

U.S. jets chase a mystery 'dragon'

TWO American Air Force jets chased a mystery dragon-shaped object across the sky last night—but it got away before it could be identified.

The jets were sent up from Ramstein air base in West Germany after hundreds of people had phoned police and observatories to say they had seen it.

The object was said to be forty yards wide, flying at 75,000ft. and giving off a brilliant silvery glare.

One private astronomer reported that it hung for several hours in one position, and changed shape periodically.
