Millom

EIGHT-year-old Jamie Harris, of Pannet Hill, Millom, was travelling with his mother to a music class on Thursday the week before last when he saw an orange object moving in the sky.

Jamie said it was 6.45 pm when he spotted the object which was moving very slowly and heading out to sea.

There was no outline on it, it was close to the moon, and not very big, and took a long time to go out of sight.

At first he thought it may have been an aeroplane but then thought aeroplanes do not have orange lights. He told his mum about it but at the time she was driving and did not give it much heed.

Later on after a discussion with his mother, Jamie decided to write to the Evening Mail as he thought they might find it very interesting.
