

Scot foiled space grab

THE most famous sighting in Scotland happened in 1979 when forestry worker Bob Taylor told how he was almost dragged into a space machine.

He claimed to have seen two objects with protruding spikes rapidly approach him at Dechmont, near Livingston, West Lothian, and try to take him aboard their craft.

He fell unconscious and when he awoke his trousers were torn and his legs scratched and badly bruised.

His story was thoroughly researched by members of the UFO Investigation Society who declared: "There is no way that Mr Taylor was lying. It was NOT a hoax."

The Ministry of Defence, however, are not convinced. They have a department who log the sightings.

Another West Lothian happening took place two years ago when a police sergeant with 19 years on the force reported seeing a red-orange object falling from the sky.

Sergeant Jimmy Begg is convinced that he saw a UFO.
