

Peter O'Toole looking every inch a winner yesterday produced by Sherrin at the Theatre Royal, Bath.

They were invited by West

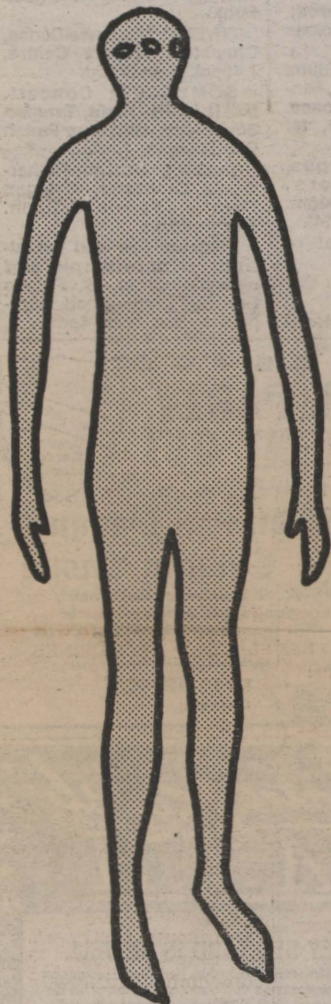

more interested in talking about racing than acting.

"I don't go to the races as often as I would like but I go when I can," he said.

Ned Sher... near Castle...
nothing abou...
Brady and Bi...

Russian's close encounter — with the beings from the Red Planet

Beam me up comrade

THEY came from Planet Red Star. But when a Soviet reporter asked the aliens to take him home with them, the answer was negative.

"There would be no return for you and it would be dangerous for us. You would bring thought bacteria," reporter Pavel Mukhortov says the glowing creatures told him during their encounter in the Ural mountains.

Mukhortov's report on what he called the first encounter between Earthlings and aliens was published in Komsomolskaya Pravda.

It was the latest in a series of fantastic accounts in the official Soviet media of three-eyed aliens armed with ray guns, a dancing robot, and other spacemen.

Mukhortov said he met the creatures near Perm on the night of July 30. They were about six to 13 feet tall and glowed.

They chatted from a distance of 1,000 feet.

Or not exactly chatted. Mukhortov said he simply thought his questions to the aliens, and the answers appeared before him in the form of illuminated letters.

Komsomolskaya Pravda did not say in which language they communicated, but said the exchange went:

Mukhortov: "Where are you from?"

Aliens: "The constellation Libra, Red Star — our homeland."

"Your goal?"

"It depends on the centre. We are directed by a central system."

"Can you take me to your planet?"

"There would be no return for you and it would be dangerous for us."

"Why would it be dangerous?"

"You would bring thought bacteria."

The newspaper gave no indication that the story might not be true other than to say it was possible Mukhortov really saw two other people who were in the area at the time.

The incident happened in an area where strange things have been noted since 1983, including floating orange globes and warm spots of ground.

Komsomolskaya Pravda also reported other sightings of unidentified flying objects near Perm, an industrial city notorious for a labour camp located there.

It said that on July 16, workers at a collective farm saw a group of huge black headless people, moving as if on motor-bikes.

And children in a summer camp near the Kama River north of Perm reported seeing humanoids with shining eyes in mid-July, Komsomolskaya Pravda said. When a boy threw rocks at them, an alien fired a shot.

Or is it just a Soviet tall story?

BT making

light

w

S