and Halland, saw a bright light in the north-east.

"I thought it was a star at first, but it was much too bright," he said. "I stopped the bike and watched it. As I studied it closer, I saw it was like a cross.

"It seemed to be hovering. I lined it up with a telegraph pole, and then I could see it was slowly moving back and forth."

PC Cawthorne radioed his headquarters at Lewes, and other officers also reported seeing the object.

A police spokesman at Lewes said: "One officer said he thought the object was Venus, which is very bright at this time of the year. We reported the sighting to the authorities at Hurstmonceaux Observaory."
