August 7, 2007: Carnival revelers met, mingled, ate and drank to their hearts desire on Sandy Ground, while the boats battled it out on the seas. August Monday's all day party after J'ouvert saw hundreds lining the Sandy Ground beach from end to end. As evening drew near they all gathered to see, the Miss Anguilla outflank the other boats coming in first through the flags, followed closely by the UFO in second, the Real Deal a more distant third and the Light & Peace 4th. The atmosphere was festive and the young and old were out to enjoy it. The diversified nature of Anguilla's current society was on display as even the infamous "Carillion Indians" were seen dancing to the calypso beat in the sand.

Throughout the day law enforcement maintained tight security with the presence of both local police and neighbouring security agents. Anguilla's Commissioner of Police was seen at several locations, leading from the front in ensuring the population could enjoy themselves in a crime free environment. In speaking with Commissioner Benjamin late in the afternoon, he indicated that there had been no significant incidents during the August Monday J'ouvert and beach bash to that point.

By 7:00pm the boats were in and the Caribbean beach party was about to get started.
