Cow's death investigated

NORTH POWDER — Oregon State Police are investigating the death and mutilation of a young cow that a trooper said is reminiscent of the mysterious "cattle mutilations" of the late 1970s.

The animal's carcass was found Saturday about 2½ miles west of Interstate 84, police said. Its sexual organs had been removed and its tail cut off.

The cattle killings of the 1970s, which occurred over much of the West and often were accompanied by the surgically precise removal of eyes and sexual organs, were attributed to everything from cult groups to outer space visitors. Some law enforcement agency insisted most of the animals had been killed by predators and the deaths were not unusual.
