

Convincing

I switched on at lunch time to see what the folk who go out to work miss when housewives are relaxing after lunch.

Yesterday they missed a programme that could have held its own any time in the peak-hour period.

"Let's Imagine" dealt with flying saucers as convincingly as Panorama might if it were allowed to.

The evidence was marshalled convincingly by Erskine Childers. It convinced me.

And I found it impossible to share the scepticism of even such a distinguished critic as Marghanita Laski.
