Flying Saucer drops into a Russian park

By NICHOLAS DAVIES, Foreign Editor

ALIENS have landed their spaceship in a Soviet park, the Russians announced yesterday.

They were up to 12 feet tall and had little heads. They went for a short walk, but didn't stay long.

The three strangers had a small robot-like creature with them.

This has led to speculation in the West that an extra-terrestrial dog may have had an urgent need to find a tree.

The story comes from the distinguished Soviet news agency Tass, reporting from the city of Voronezh.

"Scientists have confirmed that an unidentified flying object landed in a park," Tass disclosed.

"They have identified the site and found traces of aliens who made a short promenade around the park." The visitors arrived and left in a large, shining ball or disc which hovered over the park.

Onlookers, said Tass, were overwhelmed by fear that gripped them for days.

Experts at the scene found a 60-foot depression in the grass, four deep dents and two bits of unidentified rock.

Excitement

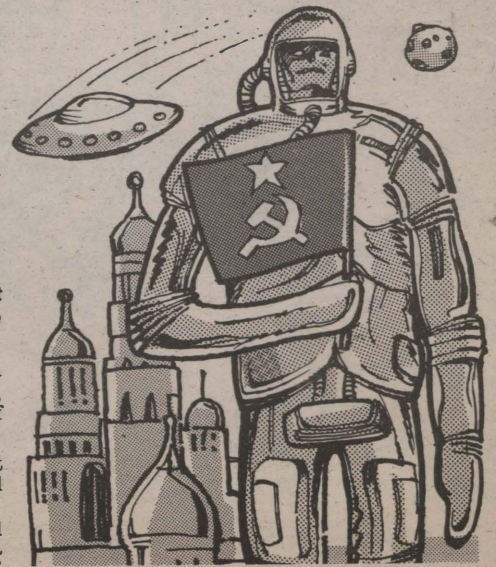

They apparently proved the story was true by a method of tracking which they called "biolocation".

But Tass did not explain what on earth "biolocation" means.

Residents of Voronezh also reported recent sightings of a banana-shaped object.

The arrival of the lanky pea-heads has caused almost as much excitement as a previous story concerning a milkmaid and an alien in Perm, Central Russia.

She swore that she met a man who was taller than average, with short legs and only a small knob instead of a head.

RED ALERT: He came from outer space..
