LET US HOPE that we soon obtain more details of the alleged sighting of a spaceship, or, at least, lights that could have been interpreted as one, by a Japan Air Lines pilot on a flight over Alaska. The pilot has seen the things on two separate occasions, and I read that radar on the ground had tracked an object and that it had followed the airliner for distances variously reported as 300 and 500 miles.

I bring up the subject because all too often nothing more is heard of such incidents in the newspapers, and you have to search through specialist publications to find out the mundane truth months or years later, if at all. □
