.

June 6 '45 p. 1 Jap. balloons shot down near Spokane (Spok. Chron 6/5)

1946

1946 May 4 (Sat) Morgon Tidningen, p. 1.

Does a mysterious light betoken clearer May weather?

A mysterious white shining light over the Stockholm horizon occasioned a lively inquiry on Friday evening both in the newspaper's telephone exchange and with the fire brigade. Some observers also heard reports [i.e., claps, peals], but ~~fixes~~ they actually arose from some blasting ~~which~~ work. (As far as the light is concerned), it is thought at the Saltsjobad Observatory that it probably could be some kind of aurora. People also observed the shining light [out there] in a northwesterly direction. It is believed that a changeover to clearer weather, which is now signalled has some connection with this celestial phenomenon.

1946 May 25 (Sat) Morgon Tidningen, last p.

(Mystery in the sky in Skåne:)/ "Wingless, cigar-shaped body" amazes Landskrona inhabitants / LANDSKRONA, Fri. (TT).

A flying object was observed, according to the Landskrona-Posten, at 2.20 o'clock on Friday in widely separated places in Landskrona. It was described by two nightwatchmen as a fireball with a tail, while a repairman, located 35 meters high, saw it drawn against the sky as a wingless, cigar-shaped body of the dimensions of a small airplane, which at regular intervals spurted bunches of sparks from its tail. All the observers reported that the body flew at about 100 meters altitude at an ordinary airplane's speed and in a southwesterly direction.

1946 May 26 (Tues) Morgon Tidningen, p. 12.

Mysterious sky appearance also in Stockholm.

It is not only in Landskrona and Gavle that fireballs and lighted without wings are seen. Also from Karlskrona and Hålsjöberg are similar observations reported, and many persons in the Stockholm area stated to the MT that they saw the same phenomenon in Huddinge and Hagalund.

No one really knows what is going on. One guess is of experiments with secret weapons, but aviation experts think that in such a case it is curious that no sound is reported in connection with the observations--long-range bombing practice gives off noise.

1946 May 29 (Wed) Morgon Tidningen, p. 7.

The Danes see a mysterious fireball too. / COPENHAGEN, Tuesday (AP)/

The same night that people in Landskrona saw a flying object which flew toward the southwest at about 100 m. altitude, a border guard in Denmark's southern-lying parish, Rudbøl, at Tønder, made a similar discovery.

At 3 o'clock at night the guard saw a bright light, followed by a tail, which very rapidly sailed on a path from east to west, reports the Berlingske Aftenavis.

1946 June 1 (Sat) Morgon Tidningen, p. 11.

A "silver cigar" flies as rapidly as a fighter plane. / KATRINEHOLM, Friday (MT)

It seems as if the mysterious flier, which was observed in Österrike at the beginning of this week, was not altogether an illusion. Yesterday the same thing was reported in fact in Katrineholm. An object which can be compared most closely to a silver-glistening rocket, in the shape of a giant cigar, was [discovered] in the east on the horizon. The time was then 11.43, right in the morning.

The "ghost airplane" had no hint of wings, but on the other hand some thought that it had the semblance of a stabilizer or the like. It travelled very rapidly through the air and many observers pointed out that not even the fastest fighter plane would be able to keep pace. A light rumble (drone) was heard, near the body after it had made a turn toward the west, in a diving continued trip toward the south. The size of the mysterious monster did not agree with that of the one seen at *Närke, neither was the altitude the same. [As to appearance it came long as an ordinary training plane and went at 300 meters altitude. The Skavsta air fleet out from Nyköping had none of its airplanes up at the right time in the immediate vicinity of Katrineholm. On an airplane seen from the side in broad daylight no wings are visible. Therefore it could be assumed that it was an ordinary airplane that the Katrineholmers saw.

In this connection it can still be mentioned that one of the Katrineholm witnesses saw the object not only from the side but also front to back. The sun's rays in this case were not at their worst sharpness, therefore one with reason can uphold it as all [as] very mysterious.

1946 June 13 (Th) Morgon Tidningen, p. 5.

Sky phenomenon in Eskilstuna. A sky phenomenon of the same sort as was observed yesterday has occurred over Eskilstuna. The observation is reported by an engineer who flies daily and must be thought of as a reliable observer.

-I had just put out [the light] and stood by my window when in the half-darkness I was able to see something come out of a cloud, related the engineer. The bomb, if it really was such, passed west of the city in a northward direction. It seemed as if it was on a descending course at close to a 30-degree angle--on this matter I can naturally not be completely sure--and in such a case ought to have fallen down some[where] in the area, probably going out north over Hugelsta. It could not have been any of our new jet planes, which have a continuous exhaust and thereby [look] like true rockets. The later V-weapons did the same, but the first had intermittent [exhaust].

Svenska Dagbladet, June 12, p. 3. Mysterious "bomb" over Eskilstuna. ESKILTUNA, Tuesday (SvD's corr.) A silver-glistening thing was observed on Whitesund over Eskilstuna. The observer was made by an engineer (pilot?) who flies daily.

He described what he saw as a rocket with intermittent exhaust. He noticed three or four clear "exhaustings" or explosions. The "bomb," if it really was such, passed west of the city in a northward direction. It seemed as if it was descending... somewhere in the area. 1946 June 22 (Sat) Morgon Tidningen, p. 6.

Flaming red meteor in southern Finland. At 22:20 o'clock on Thursday evening a strange luminous phenomenon in the sky. It was also obvious that a meteor was concerned. The luminosity, which was plainly perceptible against the light summer evening, moved slowly forward in a direction from south to north and flamed red. According to the observers' opinion the meteor ought to have fallen down somewhere in the Pellinge area of Nylands island.

1946 July 2 (Tues) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

Mysterious plane over Gävle. / Long gray object disappears in smoke cloud.

GÄVLE, Monday (SvD's corr.) A strange sight in the heavens was seen in Gävle on Sunday evening just before 8 o'clock. Several persons observed an object in the sky which likely might have been a rocket-bomb or something similar.

It went across over the city in an east to west direction at an altitude which witnesses estimated might be 8,000-10,000 meters, but it was plainly seen against the clear evening sky. The projectile, of whatever kind it may have been, could be made out clearly as an elongated gray body with a bright light in the stern end. It disappeared after several moments [as if] in a smoke cloud. 1946 July 10 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

Meteor or radio bomb. A mysterious phenomenon of the heavens--a meteor or a radio-directed projectile--was seen at midday Tuesday over the east coast. It was a brightly shining ball with a long tail, which was seen in the Stockholm area and up in Medelpad.

In the Stockholm area the ball was observed around 14.30 o'clock. The ball, which shone with an intensely white light, was around 1/3 the moon's diameter and the tail 10-12 moon diameters long. The projectile moved in a direction from west to east. Somewhat later was seen a similar ball in various places in Medelpad, and it is not impossible that it [belonged to] the same phenomenon. The ball, which resembled "a comet with a blue-white trail after it," had an easterly course. Also, it was observed from Lv 5 [?], where the projectile was seen to rush from over the Södra mountains at a low height. In Nedan-ejö [?] and Norrhassel as well, similar observations were made. In Nedanejö the projectile made a curve and descended, leaving a green streak and a 40-50 meter long tail of fire. It is not thought improbable that the projectile [came in] over land and later turned. A phenomenon of this type is known to be observed daily off the Norrland coast, then for the last few days in the Gävle area. 1946 July 11 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3, 9 (card 1)

(Swarm of projectiles): / "Radio-bomb" falls on bathing beach in Medelpad. / Fragments investigated by experts.

On Wednesday reports came in from many parts of the country about observations of the mysterious "radio-bombs," which on Tuesday were sighted not only in Medelpad but also in Dalarna and Värmland. This projectile observed in Medelpad fell onto a bathing beach, and fragments have been found, which now are subject to expert investigation. The defense staff in a communique urges the public to report without delay all sightings of mysterious luminous phenomena.

The projectile over Medelpad on Tuesday fell on the bathing beach Norrvikssand at Björkö, Njurunda. A great many bathers lay and sunned themselves on the beach only 20 meters from the fall, and [something of a company] sat at a coffee table at almost the same distance away as the projectile fragments came. To continue with it, a faint thud was heard and a fiery streak seen; that was all. When the matter was investigated more closely, a small pit was found in the loose sand, about a couple of decimeters deep and a meter in diameter. But people searched further and found a mass of fragments which were thought to indicate a meteor fall. A find which your correspondent made on the beach on Wednesday morning, however, seemed to point in another direction. A meteor should hardly [take after] [be withdrawn from] a cylinder. Out from the Norrvikssand are located six summer cabins. The area is secluded, about three km. from Björkovägen. One of the summer cabins belongs to airline pilot Torvald Linden, who, when the "meteor" came, had some visiting neighbors around a coffee table outside the cabin.

The projectile's light darkened the sun's rays. --Who first discovered the phenomenon out on the beach was a summer guest, Mrs. Söderberg, and she called my attention to it, said Mr. Linden. The projectile gave off a blinding light. It was indeed so bright that the sun's rays happened to dim. The projectile went quite low, [its height] highest speed at 50 meters per second. It descended at a 40-degree dive angle and fell into the sand, yet without any immediate report [peal, clap]. At a distance of only 20 meters lay some young girls and bathers, and they saw how the sand spurted up. After some time we found the crater, which however was rather modest in size. Spread all around was discovered thus a mass left by the mysterious sky-projectile. It mostly looked like porous slag of various colors--from burnt yellow to black. Some small bits were nearly in powdered form, and when they were taken in the hands, they [i.e. the hands] began to smart as if from lye. Likewise it smelled with the odor of just this stuff. The projectile, which had a northeasterly direction, was accompanied by a luminous tail of 40-50 meters.

Many kilos of slag from the thing. The summer guests in Norrvikssand began at once to gather up the pieces in bags, and it turned out in the end to be many kilos of slag of various colors. A part of the collected pieces brings to mind burnt bits of metal. Ten meters from the fall your correspondent found, on searching and Norrvikssand on Wednesday, a burnt-brown object with a hollow cylinder. In color and consistency this object was like most of the other objects turned up. The cylinder had a diameter of about 25-30 millimeters. The military authorities later took over the find.

Paper or film fragment with squares. Tests on the remnants of the projectile were referred on Wednesday to Dr. Backlund at the Cellulösabolagets Investigational laboratory in Kubbekensborg, and he has undertaken an analysis of them. Dr. Backlund's first analysis of the small sample has had a sensational result. [At first] he gathered a bit of gray-white loose material under the microscope from [a piece] of paper or film fragment, which appeared to be divided up into squares something like a [checkers] or chessboard. The paper or film coating was only about a quarter-millimeter in surface. That the material in question is not of any celestial origin we can establish at once, said Dr. Backlund. It was, on the contrary, as easily as anything you could ask for. The other tests require more time to analyze. It is a hard-fallen object but yet seems to contain coal particles. What else can be found will be seen when the analysis is completed.

Many mysterious projectiles observed in Dalarna. BORLÅNGE, Wednesday (SvD's corresp.) A couple of meteor falls took place on Tuesday in Dalarna, one in Söderbärke and one in Mockfjärd. On Tuesday afternoon a wife in Huggnora was busy washing on the shore of Lake Barken. Then she saw a falling object, which came at great speed from the northeast. It was changing blue and green in color and had a long tail after it. It tumbled into the lake at about 100 meters distance from the observer at Hedudden outside Sorbo. At this time a strong wind was feared, [blast?], [yet no sound proceeding from the meteor could be perceived]. The water is quite deep at the place of the fall.

At almost the same time, at half past three in the afternoon, was a young man in Mockfjärd observed a silver-colored star which with great speed and a whistling sound neared the ground. It fell down about 150 meters from the young man and [in fact] the meteor developed an intense light, which blinded the observer. For that reason the young man cannot state any exact point for the impact, but it must have happened on Mt. Landholm. A strong smell of [something] burnt remained behind over the place for a quarter hour's time. The terrain is covered with heather and moss, and is located in a good-[sized] hollow.

Comet-like object seen in Värmland. KARLSTAD, Wednesday (TT) In Hagfors in Värmland has a comet-like object been seen a well. At 14.35 o'clock on Tuesday the "projectile" came from the north in a steep dive toward Lake Ullen. At Ravberget it extinguished and a couple of meters over the surface of the water, but this does not preclude that it first hit the mountain, declare three eyewitnesses.

1946 July 11 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 9. The military has a bomb fragment.

The chief of the defense staff reported on Wednesday evening around 14.30 o'clock on July 9 a luminous phenomenon was observed at many places in the country.

In this manner was sighted many places in the Stockholm area a bright shining body with a blue-green tail. At the same time something similar appeared in the Sundsvall region, where a fall also occurred. On the spot of this [event] fragments were found and carefully sent through the military authorities to Stockholm for analysis. This [will be done] at the defense research institute.

In order to continue the investigation it is important that observations made be reported quickly, [so] the public is urged without delay to report on this by telephone or post to the nearest military post or to the defense staff's air defense headquarters, telephone [code] Military staff, post address Stockholm 90.

1946 July 13 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p.

Projectile falls in an open field.

Further reports have come in of observations of a mysterious flying object, and eyewitnesses assert that they saw a "fireball" fall.

At Dalaholm, just out from Lidköping, several persons on Thursday afternoon saw a winged projectile with a [tail] shining like copper and with a ball, after which came a roar (hum) about 50 meters over their heads. The projectile fell in an open field, where no one has yet bothered to make any investigations.

From Mariestad it is reported that there was seen a flying object with a silvery-shining tail in Otteralätten, near Fagerlid, both at 14.30 o'clock Tuesday and on Thursday between 7:30 and 8 o'clock. Also in western Hälsingland a fireball has been seen. In Ramsjö, four miles north of Ljusdal, a pair of persons on Thursday afternoon observed a fireball which was thought to go straight over the treetops. The ball seemed to be the size of a head and left behind itself a four or five meter long fiery tail. It went eastward. At about the same time other persons saw a fireball fall into a lake in the Ramsjö area.

A "rocket bomb" also has passed over the Västervik area. A Västervik family and a Stockholm lady who were on a visit to a farmer in Gladhammar at 14.30 o'clock on Wednesday discovered an object passing over the treetops at a low altitude and disappeared behind the woods. Two persons saw a blue or green streak and another [saw] as well a small object ahead of the streak. No sound was heard. Clear sky and visibility prevailed. The direction was easterly or perhaps northeasterly and the path horizontal.

A mysterious fireball was observed between 13 and 14 o'clock on Thursday over Köpingsvik bathing area north of Borgholm. It looked like a light green, brightly shining ball, which moved with great speed in an easterly direction. Behind the "ball" appeared a spiral-shaped violet streak of light. According to what many observers tell, the luminous phenomenon disappeared suddenly [into thin air]. No trace of it could be found.

1946 July 17 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

Ghost projectile seen in Matfors. MT

SUNDSVALL, Tuesday (TT) Ghost projectiles continue to be seen in Norrland. At 22.30 o'clock on Tuesday this thing passed Matfors again. It was a factory worker who saw it, when he together with several other persons were out and cycling. The projectile flew over Matfors and continued in the direction of Sundsvall. It was furnished with a tail and gave out a bright white shine.

Ghost rockets over Norway. STAVANGER, Tuesday (TT from NTB) According to Stavanger workers it seems as if "ghost rockets" now also have reached Rogaland. At 23 o'clock on Saturday several Stavanger inhabitants caught sight of a lighted object which drew near from the southeast. It was like a projectile. The object flew at a high speed at a very great altitude. The projectile gave off a bright yellow-red light and could be followed until it little by little disappeared in a northwesterly direction. It kept the same altitude at all times and the witnesses--a total of four persons--emphasize that it did not move like a meteor.

1946 July 19 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

Space projectile seen at two places.

GOTEBORG, Thursday (TT) A person in Gråbo at 11.40 o'clock on Wednesday observed an "aerial torpedo," which with furious speed at a very great height flew forward in a northeasterly direction. After 10-12 seconds it was out of sight.

SUNDSVALL, Thursday (TT) A new space projectile was observed at 10 o'clock on Thursday by three workers at the Ortvik factory outside Sundsvall. It was an oblong silvery-shining piece which happened to go at 200-300 meters high without giving off any sound or displaying any smoke. The direction at the beginning was northeasterly, but before the projectile disappeared it had made a northwesterly turn.

1946 July 20 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

Ghost projectile in Nederkalix.

Also from upper Norrland has now come in a report of a space projectile. A farmer asserts that on Friday forenoon he observed one of these descend into a lake in the vicinity of Nederkalix, reported to the defense ministry.

From Kalix it is reported that the person who saw the projectile did not hear any explosion at the fall in the water. It is hoped now that the projectile can be saved relatively undamaged.

In Norway too projectiles fell during Friday. See p. 11.

1946 July 20 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 9 (117) (card 1)

Rocket bomb falls in Mjosa.

OSLO, Friday (Svd's Oslo corr.) From Fearing today in the forenoon the Afterpost received the sensational report that two rocket bombs fell in Lake Mjosa last night.

The rocket bomb looked like a miniature airplane of about 25 m. in wingspan and came at night between 24 and 0.30 o'clock from the west at a low altitude over the southern section of Fearing, where it was observed by many persons, among others, those at the Hasselbacken Hotel and at [Hotel] Anas. It carried no lights. People were made aware of it by a loud sighing sound and immediately afterward the bomb could be seen coming with furious haste. The speed was so great that traffic (passerby?) stopped and waited till the bomb passed. The next night out in Mjosa, nearer to the Fearing side, the water was struck with a loud splash and a high vapor-cloud [was raised]. The Afterposten today has had a talk with local police authorities in Hurdal and Fearing, who were able to confirm that the ghost bomb was observed by many trustworthy witnesses. The place where the flying bomb went down lies one mile north of Minnesund and Mjosa is rather deep, so the finding of the rest of the bomb can be certain. The sheriff comes now to directly inform the defense high command so that a basic investigation can be undertaken.

An aluminum-colored (shining) cylinder. MT
SUNDSVALL, Friday (TT) The projectile which in Thursday noon was sighted by three workers at Ortviken was observed a while (moment) later by a Sundsvall resident, royal bank accountant Gunnar Falck, when he was up at Norrestadsberget. He believes he saw an aluminum-colored projectile which went in a northwesterly direction. The height was difficult to estimate, but the speed happened to be not very great. No smoke appeared behind the projectile and no sound could be heard from it.

Ghost projectile over Västerbotten. SKELLEFTEA, Friday (TT) A ghost projectile was observed at 20 o'clock on Friday over Furnogrund in Byske by two persons. It had a westward course and an ~~xxx~~ altitude estimated at 600 m. The phenomenon was accompanied by a blue-white shine, but neither was any sound heard nor smoke observed. From southern Västerbotten as well the sighting of a projectile is reported. It appeared at 20 o'clock both at Vännäsby, three miles from Umeå, and in Lever in Nordmalings parish. It travelled rapidly from the southeast toward the northwest. One of the witnesses described it as a red ball and one thought he saw it accompanied by lightning phenomena. An observer said he saw a shower of sparks in connection with the projectile's trip. On Friday came a report from Boleby, outside Piteå, where a farmer, Leonard Danielsson and his two sons discovered in the sky at 11:30 o'clock a space projectile like the one seen the day before in the Sundsvall area. The course was northwesterly.

1946 July 21 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

Ghost projectile delved for in Norrland lake.

The mystery of the many space projectiles stands at last to get its solution. In a lake in Norrland indeed a military crew [attempts to] delve out one of the things, which on Friday midday fell down into the lake, where holes are now made after the projectile. Great expectations are entertained for its recovery in relatively undamaged condition.

A military crew of ten men was sent to the lake on Saturday, and after eyewitnesses guided them out to it, the place was quickly [located] where the projectile bored itself into the lake bottom. The water depth here is only 75 cm. and the projectile had made a hole more than a meter wide, which was very deep. At the beginning an oar was stuck down in the hole but did not reach the bottom, whereupon an extra tool was sent for. The projectile clearly had had an unheard-of speed on impact, wherefrom there was witnessed a great amount of mud which was thrown a long way around the falling-place. According to what the Svenska Dagbladet gathered it is hoped that thanks to the mud, which moderated the violence of the fall, the projectile can be found largely intact. It is thought to allow for several days' work in the lake before the thing can be delved up. And already there ought not have been such a long delay before it is clarified where it originated.

1946 July 22 (Mon) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

Scientists to the "bomb lake" by airplane. MT

The search for a "space projectile" at the bottom of a Norrland lake, where one fell at Friday noon according to an eyewitness, continues constantly, but so far no trace of the projectile has been found.

The military crew, which already on Saturday was sent to the lake, has turned its attention now to search through the whole course across the lake--an area of 200X200 meters. Because of the deep mud, "probe search" methods have been resorted to, that is to say that at every half meter a long feeler (probe) is driven down into the mud. The maximum water depth is two meters.

A search with ordinary military mine-detection equipment failed, since this equipment is not constructed for as great a depth as occurred here.

Special officers and scientists from Stockholm, that is, from the defense research institute, who on Saturday travelled by plane to the fall site, returned Sunday evening without having achieved their goal.

On Monday came the crew which [relieved the workers in the search]. The work on this will be pursued until either what is sought is found or it can be declared that the hunt is in vain. There is still hope, however, that positive results will be obtained.

The space projectile is still in the lake. LULEÅ, Sunday (TT) Another fall of a space projectile happened on Friday in southeast Norrbotten. An 11-year old son of a farmer [claimed] that at 11.30 [he was] fishing in a tarn, when he saw an object which with great speed fell down into the opposite end of the about 150-meter broad tarn. On impact it spewed a water fountain to 10-15 meters up into the air, but he did not hear any explosion. Military personnel have set in motion a search for the projectile.

1946 July 23 (Tues) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 9.

New ghost bomb has been sighted.

A ghost bomb appeared, according to what has just now become known, on Thursday evening over middle Sweden. The witness described the bomb as a spool-shaped, metallic-shining projectile with a direct southerly direction and its height was estimated at about 400-500 meters. Any descent could not be observed. The bomb moved with about the same speed as an ordinary airplane but altogether soundlessly.

Six persons saw a flying body in the sky.

The latest report of the mysterious space projectiles comes from a coastal place in middle Sweden where a flying body was observed on Tuesday evening.

It was a company of six persons who at 22 o'clock saw the mysterious object. One of them, notary E. Nordin of the Swedish business bank, relates that the phenomenon can be described as a lighted body. It passed at some hundred meters high in a direction south to north and shone with a yellow-white light. The thing crossed the heavens completely soundlessly and had about the same speed as an airplane.

At the "bomb lake" in Norrland, where one of the projectiles fell, systematic investigations continue, but so far nothing has been found of the fallen object. The lake is about 200 meters wide, and it is known where the projectile fell. But in the about four-meter deep mud it could have a different direction and lodged a far from the place of impact. There is a troop of twelve men from a military [company] who are [charged] to seek after the thing, and they have taken such a methodical course that sooner or later the thing must be discovered. The water depth is about two meters and the mud has a thickness of about four meters.

1946 July 25 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 5.

New aerial torpedo seen in Norrland. MT p. 3

Reports of ghost projectiles stream in continually to newspaper editors from Norrland. The latest report comes from a person who just before 19 o'clock on Tuesday saw a silvery-shining torpedo in the air. It went remarkably low, and disappeared little by little in a cloud. Before that it could be plainly discerned all the while. The object looked most nearly like a balloon, said the report. Last week a similar phenomenon was observed three evenings in a row in almost the same direction.

1946 July 26 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 11.

Space projectile seen again in southern Sweden.

According to what has become known, on Monday there was observed a space projectile in southern Sweden. It was described as long and narrow and gave out a humming sound almost the whole time it could be seen. Also on Tuesday was sighted a meteor or similar object over southern Sweden by many persons. Just before midnight appeared a brightly luminous fireball which was thought to explode with a sizzling sound and an intense reddish shine.

1946 July 28 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 5.

Space projectile causes a fire? MT p. 5

IN SUNDSVALL, Saturday (TT) An explosive kind of fire which perhaps can be set in connection with the sky phenomenon last week broke out at 9 o'clock on Saturday morning on a farmstead in Norrland.

A housewife in the garden suddenly heard a powerful explosion and then she gazed out to discover that her henhouse was on fire. It had stood unused for a couple of years. Its electrical wires were disconnected and nothing combustible or flammable was kept in the building. Since a "ghost bomb" was observed yesterday over the area there has been no other explanation available than that one of them fell down on the building.

1946 July 29 (Mon) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

Ghost bomb discovered?

SUNDSVALL, Sunday (TT) A rumor has asserted that the so-called ghost bomb, which fell into a lake in Norrland, was found on Sunday.

The speaker said he got the report from a credible person. [All instances having to do with this matter] are disclaimed, however. The proper information officer declared that a specialist from Stockholm set up an effective search. After this investigation the information officer talked with him, whereupon the specialist did not state if [there was] any find but rather that the search must be made thorough. The officer thought that the rumor came about through this specialist's visit.

1946 July 30 (Tues) Berlingske Tidende (Copenhagen), p. 7.

"Ghost Rocket over Sjaelland. / One Observed at Slagelse-Egnen Saturday Afternoon. / From our correspondent.

SLAGELSE, Monday evening.

The mysterious "ghost Rocket" which recently has many times appeared over Sweden and has given occasion for many conjectures in the entire world press, seems also now to have been observed in Denmark.

In Høng, north from Slagelse, many of the inhabitants saw [there] on Saturday afternoon a shining, silvery object in the shape of a projectile, which with great speed crossed the clear blue sky in a direction from southeast to northwest.

It passed very rapidly, presumably in a run of about ten seconds, and none of the eyewitnesses were in a position to account for the clearness of the surprising sight. The observers' statements, in regard to time and appearance, however, are in close agreement, and there was agreement that it could not be said to be any airplane, likewise neither fire nor smoke appeared in connection with this phenomenon, in contrast to what was the case with the body which was observed over Sweden. Perhaps it was due to the bright midday sun, but but the [speaker] decided in favor of [bad] sight, that no one has [suggested] "projectile" in these circumstances, as earlier was known from the Swedish precedent.

Wed. July 31, back p.

Today's Aspect. / It is reported from Høng that people have observed one of the mysterious ghost rockets over Byen.

People breathed a little scared in Høng the other day. / The result was unrest in the community. / It was like a great meteor / in and arc over the region below.

People thought at once of this rocket which travels so mysteriously / in the bright [neighborhood] of the city like a shining star, / as if it were [made] of tin foil.

An uneasiness came back at such a bright ghost [dragon], / which travels past in the strangest maneuvers. / But surely people can be at ease in Høng.

It was not a great power on an expedition of war. / It was one of the well-known Høng [inhabitants] [cheeses] / who had gotten to living it up a little again / and took a trip over the rooftops.

1946 August 1 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 5.

Ghost bomb was not the cause of the Svartviks fire. MT p. 3

SUNDSVALL, Wednesday (TT) At the investigation about the fire in the Svartviks sulfite (?) factory's lumber stock, when a million cubic feet of materials were destroyed, the source of the fire has not yet been established, but the police will not believe in the theory that the fire possibly was created by a "ghost bomb fall."

Nothing has been found which specifically supports this theory.

People have neither heard nor seen any sign of a "ghost bomb."

1946 August 2 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

The ghost bombs are V-2 bombs, believes a specialist.

NEW YORK, 1 August (SVD's New York editor) Reports from Sweden claim that the Russians are in fact carrying on experiments with V-2's at Peenemünde in northern Pomerania, asserts a German rocket expert to the New York Herald Tribune's correspondent in Frankfurt am Main.

The man who spoke to the American newspaper, who worked at Peenemünde and at other experimental stations during the war, says that there have been unconfirmed reports from the Russian zone about rocket factories and laboratories at Nordhausen, Bleicharde, Sondershausen and Sealfeld being again in action. In Nordhausen was located an extensive underground factory for V-2 bombs during the war, and if reports from Stockholm are true, it indicates that the Russians have set in motion the famous rocket base at Peenemünde. This place was bombed many times by the British, but when the Tribune correspondent's informant evacuated during the last weeks of the war the equipment was for the most part undamaged. Most of the rocket specialists, who afterwards were captured in the American zone, were then sent to the USA and England to continue their work.

1946 August 2 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 7.

MT, last p.

Space projectile explodes.

SUNDSVALL, Thursday (TT) At two places in Norrland space projectiles were observed on Thursday. In one of the cases the projectile appeared as a metallic-gleaming object, which to a rather great extent resembled an airplane.

The flying object was observed for at least five minutes by seven or eight persons. The speed did not seem to be particularly great. The projectile, which glinted almost white in the afternoon sun, went at a very low height and disappeared behind a mountain. The distance to the projectile was estimated at six to eight kilometers. The object passed altogether soundlessly.

At a place in middle Norrland two persons on Thursday evening observed two space projectiles which went out over the sea. The first went higher and exploded over the water. It had a strong bright luminous yellow-white tail. The other space projectile was thought more [brightly] lighted. It exploded too. Both objects were cigar-shaped. No estimate of size could either witness give.

1946 August 3 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

Pit in the ground a ghost bomb mark?

A pit has been found in central Sweden and this pit perhaps can be linked with the observed fire phenomenon, reports the defense staff's air defense division. Specialists have carried out an investigation of the place, but any further reports have not yet been received by the defense staff.

Sat. Aug. 3, last p. Space projectile seen in Norrland.

SUNDSVALL, Friday, (TT) A space projectile was sighted at 22.20 o'clock on Friday over a city in central Sweden. It had a luminous tail. No sound could be heard and in the darkness neither was it possible to judge the height and speed of the object.

1946 August 5 (Mon) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

A space projectile again seen in southern Sweden.

MALMÖ, Sunday (TT) A space projectile was sighted late on Sunday in southern Sweden. The person who observed the appearance reported that the projectile had a very slight hint of a tail. The phenomenon lasted only a few seconds, after which the fireball disappeared above the clouds. It had an orange color.

1946 August 6 (Tues) Svenska Dagbladet, p. last p.

Mysterious space projectile was airplane antenna.

MALMÖ, 5 Aug. (TT) A mysterious object, which was at first thought to be a ghost bomb or else a part of one of them, was discovered on Friday by a farmer in southern Sweden. He summoned the local constable who dug for the object, which had buried itself 25 to 30 cm. deep in the ground. The find was like an oil can and had a length of around 10 cm. At one end of it was found a 50 m. long copper wire and the whole "can" weighed around a kilogram. The constable ventured no investigation of the find other than to notify the military authorities. Afterwards it was reported to the defense staff's air defense division that the object found was a detached Swedish airplane antenna.

1946 August 6 (Tues.) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 7.

(Clear into Överkalix:) / Lake drained for ghost bomb. / Överkalix, Monday (TT).

The crash site of the space projectile in the Överkalix area can now be stated with certainty. The latest is that on Tuesday it was reckoned that salvage of the thing could start--[whatever it might be]. As a sign that it is thought ~~xxx~~ search and location work ~~is~~ is really concluded, it is well to take [the fact] that half the force which was occupied with the investigation has now gotten orders to go home to their station. It is now no longer a question of any combing the abotton, except possibly of a draining, emphasized the proper [authorities].

Airplane antenna taken from a ghost bomb. The "mysterious" object which was found ~~xxxx~~ on Sunday in the ~~xxx~~ sea out from Karlskrona, and which was "like an oilcan with a copper cable fastened to it" has, on investigation on Monday, ~~was~~ showed itself to be a dropped airplane antenna. So this time it was not the remains of a ghost bomb...

Mon. Aug. 5, last p. / P.S./ Military investigate mysterious space find in Blekinge Islands. / KARLSKRONA, Sunday (MT).

A mysterious object, in shape like an oilcan together with a copper cable attached to it, according to what the Sydöstra Sveriges Dagbladet says, it has been learned, was discovered at a place in Blekinge. The [details] indicate that the object fell from a very ~~xxx~~ great height. Investigations around the object found are continuing for the present through the military authorities' provision.

1946 August 7 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 7.

The ghost bomb a serious threat. / "Monster in miniature for the next war."

NEW YORK, August 6 (SVD's New York editor) The projectiles which now fall on Sweden constitute a miniature monster for future wars, writes the well-known political writer Marquis Childs in an article in today's New York Post.

If these projectiles carried explosive charges of atomic bomb character and if they were directed against industrial centers [to turn them into] a wilderness, now Sweden would be destroyed and the war would be over. This war is the unvarnished truth while the gentlemen around the conference table ~~xxxx~~ talked about Fred. Childs' reports returned from Sweden and said it really seems as if there will not be more than a short pause between wars. What strikes the historian as even more mysterious is that the Swedes have just made a conclusive business treaty with the Soviets. We [hold onto ourselves] and test rockets, but the difference is that we use New Mexico's deserts [as safe places for experimental failures to land]. "Perhaps this ~~xxx~~ difference is more important than it has been believed. If the arms race ends in a new and more terrible war, Sweden's advanced civilization will be torn asunder along with nearly any other which survives another world war. If it is this which makes the use of Sweden as a suitable military laboratory so serious." / Per Persson.

The luminous phenomenon could be a rocket. Of a great number of reports judged to have occurred in the last few days, the luminous phenomenon and "ghost bombs" issue in some cases or the other from rocket falls. The investigations continue and until there are some definite results they will not stop, said the chief of the defense staff's air defense division, Major Nils Ahlgren. The most definite crash so far is the one which took place in Kølmar where the search keeps going on to find remains of the object. Around 300 reports have come in, but many of these are worthless. See the article on p. 4.

1946 August 7 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 4. (card 1)

300 reports so far of luminous phenomena in the air. / NO DEFINITE RESULTS YET. /

--The military authorities' investigation of the phenomenon which during the summer has been sighted in the air over Sweden, has not yet led to definite results, states the chief for the defense staff's air defense division, Major Nils Ahlgren.

We of the defense staff in connection with the aviation administration and defense investigative agency and several other authorities have sought to resolve the riddle with all the means at our disposal, said Major Ahlgren. We have had good help from the public and press, ~~xxxx~~ whose reports have been most valuable. During the period from 9 to 12 July there came in around 300 reports. Thereafter the number has successively fallen off, but daily some scattered reports continue. With critical examination of the reports and in many cases close investigation of the places, it appears that many of them must be erroneous. The observers have seen something unusual and have immediately assigned it to the mysterious rockets. In this way, for example, a [whirlwind] over a lake has become a crash, an airplane in dim light a rocket. [It is important] not to be seized by some rocket psychosis.

From a great number of agreements and of all the reports deemed trustworthy it can be concluded, however, that certain of the phenomena probably originate from some kind of rocket or other. ~~xxx~~ Still there have not yet been found any pieces or remains which with certainty can be said to issue from a possible rocket. Before this happens it is clear that statements about the phenomenon's real character or origin are not possible.

The finds of slag-like clumps, which were made at many places, appear to be real slag and are not able to give any clue. Neither do they come from meteorites. Even if the meteor theory cannot be wholly dismissed, it is still, according to expert opinion, not very probable [that it pertains as a] possibility except in isolated cases.

The most certain fall should be the one which occurred at Kølmar where the possibility continues that workers will find some remains.

On account of the muddy bottom of the lake this work is still very difficult and can be long drawn out in time. The measures which are thought reasonable and suitable to achieve success have been taken. No draining of the lake will be undertaken. ~~xxx~~ Investigations continue as well at other reported fall sites in Norrbotten. Reports of finds made at these places are based so far on wild rumors.

By comparison of reports it is clear that the object often moves in a curving course over the country. It passes as a rule over southern Sweden, going more or less in a course up country and passing out in an easterly direction over middle Sweden (Mellanavrig) or Norrland. Whether it thereafter disappears at sea or continues in another direction it has not been possible to establish. It can move, however, like a gyro- or radio-directed rocket projectile, which one way or another has gotten in over Sweden.

Luminous body over southern Sweden. MT ~~xxx~~ p. MALMÖ, Tuesday (TT) A light phenomenon, which appeared as a luminous body, which at high speed crossed the sky in a northerly direction, was observed on Monday evening over a city in southern Sweden. The light phenomenon was accompanied by a rattling sound.

A person in southern Sweden witnessed on Monday evening a lighted object, which he described as a fireball with a short tail, which passed in a direction from south to north at about 400 meters high. Since the object ~~xxx~~ moved perfectly horizontally, in the witness's opinion it could not have been some sort of meteor.

From Morgon Tidningen, p. ~~xxx~~. A: But the knowledge we have about designs of this kind found abandoned at the war's end--especially German--do not require the more or less fantastic shapes of this object, which at times are received, to be unthinkable.

B: Furthermore, the great number of observed phenomena and the often low height proves they are not of celestial origin. A photograph in which such a fiery phenomenon occurs goes to show that it possibly can be a question of a meteor, but the investigation is still not clear.

C: It has not yet been determined whether to drain the lake and after, to examine it closely with prospecting apparatus, which will be done should either step be taken. [] 1946 August 7 (Wed) Morgon-Tidningen, last p.

RATTLING from 'ghost rocket' NORRKÖPING, Tuesday (TT) A "ghost rocket" was observed on Tuesday morning in southern Sweden. It went at high ~~xxxx~~ altitude in an east-west direction and drew after it a stream of white smoke which was then left behind for several minutes, while it broke up and finally disappeared. Meanwhile was heard as well a clear dull motor noise. No projectile could be seen, however, probably due to the rocket's height.

1946 August 8 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 7. (card 1)

Ghost rocket whizzes over motorist's head. MT, ~~xxx~~ p. During an auto trip the ~~other~~ day in central Sweden a person heard a powerful whistling sound and at the same moment he discovered an object which went at very high speed two to three meters above the ground. It passed some ten meters from the auto in a southward direction. He could not see if the projectile struck the ground or if it continued through the woods. An additional person in the car witnessed the phenomenon.

From Norrland some additional cases of apparent space-projectiles are reported. A man thus witnessed at sunset a spool-shaped, narrowed in front projectile which with very great speed moved in a northerly direction. At the back appeared a powerful bright white light phenomenon, which the observers believed, however, could result from a light reflection dependent on the bright solar rays of the sunset. ~~MT ~~xxx~~ p.~~

At another [place] in Norrland a person sighted a similar phenomenon and from a third quarter is reported as well a similar sighting. In all the reported cases the sightings were made at about the same time.

Two space projectiles have been observed, one over middle and the other over southeast Sweden.

At 21.20 o'clock on Monday three persons in southeast Sweden sighted a fireball in space. It had a short tail of fire but did not go with any great speed. It was seen only a short time before it disappeared among the low-lying clouds. ~~MT, ~~xxx~~ p.~~

On Tuesday evening was observed a space projectile over central Sweden. It was sighted by a Norwegian dentist who was on a visit to his relatives. The spool-shaped and airplane-like projectile could be seen very plainly during about 20 seconds. The object went at cloud height and at unheard-of speed. No sound was heard but on the other hand black smoke appeared around the projectile.

Square projectile over the west coast. MT, ~~xxx~~ p. GOTEBÖRG, Wed. (TT) Over the west coast at midday Tuesday a space projectile was sighted, which at ordinary airplane height went directly toward the north. According to the report many persons observed the thing, which happened to be square and had a red color on the underside. The projectile had no wings and no sound was heard when it passed. The speed was reported to be the same as a [passenger plane] ordinarily makes.

A projectile steers back southward? That Sweden is truly the target for the firing of rocket projectiles is now ~~xxxx~~ beyond all doubt, since Lieutenant Lennart Nackman of the defense staff's air defense division himself sighted a phenomenon, which without the slightest doubt was a rocket projectile. It went at a height which was estimated at 500-1000 meters and with a horizontal course. The phenomenon, which was observed just before 24 o'clock ~~xxxx~~ at night till six [minutes] after, was made out as a fireball with a bright luminous flame.

Major Niles Ahlgren, who is chief of the air defense division, thinks that the majority of the projectiles pass over the country from the south and strike down in the Eastern Sea or the Bottnick Bay, if they are not [cleared] to return to the starting-place. Since of course those who carry out the experiments will not give any lead concerning the fall sites, they are secret. Now, however, it is possible, among other things, with the help of radar to follow the course of the projectiles from the start. No damage from a fall has yet occurred. Aug. 8, p. 3. Ghost rocket in a picture.

Reports of observations of ghost ~~xxxxxx~~ projectiles dribble in to the defense staff ever more often. On the experts' side it is thought that the majority of the projectiles come out of the south and end down in the Eastern Sea or Bottnicka Bay, provided it does not simply return to the starting place. One day some ~~xxxxxx~~ motorists heard a powerful whistling sound and discovered an object which came with very high speed directly toward the car at only a few meters high over the ground and with a southward direction. A vacationer had the luck to catch a projectile with his camera and the result is seen here above. A ring is drawn around the mysterious object.

See a further article on p. 7.
1946 August 9 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

"Lamp globe" with tail. MT p 7
SUNDSVALL, Thursday (TT) In northern Sweden on Thursday was observed an object, which in the best judgment of many eyewitnesses was said to have had the shape of a fireball, going in a direction toward the northeast or east.

Thus report-ed witnesses of a round lighted ball, suggestive of a lamp globe in shape and with a light like a welding flame. The observations were made at about the same time. In certain cases a trail of smoke was observed, while in others no tail could be seen. From many places it is reported that the object was a round mass. Some state that it had an oblong form. Some lady thought she could estimate the height at 20 meters and emphasized that the speed was very great. After several moments the object could no longer be discerned, although it was not seen to disintegrate. Probably it had turned itself so that the "lighted" side was not visible, she thought. Another observer states that he saw a lighted object which made a fall at a very great distance. Reports have been supplied from many other places in northern Sweden.

Mysterious projectile falls from the air.
On Thursday morning there was discovered in a place in Central Sweden a large deposit of slag and coal-like substance. How it came there is something which was not witnessed to and it is thought the only possibility is that it fell from the air.

At a local chemical station it is said that a thorough investigation is demanded in order to settle where the ~~xxx~~ particles came from. [?]
MT adds: That burning took place and slag was found is clear, however. It does not seem to be from any metal, in which case it probably would be lighter ~~x~~ than this, and it is not thought to originate from any airplane or meteor.

Morgon-Tidningen, Aug. 9 p. 8. [cartoon: man photographing ghost rocket.

In our country ghost bombs travel in the atmosphere.
Now it becomes all the better to remember when crayfish parties are celebrated.
1946 August 9 (Fri) Morgon-Tidningen, last p.

Ghost phenomenon was crab party rocket?
Nervous telephone voices reported to MT on Thursday evening that ghost phenomena was seen over Stockholm. At the military staff, where newspapers seek to check reports, no one had made any reports of such-like but it was stated at the same time that the air defense division "was prepared" to investigate the phenomenon. This could be due, however, to Stockholm's frenzied crab-eating ~~p~~[parties] with the associated entertainments in the form of rockets and other fireworks devices.

Th. Aug. 8, p. 1. Ghost bomb photographed
MT has had occasion to show the first picture taken of the notorious ghost bombs... ~~xxx~~ A photographer on holiday in central Sweden took up the camera in time to take the picture, which was put at the disposal of the defense staff. For the sake of clarity the bomb in the picture has been surrounded by a white ring. The projectile is plainly in a descent, and the "tail" also can be seen.

During Wednesday were sent in a great many new reports of ghost bombs which were observed in various parts of the country. / See further on p. 6.
1946 August 10 (Sat) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 10.

Cyclist nearly struck by fist-sized "ghost rocket." / ~~xxx~~ CÖTEBORG, Friday (MT).

A strange phenomenon was witnessed by a man in west Sweden on Thursday evening. At 10 o'clock in the evening he came cycling on a road when just ahead of him at about 8 meters distance and at low height he saw an egg-shaped thing of the size of a fist and with a yellowish shine, which was so bright that it lighted up the surroundings so that the cyclist could see the electric wires on the roadside. The object, which went lower than the wires, brushed by his so closely that he was nearly struck, continued over the road and fell 15 to 20 meters onward in an oat field. At the fall was heard a hissing sound.

The mysterious thing which came from the east had an unheard-of great speed. The cyclist could very clearly follow the object's course. He stopped, made a mark on the electric pole which was closest to the point of impact, and on Friday morning made a report of the occurrence to the police, who at Friday noon were out to the place and searched for the object, without finding any trace of it. Because the oats grew high and in certain places had fallen from the rain, of course a great difficulty was presented in finding such a small object as the cyclist described, especially if it buried itself in the ground. Investigation continues.

Remarkable [thing] seen also in central Sweden.
UPPSALA, Friday (MT).
At 24 o'clock Thursday night was noticed a luminous phenomenon which might have issued from a rocket projectile. The object could be plainly observed, which spread a bright shine so that bushes and objects on the ground were lighted up. The ~~xxxx~~ witnesses have reported to defense officials, who will undertake an investigation.
1946 August 12 (Mon) New York Times, pp. 1, 7. (card 1)

Swarm of Mysterious Rockets Is Seen Over Capital of Sweden / By Cable to the New York Times.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Aug. 11.—A swarm of rocket bombs passed over Stockholm at 10 o'clock tonight. The course, as usual was from the southeast toward the northwest.

[It was reported from Washington that missiles seen over Sweden were thought to have been launched from a former German rocket experiment area at Peenemunde, now in the Soviet zone of Germany.]

Reports flowing in to the Swedish general staff stress that the bombs are like fireballs, with long luminous trails, but some observers have seen a cigar-shaped bomb traveling at an altitude of 1,500 feet rather slowly.

Some reported that they had seen bombs crash. The general staff is working at high pressure tonight, investigating all reports, but nothing has been found.

The strangest report came from central Sweden, where a newly built barn collapsed this afternoon without visible cause. Shortly before the collapse flying bombs had been seen. Then there was a sharp crack and the barn fell. There was no fire.

Witnesses said the barn could not have collapsed because of bad construction. The general staff is sending experts to interview them. Swedes are seriously worried by the many bomb reports. A few days ago the General Staff received 300 reports in 24 hours. The General Staff ordered that the places of crashes be not revealed, as was done during the war with German V-weapons.

It is rumored here that officers in the Russian Air Force have been dismissed because they were far behind the Western Powers in atomic bomb work. Their successors are believed to be trying new experiments with unloaded shells.

Sweden Believed Target.
STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Aug. 11 (AP)—"Ghost rockets"—mysterious spool-shaped speeding objects with fiery tails—have become a common sight in Sweden and military officials no longer doubt that the country is in a target area for experimentation with remotely controlled missiles.

Since July 1, newspapers have published reports of the flying fireballs nearly every day. In the beginning many believed that excited witnesses had seen nothing more ominous than meteors. However, between July 9 and July 12 military authorities received 300 reports of the missiles and since that time added reports have poured in daily.

Fragments examined by scientists gave little in way of clues, except to indicate the presence of coke and other common materials.

Authorities, promising a statement on the ~~xxxxxx~~ results of the investigation within a few days, have cautioned Swedish newspapers not to publish the name of places where the rockets appear, so the senders would not obtain important data. Official quarters declined to speculate on the source of the missiles, but it was believed elsewhere that the rockets came from some place along the Baltic coast of Germany.

Nobody seems to think these rockets indicate any military preparation against Sweden, but the people here are puzzled by Sweden's being a target area when an unlimited amount of uninhabited area must be available for experimentation.

The newspaper Stockholm's Tidningen labeled a recent editorial "Ghost rockets and future war," and said the appearance of the missiles stressed the need for preparedness.

The rocket is described as a small object with a flaming tail which speeds at a great height and vanishes in a few seconds. Witnesses say the rockets make no appreciable sound.

Newspapers recently carried a picture of the rocket, obtained accidentally by a cameraman who was photographing a landscape. It showed a streak of light trailing from a small dark body, looking much like a comet.

Only in a few cases is it known that the missiles actually landed in Sweden. Military personnel have been busily dredging a small lake in Lapland.

Military authorities said the missile evidently passed over Sweden in a huge curve. Some reports indicated the objects carried a device for self-destruction, and military experts said some apparently had exploded in the air. The longest flights of any of the missiles, so far as military experts could determine, was about 600 miles, compared with the range of 35 to 45 miles for the first German V-2 rocket bomb.

There is no comparison, however, with the rocket bombs. The mysterious missiles are small, and at low altitudes seem almost square. The bottom of the object appeared to be painted red, witnesses said. Some observed these missiles flying extremely low.

These reports have been substantiated by a Swedish officer, a flier, who saw one of the rockets during a recent flight.

Rockets Reported Near Town.
STOCKHOLM, Aug. 11 (Reuter)—A number of objects, apparently rockets, were reported to have been seen by various witnesses as they flew low over central Sweden tonight, it was reported here.

One of them is said to have fallen near a town, exploding with a loud report. Swedish authorities refused to disclose the name of the town.

The objects emitted a white glow that illuminated the sky.

Ghost bomb shower at low altitude over central Sweden. / It is neither airplane nor falling star.

A very great number of rocket-like space projectiles were observed at 21 o'clock on Sunday evening over central Sweden. Eyewitness descriptions' characteristics agree well and it is understood that this time it cannot be possibly be [motivated] by any confusion with ~~xxxxx~~ airplanes, falling stars or the like.

The flying bodies have moved with great speed and lighted up the sky with a bright white shine. Near a city a projectile dropped to the ground after a powerful explosion. The flight altitude was in general low. Judging by many signs the public now takes the "sky phenomenon" seriously and is worried that it will fall and cause death and destruction.

In one place a farmer saw a rocket fall into a wheat field. The rocket had a tail and went in a direction from south toward north. ~~When~~ When the tail extinguished the rest of the rocket seemed to fall down into the field, but because of darkness none of the remains could be found.

Over a city just before 21 o'clock many persons saw a fireball. Some of the observers saw a luminous tail, while others thought they saw a dark object following the fireball. It flashed and seemed to go out when it came over the city's harbor [on its way] out to sea. Also in a place located four miles from the city many persons saw a lighted fireball with a dark body following after. The fireball seemed to extinguish when it went out over the sea.

From a [fairground] many persons at 20.50 o'clock observed a space projectile with a luminous tail going in a direction toward a mountain peak. The spectators thought the projectile would collide with the peak, but it seemed as if the projectile raised itself or turned in another direction. No sound was heard and ~~xxx~~ observations lasted only seconds.

Over a city and many places around it at 20.50 o'clock was observed a space object, which is described as a gray-green body with a luminous tail.

Many fireballs over one and the same city. ~~MT~~ Over another city in central Sweden and its surroundings many fireballs were seen at 21 o'clock. At one place a man saw three fireballs, of which two came together and the third 25 minutes later. They looked like cylinders. The tail which appeared after the object was said in most cases to have had a blue-white color, but in a couple of cases was said colored red or yellow.

Over yet another city at 20.48 o'clock three persons saw a lighted fireball.

From a place in southern Norrland many persons observed a space projectile just before 21 o'clock. It had a long tail after it which appeared very clearly in the twilight. From a rest home in central Sweden just before 21 o'clock was observed a fireball which exploded and divided into four [circles of light]. These fell toward a mountain, and the home guard in the area is holding a search now to look for remains of the projectile. ~~MT~~

About 20.45 two engineers made an observation of a space ~~xxxxxxx~~ ~~xxx~~ object over a city. They described the object as torpedo-shaped with a wider nose. It was magnesium-gleaming (bright?) and had a fire-spurting tail.

Flight Lieutenant makes an observation.

A lieutenant in the Air Force, with whom the Svenska Dagbladet was in contact, sighted a projectile at 20.46 for 1.5 seconds and immediately afterwards made a drawing from memory of it. He described it as an elongated, drop-shaped projectile, green in the front part and white on the sides. Its direction was northwesterly. The angle of descent was 30 to 40 degrees and the course truly parabolic. Because of darkness it was difficult to judge the distance and speed, but if it was out a great distance the lieutenant estimated the object's length at about 20 meters.

1946 August 13 (Tues) New York Times, p. 4. (card 1)

Swedes Use Radar in Fight on Missiles. / Doolittle Believed Called In as Aide--Stockholm Studies Steps to End Violations. / Special to NYT.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Aug. 12.--Sweden is now using radar in the fight against the mysterious missiles that have been flying over the country, it was made known today. The atmosphere here after last night's swarm of projectiles over Central Sweden was almost at the boiling point and there were persistent rumors that Sweden was going to, or already had, borrowed several complete radar outfits from Great Britain to obtain the quickest results.

It is also believed that the U.S.'s foremost long-distance bombing expert, Lieutenant General James H. Doolittle, who now is retired, is coming to Sweden to inspect the radar equipment, although the official explanation is that he is coming as a business man for the Shell company.

The Swedish General Staff today described the situation as "extremely serious," and it is obvious Sweden is no longer going to tolerate such violations of her integrity. Everything possible is being done to put an end to it.

The General Staff received more than 1000 reports on the rocket bombs last night and this morning. It is a tremendous task to check on all the reports, but it will be done and experts already are scattered all over the country to investigate each little bit found.

Sighted by Astronomer.

The reports give detailed and interesting descriptions of the bombs. A Swedish astronomer and meteorologist said, "I was studying some clouds through a telescope when suddenly I observed a luminous point on the horizon.

"I first believed it to be an airplane," he said, "but soon I noticed it was traveling much too fast for that, and within ten seconds I got a full view of the projectile. I managed to get a clear view of the bomb's body and estimate it was at least 90 feet long. The body was torpedo-shaped and shining like metal. No sound could be heard, although the bomb was only two kilometers away. At the explosion a terrific light flashed up that for a moment completely blinded me. No fire, smoke or sparks were noticeable."

The description of the shape varies, for some observers say they have seen a big ball of fire instead of a torpedo-shaped projectile, but all agree on the small fire balls shot out from the afterpart.

The Swedish public named the missile the "phantom bomb," but now frequently is using the term "Russian V-4."

The Swedes notified their legation at Helsinki to be on the sharpest lookout and to notify Finnish authorities immediately if the bombs appeared again.

One Falls Near Stockholm.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Aug. 12 (UP).--The Swedish Army today rushed experts to three points in Central Sweden where unidentified rockets, rumored to be the results of Russian experiments, crashed last night.

The barrage was the heaviest since the mysterious aerial missiles first were seen flashing through Swedish skies on May 24.

The Swedish Army clamped a tight censorship on the results of its investigation. But reports from hundreds of Swedes who sighted the fiery missiles indicated a whole barrage might have been fired. One rocket passed directly over Stockholm at 8:45 P.M. and crashed north of the city.

One eyewitness to an explosion in Central Sweden said fragments rained down after a great blast in the air above him. Previous explosions have left hard, black metal objects similar to coal clinkers.

The movement of the missiles varied. Some flew a straight course and others veered. In most cases the course was reported from southeast to northwest. Other reports said some missiles came straight from the north.

1946 August 13 (Tues) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3. (card 1)

A shower of space rockets; observations are exact. / Are the Russians experimenting with the V-4?

New reports of space projectiles are streaming in from various parts of the country. At the same time a Reuters telegram from Berlin reports that the Russians in their occupation zone have made a new and powerful rocket weapon, designated as the "V4," and another still untested weapon which they kept to experiment with now.

At a place in central Sweden on Monday evening was observed a torpedo-like object, which with a ~~xxxx~~ bright white shine passed at a very great height in a southwesterly direction. The bright shining light came from the object's nose. The space projectile was observed a short while and then disintegrated or disappeared out of sight. It looked like a large cigar and was broader at the front and smaller at the back. ~~MT~~

About the same time as the torpedo-like object with the bright white light was observed on Monday evening in central Sweden, five persons in a place in southern Norrland saw a brightly lighted object which also had a torpedo shape. This space projectile also had about the same course as the projectile observed in Central Sweden. The height was estimated at only 200 to 300 meters and the object happened to be on a descending [course] toward the horizon.

On Sunday evening at exactly the same stroke of the clock there was made a similar observation at the same place in southern Norrland, but the direction of the object was from south to north.

A space projectile was seen again on Monday evening, also over Central Sweden and with a direction from southeast to northwest. It appeared at a very great ~~xxxx~~ distance and had the shape of a ball with a faint yellow glow.

From various places in the country on Monday evening luminous phenomena were observed which in most cases were similar. All of them had in common that a shower of sparks fell down from the lighted bodies. The light has been yellow-white, of spherical shape and with a narrow (tapering) tail. In general the luminous phenomenon has moved in a direction from north to south.

On Monday evening three persons in a place in southern Sweden observed a star-like, rounded luminous phenomenon with a faint yellow tail. It came from the north-northeast and went in a south-southwesterly direction. The height was impossible to determine. ~~MT~~

Besides the reports from Sunday mentioned in yesterday's newspaper, additional reports have come in as well at 20.50 o'clock on Sunday evening that many persons in southern Norrland observed a tube-like object. It showed a bright light most nearly like a small firework. The projectile could be observed very clearly for a long while.

At a square in southern Norrland just before 21 o'clock on Sunday evening was seen a brightly lighted object which resembled a fireball. It disappeared quickly out to sea.

A fireball, which went in a northerly direction, was observed on Sunday evening by two persons from a place in central Norrland. The ball went at 150 meters height and burst just when it was to pass a watercourse. No sound was heard. ~~MT~~

On the other hand a space projectile which in the twilight on Sunday evening was observed by a pair of cycling girls in north Sweden gave out from itself a faint buzzing sound and a gleam of light as if from a magnesium flare. It went from the southeast toward the northwest at a very low height and at a distance which they estimated at a couple of kilometers. ~~MT~~

~~xxxxx~~Rocket drops "its rear part."

A railroad engineer and his wife saw, from the yard of a place in Central Sweden just before 21 o'clock, a fireball.

Over a lake in Central Sweden at 21 o'clock on Sunday evening a railroad engineer observed a space projectile which displayed a powerful shine. The same engineer made a similar observation on Friday evening at 23 o'clock.

Four persons in a mid central Swedish city on Sunday evening observed a ghost rocket at such a low height and under such favorable circumstances that they had an opportunity for particularly careful observations. They state that the rocket consisted of a large body which glowed white like a carbide lamp and which was followed by a wire-like tail, [after which] two somewhat smaller black bodies [appeared] with some meters in between. The rocket went relatively low and was very plainly seen. According to reports the sky-rocket dropped its back part over a parish where traces are eagerly sought after. That the rocket "dropped a ball [mass] behind it" is reported as well from another place. The ball at the beginning had been white and gleaming, but then little by little darkened and fell to the ground, according to some reports in the form of ashes.

Southwestern Sweden also visited. A couple of crab fishermen in a country community in southwestern Sweden on Sunday observed a rocket projectile sweep by in a direction from north to south. The projectile was clearly seen and both the observers state that it had an oblong shape and went at a [relatively] low height. From the stern could be plainly seen a powerful flame strike out. The projectile disappeared in a short time on the horizon.

A company which was out on a sea trip in a west coast fjord discovered on Sunday evening an object like a bright blue-white glowing body travelling through the air. It reminded [them] most of a fireball and rotated with great speed. It spread sparks and [on] landing fell hissing in the water not far from the company's boat. After a moment came two additional projectiles which had the same direction as the first and also landed in the sea.

"Fireballs" over Åland.

MARIEHAMN, 12 Aug. (TT spec.) The much-talked-of mysterious "fireballs" also have now begun to be seen extensively over Åland. The Russians' experiment with a new rocket weapon.

BERLIN, 12 Aug. (TT fr. Reuter) An official in the German socialist unity party reports that the Russians, on investigation of the ruins of some of the largest armaments factories in Germany which were destroyed by allied aerial bombing discovered many unknown underground workshops. Here also were found drawings for a new weapons and a partially assembled projectile of a hitherto unknown type. The most important finds were made at the Henkel plant outside Rostock and in the Junker works in Dessau. German specialists who formerly under the Nazi armaments ministry served under Speer's direction work now under close supervision by the Russians in order to conduct experiments. Workers in these factories [who] experiment here continue to be selected carefully, but it is thought to play no role whether he was formerly a Nazi, so long as he is an expert and is now thought of as trustworthy.

1946 August 14 (Wed) Berlingske Tidende (Copenhagen), p. 17

Ghost Rocket explodes over Struer. / There came a powerful glare from it. / From our Correspondent.

HOLSTEBRO, Tuesday Evening. According to what night watchman Briand Jensen, Struer, reports, tonight he saw one of the very strange "ghost rockets" come in over Byen from a northeasterly direction at 3:45 o'clock. The rocket exploded and raved off a very bright light.

1946 August 14 (Wed) New York Times, p. 11.

Two Swedes Escape a 'Ghost Rocket' / Missile Dives Into Lake Near Couple in Boat—Boy Scouts Report Sighting Bomb

STOCKHOLM, Swe., Aug. 13 (AP)—The newspaper Aftonbladet said today that two "ghost rockets" were observed in Sweden yesterday and that one of them almost caused casualties.

A couple boating on a lake in Central Sweden were nearly hit by a diving bomb which burst into many parts and disappeared beneath the water, the paper said. The second observance was near Goeteborg, where a group of Boy Scouts saw a flying missile turn 35 degrees and then return to its original course.

The first "ghost rocket" explosion over Denmark also was reported in Copenhagen. Briand Jensen, a night watchman in Struer, West Jutland, said he saw a speeding rocket, approaching from the northeast, explode with a roar and illuminate the sky with a blinding flash.

Despite the accounts of recent witnesses who were unanimous in describing the flaming objects as "rockets," Swedish military authorities said today they had received no tangible proof that the frequent celestial phenomena observed over Sweden resulted from foreign experiments with aerial missiles.

"We have not found a thing," a military spokesman said.

Aftonbladet editorially criticized military authorities for their inability to explain the nature of the occurrences. "It ought to be possible to state whether they are meteors or not, and if they are rockets one should be caught," the newspaper declared.

If the occurrences are rockets and are of Russian origin, as has been suggested, the paper said, there were two possible explanations for their appearance over Sweden:

- 1) "Sweden is systematically being dotted on a Russian artillery map"
- 2) "Sweden is being used as an object of demonstration, directed not to us but to the big world."

Acheson "Much Interested"

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—Under-Secretary of State Dean Acheson said today he personally was very much interested in reports of rockets flying over Sweden but that the Swedes had not sought any American advice on the subject.

1946 August 14 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

Rocket report wonder thinning out.

The multitude of new reports of sightings of space projectiles, which in recent days has come in to the defense staff's air defense division, are now held for comparison. No find has been made from the crash sites. During Tuesday the diminution in the stream of reports was considerable.

That one of the fireballs observed on Sunday evening was a meteor and not a "ghost bomb" is maintained by a prominent scientist in a conversation with the Svenska Dagbladet. This person made the sighting from a motorboat on Furusund Bay.

The theory that Monday's air accident in Småland was caused by a collision with a space projectile cannot be positively confirmed. In particular no reports of space projectiles at the time and place of the accident have yet been received as of late Tuesday evening by authorities in the area. See a further article on the last page.

1946 August 14 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, last p. (card 1)

Scouts see projectile with wings and fins. / No crash find reported.

The last few days a hundred reported sightings of space projectiles have not yet gotten gathered together and processed by the defense staff's air defense division, according to what has been said to the Svenska Dagbladet's inquiry, but perhaps an account can come to pass during the course of the week.

No find from the supposed crash sites have been made, either, and the investigation in a lake in upper Norrland, which is now drawing to a close, has still not given any positive result. The supposition, which was apparent, that the plane crash on Monday in Småland could be thought to have been caused by a collision with a rocket projectile, has in every particular been unconfirmed up till now. Landfiskal Folke Wieslander in Jönköping declares that neither during Monday nor Tuesday did any reports about the projectiles come in from the area around the scene of the accident. Witness examinations in connection with the mysterious accident have now been completed, while the technical investigation continues through the commission of inquiry.

Shower of rockets a bright meteor!

—If an object is seen in the sky at precisely the same time from widely separated places in our great country, it cannot be a question of a rocket or "ghost bomb" of earthly origin, but a projectile from space, which is to say a meteor. I myself saw a fireball which appeared on Sunday evening at 20.50 o'clock and can affirm that it looked and behaved in a manner which is typical for a bright meteor.

Who said this is a prominent Swedish scientist, who for the present, however, [asks to remain] anonymous so that his telephone will not be besieged during the next few days. ["I found myself in a motorboat on Furusunda Bay around a nautical mile north of Furusund,"] he related to the Svenska Dagbladet, ["when suddenly I caught sight of an unusually bright blue-white shine at 40-460 degrees' height over the horizon in the north-northwest. The object, which was visible for only a couple of seconds, dropped out many small fragments. The fireball might have had an [apparent] diameter about analogous to a third of a full moon's disc, which at the same time was seen in the east. Its true dimensions naturally could not be judged, since the distance was unknown. Since the fireball, according to numerous reports in newspapers, was seen at the exact same time in widely separated parts of the country from South Sweden to upper Norrland, the height above the earth's surface must have been very great, and consequently there hardly can be any doubt of the projectile's cosmic origin. It is thus in my opinion very unfortunate, as it happens, referring to the luminous phenomenon observed on Sunday evening, to support the view that all and every mysterious luminous phenomenon issues from a rocket. Precisely in this case it was, according to my conviction, a question of a large fireball from space, a so-called bolide."]

So much for Professor X. It happens to be strange, says a military expert, that our country for many weeks has been showered on by projectiles, of which no one has so far been found nor are known to have caused any harm. But if the luminous phenomena are meteors, how shall it then be explained that they appear in such large numbers at the same time? The so-called "Perseids" or August meteors, which swarm just this time of year, generally have a hazy light and [with] besides always have a north-south direction. Large and brightly lighted fireballs however can appear at any time and do not often occur in groups of two or three or any greater number. The most famous example is the cavalcade of large fireballs which on 9 February 1913 passed over North America, from Saskatchewan in Western Canada to the Atlantic east of the Bermuda Islands. It consisted of at least ten groups with 20 to 40 meteors each, and the whole procession took a time of 3.4 minutes. The speed amounted to about 15 km/sec. And all Canada was passed in seven minutes. The first large meteor at the head was said to have been the only one which burst into pieces during the procession, but most pulled long shining tails after them. During the passage was heard a distantly thunderous rumble, and in some places it seemed as if the ground shook. But the meteors' number amounted in this to many hundreds. A single or a couple of large meteors at a great height certainly could pass by completely soundlessly. The fact that a great many "ghost rockets" do not give off any sound is consequently not any evidence against their heavenly origin.

Projectile bent 35 degrees from its course.

During Tuesday there came in only a few reports about ghost rockets to the authorities. A group of Danish scouts on a visit in West Sweden, however, have observed a rocketlike object which at high speed flew at a height of approximately 500 meters. The scouts state that the projectile had small side wings and fins on both sides of the tail, from which a blue-white light appeared to stream out. That the object probably was radio-directed is evident by [the fact] that it suddenly veered off from its original course at a 35-degree angle and began] directly afterwards returning [to] the old course.

English commentary on "Russian toys (games)"

LONDON, 13 Aug. (SvD's London ed.) Russia naturally could have found a more secret shooting range, but it is ~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ ~~xxxxxxxx~~ certainly thought funny that it exposes a piece of its toy, writes the Manchester Guardian in a sensational lead article today, on the mysterious projectiles which for some time have been seen over Sweden, without all efforts at deliberately formulated explanations originating with Russian launch ~~xx~~ stations. [?]

The British press has contained a great many more or less fantastic reports about the flying bombs over Sweden, but this is the first time any newspaper has taken up the matter on the leading page. The reason that the time is thought ripe is probably the report from Sweden, which suggests that an official Swedish protest with "proper firmness" is soon to be expected. The Manchester Guardian's lead reads in full: / "Sweden not long ago decided... muscles between bouts" (See Manch Gdn, Aug. 13, p. 4, above.)

Projectile falls near seaport.

A rocket projectile fell at 20.15 o'clock in the area near a south Sweden seaport. It went so low that it grazed the housetops and was observed by many persons.

Two eyewitnesses who saw when the projectile fell assert firmly that it struck ground on an islet some 100 meters from land. The men went out in a motorboat, but since the island is rather large and overgrown with hard-to-pass-through vegetative thickets, the men soon were forced to give up the search. They went to continue searching on Wednesday morning, however, since they said they were certain that they saw the projectile strike the ground on the islet. The projectile, which came out of the south, described a very flat course about 50 meters from the ground. The body was cigar-shaped and one or two meters long and radiated a bright light-red shine. Behind was a many-meter long white smoke trail.

Projectile sounds louder than an airplane. ~~MT~~

Two space projectiles were observed at the same time at 11:30 o'clock on Monday ~~xxxxxxxx~~ over a place in central Sweden. It passed in a northeasterly direction at a very low height, about 50 meters, and hummed somewhat louder than an airplane. The space projectile moved unsteadily (with up-and-down motions?) onward. The body was dark, but no luminous phenomena could be seen.

[Railroad man] sees a fireball. ~~MT~~

SUNDSVALL, Tuesday (TT) A flying fireball was observed at 22.35 o'clock on Tuesday by a railroad man on a trip in central Norrland. Because its progress was so fast no closer observation could be made.

Ghost rocket explodes in Denmark.

KOPENHAGEN, Tuesday (AP) Monday night, nightwatchman Briar-Jensen in Struer on Vastjylland watched a ghost rocket explode. It is the first time such a thing has been reported to have happened in Denmark. At 4 o'clock at night Briar-Jensen saw a rocket-like object come flying in a direction from the northeast. An explosion immediately occurred, which lighted up the whole sky. The nightwatchman asserts that he heard a detonation in connection with the luminous phenomenon.

Aug. 14, last p. Doolittle's visit and ghost bombs.

NEW YORK, 13 Aug. (TT from Reuter) Lieutenant General James H. Doolittle's approaching visit to Sweden has no particular connection with the mysterious projectiles which are flying over this country, it was said in authoritative circles on Tuesday evening.

Doolittle, who earlier was commanding officer of the 8th American Air Corps but who now has withdrawn from the military, should, according to what the New York Times reports, go to Sweden in order to inspect the radar equipment which is used in the war against the projectiles. "Doolittle's visit has no direct connection with the projectiles," states a representative of the Shell Oil Company. "His trip to the Scandinavian countries was planned in reality six months ago, long before any projectiles were seen over Sweden. Doolittle is chief of our aviation division and his trip to Scandinavia is merely intended as an inspection tour."

[Meanwhile] Secretary of State Dean Acheson stated in Washington that no American experts were sent to Sweden in connection with rocket flights over Swedish territory. He [said] that the Swedish government had not [asked] the advice of the United States.

1946 August 15 (Th) New York Times, p. 3.

Swedes Find Rocket Clue / Lettered Metal Fragment Is Now Under Close Study.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Aug. 14 (U.P.)--Swedish Army investigators have recovered a fragment of metal containing imprinted letters that may solve the mystery of the rockets that have been flashing over Sweden and other Scandinavian countries since last May, it was announced today.

The fragment was reported to be a 2.75-inch section of metal. It has been placed in the hands of the Defense Research Institute for investigation.

Three additional rockets were reported sighted in southern Sweden last night, flying silently in a southwesterly direction at a high altitude. These reports said the rockets, bright as stars, passed overhead at intervals of five minutes.

Premier Per Albin Hansson announced today that the Swedish Government has not yet made any representations to any foreign Government in connection with the rockets, not having yet defined their nature and their origin.

1946 August 15 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3, last.

(card 1)

"Projectile find" fits exactly into reporter's camera. / Still no trace of the bomb; resultlessness in Norrbotten lake.

A picture of the boltlike object found in the Sala area at natural size. Can anyone tell what it is?

[All Sunday long] a immense flood of reports about sightings of sky phenomena of various kinds still by Wednesday evening had not left the slightest evidence that space projectiles were involved. Investigations concerning the alleged projectile crash in a lake in Norrbotten have now concluded with no results.

On Wednesday was received a couple of sensational reports that an object, which was suspected to issue from a space projectile, was found in the Sala area, but even at a very early stage this theory too could be dismissed as untenable. In one of the falls, in a place where the other day it was thought a space projectile was seen to dissolve, a driver the day before yesterday found an 11-cm. long object of unknown origin lying in the way. The object was sent to the defense staff, where on Wednesday evening it was taken for examination. It was a bolt-like thing, probably of brass or bronze, which seemed too rough, old and worn to be considered to enter into a space projectile, whose components would be of a quite different quality. The bolt rather ~~xxxx~~ looks like it had belonged to a farm machine of some kind or a motor. It seemed in way and fashion symbolic that a press photographer who investigated the find without [difficulty] could screw tight the bolt in the stand holder of his Rolleiflex camera. Owing to this one can think that the bolt probably did originate from the stand of some older, heavier land-surveying instrument. During Thursday the object got a closer examination in a series of mechanical shops in order to get [its] origin settled.

In another Wednesday report a metal part was found in a place where on Sunday a space projectile was supposed to have fallen. A military expert was sent to the place, and according to his preliminary investigations, it amounted to a couple of copper objects, which partly seemed old, partly lacked marks after the fall to the ground, wherefore neither in this case is there any reason to suppose that they can be components from a space projectile. The copper pieces were found by some playful child.

Three large so-called ghost rockets were observed on Tuesday evening in southern Sweden. The first, which came at 22.15 o'clock, gave out a red shine, while the other two were lighted bright white. The time interval between all three was exactly five minutes, the course was southwesterly and the path horizontal. The speed was said to be many times greater than what a modern airplane could achieve. No sound could be perceived. ~~MT~~

On inquiry the Minister of State has reported that it is not possible for the government to take any steps with any other country's government because of the so-called ghost bombs over Sweden. Of course it has not yet been established what the object is which has been sighted and neither has its origin been established.

Four saw a space projectile tumble toward a Norrland lake.

SUNDSVALL, Wednesday (TT) Four persons who were occupied in a wood yard near a large lake in Central Norrland at 11:30 o'clock on Tuesday noticed an intense hissing in the air. When they looked up they saw an object which was like a small airplane at a ~~xxxxxx~~ few hundred meters height. The object had a short body without a tail and a pair of small, wing-like projections on the sides. It went tremendously fast in the air at about a 65-degree angle [of] descent and fell in the lake. Clear weather prevailed and all the witnesses say they are completely certain of their observation. ~~MT~~

Another Danish sighting.

STRUER, 14 Aug. (TT fr. RB) Monday night a person ~~xxxx~~ here observed a lighted object, which came flying from the northeast. It is thought that a rocket projectile was involved. When located over the city it exploded with a bright luminosity. //

—P.S.— / Mysterious slag-heap falls into tarn.

SUNDSVALL, Wed. (TT) A person located in the vicinity of a tarn in northern Sweden on Wednesday suddenly heard the noise of something which came travelling in the air toward the place where he stood.

The noise grew in strength and suddenly he heard a thud when an object of great weight fell to the ground. It fell five to six meters from the edge of the tarn and had a volume of 10 cubic decimeters. The consistency was alike. At the time it was raining and the weather was hazy, so any projectile which came from a great height could not be seen.

The find was sent in to the defense investigative division for closer examination.

Two persons at a place in central Sweden just before 18 o'clock on Wednesday witnessed an object in the air, which was cigar-shaped and aluminum-colored. It went at a height which was estimated at a 100 meters. From the stern was given off a bright luminosity, but it showed no puff of smoke and fire or the like. The object moved calmly, and "its speed was as fast as an airplane's." It was clearly seen and moved in a direction southeast to northwest. ~~MT~~

Space projectiles over Helsinki.

HELSINGFORS, 14 Aug. (TT) Yesterday evening Helsinki too got a visit from a mysterious space projectile which in appearance seemed to agree well with the [off-mentioned] Swedish ghost rockets. The luminous phenomenon manifested itself most nearly as extremely bright white lightning. It was seen for a fraction of a second but left a red streak which slowly faded out. The phenomenon was sighted at 23.30 o'clock over Brunnsparcken in Helsinki.

1946 August 15 (Th) Morgon-Tidningen, last p.

"Ghost bomb find" in Central Sweden does not impress experts.

The 11-cm. long object of unknown origin which was taken possession of on Wednesday in central Sweden, should not, according to the statements of experts [made] with certainty, issue from any space projectile, reports the defense staff. The same is true of the copper remains which also were taken [today]. These certainly have lain a long time on the ground.

In spite of close examination still nothing up till now has come forth to give a definite basis to judge whether the observed luminous phenomena and suchlike issue from some fall of space projectiles.

The state pays for ghost bomb injuries.

The mysterious space projectiles, which recently have been observed over Sweden, have still not caused any harm, but the question has finally been dealt with of who should pay in case the ghost bombs bring about destruction of people and property. The question is of course difficult to deal with as long as it is not known who lies behind the mysterious firings, but probably of course the state would step in as in [cases] of transgression against neutrality during the war, said the secretary of the State War Damage [Commission], Assistant Justice of Appeals Olof H. Appeltoft, on MT's inquiry.

--The insurance companies have a clause by which they do not pay compensation for damage in connection with "war affairs" During the war we in the war damages commission had to take a position on many cases in connection with breach of neutrality. The Germans tested ~~the~~ their V-2 bomb over Swedish territory, incurring a bit of damage for which the state made payment. Now the state of affairs after the peace is different, but probably it will not now ~~be~~ be the insurance companies that pay the compensation debts, either.

--Fire insurance is hardly valid in such a case, said director Fraenkel in the Folket Samarbeta (People's Cooperative) as well. During the war the insurance companies adjusted for damage of a war character, while afterwards the state paid. In that way many hundred persons were compensated in connection with the Russian bombing of Söder.

1946 August 16 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

The "Projectile" is a steam valve part. / [Experts agree].

The "projectile" find which was depicted on yesterday's third page, has now been exposed, and it is very certainly a 1 1/4 inch steam valve with

It was a mechanic in Edsby who had the kindness to telegraph his discovery to the Svenska Dagbladet. His theory is presumably right, since a metal worker in Stockholm telephoned to say that the thing was a spindle to a [1-inch] steam valve.

Flight director G. Noren, to whom the find was forwarded, [said] himself that it was a part of an old land surveying instrument, but by ~~the~~ Thursday evening had not yet gotten confirmation from the land survey administration. Under no circumstances is ~~it~~ it any object from a space projectile.

Morgon-Tidningen, same date, p. 7. Ghost bomb screw a steam valve?

The screwlike object which was connected with the "ghost bombs" in many parts of Sweden and on Wednesday was forwarded to the defense staff and then represented in the press is, according to what an expert has told the MT, nothing more than the spindle of a steam valve. It is generally common in large buildings with steam boilers.

1946 August 16 (Fri) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 4 (ed.)

Ghost rockets are thought to have brought on a nervous breakdown in the UNT's editorship. In a leading article is shown first a sound skepticism toward the reports streaming in from every place in the country and newspaper declarations that the military authorities still know nothing of whether there is any question of air traffic being struck. So far everything is fine. But then the writer is gripped with fear and anger at the same time and his imagination [runs away]. Perhaps the military knows something after all but conceals it. Perhaps the UT has inspired this reticence. Perhaps the government is [too] afraid of the displeasure of some powerful neighbor (Soviet!) to announce what it knows. Perhaps it is consideration for trade negotiations which causes this "foreign policy timidity (!)"! The public becomes increasingly restless. The government must calm this by putting "its hand heavy and firm on the table."

So it runs on in this vein like an hysterical coffee-aunt (!).
Try a cup and calm yourself!

1946 August 16 (Fri) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 11.

(Fatal accident): / The bomber crash not [because] of space rocket. / HALMSTAD, Thursday (TT).

The crash [inquiry] commission appointed for the air accident in Vaggeryd has not completed its work at the accident site, but there still remain certain flight tests and other investigations before the commission can present its report, emphasized the president of the inquiry commission, Lt. Col. Svenov.

We have established that no explosion took place in the air, said the Lt. Col. This statement was supported by many ~~xxxxxx~~ witnesses who stated that the plane was whole when it struck the ground. Only one witness believed he saw an explosion in the air. Beyond the witnesses' reports pictures of the crash site indicated too that no explosion could have occurred in the air, before the crash. A theory that the plane was struck by a space rocket thus can be dismissed.

1946 August 17 (Sat.) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 13.

Many ghost rockets over Denmark.

KÖPENHAGEN, Friday (SvD's Copenhagen corr.) A line of ghost rockets have been observed over Sjælland. At Helsingør a rocket likewise has been observed and south of Koge two of them have been sighted.

It came out of the south and looked like a glowing giant cigar, and after a certain gap appeared flames about 20 meters long. It only went as low as about 1000 meters altitude, and its course toward the north could be followed plainly. In the afternoon at 17 o'clock from the Triangle in Copenhagen was observed a ghost rocket which went at a very great height and came from the west-southwest in a direction toward the northeast.

Fri. Aug. 16, p. 9 (advertisement). Ghost bombs over Sweden/ --a premonition of "push-button war" [heads the week's hottest current] reportage about the mysterious phenomenon in Swedish air space, which today is everybody's topic of conversation. / See and read this week's number of Se / It is always full of sharp pictures and descriptions-- it gets the pulse of the moment. / It happens today / See it today in Se.

1946 August 18 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 4.

(card 1)

Around... (column) The ghost bomb has circled in our thoughts the past week as well as circled around us. Out on the island where one can still point to the place where Russia in its time stepped into the country and burned [it], one has and conveys the opinion that the Americans ought to pass by and drop some ghost bombs on Moscow, before Molotov [gets ready to pop his cork] and ghost rockets become ~~gap~~ palpable [ones]. The Shakespeare expert can quote Puck:

If this is to be done, it must be done soon,

For the dragon of night sheds his skin with haste.

Now we shall not ~~xxxx~~ forget who first hit upon these things as a way of waging war.

--One should not be taken in by the considerations shown during the Polish campaign, said Hitler in his speech in Danzig on 19 Sept. 1939. There can very well come a moment when we begin to use a weapon [because of] which we cannot be attacked. Perhaps then humanity will be remembered. [?]

Well, the weapon came in the war's last year, but humanity we did not remember. [?] It disappeared from Germany in 1933 if not sooner, because there it was like it was with the rationing in Skåne—[the will was never really there to stick it out]. In the rest of the world it disappeared at the same time as bananas. Now bananas have come g back and have decreased in price since the last rise in value of the Swedish kroner. It is only humanity which still waits. The Germans followed another scale of values [].

No, we cannot remember what humanity was. On the other hand we recall with sometimes good enough memory how, [about] 20 years ago, the German auto factory Opel carried on experiments with a moon rocket. It was a Jules Verne story whose stimulus was fantasy. According to a French weapons expert's dry comment:

--It never got to the moon, but perhaps to Paris.

It appears that it could reach London too, yes, now and then ~~xxx~~ one ~~xxx~~ lost its way during the war into Sweden. Do we have it here again? We gaze [out of] our living rooms with wonder and terror.

We who return from country villages with a cool and calm feeling shall now be able to make a promise: we present 100 kroner to the Help Europe [fund] the same day it can be shown that we test the range of remote-controlled bombs. The accounts have appeared in these columns. But the proof ~~xxxx~~ ought then to be something else than a part of a steam engine, which was sent in lately to the defense staff; technology has advanced a little since Mr. Watt's day. Help for Europe has its chance because naturally it can be thought that the Russians are carrying out tests with German weapons from some base in east Germany and that now and then one can go astray. But what in heaven's name is the reason for shooting over us? Why make the Swedish newspaper report about how ~~xx~~ the projectiles go when they own hundreds of well-controlled square miles to test in? Why put pressure on us--when the first ~~xxxxxxx~~ rule behind spanking a child is that he should know the reason for it? We doubt the ghost rockets, all five of them or all hundred, if you will. [?] Up till now there has been no end to observations of the same sort, and should they all be true, Russians would have to put the whole German toy industry changing to production of ghost bomb launchers. [?] Our doubt sharpens to something like certainty, when our ~~xxxxx~~ own poor country seemingly [all night long] on 11 and 12 August was exposed to intensive bombardment. These dates stay always firm in our memory since childhood's happy years, because precisely on those evenings we were allowed to stay up particularly long, whereupon our astronomically inclined father led us by the hand to look at the wonders of the starry heavens. Then too we both saw falling stars and meteors, but never once did the idea cross my boy's mind that they could be ghost rockets. Fantasy goes onward like technology. No, as it is said, a 100 kroner to Help for Europe for the first [demonstration].

We realize that this is a villainy, a bare and unromantic villainy. But we promise in due time to relate nevertheless for our grandchildren [what it was like] when our country was fired on with ghost bombs in the autumn of anno 46.

--O, thou latter-day child: I do not wish that anyone should put faith in this old story, shall we exclaim [with all our might] to our Selma.

Then we can console ourselves that the wicked Sintram [?] all the while stays ~~xxx~~ sitting on the other side of the Eastern Sea and grumbles in his rocking chair. / E.W.

1946 August 19 (Mon) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

Ghost bomb over Näsäjo.

NÄSÄJO, Sunday (SvD's corresp) A so-called ghost bomb passed over Näsäjo on Sunday morning at 1.40 o'clock. Two persons saw a comet-like fireball pass the city at an apparently low height.

The fireball, which was reflected against the sky at about a decimeter's diameter, moved with seemingly great speed in a westerly direction. In a talk with the Svenska Dagbladet's correspondent, one of the persons who saw the fireball stated that the view was apparently good and that the round projectile had a round-edged lighted surface[?].

but no tail or other features in this line could be observed. It moved in a horizontal plane with some rising in the path, and therefore there could not have been any heavenly body involved.

Space projectile over Sundet.

KOPENHAMN, Sunday (TT fr. RB) On Saturday evening two space projectiles were observed at Öresund outside of Snekkersten. It was still light and the observers declare that the projectiles had the shape of an airplane fuselage. It occasionally ejected sizeable smoke clouds. The projectile, which went slower than an airplane, disappeared in a northerly direction.

Ghost projectile in the area of Borgå.

HELSINGFORS, 18 Aug. (TT) On Saturday morning there was observed a ghost rocket in the Borgå area. The projectile went at about 500 meters height and disappeared in the clouds. It was surrounded in the air by a shine which [might] issue from a magnesium flare.

Scare-shot from a ghost bomb?

CÖTEBORG, Sunday (TT) A mysterious luminosity and a violent clap, both of which may have issued from a so-called ghost projectile, caused excitement late Friday evening in a couple of farms in central Sweden. The explosion took place so close to the habitations that it ~~xxxx~~ began to be feared that a cow-house had caught fire. All around the farms the explosion was heard and in one part [of the place] a luminosity was sighted as well from a glowing ball shortly before the clap.

One part of the witnesses said they were convinced that the space projectile was really a fireball.

1946 August 19 (Mon) Horgon-tidningen, last p.

Space projectile against telephone line.

A person at a place in central Sweden at 18.30 on Sunday observed a lighted ball in space. The lighted ball seemed to be of a croquet ball's size and went plainly into a telephone line, which broke apart. Bits of the telephone line were found, but of the projectile, as far as can be judged, no trace has been found.

1946 August 21 (Wed) New York Times, p. 3.

Doolittle, Sarnoff Stir Swedish Talk / Special to The New York Times.

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 20--Two U.S. experts on aerial warfare, Gen. James Doolittle and David Sarnoff, arrived in Stockholm today, apparently independent of each other. The official explanation is that Gen. Doolittle, who is now vice president of the Shell Oil Company, is inspecting Shell branch offices in Europe and selling oil and gasoline, while General Sarnoff, who is president of the Radio Corporation of America and a former member of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's London staff, is studying the market for radio equipment.

The two men arrive here ~~xxxx~~ as reports on "phantom bombs" are more numerous than ever. The Chief of the Swedish Defense Staff, Col. C.R.S. Kempf, said tonight he was extremely interested in asking the two generals' advice and, if possible, would place all possible reports before them.

General Doolittle, who arrived from Oslo, where he saw King Haakon of Norway, said on his arrival that he was merely on a business trip but was willing to place his knowledge and experience at the disposal of Swedish authorities in case they wanted his advice. He pointed out that it had been possible in England during the war to detect the range of German planes, the place where they took off and their height. He was highly surprised that the Swedes had not yet found a trace of a rocket and also that no theory had been advanced.

General Sarnoff said definitely that it was possible today by means of radar to detect the range, height and even place from which rockets are fired. He said he was willing to give advice if the Swedes wanted it.

1946 August 21 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

Ghost rockets over France too.

PARIS, 20 Aug. (AP) Reports of a long whistling, which the inhabitants of the community of Chatillon on the Seine northwest of Dijon say they have heard every night during the last week, circulated in Paris on Tuesday. According to the Paris newspapers various witnesses have seen "an enormous long projectile" rush forward through space with a long orange-red tail after it.

1946 August 22 (Th) New York Times, p. 2.

Doolittle Consulted by Swedes on Bombs / Special to The New York Times.

STOCKHOLM, Swe., Aug. 21--Swedish authorities consulted Gen. James H. Doolittle today on the mystery missiles which have been coming over Sweden. General Doolittle met the commanders of the Swedish Air Force and some of his staff to discuss the phantom bombs and he read the reports that the Swedish General Staff had received.

Simultaneously a spokesman for the Swedish Defense Staff stated that the Swedes had obtained "certain results with radar, which registered the presence of bombs over the country."

Registrations were made during days when reports on the bombs were most numerous. It is believed that in the near future they will reveal the type and identity of the bomb.

General Doolittle said he was unable to make any statement as it was up to the Swedes to publish anything about military happenings in their country.

A Swedish spokesman said that action had been discussed and certain new measures suggested.

Special to the New York Times.

LONDON, Aug. 21--The Swedish Government, in an effort to trace the source of rockets that have been falling on Swedish territory over the last three months, has approached Great Britain with a view to buying radar equipment.

At the moment British experts are demonstrating radar to Swedish engineers and there is not much doubt that a deal will be made and that both equipment and operators will be shipped to Sweden in the near future.

Fri. Aug. 23, p. 6--Inquiry Into Arms in Germany Seen.

LONDON (Britain wants to investigate reports of Russians manufacturing arms in Germany).

Spokesmen said radar equipment is being sent to Sweden.

Later a Government source said British radar experts who had visited Sweden recently had submitted secret reports to the British Government on the origin of the rockets.

1946 August 22 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 13.

Radar seeks the ghost bombs.

For some time now the possibility has been [entertained] that, with the help of its own radar equipment, the Swedish air force would seek to expose the mysterious ghost bombs.

Also, at one of the radar stations positive returns (contacts) have been gotten, but it cannot be established what caused the return. Since investigations [give evidence] that the return could not be caused in any "natural" manner, or by a passing airplane, observation balloon or the like, the phenomenon has been transferred to the ghost bomb's account.

12 "ghost bombs" up till now over Denmark.

KÖPENHAMN, Wednesday (AP) At least 12 "ghost bombs" have been observed up till now over Denmark, one of which is believed to have exploded over Copenhagen. As a result of the increasing "traffic" the authorities have requested the press to no longer mention where a particular bomb was observed, but instead to use phrases such as "somewhere in northern Denmark," etc.

August 21, p. 3. Ghost rockets can be guided by radar. [David Sarnoff visits Sweden on a business trip for RCA and discusses radar guidance, mentioning that a missile might be guided at a distance of 75-150 km.]

1946 August 22 (Th) Horgon-tidningen, p. 3.

Radar has been tested against ghost bombs.

The Swedish defense staff has, as the American general Sarnoff already foresaw in yesterday's MI interview, carried out on its own investigations into the ghost bombs with help from radar. Definite contact has been made, but the size of the projectiles and wherefrom they come, there is still nothing known. Theories about meteors should be written off due to the radar, however.

An effective ghost bomb hunt demands setups with both long and short wavelengths, and since every radar [unit] requires three to four men's services it is understood that there are not enough men. But even if the defense staff got any results, they certainly would not give publicity to them, so these observations in such cases might not come to the sender's attention.

Piece found after bomb in Denmark.

The space projectiles over Denmark, according to the Nationaltidende, appear to be a reality, and since now military experts have gotten hold of ~~xxxx~~ metal parts from one or more projectiles and are carrying on investigations of them, they have entered into collaboration with Swedish military technicians to try to clarify the matter.

On the side of the Swedish military it was stated on TT's inquiry [that] nothing was known about the collaboration referred to in the above telegram.

Brightly lighted bomb over South Sweden.

Two persons observed, about 1.30 a'clock Wednesday morning from a place in southern Sweden, a phenomenon in the sky which recalled the so called space projectiles. It was a fireball which passed parallel to the ground directly over the spectators' heads.

It emitted an intense light and had a tail of fire after it. No sound was heard. After a moment the ball itself disappeared, but the fiery tail could be seen from 4 to 5 seconds afterwards. The direction was west-southwest.

xx p. 1. Danes find metal piece of a ghost bomb.

A ghost projectile in Denmark has left a trace after it. Military experts have gotten hold of the metal piece and are collaborating, according to the Nationaltidende, with Swedish technicians in an investigation. On Sweden's side such collaboration is denied, however. The Swedes have pursued investigations after the ghost bombs ~~xxx~~ with the help of echo radio (radar) and have even achieved positive results.

1946 August 23 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

Ghost bomb was a wind balloon. / Observatory saw an exploding star.

The observatory in Saltsjöbaden [spoke out] on Thursday from Tranenbergs, where at 18 o'clock was observed a motionless "lighted ball" over Ulvsundasjön. The object gave off a bright shine and the observers thought as well that they sighted a faint smoke around it.

Also in Stocksund was the phenomenon observed. There at 19 o'clock a "slowly and jerkily moving star" was seen. It moved slowly from the northwest toward the south at a height of about 1000 meters, whereupon it suddenly went out.

When the observatory in Saltsjöbaden, as a result of the Tranenbergs alarm, took to viewing the heavens, they discovered an object which looked like a brightly luminous star at a height of 18000-20000 meters. It appeared several minutes, but was thought to explode at 18.57 c'clock in a northwesterly direction from the observatory. One immediately had the feeling that it acted like solar reflection [striking] some balloon.

The weather bureau at Bromma could give a conclusive solution to the puzzle: From the radiosonde station there a balloon with measuring Instruments in a box underneath was sent up. It was released up to a height of close to 20000 meters--where it was scheduled to burst. The reflections, which could be seen as well from Bromma, started when sunlight fell on the bright metal sides which surrounded the instrument box.

1946 August 23 (Fri) Horgon-Tidningen, p. 15.

The ghost bomb fantasy and the radar purchase.

Negotiations about Swedish purchase of radar apparatus in England and the USA has led in English newspapers to report that this purchase is connected with English help toward Sweden to solve the ghost bomb problem. This is denied categorically, however, by the Swedish Air Force as well as official British spokesmen.

The truth of the matter is that the negotiations came about in order that the present Swedish radar equipment, out of security reasons, is unsatisfactory in use against the Vampire-planes which were bought in England. Therefore it has not the slightest connection with the recent rocket projectiles over Sweden. Any foreign help in the last-named connection is on the whole undesirable.

1946 August 24 (Sat) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 20.

The "ghost bomb" found.

The radiosonde (balloon) which was sighted on Thursday over Stockholm's northern suburbs and to begin with was thought to be a space projectile was found on Friday morning by a municipal worker in Aspudden. He turned it in at the Liljeholm police station, where the box (case) was investigated and a report was made of the finding which was forwarded to the Meteorological and Hydrophysical Institute for the reward of 10 kroner which accordingly the municipal worker is to collect.

pp. 3, 20. [article on radio-guided missiles as future weapons.]
1946 August 29 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 14.

Space projectile explodes.

KÖPENHAMN, Wednesday (TT) An exploding space projectile stirred up the inhabitants of a small village in northern Jylland on Tuesday evening. A peculiar yellow-white light was discovered at 21.30 o'clock and immediately thereafter came a sphere-shaped object at tree-top height and exploded and sent out a sea of fire, which looked like a thousand stars falling. A projectile was observed over eastern Denmark as well. It went at great height.

Reddish fireball, unheard-of speed.

MALMO, Wednesday (TT) Two so-called space projectiles were seen on Tuesday evening in southern Sweden. They came at 21 o'clock, about five minutes apart, in a direction south-north, and height estimated at around 200 meters. Both shone reddish and were nearly ball-shaped, besides which one had a tail behind it. The speed was tremendously fast.

"A little black cloud came travelling."

UPPSALA, Wednesday (TT) A sky phenomenon was observed on Tuesday afternoon at 17.30 o'clock over a lake in central Sweden. At around 100-400 meters above the surface of the water came "a little black cloud" travelling and it disappeared with unheard-of speed out of the range of vision. No whirlwind could be involved, the informant thinks.
1946 September 4 (Wed) New York Times, p. 10.

Russians Cry 'Slander' to Rocket-Firing Charge / By Reuter.

MOSCOW, Sept. 3--The Soviet journal New Times denounced as anti-Soviet slander today allegations that radio-controlled shells fired by Russians were crossing Swedish territory.

The paper said that, although one Swedish newspaper had concluded that the alleged missiles were nothing but a mirage, the "panic" spread by the reports was not a mirage but real fact.

The denunciation formed part of a new serial "dedicated to a systematic exposure of anti-Soviet misinformation and slander which is poisoning the international atmosphere." Flow of such material, New Times declared, was incessantly increasing.

Other examples that the magazine dealt with were the purported mass kidnappings of German youths by the Russians, which "proved untrue and poisoned the air like a bad egg," and allegations about the recent Soviet-Afghan border agreement.
1946 September 4 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3. (card 1)

Ghost bomb awakens interest in England. / Star reporter sent to Sweden.

LONDON 3 Sept. (SvD's London editor) The flying projectile over Sweden now meets the standards [belongs to the standard matter of] of the British press. Scarcely a day goes by at present without some of the great newspapers having articles on this phenomenon. An overview of the Swedish clippings out of the British provincial press indicates that a great number of newspapers contain notices or long articles on the matter.

On the first page of the Tuesday issue of the Daily Mail turns up an article by its famous foreign reporter, Alexander Clifford, located in Stockholm. Like most of the other English commentators he has come to the conclusion that the projectiles are fired by the Russians. Like most other journalists he is convinced as well that the "ghost bombs" are the foremost topic in Sweden: "Deep in the heart of Sweden the country creates a new folklore around them."

What worries and sometimes angers the Swedes, Clifford goes on, is the question of why the Russians choose their country for experimentation. They wonder if anything in particular lies behind it. For an answer only new theories come up, and none are particularly credible. This is the worst thing of all. "With closed lips the Russians experiment in public with a machine, which does not leave the slightest trace and in so doing defies many scientific laws. It is a disquieting to have overhead during its development." Most Swedes, states Clifford, have abandoned the idea that the bombs are directed against Sweden, but they think instead that the air space over their country is exposed to experimentation. They certainly are strongly aware of their position as the "filling in the sandwich" between East and West, and they are a very good and tasty filling too. They have just gotten into the FN(=U.N.?) and face problems of how they shall vote. Is it wise to vote with Russia? Is it fair to vote with the Western democracies? They are just now in the course, with many ticklish negotiations, of a business deal with the Russians.

The ghost bombs, concludes Clifford, are considered by the Swedes as a disharmonious [intrusion] in life in Sweden with [its abundant existence]. The bombs give an unpleasant idea of what the next war will be like. "On this matter are the Swedes [left] with a feeling of discomfort about the sky above them, and guessing that all the while the Russians know. The mystery for them is not mysterious. And how they must laugh when they read an article like this." / Raamus. Experiment stations in Yugoslavia too?

A "ghost bomb" was, according to Italian newspaper reports, observed yesterday over the Adriatic Sea. Fishermen from Ancona have reported that they observed the mysterious projectile, which fell down into the sea and threw up a high vapor cloud. Since neither artillery fire from a warship took place in those waters nor was any military airplane reported over the area, it is thought that the projectile was a rocket bomb of the German V type, which was fired from a base on Yugoslavian territory. These observations are connected with rumors that the Russians might have established an experimental base in Yugoslavia on the model of the great base at Peenemuende. The Russians talk about lies and panic.

MOSCOW, 3 Sept. (AP) On the Russian side has been taken up now the reports about "ghost projectiles" in Sweden, and the Swedish press is criticized sharply in the Novoe Vremia for its uncontrolled articles, in which it is stated that it is a question of radio-directed projectiles which have been sent out by the Russians. "Panic," they claim, "spread so quickly that the Swedish defense establishment gets a hundred reports a day of observed projectiles."

"The Swedish lies are also supported from outside," it is further claimed in Novoe Vremia, which states that the Reuters bureau reported that England intends to give Sweden radar equipment in order to seek to clear up the origin of the projectiles.

"But soon talk naturally bubbled [tongues began to wag], and the Swedish defense staff found that the matter, traced to the stated place, had nothing to do with projectiles," said the newspaper, which drew the conclusion that the rumors were given spread in Sweden to increase suspicion and mistrust of the Soviet Union.

[Rumor has it that the Russians have built an "atom city" of 400,000 where scientists and technicians are working on a "cosmic bomb."] 1946 September 6 (Fri) New York Times, p. 11 (continued fr. p.1)

Carrier Cancels Athens Air Show (AP) Athens, Sept. 5

Acting Foreign Minister Stephanos Stephanopoulos supported a statement in London by Premier Constantinos Tsaldaris that flying rockets had been seen in northern Greece. He said that Greek divisional commanders and British officers had seen them both east and west of Salonika.

He said that rockets, estimated to be flying at a height of 5,000 to 10,000 yards, had been seen specifically at Drama, 110 miles north east of Salonika and just below the Bulgarian border. He added that an investigation was under way.

Sat. Sept. 7 p. 4--Air Show in Athens Called Unfeasible (Special to NYT) Athens, Sept. 6 ... / British Scout Rocket Reports...

The British Embassy issued a news release tonight discounting reports that flying rockets had been seen over northern Greece.

The release, emphasizing that no British officer had reported seeing such missiles, said the rockets could have been a type of flare, such as a Very pistol, a number of which have been reported in the area.

1946 September 8 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

Rocket bomb made in the Harz.

Rocket bombs of the V4 type now are manufactured on a large scale in a forest factory in the southern Harz within the Russian occupation zone, says the New York Herald Tribune's Berlin correspondent.

A thousand German engineers and technicians are occupied with the manufacture, overseen by 170 Russian officers with two generals at the head.

The two German engineers Hartung and Geister, who constructed the German war fleet's last ocean-model U-boat, are today employed by the Russians.

The American correspondent adds that hitherto only some of the facts were exposed about the extent of the Russian war industry in eastern Germany.

1946 September 11 (Wed) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 13.

Space projectile over southern Sweden.

MALMO, Tuesday (TT) A space projectile consisting of a nucleus with a clear blue-white light and a shining tail, was observed on Tuesday over southern Sweden by many persons.

Th. Sept. 12, p. 11. Space projectile also over West Sweden. GÖTEBORG, Wednesday (TT) In a couple of places in western Sweden was observed on Tuesday evening a phenomenon which was thought by everyone to be a space projectile. The thing was sphere-shaped with a light streaming after it. It stretched forth under the clouds and about the same velocity as the flight of a fast fighter plane.

1946 September 13 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

Ghost bomb over Austria.

WEIN, 12 Sept. (TT fr. Reuter) According to another unconfirmed report received here, a mysterious rocket projectile (ship) passed over the city of Graz in the British occupation zone on Thursday afternoon. The projectile went at a great height in a northwesterly direction.

1946 September 14 (Sat.) Svenska Dagbladet, last p.

Lothring residents saw a mysterious meteor.

PARIS, 13 Sept. (TT fr. Reuter) Persons living in Nancy in Lothringen reported today that yesterday evening a "mysterious meteor" was observed in the heavens which went in a direction from south to north. "What I saw could not possibly have been an airplane light or a shooting star," said one eyewitness. "Two shining bodies connected by a line of fire passed through space and from the rear of the projectiles streamed a phosphorescent light. The velocity was as great as that of the fastest fighter plane," said the eyewitness. Several days later a "meteor" was observed by persons living in the city of Longwy in Lothringen.

1946 September 17 (Tues) New York Times, p. 8.

'Missile' Is a Meteorite / Swedish Physicist Is Skeptical About Reports of Firing

Dr. Manne Siegbahn, 59-year old Swedish nuclear physicist and Nobel Prize winner, who arrived here yesterday from Goeteborg, Sweden, on the Swedish American liner Drottningholm, expressed doubts about recent reports that rocket bombs had been fired over Sweden.

"There is no clear evidence that any guided missiles have been flying over Sweden," Dr. Siegbahn declared. "I myself, examined one reported to be such a missile and found it was a meteorite. I am very suspicious about the existence of such a thing."

Dr. Siegbahn, who came to the United States to confer with American physicists and as Swedish delegate to the forthcoming bicentennial celebration of Princeton University, declared that "hysteria" might have been a factor in reports about the missiles.

Carl J. Hambro, Norwegian delegate to the General Assembly of the U.N., also arrived on the ship.

1946 September 18 (Wed.) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

Ghost bomb over Denmark was a meteor.

Not all ghost rockets are "genuine." According to what the Svenska Dagbladet's Copenhagen correspondent gathered from absolutely reliable sources, it has been declared after closer investigation that the "ghost rocket" which on September 10 in the evening was observed at various places in Denmark was a meteor which went over the sky from east to west.

1946 October 11 (Fri) New York Times, p. 3.

Swedish Inquiry Fails to Solve Rocket Case / By the Associated Press.

STOCKHOLM, Oct. 10--Swedish military authorities said today that they had been unable to discover after four months of investigation the origin or nature of the ghost rockets that have been flying over Sweden since May.

A special communiqué declared that 80 percent of one thousand reports on the rockets could be attributed to "celestial phenomena," but that radar equipment had detected some objects "which cannot be the phenomena of nature or products of imagination, or be referred to as Swedish airplanes."

The report added, however, that the objects were not the V-type bombs used by the Germans in the closing days of the war.

(same p.--Armed Forces send V-2 rocket 102 mi. hi from White Sands, rocket reaches 3600mph).

Th Oct. 24, p. 12--Sweden to get 90 P-51's / U.S. Gives Permission for Sale of Surplus Fighter Planes.

Washington, Oct. 23 (AP)---

Swedish Legation officials said the planes would be used to strengthen Sweden's air force. They maintained the sale had no connection with Sweden's efforts to trace the mysterious "rockets" reported over the country in recent months.

1946 October 11 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 17.

Most "ghost projectiles" have been celestial phenomena, / BUT MANY CASES UNSOLVED. /

The majority of sightings of luminous phenomena over Sweden certainly result from celestial phenomena, it says in a comparison of reports and conclusions since last spring, which the defense staff has made. One of the sightings still cannot be explained without having to rely on some kind of occurrence of a different sort.

Not enough reports are in hand, meanwhile, to be able to draw firm conclusions with any certainty concerning their nature, origin and appearance.

The first reports of strange luminous phenomena over the country began to come in to the press and military authorities at the end of May 1946. By the beginning of July hardly [two] days went by in succession [without] a large number of reports from various parts of the country. A similar increase occurred again at the beginning of August. In between the frequency of reports has been relatively low and during September fell to about a single case a day.

Through collaboration with astronomers it was clear that the two "peaks" in July and August probably were caused by meteors or meteorites.

Even at an early date measures were taken through which the military authorities tried to keep a close watch over the aerial territory and sought to clear up the phenomenon. Sure indications were obtained by radar and also by other instruments, but it proved impossible to establish from this what kind of object it was.

Of about 1000 reports which came in to the defense staff it is believed about 80 percent are really celestial luminous phenomena. The remaining reports concern objects of various shapes, as a rule combined with light and sometimes also sound phenomena. Most observations are very vague and must be treated with great skepticism. In some cases quite unequivocally precise observations are made which cannot be assigned to natural phenomena or fantasy productions and neither, according to investigations made, can be considered Swedish airplanes. Some projectile trajectories cannot satisfactorily be [accounted for]. Out of no case of crashes has come forth anything which can be considered as material which might issue from some fallen space projectile. In certain lakes has much search effort been made because of supposed crashes. So far, however, no find has turned up which can be presumed to come from a weapon of the V-type.

1946 October 15 (Tues) San Diego Union, p. 1.

Space Ship Flaps Wings Over San Diego, 'Observers' Claim.

An explanation from Los Angeles that an "interplanetary space ship" reputedly sighted over San Diego was only a Western Airlines plane was flatly rejected last night by Dr. Meade Layne, of 3615 Alexis place, who described himself as an investigator in the field of parapsychology.

Layne emphasized that he did not see the space ship he believes came from another planet and hovered over San Diego for several hours Wednesday night, but he said 30 other persons had seen it and seven or eight had reported seeing it flap its wings.

The parapsychologist said "a medium whom I've always found reliable" had transmitted the "information" that the ship came from another planet, used a "gravitational screen" to fly through space and small electric motors to flap its wings in the earth's atmosphere.

1946 October 18 (Fri) San Diego Union, p. 2.

Search for Rocket Flares Reported at Sea Fruitless

Rocket flares, reportedly seen on the horizon at sea by a Carlsbad resident, sent a coast guard plane on a fruitless search of the ocean area last night. Lt. E.P. Preston, duty officer at the Coast Guard air station, reported.

A twin-engined amphibious plane, piloted by A. Flapp, was dispatched to the area but found nothing. Several other times in recent weeks coast guard planes have gone out in search of ships or planes in distress after residents had reported seeing flares off the coast, but source of the flares has not been found.

1946 October 21 (Mon) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 5.

"Ghost bomb" falls in a lake.

A peculiar object which fell into a lake in southern Sweden is now the object of an investigation. Two persons who were located on the lakeshore, heard a whistling sound in the air, something like when a flock of birds passes by. They then observed an object, which came over the treetops going at a low altitude. It was dart-shaped, supplied with something like short wings and a ball-shaped tip. The projectile fell directly out from the shoreline and probably exploded on impact.

1946 October 26 (Sat) New York Times, p. 2.

Stolpmuende Called Rocket Base / Special to The New York Times.

STOCKHOLM, Swe., Oct. 25--Stolpmuende on the Baltic, 125 miles northeast of Stettin, is the Russian base from which mysterious rocket bombs have been fired over Sweden, according to a young German who arrived in Sweden yesterday as a refugee. After the end of the war, he said he saw the Russians carry the main equipment from the Peenemuende base to Stolpmuende, where the Germans had smaller V-weapon sites. The refugee declared he often heard the "thunder" as projectiles were launched across the Baltic toward Sweden.

1946 November 21 (Th) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 10.

"Ghost rocket" observed by Russian polar station.

LONDON, 20 Nov. (AP) A meteor was sighted on November 12 by Leningrad's arctic polar station at Providencia Bay in Siberia, reported Moscow radio on Wednesday. "The meteor was observed for 22 seconds at 20 to 25 degrees elevation over the horizon and its course described an almost straight line," it says in the report, wherein it is declared that it "gave the impression of a white-hot flying cannon-ball." The speed was relatively low. The meteor's color was red-violet and its tail was blue, it says in the description which to some extent recollects the meteor-like objects which in recent months were observed over the Scandinavian countries.

1947 March 22 (Sat) New York Times, p. 8d.

'Phantom Bomb' Returns to Skies Over Sweden / Special to the New York Times.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, March 21.--Another of the "phantom bombs" that were seen frequently over Sweden last fall was observed today over the southern part of the country by several persons. At first they thought it an airplane, but looking more intently they noticed that smoke was coming from the tail and that its shape differed from that of a plane.

The projectile was flying from east to west at a considerable height. The witnesses described it as a cigar-shaped metallic body, approximately 60 feet long, traveling at slow speed and making no noise.

The "bomb" was visible for a considerable time and smoke was observed long after the projectile disappeared. Judging from the smoke, the missile turned at a certain point and flew back eastward.

June 28, 1947 Fort Wayne, Ind., News-Sentinel (Sat.) p. 19

Railroad Engineer/Reports Sighting/Fast-Flying Discs
Joliet, Ill., June 27 (AP)—A railroad engineer reported today he had seen a group of fast-flying discs in the sky near here Tuesday—the same day an Idaho businessman reported having sighted a similar phenomenon over western Washington.

Charles Kastl, of Joliet, an engineer for the Elgin, Joliet and Eastern Railroad for 33 years, said he saw the discs about 1:50 p.m. (CST) Tuesday while he was driving to work.

"There were about nine of them in a formation—flat circular objects—going faster than any airplane I ever saw," Kastl said. "They appeared to be very high flying south, and weaving slightly in flight, and every now and then, one would reflect the sunlight in a brilliant flash.

"I got the impression that they were somehow being towed although I could see nothing ahead of them. They were in sight about 25 seconds and then a building obstructed my view."

Kenneth Arnold, Boise, Idaho, reported seeing a similar formation at 10,000-foot altitude over the Cascade Mountains in Western Washington Tuesday afternoon.

July 2, 1947 Fort Wayne, Ind., News-Sentinel (Wed.) p. 20

Huntington Man Thinks/He Saw 'Discs' Maybe
(Special to the News-Sentinel)

Huntington, July 2—Kenneth Johnson, this city, returning from Columbia City last Friday night, saw three "kites with tails" which travelled at high speed through the heavens, spreading light that illuminated whole fields, he declares.

He at first thought the phenomenon was lightening, but after reading about "flying discs" allegedly seen in other parts of the country, he wonders.

The weather was threatening at the time.

July 3, 1947 Fort Wayne, Ind., News-Sentinel (Thurs) p. 5

'Flying Discs' Are Carnival Lights, Woman Believes
(Special to News-Sentinel)

Huntington, July 3.—The "flying discs" and "kites with tails of fire" seen in Indiana skies after dark are believed to be reflections from the beam of high-powered searchlights carried by a carnival company.

Mr. and Mrs. Dean Swander visited a carnival at Muncie about two weeks ago and saw three of the big lights, surplus Army equipment, demonstrated as a novelty. Swander was told the beams could be seen from 60 to 200 miles. The next night from Huntington she saw beams in the south, apparently from the same lights.

The "kites with tails" seen by Kenneth Johnson last Friday night when a rain storm threatened could have been the beams being played on clouds, she said.

July 8, 1947 Fort Wayne, Ind., News-Sentinel (Tues.) p. 9 (Card 1)

Mystery of Sky May Go Back Several Decades, Book Reveals
Los Angeles, July 8. (EIS)—The mystery of the "flying saucers" is not new. It goes back three decades and even further.

The only thing new is the designation of them as "flying saucers." In "Forgotten Mysteries," a book published early this year (months before the "flying saucers" were sighted) R. Dewitt offers two cases which suspiciously resemble the current mystery:

(1) "A strange procession of unknown things was seen in the sky on February 9, 1913, according to reports gathered by Astronomer-Professor Chant of Toronto and published in the journal of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada.

"Prof. Chant's collection of observations covered numerous (garbl) Luminous Body Seen "Early in the evening of February 9, a luminous body was seen near the horizon. Soon it began travelling in a straight line across the sky. It was observed that '...the body ~~xxxx xxxxxxxx~~ ~~streaky~~ was composed of three or four parts with a tail to each part.' This group or structure moved with a 'peculiar majestic deliberation. It disappeared in the distance, and another group emerged from its place of origin.' A third group followed.

"According to another observer, 'There were probably 30 or 32 bodies, and the peculiar thing about them was their moving in fours and threes and twos, abreast of one another; and so perfect was the lining-up that you would have thought it was an aerial fleet maneuvering after rigid drilling.'"

(2) "The British steamship, IBIS Caroline, was steaming slowly through the East China Sea, between Shanghai and Japan, on the night of February 24, 1893. At 10 p.m. some 'unusual lights' were reported to Captain Charles J. Norcock. He went on deck to investigate.

Lights Clearly Visible

"The lights were clearly visible between the ship and the shadowy mass of the coast line. At that point the land rose 6,000 feet, and the lights were below the summit of this mountain.

"There were several lights, appearing to have a globular shape. Sometimes they moved together as a mass, then they would string out in a line. Finally, after having been under observation for two hours, they bore northward until they were lost to sight.

"The following night the lights were again visible... moreover, they cast a reflection on the water below them... in the same locality and at about the same time Captain Castle of the IBIS Reander saw similar lights. Captain Castle altered course and made towards them. The lights moved away as if trying to evade the ship."

The descriptions seem to check with those of people who claim to have seen the "flying saucers."

Perhaps this will help clear up the mystery.
July 8, 1947 Fort Wayne, Ind., News-Sentinel (Tues.) p. 23 (side A)

Three Decatur Women/See 'Things' in Sky (Speed North to South)
Borne, July 8.—Yes, Adams County people have seen them too, the "flying discs." Three Decatur women, Mrs. Grover Clouser and the Misses Janet Brown and Vida Williamson all report seeing one of the strange objects go over the city at a high altitude Sunday night. They describe the object as a huge thing, with a bowl effect. It was more the silver color of a fluorescent light than the red glow of a fire, they said. The object is said by the three ladies to have travelled at a fast rate of speed.

July 8, 1947 Fort Wayne, Ind., News-Sentinel (Tues.)

p. 8: Editorial Cartoon—"Don't you recognize those 'flying saucers?'" (U.S. dollars thrown by Truman to Europe over head of an American taxpayer)

p. 25: They were so big (hands spread 12-16 inches)—Patrolman Frederick Schlauch shows the size of the flying saucer he says he saw in the sky just as he looked after changing an automobile tire in Elizabeth, New Jersey. They were diving and fluttering on their way to the northeast he says. (AP Wirephoto) (suggestion of Dec-4)

p. 1: 'Disc' Was A Saw Blade—Object reported as a "flying disc" which struck a Milwaukee, Wisconsin, church turned out to be a circular saw blade with wire and two small tubes attached. Father Joseph Brasky of the church holds the "disc." (Acme Telephoto)
July 9, 1947 Fort Wayne, Ind., News-Sentinel (Wed.) p. 24

'Flying Saucer'/Hoosier's Alibi/ For Fast Driving
Indianapolis, Indiana, July 9 (EIS)—The "flying saucers" were in the center of a number of developments in Indiana Tuesday.

Joseph J. Kuritz, of South Bend, who was arrested for speeding, said he was pursuing a "disc," adding:

"It was a low-flying, fiery, copper-colored disc and was going about 200 miles an hour. I had it in sight for about ten minutes."

Another resident of South Bend, Kenneth G. Merrill, president of a manufacturing company, offered the following explanation for the aerial stranger:

"I think that what appears to be flying discs is the result of radio transmissions of enormously potent electrical energy."

Mark Purcell, noted Rushville weather seer, said he feared that the "saucers" were related to the atomic bomb and the destruction of the German arsenal at Hiltigoland and that they were playing bob with the weather in general.

An Indianapolis woman was sent to the mental ward of the city hospital when she was found hacking holes in the sidewalk with a hatchet. She explained that she was trying to drive the "saucers" away.

Kenneth Stanford, of Crawfordsville, declared that he had seen ~~ex~~ five "discs" moving in a northeasterly direction at high speed.

July 10, 1947 Fort Wayne, Ind., News-Sentinel (Thurs) p. 30

Bluffton Sees 'Flying Saucers' Too, Thinks They Are Surveyors' Lights

Bluffton, July 10.—Bluffton citizens began getting into the "flying saucers" mystery today as several persons reported seeing "balls of fire with long tails" streaming through the sky at night. While several such reports have been noted here recently, it is thought that these have no bearing on the supposedly flying discs reportedly sighted by numerous persons across the Nation.

The "balls of fire" seen around this area have been noted only at night and are believed to be caused by powerful beacon lights employed by Government surveyors in this area who have been mapping the terrain for the last few months. The light rays playing on low-hanging, rolling fog might produce the effect of a boiling flame or ball of fire.

July 11, 1947 Fort Wayne, Ind., News-Sentinel (Fri.) p. 2

Norway Reports 'Flying Saucers'

Stockholm, July 11. (EIS)—Norwegians reported today that "flying saucers" have appeared over Southern Norway.

Three persons asserted that they had seen such an object at Slotfoss at 7:30 p.m. last night. They could not estimate its altitude but said that it blinked like the stars.

p. 6: Humorous comment on editorial page—In the kitchen its flying rolling pins and in the sky flying saucers.

p. 11: A Flying Disc?—This disc is flying but it is plainly nothing more than a pie pan (a fast-action camera photographs a pan rolled by—used as a way to test cameras (??—irrel.)
July 12, 1947 Fort Wayne, Ind., News-Sentinel (Sat.) p. 19

Camp Scott Housewife/Sees Saucer Flying By

Those flying saucers just keep on rolling along. This time it was a Camp Scott housewife, Mrs. Florence Ritchie, who sighted a saucer as she was stringing the family wash on the line about 2 p.m. Friday.

She screamed and the neighbors—jumpy souls—came a-runnin'. Says Mrs. Ritchie: "They were just floating along like balloons towards the east. Sometimes they would go behind a cloud but we watched them for several minutes. They reminded us of plates being rolled along on their edges."

Then, Friday night, David Ludlum, 2326 Gay Street, insisted he saw one over the downtown area going northwest about 9:45 p.m.

July 14, p. 10: No Need For a Lot of Discussion (picture of two boys looking skyward while they fish--house paint ad).
October 20, 1947 Fort Wayne, Ind., News-Sentinel (Mon.) p. 19

Reporter Swears She Saw Flying Disc Here

That Unexplained phenomenon of the night sky is back--the flying saucers.

The observer is a thoroughly seasoned newspaper reporter who insists on being anonymous. She said she actually saw what appeared to be a flying disc, soaring over the northeast part of the city at 10:57 Saturday night.

About the size of a pie plate, she said, its leading edge was dark and its trailing edge was illuminated to the intensity of a bright moon. She estimated it was visible for roughly two seconds.

She ventured that she believes it might have been the handiwork of some practical joker.

December 22, 1947 Fort Wayne, Ind., News-Sentinel (Mon.) p. 1

Flying Discs Said to Be Russian Rockets
Washington, Dec. 22. (AP)--Representative Ellsworth (R., Ore.) revived reports today that last summer's "flying saucer" epidemic may have stemmed from Russian rocket experiments.

Claiming he has received reliable information concerning the development of high velocity missiles by Soviet scientists, the Oregon lawmaker added in a statement:

"Strangely enough, this development might be the solution of the now almost forgotten mystery of the flying saucers."

He said the Russians are reported to have a rocket of amazing speed and "almost limitless range" propelled by a series of explosions occurring several seconds apart.

U.S. Tests Unlikely

Ellsworth suggested American scientists might have been working on some similar device, but he held it more likely that any discs actually seen had come from Russian military proving grounds.

There were similar reports at the time the flying saucer wave swept the country earlier this year, but they were given no official credence.

Ellsworth was not immediately available after issuing his statement for amplification.

Dec. 1, 1947--Soviets building infra-red death ray with help of captured German scientists.

Jan. 1, 1948, p. 5--sea serpent
Fri. Jan. 2, p. 24--superlatives by AP news featurists--Most Ado About Nothing--Flying Saucers.
1948 February 25 (Wed) Times (London), p. 30.

ROCKETS OVER THE BALTIC / Estimated Speed of 6,750 M.P.H. / FROM OUR AERONAUTICAL CORRESPONDENT

Scandinavian visitors to this country report that rockets have recently been seen travelling at very high speeds over Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and coastal waters, coming from the direction of Peenemünde, the German experimental centre where V 1 flying bombs and V 2 rockets were developed. Peenemünde is now in the Russian zone. The missiles are almost invariably seen at 9.30 a.m.

The rockets have been seen at various heights, ranging from just over the tree tops to 25,000ft. They emit a bluish-green flame, but--unlike the V 2 rockets--leave no trail in the sky. Their speed is estimated at between two and three kilometres a second, equivalent to about 4,500 to 6,750 m.p.h. Observers say that their trajectory appears to follow the curvature of the earth's surface.

TIMED WITH STOP WATCH.

Such missiles have been noticed three times in recent weeks by pilots of D.N.L., the Norwegian Air Lines. One was seen a few days ago off Skagen, the most northerly point of Denmark, by the pilot of a D.N.L. aircraft, Captain A. Hartvedt, president of the Norwegian air-line pilots' association, who during the war served with the Royal Norwegian Air Force from British bases. He and his co-pilot noticed a missile flying at between 20,000 and 22,000 ft. They timed it with a stop-watch; it disappeared over the horizon in four seconds.

Peenemünde is on the Baltic coast of Germany, about 60 miles north-west of Stettin and 25 miles north-west of Swinemünde, opposite Rügen Island. During the war it was Germany's main experimental establishment not only for both types of V weapons but also for other experimental missiles, aircraft, radar, and armament. It was subjected to two devastating attacks in August, 1943, by R.A.F. Bomber Command, and in July, 1944, by the United States 8th Air Force operating from Britain.

1952 July 14 (Mon) Fort Wayne News-Sentinel, p. 8.

Hoosiers Certain They Saw 'Saucer'
INDIANAPOLIS (UP)--A handful of Hoosiers were still sure today they saw a "flying saucer."

It was sighted in Evansville and Indianapolis, was like "an enlarged light bulb" or "an elongated ball of fire," and traveled about 900 miles per hour, they said.

"It was not a meteor. It was not a shooting star. It was a controlled aircraft of some sort," said American Airlines Captain Richard Case who saw the object southeast of here Saturday night.

He estimated that the object flew three times as fast as his plane, which travelled 300 miles an hour.

John [Kouk], Evansville, described the object as a "very white flame and not too long a tail." Eddie Scherokman, a Chicago and Southern Airlines co-pilot, said when it crossed the skies near Evansville "it was traveling too slow to be a meteor and too fast to be a plane."
Witnesses said the object passed from sight within a few seconds. Donovan W. Peters, Indianapolis, said, "It was round in front and tapered off in back."

ADDENDUM I.

1848 and its erratic companion over the Holm-hills, which might be equal to an orbital distance of three degrees. There they shone with a bright flickering light till about 10 o'clock, when they moved, making a slight curve westward, but directed their course towards the north, till the bright body fixed itself over the citadel, and the other over the wooden bridge. The speed with which they migrated was prodigious. Thus, suppose the mean distance of Venus from the earth (sun) to be 74,591,337 miles, which is equal to the semi-diameter of her orbit, this multiplied by 6, or 3 diameters, gives the orbit--447,548,022. The orbital distance traversed by these bodies may be estimated at 30 degrees, which, reckoning their distance from the earth equal to ours that of ours, they accomplished a journey of 37,295,668 1/2 miles in the short space of twenty minutes. Probably some of your scientific readers may be able to explain this phenomenon, which may be seen every evening, or at least might have been seen, as above stated, for the last nine of ten months.
1859 October 15 (Sat) London Times, p. 11.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES. /

Sir.--I send to you an account of a most extraordinary appearance in the sky this evening, which has quite frightened the superstitious here. We had had a fine day except two short showers in the afternoon, the wind had been southeast till this evening, when it changed to south: the moon rose in a nearly cloudless sky; there were scattered rain clouds in the eastern horizon, and rather a dense bank in the western horizon; a few very light filmy rain clouds were moving rapidly from south-east to north-east. At 6:30 there was a slight shower, after which the sky was almost cloudless, the only kind of clouds being a very few thin rain clouds at a low elevation. The moon was unusually bright. At 7:20 a brilliant red light appeared to the south by east, about half-way between the zenith and the horizon, it looked very much like the red smoke from a port fire, and faded away all round from a focus of light in the centre (its shape was oblong); it about 15 minutes it rose to the zenith, and as it rose the red shot out from it in long streaks on all sides, except to the north-east, but particularly one broad mass that stretched right away to the western horizon of a beautiful rose colour all the way; some clouds near the horizon in its track were coloured purple by it. This may have been either be seeing it through them, or by its being beneath them. The centre of the meteor was now dark crimson, blood red, darker than the clear sky, but the stars shone brightly through it. The reddest rays were those to west and south: those to the south gradually faded to pale green; those to the north-west and north were in more marked and finer lines, and only red near the centre; and a few, after appearing for a short distance pale green, shot out to the north-east, growing wider apart as they approached the moon, and passed it, clearly showing that the dark spaces between the rays could not be shadows caused by the moon. Only one ray to the north-east was red; they were all fainter as they approached the moon, and much fewer in number than on the western side of the heavens. It lasted till 8:15; all the red colour gradually faded away, and only left the focus from which it had sprung still in the zenith; it became pale green, and then disappeared. The last rays to fade were those to the northeast. No rain fell during the time it lasted. The air was calm. A good deal of ground sea coming into the bay from the westward. / I am, Sir, your obedient servant, / CHARLES P. KNIGHT. / Solva, Pembrokeshire, Oct. 12.
1859 November 4 (Fri) London Times, p. 6.

ANOTHER AURORA BOREALIS.--The Academy of Sciences has received detailed accounts of an aurora which occurred on the 12th ult., being the third remarkable one this year. It became visible at Nantes about 7 p.m., and was observed at Moulins in its fullest glory half an hour later, by M. [Lansadat]. In the Vosges, M.F. Laurent perceived it about 8 p.m. and describes it as resembling a vast conflagration, of a brilliant prismatic red, and extending from the S.W. to the N.E., that is, over half the horizon nearly. The clouds, driven by a south-westerly wind, were at first all luminous, but as the intensity of the phenomenon decreased, they gradually assumed a deep brown tint. M. [Lansadat] gives further particulars: he remarked from six to seven stripes of white light radiating from a centre situated below the horizon. At about a quarter past 8 two distinct luminous masses were formed: one between the tail of Ursa Major and the head of the Dragon; the other enveloping the Corona Borealis and extending at times as far as Lyra. The luminous intensity of these two masses was very variable, and seemed to increase in the one as it diminished in the other. A white ray was suddenly seen to dart through the mass near Ursa Major. The moon had a strong halo, and contributed much to dim the light of the aurora. No falling stars were seen at this time. At 40 minutes past 9, three luminous masses were formed; one W.N.W. near the horizon between Hercules and Serpens, another, as before, near Ursa Major, and the third east of the latter, nearly approaching the Polar Star. Five minutes later, the first-mentioned mass of light was extinguished, and the remaining two increased in intensity, forming like a frame around Ursa Major. Soon after a large pale orange-coloured ray formed from the mass situated near the tail of Ursa Major, darting beyond; the head of the Dragon; it appeared and disappeared several times, sometimes appearing double. There were traces of similar rays in the other mass, and about 48 minutes past 9 a falling star was perceived. At 10, the phenomenon had ceased.

Wed. Oct. 19, p. 9. To the Editor of the Times.

Sir--The red appearance in the sky on the 12th inst., which so much alarmed the superstitious in Pembrokeshire, I observed here and called out a number of friends to witness about 7.30 p.m. The streaks of red seemed to radiate toward the zenith, principally in the west. The total absence of brightness in the north set aside the idea of northern lights. We imagined it might be the reflection from a foundry, but on visiting it found the place was closed. The light was of a bright red colour, and shot out just as the aurora does. Yours, etc., L.H. MORIAQUE, Incumbent of Haslingden. / October 15, 1859.

1860 July 23 (Mon) Southern Argus (Norfolk, Va.), p. 3.

Local News.

Meteor.--Friday night, between 9 and 10 o'clock, a brilliant body of light, resembling in color and rapidity of flight a huge meteor, passed from west to east over the city. It appeared like two cannon balls divided by a whitish thread, and in the absence of any solution of its character, we infer that the comet lately seen here has lost its head. So says the Portsmouth Transcript.

Mon. July 30, p. 1. What a Child Thought of the Meteor.--A little girl in Waltham, who saw the meteor on Friday evening, innocently remarked that she "guessed our Heavenly Father thought 'twas the Fourth of July." Her idea appeared to be that God was displaying his accomplishments in the pyrotechnic line for the benefit of mortals, and she was not far out of the way.

W Aug. 1, p. 1. The Great Meteor.

Day after day we learn, as our mails arrive from more distant parts, further particulars about the great meteor. It was seen in the States of Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Michigan and at Washington City. The British schooner Achiliev saw it 200 miles out to sea, at lat. 37°10'N, long. 73°15'.--Everywhere it is described just as it was in this city, as being nearly over the heads of spectators, and within a short distance of them. Two gentlemen in Pike County, Penn., found the "hole" it made in his ground," but all the energy he lent to the digging for it failed to realize any fragment thereof. Another confident gentleman in Bridgeport, Conn., saw a "piece of it" pass through the window of a house, but on examination the window was intact and there was not a trace of the fiery visitant. At present we find that it was seen over a space of about 44 degrees of latitude and about 5 of longitude.

1860 August 20 (Mon) Atlanta Intelligencer, p. 2.

Optical Illusion on Lake Erie--The Cleveland (Ohio) Herald says that a tremendous thunder shower passed over that city on the night of the 3d instant, and adds:

"Between 3 and 4 o'clock the next morning the appearance of a vessel on fire was seen far out on the lake. Some persons thought they could distinguish the sails. During a heavy gust of wind the light disappeared. Such appearances are not unfrequent on the lake, and the more experienced men along the dock think there has been no vessel burnt.

Dec. 11, p. 1. Remarkable light.--Ulfaber, Iceland, was the scene lately of a most remarkable mirage. Several ships were seen sailing through the air in a line apparently some miles in extent; some appeared to anchor near a fortress built on a rock; others seemed to approach so near the coast that the spectators could see, through the clear atmosphere, the images of sailors at work in the rigging.

1860 October 9 (Tues) Atlanta Daily Intelligencer, p. 1.

Singular Atmospheric Phenomenon in Ireland.--A singular phenomenon was witnessed on Sunday evening week in this neighborhood. A gentleman was returning from Carndonagh with his family, and the party had just dismounted off the car to walk the hill near Quigley's Point, when their attention was attracted by a wonderful appearance in the heavens. Away to the north they saw several ships in the air, sailing across the face of the sky from east to west. The line of vessels seemed to be fully five miles in length, and they appeared to be sailing down a river, whose high banks could be made out behind the ships. Some of the vessels appeared to be moored close to a fortress built on a rock. To all the party was the phenomenon distinctly visible. So clear was the air, and so close did the ships appear to their eyes that the sailors pulling at the ropes were made out with ease, even by the children who saw the strange spectacle. The phenomenon was nearly half an hour before it disappeared. Although the appearance of such things in the heavens may be very startling, the phenomena are not unknown about this part of the Irish coast. The "mirage" as it is termed, often displays itself in fantastic shapes on the shores of the northern counties. It most frequently is to be seen on the coast of Antrim, especially in the vicinity of the Causeway. About twelve years ago a very curious instance of mirage was seen in Lough Foyle. Some fishermen had been out at night with their nets. The face of the heavens was overcast and black, when the clouds suddenly parted, leaving a bright gap of clear sky in the zenith. Across this space the astonished fishermen saw some thousands of soldiers pass, rank after rank and regiment after regiment; and so near did the phenomenon appear that the dress of the officers could be easily distinguished from that of the men. It was two hours before the marching ceased, or rather before the clouds closed in and shut out the scene from view.--Derry Standard.

1868, July The Zoologist (v. 26), p. 1295.

A strange Bird.--Copiapo, Chili, April 1868. Yesterday, at about five o'clock in the afternoon, when the daily labours in this mine were over, and all the workmen were together awaiting their supper, we saw coming through the air, from the side of the temera, a gigantic bird, which at first sight we took for one of the clouds then partially darkening the atmosphere, supposing it to have been separated from the rest by the wind. Its course was from north west to south-east: its flight rapid and in a straight line. As it was passing a short distance above our heads we could mark the strange formation of its body. Its immense wings were clothed with a grayish plumage, its monstrous head was like that of a locust, its eyes were wide open and shone like burning coals; it seemed to be covered with something resembling the thick and stout bristles of a boar, while on its body, elongated like that of a serpent, we could only see brilliant scales, which clasped together with a metallic sound as the strange animal turned its body in its flight.--Copiapo (Chili) paper. 1868 July 10 English Mechanic (v. 17), p. 351.

Remarkable Meteor.--A remarkable meteor was seen at the Radcliffe Observatory, Oxford, on the 8th ult., at 9 h 50 m. When first seen by Mr. Lucas, it had the appearance of a fine white cloud about 5° in length and 1° in breadth, a little to the west of Polaris. As the observer was pointing out its comet-like appearance to some persons who happened to be with him in the lower meadow of the Observatory, it appeared to start into motion, taking a course directly west, and passing just below α and β Ursae Majoris, and leaving a train behind of greater breadth than itself, which remained visible through its whole course after it had disappeared below the northwest horizon. When it approached Leo it deviated from the straight line which it had previously taken, and turned somewhat toward the south, passing near Rerulus, and then bent northwards again. The time that it was visible must have been nearly four minutes. Its appearance at one time was very like that of the β flame and smoke combined which sometimes issue from a railway engine, only very faint on account of the brightness of the still remaining twilight. There was a thick haze all the night. A parcelsene, or rock moon, was seen on the same night at 13 h. 40 m.

July 3, p. 321--meteoric stones fall in storm.

116--colored hail, snow in Canada.

113, May 1--rept that a Mr. Spencer had been able to fly & swoop.

1869 August 14 (Sat) Daily Eagle (Reading, Penn.), p. 3.

SINGULAR PHENOMENON.--A most singular phenomenon occurred at midday on Saturday last, near the village of Adamstown, Lancaster county. About two hundred yards north of the village is an open lot, and at 12 o'clock, while the villagers were taking dinner, a luminous body was seen to settle near the centre of this lot. It is represented by four or five different parties, who witnessed it from several points, to have assumed a square shape and shooting up into a column about three or four feet in height and about two feet in thickness.

The sun was shining brightly at the time, and under its rays the object glittered like a column of burnished silver. The presence, after reaching its full effulgence gradually faded away, and in ten minutes time it had entirely disappeared. Those who saw it were unable to tell what it was. It seemed to inspire terror rather than admiration. After it had disappeared a number of persons visited the spot, but not a trace of anything unusual could be found.

Similar objects have been seen in the neighborhood on several occasions during the night time, but none before in the day time, or so bright as this. The land in the immediate vicinity is dry, there being no swamp about, otherwise the phenomenon might be accounted for. We do not know whether the Jack o' Lantern assumes such large proportions or whether it appears in midday under a bright sun. Perhaps some of our friends versed in the sciences can solve the mystery.

1870 January 30 () New York Times, p. 1.

Ghostly Signals at Woburn.

The Boston papers publishes [sic] the following as a strange but well authenticated story:
"The engineer on the freight train on the Boston and Powell railroad, which leaves Boston about 3 o'clock in the morning, has on several occasions discovered a red light swinging at a furious rate at the Woburn Station, where the train stops for water. The light would sometimes be in front and sometimes in the rear of the train. When the engineer would stop his train and send someone to learn why the signal to stop was made, the messenger would be greatly surprised to see the light vanish. Investigation has proved that no person was there with a lantern, and the trackmen and conductor concur also in having beheld this phenomenon, which, so far as known, is without visible cause. Some laborers living on the line of the above station state that a few mornings since they were coming down the road in a handcar, when they suddenly heard the approach of an engine and they became greatly frightened, and jumping out of the car, threw it off the track to await the train which they thought was coming at a rapid pace upon them, but which, it is needless to say, did not come. The superstitious regard the affair as a forewarning of some disaster, while the spiritualists have the ready theory that it is the spirit of a man who was killed about two years since."

1879 April 17 (Th) New York Daily Tribune, p. 2.

(Card 1)

A CURIOUS PHENOMENON. / To the Editor of the Tribune.

SIR: At about half past 8 o'clock last evening, as I was searching for Brorsen's comet, I suddenly hit upon an object which I supposed to be a planetary nebula, very much resembling that near Beta Ursa Major-is, nearly on a line, and a little north, between the Pleiades and the variable star Algol. Being somewhat in doubt as to the existence of such a nebula in that region, I started the driving clock, noted the right ascension and declination, which were 2h. 34m. and 37°N, searched the catalogues, but found no such object recorded. By this time I found the object gone out of the field, but soon found it again, when it had gained four min. in R.A., its declination being unchanged. A half hour or so later, watching it constantly with amazement, I found it had gained the same amount. I no longer trusted to my own vision, but called a friend to confirm what undoubtedly was there. He saw it, and we both began to speculate as to its physical composition. A comet it could not be, because of its rapid motion from N.W. to S.E., nor could it have been a cloud, because it maintained not only its shape, diameter and density, but also its luminosity, and in the absence of both sun and moon a batch of cloud viewed with a telescope would have no definition, form or illumination. Still following it as it slowly swept toward Alpha Auriga. I found a calculation of R.A. at 9:35 was 2h 4m. N.D. 37°.

In order to obtain more knowledge about this wonderful phenomenon, for such I must call it, I concluded to telegraph at once to the Naval Observatory at Washington to set the circles, as I calculated, about 7h im. west of the meridian and declination north 37°, which position it would occupy by ~~xxx~~ the time the message would reach the observatory. Returning from the telegraph office at 10:45, its altitude must have reached a height of 40°. Still it maintained its form and brilliancy. I must say here, that before sending a dispatch to the Naval Observatory, I thought that the object might be a reflection, but this thought was rapidly removed by placing a pasteboard tube of eighteen inches length over the objective, but onward it moved with independent motion. Even the two-inch finder showed it faintly. At 10:45 I noticed its declination to be 37°6'; at 11:30 it neared the double star Alpha Gemini and rapidly passing before a star of the sixth and seventh magnitude, seemed not to obscure the latter, but showed the star almost as brilliant as immediately after its passage. The declination now was 37°28'.

At 12 o'clock I retired for a short time, after a wearisome chase of nearly three and a half hours. At 2:10 o'clock this morning I found it, after a search of about twenty minutes, in the zenith. It now seemed to be more brilliant than at any previous observation, its declination being now 37°40', and I fancied I could see it with the unaided eye, but cannot be positive of this. I must confess, although absurd, the thought entered my mind that one of the planetary nebula, tired of its position, was seeking another and better home. / Henry Harrison. / Jersey City, April 13, 1879.

Sat. April 26, p. 2. WAS IT A NEBULA? / To the Editor of the Tribune.

SIR: In to-day's issue of The Tribune I saw a letter from Mr. Harrison describing a phenomenon seen by him on Saturday evening, resembling a moving nebula about the size (1) [?] of that near Beta Ursa Majoris, direction N.W. to S.E. On the same evening about 11 o'clock I had a similar experience: a bright luminous nebula-like object, which I could plainly see with the naked eye, of the same size of the Andromeda or Presepe cluster stood about 10° west of the zenith; a glance at the surrounding stars assured me that it was neither. I turned my telescope upon it, and saw then that it shone with wonderful brilliancy, exceeding even the Andromeda cluster. I then made the discovery that it moved in a reverse direction from the apparent motion of the stars, wherefore I also reversed the motion of the driving clock but could not keep up with it. If this object is the same which Mr. Harrison saw, it did not move exactly southeast, but I should judge more to the east. I watched it until early the next morning, when it faded away as the moon made its appearance, or rather I thought so, as after refreshing myself with a cup of coffee and returning to the telescope I had lost it and could not find it again. Here again is a ~~xxx~~ small field for some famous man like Proctor to speculate in. It was difficult to determine the height of the object, and consequently its rapidity of motion was not to be calculated. / J. SPENCER DEVOE. / Manhattanville, April 17, 1879.

Same p.: An old hoax recalled. A recently deceased editor published a story of a meteor fall and showed some slag to back up the yarn. (Boyleston meteor hoax).

1880 May 31 (Tues) Daily Graphic (New York), p. 738.

It turns out that Joe Mulhatten is responsible for the story telegraphed all over the country last week about the "Star of Bethlehem." Mr. Mulhatten has been keeping very quiet since his candidacy for President as the nominee of the Commercial Travellers' Association. Previous to this there was hardly a month that he was not the author of some brilliant piece of imagination that startled the country. Happening to be in Lexington, Ky., he ran across a reporter who did not know him, and he told the story of some astrologist having discovered the "Star of Bethlehem." The young scribe, believing every word of it, sent it to the leading newspapers in all parts of the country. Fri. May 27, p. [4]. A Kentucky astronomer announces that he has discovered the Star of Bethlehem. Ten to one it is only Col. Henri Watterson's favorite goddess, who lost her bearings when that great man went abroad and has been wandering about incognito ever since. Sept. 3, 1880, p. 478.

That flying man in Brooklyn is a fraud. At least so think 4000 people who waited three hours and didn't see him. 1880 August 13 (Fri) (St. Louis) Republican, p. 7.

Missouri Items.

David Brown, who lives ten miles north of St. Joseph, relates the circumstances of what he considers a novel phenomenon and which occurred near his place on Sunday night last. It was one of those ~~xxx~~ peculiar flashes of lightning in which a large ball of fire descends to the earth. Mr. Brown says he saw the ball of fire during 30 or 40 seconds of its descent before it reached the earth, and that it was more than twice as large as his hat. The place where it came in contact with the earth was about a quarter of a mile distant from him and the report was very loud, very much resembling the report of a cannon, but much louder. On going to the point of contact he found two horses belonging to Tip Gilly, both lying dead, have been instantly killed by the stroke, and upon examination it was also discovered that the ~~xxxx~~ coupling pin and one of the steel springs of the wagon were partially melted.

1880 September 6 (Mon) The Evening Post (New York), p. 1.

Wonders of A Georgia Meteor.

At a quarter to 10 o'clock on Thursday night a meteor of extraordinary brilliancy was seen to cross the heavens at a very low altitude. Rising in the south, it took a northeasterly course, preserving a perfectly horizontal line in its journey. It was composed of three parts, which were perfectly developed balls of an equal size, and equidistant from each other. The first ball threw out a tail which enveloped the two following balls and extended several yards behind them. The tail was exceedingly luminous, save at the extremity, which was somewhat indistinct, having a nebulous appearance. Its motion was slow, and was visible to the observer for fully fifty seconds. It did not fall to the ground like other meteors, but continued its course northeastward until lost sight of. It was indeed a brilliant and extraordinary phenomenon. --(Columbus Ga.) Enquirer, August 28.

NY Times, Mon. Dec. 13, 1880. ANOTHER REMARKABLE METEOR. / From the Charlotte (N.C.) Observer.

"Did you see the meteor?" everybody was asking Thursday night. It was a very remarkable one indeed, appearing in the western sky shortly after sundown. It was first seen at an angle of about 45°, and moved in a direction almost directly west. An intelligent witness of the interesting spectacle describes it as a brilliant red ball, about the size of the crown of a man's hat, and states that it moved rather more slowly than ordinary meteors, giving the spectator abundant opportunity to see and enjoy the brilliant sight. But the most wonderful feature was the bright streak of light it left in its track in the sky. This remained visible at least 10 minutes after the disappearance of the meteor, and was seen by hundreds of persons in the city. It was not a straight streak of light, that usually left by a meteor, but assumed a zig-zag appearance. One suggested that it looked like a crack in a pot, and an old colored man remarked that it "looked like the sky had been cracked for you to see the light." It was very bright at first and gradually faded along the whole line until it became invisible. Accounts differ with respect to the intensity of the light, but the general impression is that it was the brightest near the middle of the line. The disappearance of the meteor was not sudden; it, too, gradually grew smaller until it vanished near the horizon. So far as reported, it was not accompanied by any sound.

1881 February 22 (from Raleigh Times, same date for 1950, p. 4) N.C.

89 Years Ago.

Officer Jack Beasley of the police force when near home last night heard a strange noise up in the elements, and looking up, observed something about the size of his hand, which resembled a dim star in appearance, whirling about.

Feb. 23, 1881.

Another strange noise was heard in the elements yesterday afternoon by several parties. The strange rumbling sound moved from north to south to southeast.

1883 December 29(?) () Cleveland Herald, p. (facsimile in NICAP's UFO Investigator, Mar./April 1978, p. 3.)

A MYSTERIOUS VISITANT. / A Strange Object Observed in the Heavens at Newcomerstown.

NEWCOMERSTOWN, Dec. 28. --[Special.]--A very singular phenomenon was observed in the heavens last night and people are much puzzled to account for the strange occurrence. A short time after dark a large bright light appeared suddenly in the eastern sky a few degrees above the horizon, and started in a direct northern path. The object had the appearance of an almost square volume of white light, and in its flight across the heavens left a bright trail which lighted up the woods just east of town over which it passed so brilliantly that small trees and bushes could be observed distinctly by many persons here who were watching the object. A very singular circumstance was the remarkable slowness with which the object traversed the heavens, it being seen for a long time by the numbers of citizens who were observing it. There have been several hypotheses as to the probable cause of this peculiar astronomical phenomenon, and some think the object was an aerolite, but the slowness of its progress across the sky leaves abundant room to doubt the correctness of this supposition. The ~~xxx~~ superstitious are troubled.

1886 December 16. Scientific American, p. 389. (v.)

Curious Phenomenon in Venezuela. / To the Editor of the Scientific American:

The following brief account of a recent strange meteorological occurrence may be of interest to your readers as an addition to the list of electrical eccentricities:

During the night of the 24th of October last, which was rainy and tempestuous, a family of nine persons, sleeping in a hut a few leagues from Maracaibo, were awakened by a loud humming noise and a vivid, dazzling light, which brilliantly illuminated the interior of the house.

The occupants, completely terror stricken, and believing, as they relate, that the end of the world had come, threw themselves on their knees and commenced to pray, but their devotions were almost immediately interrupted by violent vomitings, and extensive swellings commenced to appear in the upper part of their bodies, this being particularly noticeable about the face and lips.

It is to be noted that the brilliant light was not accompanied by a sensation of heat, although there was a smoky appearance and a peculiar smell.

The next morning the swellings had subsided, leaving upon the face and body large black blotches. No special pain was felt until the ninth day, when the skin peeled off, and these blotches were transformed into virulent raw sores.

The hair of the head fell off upon the side which happened to be underneath when the phenomenon occurred, the same side of the body being, in all nine cases, the more seriously injured.

The remarkable part of the occurrence is that the house was uninjured, all doors and windows being closed at the time.

No trace of lightning could afterward be observed in any part of the building, and all the sufferers unite in saying that there was no detonation, but only the loud hummin already mentioned.

Another curious attendant circumstance is that the trees around the house showed no signs of injury until the ninth day, when they suddenly withered, almost simultaneously with the development of the sores upon the bodies of the occupants of the house.

This is perhaps a mere coincidence, but it is remarkable that the same susceptibility to electrical effects, with the same lapse of time, should be observed in both animal and vegetable organisms.

I have visited the sufferers, who are now in one of the hospitals of this city; and although their appearance is truly horrible, yet it is hoped that in no case will the injuries prove fatal. WARNER COGNILL. / U.S. Consulate, Maracaibo, Venezuela, / November 17, 1886.

1887 May 28 (Saturday) New York Daily Tribune, p. 2.

DOUBTS ABOUT THAT STAR OF BETHLEHEM. / From the Boston Herald.

"No, I haven't seen the Star of Bethlehem," said Professor Pickering, of the Harvard College Observatory, last evening to a reporter. "I looked for it Wednesday evening when I heard that some professor in Kentucky, unknown to me, had discovered its presence in the heavens, but I could not see it. I looked for it with the naked eye. It isn't there, and the chances of its appearance are very uncertain indeed. Astronomers are doubtful about it. Many of them do not believe it will come at all. I have received no official information from any quarter that the reappearance of the star had been noted by responsible astronomers."

1888 May 23 (Wed) New York Times, p. 3.

A Strange Phenomenon.

Finlay, Ohio, May 22.--A strange spectacle was visible in the northern sky here last night shortly after 11 o'clock, which has caused the greatest consternation among the people. It was the representation of a human hand of immense proportions and awe-inspiring in its realistic vividness. Early in the evening the sky in the north had a peculiar appearance, which as the night wore on took the form of flashes of light constantly changing in color, pulsing up from the horizon and again subsiding, but with each appearance becoming more brilliant. This continued until about 11 o'clock, when those viewing the phenomenon were terrified to see these plumes of light concentrating into a distinct object which assumed the proportions of a giant hand, well formed and as distinct as if painted on the black background of the sky. The hand appeared to be a shadowy substance, through which waves of light of a blood-red color regularly surged and then fell off at the ends of the fingers in drops of the same color. The first finger of the hand pointed downward toward the sleeping city, as if warning the people of some evil about to fall upon them. The spectacle lasted for about an hour, and was witnessed by hundreds, who were breathless with suppressed excitement, until slowly it began to fade away, and finally disappeared altogether. It was one of the strangest and yet most impressive exhibitions of nature ever witnessed, and speculation regarding its cause and significance will not abate for many a day.

1887 April 24 (Sun) The World (New York), p. 12.

Tales of the Supernatural.

In Vidovek, a Hungarian village near Warasdin, the belief in an approaching war has seized hold of the entire population. A splendid fat morgans was observed during three consecutive days on the wide plains around the village. Enormous divisions of infantry with scarlet caps could be distinctly seen moving on the plains and performing exercises to the command of a celestial chief, whose sword was seen flashing in the air. The phenomenon lasted several hours, when finally the soldiers disappeared in mid-air. The people stood awestruck in great crowds and observed every movement of the phantom soldiers with breathless attention. Two gendarmes went in search of the soldiers, but, of course, in vain.

Two young men living on "The Neck" in Dorchester County, Maryland, relate a story of a phantom schooner, which recalls the famous legend of the "Flying Dutchman." They were rowing on Beckwith's Creek at an early hour in the morning, when the ghastly vessel appeared before them, rushing up stream with jib set. The masts were otherwise bare of canvas, and there was not a soul on board save a tall, lean figure in white at the wheel. There was a red glow, like a colored phosphorescent light around the schooner's main masthead, and she plunged from side to side in her course, as if driven by demons. The vessel approached within a hundred yards of the row-boat and then suddenly vanished into thin air. The young men are reputed to be truthful, and their story is believed.

Sun. June 19, p. 20, Stories of the Supernatural.

There is a great deal of phosphorescent light at night on the marshland around the sloughs which run into the Mississippi between Keokuk and Quincy, and bated duck hunters claim to have seen some uncanny beings roaming around the marshes this spring. One party heard soft and ghostly music one night, and following it up, saw a group of weird beings dancing around a stump in the open to the music of a white-robed flute player. After watching the strange group for a while one of the hunters fired his gun, whereupon the ghostlike dancers vanished into thin air. It is to be noted, however, that the hunters' last bottle was absolutely empty when they returned to the city. May 21, p. 1. Burning ship seen at sea. // 22, 13. Man vomits 6" lizard 27, 1. Meteor fall near Wallburg, N.Y. // June 15, 3. Mummified Artec found in N.H. // April 10, 13. Rain of stones in Argentina; rumbles in Ky. // June 19, 7. Mirage, Palmyra. // June 21. Meteor fall. Clear Lake. Ia 1889 October 12 (Sat) Daily Examiner (San Francisco), p. 4.

STARTLED BY A STRANGE LIGHT. / People Alarmed by About a Supposed Supernatural Manifestation. / From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

For some time past a very peculiar light has been disturbing the quiet of the people of Pancake, a small village on the National pike, two miles east of Washington, Pennsylvania. This light appears on the tops of the hills near to the village almost every night. It never appears two nights in succession on the same hill, and the spot at which it is most frequently seen is an old graveyard on a high knoll a short distance east of the village. Sometimes it moves from one hill to another, but it generally remains the entire time it is visible at the spot it first appeared. Those who have seen the light describe it as being sometimes white, sometimes bluish in color and again of a yellowish tinge. The most peculiar feature about the ghostly light is, no matter how brilliantly it shines, it never causes any object beside which it may be cast a shadow. The descriptions given of the light by the villagers are widely different in regard to main points as well as in details, and frequently they are as fanciful and grotesque as a highly excited imagination can make them. One old lady said it looked to her like a huge, brilliant bull's-eye attached to the body of a horse, with a dragon's tail, from which issued a tiny, sinuous trail of smoke; another said it looked to her like the devil's eye, although she acknowledged that she had never seen his Majesty except in her dreams, and still another said it looked like a ball of blood, out of which there were thrust at intervals forked tongues of fire. R.M. Carrou, on whose farm the light appears with the greatest frequency, tells the following story, which is the explanation generally accepted by the largest number of people:

"My father and bachelor uncle, who owned this farm equally, were quite well off in this world's goods. All the gold coin they could get in their business transactions they laid carefully away, and when the late war broke out their hoard had become very large, it is said, and as the premium became higher and the gold very valuable they concealed it by burying it somewhere on the farm, and then died without revealing its hiding-place. This supernatural light, by neighbors say, is the uneasy spirit of my dead ancestor, who has returned to this world to point out to me the location of the hidden gold. I haven't much faith in it, for, if my father and my uncle buried gold everywhere the light appears, they have put some on the neighbors' property, and from recollection of them they were not in the habit of distributing gold, even among their most intimate friends.

The cause of the light cannot be explained, but the women of Pancake shake their heads, and proclaim that some terrible calamity is hanging over them.

1889 November 3 (Sun morn) San Francisco Examiner, p. 13. (card 1)

THE PHANTOM VESSEL. / A Regular "Flying Dutchman" Seen on the Colorado Desert. / ALWAYS FORETELLS A SAND STORM. / Romantic Account of Prospectors Who Have Sighted the Ghostly Craft and Her Shadowy Crew--Did the Ocean Once Flow Where the Desert Is Now--Probable Explanation of the Strange Sight. /

Few persons who read the newspapers will fail to remember the accounts which were published some fifteen years ago and which reappear at intervals in their regular rounds of the press regarding the discovery of the hull of a ship in the central part of the Colorado desert. This dreary, trackless waste of sand, which lies in the San Diego county, is bordered by the San Bernardino mountains, the San Jacinto mountains, and extends from the San Corgonio pass to the Colorado river, and has claimed more human victims than any other section of similar area within the boundaries of the United States. It is absolutely devoid of water, and to attempt to cross it without succumbing to the "Ghost Ship" / making ample provision in this respect is suicide, simple and plain, unless a heavy fall of rain immediately previous has filled up the tanks and water holes which exist at certain isolated points. A large part of this desert is below the level of the sea, the greatest depression being at Volcano Springs--a station on the Southern Pacific Railroad--where the traveler has the satisfaction of knowing, if such knowledge is productive of satisfaction, that he is 255 feet lower than the waves of the Pacific ocean that are breaking on the rocks scarcely seventy-five miles distant.

That the Colorado desert was once covered by water and formed a large bay of the Pacific ocean there is every evidence. High up on the mountain sides can be plainly seen the water marks, and the lashings of the waves for unknown ages have cut the rock in horizontal grooves as regularly as if done by the carver's tool. Into this arm of the sea the Colorado river once flowed, but some mighty volcanic upheaval threw up the slight environs which now direct that stream in another course, and the gradual recession of the ocean made the work permanent. What ancient galleys have plowed the billows of this land-locked bay, what ships may have found safety on its peaceful bosom are mysteries of the obscure, prehistoric past, which none may ever know.

Late in the summer of 1878, several years after the story of the discovery of the remains of a ship had been made public, two German prospectors reached Yuma from the Colorado desert. They were in a state of great distress and reported the loss of a companion on the desert. The prospectors, it seems, had been skirting the south and west sides of the San Bernardino range in search of minerals and their companion was lost some six days before at a point about 100 miles northwest from Yuma. The peculiar feature of their story was associating with and attributing the disappearance of their comrade to an apparition which they had beheld the previous evening. About sundown, so the Germans said, and while encamped on the desert, they saw, at a short distance, an immense ship under full sail, which appeared to float before them as a cloud. She was of different form of construction from any vessel they had ever seen, and was complicated and fantastic in her rigging. Their description of the vessel was by no means lucid, but they were very positive that their companion had been shanghaied and taken off on the "ghost ship," as they insisted on calling it.

The story of the Germans was received with a good deal of contempt by the people of Yuma, who after telling the prospectors that they were double-adjective fools, sent two men and three Indian trailers on the train to Indio to search the desert east of that station for the missing men. The /pic: Finding the Dead German. / second day his naked corpse was found about forty miles from the railroad, with the scorching rays of the sun falling full upon it. He had died in the desert of thirst, but no sign of the phantom ship was seen.

Early in 1882 [?] Tom Brown, then a citizen of Arizona, but now residing in Bakersfield, this State, and the writer, organized a quiet little expedition for the purpose of ascertaining what truth there was in the stories regarding the Desert Ship, several persons having reported that they had seen it since the time when the Germans related their experience. Nick Wolford, an Arizona mountaineer, was induced to join, while a "happy-go-lucky," known simply as Jack completed the party. In order to escape ridicule the real object of the expedition was not made known. The party "outfitted" at Yuma for the ostensible purpose of prospecting in the San Bernardino mountains. Eight burros were secured--the little donkey being the best adapted for such an expedition, owing to his ability to subsist on nothing and to go for long periods without water. Five of the animals were loaded with supplies, camp outfit, blankets, etc., while the remainder packed kegs, with which to carry the water supply while making long marches on the desert.

On the 4th day of February the expedition left Yuma, fully equipped for a three weeks' trip. A more favorable season could not have been selected for making the journey. Hugging the base of the mountains closely in order to admit of prospecting for precious metal, water was not only found in abundance, but there was plenty of grass for the faithful and patient burro, which poked lazily along under his heavy pack. The air was perfectly delightful and the temperature similar to that of early summer in a Northern climate--a little too warm about noon time, but exhilarating and pleasant for the remainder of the day. Water marks on rocky precipices, far above, showed plainly where the ocean breakers once expended their force, while in the west, south and southeast from the slightly elevated course we were traveling the eye fell upon miles and miles of sand hills and valleys of sand, and oceans of sand which being driven and formed by the wind ~~saw~~ presented the appearance of rolling billows, varying in color according to distance, the shadings, the existence of alkalis [sic] and the feeble attempts at growth of hardy vegetation. Even the rugged and thorny cactus could not find on the desert plain a soil sufficiently congenial as to raise its weird branches as a warning to the traveler against attempting to cross this trackless waste. Ten miles from the mountains the dismal squawk of the raven was the only sound of bird to break the depressing silence, while the lizard and kangaroo rat were the only members of the animal kingdom to abide in this valley of death, and a system of cannibalism can alone account for their means of subsistence.

As the trip was being made alone for pleasure and out of sheer curiosity, it was on the sixteenth day before the party reached a point about 120 miles northeast of Yuma, and about 40 miles directly east of Indio. The provisions were running short, owing to the failure to encounter any game, and the water burros were loaded for a three-days' trip, with the ~~intention~~ intention of making for the Southern Pacific Railroad, which, it was calculated, could be reached in that time. A dry camp was made on the desert ~~about~~ some ten miles from the mountains and fully thirteen miles from the spring at which we had taken water. An early supper was had and shortly before sunset Nick Wolford and Jack set out to drive the burros to a patch of grass which had been crossed about a half mile back of the spot where camp had been pitched. The short twilight of that region had just begun, and I was busy in making down our beds, when startled by the excited exclamation of Tom Brown:

"By George, there she is, Charley, sure as shooting. Look!"

Turning around and casting my eyes in the direction which his hand indicated I saw before me the outlines of a sailing vessel. Every portion of her was clearly defined, yet a haze or a peculiar, indescribable light was cast upon the scene. It was too late an hour for a sunrise; besides this, the view was not stationary, the craft moving rapidly on its course with all sails set. Apparently she was about half a mile distant and stood quarter to us. The vessel, I judged, was about eighty feet in length, eighteen feet breadth of beam, and of about forty tons burden. The hull sat well out of the water--which was plainly visible--while the bow arose straight above the deck. The stern also sat high out of the water, after the fashion of Chinese junk, and the two masts, fore and aft rigged, gave the strange vessel a very old appearance, unlike any I had ever seen. The decks projected beyond the hull after the manner of those of the old Roman galleys, but ~~unlike~~ undoubtedly the vessel was of more modern construction and probably belonged to the sixteenth century.

As strange and startling as was the weird scene, I was more than astonished at the /pic: "By Goerge! There she is!" / sounds I heard. The creaking, straining noise of a sailing vessel running before a stiff breeze was plainly heard, while the distant notes of a sailor's song fell upon my ear.

The discharge of a rifle near at hand, followed by a lusty halloo, distracted our attention from the vision, and we hastily answered the signal. A few moments afterward Wolford and Jack walked into camp, explaining that they had lost their direction in returning and fired the shot to attract our attention. ~~But~~ Brown and I turned from our companions to again view the mysterious ship, but it had disappeared as suddenly as it had appeared. Darkness was upon us.

Tom Brown then told Wolford and Jack of the remarkable scene we had ~~just~~ witnessed, calling upon me for corroboration. I discovered from his conversation that he had been more observing than myself, and also sufficient to prove that she is an English vessel," said Mr. Brown, "and her rigging and form of hull and deck leave no doubt that she belonged to the reign of Queen Elizabeth. She may be, and probably was one of the lost vessels of that patriotic pirate, Sir Francis Drake, who made his first expedition up this coast in 1578, the commander's frigate passing the winter of that year in the bay of San Francisco."

About five days later the party reached Indio in safety, the burros and camp outfit were sold, and the midnight train was taken for Arizona, where the party disbanded.

In 1864 two brothers, Briggs by name, concluded to establish a ferry on the Colorado river at La Paz, there being at that time considerable travel to Arizona, attracted by the rich gold discoveries in the northern part of the Territory. They had a large, flat-bottomed ferryboat constructed at San Bernardino, and, loading it on the trucks of a heavy wagon, essayed to haul it across the Colorado desert. Heavy sand was encountered and severe sandstorms were prevalent, and progress was very slow and tedious. Finally, and when within about 120 miles of their destination, it became necessary to abandon the boat in order to save the lives of the eight fine horses which were hauling it. Shortly afterward a boat was brought from San Francisco by way of the Gulf of California, and a ferry established at La Paz. The Briggs ~~brothers~~ brothers then gave up their project, and their old boat is still out on the desert, and sometimes is visible, although more generally completely hidden by sand.

1891 September 5 (Sat) Daily Journal (Crawfordsville, Ind.), p. 41

A STRANGE PHENOMENON. / A Horrible Apparition Hovers Over the City at an Early Hour this Morning.

What Tom O'Shanter saw on his famous ride was discounted this morning about two o'clock by what Marshall McIntyre and Bill Gray saw. They were at that hour at the barn of William Martin, on east Main street, hitching up the team to the ice wagon preparatory to leaving for the ice houses. While standing in the alley back of the stable Mr. McIntyre suddenly felt a strange sensation of awe and dread coming over him and looking up he saw a horrible apparition approaching from the west. It was about three or four hundred feet in the air, and most greusome [sic] in aspect. It was about eighteen feet long and eight feet wide and moved rapidly through the air by means of several pairs of side fins which it worked most sturdily. It was pure white and had no definite shape or form, resembling somewhat a great white shroud fitted out with propelling fins. There was no tail or head visible but there was one great flaming eye, and a sort of a wheezing, plaintive sound was emitted from a mouth which was invisible. It flapped like a flag in the winds as it came on and frequently gave a great squirm as though suffering unutterable agony. When it came to be directly over the residence of Mr. Martin it began to sweep slowly and majestically around in a circle. It hovered thus for some time and the watchers fearing lest it was after their bacon retired for safety to the shelter of the barn. The apparition finally flew off toward the east, but when it reached the city limits it returned and began again to hover over Mr. Martin's ~~residence~~ house. Mr. McIntyre was in favor of arousing the family but his companion interposed his objection so the men watched it alone until after three o'clock when they drove off to the ice house leaving the spook or whatever it was still hovering high in air. It remained there as long as they could see its position but was gone when they returned at daylight. Both of them are much worked up over the affair and very naturally associate it with the supernatural. They will carry a Springfield rifle to the barn the next time they go and if the apparition again comes flapping around they will drill a hole in him with an ounce of cold lead.

1891 September 7 (Mon.) Daily Journal (Crawfordsville, Ind.), p. 41

MR. SWITZER SAW THE SPOOK. / He Beholds the Midnight Wraith Which Alarmed Mr. Martin's Ice Men.

It seems that Marshall McIntyre and Bill Gray were not the only witnesses of this mysterious apparition which hovered over our city from midnight on Friday on till the dawn of Saturday morning. Several others witnessed the ghostly visitor and were also completely mystified ~~by~~ both by its appearance and its actions. Rev. C.W. Switzer, of the Methodist church, saw it, and his story is rather interesting. Shortly after midnight he stepped into his back door yard to get a drink at the well. As he stood there a strange weird sensation crept over him and although he is unable to say whether he was attracted by any sound or not he suddenly felt his attention drawn upward, and raising his eyes with the full expectation of beholding something, he saw what both puzzled and astonished him. The night was very dark and very still, no breath of air stirring, but propelled by some unseen force he saw sweeping toward him from the southwest the apparition. It was about 16 feet long and eight feet wide, resembling a mass of floating drapery,

"Shaped like a fleecy, milk white cloud,
Or like a demon in a shroud."

It was much to low to be a cloud and moved far too swiftly, besides there was no wind at all. It seemed to work about as it swam through the air in a writhing, twisting manner similar to the glide of some serpents. Mr. Switzer called his wife and they watched it until [it] got just east of the church when it began to descend as though about to land in the yard of Mrs. J.M. Lane. They ~~xxx~~ then lost sight of it for the moment, but Mr. Switzer proceeding into the street saw it arise again and he and his wife then watched it circle about town for some time, finally tiring and going into the house with the strange phenomenon still visible. Mr. Switzer is wholly unable to account for it but is satisfied that it was not the Shawnee Mound ghost. V.Q. Irwin says that it was a spirit, while the unkindest remark of all was made by Prof. Robert Burton who gravely gives as his opinion that it was a defusion which got on the optic nerve of those men who had probably been imbibing intoxicants.

Sept 7
some time. The men took safety in the barn, from which they ~~xxx~~ viewed the phenomenon. It then sailed off toward the east, but very soon returned, and the men drove away to the ice-house. When they returned it was gone.

This story received unexpected corroboration to-day from a source that leaves no doubt that some undefinable aerial specter visited the Athens of Indiana Friday night, or rather Saturday morning. Rev. G.W. Switzer, of the Methodist Church, and his wife also saw the ghostly spectacle. Rev. Switzer stepped out the back door of the parsonage to get a drink between 12 and 1 o'clock, and as he stood at the well a strange sensation crept over him. For some cause he looked upwards, and saw a sight he cannot very well describe. The night was dark and still. The electric lights, however, were shedding their bright glare and he noticed some strange object sweeping from the southwest. It appeared to be about sixteen feet long and eight feet wide, very much resembling a mass of floating drapery. It seemed to work about like it was swimming through the air or squirming like a serpent. Mr. Switzer called his wife, and they watched it for a time as it hovered over the Methodist church, and then it began to descend. Mr. Switzer 1891 September 8 (Tues) Daily Journal (Crawfordsville, Ind., p. 7.

The Spook Explained.

The horrible apparition which was seen by numerous citizens Friday night has been explained satisfactorily and it did not prove to be a ghost. John Hornbeck happened to step out in the yard about midnight and saw the horrible apparition as it swooped about the town. He summoned Abe Hernley and they proceeded to investigate. They followed the wraith about town and finally discovered it to be a flock of many hundred killdeers. These birds were evidently passing over the city and becoming bewildered by the electric lights had lost their way. Their white breasts and wings gave the flock their ghostly appearance and the sound of agony was their plaintive dismal cry. Messrs. Hornbeck and Hernley were quite close to them [] as they swept near the ground and are certain that they were not mistaken.

9.2. It Was Not New Wine.

The good people of Crawfordsville, who see ghostly apparitions of huge proportions floating in mid-air at night are victims of hallucinations. A disordered digestion operating by reflex action on the perceptive organs causes them to see things which do not exist. What they need is a good dose of physic and a course of dieting.--Indianapolis Journal.

9.3. Famous.

Rev. G.W. Switzer is receiving inquiries from all over the country relative to the "spook" which he saw Friday night. The anxious inquirers want to know all about it and Mr. Switzer's personal experience. He received one letter from Keeley's Institute for Inebriates at Plainfield telling him that the patients there frequently saw such sights and that the apparitions frequently had horns and tails, but after a few days' treatment the patients ceased to see them. The letter closed by advising Mr. Switzer to come at once for treatment. Th. Sept. 10, p. 7. Danville Has a Spook.

Danville Commercial: If Crawfordsville persists in parading its aerial spook before the general public we will be compelled to bring forth once again our special spook, which made its presence known in Ellsworth Park several times about two years ago. It was in the form of a huge policeman carrying a big club in one hand and a lighted lantern in the other. His stride was about six feet and his height about twelve feet. He seemed to be hunting for something he had lost as he was continually holding the lantern close to the ground and stirring the leaves with his club.

1891 September 12 (Sat) Crawfordsville Weekly Review, p. 6.

White Wings.

Crawfordsville has been thrown into a paroxysm by a strange phenomenon witnessed about midnight Friday night. Several persons saw the strange delusion, apparition or phenomenon, whatever it was, but none can tell what it was. Rev. George W. Switzer, who was in the city Monday, saw it shortly before midnight and related his impressions to a Journal representative. The night was very dark and the electric lights of the Hoosier Athens shone all the more brilliantly for that reason. He had gone out to the well to get a cool drink and glanced up at the sky, his eye at once caught sight of a rapidly floating white object which appeared to be almost sixteen feet long and eight feet wide. It looked like a mass of white lace. The object moved toward the right, sometimes rising and then falling, its course being a curved line. He watched it until it passed over the Methodist church. At that point it sank much nearer the ground, then rose again Mr. Switzer can only conceive one solution of the mysterious circumstance. He thinks a flock of white birds, he doesn't know what kind, became bewildered by the electric lights and flew blindly ~~xxx~~ about over the city.--Lafayette Journal.

Sept. 19 (Sat.), p. 6. Switzer Nightmare.
Well, what next? Here is Rev. George W. Switzer, of Crawfordsville, reporting to the papers that at the midnight hour he caught sight of a rapidly floating white object, which appeared to be about sixteen feet long and eight feet wide. Is it possible this object was the echo or ghost of A.L. Kumlter's speech in the Pettit case? That is what comes from Rev. Mr. Switzer sleeping on that creaking cot, which he bought at the camp meeting. It was the property of Mr. Pettit, and according to some of the witnesses could a tale unfold whose lightest word would make a busv world aghast. But this white object, with wings, eight feet wide and body sixteen feet long! This is not the time for mince pie scenery, at the midnight hour, when grave yards yawn, and thirsty preachers arise to cool their parched tongues with a drop of water from nature's fount. But what was the object? Bacon declares that "all bodies have spirits within them;" and it may be this white winged messenger of alarm was a flock of yellow legged chickens that had come fourth in their nocturnal wanderings to warn the minister that they were all that was left of the camp meeting feasts.--Lafayette Leader.

1892 January 18 (Mon) St. Louis Post-Dispatch, p. 1.

NEWS BY MIRAGE. / Mulhatton Now Located in the North Blizzard Zone.
LEWISTON, Mont., Jan. 18.--A wonderful mirage was distinctly visible near this city, yesterday afternoon. The mirage has caused considerable alarm, however, because it is feared that the Indians may have started on the war path and encountered a party of hunters. Through the vistas, during the afternoon, the hunters and the red men could be seen repeatedly to charge and retreat. The Indians were apparently well supplied with ammunition, and by superior numbers they finally succeeded in capturing a party of a dozen hunters. Those who witnessed the wonderful scenic effect produced by the mirage assert that they could distinctly see the savages build piles of faggots and burn their captives at the stake. Midwinter mirages in the clear, crisp atmosphere of the Rockies are rare, and phenomena of this character are usually a reproduction of real events or real sections of the country. So far as could be ascertained last night the Indians on the reservations are peaceable.

1892 March 28 (Mon) Frankfurter Zeitung, pt. 1, p. 1.

"Russia.

The "Post" writes: "A peculiar ~~xxx~~ sport, the spy-hunt in the upper regions of the atmosphere, seems to gradually to be coming into fashion in our neighboring lands, and indeed the thing is aired with deepest seriousness in the Russian press. As it has already been reported several days ago, there was an aerial balloon of German origin which appeared at Fort Kovno (fort at Kovno); however after there were many shots delivered to this very high-flying spy vessel (the whole thing sounds a bit marvellous), it quickly turned and flew back over the border. Now that kind of aerial balloon is reported a second time. The official "Warschawskij Dnevnik" brings a report from Dombrowa, according to which the inhabitants of that spot observed, on March 7 at 5:30 p.m., a giant balloon flying at a very considerable height, which, coming from the southwest, [held to] the northeasterly direction of the Ivangorod-Dombrowa railroad, in spite of the fact that on this day the wind blew from the north. The balloon disappeared for a while behind the clouds, reappeared 45 minutes later, was lighted and meanwhile had turned in the opposite direction. The security man [?] of the newspaper concluded from all this that the balloon described to him" called for a highly perfected airship apparatus manned by a well-experienced crew, and in fact it came from Prussian Silesia." Other newspapers contain the like. Thus does the paper (journal) "Wiek" from the industrial border town Sosnowice report that nearly every day balloons which are occupied by passengers fly over Sosnowice, Dombrowa and Stremeszcze [?]. Around 9 o'clock a light which changes color shines from the balloons. There is a conviction that they carry electric motors for the purpose of light generation, so that these balloons project a light which is very intense and penetrating. The balloons usually fly in a northeasterly direction from Prussian Silesia. Their flight is quiet and smooth, [or] so to speak, they are flexible. In the evening the balloons fly over the border, reach Stremeszcze about midnight and return once again to Prussian in the morning. As the "Kijewljanin" states, similar reports also have appeared in recent days in the correspondence of some of the other Warsaw newspapers.

1893 July 3 (Mon) Daily Ledger (Tacoma, Wash.), p. 3.

AN ELECTRIC MONSTER / Flashes of Light and Terrible Sounds Emitted by One in the Bay. / W.L. McDonald Struck Senseless in Attempting to Rescue a Shocked Comrade. / Nearly 150 Feet Long and Covered With Coarse Hair--A Fishing Party's Trip Cut Short. /

A party of Tacoma gentlemen have good reason to remember the morning of the 2d of July as long as life remains in their bodies--and to quote the exact words of one of the party, "There are denizens of the ocean that man never, in his most horrible and fantastic nightmares, even saw the likes of."

On Saturday morning a party, composed of the following well known gentlemen, set sail on the sloop "Marion" from the boat house at the end of the wharf for a three days' fishing and hunting excursion on the Sound. The party consisted of Auctioneer William Fitzhenry, H.L. Beal, W.L. McDonald, J.K. Bell, Henry Blackwood and two eastern gentlemen who are visiting the coast, and it is from the lips of one of these gentlemen, who declines to allow his name to be used, as he says that shortly before he left the east he took the Keeley cure, and he fears that if his name was used in connection with this article his eastern friends might think he had "gone back" and got 'em again.

The party were well supplied with all the necessities of life, as well as an abundance of its luxuries, though it must not be inferred from this fact that the luxuries played any part in creating the sight seen on that memorable morning. Of course, as a person having much respect for truth, I merely chronicle the story as told me, and leave each reader of this remarkable yarn to judge for themselves the necessary amount of credence to give it.

"We left Tacoma," said the eastern man, "about 4:30 p.m. Saturday, July 1st, and as the wind was from the southeast we shaped our course for Point Defiance, intending to anchor off that point and try our luck with rod and line. We cast anchor about 6 o'clock, the wind having died out, and had fair success fishing. The wind coming up again pretty strong Mr. McDonald suggested getting under way for Black Fish bay, Henderson Island, as he knew of a fine trout stream running into the bay, and also an excellent camping place near the fishing ground. So about 8 o'clock we weighed anchor and shaped our course for Black Fish bay, which place we reached about 9:30. We landed and made everything snug about the boat and made a nice camp on shore, and as it was by this time 11 o'clock we all turned in to get a little sleep as it was agreed upon that at the first streak of daylight we should all get up. About 100 yards from ~~xxxx~~ our camp was the camp of a surveying party, but ~~as~~ it was so late we decided that we would not disturb them but that we would call upon them the following morning, and would probably get some valuable pointers as to the best places to fish and hunt on the island. After a few jokes had been cracked the boys laid down and in a short time everything about camp became as still as death. It was, I guess, about midnight before I fell asleep, but exactly how long I slept I cannot say, for when I woke it was with such startling suddenness that it never entered my mind to look at my watch, and when after a while I did look at my watch, as well as every watch belonging to the party, it was stopped.

"I am afraid, sir, that you will fail to comprehend how suddenly that camp was awoken.

"Since the creation of the world I doubt if sounds and sights ~~xxx~~ more horrible were ever seen or heard by mortal man. I was in the midst of a pleasant dream, when in an instant a most horrible noise rang out in the clear morning air, and instantly the whole air was filled with a strong current of electricity that caused every nerve in the body to sting with pain, and a light as bright as that created by the concentration of many arc lights kept constantly flashing. At first I thought it was a thunder storm, but as no rain accompanied it, and as both light and sound came from off the bay, I turned my head in that direction, and if it is possible for fright to turn one's hair white, then mine ought to be snow white, for right before my eyes was a most horrible looking monster. By this time every man in ~~xxxx~~ our camp, as well as the men from the camp of the surveyors, were gathered on the bank of the stream; and as soon as we could gather our wits together we began to question if what we were looking at was not the creation of the mind, but we were soon disburdened of this idea, for the monster slowly drew in toward the shore, and as it approached from its head poured out a stream of water that looked like blue fire. All the while the air seemed to be filled with electricity, and the sensation experienced was as if each man had on a suit of clothes formed of the fine points of needles. One of the men from the surveyor's camp incautiously took a few steps in the direction of the water, and as he did so the monster darted towards the shore and threw a stream of water that reached the man, and he instantly fell to the ground and lay as though dead.

"Mr. McDonald attempted to reach the man's body to pull it back to a place of safety, but he was struck with some of the water that the monster was throwing, and fell senseless to the earth. By this time every man in both parties was panic-stricken, and we rushed to the woods for a place of safety, leaving the fallen men lying on the beach.

"As we reached the woods the 'demon of the deep' sent out flashes of light that illuminated the surrounding country for miles, and his roar--which sounded like the roar of thunder--became terrific. When we reached the woods we looked around and saw the monster making off in the direction of the Sound, and in an instant it disappeared beneath the waters of the bay, but for some time we were able to trace its course by a bright luminous light that was on the surface of the water. As the fish disappeared total darkness surrounded us, and it took us some time to find our way back to the beach where our comrades lay, and we were unable to tell the time, as the powerful electric force had stopped our watches. We eventually found McDonald and the other man, and were greatly relieved to find that they were alive, though unconscious. So we sat down to await the coming of daylight. It came, I should judge, in about half an hour, and by this time, by constant work on the two men, both were able to stand, and both agree that the moment the water the monster threw touched them, they became immediately unconscious."

On being asked to give some description of the fish, for it was, he said, "an electrical fish," the eastern man said:

"This monster fish, or whatever you may call it, was fully 150 feet long, and at its thickest part I should judge about thirty feet in circumference. Its shape was somewhat out of the ordinary in so far that the body was neither round nor flat but oval, and from what we could see the upper part of the body was covered with a very coarse hair. The head was shaped very much like the head of a walrus, though of course, very much larger. Its eyes, of which it apparently had six, were as large around as a dinner plate, and were exceedingly dull, and it was about the only spot on the monster that at one time or another was not illuminated. At intervals of about every eight feet from its head to its tail a substance that had the appearance of a copper band encircled its body, and it was from these many bands that the powerful electric current appeared to come. The bands nearest the head seemed to have the strongest electric force, and it was from the first six bands that the most brilliant lights were emitted. Near the center of its head were two large horn-like substances, though they could not have been horns for it was through them that the electrically charged water was thrown.

"Its tail from what I could see of it was shaped like a propeller, and seemed to revolve, and it may be possible that the strange monster pushes himself through the water by means of this propeller like tail.

"At will this strange monstrosity seemed to be able to emit strong waves of electric current, giving off an electromotive force which causes any person coming within the radius of this force to receive an electrotonus. This fish probably receives its power from some submarine cavern of volcanic origin, which owing to its peculiar construction, and having an extra large deposit of copper, it charges the fish that inhabit that region with a strong electric force that is displayed by this peculiar specimen. The peculiar shaped copper like bands may be caused by the strong magnetic force of the fish, and the copper deposits of the ocean, as the strong current would form the copper into a solution, whilst the strong attraction of the fish would naturally form an electric battery, drawing towards it this solution, thus forming deposits on the fish, so that in reality the electric fish is completely encompassed in copper, and its rapid movement through the water is constantly generating frictional electricity, which I should judge would in a measure account for the fish being so constantly and powerfully charged with electricity, though far from its original source of supply. One of the strange characteristics of this fish, and one by which it undoubtedly obtains its food, is its high electric control of dense and foggy atmosphere surrounding it, which amalgamates with the electrifaction [?] of the fish, making a potential which causes any living creature, such as birds or insects, flying through the air to fall dead into the water. Of course, that is merely a theory, and I may be mistaken as to its origin or where it goes to, but one thing I do know, that I would not encounter the same monster again for the universe and you can ask the rest of the party and you will find that they all agree with me, that to be within so short a distance of such a terrible monster and yet live to tell the story is something that only happens once in 1000 years. I hardly need to tell you that we were not long in getting under way for Tacoma and I can assure you that I have no further desire to fish any more in the waters of this bay. There are too many peculiar inhabitants in them. I am going to send a full account of our encounter to the Smithsonian Institute, and I doubt not but what they will send out some scientific chaps to investigate.

"Now I must be going, as I have to leave on to-night's train, but if you need any further particulars you can obtain them from any of the party. No, I do not know who composed the survey party; all I know about them is that they are from Olympia and that they were on the island running farm lines on some disputed land."

1896 October 23 (Fri) (Portland) Morning Oregonian, p. 8.

HOME-MADE METEORS / A CLEVER HOAX PLAYED ON THE PEOPLE OF MOUNT TABOR. / ...

Last Tuesday night Montaville, the flourishing little town on the eastern slope of Mount Tabor, was said to have been visited by a shower of meteors. A great excitement prevailed over the unusual event, and the phenomenon is still commented on. A select few, however, knew that a great hoax had been successfully played on the good people there and this is how it was worked:

It was a quiet evening Tuesday, boys in the village were playing on the common near the church, and men were discussing politics, when lurid flames flashed up in several directions, startling the community. Near the church where the boys were playing a great ball of fire seemed to have fallen from the heavens, spitting and sending forth sparks. On the [Rate] Line road was another of the same kind. Oscar Garfield Murray slipped the fire out with his hat on the one near the church, but it was too hot to pick up at once. He finally was unable to carry it home. It was tasted by Mr. O.C. Maxxwa Murray, and he found it tasted like sulphur and lye.

The piece found on the Base Line road was similar. The smaller piece was carried to Mr. Cable's drug store, on the Base Line road, who was greatly interested. He had the precious lump inclosed in a glass jar, which he labeled "Handle with care. Part of the meteor which fell on the night of the 20th." Mr. Cable offered $20 for the other and larger piece of the meteor, but nothing short of $100, gold standard, could reach it.

The big piece was turned over to Professor Leatherman, as he was thought to be the man who could tell something of its composition. The professor overhauled several works on meteors, and the composition of the heavenly bodies, but could find nothing to compare with this new and strange article.

Hundreds have examined the specimen at Mr. Cable's drug store. A piece of the stuff left exposed to the air quickly crumbled to dust.

The number of people who claim to have seen the meteor fall is astonishing. A minister swore he saw it descend near his church. But all these good people are way off. The soft crumbly stuff they imagine was a meteor is simply the remains of the material used to produce the effect.

Some boys were in the city Tuesday and procured some of the material used to produce red and green fire, which they distributed around the hills and set on fire at the right time. The stuff which was picked up afterward was simply what was left after it had burned out.

The specimens Mr. Cable has carefully bottled up for fear it might get away and the big lump Professor Leatherman has are pieces of the burned-out crust.

1896 October 24 (Sat) (Portland) Morning Oregonian, p. 5.

CITY NEWS IN BRIEF /

METEORS SEEN IN THIS CITY.--The remarkable meteor mentioned yesterday morning in a dispatch from Wheatland, Cal., was noticed in this city. Mr. W. C. Lovell, residing at Kearney and Sixteenth streets, was looking out of the window about 6 o'clock Thursday evening, and noticed three balls of fire passing across the southern sky about 10 degrees above the horizon, going toward the east, traveling in a horizontal line, about half a degree apart. They passed over about 30 degrees of the horizon and disappeared without falling. Mr. Lovell noticed them particularly, as it seemed strange to him that they should be traveling in a horizontal line, instead of falling, as meteors, or "shooting stars," usually do. It seems that very few persons noticed the phenomenon, as Mr. Lovell was the only person who mentioned the matter to an Oregonian reporter yesterday. Last evening, however, Mr. Fred D. Matthews called to say that he had seen the meteor Thursday evening at Woodburn. He had just come in from hunting, and was at a farmer's barn, having his horse hitched up, when his notice was attracted by three globes of fire travelling from west to east across the sky, not far above the horizon, going in a straight line, and finally disappearing. Each of the globes had a trail of fire behind it. They traveled quite slowly, and formed a grand spectacle. Mr. Matthews looked at his watch, and saw that it was just 10 minutes past 6. This description tallies exactly with that of the phenomenon seen at Woodlawn, Cal., at the same time, except that there the meteor appeared as a star of the magnitude of the evening star, increasing in size until within 20 degrees east, when it gradually separated into two and then into three parts, resembling as a whole three comet-shaped meteors, joined to one another. Usually when phenomena of this kind occur dozens of people will mention the matter to The Oregonian reporters during the succeeding day, but so far the two gentlemen above mentioned are the only ones who have reported seeing this wonderful meteor. The generally accepted theory in regard to meteors is that they are masses of matter which become heated in passing through the atmosphere surrounding the earth, but as this meteor traveled slowly and did not fall toward the earth, but traveled on a parallel course, the supposition that it was in space beyond the atmosphere of the earth is probably correct.

10/23/1896 SF Examiner, p. 7, "A Queer Thing" (card 2)

From all accounts this grand sight was not generally observed at the hour and time did not find many people on the streets. The sight was magnificent and awe-inspiring, and one long to be remembered as it did not appear to be over forty or fifty miles above the earth. A splendid view of the triple-connected meteor was taken by W.M. Richards.

1896 November 20 (Fri. morn) Marysville Daily Appeal, p. 1. (card 1)

A SACRAMENTO JOKE / There Are Some People Who Still Take It Seriously. / A SUTTERITE'S SOLUTION. / Says That It Was a Lighted Chinese Lantern Attached to a Sandhill Crane--Other Deductions. /

Nothing of a trustworthy character has been heard of the present whereabouts of the air-ship, or the what is-it, which swept over the house tops of Sacramento Tuesday evening, in sight of many citizens who have not served terms in the county jail for drunkenness nor attained even local renown as romancers, says the Bee of last night.

Meanwhile the sensation groweth apace. Last evening after the publication of interviews with reputable parties in The Bee, the subject of the "voices in the sky" was the topic of conversation in the restaurants, hotels, and wherever people congregated. The general sentiment was that the light was either a meteor or an attachment to a balloon which had ascended from some point near the city, and the notion that it was part of an air ship was scouted as ridiculous. That such a light as was described in The Bee last night swept in a more or less diagonal line through Sacramento between 6 and 7 o'clock Tuesday evening is indisputable. That voices were heard traveling with the light certain persons assert with great solemnity. That the light was suspended under a contrivance of egg shape, with paddles whirling on the side, one or two witnesses have been found with the hardihood to declare. That there is some mystery about the circumstance a great number of people believe. That the antics of the light as to wobbling this way and that, and going up and down are embellishments to a grand hoax, the majority of citizens will probably agree.

One thing most of the witnesses to the phenomenon are positive about is that the light was white, like that shed by an arc lamp. Weather Observer Barwick is at as much loss as anybody to account for the appearance in the sky. He says the color of a meteor would be affected by the density of the atmosphere through which it was darting, and on an evening like that of Tuesday he believes the light of such an aerial visitor would most likely be purplish, and in no event the extreme white of an arc lamp.

Various rumors are afloat, but they can scarcely be given credence. One, published in this morning's Record Union, is to the effect that an air ship has been in course of construction for some time at Oak Park, and that on Tuesday evening a trial trip of the conveyance was made through the city, and out to Arcade, where it broke down is now awaiting repairs.

The authority of Ex-Senator F.S. Sprague is given for the loss of a carpenter's hammer from a scaffolding surrounding the steeple of St. Paul's church, left there a few hours before the passage of the alleged ship, but this incident is not substantiated. / SOLVED BY A SUTTERITE.

To the Editor of the Bee--Sir: It is being currently reported here that certain Sacramento citizens who were in the neighborhood of a Twenty-eighth-street brewery last night saw an airship carrying a minstrel show from New York to Sacramento. The story meets with little credence in this community, where we are all farmers. On Tuesday a fisherman living on the banks of Cat Fish Slough captured a sand hill crane, and after tying a Chinese lantern to one of its legs let it go. When last seen it was flying toward Sacramento at a speed of about fifty miles an hour, and must have passed over your city between 7 and 8 o'clock in the evening. Please find out if anyone who saw the airship saw the sand hill crane, and oblige, / PRO BONO PUBLICO, / Nicolaus, Sutter County, Nov. 18th.

1896 November 23 (Mon) San Jose (Calif) Daily Mercury, p. 8. (card 1)

MYSTIC AIRSHIP. / Said to Have Passed Over This City Last Evening. / FLYING LIGHT MOVING EAST. / Assertions That the Strange Visitor Sailed Across the Heavens in the Direction of Mount Hamilton. /

The mysterious airship, which startled many people in Sacramento Wednesday night and which was claimed to have been seen by several persons from a street car in Oakland Saturday evening and again over Sacramento last evening, was reported to have passed over this city about 11 o'clock last night.

The strange air vessel is said to have suddenly come within sight of a group of people on East Santa Clara street, near Narlice Park.

Persons in the group claimed to have seen the ship distinctly and said that the paddles could be plainly seen revolving.

Frank Everett, a resident of Santa Cruz, who is visiting in this city, made the following statement last evening: "I was returning from East San Jose about 11 o'clock last evening when I noticed a crowd of people standing in the street and seated in vehicles on Santa Clara street, near Naglee Park. I asked what was the matter, and they stated that an airship had just passed above them. I looked up and could plainly distinguish a bright light passing through the air in the direction of Mount Hamilton. Several of the crowd said they had plainly seen the airship as it passed above them and had been able to distinguish the paddles, used as propellers. The people were strangers to me, but seemed to be much surprised at what they had seen. The light I saw was moving in a zigzag manner.

H. Erich of this city stated that as he was driving a buggy from East San Jose to this city his attention was attracted by the crowd on Santa Clara street. He stopped and asked what was the matter. He was told that an airship had been seen and saw a light darting through the darkness in the direction of Mount Hamilton. He said he was unable to detect what the light was as it was only visible to him for a few seconds and then disappeared. He only recognized Everett in the crowd, and received from him the same statement regarding the assertions of other members of the crowd in regard to seeing the airship, as is given above. He knew no one else among those congregating at the spot.

Owing to the late hour at which the report was received in the city it was impossible to locate any of the persons who have seen the strange visitor. / 1896 November 23 (Mon.) Woodland, Calif., Daily Democrat, p. 3.

Capay Cullings.

Capay, Nov. 23. Several Capay residents insist that they saw the airship last night about 9 o'clock. It was in a southeasterly direction and slowly moving southward. / 24. We haven't lost any airships. Wed. eve. Nov. 25. Grafton Gossip, p. 3.

Knights Landing, Nov. 25.--Check your baggage by the airship. City News. It is all very well to poke fun at the airship, but it will be a reality some day.

27,2. The supposed airship may be one of Flammarion's shooting stars that failed to shoot, but lost its reckoning and is wandering about in space.

Airships, otherwise known as Calloons [balloons?], continue to go up in various parts of the country and of course hot air is not a factor in the occurrence; everything is expected to go up since McKinlev's election.

Dec. 1, p. 2. Venus is very luminous these Dec. evenings and it is possible that some people have mistaken it for an airship.

The Calif. arap story didn't lose anything on its eastern journey. By the time it reached Kansas City it was treated with all seriousness and the machine was described as 150 feet in length, operated by a rudder and wings and capable of carrying 15 people.

Quake and quiver little light, / How we stare at you each night. / Up above the world so high / 'Tis the airship on the fly. / When the blazing sun has set / And the grass with dew is wet. / Then we stand and catch his gripe / Just to watch the famed airship-- / Early morn and late at night, / Gaunt and shivering forms and white / Shaking as with ague chill, / Watching for the airship still. --H.A. Deaner.

Dec. 5,2. Capay Cullings.

There is no question but that we have the best county in the state no matter whether the airship is a delusion or a fixed fact.

7,2. Davisville Doings.

The arap seems to have been laid aside for the present. Perhaps Swinnerton's sketch of last Saturday portrays the truth, and the machine has actually come to grief.

14,3. Dunningan Dots.

The airship craze seems to be subsiding, and it is about time. 1896 November 24 (Tue) Daily Morning Union (Grass Valley, Calif.), p. 3

Was It an Air Ship? / A Strange and Startling Object Seen Sailing Through the Skies Saturday Night.

Reports are current to the effect that an air ship which has been sailing in the skies over Sacramento, San Jose and other cities toured over the eastern portion of Nevada City at a late hour Saturday night. A number of people who happened to be up at that hour of the night vouch that a strange and startling object was seen sailing through the eastern heavens, the object evidently being headed south. There was a strong light which cast a shadow from its high altitude. Among those who saw the alleged airship is a prominent physician and several others who do not hold a certificate in the Liars' Club.

Friday Oct. 23, p. 3. A Strange Meteor. (Nevada City and Mountain Towns)

Capt. Henry Richards and son, while coming into town from Gold Flat last evening, noticed a meteor or falling star passing through the northern heavens from west to east on a horizontal line, which was of such brilliancy as to attract considerable attention. The star or meteor seemed to be in three parts and the line of fire, resembling the tail of a comet, looked to the naked eye to be about 100 feet in length. The three parts were quite a distance apart and appeared to be as big as footballs. The strange meteor or whatever it was did not fall to the earth, but passed into space.

Nov. 24, 1: 25.4. Fake arsp in SF.

1896 November 25 (Wed.) Daily Californian (Bakersfield), p. 2

It is reported that the Call's flying machine was seen by two different parties passing over Bakersfield last night, going in the direction of Tehachapi. The men who saw it could not be found to-day.

Tues. eve., Nov. 24, p. 2.

One or two papers, notorious for their faking proclivities, are disposed to ridicule the possibility of there being any truth in the airship stories. But too many reputable citizens have testified to the presence of the marvel for anyone to dismiss the proposition with a sneer. There is certainly nothing intrinsically improbable about it.

1896 November 25 (Wed) Oakland Tribune, p. 1. (card 1)

YOU CAN'T MISS IT. / Just Look at the Sky and You Will See the Airship. / SO SAY THE CREDULOUS. / It Was in Red Bluff and Also Oakland Last Night. / EXPERIENCES ARE RELATED. / All Sorts of Rumors Are Floating About the Town. /

RED BLUFF, Nov. 25.--Many residents assert they saw the alleged airship in this neighborhood last evening.

It was first noticed about 7 o'clock, and was thought to be a particularly bright star, but which was moving rapidly in a southwesterly direction towards the mountains.

It finally disappeared over the mountains.

The summit of the mountains could be seen above the mysterious light as it moved west.

Soon after its disappearance a telegram from Chico stated the supposed airship had come from the direction of Red Bluff, and after making a few turns had returned in the direction from which it came.

Several citizens say that while at the first only a light was visible, that later the body of an egg shaped object was visible moving quickly through the air.

The theory that it was a star was rejected because of its distinctly rocking motion, which was like the motion made by a kite.

SEEN IN OAKLAND.

Many Believe in the Mystery / Recite Their Personal Experiences. The fact that what was apparently the same mysterious object, is claimed to have been seen earlier in the evening by a large number of Oaklanders, causes some doubt to arise in the minds of many.

The meteoric display which an astronomer predicted for the 13th of this month, has been brought into the case and now it is being claimed that the visions are nothing less than meteors and comets which are participating in Heaven's pyrotechnic display one by one.

Charles White of East Oakland says he is positive he saw the airship last night. He crossed on the 6:15 o'clock ferry from San Francisco and says that while on the cable car to the boat a number of passengers noticed what appeared to be the mysterious visitor in the heavens near South San Francisco. It rapidly approached and raced the boat across the bay, beating it so badly that it was hovering over Alameda by the time the boat docked. From the train the passengers saw the light continuing in the same direction and later, when on an Eighth street electric car could plainly discern it, though then the object was far distant.

A. B. Parker, conductor of the car, corroborates the story, for he, with a number of others watched the strange thing until it disappeared from view.

A small-sized scare was started today, when the present location of the air-ship was said to be in Alameda. A visit to the location described revealed nothing but the remains of an experimental torpedo boat which had been built some years ago.

The uncertainty of the thing has been causing much speculation and now the streets are lined with an inquisitive throng, all gazing heavenwards.

1896 November 25 (Wed morn) San Jose (Calif) Mercury, p. 5. (card 1)

SAILED OVER AGAIN. / Another Visit From the Supposed Airship. / SEEN BY SEVERAL PERSONS. / It Passed Over the Electric Tower About Eleven O'Clock and Was Visible for About Fifteen Minutes. /

San Jose was favored with another visit from the mysterious airship last night about 11 o'clock, at least so several people believe.

A message was received at the telephone office from San Francisco at about a quarter to 11 stating that the airship had started from that place about 9:30, and to be on the watch for it. It was seen passing over the Ingleside track about that time by Thomas Beston of 2247 Mission street.

The machine must have taken its own time to journey down here, for about 10 o'clock last evening it was seen by Mr. Whoff, an architect of Hayward, passing over that place.

The passing of the visitor over this city was noted by quite a number of persons. It was pursuing a southerly course, and seemed bound for Gilroy. It floated directly over the electric tower, and was visible by the frequent flashes it sent forth for about fifteen minutes, when it disappeared.

Eugene Barre, the night operator of the Sunset Telephone Company, was one who saw the sight, as he had kept watch for it. When seen in regard to the affair, Barre told the following story.

"A friend of mine, an operator in San Francisco, saw the machine flying over the Ingleside track at about 6:30. At about 10:45 he telephoned me to be on the watch for it as it was moving toward San Jose. I kept a sharp lookout from that time on, and about 11 o'clock I saw the arrangement over the electric tower. It did not seem to me to be over fifty feet above the tower, and was moving south at a very slow rate of speed. The ship was visible by the frequent flashes thrown from it. The light was strong and looked as if it were a gas or an electric light of high power. The flashes were only for a moment at a time, but from what I could see during that time it was shaped something similar to a carrot. The bottom of the car seemed bright, as if made of aluminum or some other bright metal. The rate of speed must have been very slow, for it was visible for over fifteen minutes."

Several of the other boys employed at the office witnessed the flight of the machine at the same time as did Mr. Barre and corroborated his tale. The ship could not have gone very far south, as about midnight it was seen passing over this city in swift flight bound in the direction of, and presumably for, San Francisco. On the return trip the light was seen by several parties.

M. J. O'Brien, a compositor, was going to bed when his nephew, James Stanley, called him to him that the airship was coming. He rushed out and saw a bright light moving rapidly northward over the city. They watched it until it disappeared and concluded that it was the far-famed airship.

1896 November 26 (Th morn) San Jose (Calif.) Daily Mercury, p. 5.

SAW THE AIRSHIP. / Description of the Mysterious Craft by a San Josean. Large crowds collected at various points on the streets in this city last evening. All were gazing skyward anxious for a glimpse of the far-famed airship.

W. E. Watts, a teacher of bicycle riding, gave a description of the airship last night in an interview with a Mercury representative. He said he was willing to take an oath that he saw the machine last Tuesday night at 11 o'clock when he was on his return from a wheel ride to Gilroy. He said it was then only a few hundred feet above the ground. It was visible from a reflection of light on some large wing-snapped objects. Light, as if thrown from a search lamp, struck the earth near the Turn Verein shooting range.

Mrs. M. B. Dunn, who occupies rooms on the third floor of the Farmer's Union building, told a Mercury reporter last evening that she saw what she believed to have been an airship moving through the heavens late Tuesday night. Mrs. Dunn stated that at first she thought the object she saw was a group of stars, but when she saw the object moving west and disappear from sight she was satisfied it was an airship.

1896 November 26 (Th) San Jose Daily Mercury, p. 6.

Los Gatos News. / MANY SEARCHERS FOR THE MYSTERIOUS AIRSHIP. / ...

Los Gatos, November 25.--Los Gatos, to say the number of a hundred or more, excitedly scanned the heavens last night in search of the mysterious airship. The planet Mars, which at this time of the year looks exceedingly large and distinct, came into unsought-for notoriety as the extensively heralded air craft. There are those who solemnly avow that the sea serpent's rival actually did cavort over the foothill town, and variously described the aerial object. One enthusiastic gazer swears there was a brass band on board.

1896 November 27 (Fri) Daily Californian (Bakersfield), p. 5.

That Air Ship.

Several parties declare they saw the air ship about 8 o'clock yesterday evening in the heavens over toward Tejon. Mr. Goode, the fruit vender was one of the parties. He declares that all he could see was a monster red looking light, while the others who saw it claim that something encased the light. Mr. Goode says his eyes are bad and in consequence he could not see as well as the others. They all saw something and that is one thing sure, so they maintain.

Mon. Nov. 30, p. 2.

The Call continues to add to its list of men of unimpeachable character who solemnly aver that they have seen some wonder in the sky which they believe to be an airship. The rivals of the Call still continue to maintain that the whole thing is a fake. If ~~anyone~~ ~~xxxxxx~~ If so, then some of the most prominent citizens of the State, college professors and others, must be a conscienceless lot of liars. What a joke it would be on the jealous contemporaries of the Call if the airship should turn out to be an actuality.

1896 November 27 (Fri morn) San Jose Daily Mercury, p. 5. (card 1)

SAW MOVING LIGHTS. / Another Visit From the Stranger of the Skies. / MANY PEOPLE SAW THE SIGHT. / All of the Firm Belief That the Airship Passed Over San Jose Last Night. /

The mysterious airship which is claimed to be making nocturnal voyages in this vicinity, according to the statements of many persons, passed over this city again about 7 o'clock last night. The lights of the supposed ship only are claimed to have been seen, but the descriptions given of these lights agree entirely with those previously given by parties who claim to have seen the strange air machine. The parties who state they saw the lights viewed them from different sections, but agree entirely upon the course taken by the same. The statements as to the character of the lights also corroborate each other.

Robert Shields, who boards at the New York Exchange Hotel, and is an employe of the San Jose Art Emporium, claimed to have always been skeptical in regard to the possibility of there being an airship until the scene witnessed last evening satisfied him that such a machine was in existence and he saw the lights of the same.

Mr. Shields said: "I was promenading with two young ladies on San Carlos street near Eighth, when I heard some persons standing on a porch say, 'Why, that must be the airship.' I looked up and saw, apparently about nine hundred feet above the Normal School, a bright light rapidly moving west. The light cast a decided reflection. I stood still and the young ladies and I watched the light for several minutes. It went far west and then appeared to sink. We could then see two lights distinctly. The machine arose again and only one light was visible. It then took a southerly course and two lights, one behind the other, could be easily seen. We watched the lights until they disappeared from view in the south."

S.S. Farley, who is the proprietor of the Havverne creamery, and resides at the corner of Seventh and San Carlos streets, said: "My attention was called to the airship by a stranger who knocked at my door and said the airship was passing. I ran to the door and in a moment my wife, Miss Harris, a neighbor, and Percy Steeves, who were in my place at the time, joined me. I could at first only see one bright light moving west rapidly. It then seemed to drop, and we lost the light behind a cloud. It reappeared in a few seconds, and then turned directly south. We could then distinguish two lights plainly, and watched these until they disappeared in the distance."

Mr. Farley believes the lights he saw were attached to an airship. Percy Steeves, who resides on South Seventh street, corroborated Mr. Farley's statement.

George Brested, who boards at the New York Exchange Hotel, said: "I was on the Julian street road about 7 o'clock, when I noticed a bright light rapidly passing over San Jose. It went due west, and then turned and took a southerly direction. I could see the light waving gradually. At first I thought that a fire balloon had been sent up, but after watching the light and seeing the systematic course it was taking west and then gradually turn south I became satisfied I had seen the headlight of the airship, and I believe so now."

Mrs. B.P. Young who resides at 328 East San Carlos street, thinks she saw the airship and described the sight as follows: "I was seated in the house with my daughter, Mabel Young, and a lady who is staying with me and attending the Normal School, about 7 o'clock this evening when Roy Parkinson, whose mother resides at the corner of Eighth and San Carlos streets, rang my door bell and said that his mother wanted me to come out and look at the airship, which was passing over the city."

"We rushed to the door and distinctly saw a bright light about the size of a large star moving rapidly west. We could see the light plainly, and it appeared to be moving in a straight line west. We watched it for several minutes and saw it move downward, and we lost sight for a few moments, as if it had descended behind a cloud. We saw it again arise somewhat and then change its course south, as if going toward Los Gatos. We followed it with our eyes until it disappeared from view in the south."

Many persons who heard of the supposed voyage of the airship last evening in a southerly direction believed that it would return north during the night and watched the heavens carefully in hopes of catching a view of the strange visitor. No further signs of the mysterious lights, however, were witnessed.

1896 November 28 Placer Herald (Auburn, Calif.) (wkly), p. 5. (Sat)

The Flying Machine.

The airship craze has struck Auburn and our people haven't got either. Several citizens who have never been known to handle the truth at all carelessly assert that they discovered a brilliantly lighted ~~xxxx~~ barrel shaped object passing over town Wednesday night. It was "away up in the sky" as they put it, traveled very rapidly and had a sinuous motion up and down. While this is the time of year for the delicious "Tom and Jerry," it does not necessarily follow that these gentlemen had been indulging in that luxury, but those who are disposed to be skeptical say that the phenomenon of the skies originated in Auburn, and they don't propose to be faked. / Alta and Towle. /

There is great excitement here over the air ship. It would be a very good plan for H. Schaw to make ~~xxx~~ a machine and pursue the disturber through space. It would be a most interesting ~~xxxxxx~~ scene and he might make a good thing at it. p. 6. The foolkiller is getting the drop on a great many aeronauts this year.

1896 November 28 (Sat) San Jose Daily Mercury, p. 5. (card 1)

LIGHTS MOVED K FAST / Prof. H.B. Worcester and Party Saw the Supposed Airship. / SEEMED INTELLIGENTLY GUIDED. / ~~Yxxxk~~ Traveled With Great Velocity in Apparently a Regulated Manner--Disappeared on the Horizon. /

An interesting account of the mysterious moving light which passed over this city Thursday evening and which is supposed to be attached to an airship is given by Professor H.B. Worcester, President of the Garden City Business College. Professor Worcester resides with his family in East San Jose. To a Mercury reporter, who asked him regarding the strange light, he said:

There was a small party at my house in East San Jose on Thanksgiving Day, and dinner was prolonged until about 7 o'clock in the evening. The company then repaired to the front of the house to enjoy some music, and I went into the rear yard to get a lantern. I happened to look up and saw several miles away, apparently about over College Park or Santa Clara a large light moving rapidly toward San Jose. In a second I surmised it was the mysterious light which people had seen and which was supposed to be attached to an airship. In order to call the attention of those in the house to the same I ran around the house to save time and called out that the airship was passing. Everybody rushed around into the front yard. Within the time it had taken me to run around the house the light had changed its course from east to south-west and had traveled several miles and was in a line over the southern portion of San Jose. The entire party saw the moving light and saw it go west, then turn south, and then change to southeast. We watched the light until it disappeared below the horizon.

"When the ship turned southeast I could distinguish two lights, one behind the other. The single light first seen was about the size of an engine headlight and had more of the appearance of a large incandescent light than anything else. It was moving at the rate of from sixty to 100 miles an hour, and it was only a few moments before it had disappeared below the horizon."

"There were three things regarding the light which impressed me, viz.: Its velocity, its regular movement, and its apparent intelligent control. The motion of the light would suggest the alternate flapping of wings."

"I have seen many fire balloons, but the light I saw had none of the characteristics of such a toy. Its velocity was too great for a balloon on such a still night and its movements too regular."

"The light was about 1500 feet high when first seen, and may have continued at that elevation, but it appeared to lower as it disappeared on the horizon."

Professor Worcester stated that his party consisted of Professor M.S. Cross of the University of the Pacific, Mrs. Dr. Allen, Mrs. Colonel Moore, Miss Annie Chase, Harry Worcester, Mrs. Worcester and himself. All of these, he said, saw the mysterious light and expressed their belief that it was under intelligent control.

Among others who saw the light was a party at Balla Vista, near Alum Rock, composed of Mr. and Mrs. F.W. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Renstorff of Mountain View, Mr. and Mrs. Bert M. Babcock and Mr. and Mrs. Max Elton.

John Bawl, a farmer who bears the reputation of being practical and unimaginative, declares that he saw the airship in flight over his residence in East San Jose, on Monroe street, near Franklin, Thursday evening, and though it was moving rapidly and was at a considerable altitude, he was able to plainly distinguish its general outline and most striking features. He describes the great winged ship with vividness and realism. His wife and family corroborate his story.

"I was standing in the rear of my residence about 7 o'clock or shortly before that," he said, "when my attention was attracted by some bright object in the sky about 150 yards distant and bearing rapidly toward me from the northwest. I looked at it closely and observed it was lunging about from side to side, sometimes swerving sharply to one side, but always maintaining a general southwesterly direction. It occurred to me that this was the famous airship, and I shouted lustily to my family and they all witnessed it as it came over our residence."

"It was so high up I could form no very definite idea of its size, but I judged it was about twenty feet long. It had a pair of wings which were constantly flapping, not from side to side like a bird's, but with more of a forward and downward motion. Beneath it several feet hung a ball of red light which lit up the bottom of the ship and sent its rays far down below it. At the front was a cone-shaped projection which I surmised was a wind-break."

"The vessel lunged badly and once made a great swerve to the west, but regained its course again. It varied in height considerably during the time I watched it. Its speed I judged to be about that of an electric car doing its best."

Mr. Bawl tells a similar story of the strange locomotive of the air. 1896 November 29 (Sun) San Jose (Calif) Daily Mercury, p. 7. (cd. 1)

SAW THE AIRSHIP. / Exam PROFESSOR M.S. CROSS TELLS OF THE STRANGE MOVING LIGHT. / The Dean is Positive What He Saw Could Not Have Been a Balloon. /

To the list of reliable witnesses already too formidable to be lightly contradicted, concerning the existence of an aerial visitor in this neighborhood on recent nights is added one whose testimony has had great weight with many hitherto skeptical. Professor M.S. Cross, Dean of the University of the Pacific, saw the airship on its flight over East San Jose Thursday night and is convinced that it was neither a balloon, as practical doubters insist, nor an optical illusion, as is urged by more subtle skeptics.

The standing of Professor Cross, both on the score of his personal reputation and the position which he holds as head of the conservative educational institution of Coast Methodism, makes his testimony of the greatest weight.

"It was about 7 o'clock when my attention was called to the airship," said Professor Cross last evening. "Of course I am not prepared to say it was an airship. Certainly it was a light moving strangely ~~xxxxxx~~ through the sky and one for which I am unable to ~~xxxx~~ account on any other theory. I was visiting at the residence of Professor Worcester in East San Jose Thursday night. About 7 o'clock Professor Worcester, who was in the yard, called to me to come and see the airship."

"I immediately rushed out and by that time Professor Worcester ~~xx~~ said the ship ~~xxx~~ had moved a considerable distance. We were not able to see any wings or anything of that kind. What we did see was a ball of light apparently about six inches in diameter. It was moving very fast in a southeasterly direction. Its motion was not steady, but it seemed to waver from side to side. Its altitude seemed to vary also as we watched it."

"How fast it was traveling of course I was unable to tell. It appeared to me to be going very rapidly, and if it was very far distant its speed must have been very great."

"I am confident it was no balloon. It was going too rapidly to be carried by the wind. It was a quiet night, what little breeze there was being, if I remember correctly, from the south, yet this light traveled in a southerly direction. Furthermore, a balloon has a peculiar up and down motion which the lunging of this light in no way resembled.

"Just before it disappeared the light seemed to broaden. Some people say the ship they have seen has two lights and perhaps as the ship veered to one side the two lights were exposed giving the appearance of one broad light. We were not able to watch it more than two or three minutes."

The point where Professor Cross saw the balloon is ~~xxxxx~~ about two blocks north of where John Bowl claimed to have seen it. The stories tally exactly as to time, direction and general characteristics. The ship was lower when Bowl observed it. Professor Cross' story corroborates that of Professor Worcester.

1896 December 1 (Tues) San Jose Daily Mercury, p. 8. (card 1)

YARN OF THE AIR. / Sensational Story Told by an Electrician. / CLAIMS HE RODE IN THE SHIP. / Startling Assertion That He Passed Over the Hawaiian Islands and Returned in Two Days. / [pic.: John A. Horen, Who Claims to Have Taken a Trip in an Airship.]

John A. Horen is an electrician in the employ of the Electric Improvement Company, who left here last Thursday and returned yesterday with a sensational story of having had a voyage on an airship.

As a consequence he has been subjected to a great deal of bantering on the part of his associates, whom he could not convince that his statement was founded on fact. Even viewed as fiction Horen's story is interesting and is given for what it is worth.

Horen is a hard-working, intelligent mechanic, and he told his startling story last evening to acquaintances at the New York Exchange Hotel, where he stops. Mr. Hirsh, one of the proprietors of the hotel, said if Horen had taken a trip to San Francisco Thursday, as he claimed, and did not return till yesterday, Horen has become well known among telephone and electric light employes during his seven months' residence in this city. He is recognized as an expert operator and experimenter with electrical apparatus.

In an interview with a Mercury representative last evening, Horen said he had solemnly promised not to reveal anything that would give a ~~xxxx~~ clew as to the inventor of the airship or anything as to the principles of its construction. In general, however, the machine, he says, was made of aluminum plates of remarkable thinness and lightness, and strength was obtained by having them ribbed. When spread out for flight the ship was 163 feet in length and fifty-six feet wide. Horen said he was taken into the confidence of the inventor, as the latter wished to take advantage of an electric platinum sparking apparatus that Horen has invented.

"By appointment," said Horen, "I met the inventor in San Francisco last Thursday afternoon, and we went on horseback to a secluded spot on the sandy sea shore, where the great machine was disclosed. I had not been let into the secret till I was brought face to face with the machine itself. I had no difficulty in applying my apparatus to the motor and then the inventor invited me to take a ride in the airship. We stepped into an inclosed carriage in the center of the machine that had windows of mica, or some other transparent and very light substance. The motive power is a great secret. It is not steam or electricity, but electricity enters into it to a small degree. The bearings on the machine are not exactly ball bearing but they operate similar to that kind of bearings. We arose by means of two propellers, one on each end of the machine, to a great height. The movement was so noiseless and swift that a passenger is not conscious of it. The height was registered by a machine inside the car. The airship travels at a much greater rate of speed than has been guessed at by any one. The inventor does not count his progress by miles, but by degrees on the earth's surface. His average speed in flight he claims is two degrees an hour, or 138 miles. The flight in question was taken out over the ocean. Near morning the inventor pointed below to some twinkling lights on some land and said that was Honolulu. He then took a circuitous course and landed near the point we started from shortly after dark Saturday evening.

"I should think the man is about 45 years old. He has been working on his airship for twelve years, never changing the principle. He told me he believed he had a perfect machine now. He can light as easily as a feather will drop to the earth anywhere, and can also stop almost dead still in mid air if he wishes to. The inventor did not seem to be at all excited over his wonderful machine, but talked to me about it just as if it was a wheelbarrow.

"I ~~ask~~ asked him when he was going to patent it, but he said he would not be in a hurry for a few weeks yet unless there was danger of exposure. He wants to perfect something about the bearings of one of the propellers, and then he says he will fly to New York and begin his application for a patent by means of the working machine. He does not need to fear exposure from me, as I could not give the principle of operation of the machine if I wanted to do so.

"Notwithstanding his great faith in the machine the inventor always takes with him a life preserver that he has also been working upon for many years. This machine is a combination of parachute and balloon. By means of some chemical the balloon is inflated after the parachute is spread, and with it a man would be enabled to float around in the air a great while, or until he reached a safe landing place.

1896 December 2 (Wed) Marysville (Calif.) Daily Appeal, p. 3.

OROVILLE. / FLYNN'S FAIRY TALES.

The Register evidently has great regard for the veracity of Joel Flynn of Saxy Berry Creek. It had two items yesterday touching on the matter.

One said that he left home on Sunday night and started for Oroville. He had gone but a short distance when he saw the mysterious air ship which landed near him and the inventor offered to give him a ride. Flynn accepted and he went into the air so high that he came near freezing, but he landed in town in a short time.

We have been wearing a button entitled, "I am somewhat of a liar myself," and this we immediately took off and handed to Joel, who accepted it without a word.

According to the other he says it was exceedingly cold up there on Saturday morning. He heard his chickens making a strange noise and went out to investigate. A big fine rooster was trying to crow, but the crows as they came from his windpipe froze together and when Joel first saw him there were a foot or more of these crows all in a string hanging from the rooster's mouth.

1896 December 3 (Th) Daily Callitornian (Bakersfield), p. 2.

There are about 200 people in this town who are ready to take their perpendicular oaths that they saw that airship, or something like it, in the heavens last night.

p. 7. Most of the airships that are now being watched of nights sink below the horizon with the certain regularity of the twinkling star.

4, 7. The airship did not venture out last night, or at least it was not seen. Probably it is taking a trip to Honolulu.

Dec. 2, 4. Horen.

1896 December 3 (Th) Salinas (Calif.) Index, p. 1.

That Air Ship Again.

A large, spherical body with scintillating lights, high up in the sky and majestically sailing over these benighted regions where Monterey and Pacific Grove are supposed to be was observed by a dozen people on the streets of Salinas about 7 o'clock last night. The word was quickly passed along the street and soon there were many dozens of men anxious to catch a glimpse of the aerial vessel. A gentleman talking through the telephones to Pacific Grove was told to wait as the operator in that town wanted to see the airship. The vision lasted about fifteen minutes and then disappeared. There is no question about its being an airship because there are any number of credible witnesses ready to swear they saw it.

p. 2: Horen.

That airship business was a godsend to the great San Francisco dailies, as it filled in a gap between election and the holidays.

Nov. 19, p. 1: Pacific Coast News. / A machine is being constructed at Hoboken, N.J., in which the inventor proposes to fly overland to California in 48 hours. Hunters should make a note of it and not shoot it.

Nov. 26, 3d: Local Brevities. / Mysterious rumors have been floating around for a day or two past in regard to the launching (sailing ~~saxx~~ rather) of a mythical airship. Its appearance is expected to be unexpected and sensational. So far as the Index could learn the embarkation is to take place across the river in the Toro, and the proposed course of navigation will bring it to the Court house in this city.

3f: Sacramento people have been somewhat worked up by the appearance of a strong light electric light passing over the city at a considerable elevation. It is said to be a successful trial of an ~~air~~ ~~ship~~.

4a: A mysterious flying machine has been sailing over Sacramento, Oakland and other places. Its bright lights are always seen at night and the big daily papers are full of it. Bro. Bradford of the Owl sighted it as it passed over Salinas Saturday evening.

1896 December 4 (Fri) Marysville Daily Appeal, p. 1.

AIRSHIP TALK. / Several People Have Seen Moving Lights of Late.

The sensational airship news which has recently been published in the papers from one end of California to the other has many believers even in this section of the country.

E.T. Schellenger, of Sutter City, who was in town yesterday entertained several of his friends with an account of something wonderful he had seen moving in the heavens about 6 o'clock Wednesday night.

It first appeared to him as if it was a red ball of fire that was moving slowly along and as it spread out he thought he could see wheels moving. The light was continually changing from red to a blue color, and then several lights would appear which made the machinery appear clearer. It moved in the direction of Knights Landing.

He said he had read considerable about the air ship, and had considerable faith in the invention, and had little doubt but that what he had seen was the mysterious visitor that was puzzling all the scientists.

Several residents of this city also saw moving lights in the heavens on Wednesday night about 10 o'clock.

It seems strange that although no one has seen more than one air ship at the time, that it should be seen in places hundreds of miles apart at the same time.

A telegram from Portland tells of a man who became so greatly interested in the reports that he finally declared he was the airship inventor himself, and that he had brought his invention to an almost perfect condition. He asserted that some Californian had stolen one of his most valuable ideas; and was using it in the San Francisco airship.

1896 December 5 (Sat) Marysville Daily Appeal, p. 1.

LIGHT IN THE HEAVENS. / Plainly Seen at Browns Valley--Anxious Marysville Watchers.

Last evening about 7:30 o'clock a telephone dispatch was received from Browns Valley stating that the air ship was then seen passing west of that place going in the direction of San Francisco. The lights appear to be about five miles distant and were watched for 1897 March 25 (Tue.) Daily Commonwealth (Fond du Lac, Wis.), p. 3.

BYRON...--Edison's new search light which is said to be at an elevation of thirteen miles directly over the city of St. Paul, Minn., was plainly visible here on Monday night, being the appearance of a very large and brilliant star.

Tues. March 30, Daily Mining Jnl, Marquette, Mich., p. 6. Ishpeming and Vicinity (in brief).

Landlord Outhwaite of the Nelson House says the next commercial traveller who comes around the hotel with any more such "gags" as that St. Paul electric light story, will "have the boots put on him." Apr. 16 Winkle & Hulle.

29.2. The arsp is the only sp that seems to be able to keep in commission without being bothered to find business this spring. May 14 (1) Oma sees arsp (Prest).

1897 April 8 (T.) Warsaw (Ind.) Daily Times, p. 4.

HE TURNS ON THE GAS. / The Queer Mania of a Midnight Marauder in San Francisco.

The residents of what is known as the western addition of San Francisco are up in arms against a most unusual and inconsiderate house-breaker. This nocturnal visitor seems to have a mania for turning on the gas, and although he very seldom takes the trouble to steal anything he never fails to make an insidious assault on the property and health of his victims by tampering with the gas fixtures.

At last accounts this cunning rogue had entered no less than a dozen houses and turned on the gas in every room he entered. There is no doubt that it is the work of a midnight visitor, for he has been seen several times making his escape over the garden walls. Fortunately no fatalities have yet occurred as a result of his operations, but gas bills in the western addition have been enormous. The gas fiend seems to have a particular grudge against Mr. Isador Goodman, for he has entered Goodman's house three times and turned on the gas every time.

It is not known that the gas fiend is employed by the gas company. Fayetteville (N.C.) Observer, Sat. eve., April 10, p. 1.

Was It the Air Ship? Several people have told us that during the big storm Thursday evening, they saw a ball of fire about the size of a football pass directly over this city. Could this have been the search-light of the air ship?

April 15, 4. Latest News. / The "airship" visits Williamston [Wilmington?], first appearing totally dark, then brilliantly illuminated.

1897 April 10 (Sat. afternoon) Wisconsin State Journal (Madison), p. 1.

SAW THE AIRSHIP. / Lake Mills People Watched It Ten Minutes--Coming West. /

Lake Mills correspondence: Thursday night at 9 o'clock a number of reliable people of ~~xxxxx~~ this village saw what they supposed to be the airship of which so much has been heard lately. W.F. Myers, the foreman of the Lake Mills Leader, and Mr. George Lusted first saw it in the west as a great red light, moving up and down as if on wings and traveling westward. They called their families and their neighbors, and at least a dozen people saw it and watched it until it disappeared in the west. It was a great curiosity at least, whether an airship or not. It was in view nearly ten minutes and was then lost to sight behind the woods on the west shore of Rock lake.

13.2: Every bird that essays the zenith these days incurs the imputation of being an airship.

14.2: It is possible Wash Messing fell from the airship. He has received a shock from some quarter that renders him speechless.

15.2: It will be well to give the sea serpent lots of room these days. He's angry since this airship agitation is said to be something awful.

17.2: It is significant that all airship affidavits are drawn up in the form of the personal tax oath.

20.2: Alpha Orionis should be renamed. It is the Eli Perkins of the Stellar Universe.

1897 April 16 (Fri.) Beloit, Wis., Daily News, p. 5. Durand has seen the airship. This practically settles any ~~xxxxx~~ further speculation.

Mar. 29 p. 1. Sir Francis Galton says Mars may be signalling earth. Apr. 3, p. 1. Flying machines in flocks, SF

2. Arsp in Niles (Galesburg--voices). 1897 April 12 (Mon) Aberdeen, S.D., Daily News, p. 3.

KANSAS AIR SHIP. / North Side Man Thinks he Saw it Wednesday Night--Honor Bright. / ...

A resident of the north side, a gentleman of good repute, believes the so-called air ship which has lately mystified the inhabitants of several northwestern states, voyaged in the vicinity of this city on Wednesday night of last week. He said nothing of the fact at the time, for fear of being laughed at, and told his experience to the News today with reluctance. Whatever the mysterious object may have been, there is no doubt he was thoroughly in earnest. He says that while going to his home on the night in question, some time between the hours of 10 and 11 o'clock, his attention was attracted to a bright red light a short distance above the horizon, northwest from the city and traveling in the same direction. At first he paid little attention to the phenomenon, accepting it as the moon, but in a few seconds it dawned upon him, without particular thought upon the subject, that the light could not possibly proceed from than planet. He thereupon watched its proceedings with care until it disappeared below the horizon. The light was decidedly red, resembled somewhat a half moon in shape, and traveled rapidly.

In Chicago, where the strange luminary was observed a day or two before, three lights were seen--two green and one white; while at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, observers saw a bright red light and a white one. Others again, at different points, saw only red lights or green ones. These changes of color could be easily accounted for by the theory that the air ship saw fit to adopt the usual signal lamps of the ocean--a green one on the starboard or right hand side and a red one on the port or left hand side--but for the fact that the Aberdeen man observed a red light while the ship was proceeding in a northwesterly direction. However, providing the lights were displayed by an air ship at all, it is not strange the ship should use different colored lamps either for purposes of its own or to excite the wonder of the people below.

The phenomenon has been observed by thousands of persons at widely separated points, but the theory that it is due to signals from an air ship is the wildest kind of conjecture. Scientists, however, say the lights could not possibly be emitted by a meteor or other terrestrial body, and until the scientists see fit to promulgate a theory, common people are privileged to ascribe it to anything they please. 1897 April 12 (Mon) St. Louis Globe-Democrat, p. 3.

GENUINE AIR-SHIP PROMISED. / Chicago Aeronautical Society to Test a California Invention. / Special Dispatch to the Globe-Democrat.

CHICAGO, ILL., April 10.--A big huge band of red, green and orange light which startled residents of every village and township between Niles Center and South Chicago last evening may not have been an air-ship after all. Only the best imagination of those who viewed it are willing to take oath to seeing outlines of hull, rigging, keel and propellers; but to have a genuine air coaster in the neighborhood of Chicago but ~~xxxxx~~ it was not the real article, the Chi Aero Soc promises to have a genuine air coaster in the neighborhood of Chicago before the end of next week.

Max Kasmar... Prof. Hough...

A report from Winamac, Ind., says the air-ship landed in the Pink Mink marshes there last night within 300 feet of three hunters, and today five feet of what appears to be a wing sticking out of the marsh shows where the ship was engulfed. / Appeared and Vanished. / Special Dispatch to the Globe-Democrat.

CLINTON, IA., April 10.--Last night shortly after 11 o'clock, several reputable persons saw an object in the western sky giving forth rays like those of a searchlight. The light when first sighted was apparently stationary, but it appeared and disappeared several times, and was succeeded by a steady glow, which moved off finally to the northwest, where it disappeared. Owing to the hazy condition of the atmosphere it was impossible to determine the nature of the nocturnal visitor but the sightseers firmly believe they ~~xxxxx~~ saw the air-ship which is causing so much comment. 1897 April 12 (Mon.) St. Louis Globe-Democrat, p. 12. (card 1)

THAT AIRSHIP AGAIN. / A Man at the City Hospital Who Says He Took a Ride on It.

At last the mystery of the air-ship has been solved. No longer need people trouble in their shoes at what has been supposed by many to be the supernatural; no longer need astronomers sweep the star-studded expanse in search of the strange visitor; no longer need romancers tell of aeroplanes and condensing engines of wonderful motive power. The mystery has been solved, and for a time, at least, people will cease to wonder.

The man who offers the solution to this problem that has been the cause of worry and work on the part of many of the inhabitants of this and other states is Joseph Joslin. Mr. Joslin has for the past two weeks been a passenger on board the aerial wonder, and, despite his disinclination at first to talk on the subject, he told a "Globe-Democrat" representative last night, after a great deal of persuasion, about his strange experience. Owing to Mr. Joslin's nervousness, due to his extended flight above the earth, he is unable to talk as well as he can when in his normal condition, but what he does say throws new light on aerial navigation and discloses to the public the eighth wonder of the world.

It was on Sunday, April 4, that Mr. Joslin left his home, at 1747 Mississippi avenue, according to his story, with the intention of taking a walk through Forest Park. He reached the park, he says, about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and a half hour later was walking along Skinker road, when he suddenly felt a strange sensation. It was as though a thousand needles were sticking into him, Mr. Joslin says, and he fell flat on his back, so excruciating was the pain. In a few minutes the sensation ceased and the prostrate man arose. As he opened his eyes, which for some inexplicable reason had been involuntarily closed while the shock lasted, he saw a wonderful creature a short distance away, lying on the ground. It was an enormous animal of curious shape, and unlike any Mr. Joslin had ever seen or heard of before, albeit he is an extensive reader. The only animal he can compare it with at all is a Chinese dragon. It was about 100 feet long and very broad, of a dull red color and had great wings, shaped like a bat's. Its head was out of proportion to its body, and it had six eyes, two of which were white, two green and two red. The mouth was enormous, and above the ~~xxxxx~~ black nostrils of the creature huge horns sprang up.

But most wonderful of all, Mr. Joslin says, were the creatures ~~xxxxx~~ which were running about on top of this monstrosity. They were two-legged but shorter than the average man, while their skin was a deep red color, like that of the animal they were on. Their small heads were black, and they seemed to have no eyes, although they espied Mr. Joslin at once. One of them, leaping ~~xxxxx~~ nimbly down, advanced toward him and beckoned. Mr. Joslin seemed hypnotized and followed him, the creature in front retreating to the back of the animal, and against his will Mr. Joslin was compelled to climb on the back of this great dragon. Then one of the strange creatures seemed to give a signal, and at once the animal spread its huge wings and soared upward, leaving Forest Park far behind.

For nearly three weeks Mr. Joslin was a prisoner on board the strange craft, and his sufferings were horrible, according to his story. He was frequently tortured by them, but was unable to resist because of their numbers. He thinks there were at least 1000 of them, and they used to burn him with their hands, which were red hot. Mr. Joslin tells much about his travels and the strange sights he saw, but he does not know how he returned to earth. The first thing he knew was when he was awakened after an unconscious spell and found himself at the City Hospital in the 9th Ward. His case is diagnosed as alcoholism.

1897 April 13 (Tue) Aberdeen, S.D., Daily News, p. 4.

Saw That Airship.

CUMBERLAND, Wis., April 13.--The attention of people on the streets of this city was called to a large red light in the sky at 9:30 last night. It was seen in the southwest and traveled swiftly to the northeast with a dipping motion.

City in Brief: The News and the north side citizen, feel "vindicated" in the matter of the airship story published last evening. A Minneapolis man claims to have seen the ship, crew and all.

Columbus, Daily Herald, Tues. April 13, p. 2. See also, Apr. 13, 14 - Omaha exp.
The noted airship has now appeared at Elkhart, Ind., after having made its appearance in numerous cities in the West. The Herald is ashamed of the local manufacturers of news for ~~xxxxxx~~ metropolitan papers that their versatility has not suggested to them the propriety of having this mighty visitor to appear above any other Indiana city. 15, 4. Ira Smith packed his "Saratoga" Monday and took the first train ~~xxxxxx~~ north. Some think he has gone to the gas belt; others to Chicago. We think he is negotiating for the celestial flying machine, which is being seen in the northern heavens nightly.

1897 April 14 (Wed) Aberdeen Daily News, p. 3.

AIR SHIP AGAIN. / Hundreds or More Citizens Declare They Saw it Last Night--Possibly a Star.

Hundreds of Aberdeen people declare they saw the mysterious light last night that is believed by many to emanate from the mysterious air ship which is supposed to be cavorting around the heavens these fine spring nights. The light was first observed about 9 o'clock, traveling in a northwesterly direction, as before, and was watched closely until it disappeared below the horizon. It showed alternately green, red and yellow, and increased and decreased in intensity. Residents of many parts of the city observed the phenomenon, and believe it constitutes all there is of the celebrated air ship story that of late has agitated ~~xxxxxxxx~~ so many minds throughout the country. No one was found who had the hardihood to claim he saw any part of the ship.

There is no doubt these lights have been seen in different parts as reported, but people are free to accept any theory they please with reference to their origin. The air ship story is certainly far-fetched for this latter end of the nineteenth century, and in the absence of something better the ideas of Prof. Hough, astronomer at Evanston university, are advanced. He places no reliance in the air ship theories but expresses the opinion that the strange lights are caused by the effect of the atmosphere on the star Alpha Orionis, which is of the first magnitude and is in the constellation Orion. It rises earlier in the evening, and its course across the heavens is about the same as that of the moon. It is first visible about 7 o'clock at this time of the year. The star is unusually bright in a clear atmosphere and appears to be close to the earth. It gradually disappears during the evening and as it grows dimmer the effect of the atmosphere causes it ~~xxxxxx~~ apparently to change color.

This theory may not be the correct one, but until it is disproven it offers church members and other good people an opportunity to relate their experiences touching the matter without endangering their moral or social standing.

1897 April 15 (Th) Aberdeen (S.D.) Daily News, p. 3.

A BRILLIANT STAR? / Visible in the Northwestern Heavens Accounts for the Air Ship Stories.

Last night about 9 o'clock, and for some time thereafter, a very brilliant star near the horizon in the northwestern heavens attracted the attention of many citizens and was identified as the light from the mysterious air ship. The star is undoubtedly the one described by the Evanston professor, as recorded last evening. It was intensely bright for a star and its light increased and decreased as clouds, invisible to the naked eye, passed before it. The different shades of color--red and green--were also discerned, just as they can be discerned in any light similar in nature upon which the human eye is fixed intently for any length of time. In all prairie countries the planets seem to set with remarkable rapidity after they gain a point near the horizon, and this fact probably accounts for the apparent movement of the ship in a northwesterly direction. Although the star is a beautiful sight of itself, the tracing of the mysterious light to this source is a rather disappointing solution of what at one time was a promising mystery. April 16, 2. A small boy with a fondness for kites kept the citizens of Minneapolis in a state bordering on frenzy for several nights. They thought the lights were emitted by the "air ship" and a number of venturesome individuals furnished the papers with graphic accounts of an aerial monster that had crossed their vision.

17, 4. ~~xxxx~~ City News in Brief. / O.H. ~~xxxxxx~~ Babcock is in receipt of a photograph of an alleged airship from a brother-in-law who lives in Hampton, Ia. The photograph, it is claimed, was taken on Main street at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon and shows the air ship apparently suspended directly overhead. Mr. Babcock declares it is a truthful reproduction of an actual scene, but some skeptical people are inclined to doubt.

1897 April 15 (Th) Arkansas Gazette (Little Rock), p. 1.

Airship Passes Over Russellville. / Special to the Gazette.

Russellville, Ark., April 14.--The airship has come and gone, but not too quick for two of our citizens to see it. Monday night while a heavy wind and thunder storm was coming up from the southwest this aerial monster was seen by C.W. Nugent, the marble cutter here, and Mr. Keith, a carpenter, to be going southwest at the apparent rate of 100 miles an hour. Mr. Nugent says he distinctly saw it about one and a half minutes and says beyond doubt it was an airship.

1897 April 15 (Th) Warsaw (Ind.) Daily Times, p. 2.

WHAT WAS IT? / Could It be the Much Talked of Airship or a Paper Balloon?

Just before starting from his residence to the musical entertainment at the opera house last night, the editor came across the following statement of what the supposed airship that has been causing so much newspaper comment throughout the west, may be, in an article containing other suggestions with the same end in view:
Prof. George Hough... (Alpha Orionis).

On reaching the opera house we were among the first of spectators to arrive, and we noticed that two or three young men had a window raised through which they had passed out on the balcony to repair and light a gas lamp that belongs to the opera house. Stepping to the window to see what was going on, we directly saw a very bright star, apparently about five feet above the wall of Phillipson's clothing house, as it appeared measured by the eye. It was unusually bright and this brought to our attention the fact that there was not another star visible in the entire northwest where this particularly bright one was located. As stated, we had not over a half hour before perused the above extract and we at once tried to make a young man standing beside us believe it was the much-talked of air ship. We hoisted at the idea, and we inwardly did the same thing; but on glancing at the star again we discovered that it was rapidly descending and in that brief time it now appeared not more than two feet above Phillipson's store, from our standpoint, which was identical with that when it appeared five feet above. Besides, we thought we discovered peculiar scintillations and occasionally there appeared to be a reddish cast to its brightness. Now, we know no more than any one else what it may have been, but we are stating only facts as they came under our observation as well as that or more than a dozen others, before the star, airship, balloon or whatever it was, disappeared in the northwest. That whatever it was moved rapidly was plain to every one of the spectators, and in less than half an hour from the moment that we first observed it, the light had passed out of sight in the far-away northwest. Even with the theory advanced by Prof. Hough, of the Dearborn Observatory, the star would have to move much more rapidly than any ever before mentioned to cover the space this one did in the short length of time it was in sight. We make the above statement of positive facts just as they occurred at about 8 o'clock on Wednesday night leaving the reader to form his own conjectures.

1897 April 17 (Sat morn) St. Louis Globe-Democrat, p. 6.

AIR-SHIP SKIRTS THE STATE CAPITOL. / Aerial Navigators Observed by Resident of Jefferson City. / Special Dispatch to the Globe-Democrat.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., April 16.--According to the story of Al Miller, a well-known and reliable citizen of this city, the air-ship that has been attracting so much attention in Kansas and elsewhere passed over Jefferson City at an early hour this morning. Mr. Miller's story is that he had been sitting up with a sick friend in the southern part of the city, and left to go home at 1:30 a.m. It was a beautiful moon-light night, and his attention was a first directed to the aerial vessel by an unusual brilliancy. He looked up into the heavens and was startled by the outlines of a dark moving body, from which sparkled and scintillated the light that had first attracted his attention. It was a searchlight and was flitted from point to point of the city, as if the navigators of the craft were endeavoring to get their bearings. The ship was traveling from the southeast in a northwesterly direction, and was when at first seen by Mr. Miller not over 200 feet from the earth. At one time it stood still, suspended in space, while the occupants seemed to be taking a leisurely survey of the landscape below them. Seemingly they were soon satisfied, for in a few moments the vessel rose gracefully far up in the air and shot to the northwest, going directly over the dome of the state house, and was soon out of sight, although Mr. Miller, who stood and looked after it for ten minutes after it disappeared, says he caught several glimpses of the light far above the Callaway bluffs. So far no one has been found who saw the ship to corroborate the story.

1897 April 17 (Sat) Daily Sun (Vincennes, Ind.), p. 8.

THE AIR SHIP / Sails The Azure Depths Like A Tongue Of Light. / IT FLOATS THROUGH SPACE / Leaving Multitudes of Wondering People On the Earth Beneath--Supposed To Contain Five Passengers And To Be Enroute To Jacksonville Fla. /

Besides having all the planets visible on the glory of the "Light of Fancy, the Easter moon, there was still another stellar attraction, as novel as it was interesting. The much talked of air ship. Some incredulous people are inclined to doubt the presence of this conquerer of space and time and to cause others to disbelieve it also, but if seeing is believing, and the high reputation of our citizens is to be considered worth mentioning, there surely ought to be a few willing to place their faith in air ships.

The ship appeared as an immense yellow star on the northern horizon and rapidly sailed to the south in an easterly course, and resembled an immense firefly in violent action. It did not appear to vary from given lines in its course either perpendicularly or horizontally, thus showing the complete control had over "The Wings of Time." It is supposed that travel of this kind is the most delightful experience one can have. Of course those given to dizziness and headaches by high altitudes will have to [] to the slow means of earthly transportation, until they get enough ballast in their cranium to enable to resist slipping overboard. While many had informed themselves through the accounts of air ships in the Metropolitan press, there were many who knew nothing of this strange phenomenon and proceeded to give demonstrations in measure to the perturbation of their troubled minds. As the ship with its flashing tongues of flame passed over that aristocratic colored suburb known as "Idaho," there were many of those superstitious people scared nearly out of their lives. The venerable proprietor of an African hostelry of great repute, Mr. Billy Booker, known in his town as the first well digger in the city, was standing in the office door of his hotel when he saw this pillow of fire. He immediately fell on his knees it is said and implored the powers that be, to protect him and his.

Mr. George Brewer thought the whip was the spirit of light and as he wasn't looking for any thing of that nature just then, he sought his inner closet and thought of the sins of the body and the evil days in which men find no pleasure. John Carter the serenader was returning from his nocturnal visitations. Upon the rich [] sweetest melody with all the fragrance of Hibernia's choicest blooms. When he discovered the heavenly glow, his merry making was quickly changed to agonizing signs of grief and fear which overcame him with a sinking fit.

It required 22 pints of alcohol and seven the coaloil he was employed to take to his mother to full restore him to his normal condition.

1897 April 20 (Tues) Rushville (Ind.) (Twice-wkly) Republican, p. 3.

Mysterious Air-Ship.

Charles Worthington and John Rodabaugh, who live in the west part of this city, claim to have seen the air-ship, which is causing so much mystery among the towns in Indiana. The men named above say that they saw the air-ship at Hodge's branch, last Saturday morning, where the men who operate it were taking water. They describe the ship as having large wings which propelled it through the air. There were three men in the ship and when it arose from the earth they shaped their course in a northeasterly direction. Just so!

p. 1. FAKE AIRSHIP. / Several Boys Playing Tricks With a Mammoth Kite at Night.

BOWLING GREEN, O., April 20.--The airship craze has struck this place and any number of citizens can be found who have seen it soaring above the city and who say the lights were plainly discernible.

It is not generally known, however, that several boys have been playing a practical joke upon the unsuspecting public, and have been flying a large kite at night with red lights fastened to the tail. The kite, which is eight feet high, is carefully hid away in the barn day-times, and at night the boys go a short distance out of town and fly the monster. Only three red lights can be seen bobbing up and down in the air nearly up to the clouds.

1897 April 23 (Fri) Cushing (Okla.) Ma Herald (wkly), p. 3.

--Cushing was visited by the mysterious air-ship on last Monday night. It has been reported through many of the Oklahoma papers that such a ship was in existence floating in the mid air in different parts of the territory; but last Monday night she made her appearance here. Some of our most reliable citizens were eye witnesses to the fact. Geo. Heaven says he first discovered it while looking in a northerly direction. It seemed very low with a bright headlight. L.B. Hay says it was about as large as the evening star but grew larger as it neared him. Lee Nutter says it was, when he saw it, ducking down, and came from the east to the west. Louis Jackson's statement is that it was in the south when he saw it and it was rather low down nearly to the ground. All agree that it must be the much talked of air ship; but how it was constructed or what the motive power was, still remains a mystery. We are unable to state what brand these gentlemen use.

/The same strange something pronounced to be an airship which created a great deal of excitement near Wichita, Kans., a few weeks ago and was seen later at Perry, O.T., is now making nocturnal exhibitions near the city of Guthrie.

1897 April 23 (Fri) Weekly Herald (Middlesboro, Ky), p. 1. (C&P D)

THEY SAW IT. / Col Bennet Young and Others Watch the Strange / Flying Machine- Willing to Take a Solemn Oath / That Their Statement is True/ Threw Out too Much Ballast And Cannot Descend. / They Dropped a Letter Down. /

Mr. W.H. Smithers, of Smithersfield, was in the city yesterday, and says the airship passed over that town Friday night. He says there is no doubt about it for he got a letter which was dropped from the aerial monster. Mr. Smithers gave the Dispatch the letter, which explains more about the airship than has ever been given before. The writer says there are only two in the craft, himself and companion and that they cannot come down because they have dropped in too much ballast. From this it is evident that the machine to some extent is propelled by gas. The letter is as follows:

"To whom it may concern: We are in the greatest trouble. We, myself and companion, are way up in the Air in an airship--perhaps some one has seen it--and cannot come down. The last time we were on the earth was when we lighted at Lake Michigan, about three weeks ago. In our attempt to [rise] we threw out too much ballast, and our ship went up so fast it almost took our breath. We have reached a strata of air which seems to keep the ship from going higher, for it has not ascended for several days. We have tried every way to cause it to descend, but the machinery is on top and we cannot get to it from the basket. "What will ever become of us? Our provisions are giving out and starvation is staring us in the face. If the receiver of this letter will send a balloon after our craft and rescue us we will give him a fortune for we are both rich. The ship was made in an old barn in Southern Illinois, and for fear some one would steal our ideas, we managed to keep it a secret until we started on our aerial voyage. This was about a month ago, and since then we have been on earth only three times, although before we threw out the ballast we could alight as often as we desired. The ship is a success, but unless we are given assistance we are lost." / "Yours in trouble, / "SAMUEL RAGIN." /

Dr. J.W. Blanton and L.J. Arbegust, two of the most reputable residents at Lockland, called at the office of the Louisville Dispatch last evening and said that they both witnessed the strange sight. At first their story was laughed at, and was only regarded as a joke, but both men were so sincere in their expressions and offered to bring forty or fifty of the most truthful men in their districts to testify to the fact. Dr. Blanton and Mr. Arbegust were just coming out of the hall at Pleasure Ridge Park about 8 o'clock, where they had been holding a meeting of the free turnpike company, which Col. Bennett Young, the prominent attorney from this city, had presided over.

"We were just walking toward the front gate," said Dr. Blanton, "when we were suddenly startled by hearing a sharp whirring sound, which attracted our attention toward the heavens. We all looked up simultaneously and saw shooting at a frightful rate of speed the bright glare of a lighted lamp. Everybody was at first frightened at the queer sight and we thought it was a comet, until we met Mr. Smithers, who showed us the letter which he had found. Then we concluded it was beyond a doubt the mysterious air ship.

"We watched the light for several man seconds, and finally saw it disappear over the Indian hills. The wind was blowing at a stiff gale against the ship, but from the way she was spinning there must have been considerable force to carry it along."

The two men said they would be willing to take a solemn oath in substantiation of their story and said that Col Young would also say the same thing.--Louisville Dispatch.

1897 April 23 (Fri) Peru (Ind.) Republican, p. 6.

Roann.

Like all other places under the sun, Roann has seen the mysterious airship, but no one has been near enough to the fake to give a very vivid description of it. Some of our folks think and say it may be the car upon which Billy Bryan made his flying trip last year.

Shoals Referendum, Th. April 22, back p. of suppl.

James Rogers says he saw the great Air Ship, on the cow-stubbed catcher of which sat a long white-bearded populist reading the Referendum.

Argo, - Leader, 3-20-97, 5P.
April 27, p. 6--Revealing Old Yarns.

Springfield Republican: It has perhaps not been noted how curiously the recent epidemic of airship yarns resembles the first chapter of a Jules Verne romance. He is fond of starting off with a group of extracts from newspapers giving accounts of a machine which the rest of the world discredits. The degree of credence given to these tales of the airship shows how curiously public opinion has gone from the extreme of skepticism to the extreme of credulity in regard to aerial navigation. It also illustrates forcibly the extreme difficulty of proving any event that is out of the ordinary to people at a distance. The multiplication of newspapers darkens the truth.

1897 April 29 (Th) Carlisle, Ky., Mercury, p. 3.

Several of our citizens worked themselves up to the point to think they had found the airship Saturday night. Several colored people in this locality seem to express considerable uneasiness at its appearance and claim to often hear strange noises in the clouds.

1897 May 1 (Sat) Tri-Weekly Journal (Logan, Utah), p. 2.

A Mysterious Airship.

It appears that a large number of people in Ogden saw what they call an airship, Sunday night, none of which was made yesterday. Among those who saw it were several ladies on Adams avenue. A number of gentlemen at the Union depot and others in different parts of the city, [sic]. A number of ladies who saw the object about 11 o'clock at night, observed it with strong glasses. One of these ladies described the object as being long and cigar-shaped, and of large size. In the center seemed to be a cabin, in which were plainly discernible different colored lights. The large object floated over the city for two hours, at times resting quietly, then again moving slowly and then quickly, diving down nearer to the city, and again going upward. Finally the object mounted higher, and turning what seemed to be its prow westward, sailed away over the Promontory. Those to whom these people have told the story have laughed and doubted, but the ladies are especially firm in their statements that there was an airship over Ogden that night that was visible for about two hours.--Ogden Cor. Tribune.

SWORE THEY SAW IT. / Airship Seen by Two Officials of the County of Garland. / Special to The Gazette.

Hot Springs, May 8.--The mysterious airship which has been seen at so many different points throughout the country in the past month and been the subject of much newspaper criticism, was seen about five miles west of this city last night by Deputy Sheriff McLemore and Constable Sumpter, who were out in search of a fellow constable who had been sent in the country to secure service of [a] witness in court.

In a sworn affidavit published today the above gentlemen state that when first seen by them the vessel was high in the air and descending to the ground. It struck terra firma a short distance ahead of the riders and was brilliantly lighted with electricity. Upon approaching nearer two men and one woman were found beside the vessel filling its tanks with water from a neighboring stream.

It was cigar-shaped and resembled the pictures contained in many of the newspapers. The older of the occupants is described as a tall man with long black beard and courteously invited the officers to take a ride with him. He stated that they were bound for Nashville to attend the exposition. The story of the men was given no credence until after their sworn affidavit appeared today, and as both are men of undoubted integrity, their statement can be fully relied upon as being true.

1897 September 1 (Wed) (Portland) Morning Oregonian, p. 3.

A Colorado Airship.

DENVER, Colo., August 31.--A special to The News from Sterling, Colo., says:

A genuine flying machine was seen at this place a few days ago by C.A. Neustein. Mr. Neustein noticed a large black object in the south-eastern part of the heavens, traveling rapidly toward the northeast. He watched it pass clear across the heavens, moving quite rapidly in a straight line. He watched it until it passed out of sight, and is convinced that it was a bona-fide flying-machine.

1905. Cambrian Natural Observer (Journal of the Astronomical Society of Wales), pp. 31-34. (ed. 1)

MYSTERIOUS LIGHTS. /

Most people are aware that many strange lights were reported in Wales during 1905. Some of these were subjective and accompanied the intense mental and moral excitement induced by the Revival. Lights of this character are of course wholly outside the province of a publication dealing with purely natural phenomena, and are best left in the judicious hands of the Psychical Research Society. Other lights were, however, reported, e.g., one on the evening of March 29, which was seen by several persons at Llanishan was in the south-east and took the appearance of a luminous beam. The observers were certain it was neither works glare nor searchlight. The matter being mentioned in the Western Mail, several letters were forthcoming.

Mr. T. Skeats, of Whitchurch, says he watched the band of light for some time and was much struck by it.

Mr. J. Ansaldo, Tynmawr Road, Llandaff, writes that on the evening in question about 10 o'clock he saw in the south-east what at first looked like a long cluster of stars obscured by a thin film or mist. It gradually grew brighter and brighter until it looked like an incandescent light, and lasted for about 25 or 30 minutes. Mr. Ansaldo saw several people watching it.

Mr. J. Havard, Peterston-super-Ely, says he and several others saw the light, which looked like an iron bar heated to an orange-red colour, suspended vertically. The time was 10.30, and the direction one point northerly of east.

These accounts are explicit; but others less so, or referring to other lights or on other dates, are to hand from Mrs. James Thomas, Haverfordwest; Mr. Jesse Williams, the well-known Cardiff chemist; Mr. Wm. H. Yeo, Talbot Street, Cardiff; Mr. E. Saltham, St. David's, and Mrs. Beachas, Noel Senny, Breconshire.

We have no explanation to offer of these strange gleams, beams and glows occurring to the south. The above phenomenon was seen about the same time as a certain lights at Cherbourg, which, after a vast deal of twaddle had appeared in the press, turned out to be nothing more than the planet Venus!! Undoubtedly there are outbursts of light at times which are puzzling to account for, and which are not of artificial origin, though great care has to be taken not to mistake searchlight or furnace glare or the like for natural phenomena.

Here is another mysterious phenomenon, reported in the S.W. Daily News of Sept. 4th:--Shortly after four o'clock on Saturday afternoon a crowd of persons noticed a remarkable object approaching in the heavens from the direction of Merionethshire and crossing the town of Llangollen. The unknown and puzzling object glided majestically over the Vale of Llangollen, and was evidently about two miles from the earth's surface. When over the district of the School House at Wroncysyllte powerful field glasses were directed at the object, which travelled at a speed of approximately 20 miles an hour and was intensely black. It possessed short wings and evidently gained impetus to its progress through the air by casually inclining sideways. The curiosity possessed four legs apparently, and disappeared over Wynnstay Park towards Overton and making for Cheshire. The strange object was at least 10ft. in width, glided along with a strong wind. It resembled a huge pig with webbed feet, averred several witnesses. Much speculation is rife as to what the mysterious object was [We have not heard it claimed as an outcome of the Revival. Ed. (M.C.N.O.) p. 30. RED FALL.

Mr. J.F. Young, Llanelly, states that on Sept. 7th, clothes hanging out in the open became covered with purple spots red spots as from red rain. The weather was open and free from anything local which could cause it.

1908 January 24 (Fr.) White River Journal (Kent, Wash.), p. 4.

What Was It?

Were Kent people treated to the sight of an air ship last night? Was somebody going up in a balloon? Or were the inhabitants of Mars taking soundings of the earth? About 7:30 a bright light was seen high in the air over toward the Western hills and many people gazed in wonder. None could tell what it was. It sailed about for a half an hour apparently in a current of air. What was it [?] 1908 September 1 (Tue) Rutland, Vt., Daily Herald, p. 1.

Believe They Saw Comet. / Object Beheld at Montpelier Causes Some Excitement.

Montpelier, August 31.--(Special.)--The people of this city were much exercised last night and today over stories of a comet which it is claimed, was seen by several townspeople. It appeared to take a southeasterly course through the sky and looked to several who were on the streets as if it would drop in the city, but from latest reports there has been nothing learned to this effect. D.T. Donnelly, Ernest Fisher and many others who were on the street at 11 o'clock saw the object. Some claim it was accompanied by a boom resulting from an explosion, while others say it was more like the quivering of the earth. Sept. 2, 7. meteor seen, exploded over Montpelier about midnight Sun. 1910 September 1 (Th) New York Tribune, p. 1. (card 1)

NIGHT AEROPLANE AGAIN CIRCLES MADISON TOWER / Many Say It Was There All Right, but Few Agree on the Details. / WHO WAS IT? THE QUERY / Process of Elimination Fails to Solve the Problem, and Even the Press Agents Are Silent.

That protean and perhaps perennial ship of air that circled the Madison Square tower on Tuesday night did the same thing again at 9 o'clock last night, and after getting several hundred spectators in a state of mind where they did not know or care whether it was 9 or 90 o'clock, the fleeting shadow faded in the direction of the Northern Lights.

Whatever it was it seemed to be stricken with Wright's disease, and rendered buoyant thereby.

It flew toward Madison Square tower as some woman aviator might wish to do with a load of hatbands filled with pearls not intended for the bright eyes of Collector Loeb and his troublesome crew.

Who can he be?

The name, please, of this fly-by-night.

Paulhan has declared it would be a dark and dismal hour when he again visited the United States in his dear, most beautiful aeroplane. When he left town he did not inform the Messrs. Wright, for whom he had a severe distaste, oh, very!

Has Paulhan, then, chosen an hour to come back when night birds plot revenge? There is not much doubt that with proper training Paulhan could come back.

There are only a few aviators who have been interviewed by the newspaper reporters who would care to hazard a night flight above so pointed an underground as that presented by the region surrounding Madison Square.

Suspicious as to Post.

Augustus Post fell four thousand feet with a balloon and another man at Berlin last year. But that was done in the daytime.

Those who have seen Mr. Post progress in his attempts to be a professional aviator at Sheepshead Bay are confident he possesses reserve aerial possibilities of an extreme nature.

He made his very first amateur flight at a professional exhibition and deliberately chose the hour of dusk in which to perform. He flew over the same fence several times while trying to stop his machine almost anywhere except on top of the fence itself, and this happened by electric light.

Mr. Post was the coolest man at Sheepshead, and when some newspapers described his trip as including six back somersaults the next day, said he did not think his work had been exaggerated.

One Tillinghast, of Massachusetts, obtained several pages of space about a year ago for alleged flying by night at Worcester.

His friends say--Tillinghast improves on the Wrights and refuses to talk about his alleged machine and at any time--his airship carries red and green lights, one of each.

Differ As to the Lights.

Persons who saw the flying mystery last night differ as to the number of lights it carried. Some say it carried two red lights, others lean to the three green theory. So it is not possible to identify the visitor as Mr. Tillinghast until he himself speaks and informs the public whether he carries any lights at all.

The Garden City men denied that they had sent forth one of their number on any so romantic a journey. They said they would let the newspapers know in advance of any such attempts to be made by them.

Hamilton is racing by train toward a $15,000 contract at Sacramento, Cal. Curtiss reported from Lake Erie that he had gone early and happy to bed. Johnstone and Hoxsey are too far apart for their jealousy engendered at Asbury Park to lead either to make such remarkable demonstrations of superiority.

Brookings is too close to Wilbur and Orville to sadden them by an undertaking so purely fantastic and of such slight scientific value.

Mars has just been licensed as an aviator by the Aero Club of America, of which Cortlandt Field Bishop is president.

This may have turned his head. He seemed much moved at the time. If he comes again to-night the aviator may drop his name to earth in an otherwise empty bottle.

1910 September 22 (Th) New York Tribune, p. 1.

ALL DOWNTOWN LOOKING UP / Fleet of Toy Balloons Cause Crowds of Up-turned Faces.

All the downtown streets of Manhattan for a couple of hours yesterday afternoon were filled with persons eagerly watching the gyrations of a fleet of balloons that were floating over the skyscrapers from the Jersey side. The windows of the tall buildings were filled with men and women and busy corners were congested with crowds.

Many opinions were voiced concerning the mysterious visitors. Some persons said they must be at least five thousand feet up, and a few thought they could discern two or three passengers in each. Others said they were just toy balloons used as advertisements. These latter proved to be right as to size, but if the balloons were used for advertising purposes there was nothing in their appearance to show it.

The last of the balloons passed over the lower city about 5 o'clock, floating in the direction of Long Island. While the spectacle lasted the police had their hands full keeping the streets and sidewalks clear.

1914 August 28 (Fri) Cape Argus, p. 5.

MYSTERIOUS AEROPLANE / Seen in Natal. / (From Our Own Correspondent.) / Durban, Friday.

Reports of aeroplane appearances are coming in from many parts of Natal. A farmer in the Krantzkop district states that on Saturday last, at about 1 a.m., he was awakened by what he thought was a motor-car coming down the hill near his house. On going outside he heard the whirring of a machine going away in the distance, and he has no doubt in his own mind that it was an aeroplane proceeding without lights.

Several folk in Dundee are positive that they saw mysterious lights in the sky here on Monday evening.

A farmer near the town states that he saw something of the kind, and the people at Dunnhauser, in the centre of the colliery district, say lights were seen in the sky on Monday evening and Tuesday evening by quite a large number. No green and red lights, as reported from Braamfontein, were noted.

A resident of Tongvat, a township on the north coast among the sugar plantations, writes stating that an aeroplane passed over his house in the direction of the beach at 8.55 a.m. on Wednesday. This was the second time that one had been seen in the district.

Opinion appears to be growing that there is something in these accounts, and that the aeroplanes concerned are Union machines practising in order get familiar with their bearings.

1914 August 20 (Fri) Natal Advertiser, last p.

ALLEGED NATIVE RESTLESSNESS / What the Officials Have Done.

We are glad to learn from an authoritative source, with regard to the statements appearing in this paper yesterday, that more than a week ago the magistrate at Pinetown, who is a fluent native linguist, was sent round the Umhazi locations, and got into personal touch with the chiefs and headmen of every tribe, and that he explained the position to them.

The natives in town have also had the position explained by competent interpreters.

We are glad to be in a position to state that these definite and necessary steps have been taken by the local officials to allay the not unnatural alarm of natives, who, of course, are easily led to believe the rumours which they hear from white men. There is every reason to believe that much mischief has been done by employers who talk foolishly to their native servants, and repeat silly rumours, and it was mainly with the object of drawing attention to this that we referred to the matter.

We have caused inquiries to be made in such quarters as are likely to furnish facts, rather than rumours, and as a result we can fully confirm the statements made in this paper yesterday.

We are informed that the authorities took fresh steps to warn the natives this morning against the folly of being scared away by fake reports. It is nevertheless acknowledged that our article was timely and that it is eminently desirable that a general endeavour be made to quieten the needless uneasiness of the natives. Officials closely in touch with the natives states that the railway authorities are experiencing difficulty in coping with the traffic, so many natives demanding train accommodation, and it is expected that the end of the month will see a larger exodus.

A well-known compound manager at the Point has been advised by his Indians to place extra guards on the compounds in order to prevent the growing cases of desertion. One of the whaling companies at the Bluff is reported to have lost as many as sixty boys recently.

There cannot be any doubt that the natives are exhibiting signs of restlessness and leaving for their homes, but it must be clearly understood that there is a vast difference between "restlessness" and "native unrest," as it is commonly understood. The present attitude of the native is simply a scared feeling and a desire to get to his home in case of coming danger. We have not suggested that the officials charged with the duty of warning the chiefs have failed in that respect, but the fact remains that the natives are to a large extent unconvinced. Perhaps the wisest course would be for the European population to refrain from repeating the senseless rumours which are flying about.

1936 March 22 (Sun) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 3.

Meteor strikes an airplane. / Passengers believe it was a runaway ball MIAMI, 21 March (TT) During a flight in North Carolina a large airplane was struck by a meteor. It cut through the body of the plane and damaged the radio antenna.

The eight passengers on board remained uninjured. They believed at first that the machine was struck by a runaway ball.

1945 June 1 (Fri morn.) Asheville Citizen, p. 10.

STRANGE OBJECT IS REPORTED IN WEST ASHEVILLE

The police department and The Citizen office received several calls last night from residents of West Asheville to the effect that some sort of rocket or meteor was flashing through the sky in several different places in that section of town.

W.L. Hanbright, of 145 Clinton street, said he was in his back yard between 7:30 and 8 o'clock when a stream of fire appearing to be about six feet in length and six inches in diameter suddenly flashed up the street toward Haywood road and finally went out of sight. He said there were sparks flying from the back of whatever it was.

Mrs. Coasi Peterson, of 47 Virginia avenue, said she was on her front porch about 7 o'clock and saw about the same thing traveling toward Asheville, or in an easterly direction.

Another person saw what was described as a ball of fire going through the air near the Middlemount Gardens greenhouse in the Balvern Hills section at the same time. The person said the ball of fire disappeared from sight suddenly.

1946 July 10 (Wed) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 1.

Rocket projectiles have taken over the ghost flier's role. / Vaxholm and Sundsvall saw mysterious space rockets.

Just after 14.30 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon a couple of Vaxholm residents from the north side of Vaxon sighted a mysterious object, which with unheard-of speed came from up in empty space and after at most a couple of seconds disappeared behind the island in a southeasterly direction. The object, which appeared glowing white in color and in shape was oblong with a blunt nose, had after it a blue-white tail.

The same phenomenon was witnessed as well from Järna station by a Björknäs resident, who described the object as in shape like the glass flask in a thermo. The color was said to be silver white and the object was seen descending from an altitude high in an easterly direction.

A radio-guided projectile was observed, according to a Sundsvall newspaper, on Tuesday over many places in Medelpad. The projectile, which went at a low height, passed Sundsvall shortly before 14.35 o'clock in a northeasterly direction toward the sea. It was described as a comet with a blue-white (sweeping) trail after it.

On MT's inquiry the defense staff stated that no Swedish investigation which might be able to clear up the observed phenomenon has been undertaken. The phenomenon is not unique. From many places lately reports have been made of similar "ghost fliers," but from where the observed projectiles—whose direction changes in every quarter—originate from, there is no knowledge.

1946 July 11 (Th) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 1.

Enigmatical paper find from "ghost bomb." [?] / Dalarna-Varmland also has had visits.

One of the mysterious "ghost bombs" which on Tuesday was reported from various places in eastern Sweden, fell in Njurunda outside 215 meters from the fall site, gathered up fragmentary remains. These were investigated on Wednesday by Dr. Birger Bäcklund of the Cellulose Company's research institute. He then made the surprising discovery that among these "fragments" was a mystery; millimeter-thin pieces of paper with "checkerboard-like" black and white squares. The bit of the Njurunda find which Dr. Bäcklund examined, looked most nearly like the carbide [?] which is used for air operations. The find of paper, which by all judgments is not useful for high temperatures, speaks against the meteor theory.

On Wednesday the defense staff sent out a summarizing communique wherein the places of "ghost bomb" observations are given closely (close attention?). The public is exhorted to report all mysterious sound- and light phenomena, which can have a connection with the "bombs" sighted on Tuesday, to the nearest troop unit. At the defense staff's research institute the Njurunda find will be more closely examined on Thursday. //

Also from a string of places in Dalarna stream in reports about fireball phenomena.

1946 July 11 (Th) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 7.

(Mystery around air accident:) / Unknown plane in the sea off Skagens light [house]. / KÖPENHAGEN, Wednesday (AP).

The Marine Ministry's secret intelligence service stated on Wednesday evening that an English warship reported an airplane accident about 7-8 nautical miles northeast of Skagens light.

An air watch ship and rescue boat from Skagen went out immediately to seek the wrecked plane. Also the regular plane on the Copenhagen-Oslo line was directed to the accident site.

The harbor watch in Skagen reported that no wreckage or parts of an airplane (washed ashore), and neither from Skagens light was any trace received of the crashed machine. / OSLO, Wednesday (AP).

The guard on duty at Fornabu reported that the fallen plane at Skagen probably was Swedish. Bernt Balchen reported, on AP's inquiry, that none of the Norwegian Luftfartsselskaps planes crashed.

Norwegian planes have been sent to the crash site.

Proper authorities in Copenhagen state that on Wednesday evening that the air accident out from Skagen "continues to be surrounded by deepest mystery."

All ~~experts~~ whips which took part in the search have returned without having found any trace of the fallen plane.

The Swedish air force's security service reports on inquiry that no Swedish military plane crashed. It is true a Swedish plane was out on a trip to England but it came back safe and sound. Neither did ABA lose any machine, therefore it makes it believed that the crashed plane was not Swedish.

Not the RAF, Norwegian Luftfartsselskap nor Danish Luftfartsselskapa lost any planes.

p. 1. (Summary of above article.)
1946 July 11 (Th) Morgon-Tidningen, last p. (card 1)

Mysterious square [covered] paper from the Njurunda bomb. / Stockholm experts investigate / Many reports stream in.

Remains of possibly a rocket- or jet-propelled object, which fell on Tuesday afternoon at Björkån in Njurunda have been sent to Stockholm. The defense staff's air defense division, for investigation, stated the press officer at the Sundavall air [base], Capt. R. Westlin, in an interview for MT.

--An eyewitness, who was located closest--70 to 80 meters from the spot--said an explosion took place in the fall against the ground, while another eyewitness continues to maintain that the projectile exploded a bit above the ground. The explosion created a hole about a decimeter deep and about a meter wide. The projectile clearly produced a strong heat, and remains of the same were very hot [when first] found. The slag [left by] the projectile was black and burnt.

--The ground was examined a long way around and the [well-cared-for] remains now find themselves on the way to Stockholm, where they shall be examined carefully.

The pieces gathered up in a bag.

The finder of the remains of the projectile was airline pilot T. Lindén. He lay and basked at Björkån when a blinding green shine lighted up the sky. Mr. Lindén saw a 40 to 50 meter long tail after the nucleus itself, which he took to be a meteorite. With a faint thud it fell down 45 meters from the bathers and made a small crater in the sand. Bits of the projectile were strewn around and were found a total of many meters distant. Mr. Lindén gathered up as much as he could find in a $\frac{1}{2}$ [3-kg.] bag. The bits seem like porous slag and are extremely light.

The thing went in a northeasterly direction and just before its fall had a 40-degree angle with the ground.

"Public [treasure]-hunt" in Njurunda.

Wednesday on the beach in Njurunda people began picking up many coke-like, porous objects which had the same appearance as those which pilot Lindén [already] had taken on Tuesday. Since some real pieces of coke were found [inland] as well and other wreckage here, it cannot be certain that everything taken was from the projectile.

One piece of the find was taken to the Kubikenborg cellulose laboratory, where Dr. Birger Backlund out of interest for the matter made a quick analysis of a fragment, and among other things declared the presence of metal.

A rather notable find on the beach was made by a journalist on Wednesday afternoon when he found a rust-colored, porous little thing, which bore a very plain mark [which was] situated next to some cylinder-like object.

While the rust colored bit's surface was uneven and porous like all other samples of the find, this bit had in its center a semicircular-shaped hole, and it appeared as if this bit was pressed under strong heat against a round, tube-shaped object and pressed against it until it broke through the surface there. [?]

"Checkerboard-squared paper"

The little bit of the find in Njurunda, which Dr. Backlund of the Cellulosenbolagets research division examined, was found to be at least in part organic material. It looked most nearly like carbon (carbide) which was exposed to weathering. It was somewhat more gray in color than other pieces of the find.

When Dr. Backlund picked at the object a little piece of paper of about a quarter-millimeter size came off and under a magnifying glass it appeared that the paper was checkered almost like a checkerboard with white squares with black bottoms. The squares were microscopic but very regular and it was all like a kind of screen which is used in electrotyping. Here it must be a question of an object which was not exposed to any exceptionally high temperature.

If the part of the find which now came under Dr. Backlund's eyes really issued from the projectile, which airline pilot Lindén saw fall down in Njurunda, then it cannot be regarded as a meteorite. A more comprehensive investigation of all that was found will make it possible to give other ideas for solving the puzzle. //

"Crash" in Lake Barken in Dalarna. / BORLANGE, Wednesday (TT).

From a series of places in Dalarna stream in reports about the fireball phenomenon and at many places it is believed the crash of a projectile was witnessed. All the sightings were made at the same time--14.35 o'clock on Tuesday-- No trace of the crash has been found..

In Romnehed, Borlange and Falun was sighted a luminous object with a long smoking tail. In Soderbarke a woman saw how a drop-shaped object came out of the northeast and fell down in Lake Barken. The drop was blue-green in color and had a tail of the same color. Another crash was sighted in Hockfjärd where a smell of burning was noted a long time after the crash.

Were projectiles sighted in Stockholm and Ockelbo too?

A person, who on Tuesday afternoon promenade on the lake (seaf) road along Arstaviken's southern shore, said he saw a projectile high in space toward the north. He thought it looked like a rocket and wondered what was the reason for sending up such a thing in the bright afternoon.

In Ockelbo too a similar phenomenon was seen. Mr. Efraim Jonsson of Gungården, who was one of those who made the sighting, states that exactly at 14.35 he caught sight of a strange cigar-like or rather sugar-loaf-like object over the weeds to the east. The object shone like silver and appeared like some glistening mass. It tumbled right down against the ground and was gone in a few moments.

1946 July 12 (Fri) Morgon-Tidningen, pp. 1, 9. (card 1)

Full "ghost flier" epidemic, but the crash is denied (refuted).

The crash site of the "ghost flier" in Njurunda was examined on Thursday by the corps chief of Lv 5, Lt. Col. Rudberg, ordnance officer Capt. C. Ljungdahl and Capt. R. Westlin. All three quickly came to the conclusion that a projectile never fell onto the bathing beach. The object which airline pilot Lindén and others picked up [in fact] must be old wreckage which was lying there earlier.

On the other hand there is nothing which speaks for some comet-like object having passed at a very great height. The men studied the terrain and heard many persons who were staying on the beach. A couple of girls, who lay around 20 meters from the presumed crash site, had not even noticed anything. --An investigation of the safeguarded objects must now be awaited before the theory of a crash can be excluded entirely. From the investigation it ought to be [possible] to establish if only wreckage is involved.

As early as Monday Mr. J.B. Strand, Norrköping, said he saw a ball shaped object which moved eastward with great speed. The object [was satisfactorily] estimated at a half meter in diameter. The color was gray. No noise or other sound was heard.

Another Norrköping resident witnessed, on Tuesday at 14.30 in Sattlerbo, Borrum, a shining white object with a smoke tail behind. The object fell at the edge of a woods, north of the place where he was located.

In Finsåp on Tuesday afternoon a farmer and a control assistant likewise sighted a shining white luminous phenomenon with a long trail, which disappeared with enormous speed in a north-northeasterly direction. Just before it went down on the horizon it seemed to go out entirely.

Crash in the Gavle area. / GAVLE, Thursday (MT).

A crash of a space projectile probably occurred in the Gavle area on Tuesday. A lady residing in Sikvik, Mr. Maria Nordlund, told that at half [past 3] o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, when she was cycling on the country road from Gavle to Bomhus, she saw a ball-shaped lighted object, a fireball, which was accompanied by a long, blue-green tail. The projectile went in a northerly direction at treetop height. //

Strange "airplane" over Varmland. / SKOGHALL, Thursday (MT).

Five persons at Vidon in Skoghall on Wednesday evening made a sighting of a strange thing in the air. The object looked [to be] at a distance of between 500 and 1000 meters and was like an airplane in miniature. Among other things, the wings of the "plane" were ~~visible~~ fully visible despite some haze in the air.

Most notable, however, was the plane's path. It came from the north northeast and went in a direction south-southwest, and went in such a way that it stopped up in the air and went around two or three times in a spiral--it circled forward accordingly in some manner.[?] Then it went and a distance again and stood still again and made the same circular movement, always to the left. So this "plane" continued at the same intervals. One got the idea that it was radio-controlled in some manner. It did not [go] fast--it remained in sight almost a quarter of an hour.

1946 July 13 (Sat) Morgon-Tidningen, last p.

(Many messages about "ghost bombs"): / "Projectile with a line behind it" / "Fireball the size of a head"

From all parts of the country reports still stream in about "ghost bombs" observed. In the Lidköping area the phenomenon is described as a projectile with a line after it, while at Thursday noon witnesses in Ljusdal told of a "fireball the size of a head." At almost the same time other persons saw a fireball fall down into a lake in the Ramsjö area.

Rumbling projectile with a line and ball behind it./MARIESTAD, Friday (TT).

A Lyrestad resident who was located on the road in Otterslätten, near Fagerlid, at 14.30 o'clock on Tuesday discovered a flying object which had a silvery-lighted tail behind it and which passed over Otterslätten at only 100 m. altitude. The direction was southeasterly and the object appeared to go at about a 35-degree angle. It is therefore believed that it fell somewhere in the territory between Otterslätten and a line [between] Nova-Algarås. Farmer Einar Andersson, Otterslätten, has reported that between 7.30 and 8 o'clock on Thursday morning he sighted a glittering object in the air around a meter long and with a tail of smoke behind it. At the time the airplane flew over the place as well. The luminous phenomenon at first seemed to be following the plane but then separated from it in a northeasterly direction. //

Fri. July 12, p. 8. Up in the heavens.

One by one technicians and poets have been out and looking at the ghost flier merry-go-round up in the heavens and give here an up-and-down account of their sensational observations.

Space is full of rushing, mysterious [craft] roaring / Sweep swishing wildly / forward over Swedish houses. Trembling people start/ under what impends;/ A seventh-hellish[thing] / was seen in the sky yesterday. 'Time is out of joint to be sure, / the earth is lighted in the course/of the night, a over the heaven's span/ swarming particles seen.

Our wonder was boundless, / no one knew where it was going;/
Now up in the sky / [the trumpeter is seen calling us to arms.]
In Ma Njurunda fell down / paper and other things; / people look to the sky, / perhaps more will come.
... - The frightened ones, in the summer night, / listen to the ghost's laugh / while it plays tag / with the atom bomb brat in heaven.
1946 July 14 (Sun) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 3.

(Still a mystery surrounding the crashed plane): / The ghost bomb has a connection with the mysterious air accident / Köpenham, Saturday (AP).

While Sweden is mystified by the enigmatical fireballs, in Denmark men are working feverishly to clear up the mysterious air accident at Skagens light ship.

It is perhaps not completely unlikely that there can pertain a certain relationship between the mysterious ghost fireballs in Sweden and the unknown airplane which fell into the sea off Denmark's coast, writes the Social-Demokraten today. In any case it seems very peculiar that no one has reported losing a plane.

The Danish navy sent out yesterday a report than investigations about the vanished machine are now called off, since it seems to be fruitless. The accident, however, was witnessed both from the Skagens lightship and from another ship, so all doubt about the statement's correctness is excluded.

Blue smoke behind the projectile which fell into a Norwegian pond.

At the community of Berg in Annebu on Thursday occurred an event which is connected with the notable comets in Sweden, writes the Tonsborg Blad.

Work in the community was in full swing when suddenly a loud crash was heard. It was at 14.30 o'clock. A very powerful surge occurred in the pond by the community, almost as if a body had been thrown into it. Above it all lay a blue smoke, which drew attention to the pond. It was first believed that it was a piece of a meteor which fell into the pond, but the time and the blue-gray smoke gave the phenomenon a connection with the occurrences in Sweden.

Swedish "ghost ball" had a 3-meter long tail.

Some workers, occupied at a construction [site] at Hagerstensåsen, saw at 12 o'clock on Saturday a "mysterious" ball come travelling at treetop level over the ridge from Malarhåjden in a northerly direction.
It was round and about as large as a man's head and had a two or three meter tail. It gave out a bright blue-green shine, but no sound was heard.

--A gang of line (road) workers a half-mile from Naavikens station witnessed at 10.30 on Saturday a flying object at 150 meters height, which went forward with a sound like is heard when an outboard motor is run at a high rate. The object might have been a couple of meters [in size] and had back-bent wings. It went in a northerly direction.
[July 16, p. 3. Mystr. forest fires in 2 places (not connected w gr's)]
1946 July 15 (Mon) Morgon-Tidningen, p. last p.

Mysterious plane at Skagens light[house] was a bomber. / KOPENHAM
Sunday (AP)

The newspaper "Socialdemokraten" reported today that a man in waters out from Skagens light found parts of a life jacket which was supposed to have originated from the mysterious air airplane, which the other day fell northeast of Skagens light and whose identity has still not been established. According to the newspaper the lightkeeper, P. Jensen, of the Skagens signal station, sk has said that the airplane came flying in a strange [way] from the sea and suddenly fell vertically down into the sea. It is not thought probable that the machine can have become righted again, since then nothing was heard of it. Before the machine disappeared the man was able to establish that it was a bomber with double rudder.

1946 July 16 (Tue) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 1.

Ghost bomb? Explosion at Uppsala / UPPSALA, Monday (TT).

An explosion, which was thought to be a bomb- or shell fall, has been reported from Björklinge, two miles north of Uppsala, according to what farmer Carl Nilsson from Nynäs farm at Langsjön in Björklinge reports.

When Hr. Nilsson and some other persons at 21.30 o'clock on Saturday were located in the woods in the vicinity of the farm, they heard in the air a faint humming sound of a projectile which went toward the northwest. It had a high speed and around 400 meters from the place where it was first observed it exploded. The explosion sounded like three rapidly following shots and a smoke cover area of 4 to 5 square meters [resulted]. [?] The occurrence now has been reported to policeand military authorities, who today set up an investigation.

1946 July 20 (Sat) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 1.

Ghost crash in Kalix lake investigated.

A space projectile's fall in a lake in the vicinity of Nederkalix at 11.45 o'clock on Friday has been reported by a farm worker, and other persons as well observed the projectile, which was described to be 1 1/2-2 meters long and cigar-shaped. The man thought he heard motor noise and saw wings on the projectile. Since the man heard no explosion at the crash site and the lake is very shallow it is hoped that the projectile can be salvaged fairly undamaged. The landfiskal of the place was out during the afternoon to search for it with the military personnel. Experts from the defense staff are expected to depart for Kalix. / Continued on the last page.

1946 July 20 (Sat) Morgon-Tidningen, last p.

The first rocket in Norrbotten / KALIX, Friday (TT).

Concerning the fall of a space projectile in Norrbotten, the TT has received the following communique from the military authorities:
A crash by a long-range weapon was seen just before 12 o'clock on Friday morning in southeast Norrbotten. The sighting was made by a credible person, a farmer. No explosion occurred with the crash, which took place in a watercourse. A cascade of water a couple of meters high was thrown up. Through the police authorities has a watch by the police and home guard been set up. The investigations will be carried out through the military authorities' provision. Personnel have travelled from Boden to the site of the find. This is the first time that such a weapon--clearly of the rocket type--has landed in Norrbotten.

1946 July 21 (Sun) Morgon-Tidningen, last p.

Space projectiles also over Norway, V-1 experiments? / OSLO, Saturday.

Two V-1 like objects have crashed in Mjosa. In view of this, writes the Aftenposten, the many reports of rockets observed in both Norway and Sweden now can no longer be dismissed as pure fantasies. It is not at all impossible that one or more foreign powers are conducting secret experiments with a new V-weapon, writes the newspaper.

The projectiles mentioned were observed on Thursday between 12 and 12.30 o'clock by many persons who could affirm that they came from the west. They were cigar-shaped, around 2.5 meters long and with wings about a meter long. These were set about a meter from the tip. The front and back parts were metallic-shiny, while the middle part with the wings was black. It looked as if a device, possibly a rudder, was attached to the rear part. The projectiles flew at a small distance from one another and described a shallow curve, till they fell into Mn Mjosa and caused a many-meters high cascade of water. No explosion was heard.

New projectile seen on Saturday in Uppland. / TIERP, Sat. (TT).

A space projectile was sighted at 10.50 o'clock on Saturday morning by a couple of persons at Skaten, Hillnäs parish, in Uppland. The projectile was described as a luminous object and moved in a curve from northeast to southwest in over the country.

Again a projectile in Kalix. / ÖVERKALIX, Saturday (MT).

At Friday noon a further mysterious projectile was seen in the Kalix river valley. A 10-year old boy, son of Börje Larsson, Rax Storbacken, Frodal, sat and fished in the Kappis marsh, some miles northwest from the lake where another "rocket" was reported on Friday, when he heard a strange sound, whereafter some object fell in the water and threw up a 10-meter high cascade of water. The boy became frightened and ran home and related his adventure for his parents. On Saturday he was heard by the military, who moreover cordoned off both asserted crash sites.

"Space projectile" was boys' fireworks. / UPPSALA, Saturday (MT).
The mysterious "space projectile" which a few days ago was sighted in Björklinge, a few miles north of Uppsala, and whose course [ended] there with a dull explosion, has now been the object of a police and military investigation.

The "projectile" has turned out to be a fireworks article which was sent on its way by a couple of boys.

From Hillnäs in Uppland it is reported that a fisherman and his wife, on Saturday evening at 11 o'clock observed from his boat a lighted, oblong object which moved in a curve across the sky.

1946 July 23 (Tue) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 3.

Lake bottom in the "bomb lake" searched through.

The search for the crashed projectile in the Norrland lake bottom is still going on, but so far no trace of the projectile has been found. / /

The projectiles investigated in Norway. / OSLO, Monday (TT fr. NTB).

The air watch inspection [corps] has now been ordered by the defense high command to initiate an investigation regarding reports of the "ghost projectiles" in Norway, reports the Aftenposten. On Saturday a conference was held on the subject by the high command, but more detailed information cannot be given yet. The military police at Gardermoens airfield also are partaking in the investigation.

1946 July 24 (Wed) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 3.

New ghost bomb at a low height. / SUNDSVALL, Tuesday (TT).

A "ghost bomb" was observed by two families in north Sweden at 19.30 o'clock on Friday evening, it is now reported.

They saw a silver-glistening streak of light at about 50 meters height. They could follow it with their eyes for about 10 seconds.
Thereafter it exploded and fell down.

1946 July 25 (Th) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 3.

"Round trip bomb" over Sweden not inconceivable.

It is possible that the flying bombs which are seen crossing Sweden both with a westward direction and in a directly opposite direction, are making a round trip over the country in order then to return to their place of origin, it is stated by the defense staff, where they are very busy collecting all the reports and sightings.

The defense staff is anxious for help from the side of the public, however, and also request the reports as soon as possible and with as great detail as possible at the address: Air Defense Division, Defense Staff, Stockholm 90. The more reports are gotten the clearer the picture which can be made of the mysterious phenomenon.

That they are meteors in every case is a theory which has been rejected without further ado by the defense staff. That Sweden for the present serves as some kind of firing range or testing ground for radio-controlled projectiles is sufficiently established beyond a doubt.

1946 July 27 (Sat) Morgon-Tidningen, p.

Flaming aurora lights up Stockholm.

A powerful aurora illuminated the sky over Stockholm on Friday evening just after 23 o'clock and could be seen especially well from the city's surroundings. Bright flames in colors from green to rose stretched from the whole horizon up toward the zenith, which streamed with an intense light.

From Saltejobadens Observatory it was stated to MT's inquiry that auroras in July are not so unusual as might be believed, but thanks to the lightness of the summer sky it is not so readily observed. Presumably the celestial phenomenon on Friday is connected with a large sunspot group which just now crossed the sun.

1946 July 30 (Tues) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 3.

Flying bomb seen in Denmark. / KÖPENHAGEN, Monday (AP).

Since a mysterious flying object was sighted on Friday at Korsør in Sjælland many persons know have reported that in the middle of the day they saw another one of the flying projectiles.

According to the "Ekstrabladet," eyewitnesses stated that they observed a long glistening object which travelled furiously across the sky in the vicinity of Høng in Sjælland. The speed was so high that no airplane could have been involved.

Space projectile sweeps over the roof of a house. / SUNDSVALL, Monday (TT).

Only 20 meters overhead a space projectile passed a farmer in southern Norrland, who on Saturday was occupied with putting tiles on his roof. He discovered that he heard a loud whistling sound and directly thereafter came an object rushing over his head with rapid speed.

1946 August 1 (Tue) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 3.

[continues SvD] (Svartviks fire) MT continues to say there have been many fires that summer, in the dry weather, some probably started by arson. / Sparks, not ghost bomb, the true cause.

Explosion in henhouse was blasting cap.

The ghost bomb theory probably will arise in connection with a report from Harjedalen about a henhouse which burnt down the other day without the owner being able to give any explanation. An explosion was heard with the fire, and it was discovered later that the electric wires were disconnected, so a short circuit was excluded. Now it appears that there was a current in the wires. The fire was discovered first by people on a passing freight train. The explosion which was heard during the fire issued from some blasting cap and [nitrolite] cartridges sheltered in the henhouse.

1946 August 3 (Sat) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 1.

Clear answer about the ghost bombs by ~~xxx~~ next week.

By next week the defense staff's air defense division, according to what MT has gathered, expects to hand over a communique about the results of the research carried on concerning the "ghost bomb firings."

--We will say nothing, so long as we have nothing positive to go on, says Major Ahlgren of the defense staff. Reports from all over the country numbering many hundreds have come in to us, and the work, which is particularly thorough, takes time of course. But the report is, as I said, advancing.

p. 7. Ghost bomb among the family portraits.

A [farm owner] in the area of Sonderborg believes he has found one of the oft-mentioned ghost bombs on his land. He became so glad about ~~xxxx~~ this that he hung it up on the wall in his room among the family portraits.

According to the Aftenbladet he found an inscription on the bomb which suggests that it is of English or American origin.

1946 August 5 (Mon) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 1.

Space rocket with yellow tail. / SUNDSVALL, Sunday (TT).

A space projectile was observed in central Norrland on Saturday evening. A person saw an object with a yellowish shine and a tail behind it, which seemed to go from the southeast at 100 meters altitude. The speed of the object was very great and it disappeared from sight in a few moments.

1946 August 12 (Sun) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 1.

Flood of new reports of "blue white ghost rockets" / Most observations so far: / Serious development, says the defense staff.

The mysterious rocket firings over Sweden resumed on Sunday evening when a great number of persons certainly the most who have sighted "ghost bomb phenomena" at the same time--gave in observation reports from some hundred places in central and eastern Sweden.

By all signs it is judged that the public is beginning to take the "sky phenomenon" seriously and is disturbed that they will fail to cause death and destruction. The defense staff's telephone was besieged between 21 and 23 o'clock and reports were all alike in matters of time, appearance of the object and its course. Observations were made at two times: 20.46 and 21.40. The rocket bombs went in a direction from south to north and gave off a bright blue white magnesium-like shine. The height was stated at a couple of hundred meters.

Some of the reporters stated that the bombs "detached" something which looked like a small silver-glistening balls or flakes which next immediately fell, and from other places it is reported that a very faint whistling ~~xxx~~ sound was perceived.

Any possibility that it could arise from ordinary fireworks does not present itself. Observations are made at about the same time at places far from one ~~xxxx~~ another, and also it must have arisen from a particularly fast-moving object, which was observed everywhere, according to the above descriptions.

Lieutenant Neckman of the defense staff's air defense division occupied himself all Sunday evening with a comparison of the hundred or so reports. From a military point of view the firings are judged "serious."

From the [outskirts] of a city in central Sweden it was stated firmly that a rocket fell, then with a bright flash exploded some 100 meters up in the air. Investigations were still unable [to establish whether the position statements were of the shifting kind].

1946 August 13 (Tues) Manchester Guardian, p. 4.

Sweden's Bomb.

Sweden not long ago decided, in spite of the Peace Conference, that a regular exercise of her air-raid sirens was a wise precaution, and she possibly finds her reading of the future confirmed by the missiles which every now and again fly overhead. No one has said who starts them on their journey, but it does not need much imagination to see Russian engineers, no doubt assisted by obedient German scientists, operating from a research station on the Baltic coast. Russia, of course, could have found a more secret practice range, but she probably enjoys revealing a little of her plaything, just as America carefully lets us know at least enough about her bomb to hold it in respect. The most interesting point about Sweden's visitor is its range; it is reported to be at least 600 miles (which is roughly the distance from Peenemünde to London), and maybe more. But it is strange that the world, in this period of peace-making and settlement, should be so assiduous and demonstrative in military research. Our-selves in Australia with rockets, the Americans also with rockets and with how much more, the Russians with a weapon snatched out of Germany's falling hands--it is all too much like a gun group of wrestlers showing off their muscles between bouts.

1946 August 13 (Tue) Morgon-Tidningen, p. 1,7.

(card 1)

V-2, says Englishman about the "ghost bomb." / Observations also in Norrland and west Sweden. / Three fuelling [accidents] a new flying trend.

Just like a V-2, said Londoner George Harrison, when he together with his Swedish friend, correspondent Gunnar Jonasson, at 9 o'clock on Monday evening observed over Söder a ghost bomb of the same type as that which on Sunday evening passed Stockholm with a northerly direction. The bomb also came out of the south, stated Jonasson. It was Harrison who first noticed it and called the company's attention to the projectile's course. The rocket bomb presented a bright magnesium like shine and an ordinary spool's shape. It was seen about 10 seconds.

Mr. Harrison did service in England during the war years and thus on innumerable occasions saw both V-1 and V-2 bombs. He was sure of this matter, said Mr. Jonasson.--We had not gone out to "hunt for ghost bombs," nor stood and spied at the sky, either, when Harrison called our attention. It cannot be a question of any kind of suggestion especially since we had talked earlier in the day [in only briefest terms] about Sunday's rocket firings.

Also from other places than Stockholm reports came in on Monday about rocket bombs. The flight direction varied: reports say also of "ghost bombs" which came from the north.

"Three flames behind."

--We saw a spool-shaped projectile with three flames after it, reported persons for MT who on Sunday evening in Dalarna observed one of the rocket bombs which then overflew Sweden. Observations were made at 20.46 o'clock and then direction was southwest--~~wxxxx~~ which appears to differ from other reports on Sunday.

Poisonous material from rocket bombs? / ÖSTERSUND, Monday (MT).

Do the ghost bombs leave a poisonous material after them is asked just now in Undersåker in Jämtland, where three cows belonging to a farmer, Anders Eriksson, Edsåsen, died from the action of a mysterious poisoning. The veterinarian has only been able to declare that the cows were poisoned, but the poison symptoms are very unfamiliar.

Mysterious rocket projectiles were seen before over Undersåker. The latest fall was ~~xxxxxx~~ thought to have been seen by Mr. John Nilsson, Undersåker, at 9 o'clock on Sunday evening, and it is now guessed in Undersåker that the bomb gave out a poisonous material, which kills animals.

"Some decrease in reports."

--During Monday the number of reports of space projectiles somewhat diminished--allowing for the delayed communications about Sunday's overflight, it was declared by the defense staff's air defense division to MT's inquiry. Even so there are no direct expert sightings to go after. A directly pointed out fall site of course could solve the puzzle. But still there are no such certain reports--at the place where investigations are underway, no rocket bomb ~~xxxxxxx~~ remains have been taken so far.

[pic.: So this is what it looked like, says George Harrison, and he and Mr. Jonasson look at a photo of a V-2 bomb.]

1946 August 24 (Sat) Raleigh, N.C., News and Observer, p. 3.

Speedy Fire Ball in Sky Mystifies Residents Here /

Something is "like a big ball of fire" shot across the Raleigh-Durham area heading east last night but what it was may remain a mystery.

The best guess was that it was a new jet plane. The second best--a not too likely conjecture--was that a meteor was passing across the sky.

Officers at the Coast Guard air base at Elizabeth City and at Pope Field, Fort Bragg, claimed it was a mystery to them as well.

"Judging from the description, it must have been a jet," an Elizabeth City operations officer said in answer to a telephone inquiry.

"Nobody down here has heard of any jets over the area," however. Whatever it was, it passed the city at approximately 7:30 p.m. heading east at a high speed.

J.L. Kelton, of 2308 Byrd Street, reported the fire ball "seemed to pass over the center of Raleigh, and must have been traveling at 600 miles an hour, judging from the speed of other planes."

"It looked like a big ball of fire or a very large and very bright light," he explained.

"I've never seen a jet plane, but this certainly was too fast for anything else."

With jet speeds running upwards of 400 miles an hour the fire ball might have been a new type experimental aircraft, possibly one powered by the multi-horsepowered ram-jet engine, operating out of Langley Field, Va., or from a military air base in Georgia or near Washington.

A jet from anyone of the fields easily could sweep through North Carolina and loop back to its home base within a matter of minutes.

1946 August 24 (Sat) Wilmington Morning Star, pp. 1, 2.

(Seeing Things!) / "Ball of Fire with Tail" Startles Wilmingtonians

A "ball of fire with a tail" streaked out of the southwest at 7:25 p.m. last night, hissed swiftly over Wilmington and disappeared in a bright glow to the northeast, according to many telephone calls which poured in to the Star's newsroom from eyewitnesses.

Fifteen minutes later, at 7:40 p.m., the Associated Press reported that a similar or the same "ball of fire" flashed past Durham, but if it was the same one it had reversed direction because the Durham report said it was headed toward Raleigh.

The first local eye-witness to phone the Star about the mysterious phenomenon were the operators at the Tide Water Power company's plant on the waterfront at Surrey and Castle streets.

Parallel Flight.

"It was about 400 or 500 feet off the ground," one operator said, "and it streaked like a meteor from the southwest toward the northeast. I don't see how it could be a meteor, though, because it seemed to be traveling parallel with the ground instead of falling."

Another local eye-witness, a woman, said she not only saw it but heard it "hiss" as it passed like a large tracer-bullet over the city.

The earth-parallel line of flight and the "hiss" gave rise to speculations that the fireball might have been a jet-propelled plane. The Associated Press reported that the chief of the Raleigh weather bureau saw the fireball, but said it looked too small to be a meteor. He also said he thought it was moving too slowly to be a meteor or a jet plane.

The Raleigh-Durham airport and Pope field at Fort Bragg said they had not seen the fireball at all, according to the Associated Press. The Coast Guard Air station at Elizabeth City made a similar "something" report.

"Ghost Rocket."

One anxious Wilmingtonian called up the Star asking whether the fireball might be one of the mysterious "ghost rockets" which have been soaring into Sweden from [an] unknown source.

As the Star went to press last night no further reports on the fireball had been received.

1946 August 25 (Sun) Wilmington Morning Star, p. 5.

Ball Of Fire Streaking Across Sky Compared With Previous Phenomenon / Many Observe Object Traveling Parallel With Ground At High Speed /

Observers who noted the great ball of fire streaking across the southern sky Friday evening at 7:25 o'clock were contrasting their observations yesterday with those made by others who saw a similar phenomenon in the southern skies over Wilmington about 15 years ago.

The white headed red ball was noticed by operators at the power plant of the Tide Water Power company, at the foot of Castle street. One operator said "It was 400 or 500 feet off the ground; and it streaked like a meteor from the southwest toward the northeast. I don't see how it could have been a meteor, though, because it seemed to be traveling parallel with the ground instead of falling."

Mr. and Mrs. Theron Dunn, who were seated in their front yard at 2114 Brandon Road, Princess Place, reported that the object was pear shaped, and that it discharged three large balls of fire while in flight. Mrs. Dunn exclaimed on seeing the phenomena: "Oh, look at that star!" Her husband answered: "That's no star; that's a ball of fire!"

While motoring towards Wilmington at about 7:30 o'clock Friday evening, and just as their car was passing Fort Bragg, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur H. Rush, of Winter Park, reported that they saw the "ball of fire." They were en route to Wilmington, returning from a motor vacation trip.

Rush, stationed at Camp Davis for some time prior to serving for two years in the European theater of war with the Ninth Army Air Corps, reported yesterday that he had seen nearly every kind of rocket fired during the war and that he had never before seen anything like the "ball of fire."

He described the object as having been "round at the front, tapering off to a point at the rear, from which a trail of sparks were seemingly emitted."

Mr. and Mrs. Rush said: "The front was white and the tail red. It followed a seemingly direct course, and was not like a falling plane, although it did disappear below the trees, after traveling like a jet propelled rocket about 500 feet above the trees."

Capt. Robert C. Merritt, 117 North Fifth avenue, retired assistant United States district engineer, recalled having seen a similar ball of fire streak out of the southeast, hiss over southern Wilmington, and disappear over northeast Brunswick county.

Other observers of the 1931 phenomena remarked that one Wilmingtonian later contacted the observatory at Harvard University, which questioned his statement that the hissing sound like that of a sky rocket had been heard by the observers in Wilmington.

The 1931 "ball of fire" traveled about 1,000 feet above the earth and formed an arc, leaving behind a long brilliant tail, which remained in the heavens for some time after it had passed.

ADDENDUM II

1756 The Gentleman's Magazine, v. 26 Historical Chronicle pp. 38-41. January 1756

Th. Nov. 27 (1755).

About 9 at night a very uncommon phenomenon was observed at Wepio in Sweden. A luminous body, as large as a full moon, passed from the south-west to the north-east, from whence issued a stream of light in a straight line, which during its continuance gave night the appearance of the brightest day; but when it disappeared, it left behind it a thick smoke.

Friday, Dec. 26.

Some officers quartered in the citadel of Liege, saw at midnight a luminous arc in the firmament, one end of which seemed to point to Mestricht and the other over Flanders.

Friday, (Jan.) 2.

At 4 in the afternoon at Tuam in Ireland, an unusual light, far above that of brightest day, struck all the beholders with amazement. It appeared across the sky, which undulated like the waters of a rippling stream. This was a dreadful alarm; some left Tuam, some flocked to it from the villages, terrified by the streamers, which after continuing about 18 minutes, grew on a sudden discolored. The edges of the phenomena were at first tinged with a bright cerulean, then with a fine azure, and lastly with a flame color, discharging itself in a blaze toward the north; a most uncommon shock immediately succeeded, but no damage ensued. At Ballimore 7 acres of ground were laid under water about the same time that this phenomenon happened at Tuam, by which 200 head of cattle perished.

Saturday, (Jan.) 31.

On the 15th at 8 at night, a ball of fire was seen at Elm Milverton in Somersetshire, its apparent magnitude equal to that of the moon; its direction was from the southwest to northeast. It must be somewhat above the clouds, because it could be seen only between them; it was about three-quarters of a minute in passing from the Zenith (near which it was first discovered) to the place of its extinction, which was very near the horizon; it left a considerable train of dark vapours like smoke, but was attended with no noise.

[a year of bad storms, esp. in Ireland.]

1818, November. Letter from a Captain Duperrey to Francois Arago, in Arago, Meteorological Essays (London: Longman, Brown, Green & Longmans, 1855), "Thunder and Lightning," pp. 119-20; (letter dated Sept. 21, 1838)

"You say...you have sought in old meteorological collections to discover whether small isolated clouds never produce lightning and thunder. I find an entry on this subject in a journal which I kept on board the 'Uranie,' and of which I gave a copy to M. de Freycinet when we returned to France.

"Being in the Strait of Ombay, in the month of November, 1818, we saw one evening a little white cloud, from which lightning darted in every direction. It rose slowly notwithstanding the strength of the wind, and was at a great distance from all the other clouds which appeared fixed near the horizon."

"From recollection I can add to the above the following particulars. The cloud in question was of a rounded form, and might occupy a surface equal to the apparent size of the sun's disk. From every part of this cloud there escaped zigzag lightnings, and a great number of successive discharges like the independent fire of musketry from a battalion of men. This phenomenon, which I only saw once in my life, lasted fully half a minute; with the last discharges the cloud completely disappeared. I do not know why M. de Freycinet has not mentioned this circumstance.

"I ought to add that while in these Straits we saw several luminous balls traversing the atmosphere in all directions; thunder was frequent, as indeed is usual in the Indian Archipelago....

1848 August 19. The Athenaeum, no. 1086, p. 833. (v.)

(Discussion of Prof. Powell's report on luminous meteors before the British Association for the Advancement of Science)

Many of the facts in the Appendix were interesting. The Secretary selected the following as an example:--

"Extract from the Malta Mail Times, August 18th, 1845: 'On June 18 18th, at 9h. 30m. p.m. the brig Victoria, from Newcastle to Malta, in lat. 36° 40' 50" long. 13° 44' 36"', was becalmed, with no appearance of bad weather; when her top-gallant and royal masts suddenly went over the side as if carried away by a squall. Two hours it blew very hard from the east; and whilst the hands were aloft reefing topsails, it suddenly fell calm again, and they felt an overpowering heat and stench of sulphur. At this moment three luminous bodies issued from the sea, about half a mile from the vessel, and remained visible for ten minutes (it is not said what became of them). Soon after it began to blow hard again, and the vessel got into a current of cold fresh air.' At Ainsb, on Mount Lebanon, at the same time, June 18th, at half an hour after sunset, the heavens presented an extraordinary and beautiful though awful spectacle. A fiery meteor—composed of two luminous bodies each apparently at least five times larger than the moon, with streamers or appendages from each joining the two, and looking precisely like large flags blown out by a gentle breeze—appeared in the west, remaining visible for an hour, taking an easterly course, and gradually disappeared. The appendages appeared to shine from the reflected light of rain bodies, which it was painful to look at for any time. The moon had risen about half an hour before, and there was scarcely any wind."--Sir W.S. Harris characterized this Catalogue as the commencement of a store of valuable facts. The account of the brig Victoria was to him most interesting. He had no doubt it was an electrical phenomenon, exemplifying what Prof. Faraday had described under the name of the glow discharge. Indeed, he had himself imitated the phenomenon artificially; and had recorded a similar fact which occurred to a vessel when sailing close on a wind under reefed topsails. They saw bearing down from windward, straight on the ship, two wheels of fire, which the men described as rolling mill-stones of fire. When they came near, an awful crash took place, the topmasts were shivered to pieces, and the crew experienced the same over powering sulphurous stench. The phenomena were thus accounted for:--a highly charged thunder-cloud was brought down by the wind on the ship; its distance from the sea, though beyond the striking distance, admitted of the "glow discharge," which produced the appearance of the balls or wheels of fire that so alarmed the men. When the cloud came near the ship, its mast brought it within striking distance--when a discharge or thunder-clap took place. The sulphurous stench was a constant concomitant of such discharges.

1859. E. Howard Grev, Vigilions, Previsions and Miracles in Modern Times (London: L.N. Fowler & Co., 1915), p. 81.

[A revival similar to the one in Wales during 1904-05 took place in Ireland in 1859.]

Mr. Jones, of Peckham, Editor of the Spiritual Magazine, (1877, vol. 18), says a leading official belonging to the Corporation of London, told me: "Having heard that fire had descended on several of the great Irish assemblies during the Revivals, I, when in Ireland made inquiry, and conversed with those who had witnessed it. During the open-air meetings, when some 600 to 1,000 people were present, a kind of cloud of fire approached in the air, hovered and dipped over the people, rose and floated on some distance, again hovered on us that which was afterwards found to be another revival meeting, and so it continued. The light was very bright and was seen by all, producing awe."

[French religious revivals during the first decade of the 18th century went hand in hand with persecution, but supernatural warnings and lights were frequent too, and the author discusses these.]

p. 75 [ca. 1704 or 1705] Claude Arnassan stated on oath before Sir Richard Holvford and John Edisbury, esq., Masters in Chancery, on 6th March 1706.... One day I was in company with about forty people, I had invited to an assembly, appointed by brother Cavalier; when we came to the place prefixed, we found nobody there. Whilst we were musing what to do, one of us said: 'Brethren, let us pray to God, and he will direct us.' He was no sooner on his knees, than there appeared in the air a 'light' like a large star, which, advancing, pointed to the place where the assembly were met, half a league off. As soon as that light disappeared we heard the singing of psalms, and so joined our brethren. Several fell into ecstasies and preached." (Desert Cry, p. 31).

75-6. Durand Fage declares on oath... [May, 1703?] "A young woman of Galarques, named Margerate Belle, in whose company I was going, with twelve or fifteen more, to religious worship, in the way by night, fell into ecstasy. As we were much troubled to find the place of assembly, the Spirit in her said: 'I tell thee my child, I will cause a light to direct you on to the place ye seek.' Then we saw a light fall from heaven like a rocket: by this means we found the assembly, above half a mile distant. (Cry, p. 35).

other mention of lights, p. 76, 254: aeri singing, supernal sounds in same period: 128-9, 134-5.

1870. Erich Pohl, Die Volksnamen Ostpreussens (1943; Hildesheim: Georg Olms Verlag, 1975).

p. 61. Portents of War.

Shortly before the 1870 War people were given signs. Many at that time saw plainly a fire in the sky: and behind Konigsburg a tombstone fell from the sky.

1914. pp. 62-3. The Rain of Blood in the Year 1914.

Just around Midsummer's Eve 1914, people saw in the night over Lindenberger Castle (farm) a very bright white big sun. It turned like a wagon wheel quite slowly as well. But it was not the sun, which had already gone down, and it was [well along toward] midnight. The moon also looked big. All at once the bright little sun stood still and burst so that the sparks fell on every side. And a little while after that blood and fire fell from the sky as raindrops and big clumps always very softly on Lindenberger below: and this did not last long, then it all disappeared as if it had never been. All the people who saw it were frightened, but no one knew then what it meant.

1934: p. 65. The Gray Army.

When Field Marshal von Hindenburg died in Neudeck and a few nights later was conveyed to the Tannenberg monument, then the gray soldiers of the World War appeared in the clouds, to give their dead field commander an escort to Tannenberg. Everyone who was then in Tannenberg saw it with their own eyes, and many others too. In all East Prussia the gray army was clearly and plainly seen.

1871 Comptes Rendus (Paris), v. 73, pp. 397-8.

Meteorology--Observation of a bolide made at the Observatory of Marseille August 1. Note from M. Coggia, presented by M. Le Verrier.

"A magnificent blood-red bolide made its appearance last evening, August 1, at 10:43, Marseilles mean time, about at a point situated rather near the triangle formed by ζ Serpens, θ and γ Ophiuchus.

"With majestic slowness it took a direction east, passed at 10:45:

30 between μ^1 and μ^2 Sagittarius, and at 10:46:35, nearly γ crossed Saturn.

"Its pace slackened gradually. At 10:49:50 it passed a little below θ Sagittarius, and at 10:50:40 to the south of the star f of the same constellation.

"At 10:52:30 it arrived between ϵ and θ Capricornus, where it remained stationary a moment.

"Changing direction then, it took a direction north, leaving at around $1^\circ 30'$ to the west the star γ Aquarius (Verseau) at 57 m. 50 sec., and stopped again at 59 min. 30 sec., a little to the southwest of β Aquarius.

"Resuming after a moment its original trip toward the east, it passed β Aquarius to stop anew toward ζ Aquarius and dropped (again) past with considerable rapidity perpendicularly to the horizon, going then between δ and γ Capricornus, and left toward the east of the moon, which was nearly full.

"I lost sight of it a little to the north of θ Pisces Australis, at 11:03:20.

"Its diameter, which was around 15 minutes [note: moon = 30 mins.] at the start, had rapidly diminished from the beginning, and was found to be no more than four minutes on its approach to Saturn. In the latter period, that is to say when it stopped between ϵ and θ Capricornus, it had no more than the apparent brightness of Venus at perigee, a brightness which it maintained until the moment when I lost sight of it.

"When, after having stopped near ζ Aquarius, it fell perpendicularly to the horizon, it gave off [something like] incandescent drops."

"M. Le Verrier, in communicating the letter which M. Ch. Sainte-Claire Deville and he have received, made the remark that the bolide was observed under novel conditions and hitherto unknown. The long duration of the appearance is especially extraordinary. Once this long duration is admitted, the irregularities of movement and without doubt the final fall [if accordingly].

1871. Comptes Rendus (Paris), v. 73, pp. 755-6.

Meteorology.--On two observations which seem to offer some analogy with the notable meteor [seen] recently by M. Coggia. Note by M. An. Guillemin (summary).

"The singular luminous phenomenon, observed on the night of August 1-2, 1871, at Marseille, by M. Coggia, recalled to me, when M. LeVerrier communicated this observation to the Academy, a similar phenomenon of which I was the witness in Paris, about 1853. What struck me was, firstly, [the slight stiff/faint brightness] of a reddish disc, which I saw moving parallel to the horizon, and at a slight altitude (4 or 5° at most); secondly, the extreme slowness with which the meteor described its trajectory. I observed from the fifth floor of a house on the rue Amelot, and the part of the trajectory I was able to see seemed to graze the heights (tops) of the Pere La Chaise.

Among the old observations having some analogy with that of M. Coggia, I take up one which comes to the support of the remarks of M. Elie de Beaumont. It is #431 of the Philosophical Transactions (1738) which furnished me this example; it is extracted from a book entitled Observations de terre et de mer pendant l'epidemie, by J. Huxham. After having cited diverse aurorae borealis which appeared at Plymouth in the month of August 1737, this observer entered into the following details on the phenomena which occurred Dec. 26 of the same year [Dec. 5, says original article.]:

...In the evening the Sky seem'd overcast with a thin cloud or vapour, but looked red as from the relexion of a great fire; and it cast as much light as the full moon on a cloudy night. This surprising phenomenon lasted till near midnight.... This same phenomenon was of great extent in the northern parts of Europe; and at Kilkenny in Ireland, was seen somewhat like a globe of fire suspended in the air for near the space of an hour, which then ~~bursting~~ bursted, spread flames around on every side.

Thus here a meteor evidently [was due] to the appearance of a polar aurora which took the shape of a globe of fire, like most bolides, and exploded in the atmosphere. As long an appearance as an hour (it was not said, however, if it changed during this time), hardly permits confusion with true bolides, however.

1874 May 16. La Nature (LDLN 120, Oct. '72, pp. 18-19).

Thursday May 14 at 22:30 in the vicinity of Marseille, I looked by chance at the region located between Capella, Ursa Major and Cassiopeia, when I saw, almost at equal distance from these three constellations, a splendid red star of the first magnitude. For an instant I believed that it was Capella, to which the evening haze gave at times a red color, but a glance cleared these illusions. The big star scintillated with liveliness; I looked at it scarcely a minute, when I saw it move slowly, increasing in speed. It advanced thustly toward Capella, increasing in brightness; it passed Jupiter by far at this moment. After a trip of around 30 seconds it disappeared in the haze to the northwest below α Auriga, and a curious thing, it did not leave behind it any luminous train. I understood that it was a bolide. I was able to view it only with the naked eye and yet I seemed to distinguish in it the shape of a parallelogram.

1877 L'Annee Scientifique, pp. 45-46.

Ball Lightning observed at Vence, in Provence.

M. Ed. Blanc has published the rather curious observation of lightning in the shape of balls, which was manifested on March 23, 1877 at Vence, in Provence.

Toward midnight a layer of black clouds covered the east of the sky; other slight and flaky small clouds ran above the black clouds. To the northeast of Venice, and at about 18 kilometers, a large black cloud seemed very agitated. It rose and fell without cease. Some lightning appeared above this cloud, and took the shape of balls of fire. They went off like the rockets which dart in a cluster of fireworks. Seeming to go out from an invisible center, they went in every direction. After a distance of 6 to 10", they exploded silently while producing a dazzling light.

The ~~appas~~ apparent diameter of these luminous balls was 11° ; their color was reddish, sometimes yellow, but they were always white on exploding.

The phenomenon repeated three or four times in two minutes. The travel of the balls was relatively slow; they went about 2° per second. Lightning furrowed the cloud from time to time, from high to low, and some seconds later a dull rumble was heard. The phenomenon followed a direction \approx E-W, passing to a place to the north of Venice. The flash of the noiseless lightning persisted for more than an hour. There occurred a rain later, mixed with hail, which forced the observer to leave his post.

An analogous phenomenon occurred in this same locality five or ten years ago.

It may be noted that two days previously, that is to say, in the morning of March 21, a hailstorm, accompanied by thunder, visited the shore of the Mediterranean, following from \approx W-E the Fréjus. Antibes, Cannes, Nice, Monaco were struck. The center of the storm passed out to sea, and was of the sort which spattered Venice, that is to say an intermittent rain mixed with half-melted hail and some squalls (?). The sun shone the rest of the day, but at times the large black clouds came running rapidly from W to E. It is because of these clouds which arrived, the next day, to give out lightning balls, that we give this description (?).

1884 January 19. Scientific American, v. 50, p. 40.

A Remarkable Phenomenon Seen in Porto Rico.

A correspondent in Humacas, Porto Rico, describes a beautiful comet observed by himself and a few friends in Humacas on the 21st of November, 1883, between nine and ten o'clock in the evening. He writes that "its head inclined to the west and its tail extended majestically due east, and at an altitude of about 35° to 40° ." It was observed on "three successive nights, but on the fourth night it disappeared."

The writer asks for information, and asserts his belief that he has seen again the great comet of 1882. His conclusion is an utter impossibility. The great comet of 1882 is now far beyond the reach of mortal vision. Moreover, it was visible in the morning instead of the evening. The latest observations of this comet were made by Dr. ~~Richard~~ Schmidt at Athens, on the 27th of April; by Mr. Atkinson, of New Zealand, on the 6th of May; by Prof. Ricco, at Palermo, on the 12th of May, when it was extremely faint. The very last observation was made by Thome, assistant at the Cordoba Observatory, in South America, where it was seen until the 1st of June, and described as "an excessively faint whiteness."

It was announced that this comet would be in a position during September and October where it would probably be visible in a powerful telescope in the early morning, when the moon was out of the way. We have heard no report of its visibility, and therefore conclude that it is winging its flight through the star depths to return no more until the passage of several hundred years will complete its circuit, and bring it safely back to our domain.

Neither can the comet seen at Porto Rico be the Pons-Brooks comet, now plainly visible in the northwest as a small nebulosity with a very small tail when seen by the naked eye; and as a nebulosity with a bright nucleus and a well defined tail, when seen in a telescope.

We cannot therefore throw any light upon the celestial phenomenon seen in Porto Rico by our correspondent and his friends. A comet such as he describes would have been seen elsewhere, and its presence would have been telegraphed all over the civilized world. We should like a drawing of the strange visitor and its position among the surrounding stars. We should like also to know whether the observations were made with the naked eye or with the aid of the telescope.

Perhaps the Java earthquake had some connection with the beautiful phenomenon. The superb sunrises and sunsets occurring nearly at the same time are traced to this source by scientific men of the highest authority. Cosmic dust takes on wonderful forms, under the right conditions for development.

1884 February 16. Scientific American v. 50 p. 97.

A REMARKABLE PHENOMENON SEEN AT SULPHUR SPRINGS OHIO.

A correspondent in Sulphur Springs Ohio refers to The Scientific American of the 19th of January, which contained an account of a remarkable phenomenon seen in Porto Rico on the 21st of November. He also describes a wonder of the sky seen about that time in ~~Sulphur~~ Sulphur Springs, though he is not certain as to the exact date. The phenomenon was witnessed by several observers besides himself.

The object was seen in the southwest in a vertical position. It consisted of a bright nucleus in the center with two tails, one pointing downward and the other upward. The nucleus, observed in a four-inch refracting telescope, under a power of 20, was ruddy in color and quite bright. Our correspondent incloses a sketch, giving the general ~~view~~ view as it appeared to the naked eye, though the nucleus is represented as it was seen in the telescope.

We can give no explanation of this strange phenomenon. It was not a comet, or it would have been visible all over the northern world. Its conical form suggests the zodiacal light, and this soft, faint column of light has already been observed and described as unusually brilliant as well as in advance of its usual period of visibility. It is seldom seen in this latitude until February and March.

The zodiacal light is a lens-shaped appendage of a mysterious ~~and~~ nature surrounding the sun and extending a little beyond the earth's orbit. As seen from this planet, it extends upward from the sunset point nearly in a line with the ecliptic, or sun's path, reaching to a point in the heavens near the Pleiades, but has no appearance of a nucleus.

In the tropics the zodiacal light is almost constantly visible, and is sometimes sufficiently luminous to cause a sensible glow in the opposite quarter of the heavens. It is of a ruddy hue, especially at the base, where it is brightest, and puts out the light of the small stars. Sometimes undulations and flashes mingle with its soft, nebulous light.

We are, however, inclined to think that the celestial phenomena observed at Humacas, in Porto Rico, and at Sulphur Springs, in Ohio, are connected in some unaccountable way with the sun's ~~interlows~~ interlows that have formed a delightful feature of the season. Flashing lights, flaming banners, varied and fantastic cloud forms, and every imaginable tint of color have diversified the sky, and made the winter of 1883-84 one long to be remembered for its brilliant sunsets and sunrises. The phenomenon is ascribed to the presence of volcanic dust, meteoric dust, or moisture. We may never discover the cause of the gorgeous illumination that has surrounded the path of the setting and the rising sun, but it will be long before we shall cease to remember its result.

1884, (Illustrated) Science Monthly, v. 2, p. 136.

A Great Meteor.--Mr. L.C. Yale, of Norwood, St. Lawrence Co., N.Y., writes to the News of that place describing a remarkable meteor which he saw there at 8.30 p.m. on July 3rd. It moved slowly from east to west, had a long tail, a nucleus like a globe, as large as the moon, surrounded by a bright ring, two dark lines crossing the nucleus in vertical direction, the lines larger in middle, straight on inside, curved on outside, tapering both ways to points. The tail was 30 degrees in length. The general appearance was that of a gigantic sword of fire, moving handle first through space.

1885. Comptes Rendus, (Paris), v. 101, p. 680.

Meteorology.--On a meteor observed at Saigon, on the evening of August 22. Extract from a note by M. Reveillere, presented by M. Faye.

"August 22, at Saigon, about 8:15 in the evening, I was in the company of ship's lieutenant Guiberteau, and I was facing south, when I noticed, almost in the direction of the Cross, veiled by the cirrus (clouds), a magnificent red star; it was larger than Venus, of an intense red, and we soon observed that it was animated by a notable movement. Lacking instruments, here is what we are able to report:

"The meteor made its appearance suddenly out of the south; it disappeared approximately in the south-southeast. The height above ~~the~~ the horizon was from 15° to 20° . It followed in its course a very obviously horizontal line, with a speed rather like that of a cloud pushed by a moderate wind. It took around 7 to 8 minutes to travel an arc of 50° to 60° , and disappeared eclipsed by a cloud of moderate opacity.

"It seemed to me that the little white clouds made it lose its brightness, and that this brightness varied with the passage of the clouds. M. Guiberteau thinks, on the other hand, that the meteor traced its trajectory below the cirrus."

1886, 2nd sem. Comptes Rendus, v. 103, no. 19, p. 849.

(From a report by M. Trécul)

"On August 25, 1880, during a storm with thunder and lightning, in broad daylight I saw leave from a black cloud a luminous body, very brilliant, light yellow, almost white, in shape a little elongated, appearing to have a length of .35 to .40 m. and a breadth of around .25 m., with the two ends cut short like a cone.

"This body was visible only a few ~~minutes~~ moments; it disappeared on seeming to reenter the cloud; but on withdrawing--and it is in this especially which seems to me to merit being pointed out--it gave off a little quantity of its material, which fell vertically like a heavy body, as if it alone had been under the influence of gravity. It left behind it a luminous trail, on the edges of which appeared sparks or rather reddish globules, because their light was not radiant. Near the falling body the luminous trail was a bit nearer a straight line (vertical), while in the upper part it became sinuous. The little falling body divided during its drop and extinguished soon after, when it was on the point of reaching the height of the [skyline] formed by the houses. On its departure and at the moment of its division, no noise was perceived even though the cloud had not gone far."

1886 December 16. Nature, v. 35, p. 157.

Between 8 and 9 o'clock on November 3 a remarkable phenomenon was observed at Hamar, in Norway. At the time there was perfect darkness, when, suddenly, a bright white cloud appeared in the sky, drifting in a north-easterly direction, and from time to time emitting brilliant rays of light in various directions. The cloud retained throughout its original form, and disappeared at last in the darkness.

1888 May 23 (Wed) New York Times, p. 3.

A DOWN-EAST FARMER ASTONISHED. / From the Halifax (Nova Scotia) Herald, May 19.

A curious incident occurred near Forchu, Cape Breton, very recently while several men were working in a field at that place they were startled at seeing a firm flaming ball of white light coming directly toward them from the heavens. The ball descended close by one of them, so close that he almost felt it, exploding as it struck the ground and ~~knocking~~ knocking him down. The cause of this phenomenon is not known, although it is supposed to have been an electric meteor of some kind. The man who was so near the falling object wore an unearthly pallor upon his face for a couple of days after.

1890 August 21. Nature, v. 42, p. 403.

In a paper printed in the new-number of the Transactions and Proceedings of the New Zealand Institute, Mr. Taylor White describes an extraordinary meteor which he saw at Wimbledon, Hawke's Bay, on May 4, 1888, between 8 and 9 o'clock p.m. The nucleus, or head, was of oval form, of a transparent light-yellow colour, as of iron at a white heat. The tail was in the form of the tail of a pheasant, expanded--that is, the two centre streamers were of uniform length, the outer ones gradually shortening, so that the outermost streamer on either side was very much shorter than those in the middle. These streamers were of a dull, opaque orange. They were distinctly divided each from each by dark bands, which consisted of several fine black lines, to, probably, the number of five in each band. Mr. White is unable to fix the number of orange streamers, but would guess ten as probably correct. The colours blue and green were also certainly present. No sound was audible while the meteor was in view. "But," says Mr. White, "after I had gone into the house, and was describing what I had seen, the sound of its striking the earth or sea was heard--a loud and lengthened noise, to me like the violent shaking of all the forest trees, and evidently above ground, thereby differing from the sound accompanying an earthquake--coming from the westward; and this was followed, after a hardly perceptible interval, by a fainter sound, like an echo, to the northeast. The time which elapsed till the sound was heard was from three to five minutes." Various New Zealand daily journals gave full descriptions of the phenomenon at the time. According to the New Zealand Times, the apparent size of the meteor was "quite half that of the full moon."

1894 September 29. La Nature (from L.D.L.N. no. 118, June 1972. Pages Suppl., pp. 2 & E.F.). (card 1)

Bolides and meteorites fallen in Greece in 1894. Recently (in July-August) a noteworthy number of bolides and meteorites have fallen in Greece: their drop has been accompanied by curious phenomena, some of them rare, of which I will describe the main ones: August 20, in going down by the railroad from Athens to Phaleria, towards 8:40 p.m., I saw a bolide showing the appearance of a white globe, rather fully surrounded by a greenish air. Its speed seemed very slight.

I pass all the other bolides to describe the phenomena observed last July 19. These phenomena have been reported by the Greek newspapers and a part of them have been confirmed by eyewitnesses.

On July 19, the inhabitants of Boiai saw at high noon a bolide descending with great speed [toward] them; this bolide suddenly stopped and it stayed suspended in the air while leaving behind it a brilliant line accompanied by smoke. After five minutes of suspension, at 10 minutes after noon, a frightful report (noise) was heard, and the bolide directed itself toward the highest summit of Mt. Criten, while continuing its trip it fell into the sea with a new report.

The same day at nearly the same time, the fall of bolides and meteorites in different points in Crete (Candia) was described.

There was an isolated black cloud, having made an explosion, [and] there was seen a luminous body having the shape of an upside-down cone which, moving from the southeast toward the northwest, fell into the sea near Heraclion. Most curious is the striking analogy with the fall of the meteor of Aigla, described by Biot. There is the same apparent source (isolated black cloud); there is the same direction. A little later [after this], the under-prefect of Selinos (Crete) writes, that the fall of two meteorites and a bolide occurred in his district. All three of these came from the east, one of them fell to the ground without [leaving any remains], the second, having the shape and apparent size of an Etruscan vase, fell below the village of Sarakina-Gregoriana, near the part named Sternes (reservoirs), onto a block of stone which it broke into bits. This action of the meteorite to break blocks of rock was described as well in another, later fall.

Finally the bolide, having an apparent length of two meters, passed very near the prefectural house and descended as far as a certain point, nearly even with the ground, then, changing direction and moving very quickly parallel to the ground, disappeared toward the northwest.

The drop of these meteors, falling the same day and at nearly the same time (noon) in a range including Crete and the southeast part of the Peloponnese, prove that they have a [local source].

If in these descriptions the facts have not been exaggerated, there are three obscure phenomena: first, there is the nature of the cloud from where appeared to come the meteorite of Heraclion; second, there is the abrupt pause of the meteor at Boiai and its hanging for five minutes; third, finally, in the same category, is the change of direction of the bolide [at Selinos] and its movement parallel to the ground. / C. HALTEZOS.

1896 November 24 (Tues morn) Daily Record (Stockton, Calif.), p. 4.

NOT THE AIRSHIP. / A Rumor Becomes Current Last Night That Sacramento's Aerial Visitor Flew Over Stockton.

"Did you see anything of the airship?" was a question which got started about town early last evening owing to a little incident and two hours later, although started as a joke, people were asking each other seriously, "Did you hear anything of the airship passing over the city?"

The meteoric flight of the alleged aerial monster that flashed athwart the heavens above Sacramento a few nights ago was not a nightly visitant to this section. Two electric wires became crossed on Main street opposite the Yosemite house, and the fitful flashes which it gave out soon gathered a crowd.

Some joker suggested that the airship was passing over and from that remark the idea became current and passed for whole cloth among many who did not know the circumstances.

Nov. 24, p. 4. Mysterious work going on in Orwille. Jan. 23, 3. Lodi arap.

1896 November 25 (Wed. morn) Daily Record (Stockton, Calif.), p. 1.

THE AIRSHIP SEEN. / It Passed Over Stockton Last Night. / Visible for Ten Minutes--It Shot Through Space at a Rate of Sixty Miles an Hour. /

Since the alleged embodiment of one of Jules Verne's wildest dreams shot across the sky above Sacramento last week, it has been a very easy thing to see an airship darting through space in the nocturnal watches, and everyone who gives testimony as to its reality is booked as "a reputable citizen." People have even gone so far as to say that the man-made aerolites are being manufactured now and that Stockton has ordered three. If that is the case on of them passed over the city last night, but the engineer evidently did not recognize the place and went on down the valley. Stockton has some people who are known to possess as much veracity as the inhabitants of the Capital city, and they say they saw the airship last night.

Nightwatchman Maxey was covering his beat at the State Asylum for the Insane at about 8 o'clock when, according to his testimony, a meteoric flash caught his optics. It seemed to be about as far north as North street when first seen, and perhaps a mile to the east of the male patients' building. He called Coroner Fred Clark, Supervisor Lorenz and Storekeepers Turner and Anderson to witness the strange sight, and they all agreed that it was the airship. (Witnesses upon taking stand testified that they had not been drinking at the time afore mentioned.)

The atmosphere was extremely hazy which rendered the light somewhat dim, but its continued course in a horizontal line assured them that it was not a shooting star. They watched it for about ten minutes when finally it disappeared to the southeast. The wondering spectators to the mysterious courser of the heavens could not agree on the speed of the bird of passage, estimating it variously from at forty to sixty miles an hour. The form of the machine was not visible, and the witnesses would not swear that they heard the whirr of the "paddies" fanning the rarefied atmosphere of the upper regions, but they said that they were willing to be classed with the host of others who have testified that some vast visitant of the night has for the past week been hovering over the earth at various places within the ken of mortal man.

1896 November 26 (Th) Daily Record (Stockton), p. 2.

THE AIR-SHIP EPIDEMIC /

The longer the air-ship craze continues the more one wonders whence it hailed. A learned professor told the teachers the other night that "Before a wheel could run in any man's mill, it must run veil in some man's head." This is a neat way to indorse theory, imagination or "wheels in the head." Applying the same principle to air-ships, it is quite conceivable that an airship must first exist in some fertile brain before it can sail around in the upper regions. The one that first agitated Sacramento and then took complete possession of the Call evidently had its origin in some brain that occasionally forages beyond the borders of the intensely practical.

But that does not answer the question. Who first conceived this air ship? If it were a reporter on a Sacramento paper he should at once be put in charge of the New York Journal. He is certainly a genius. But the readiness with which the public has seized upon this ideal ship exhibits what we may term the intelligent credulity of the public regarding the possibilities of invention. These imaginings, if indeed they be such, are perchance, the forerunners of the actual air ship, as the wheel in the imagination is the forerunner of the wheel in the mill. Where so many visions of air ships exist at a mere suggestion, there must result eventually something more tangible.

No one would care to stake his reputation on the declaration that an air ships such as described is impossible, and consequently few care to pronounce the story a pure fake, though undoubtedly most people believe it to be nothing else. What puzzles the public more than anything else is the wild career of the Call, chasing this supposed delusion about the valleys and hill tops. No one had credited the Short-ridge with the sprightliness to even chase a fake gracefully. The antics of the overgrown metropolitan paper are fully as puzzling as the air ship itself.

All of this of course the Record stands ready to cheerfully rescind when the air ship is definitely located.

Nov. 27, p. 1. FIRST APPEARED HERE. / The Airship an Old Friend of Stockton's and Was Taken for a Meteor Weeks Ago. /

The airship conclusions have taken another direction, and instead of reaching out into the future or up into the heavens, are now snatching eagerly from the past. It is recalled that several weeks ago the people of this city were xxxxx startled by an aerial visitor that was taken for a meteor or comet.

It was said to exhibit double lights. Observers said that it did not travel in the ordinary falling course of motions, but seemed to keep parallel with the earth, and even to rise or climb up further into the heavens.

It is now claimed that this phenomenon was the first appearance of the airship, and that Stockton is entitled to the glory of its first visit.

1897 March 23 (Tues morn) Sioux City (Ia.) Journal, p. 8.

THAT ALLEGED AIRSHIP. / A Correspondent Who Talks of Venus and Varying Strata of the Atmosphere.

Sioux City, March 22.---To the Editor: This evening I have been much entertained by seeing little crowds of people gathering upon the sidewalks or in doorways and at windows, looking at the western sky and talking about "the airship." I understand something of the same sort of thing has been going on for several nights in other localities, and reports are even telegraphed out from Omaha to the effect that "an "airship" has been seen there or thereabouts floating in the evening sky. If what the people there have seen is that toward which the attention of people in Sioux City has been directed this evening, then those who regard it as an airship carrying an electric light have been fooled by the pranks which variable strata of the atmosphere will sometimes play.

I don't know much about astronomy, but it is my impression that Venus is an evening star now, and that her place in the evening is in the western heavens, and that this is the season of her greatest brilliance in all the year. If this be the case, then the light is supplied by the planet Venus. But some may wonder how a planet could seem to w swing in the sky, and be brilliant for an instant and then fade to the light of an ordinary star. That is perfectly explicable by certain well known laws regarding the passage of rays of light through media of varying density. An object is appreciated by the eye as located in the direction from which the light therefrom may strike the retina. We never see a star as being where it actually is, but always in the last direction taken by the rays as they come toward us. These rays are bent as they pass through the atmosphere, and the denser the atmosphere, the more they are bent. Suppose, now, that the density of the atmosphere should vary while the rays are passing through it--is it not clear that this would make the apparent location of the object vary, and thus make it seem to move? It is this variation in the successive strata of the atmosphere that causes the stars to twinkle on even the clearest night. And then the presence of vaporous strata in the air will act as a curtain--the more dense the particular stratum that may be interposed between us and the object, the less clearly we see it. This explains why, at a time such as this, when currents and strata of varying density streak the air, the brilliant Venus seems to swing in the sky, and to pale and then increase in light--and be taken for "an airship." Yours truly, Skeptic.

Mar. 25, p. 6. "SKEPTIC" HAS A CRITIC (A writer agrees that the airship reports are due to Venus and atmospheric strata, but questions the explanation for the twinkling of the stars. Skeptic replies in the same column [he works for the newspaper?] from an article in the Encyclopaedia Britannica.)

1897 March 24 (Wed.) Sioux City Journal, p. 8c.

JOTTINGS ABOUT TOWN...

Patrolman Reeve says that last night when people were watching Venus, thinking the evening star was an airship, that he had lots of fun while patrolling his beat. Reeve told one party of gazers that the lights were that of an airship which was making its way from the planet Mars to the United States and that the two planets would soon be warring over a tariff bill. He told another person that it was an airship in charge of a party of Bohemians, and that they would alight at North Riverside, where he was going to converse with the owner of the ship, as he could talk Bohemian as well as Indian. The patrolman says people actually believed this nonsense.

Mar. 17, 2. Omaha atrp.

Mar. 26, 5. Chi Record notice abt Venus being taken for Star of Beth.

Mar. 30, 6. KC Times report abt Topeka sighting.

25, 8. Insane man trying to interest people in his flying mach. invention.

28, 16. Nanticoke, N.Y. "omen."

1897 April 16 (Fri) Boston Globe, p. 6.

THE AIR SHIP QUESTION.

The numerous reports that come from the west of the appearance of a huge airship, which it is claimed has been seen at various points, may, or may not, be well founded. But there is nothing inherently improbable in them.

Trained scientific men, who speak from well-grounded knowledge, have admitted, for a number of years, that aerial navigation is a possibility; and it has long been thought that the practical difficulties in the way of effecting it would soon be overcome. It would not be at all surprising if those practical difficulties had now in reality been solved. At any rate, if the air ship is not an actual consummation we may expect its appearance at any time.

The 19th century has been an era of unparalleled invention. If the air ship shall be invented and perfected before the close of the century it will furnish a memorable climax to an era that is already without a parallel.

1897 April 16 (Fri) (Iron Mtn, Mich.) Daily Tribune, p. 2.

Not an Air Ship. / Black Speck in the Heavens This Morning Attracted Many People. /

A huge dark object, soaring heavenward directly above the Hulst school this morning, attracted many people who believed the airship had truly struck the upper peninsula. It proved to be a tailless kite made by Dr. Crowell for the amusement of his children. The kite is made after the Japanese pattern only the body is considerably larger, and no difficulty is experienced when the unique and original affair is several hundred feet heavenward.

19, 2. Arap explodes. / Dr. Cahoon says he came from a Detroit on the "airship," arriving at midnight. / May 15, 1. Barnard.

1897 April 17 (Sat) State Republican (Lansing, Mich.), p. 1. (card 1)

THE AIRSHIP / Is Now Taking a Rest in This City / THE INVENTOR INTERVIEWED BY A REPUBLICAN REPORTER / Ship Bails From San Francisco and Is on a Trial Trip / MADE A COMPLETE TOUR OF THE CENTRAL UNITED STATES / Duck Hunter Winged It Thursday at Pine Lake / And the Ship Has Put in Here for Repairs--H.H. Cooley Has Leased It For an Easter Excursion--Bill McGiveron's Experience With the Aerial Monster--Strange Story That Comes From Williamston. /

Notice--All people desirous of taking a ride on the air ship, are requested to leave their names with H.H. Cooley, who will manage the Easter excursion. Accommodations for 70 people. The ship will leave the dome of the capitol at 11:19 o'clock tonight, and, if it is not too foggy, the intention is to sail to London, attend Easter services at St. Paul's cathedral, dine at the St. James hotel and back to Lansing in time for business Monday morning. Bring your Mackintosh, for it's raining in London. Fare for the round trip, $1.37. / "AIRSHIP TICKETS FOR SALE HERE."

This rather startling announcement was posted conspicuously in the windows of H.H. Cooley's office at the Hotel Downey last evening. In response to an inquiry Mr. Cooley stated that the proposed excursion would start from the dome of the capitol this evening. He claims to have made special arrangements with the owners of the mysterious craft for a moonlight excursion. As evidence of his good faith he offered to introduce a Republican reporter to the official in charge of the airship and the offer was gladly accepted.

"I'll tell you," said Mr. Cooley, "you be around at 1 o'clock in the morning and we'll go and look him up. I have made arrangements for the ship to land on the waterworks standpipe."

The clock in the city hall struck 1 just as the reporter, who was waiting in a doorway on the east side, saw a light appear over near the Grand Trunk depot. It grew brighter as the ship approached, and as the strange visitor slowed down to land on the standpipe, it was seen that a green and red light were carried on either side and a bright white light was run up to the masthead. After hovering over the landing place for a few minutes, the ship settled down, and the reporter, who was already half way up the standpipe, hustled on up to the top. When he reached the last step he found a ladder placed over the side, and up this he clambered on board the ruck-falked of denizen of the atmosphere.

He was cordially received and at a request was shown over the entire ship. The body of the craft is cigar-shaped. On either side extend huge winglike aeroplanes, which serve to steady the ship when poised in midair. Similar planes are provided to guard against a tendency to tip sideways. The body of the craft is perhaps 150 feet in length, despite the tales of its being several thousand feet long. It does not differ materially in construction from the numerous conceptions of ships for aerial navigation, which have been conceived by other inventors, but its motive power is the secret of its success. Just what this was, the gentleman in charge refused to state, claiming that patents had not yet been secured. The reporter was shown into a cabin and was comfortably seated in an easy chair, cigars were lighted and the story of the ship and its travels was begun.

"To beging with," said the professor in charge, "I must ask, for family reasons, that my name be kept secret. I have worked for years on this craft, and at last have met with success. I started on this trip about two weeks ago from San Francisco, and in that time I have traversed much of the central United States. Yes, I have seen some strange sights and have enjoyed mystifying the public."

"Now, when I was in Kansas--but there, I suppose, you would rather have something local. What do I think of Michigan? It's a great state. I arrived in Michigan just after the Detroit election and am not much surprised to learn that my ship was taken for the ghost of Gov. Pingree's machine. It has been mistaken for everything from the end of the world to a circus advertisement."

"Now, when I landed in Michigan I expected to remain only a short time but things are coming my way. Say, you don't think there's any danger of Pingree making me trouble for having a monopoly, do you? No? I am not worrying any. The principal trouble I have had has been my crew. They insist on talking free silver, although I have insisted that we were above that, literally speaking. The other morning I spoke to one of them about it and he told me I needn't think because I had a little wind that I was the whole atmosphere. I want to get some good men. I hired my crew in Kansas and their whisperers interfere with navigation. Some wind up where we live, you know. The other day one of the crew got drunk. He claimed that he was full of balloon juice. Yes, there's trouble even in the air. I tried to tell my woes to one of the crew and he told me I was off the earth. In Kalamazoo they wanted to arrest me for vagrancy. They said I was hanging around without any visible means of support. The other night I took a high trip, just to get a little air, and one of the crew kicked. He said it was getting too thin. But say, let's come back to the excursion."

"Be sure and call at the Orphans' Home for Senator Thompson. Don't bring Oom Sybrant Wesselius and I don't care to have Gov. Pingree along. He is flying high enough now. If you can get Bob Shank to go I will show him a thing or two about sailing. He won't find this craft any Polly Ann and the air is no Pine Lake."

"There is one thing I must insist on and that is that no strong drink comes on board tonight. If anyone should fall overboard I have no pneumatic life preserver to throw him. But I will show the crowd some high life though, 2,000 feet high at least. Now about the route mapped out. We will start east and will take in all the principal cities between here and the Atlantic. We won't stop at Buffalo because Niagara falls. Well, anyhow. When we get to London you may hear wails, but don't get scared, it's only the prince. When we cross Ireland we may get Corked but by Dublin back we will escape. On arriving in Scotland I shall let Glasgow. I don't like the place anyhow. We will start home early in the morning and will be able to see when we cross the Atlantic, O, it'll be a great trip and tell your all friends not to overlook it. I think the rate for tickets very low considering the high old time we shall have."

The reporter climbed over the side as fast as he could when the professor stopped long enough for him to get away, and as he hurried down the standpipe stairs the professor yelled after him: "Just tell them that you saw me, they won't believe the rest." /

The following note was left at the Republican office this morning: I saw the airship last night--10:30 p.m.--over my barn--about 800 feet long--hip brute--row of Japanese lanterns all along top--large wide sail like a fan--tail dove--dark bay in color--and I heard voices from above--sounded like Jim Baird and Charlie Eicher--no fake--wake affidavit." / BID OSBORNE. /

A dispatch from Wm. Mcgiveron, confirms the report that the airship was seen at Pine Lake Thursday night. William denotes and says that in the darkest hour of the night he was awakened from his peaceful slumbers by a tap on his window and the glare of a light that at first blinded him. On stepping out into the night he was accosted by a voice from above, which told him that the light was from the airship; that during the afternoon the ship had been lying concealed behind the bank of clouds over the lake and that a stray shot from the gun of some duck hunter had injured one of the ship's wings and they were laying by for repairs. William then says that he was directed to prepare four dozen egg sandwiches and a kettle of coffee for the crew, and when prepared the provender was hoisted on board with a scoop fully as large as a freight car, and paid for in Canadian quarters. Williams further says that the aerial monster appeared about 300 feet above the lake but only the outlines were visible on account of the brilliant searchlight which made everything below as light as day and above as dark as midnight ~~xxx~~ during a cyclone. He observed a red light at each end and thinks the ship was fully half a mile long. All appeals to be taken on board were met with the merry hal hal but Williams says he thinks the occupants hailed from either Kentucky or Milwaukee as they asked for a corkscrew. Bill says if he knew their address he would have the whole crew arrested for violating the fish law for the light reflected so strongly on the lake that it was no trouble for the occupants of the ship to pick out the biggest and best fish in the lake with a long-handled spear. Just before daylight the ship sailed off towards this city. The whirr of themachinery was plainly discernible for several moments. /

ANOTHER ACCOUNT / The Airship Alighted Near Williamston Last Night. Williamston, Mich., April 17.--(Special.)--This morning at a point a mile and a half south and west of this village, a balloon or flying machine alighted. The air ship was seen about an hour before it alighted by a dozen farmers or more, who had been watching it. On its attempt to alight they gathered around, but a good many of them did not remain long after the landing of the ship. A strange man, if man he might be called, was in charge of the ship. While he seemed to have plenty of heavy clothes, which look like the pelts of polar bears, he seemed to have no use for them, as he was almost naked and seemed to be suffering from the heat. He is about 9 1/2 feet tall and his talk, while musical, is not talk at all, but seems to be a repetition of bellowing. One of the farmers who was somewhat braver, attempted to go near him, and got a kick that will last him for some time, having got his hip broken. Great excitement prevails here, and lots of people are flocking here from Okemos and Locke to view the strange being at a distance, as no one dares to go near. He seems to be trying to talk to the people. The people here are credulous, and those that have not seen refuse to believe the report, although six of the best people in that ~~xxxxxx~~ locality are ~~xxx~~ here and affirm that it is the truth. From their excited manners we are led to believe that no hoax exists. His balloon seems to be out of repair. At 8:10 last evening the air ship passed south and a little west of this village. Hundreds of people watched its flight.

1897 April 17 (Sat morn) Sioux City, Ia., Journal, p. 6. (card 1)

THAT UBIQUITOUS AIRSHIP. / Many Persons in Various Iowa and Dakota Towns Think They Saw It.

Vermillion, April 16.--Special: The "airship" was seen here last night about 11 o'clock--so say twenty or more young men who were on the street at that time. The light--for that was all that could be seen--first made its appearance from the northeast, and made a complete circuit of the business portion of the city, moving very slowly. The color of the light was red, and it seemed to be very large. The "airship" was the topic for general discussion this morning on the streets of the city. All sorts of stories were told, but when it leaked out that a certain grocer's son had made a large sized kite the day before, and that there was a bare possibility that the kite and a lantern attached for a tail had caused the delusion, there has been a great deal less confidence in the tone of the story.

Emerson, April 16.--Special: Last night the "airship" passed over Emerson. It was in sight for about fifteen minutes, between 9 and 10 o'clock. It was described as cigar shaped and having a row of red lights along the sides. It was moving southwest at a rather slow rate. It was seen by Messdames Olmstead and Parmelee and Messrs. Parmelee, Ross and Smith, all residents of Emerson and people of undoubted veracity.

Moville, April 16.--Special: W.L. Sanborn, a prominent grain dealer of this town, has seen the airship and can fully describe it. He had just returned from Sioux City last night when his attention was called to a remarkable object in the sky marked by red and green lights. It was northwest of town and he described it as an oblong body of fair size with great lights fore and aft. He noticed the singular feature of the lights that they were changeable--a deep red flashing out, then changing to a dark green. They were very brilliant when he first observed the airship it was not over 100 feet from the earth and moving from the southeast to northwest. Mr. Sanborn, on discovering the airship, called to his wife and children, and together they watched it until it disappeared from sight.

Pierre, April 16.--Special: A number of citizens of this city, East Pierre and Fort Pierre are certain they saw the mysterious airship about 9 o'clock last night passing rapidly over toward the west several hundred feet in the air and traveling at a rapid speed. Most of them only claim to have seen a bright light resembling a locomotive headlight, but others are just as certain they saw a long dark object hanging below the light, and others that the dark object was supplied with long arms extended from each side. George Strong, of East Pierre, is certain he saw the dark object below the light, as is James Seals, of this city. Fire Chief Monhouse saw the light, as well as J.R. McCloud and a number of other residents of Fort Pierre. If it was not an airship it was something which made the people who saw it think it was at least.

[Pic.: Appearance of the airship is verified from various localities. --Chicago Times Herald. Shows people looking through liquor bottles used as telescopes toward monster bug flying in the air.]

16, 4. The arsp is like most spirit mediums: It performs its wonders only in the dark, where a good view is impossible.

Apr April 1, 2. Arsp in Oms. 16, 8. Winkle & Hulle. 22, 3. Edison on arspas. 30, 9. Hamilton's cow.

17, p. 8. Jottings About Town.

Stories about the airship have become so common as to be tiresome, but it has been a few days since anyone in Sioux City has reported sighting the overhead traveler. A man who was at Morning Side Thursday night, however, is sure that he saw the strange machine which has been bothering so many people. He says he distinctly and certainly saw it move across the sky in a westerly direction. He insists that it could not have been Venus, and is almost as positive that it was not a balloon. He says he could see the shape of the ship, and his description in that regard would lead one to believe he has been reading the tales of other sky gawvers, for he describes the strange thing as "shaped like a cigar."

26. SEVERAL WERE POOLED. (April Fool's pranks) ...

A gang of boys near the city building resolved themselves into a self-appointed committee to keep before the minds of the people the fact that it was April Fool's day. Scores of innocent people craned their necks around the tower of the government building in a vain endeavor to sight a balloon or an airship, and all they got for their trouble was the information that it was the first of April and they were [sy]. The committee stopped almost every wagon that went by, and informed the driver thereof that [] had been revolving. Whether or not the teamsters took this information as a personal reflection, many of them could not see the joke. Others of them drove on good naturedly, but one old man got out of his wagon, whip in hand, and chased the boys around the block. (last line: "It 12, 2 Howardan Has "Em--see Des Moines Leader 13/3 passed overhd & dia) 1897 April 20 (Tues) (Harrisonville, Ky.) Rustler, p. 4.

The Airship.

Anent the airship that has so mysteriously appeared and disappeared at different places recently, a telegram is reported to have been received from Springfield, Tenn., Sunday night to the effect that the mysterious aerial visitor had passed that place headed this way. Acting upon the information thus received several of our citizens sat up till a late hour awaiting its passage, but it being chilly and getting late in the night most of them gave up the vigil without being rewarded by sight of the strange phenomenon that is destined to revolutionize navigation and locomotion. We have it, however, on the word of Mr. Ellie Howard, a gentleman of well known truthfulness in all matters relating to a practical joke of harmless tendencies, that the ship undoubtedly did pass. It hovered around the base ball park, so Mr. Howard said, and seemed to be debating in its mind whether it would take it along in its flight through the air, but concluded to leave it on terra firma; at least it is still there.

May 4, p. 1. THE AIR-SHIP / Seen at Charleston--Sails in From the Northwest

And lights in front of B.L. Franklin's store. When first seen it was thought by the citizens that its occupants had lost control of it, but when asked why they had visited that little town, they said they had sailed by there to purchase food and raisent for the summer, and went into B.L. Franklin's store and purchased all the granulated sugar at 20 pounds for $1.00 that they would need this summer, and all the Arbuckle Coffee at 15 cents a pound that they would need until they would want to come through this country again. After loading their ship with the various Bargains given by this store, they stepped aboard and ordered it to pull out for parts unknown. Profit by the expensess example of these wise ship-builders, and come and get your share of the Bargains that are now being given at this ~~xxx~~ store.

1897 April 21 (Wed) Rockville, Ind., Republican, pt. 1, p. 1.

Additional Local.

Every day brings new developments in the air ship mystery and somewhat reluctantly, through fear of being discredited, every once in a while some fellow confesses that he has seen something strange in the heavens. The latest is that our very efficient assessor, C.B. Carver, sighted the strange thing while returning home from town one evening last week and wrestled with his conscientiousness of duty for considerable time as to whether or not he should take steps to list it for taxation.

Sept. 2 p. 3.

It looked for a time as though the airship had passed Rockville up, but we were honored last Thursday evening and have no less authority for the statement than W.N. Carlisle, president of the town council. Mr. Carlisle says that about 11 o'clock in the evening mentioned he with three others distinctly saw a mysterious object in the air, apparently following the course of High street eastward. It appeared from their point of observation about 20 feet in length and 8 or 10 wide, and was carrying a green light in front and two red ones in the rear. The rumor that the aerial mystery is a section of Prof. Tom Grinley's aeronautic circus is generally discredited here, but some have accepted the theory that it represents the vanishing hope of the popocratic municipal ticket.

May 12-pt. 2 p. 2. The arsp an advertising scheme (St. Louis Republic).
1897 April 23 (Fri) (Wald Madisonville, Ky.), Hustler, p. 1.

The Air Ship.

We people at Madisonville were beginning to feel just a little afraid that the air-ship would miss us and that we would not get a glimpse of that aerial ruffia affair. But success comes to him who waits and it has come to our people at last. It was seen to pass over our town last Tuesday night about 8 o'clock. The object, let it be what it may, was seen by quite a number of our citizens at that time, and by citizens who had not been near a saloon for twenty-four hours. It seems to be a difficult matter to describe the object intelligently, as different people saw it from different standpoints, but all agree in saying that it carried two kinds of colored lights at its head. It was pursuing a westward course when it passed our town. It moved in a zigzag manner, some times bobbing up and down sometimes dipping down. It some times veered to the right and then to the left. It continued until it was out of sight.

The question is, what is it? It has been observed in various portions of the United States during the past week or ten days and at all these points it presents pretty much the same appearance. The outline of the ship, or whatever it may be, was not discernible to any one. The supposed head-lights were all that could be seen. It will hardly do to say that it was an escaped balloon, as such a thing could not, or rather would not be likely to remain in the upper air so long a time. We are really at a loss to understand or to explain the strange affair. As we know nothing in the world about what it is, or where it is going, we shall refrain from surmising as to what it is, but content ourselves by reporting what others say about it who have seen it. We suggest, however, that it may perhaps be the headlight of the promised wave of prosperity that we all so much desire to see. In that event we extend it a most cordial welcome and ask that it may strike this part of the moral vineyard one of its heaviest blows.

1897 May 13 (Th) Brownstown (Ind.) Banner, p. 8.

Vallonia Sayings and Doings.

Henry Rich informs us that while out fishing last Wednesday he saw the "Flying Machine." He thinks it an omen of good times and plenty of McKinley prosperity. Henry, it may have been distributing post office commissions.

April 20, ex Republican Progress (Bloomington, Ind.), p. 3.

--Just now it is the proper thing to see the "air ship" with red and green lights, great wings, the body cigar shaped, and rushing through space "up in the sky so high." It is said that a great quantity of whiskey is now mixed in tubs and pails with red pepper and dog-leg tobacco to give it the proper bite.

Spokane Daily Chronicle, Mon. July 6, 1897, p. 1. A BEACON LIGHT. / Contractor Loy and Family are Camping on Old Baldy. /

A morning paper of this city had a startling account of a "Beacon Light" on Old Baldy yesterday morning, and over a column was devoted to the wonderful phenomenon. It now transpires that the said light was nothing more nor less than a good old-fashioned camp fire, built by Engineer George J. Loy and his family, residents of Lidgerwood park, who were camping on the mountain sides.

They had previously notified their friends in this city to watch for the camp fire Saturday night, and these friends were delighted with the sight, but they were greatly amused to read Sunday morning's paper and its startling account of the great mystery.

1897 August 3 (Tue) (Portland) Morning Oregonian, p.

THE AIRSHIP AGAIN. / Strange to Say, It Passed Port Townsend Unobserved.

VICTORIA, Aug. 2.--The illuminated aerial visitor that has been mystifying the people of the Northwest for several months past made two recent appearances near Victoria. Three ladies camping at Sidney, a few nights ago, saw it, and watched it for half an hour. It appeared to be moving slowly to the north. One lady described it as a red column of fire apparently 50 feet long.

Sunday morning about 2 o'clock it was seen by Messrs. Tatum, Young and Wolfenden, who camped near Goldstream. It worked in a northwesterly direction. The three men watched it until daylight, when it disappeared. It was shaped like a balloon, but its light was more brilliant than it would be possible to light a balloon. The light was the color of electric light, and the object was steadily throwing out rays. It was not very high. From descriptions, the object would appear to be a visitor from the skies. It was not affected by the wind.

1898 January 3 () Tribune de Genève (LDLN #114, Oct. '71, Pages Suppl., C).

FRIBOURG.

A new bolide, says the "Liberte" of Fribourg, has been seen at Romont. Tuesday evening, about 20:30. It was seen for around 15 to 20 minutes. was of the size of a good-sized star, was like a ball of fire, now redder, now whiter. It began over Gros-Mont, where it circled in different directions; then it followed through space the direction toward Romont almost as far as between Berlens and Mézières, but always at a great height, then it returned in the same direction and disappeared behind the same cluster of mountains. (A bolide on Oct. 13, 1897, was even larger.)

Feb. 10, 1898 (Th), 4th ed., p. 2.

According to what was telegraphed from Lyon on the night between

Saturday and Sunday, at three and a half hours in the morning, a magnificent bolide traced its parabola in the sky of the region of Lyon. Its course was from north to south and its size comparable to that of the disc of the moon at its greatest height above the horizon. The brightness of the meteor was considerable enough to see clearly, making it quite [like], at the time of its passage, magnificent moonlight in a clear sky: it offered moreover this peculiarity--of emitting luminous colored flashes changing from blue to green with red [streaks]. Toward the middle of its course the migrating star divided into two parts, seeming obviously equal, and which disappeared with an extreme rapidity, the one going away from the other.

1898. Comptes Rendus (Paris), v. 126, pp. 295-6.

METEOROLOGY.--Observation of a double bolide at Vannes, January 3, 1898. Note by M. Georget, presented by M. O. Callandreaux.

"Last January 3, returning home toward 8:40 p.m., as I turned around I saw in a northeasterly direction at an elevation of 30° to 40° a quite brilliant luminous meteor, of the color of the planet Mars, and it traversed the sky very slowly. It went away in a northerly direction and disappeared at the horizon on the extension of the stars and Ursa Majoris, behind the hills located north of Vannes, 8 or 10 km. away, and dominating the city of 110[thousand].

"It followed a trajectory of 45° in extent in 5 or 6 minutes, during which time it constantly diminished in brightness like a luminous body going away. Toward the disappearance it was believed that a yellow-reddish flash was seen.

"I was able to examine this meteor for several minutes with the aid of a small telescope of 30mm [aperture] ([a Coulier terrestrial telescope]). It showed the shape of two luminous bodies A and B situated almost at the same elevation, the brighter A in front. A remarkable peculiarity: the movement of B was subject to abrupt oscillations (swings); they lasted half a second; 4 or 5 a minute were counted.

"Two luminous balloons [could be said] connected to one another."

M. Callandreaux adds the following remark:

"The observation made by [Major] Georget is very important. It is comparable to an observation up till now perhaps the only one of its kind, made by Schmidt. This astronomer saw, on October 19, 1863, a bolide travel with exceptional slowness. He was able to examine it with a comet searcher [telescope] and declared that it was double."

p. 495: M. Callandreaux announces that the notable luminous meteor like a bolide, in the January 17 session, should be attributed, following information gathered, to a montgolfier [fire balloon].

1898 October 27. Nature, v. 58, no. 1513, p. 626.

A correspondent sends us a letter he has received from Ballvarthur, in the Vale of Owca, County Wicklow, with reference to a curious object observed in the sky on Wednesday evening, October 19, about six o'clock. The object was visible in the south-west, and looked like a three-quarter moon. It was moving gradually from south-east to north-west, and appeared to the observer to go down behind the Croghan Kin-sella mountain. It was of a golden colour, and was seen for four or five minutes. The suggestion is made that the object was a meteor, but it may have been merely an escaped balloon. Perhaps it was seen by other observers in Wicklow or Wexford, who could give further particulars concerning it.

1906 July 8 (Sun) Indianapolis Star, p. 22.

HAS REAL WILD MAN / He Roosts in Tree Boughs / Long Island People Throw Into Panic Over Antics of Creature Who Worries Lovers.

BALDWIN, L.I., July 7.--That a wild man lurks in the woods hard by this village there can be no possible doubt. Constable Stephen Pettit led a posse into the haunts of the creature, but was able to find only a few deserted nests in the trees where the unwelcome visitor had lodged. Residents are in a state bordering on terror. They bar and bolt their doors at night and two or three of the inhabitants have set spring guns on their front porches.

Because the creature has been seen perched like a wild turkey the story has gained circulation that he has wings. Sempronis Jenkins, principal of the Freeport High School, has called him Dracula, after the principal character in one of Bram Stoker's novels, and the watchword of all Nassau is "Dracula alive or dead."

Dracula has been wandering near the pumping station, which is used to supply a portion of Brooklyn. He has also appeared at dawn to Mr. Simpkin, who was gathering the products of his Plymouth Rocks. The wild man seized the rubber dating stamp which Mr. Simpkin was about to imprint an egg, and with a fiendish cry tore across the railroad track and disappeared in a clump of blackberry bushes. Haunts the Kissing Bridge.

Young persons who are accustomed to visiting the kissing bridge at twilight now shun it, for the unpleasant experience of a Freeport couple there has alarmed the community. They were leaning against the rail when the wild man approached and laid a heavy hand on the youth's shoulder and then laughing in his face suddenly swung himself into the branches of a weeping willow which was on the bank of the stream.

Miss Conway, who lives in Oakview avenue, outside of the main portion of this village, declares that last Monday afternoon she saw a tall man emerge from the woods. His clothing, which was torn and threadbare, was black. His hair was intensely black and he also wore a black moustache.

His eyes had a wild and restless expression and she also stated that his feet, which were incased in patent leather shoes, seemed small and that he apparently had little or no toes. The wild man looked about in every direction and, catching sight of an automobile, gave vent to ribald laughter and receded into the underbrush.

Wild men have been seen from time to time in this vicinity, for several sanitariums for the weakminded are within a radius of 10 miles, but this is the first one who goes to roost. Rude platforms of branches on which he had been in the habit of sleeping are in evidence.

Unless Dracula is ~~xxxxxx~~ treed by the end of this week preparations will be made for a manhunt next Sunday and the woods will be filled with determined sportsmen.

1906 November 11 (Sun) Indianapolis Star, p. 40.

(card 1)

Meteor Grazes Ship in Mid-Ocean / With a Roaring Sizzle It Plunges Into the Water Near St. Andrew. / Gleaming Tail "A Mile Long." / Steamship Passes Through Shower of Hot Fragments. /

New York, Nov. 10.—When the Phoenix liner St. Andrew, from Antwerp, tied up alongside her pier in Hoboken yesterday the sole topic of conversation that came to the ear of the stowedore on shore was the narrow escape of the freighter from being melted and sunk by a red-hot fragment of a star that fell alongside last Tuesday afternoon, when the vessel was 60 miles to the eastward of Cape Race.

First Officer V. Spencer, who was on the bridge at the time, told how the meteor, with a flaming tail "a mile long," came zigzagging out of the southern sky a half hour before sunset and disappeared in the sea with a roar and rizzle that terrorized the crew, who saw the awesome spectacle.

That the ship passed through a large shower of meteors there is no doubt, for just before the big one dropped ~~xxx~~ less than a mile away there were three smaller ones ahead that could be plainly seen in the gathering twilight. Then too, the German steamship Brazilia of the Hamburg-America line, in yesterday from Hamburg, had on her log an account of meeting a big one at nearly the same time, although 150 miles further to the eastward.

"I was standing on the bridge at half past five," said First Officer Spencer yesterday, "when I saw three meteors ahead, about three miles away, flash as they fell, although it was before sundown. The sky was clouded and I had hardly noticed the fall of the meteors when the chief engineer cried out from below on deck, 'Look at that!'"

"There, off to the south on our port beam, was a ~~big~~ big meteor falling plainly less than a mile away. It appeared to be saucer shaped and showed like a ~~xxxxxxx~~ white-hot coal fully 15' in diameter. Behind it streamed a shower of reddish fire fully a mile long. While we were looking the meteor zigzagged, I suppose on account of its shape, and plunged into the sea. Up rose clouds of steam and the sea boiled for a space fully five or six hundred feet in diameter for several minutes.

"While the flights lasted only a few seconds, it seemed an hour, we saw it so plainly, and had it struck our ship it would have melted its way down through the steel hull and sent us without a moment's warning to the bottom. Since I have thought of it I believe that the phenomenon may explain the loss of ships never accounted for. It is not impossible for a ship to be caught in such a meteoric shower, which would mean instant destruction.

"I have seen many meteoric showers at night in many seas, but never saw a meteor so close at hand. I have no doubt that had it been dark at the time we would have seen a grand display, as we probably passed through a big fall of the star dust or whatever the flaming particles may be."

Capt. Russ of the Brazilia, at 7:30 the same night saw a monster meteor, which appeared to drop into the sea.

1908 May 16. Cosmos (Paris) n.s. v. 58, p. 535.

(card 1)

CORRESPONDANCE. 7 A meteorological phenomenon.

I believe it will interest the readers of Cosmos to give them an account of a phenomenon of which I was witness on May 1, between the hours of 8 and 9 in the evening.

I was seated in front of my house, at Vittel, with my family, profiting after dinner by the first pleasant evening of this spring.

We took pleasure in looking at the stars light up in the sky one after another (the Viviani quick [lighting] has not yet been adopted by the Eternal Father), when we noted, in the direction west-northwest, a star of the first magnitude surrounded by a whitish irradiation (halo) as if the planet (I suppose that it was a planet, but I am not enough of an astronomer to be able to affirm) had been masked by a light gauze which diffused the light.

This nebulous halo, of regular shape all around the planet, occupied less space than the moon when full.

At first we did not attach great importance to it, for two reasons: Initially, since the obscurity was not yet complete, this white halo was less visible, and afterwards, since some light clouds were noticed on this side of the sky after sunset, we were able to believe that this phenomenon, peculiar to this planet, was due to a remnant of these very thin clouds.

But later, the night being darker, all the vapors of the sky were completely dispersed, all the stars bright in great number as usual, we were well-nigh forced to admit that this planet showed something abnormal.

Remaining alone in my walk in my garden, I continued to examine from time to time the phenomenon I had before my eyes.

After around a quarter hour, that is a little before 9 o'clock, I believed I noticed that the shape of the halo which surrounded the planet was no longer uniform, and that the lower part was notched, or rather was cut by a line (secant).

My attention redoubled, as you might imagine, and I was quite able to follow the crossing movement in the segment [in the halo], up to the moment when it showed an exact semi-circle; which is to say that, on one side of the planet, the sky was absolutely clear, clean of all vapors, and on the other it was white on a uniform semi-circular expanse, the white tint diminishing in intensity by reason of the distance of the shape from the center of the planet [?].

At this time, since all this especially intrigued me, I did not take my eyes off it; also, I was able to glimpse very distinctly the still-gauzy segment, cut in two by a black band in the shape of a secant; this black band was readily visible, and it was seen by my brother-in-law, at this time at his window.

This black band moved obliquely, in the direction north-south toward the zenith, and at the same time there disappeared gradually, but rather quickly, the halo which still remained on one side of the planet, which resumed at once the brilliant and clear appearance of the other stars.

I would be happy if the insertion of this note provokes an explanation from a reader of Cosmos for this bizarre phenomenon. / V. MOITTESSIER.

We believe that the planet Venus was involved and that the observed appearances were produced by the state of the atmosphere. / R. 1910 January 21 (Fri.) Arkansas Gazette (Little Rock), p. 1.

Mysterious Airship Passes Over Memphis / Darts Across the River, and Is Lost in Arkansas Air—Prominent People See Mysterious Stranger. / Special to the Gazette.

Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 20.—An airship passed over Memphis at 8 o'clock this morning flying east to west by south. It was seen by Joseph Graham Jr. of the county register's office, Thomas Jay Boyle, a prominent attorney, Mrs. Virginia Frazar Boyle, the noted southern poet and writer, and others living in the eastern part of the city.

The machine was very high in the air and seemed traveling at a high rate of speed. Just after crossing the Mississippi river in Arkansas air it veered slightly to the south and was soon lost.

The airship was, it is estimated, going faster than any railroad train ever traveled.

It is believed by many that it was the Tillinghast machine, which was seen around Boston and cities in Maine several weeks ago. 1912 April. Observatory, no. 447 (v. 35), p. 168.

This fine fireball must have caused consternation among the ignorant fellahs; but in England we know all about such things—witness the following account of a large triple-headed fireball, visible on March 6 at 8h 5m, which passed over Ireland, ending in the Irish Sea near the Isle of Man. I am indebted to Mr. Denning for the following newspaper extract:—

Excitement was caused among residents of Warrlev on Wednesday evening at the imposing spectacle of a splendidly-illuminated aeroplane passing over the village. The machine was apparently travelling at a tremendous rate, and came from the direction of Bath and went on towards Gloucester.

Tremendous indeed! But we are prepared for anything now-a-days. 1912, January. A.M. Savage-London, Across Unknown South America (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1913), 336-7.

[On Jan. 3 the author visited Porto Principal, Peru, along the Yanna Yakka River.]

I heard at that place an extraordinary account of how a dirigible balloon, with nobody on board, had some few years before passed over the house. The balloon—which my informant, in his ignorant language, called a "huge square globe"—flew, according to him, a flag, the stars and stripes, and had an anchor dangling down. The balloon was travelling in a westerly direction. It flew a little higher than the trees, and caused a great scare among the natives. My informant told me that there was no one in the car at all, but they waved their hands at him (sic) when they passed over his house! He then told me that the air-ship had passed in the daytime and had quickly disappeared, but that it was beautifully lighted with coloured lights at night. So that it would be difficult from that truthful account to place much reliance on what the man said or on what he had seen at all. It is quite possible—after discarding all the indisputable embroidery from the story—that a balloon actually went over that place, and it possibly may have been Wellman's abandoned balloon, with which he had tried to go across the Atlantic. [Wellman—Oct. 1910]

1925 December 16 (Wed. eve.) Minneapolis Journal, p. 2.

PHANTOM SKY LIGHT Baffles CANADIANS / Expedition Fails to Solve Mystery of 14 Year Old Heavenly Phenomenon

Beechy, Sask., Dec. 16.—For many years the residents of the Buffalo basin district have been mystified by a phantom play of lights whose origin they are unable to solve.

Resembling the sweeping beam of a searchlight or the glare of the headlights of an automobile, the strange illumination for the past 14 years has baffled the neighborhood and defied explanation.

Like previous attempts to discover the source of the phenomenon, the latest expedition has been one of complete failure. A party, determined to get at the root of the mystery, recently launched into the affected area. Observers were stationed at various points and each person kept a close lookout.

Descending apparently from the southern sky, the light was seen faintly at first, but gradually increased in volume. For several minutes the beam held its brilliance, then it faded into a dull glow, only to repeat its vagaries much akin to the throbbing of a lighthouse signal. The party was obliged to abandon its mission none the wiser.

Many theories have been advanced for the existence of this mysterious light, but all have been rejected as unsound. There is no house within a mile of the place, which is located in a wild, uncultivated stretch of slough and hills. Visitors have suggested that the phenomenon might be caused by the reflection from burning straw sticks, but this finds no support among the residents of Buffalo Basin, who point out that the light has been observed in winter and summer alike.

In the meantime the phantom lights continue to inspire terror and superstition in the hearts of those who live in this vicinity and have seen the display for 14 years without solving the origin.

1926 (?) August 5. Nicholas Roerich, Altai Himalaya (New York: Frederick A. Stokes Co., 1929), 361-2.

On August fifth--something remarkable! We were in our camp in the Kukonor district not far from the Humboldt Chain. In the morning about half past nine some of our caravaneers noticed a remarkably big black eagle flying above us. Seven of us began to watch this unusual bird. At this same moment another of the caravaneers remarked, "There is something far above the bird." And he shouted in his astonishment. We all saw, in a direction from the north to south, something big and shiny reflecting the sun, like a huge oval moving at great speed. Crossing our camp this thing changed in its direction from south to southeast. And we saw how it disappeared in the intense blue sky. We even had time to take our field glasses and saw quite distinctly an oval form with a shiny surface, one side of which was brilliant from the sun.

Roerich, The Heart of Asia (NY: Roerich Museum Press, 1930), pp. 149-50.

A sunny, unclouded morning--the blue sky is brilliant. Over our camp flies a huge, dark vulture. Our Mongols and we watch it. Suddenly one of the Buriat lamas points into the blue sky:

"What is that? A white balloon? An aeroplane?"

We notice something shiny, flying very high, from the northeast to the south. We bring three powerful field glasses from the tents and watch the huge spheroid body shining against the sun, clearly visible against the blue sky and moving very fast. Afterwards we see that it sharply changes its direction from south to southwest and disappears behind the snow-peaked Humboldt chain. The whole camp follows the unusual apparition and the lamas whisper:

"The Sign of Shambhala!"

1929 April 15 (Mon) New York Times, p. 27(6).

'FLAMING PLANE' DOUBTED. / Meteor Is Believed to Have Been Seen Plunging Into Lake Erie.

ERIE, Pa., April 14 (AP).--Reports that a flaming airplane had fallen into Lake Erie near here, late last night, received no credence from officials today following an investigation. A thorough search failed to reveal any trace of the plane.

Three persons reported seeing a flaming craft hurtle out of the sky last night, but the opinion was expressed today that what they saw was probably a falling star or meteor.

A Cleveland-Buffalo Air Mail plane was due over the Erie region about the time the ship was reported to have fallen, but inquiry disclosed that it had arrived at Buffalo.

1937 February 5 (Fri) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 16.

Ghost flier seen again in Stensele. / Lamps and searchlight observed by three persons. / (From our correspondent.)

UMEA, Thursday. Four persons in Långvattnet, Stensele parish, state that on Tuesday evening they observed an airplane which flew toward Dikanas. The observation was made between 7 and 8 o'clock and the machine went away in a direction toward the Norwegian mountains.

The observations were made at the same time by three persons, merchant Ernst Stenman, [] Stenkvist, and butcher Oskar Holmberg who were together at the time. Their attention was called to it by motor noise, which seemed to come down from an airplane, while at the same time they saw lights in the sky which they believed to be lamps on an airplane. Later they also could see that a searchlight, directed down toward the ground, was carried by the machine. One of the witnesses said in an interview that he is as certain that he saw an airplane as he was that he was in Långvattnet at the time. He was able to see the light for a very long time, nearly a half hour, before it [went] away in the distance.

Two Swedish sport fliers, Edholm and Rosberg, who in daylight fly from Åre over Strömsund and Sorsele to Arvidsjaur, declared that at no time were they out after darkness fell. They do not have the right equipment to risk such an undertaking. From the commandant's staff in Boden comes the information that so far as it is known there, no Swedish machine was over Stensele on Tuesday.

1937 February 9 (Tues) Svenska Dagbladet, p. 13.

Ghost flier seen from Norwegian lighthouse. / Unknown hydroplane goes down at Folla: lights searchlight.

OSLO, Monday. (TT) From Trondheim it is reported to the Aftenposten that at 21.30 o'clock Wednesday evening an airplane went down at sea three or four quarter-miles west of Kråka lighthouse at Folla. Both the lighthouse keeper and his assistant saw plainly that it was an airplane. They saw first a faint white light, somewhat later a red and a white (hour?) later another red one. When the plane took [to the] water, it lighted a powerful white light, apparently a searchlight. Afterwards the light disappeared. The matter was reported to police and military authorities. The lighthouse personnel cannot state an opinion on the plane's nationality.

1937 July 16 (Fri) Daily Telegraph (London), p. 6.

MYSTERY 'PLANE OVER AIRPORT' / AIR MINISTRY INQUIRY

A full inquiry, now being held by the Air Ministry, has not yet established the identity of the 'plane which manoeuvred at a low altitude over Hendon Aerodrome on Tuesday night and disappeared.

"The machine seen on Tuesday night may turn out to be a Service machine, as there were a number in the air at that time," an Air Ministry official said to a representative of The Daily Telegraph yesterday.

The authorities are anxious to receive an explanation of the strange behaviour of the machine. It appeared over Hendon Aerodrome at about 11:30 p.m., and circled round as if intending to land.

No intimation had been given that a machine was to land, but the ground staff, called from their beds, turned on the night-landing flares. The machine continued to circle for half an hour, descending as low as 200 ft. Then it began to "stunt," and finally disappeared.

An explanation suggested in Air Force circles is that an R.A.F. pilot was preparing to land at Hendon owing to engine trouble, when at the last moment the defect righted itself and he was able to proceed.

1937 July 17 (Sat.) Daily Telegraph (London), p. 14.

THE MYSTERY 'PLANE' / NEW VISIT THIS MORNING

The mystery 'plane which has been seen over London on several occasions again appeared over Central London early this morning.

Flying low, and with two brilliant navigation lights, it approached from the City, passed over Oxford-street, and made a wide sweep around the West End. Then it went away over Westminster.

Previously it had passed over the Air Ministry, where efforts are being made to discover its identity.

Mr. Richard Acland, M.P. for Barnstaple, is to ask a question in Parliament next week about the occurrence.

In official circles it is regarded as highly improbable that the 'plane is a foreign one as has been suggested.

The machine has for several nights past been seen over West and North-West London. Kensington, Hammersmith and St. John's Wood are among the districts from which it has been reported, as well as the R.A.F. aerodrome at Hendon.

Mon. July 19, p. 9. SHADOW ON CLOUDS

Can any of your readers explain the solar phenomenon which we saw here last Wednesday night at about 8.40 p.m.? The sun was just setting and to the west of it there appeared on the clouds a huge shadow of some mighty church tower. This shadow could not have been a straightforward one of Grantham church, as both the sun and the shadow were on one side of us and the church on the other side. Could it have been a shadow caused by reflected light from behind the steeple? We can think of no other explanation.--PAUL GARRARD, King's School, Grantham.

1937 July 19 (Mon) Daily Telegraph (London), p. 12.

NIGHT FLYING OVER CITIES / MINISTRY REQUEST TO PILOTS / "AVOID DISTURBING COMMUNITY"

The Air Ministry has issued the following notice:

Pilots are requested to refrain, as far as possible, from flying over cities and towns late at night and in the early hours of the morning. When compelled to do so, they are asked to maintain such an altitude as will avoid causing disturbance to the community.

In reply to a question in the House of Commons at the beginning of this month Col. Muirhead, Under Secretary for Air, stated that he had no legal power to prohibit civil aeroplanes from flying over cities after 10 p.m.

He was arranging, he added, for the attention of civil pilots to be drawn to the undesirability of unnecessary night flying.

The Admiralty and Air Ministry yesterday had no information concerning reports that an officer on leave was the mystery flyer who has been flying low over London at night.

An official said that no action had been taken by the Air Ministry 1937 July 20 (Tues) Daily Telegraph (London), p. 16.

MYSTERY NIGHT FLIER / AN "ABSURD" REPORT

The Air Ministry is continuing its inquiries in an effort to establish the identity of the airman who, in a night flight over the London area last week, "stunted" for a short while over Hendon aerodrome.

Contrary to reports (not published in The Daily Telegraph), this was the only recent "mystery flight" over London. Since then, so far as is known officially, no aircraft, either civil or Service, have been up on other than normal flights.

In Service circles it is thought possible that a flier, who may have been a member of the R.A.F., decided to "stunt" over Hendon because he had friends at the aerodrome there. A suggestion that the flight was carried out by an R.A.F. officer to expose the deficiencies of London's air defences is described as absurd.

July 19 (Mon) p. 10. AIRMEN OVER LONDON / No Police Control To the Editor of "The Daily Telegraph"

Sir--The repeated appearance of unidentified aircraft over London late at night focuses attention on the fact that Britain, unlike most of the Great Powers, has no aerial police.

It appears that the machines in question were breaking no regulations, and the possibility of their being of foreign origin is remote. Indeed it has been suggested that a Service officer on leave was the pilot most recently concerned. But the unpleasant fact remains that, whatever the nationality of a machine and whatever the regulations, it would still remain "unidentified."

There is nothing to prevent a machine flying low over a city in the dark to the great danger and discomfort of the would-be sleeping populace, and getting away unpunished. In daytime, of course, identification would be easy, but at night, under present conditions, it is impossible.

In Germany, Austria, France, Czechoslovakia and many other countries the police have a special branch with the ground organisation and machines necessary to keep them "au fait" with everything that goes on in the air. Such a force could, in a case of emergency, render great service to national security. At all times it could cooperate with the land police for speedy and efficient combating of crime.--Yours, &c., / W. L. HEReward. / London, W. 11, July 17.

1937 July 23 (Sat) Daily Telegraph (London), p. 16.

UNKNOWN 'PLANE OVER ATLANTIC / BRITISH SHIP'S REPORT / From Our Own Correspondent / NEW YORK, Thursday.

United States aviation officials are completely mystified by a report that the crew of the 4,553-ton British steamship Coryton, 500 miles from the coast of Newfoundland, saw an aeroplane pass overhead at 2 a.m. to-day and disappear in the direction of Europe.

A radio message from the ship stated that the aeroplane's navigation lights could clearly be seen, although the master was unable to determine the type and size of the machine.

All United States pilots who might secretly have started off on such a flight, including Dick Merrill, Jimmy Mattern and Howard Hughes were traced today.

Two theories are advanced here. Either someone is making a lone bid for the long-distance record or else the occupant of the unidentified 'plane is determined to commit suicide.

Nothing apparently is known at any United States or Canadian airport of the departure of any 'plane capable of reaching the other side of the Atlantic.

Sat. July 24, p. 11. 10,000 CLIMB TO SEE "VISION" / GIRLS' STORY OF MIRACLE / From Our Own Correspondent / BELLINO, Italy, Friday.

More than 10,000 people climbed up a mountain road at Voltago today in the hope of seeing a vision of the Virgin with the Child Jesus. Five girls had asserted that they had seen the apparition several times a day since July 5, while they were tending their flocks.

So great have been the crowds that three lives have been lost on the roads. There are so many cars and motor-cycles that accidents are frequent.

The visions generally occur in the early afternoon. Crowds have waited for hours near the spot in the hope of seeing the apparition, but so far no one except the girls have claimed to have seen it.

Fri. Aug. 13, p. 11. WRECK OF 'PLANE OFF NEWFOUNDLAND / MYSTERY FLIGHT REPORT

ST. JOHN'S, Newfoundland, Thursday.

A schooner which has just put in here reports having sighted an aeroplane floating bottom upwards off St. Francis Cape, Newfoundland.

No aeroplanes have been reported missing in this area, but a British ship reported on July 21 a mysterious aeroplane, which was never accounted for, flying eastwards across the Atlantic.

Nothing has since been heard of this machine.--Reuter.

1943 October 14. Martin Cadin, Black Thursday (New York: E.P. Dutton Co., 1960), 211 212.

(card 1)

[During the Allied bombing raid on Schweinfurt on this night. UFOs were sighted].

During the bomb run of several groups, starting at about the time the Fortresses approached the Initial Point, there occurred one of the most baffling incidents of World War II, and an enigma that to this day defies all explanation.

As the bombers of the 384th Group swung into the final bomb run after passing the Initial Point, the fighter attacks fell off. This point is vital, and pilots were queried extensively, as were other crew members, as to the position at that time of the German fighter planes. Every man interrogated was firm in his statement that "at the time there were no enemy aircraft above."

At this moment the pilots and top turret gunners, as well as several crewmen in the plexiglas noses of the bombers, reported a cluster of discs in the path of the 384th's formation and closing with the bombers. The startled exclamations focused attention on the phenomenon, and the crews talked back and forth, discussing and confirming the astonishing sight before them.

The discs in the cluster were agreed upon as being silver colored about one inch thick and three inches in diameter. They were easily seen by the B-17 crewmen, gliding down slowly in a very uniform cluster.

And then the "impossible" happened. B-17 Number 026 closed rapidly with a cluster of discs; the pilot attempted to evade an imminent collision with the objects, but was unsuccessful in his maneuver. He reported at the intelligence debriefing that his "right wing went directly through a cluster with absolutely no effect on engines or plane surface."

The intelligence officers pressed their questioning, and the pilot stated further that one of the discs was heard to strike the tail assembly of his B-17, but that neither he nor any member of the crew heard or witnessed an explosion.

He further explained that about twenty feet from the discs the pilots sighted a mass of black debris of varying sizes in clusters of three by four feet.

The SECRET report added: "Also observed two other A/C flying through silver discs with no apparent damage. Observed discs and debris two other times but could not determine where it came from."

No further information on this baffling incident has been uncovered, with the exception that such discs were observed by pilots and crew members on missions prior to, and after, Mission 115 of October 14, 1943.

Memorandum of October 24, 1943, from Major E.R.T. Holmes, F.L.O. East Bombardment Division, Reference FLO/18W/REP/126, to M.I. 15, War Office, Whitehall, London, S.W. (copy to Colonel E.W. Thomson, A-2, Finestrae).

1946 June 11 (Tues) London Times, p. 3c.

SKY LIT UP IN SOUTH FINLAND / FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT/ HELSINKI, June 10
A powerful light in the sky was observed on Sunday night from several places in south Finland. At Helsinki it lit up the sky for 10 minutes, leaving a trail of smoke. Two minutes after its disappearance a rumbling sound was heard far away. Estimates as to its direction were contradictory. Military eyewitnesses were convinced that the object, whatever it was, was rocket-driven.

1946 August 16 (Fri) Berlingske Tidende, pp. 124 1,2.

Ghost Rocket Over Copenhagen Last Night. / Seen by many witnesses in Hellerup and Charlottenlund / The rocket went northward at a slow speed.

One of the very strange ghost rockets passed over Copenhagen last night, where it was sighted at many places on the city's northern periphery. Statements agree both in regard to time and appearance and in one case [the statement] is made by a Danish military man. There cannot be talk of any fraud.

A cottage dweller in Tuborgvej described for the "Berlingske Tidende" the phenomenon thusly: A rocket, which had the shape of a red fireball, came from the southwest and went in an easterly direction until it reached a point where it looked like it lay over Hellerup. Here it turned and took a course toward the north and disappeared in the direction of Kampenborg. I together with many others witnessed the rocket from 21.45 o'clock, when it came into sight, and I was able to follow it till 22.10 o'clock, when it disappeared. It made no noise, but was lighted with a little flickering gleam. The light height had to be several thousand meters.

A witness in Charlottenlund said that he saw the rocket come from the south with a course northward. The speed was mostly slower than an airplane's, likely about 100 km. He estimated the height at 4-5000 meters. The time was 22.05 o'clock, which agrees entirely with the sightings from Hellerup.

The matter was reported to the Østsjælland Marine district [administration].

1946 August 17 (Sat. Horn) Berlingske Tidende (Copenhagen), p. 1.

Ghost rockets over Sydsjælland and Skaane yesterday.

Aviation expert Capt. John Foltman gives a sensational description of the find which the allies made at the German rocket laboratory. / "Schmetterling," "Wasserfall," "Henschell HS298" and the mysterious "X 4" were the Germans' newest rocket bombs.

Yesterday ghost rockets appeared again over Scandinavia, two of the red-glowing, giant projectiles were, according to what was reported from Køge, observed early Friday morning over Tureby in Køge's southern upland. It came from the south and resembled a glowing giant cigar.

In space xxxxxx flames a score of meters long spread, followed by white smoke. One rocket went rather low, around a kilometer's height, and its northward course could be plainly followed. The rocket was sighted by several persons.

Also over southern Sweden on Friday morning at 6 o'clock several rocket projectiles were observed; they exploded with a sharp crack, then occurred a hailstorm. After the explosion the smell of gunpowder was plainly noticed, it was said in a telegram from Malmö. The explosion was so violent that houses shook and a couple of window panes broke. The projectile was, in the eyewitnesses' judgment, at about 500 meters height when the explosion occurred. After the explosion there formed [something] like a fog, which could still be seen after the hailstorm was over [?].

(A rocket expert discusses German developments during the war.) The red-glowing projectile, which was reported over Scandinavia and which no expert has yet been so lucky as to be eyewitness to, is certainly a xxxxxxxx continuation of war[time] rocket experiments.

1946 August 18 (Sun) Berlingske Tidende (Copenhagen), p. 4.

New Observations of the Ghost Rockets

Last night the ghost rockets popped up again. At 22 o'clock they were seen by diverse witnesses in Copenhagen's nearby neighborhoods moving in a direction from the south toward the north.

Some witnesses in the northwesterly part of Nyxxxxxx the city saw two out over the Sound on a course [from] Gentofte-Charlottenlund. They came in any case within some few minutes' interval and showed themselves as bright points of light. The first was very high up and moved comparatively slowly. The other was located considerably lower and looked as if it moved jerkily, simultaneously with the point of light being followed by a flashing glare.

A company of five persons in Hellerup observed at the same time one of the mysterious rockets. It was sighted for a half-score minutes while it moved in a northerly direction as a very clear and brightly lighted point.

1946 September 19 (Th) Corriere della Sera (Milan), p. 1.

A new ball of fire plies the sky at Imola / Imola 18 Sept., night.

Another phenomenon similar to that recorded the other evening at 22 o'clock in the sky of Modena occurred in our city exactly at 19:34 o'clock. A kind of fiery ball described a short parabola in a north-easterly direction, leaving behind it a luminous trail of fire. Since at that hour there was still [limited] visibility few citizens noticed the phenomenon and for the same reason [] to treat it as one of the usual meteors frequent on summer nights. It is still not possible to establish the nature of this bolide.

Wed. Sept. 25, p. 1. The mysterious ball of fire was an astronomical phenomenon. / Rome, 24 September, night.

The luminous bodies appearing recently in the skies of Italy are astronomical phenomena which generally occur at intervals of 30 years, states meteorology professor Filippo Eredie. It seems to be a veritable rain of bolides, which probably comes from the comet of Tuttle which appeared in [1862]. The incandescence is produced by a collection of microscopic particles which detach from the central nucleus; in the early hours of morning meteors are most readily visible.