blankets with us, but gave our boat, and all the clothes we could spare to the Islanders. The "Northfleet" on her way to Aden sprang a leak, and in bad weather we were obliged to use the pumps frequently. We arrived (805) at Aden in about 6 weeks, and here I shipped in the English steamer "Minnie Thomas", and went to Bombay, returning to Trieste and Havre. At Havre I was discharged and rejoined Frederic at Auxum. He was unable to return to his old position as clerk in a merchant's office and I was anxious to go to sea again. I had learnt at Tristan d'Acunha that 1700 seals had been captured in the season of 1869 at the neighbouring Island -- Nightingale, and eventually we both decided to pay a visit to Tristan d'Acunha, and try our fortunes as seal hunters.

Frederic Stoltenhoff (the elder)

Born at Moscow of German parents, cloth dyers by trade, in 1846. At the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war I was employed as a clerk in a Merchant's office at Aix-la-Chapelle. I was called on by the government to serve with the German army, being attached to the 15th division of the Second Army, in which I reached the position of Second Lieutenant. At this time my compulsory service was complete, and I formed one of the Reserve. After taking part in the siege of Metz and Thionville, the battalion I served in was detached south to join the army of General Werder. At the close of the campaign I was discharged and returned home (807) where I found my younger brother Gustav just returned from Tristan d'Acunha, Bombay, etc. His account of the life at Tristan and his desire to return thither, led me to join him in a visit to the island -- not with a view to settling there altogether, but to endeavour to make a sum by seal hunting and barter. With this view -- after making preparations, we left Southampton for St. Helena, in the English steamer "Wortham" in August 1871, and were landed there the following month.

On the 6th Nov. we left in the American whaler "Java", Captain Mander, hailing from New Bedford, bound on a cruise in the South Atlantic. We shipped as passengers, and were to have been landed at Tristan d'Acunha. During the passage across, the Captain's account (808) of the settlers at the island, and the probable reception we should meet with from them, was in direct opposition to my brother's description of the place and people, after a stay of 18 days only. Captain Manders described "Inaccessible Island" as a fertile place, with a valley running up from the beach on the west side, and that the island itself, and the neighbouring one, "Nightingale" were the seats of a seal and sea elephant fishery. His knowledge was derived, so he said, from several visits to Inaccessible Island, where he had landed and seen both pigs and goats. Eventually my brother and I decided to try our fortunes there and we were landed by the whalers' boats on the 27th November 1871. We had with us a whaleboat (old) bought at St. Helena, (809) with mast, sail, and oars; 200 lbs rice, 200 lbs flour, 100 lbs biscuit, 20 lbs coffee, 10 lbs tea, 30 lbs sugar, 1 barrel salt, 30 lbs block salt, and a small quantity of pepper. Also 8 lbs tobacco, 14 empty barrels for oil, 5 bottles of Hollands, 6 bottles of Cape wine, 6 bottles vinegar, and some epsom salts, the only medicine. We each had our blankets, some shoes, and boots, and our ordinary clothing. The Captain of the whaler sold us a lantern and some oil. We also had 6 dozen of Bryant and May's safety matches, a wheelbarrow, 2 spades and a shovel, 2 pick axes, kettle, frying pan, and cooking utensils. We also had a short Enfield muzzle loading rifle and an old German fowling piece -- 2 1/2 lbs powder, and to this the mate of the whaler (810) added 1 lb of blasting powder, 200 bullets, and lead for 100 more. Four sheath knives, a saw, nails, hammer, 3 chisels, some twine, 3 gimlets, a door, 3 spars for a roof, and a glazed sash for a window, and two iron buckets. Our clothes were in a chest, and we brought covers, which were easily filled with bird feathers and made good beds. On November 27, 1871 we came ashore on the west side of the island, the whaler leaving us in a quarter of an hour's time after giving us a few potatoes for seed. We had brought seeds of nearly all the common garden vegetables and also a bitch and 3 pups.

My brother at once started in search of goats or pigs, climbing by the aid of the tripack grass, the side of the cliff to the top of the island. He was too tired to return at night, and failed to (811) shoot any game. The next day he rejoined me, and we built a hut for shelter. After a day's rest we both went after game and shot a pig and sow, but failed to get near any goats. Four days after landing we received a visit from 16 men from Tristan d'Acunha, in two boats, which island was cleared of men, with the exception of two. The sealing season had arrived, and this was their yearly visit, hastened after learning from the Captain of the "Java" that we had landed, and were in possession of four boxes and letters from St. Helena for the Islanders from their relatives there. The "Java" during the night had been becalmed off the island, and a boat had come out to her. The two boats landed at the north side of the island and 3 men came round in a boat to meet us. Their stay extended about an (812) hour, and during this time, they behaved well to us, and offered assistance, teaching us how to build huts from the tripack grass. The next morning we received a visit from a dozen of them who had been in search of goats and had crossed the island by land. These men helped us to build a small hut; they also advised us to shift our position to the north side of the island. Bad weather prevented any further intercourse for two days, after which we crossed the hills to the north side, and were shown the cliff by one of the men. Up to this time the Tristan people thought that we were going to return to their island with them and showed good feeling to us. Their boats removed our goats, etc. to the north side of the island, and we lived with them for two days, during their ten days stay. (813) Being anxious to obtain a cow, a heifer and young bull, I made arrangements with Glass, if possible, to bring them over, and this he agreed to do about Christmas. After staying ten days, the Islanders returned to Tristan, having procured one seal only.

In December 1871 we built a house, cleared some ground, planted our seeds and potatoes, and made preparations for staying some time on the island. It was summer with fine weather as a rule, a splendid supply of water fell down from the mountains within 100 yards of our hut, and firewood was easily procured. The seals were landing in different spots, it being the pupping season and we procured 19 skins which were afterwards sold, and we were able to make any quantity of oil. Three sea elephants were on shore on the (814) north side of the island when the Tristan men were here, but they were not captured. The middle of January saw the end of the sealing season. Only a few ships passed within sight of our island. In April the tripack grass by which we ascended the cliff accidentally caught fire, and our means of ascending the cliffs to procure game was thus cut off. Winter approaching it became imperative to begin laying in provisions. With this in view we cut our whale boat, which had been damaged, in halves, and discarding the worst portion succeeded in making a smaller boat, which would float in fine weather. We also visited the west side of the island, and after climbing the plateau succeeded in shooting two goats which were salted down. A fat pig also furnished us (815) with a bucket of fat for frying potatoes, the carcase being too heavy for our boat to bring away. We counted 23 goats in 1871, chiefly rams; of these three were shot by the Tristan people and six by us -- fourteen remaining during the winter. The number of wild pigs was great, the boars, although of different sizes, stood in some cases as high as a large sheep and had large tusks. Their food, other than roots and grass, is furnished in endless quantity by the birds and their eggs, of which an immense number are consumed by them. The flesh of the boar is rank and impalatable -- that of the sows wholesome and good. On May 14th 1872, an English ship came in sight and we lighted a fire and attracted the attention of her crew. It was too rough for us to go off, or them to land, and to our regret (816) and disappointment the vessel made sail again. At Tristan, her master reported that he had seen two people, and a black boat on the beach, but that no one came off. Had we been able to communicate with this vessel, it was not our intention to leave the island. The winter set in in June, but was not very severe, although we experienced a lot of wind, and heavy gales, generally from the N.W. It never froze on the level of the sea. During a strong gale from the S.E. our boat was broken up. In May, our first and only crop of potatoes obtained that year, was dug and during the following months some of the other vegetables were fit for food. By the loss of our boat we were unable to reach the plateau, and our stock of provisions was soon reduced, although husbanded with care, and were obliged (817) to put ourselves on the shortest possible allowance, so that by the end of August we were little better than skeletons. About the end of July some penguins forming part of a rookery landed, and in the middle of August, the females came ashore, and a fortnight later laid their eggs on the nests already made by their lords, and we were only too glad to avail ourselves of this supply of food. The day before they had laid their eggs we had used the last of our potatoes, and were without any supply of food whatever. The only other birds within our reach were the night birds, a few thrushes and canaries. Of these the thrushes were only fit for food. In September 1872, we were glad enough to sight a French barque which hove to off the island, and whose (818) Captain landed after seeing our signals. We shipped in her our 19 seal skins, and in return for a lot of eggs, gave us about 60 pounds biscuit and a couple of pounds of tobacco. Fearing the weather the Captain of this vessel did not land again. The barque was bound for the East Indies, and had she arrived a fortnight sooner, we should certainly have been most glad to quit our habitation. During the next month our food consisted of eggs and the biscuit procured from the French barque. In October 1873, a fore and aft schooner was seen standing in towards the island. She proved to the "Themis", making sealing voyages amongst the islands of the South Atlantic, from the Cape of Good Hope. A gale of wind drove her to sea again for two days, when she returned (819) and communicated landing six men and boys, and a boat from Tristan d'Acunha. The Captain landed with them, and was kind enough to offer me some biscuit and pork, which I was glad enough to accept. The schooner sailed the same day. Both of us were anxious to take passage, and intended to have done so on her return in a few weeks time, when her Captain stated he should revisit the Island. The interval was to have been spent in trapping seal, the season for which had commenced. Although civil in making us a present of pork and biscuit, to which was added two pounds of tobacco, the Captain declined to barter except for seal skins, and of these we had none. The men of Tristan had come over to see what we were (820) doing they said, but they had not availed of the opportunity by the schooner, of sending the cattle promised, and they excused themselves in different ways for not having brought them in their own boats.

Several small articles were appropriated by the visitors during their stay of half a day, when they returned to the schooner and left the island, promising another visit in a fortnight. During the succeeding few days we worked hard to collect seals, with which to pay our passage to the Cape on the return of the "Themis", but she never did so, and we were doomed to disappointment. By the end of October our stock of penguin eggs was exhausted, and we were compelled to seek another source of subsistence. On the 10th November our supply of biscuit and pork being exhausted (821) and the weather being very fine and calm, we determined to swim around the point to the east side with our blankets, the rifle, and a spare suit of clothes; the latter with our powder, matches, etc., we towed round in one of the spare oil casks. Stopping the night at the foot of the Clift, the next morning we mounted by the aid of the Tripack grass to the plateau, crossed over to the western side, and descended to the vicinity of our first abode. Here we built a hut, and having shot a pig, enjoyed a feast of fresh meat. The next day I shot a goat, on which, with the meat of six others, we lived until the 10 December. The goats I found had increased to 19 during the winter. Returning on the 10th December to our house we arrived (822) at the conclusion that our stay on the island would be prolonged, so repaired our thatch, weeded our garden, gathered the early potatoes, and planted others, and put things in order. We occasionally caught a supply of fish. During this month we were visited by an American schooner which sent in two boats to fish, and from their crew we obtained 5 lbs tobacco, 3 shirts, 25 lbs flour, and 7 lbs molasses, in return for six small seal skins. The "Themis" was expected or we should have gone away in this vessel.

On December 19th we were aroused by firing and shouting to find our Tristan neighbours once more among us; they had spent 9 days on the west side of the island, and had procured 40 seals, and one sea elephant and two seals from Nightingale Island (823), where they had spent a couple of days. One of our casks on the west side they had taken to store blubber, and we received a small quantity of four in exchange. They left in half an hour and told us the "Themis" would visit Tristan next month. Although anxious to leave I was not desirous, except as a last resource to go to Tristan, and hoping the "Themis" would shortly arrive we determined to remain on the island. This was the last communication with us until the arrival of the "Challenger" ten months afterwards. The Tristan men had shot during their eight days stay, eight of the remaining twelve goats, and expressed their regret openly that they had not been able to shoot the other four. The "Themis" we (824) saw at Tristan in January, but no visit was paid us. About the 22 January I swam round to the western side of the island, mounted the clift and shot 4 pigs. At this time the albatrosses were laying on the top of the island, and their eggs formed a portion of my food; the young birds were also palatable.

On February 1st, the day after I rejoined my brother, a boat came across from Tristan d'Acunha, landed on the western side, and her crew shot and took away the only remaining four goats -- for what reason it is difficult to say as there is an abundance of food of every description, including sheep on their island. Their object appeared to us to be to drive us from the island. The boat returned to Tristan without communicating with us; indeed they seemed to avoid being seen. February passed away quietly; we were living on potatoes and vegetables mixed with fat; in March these were exhausted so we made another visit round the point, when we discovered the loss of the goats, but shot some pigs, and lived on the west side for a fortnight, also living on young petrels. We now decided that I should remain at the top of the plateau, to secure a sufficient supply of pig's fat for the winter, whilst my brother lived below, and collected in a barrel the fat thrown down to him by me. The want of salt prevented our salting down the meat. Tobacco now failed us, and its want was much felt, both being heavy smokers. My brother, on separating from me, to (862) live below, had taken three young pigs which we had managed to catch by running them down. Secured to our barrel, they were towed round the point and safely landed, although nearly drowned en route. These were placed in enclosures, and carefully tended, being kept for a possible dearth during the winter. I rejoined my brother the last week in April, and we lived on petrels and pork until the end of May. Finding the supply of potatoes not sufficient for the winter, I visited the plateau on the 8th June, and remained until the 18th August. The month of June I spent in a hut at the top, that of July in a cave, which was the better habitation during the cold weather. I saw my brother nearly every day, (872) and unless prevented by a high wind or heavy surf, we could hold a sort of communication. During this winter we suffered no great privation, always having enough to eat, although consisting of pig's flesh only. As soon as the penguins began to lay, we set to work collecting their eggs, and were living on them when the "Challenger" hove in sight. At this time I had about 50 rounds of ammunition; our clothes were wearable, but we had no boots or shoes. Neither of us were sick a day and we had about 8 lbs of coffee and 1 lb of tea still left. Rainy days passed heavily with us. Our library consisted of a "German Natural History", a "German atlas", "Charles O'Malley", "Captain Morrells (828) (American)," one volume of four voyages, two "Monthly magazines" of old date, "Hamlet and Coriolanus" with German notes, "Shiller's Poems" in German.

When met by the "Challenger" our time reckoning was one day wrong -- this I suspect occurred soon after landing. Gustav whilst below, saw a large iron ship filled with people pass within a mile of the hut. Our dogs left us for the penguin rookery, they killed a great number and became quite wild and savage. One of them appearing mad, we shot all three. The ascent to the top of the island was made easier by the existence of two or three ledges, on which a rest could be obtained. The lowest ledge might have been about 20 acres extent.(829) The higher one decreasing in size. The top of the island, over which we could roam for game was about four miles in diameter, and almost round, but the ground was much cut up by ravines and valleys. The whole top was covered with a poor sort of grass, and trees blown down by the winter gales, the sheltered spots only being wooded by live timber, and that of a small description. The height of the lower ridge was about 1200 feet. On the north side to which we were confined, the beach was about a mile in extent; and about 250 yards in breadth. There were 13 different kinds of birds on the island of Inaccessible, but no reptiles, lizards, or snakes; nor animals except goats and pigs.(830) The trees were small, all of one kind and always green. The birds were penguins, albatrosses, molly hawks, prens (local name) sea hens, petrels, tern, noddys, wood pigeons, night birds, thrushes, canaries, and blackbirds.

December and January were the hottest months, June the coldest. In winter the wind was generally from the S.W. and N.W. the heaviest gales from the latter. Heavy rollers set in occasionally. The longest spell of fine weather was a week.

Substance of

Professor Wyville Thompson's Lecture

To the Ship's Company of

HMS "CHALLENGER"

On the geography of the sea and the object of the "Challenger" expedition hitherto made, with remarks on the progress

"I have been asked by the Captain to try and explain to you, as well as I am able, what is the object of our expedition, and what we are doing from day-to-day. I need not remark that it gives me pleasure so to do, for we are to be common shipmates for the next few years and doubtless each one has some interest in the work, and the results, if successful, will be creditable to us all.

In the first place I must tell you that the bottom of the sea occupies an area of three quarters of the globe, and this immense portion has hitherto been as a sealed book to the human race. We have a comparatively accurate notion of the land; we know the geology and the natural history of most of the countries of the earth. Even Africa and Australia are becoming annually more known to us, and the indomitable energy of man is slowly but surely bringing each country into what I may call the regular routine and causing it to contribute somewhat to the happiness and comfort of the rest (840) inasmuch as their productions, whether natural or artificial, whether as necessaries or more generally as luxuries, are spread in this manner over the world, and in this way conduces to the general happiness of mankind. One reason why our ancestors did nothing towards lifting the veil from the sea-bottom was because it was thought no object could be gained by so doing and the difficulties in the way were deemed insurmountable. For it was thought, and with reason, that nothing living could exist at a greater depth than 400 fathoms.

Now you all know that when an empty bucket is put over the ship's side and allowed to sink down a little distance what difficulty there is in hauling it up, and what a resistance is (841) offered by the weight of water on the top of it. That resistance increases the lower we go, so that if a man was placed at the bottom where we were today sounding 2800 fathoms, he would have a weight pressing on him equal to the weight of the "Challenger". To explain this I must tell you that a man's body presents a surface of 375 square inches, and that, at 2800 fathoms, the weight of a column of water would be over three tons to the square inch. If the island of Teneriffe was sunk in the place we were today, the peak would scarcely reach the surface of the water. These are among the principal reasons for the former statement (which we, as well as others, have proved to be false) -- "That no animal-life was to be found lower than 400 fathoms".

(838) It is now less than 20 years ago that scientific men began to talk of a scheme of ocean telegraphs, whereby the continents of America and Europe might be placed in almost instantaneous communication. How this scheme has succeeded we all know, but in the outset it was resolved by all practical men that some knowledge of the nature of the sea-bottom was imperative, to enable the cables to be laid with any degree of accuracy and safety. Soundings, therefore, were at once taken across that portion of the Atlantic where the cables were to be laid. The Americans, as well as other nations, commenced a series of Atlantic soundings, which has been continued more or less ever since. The first dredging in deep water with anything like success was obtained by the Americans. (835) A clever lieutenant in their navy invented an instrument similar to the one we now use in sounding, whereby a very small portion of the bottom could be brought up. Their dredging however was in comparatively shallow water and it was reserved for an English expedition in 1863 to bring deep-sea dredging to something like the system we are now working on. For that purpose H.M. Gunboat "Porcupine" was fitted out for a series of soundings, dredgings, etc., in the Bay of Biscay and the home waters. A colleague of my own, Dr. Carpenter, was among the scientific party on this occasion and the account published by him on his return awoke the first desire for further information on the subject. The greatest depth from which they succeeded in (836) bringing up anything from the bottom was 2300 fathoms in the Bay of Biscay. Other countries have carried on the research in a desultory sort of manner, but it was at length decided by scientific men that no country but England, and none but British seamen, could solve the problem in anything like a satisfactory manner. For this purpose the "Chancellor of the Exchequer" was consulted and the result was that the "Challenger" and her crew were selected for the purpose; and I am happy to say that we have thus far succeeded tolerably well.

We have obtained the deepest dredgings yet known in the world, 3175 fathoms, and from that depth we obtained specimens of animal life, thus proving, contrary to all our (833) opinions, that living creatures do exist in these great depths, although they are very low in the scale of animal life. I am of the opinion the ocean is nowhere deeper than 4000 fathoms, and that the valley, as I may call it, where we obtained our deepest soundings the other day, is of no great extent. However, we shall know more about that bye and bye. The mud that the dredge has more commonly brought up from the bottom is of a grey color and to our general surprise, when placed under the microscope, revealed nothing but shells of what had been living creatures.

This mud we found to contain carbonate of lime; and the cast-off shells of these animals is causing a gradual formation of rock at the bottom (834) of the sea, similar to the chalk cliffs on the south of England. As regards animal life in the ocean, we find at from 200 to 400 fathoms a class of creatures of the same form and character, and the animals down to that depth are tolerably well known to naturalists; at 400 fathoms they are very scarce and at 500 cease altogether, thus causing us to believe until very recently, that below that depth no living thing existed. This, within the last ten years, has proved to be a fallacy; for after 600 fathoms down to 800, the sea is teeming with animals of a sort hitherto unknown to man; animals nearly transparent, but which have eyes and lungs and hearts the same as we have, and which reveal under the microscope all these organs to perfection. We see them going through the whole of their animal functions from their cradle to their grave. We see them seizing their prey, we see them digesting it, we see also their eggs being formed, and we see them (under the microscope) when fully developed and the creature springs into existence. I hope at some time to show any one who cares, these things for themselves.

Among the creatures that we have brought up in the dredge, I purpose shewing and describing the most curious. You see them here drawn by Mr. Wyld, the artist, and you can form some idea of their beauty and formation. This creature, half plant and half animal possesses the power of emitting a strong green light from the body. We obtained it off the Canary Islands in 1700 fathoms of water and when hauled up, gave a sufficient light to enable Captain Maclear to experiment upon it. This makes the fifth species of this creature on record. The peculiar phosphorescent light which emanates from these and similar creatures is the only light existing below 400 fathoms of water and is wholly independent of the light of the sun (842). This other vase-shaped animal half glass and half sponge is not unknown in England, but has never before been obtained elsewhere than off the Phillipine Islands. From their great beauty and rarity they were, on their first appearance, sold in England for 50 pounds apiece as chimney ornaments. We obtained this off the coast of Portugal. (843)This gelatinous creature, which looks like a ship's anchor, we obtained off the Canary Islands; and these peculiar excrescences in the shape of an anchor which protrudes from the creature's body serve for exactly that purpose in enabling it to cling with wonderful tenacity to any substance -- especially a man's fingers.

What caused these excrescences to assume this peculiar shape has puzzled many. Whether the animal first saw a ship's anchor and took fancy to its form and shape, or whether we first saw the animal and borrowed its nautical appendage for our anchor, is more than I am able to decide. Today the dredge brought up an immense prawn, or lobster, from 2000 fathoms of water. Some of you perhaps saw it and noticed that it (844) lacked eyes. Now a common lobster has a pair of very bright eyes fixed to the end of a sort of twig, and you may have seen it, occasionally fling its eyes over its shoulder and look behind.

Not so our crab, where its eyes would have been there was nothing, and the reason, I take it, why there was nothing is, that as there is no light where the gentleman lives, no eyes he requires, as they would only be an encumbrance.

It is now getting late and I feel that I must draw my discourse to a close, observing that I shall be most happy to resume the subject at some further time, if you care to hear me. (Loud and continued applause).

(845).....To the universal regret of the ship's company, Professor Thompson never found it convenient to fulfill his promise.

THE "CHALLENGER" -- Her Challenge

I'm a spar-decked corvette, built of wood, not of iron
I am good under steam, under sail
No Sheffield plate dead weight, my topsails environ
As I ride like a duck thro' a gale
By my Lords I'm about to be put in commission
For a cruise of three years, if not four.

HISTORICAL NOTE

Camp Kehonka, one of the first girls' camps in the United States, was founded by Laura I. Mattoon in 1902. The camp was originally located on Lake Wentworth, in New Hampshire, and in 1910 relocated to Alton, New Hampshire, on Lake Winnipesaukee. Mattoon, an 1894 graduate of Wellesley College, taught science at the MacDuffie School in Springfield, Massachusetts, and at New York City's Veltin School. The camp's first season had only eight campers, who slept in tents and built their own furniture. The campers also participated in the planning of activities and camp trips. As the early campers wore bloomers and Mattoon herself often wore somewhat masculine attire, their appearance was startling to many of the residents of Wolfeboro. The camp expanded over the years, with a section known as "The Point," for younger campers, added in the 1940s; the original section was known as "The Cove." The camp sought to instill in campers the qualities of self-reliance, integrity, and emotional stability, while encouraging spiritual growth, intellectual curiosity, initiative, and creativity, as well as appreciation of democratic freedom and acceptance of individual and group responsibility. The camp's traditions included a banquet held at the end of the camp season, at which counselors put on a show for campers, and the Sunday evening "musicale," at which campers and counselors sang. In early years, campers also performed a pageant every season; this eventually evolved into productions of dramas, though the term "pageant" was still used to describe the event.

Mattoon was active in the Camp Directors' Association of America (now the American Camping Association), becoming the organization's first salaried employee in 1924. She served as secretary for fifteen years. In 1938, Mattoon and Helen Dalton Bragdon developed Services for the Open, a nondenominational worship book which was widely used in camps. In 1911 Almyr Cooper "Bally" Ballentine joined the staff as a crafts counselor; he joined the staff full time in 1925 and under his guidance campers designed objects in wood (frequently geese, the camp's mascot, to be used as favors at banquets) and metal. After Mattoon's death in 1945, Ballentine became director of the camp. He was an active member of the American Camping Association and was one of the founders of the League of New Hampshire Craftsmen in 1932. In 1947, "Bally" married Mattoon's former nurse, Althea Macauley; they had 5 children: Linda, Roy, Jeffrey, Bonnie, and Bruce. Althea played an active role in managing the camp, and was particularly influential in attracting campers from abroad. On its 80th season in 1981, Camp Kehonka had 175 campers from 16 nations. "Bally" died in 1984 and after his death dissension in the Ballentine family resulted in the removal of Althea as camp director; her son Roy replaced her. The camp closed after the 1985 season and the property was sold. For further information, see the camp's web site.

ARRANGEMENT

The collection is arranged in two series:

- Series I. Camp administration and management, ca.1906-2012 (#1.1-18.8, 8CB.1m-13CB, 15CB.1m-15CB.4m,19FB.1m, 14OB.1m-14OB.6m, FD.1, F+D.1-F+D.2, OD.1-OD.2, CD-77.1 - CD.77.6, DVD-36.1, Mem.1-Mem.3, E.1)
- Series II. Photographs, 1911-ca.1980 (#PD.1-PD.19)

SCOPE AND CONTENT

The collection documents the administration of Camp Kehonka and includes photographs, camp uniforms, banquet favors, camp publicity and articles about Camp Kehonka, camp logs, counselor training material, correspondence, program planning materials, financial records, CDs and a DVD. The majority of the folder titles were created by the archivist; those created by collection donors appear in quotation marks. The camp's web site is being captured periodically as part of Harvard University Library's Web Archive Collection (WAX). Issues of the camp's newsletter Goose Quills have been transferred to Schlesinger Library's Printed Materials Division.

Series I, CAMP ADMINISTRATION AND MANAGEMENT, ca. 1906-2012 (#1.1-18.8, 8CB.1m-13CB, 15CB.1m-15CB.4m, 19FB.1m, 14OB.1m-14OB.6m, FD.1, F+D.1-F+D.2, OD.1-OD.2, CD-77.1 - CD.77.6, DVD-36.1, Mem.1-Mem.3, E.1), documents program planning and management of the camp and also provides information on A. Cooper Ballentine's role in the larger New Hampshire community. It includes articles about Camp Kehonka and its dissolution; a DVD of campers and counselors reminiscing about Kehonka; and material about A. Cooper and Althea Ballentine and Laura Mattoon, including condolence letters on the deaths of Mattoon and A. Cooper Ballentine, programs for their memorial services; sketches by A. Cooper Ballentine and quotations collected by him; and writings by him and by Mattoon, including Services for the Open. The series also includes camp logs; questionnaires completed by parents of prospective campers, in which they assess their daughter's characters; index cards with campers' and staff addresses and dates of camp attendance; excerpts from Goose Quills, the camp newsletter produced by campers in the summer and by the Ballentines in the winter; CDs of camp songs and reunion musicales; questionnaires regarding the future of Camp Kehonka; camp uniforms, banquet favors, and pins made by A. Cooper Ballentine and campers; programs and scripts for camp pageants; manuals written by camp staff; and booklets created by campers as tributes to A. Cooper Ballentine. Additional material includes guidelines for camp trips; material on the camp's crafts, costume design, dramatics, and athletics programs; counselor training material; and church service programs. The series is arranged with a description of the collection written by one of the collection donors, followed by an alphabetical arrangement of material.

Series II, PHOTOGRAPHS, 1911-ca.1980 (PD.1-PD.19), documents activities at Camp Kehonka and the evolution of the camp uniform over the years, The series contains photographs of campers, counselors, and camp grounds and buildings, including images of campers engaged in swimming and other sports; crafts and dramatics; and group shots of campers and counselors. The series is arranged chronologically.

Most of the photographs in this collection are or will be cataloged in VIA, Harvard University's Visual Information Access database. Others, referred to as "uncataloged" photographs, are not of sufficient research interest to warrant cataloging and are simply treated as part of the documents they accompany; they are marked on the back with an asterisk in square brackets [*].

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

Edsel Bryant Ford was born November 6, 1893 in Detroit, Michigan, the only child of Henry and Clara Bryant Ford. Educated in public schools and the Detroit University School, he was persuaded by his father upon graduation from high school in 1912 to assume responsibilities at the Ford Motor Company's new Highland Park Plant rather than going on to college. When Henry decided to build tractors as well as automobiles in 1917, he formed a new corporation, Henry Ford & Son, Inc. and began to produce the Fordson tractor in a Dearborn factory. Edsel was, however, already handling major responsibilities beyond tractors within the Ford organization. He was elected secretary of the company on November 1, 1915, and vice-president as well as secretary on January 18, 1917. On December 30, 1918, when Henry Ford resigned as president of Ford Motor Company, Edsel was named president effective January 1, 1919, a position he would hold for the rest of his life. (He was also appointed treasurer in 1921.) Particularly adept in planning, sales, and advertising, Edsel assumed responsibility for the business side of corporate affairs, overseeing, for example, the company's massive expansion from 1919 to 1925. In addition to the functional aspects, Edsel believed an automobile could be beautiful. After the company purchased Lincoln Motor Company in 1921, he took charge of Lincoln design and marketed Lincolns with customized coachwork by leading American and European designers. He introduced and was instrumental in the design of the Model A in 1929, the Lincoln Zephyr in 1936, the Mercury in 1938, and the Lincoln Continental in 1940.

Edsel had a lifelong enthusiasm for aviation and was a major sponsor of Admiral Richard E. Byrd's flights over the South Pole in 1919 and the North Pole in 1926. After the Stout Metal Airplane Company was absorbed by the Ford Motor Company in 1925, he encouraged the design of a trimotor airplane and fostered an annual Air Reliability Tour to promote dependable flying. Edsel also encouraged Ford Motor Company's participation in major events such as the World's Fairs of the 1930s.

Edsel Ford married Eleanor Lowthian Clay on November 1, 1916. They had four children: Henry Ford II, 1917-1987 (who became president of Ford Motor Company in 1943 after the death of his father); Benson Ford, 1919-1978; Josephine Clay Ford, 1923-2005; and William Clay Ford, 1925- . Eleanor and Edsel Ford were generous benefactors to numbers of organizations. Among them were the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Detroit Institute of Art, Museum of Modern Art, Detroit University School, and Henry Ford Hospital. In 1932, Edsel brought Mexican painter Diego Rivera to Detroit to create a fresco in the fountain court of the Detroit Institute of Art. Rivera considered the Detroit Industry fresco cycle the most successful work of his career.

A. J. Lepine was secretary to Edsel Ford from 1918 to 1943. After Edsel's untimely death on May 26, 1943, Lepine spent the following nine years managing affairs relating to the estate. The papers include some of these later records.

BOX AND FOLDER LISTING
Box no. Description

CORRESPONDENCE SERIES
SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Correspondence series is arranged into six subseries. The General Correspondence subseries, 1919-1942 (69.6 cubic ft.), Acc. 6, is the largest and most substantial. It is comprised of correspondence between the office of Edsel B. Ford and a wide range of companies and individuals. The records are arranged by year except for 1919 to 1921, which are inclusive in one alphabetical series. Subsequently, within each year from 1922 to 1942, the material is arranged alphabetically by year. The correspondence was maintained using a numerical filing system supplied by the Amberg File and Index Company. The name of a correspondent or company or subject of the letter was utilized for filing. The files reflect Edsel Ford's involvement in all aspects of company business and his broad and varied interests. Although A. J. Lepine, Edsel Ford's secretary from 1918 until Edsel's death in 1943, created guidelines to follow for determining which word in a company name or subject term was primary, consistency was, in reality, rare. Researchers are advised to search under related terms and words within a term to find relevant material. From 1923 to 1942, a card index was maintained by office staff to provide subject access where knowledge of subject was considered significant. This original card index is available in the Benson Ford Research Center (BFRC) reading room at The Henry Ford; however, since Ford Motor Company retained a large portion of the series, the index does not accurately reflect BFRC holdings. Researchers should also note there is overlap with other series, particularly the Subject Files series.

The Answered by Form Letter subseries, 1933-1936 (.8 cubic ft.), Acc. 6, is correspondence managed by Lepine and other staff on behalf of Edsel Ford, utilizing repeatable text. Although the form letters changed from time to time, their purpose was to respond to every letter that arrived except for those which merited individual answers. For example, form letters were utilized to respond to offerings of paintings, antiques, and other objects for sale; fund raising, membership, and committee requests; requests for endorsements, autographs, loans, and investments; and proposals for new manufacturing projects. The form letters are arranged by year and then alphabetically by name of correspondent; the date and form letter number used for reply are noted on the letter.

The Motor Files subseries, 1931-1945 (2 cubic ft.), Acc. 6, is comprised of correspondence and agreements between the Office of the President, Ford Motor Company, and various educational institutions. The records, arranged chronologically by year, pertain to the loan of motors by the Ford Motor Company to various institutions for demonstration and education. The files were maintained after Edsel Ford's death; the subseries includes 1944 and 1945 correspondence from Henry Ford II when he was an executive vice-president.

The 1945 Correspondence subseries (.4 cubic ft.) consists of correspondence dated 1945.

The Telegrams subseries, 1923-1942 (1.6 cubic ft.), Acc. 6, consists of outgoing telegrams and cablegrams from the office of Edsel B. Ford, arranged chronologically.

Lastly, the Miscellaneous subseries, 1925-1945, (.4 cubic ft.) includes a log of correspondence from 1925 to 1927.

SUBJECT FILE SERIES
SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

Documents in Edsel Ford's office were filed in two ways. Most correspondence was filed alphabetically by company name or personal name. Other items were gathered together around topics and filed in subject files. Correspondence that was voluminous on a single topic was also placed in a subject file. The Subject Files series, 1921-1942 (30.8 cubic ft. and 1 oversize box) is comprised of Edsel Ford office correspondence with individuals and companies arranged alphabetically by subject. In some cases where the files are large, subject headings were further subdivided. Included among the topics are names of companies and organizations in which Edsel Ford had an active interest. Of particular note are reports and correspondence sent to Edsel Ford from branches, both foreign and domestic, as well as reports and correspondence regarding Ford Motor Company of Canada and Ford Motor Company, Ltd. and associated companies. Other Ford related topics include special deliveries of Ford automobiles; Ford sponsored radio programs; Ford World War II activities; Ford participation in fairs and exhibitions; and Edsel Ford speeches. Edsel Ford's many community and philanthropic involvements are also well documented. Examples include the Detroit Aviation Society, the Detroit Institute of Arts, the Detroit University School, the Edison Institute, Henry Ford Hospital, the Henry Ford Trade School, the Lincoln Highway Association, the Museum of Modern Art, and the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. There are also records that lean more toward Edsel Ford's personal activities, such as vacations, automobiles he purchased, and Christmas correspondence. Individual correspondents in the series include Admiral Richard E. Byrd and Walter Dorwin Teague. Researchers should note that there is overlap with the Personal Files series and the General Correspondence series where documents on many of the same subjects can also be found.

FINANCIAL SERIES
SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Financial Series, Acc. 6, is comprised of two subseries. The Purchase Orders subseries, 1922-1940 (1.6 cubic ft.) Acc. 6, contains copies of purchase orders issued by the office of Edsel Ford for material and services purchased for his residences and personal activities. Arranged in numerical order and held in bound volumes, they were issued to both outside vendors and to the Ford Motor Company. The Universal Credit Corporation records subseries, 1928-1932 (1.2 cubic ft.), Acc. 6, includes certificates of incorporation, bylaws, stockholders meeting minutes, and board of director meeting minutes for Universal Credit Corporation, Delaware; Universal Credit Company of America; Universal Credit Company of Indiana; and Universal Credit Company of New York. (The Universal Credit Corporation was incorporated in 1928 to finance Ford products for the first time on an installment basis.)

PERSONAL FILES
SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Personal Files series is comprised of three subseries. The first and most substantial, General Personal Files subseries, 1927-1944 (14.4 cubic ft.), Acc. 6, consists of correspondence regarding company matters personally handled by Edsel Ford and activities of special interest to him. Researchers, however, should not be misled by the title. The records are not entirely personal files in the usual sense, but often relate to subjects officially handled by Edsel Ford in the course of company business as well as activities that personally interested him or in which he was personally involved. The subseries is arranged chronologically by year and then alphabetically by correspondent name. Interspersed are subject and designated name files. After 1931, the number of subject and designated name files increase, creating a gradual change from a pure alphabetical name file to a predominately subject file. Topics include the American Legion, Automobile Manufacturers Association, the Detroit Air Olympics, Indianapolis Motor Speedway, National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, National Air Tour, patents and trademarks, Ford dealers and Ford branches, and records of monetary and automotive contributions. There are also several folders of condolence letters arranged alphabetically that were received by Ford Motor Company when Edsel Ford died in 1943.

The Edison Institute Construction records subseries, 1929 (8.8 cubic ft.), Acc. 6, consists of architect and contractor records, cost certificates, and invoices relating to the Edison Institute (now The Henry Ford) in the year in which it was dedicated. Companies represented include Alberene Stone Company, Gray-Knox Marble Co., Rayl Company, and the architectural firm, Robert O. Derrick.

The President's Birthday Ball Treasurer's Records subseries, 1935-1940 (2 cubic ft.), Acc. 6, are records compiled during the period when Edsel Ford served as treasurer of the Detroit Committee for the National Committee for Birthday Balls, which was sponsored by the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis and held annually on January 30th, Franklin D. Roosevelt's birthday. The subseries consists of correspondence, reports, documents on disbursements, invoices, bank statements, and donation letters from 1935 to 1940.

REPORTS SERIES
SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Reports series is arranged into three subseries. The Special Files and Reports subseries, 1917-1936 (.4 cubic ft.), Acc. 6, contains miscellaneous reports and correspondence files. It includes material on Edsel B. Ford's draft exemption in 1917, copies of three Willow Run bomber contracts, financial and budget reports on schools Edsel supported, and an undated transcript of an address given by E. G. Pipp at Temple Israel in Akron, Ohio. Pipp was a Detroit News editor, an early editor of the Dearborn Independent, and editor and publisher of Pipp's Weekly .

The Receipts and Memberships subseries, (.8 cubic ft.), Acc. 6, is comprised of miscellaneous receipts.

The Territory Reports subseries, 1921-1927 (1.2 cubic ft.), Acc. 6, consists of reports to the Office of the President, Ford Motor Company, from district supervisors. The reports cover all phases of branch plant operations and the personnel responsible for maintenance of branch operations. Arrangement is alphabetical by name of supervisor.

Biographical / Historical Note

Junius Daniel Grimes, son of Bryan and Charlotte Grimes, was born in Grimesland, NC (1878). He attended the Raleigh Male Academy, received a BA from the University of North Carolina (1899) and an LLB from Georgetown University (1902). He was admitted to the bar in 1902 and became solicitor in the First Judicial District. He practiced law in partnership with Hallett Sydney Ward in the firm of Ward and Grimes from 1905 until 1941 when his son, J. Bryan, joined the firm, which then became Grimes and Grimes. Secretary for Congressman John H. Small, Grimes was a member of the board of State Normal and Industrial College in Greensboro, NC (1919); and of the Washington, NC, Board of Education (1921-1923). He was also Beaufort County Attorney (1933); trustee of the NC College for Women (1932-1938); chairman of the Beaufort County Democratic Executive Committee (1935-1940); chairman of Committee One, Victory Liberty Loans (1942-1943); and a member of the Vestry at St. Peter's Episcopal Church in Washington, NC.

Hallet Sydney Ward (1870-1956) attended public schools in Gates County, NC, the University of North Carolina, and was admitted to the bar in 1893. He was solicitor in the First Judicial District, a lawyer in Winton, NC (1893-1894) and in Plymouth, NC (1894-1904). He was mayor of Plymouth (1902-1903), a member of the U.S. House of Representatives (1921-1925), and a member of the NC State Senate (1931).

Description

The collection is arranged in seven series:

The general correspondence deals with a variety of topics and prominent among them is politics. While much of this material is related to state and local campaigns (1920-1940), presidential elections are also a major focus. Included are comments concerning President Harding and the fall in agricultural prices, William G. McAdoo's presidential ambitions (1924), propaganda of the Republican Party and Tammany Hall's defense of Southerners' rights (1928), and the nationwide registration of and voting by Negroes in Democratic primaries (1936). Files of the Beaufort County Democratic executive committee (1934-1940) concern the early Roosevelt presidential campaign and the state and local campaigns of Cameron Morrison (1932), Hallet Ward (1931), and others. Correspondents include Lindsay Warren, Robert R. Reynolds, Clyde Hoey, Thad Eure, John H. Small, James A. Farley, Josiah W. Bailey, Herbert C. Bonner, and C. L. Shuping.

Other correspondence pertains to education and Grimes's support of education both personally and professionally. Issues discussed include enrollments, bonds, resolutions, and school improvements for the Washington, NC, public school system (1920-1931; 1935-1936). Other topics include neighborhood-oriented schools (1920), school consolidation and the movement away from one-teacher school houses (June 1920), rural tuition payments (November 1925), class size and teacher salaries (January 1926), transportation (January 1927), and the cost of nine-month schools (June 1935). A file on the University of North Carolina consolidation includes executive committee minutes, resolutions, and a report of the Commission on University Consolidation (1936). Other materials include a concert program from the NC College for Negroes with an announcement of the event (July 1941).

Correspondence and case files pertain to Grimes's position as the attorney for the Little Swift Creek Drainage District (1920-1929). Information includes boundary line surveys; interpretation of drainage district laws; procedures for establishing districts and electing commissioners; ownership guidelines; taxes and other assessments; bond establishment; and construction, maintenance, and improvements. Similar files exist for other districts including Albemarle (1917-1920), Juniper Bay (1917-1918), Mattamuskeet (1924-1925), and Blakely Swamp (1923-1929). Associated interests include suits against district commissioners (1911), districts falling into receivership (1918-1919), acreage disputes (1919-1928), and the National Industrial Recovery Program claim on lands in Hyde County for a wildlife refuge (1935).

Further correspondence and records pertain to paving, building, and extending roads; petitions to have streets paved (1920); road plans to avoid railroad crossings (1921); the inspection, licensing and insurance of automobiles (1922); road condition surveys of the State Highway Commission (1925); the use of convict labor in road construction (1928); extension and improvements of the road from Washington to Greenville (1929); Civil Works Authority road construction approval (1933); bond indebtedness (1935); hard surfacing (1936); and dynamite used in road improvements (1941).

Correspondence between the Colored Interracial Committee and the White Interracial Committee, both of Washington, NC, contains recommendations concerning the condition of the Negro section of town. These include suggestions for the improvement, cleaning, maintenance, and paving of streets; provision of stop signs; repair of water mains; school construction; and the policing of the Negro cemetery. Other race-related material includes information on a favorable report from the House of Representatives Judiciary Committee on an anti-lynching law (1921), a court case against the Board of Graded School Trustees over mixed-race children (1922), the case of an Episcopal Negro Englishman church worker who was wrongly accused of immorality (1926), a Democratic Party resolution to keep the party white (1936), and correspondence from the Beaufort County Democratic executive committee commenting that the party should be a white man's party (1937).

The collection's legal files consist of general and litigation files. The general files include wills, land and timber deeds, chattel mortgages, contracts, petitions, bankruptcies, alimony payments, court calendars, and juror lists. The litigation files are more extensive and pertain to both civil and criminal law. Many cases involve liquor, including the illegal production of rum (1919) and whiskey (1926), and drunk driving (1921, 1926). Criminal cases involving major incidents of embezzlement include those of Beaufort County Sheriff W. B. Windley concerning a shortage of drainage district taxes (1917-1922); of C. H. Godwin regarding illegal fund transfers and accounting inaccuracies at a bank in Williamston, NC (1921-1925); of T. J. Mann pertaining to the misappropriation of Hyde County Board of Education money (1923-1936); and of the secretary of a fraternal benefit society implicated in missing insurance benefits (1933).

Grimes's local government activities are reflected in his records pertaining to the Washington, NC, Board of Alderman (1907-1908) and the Beaufort County Board of Commissioners (1928-1944). Documented are a land dispute with the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad (1906), plans for a street railway company franchise (1907), railroad bridge concerns, bonds for the Eastern Training School and street improvements (1907), city utility expenditures (1907-1908), and mayoral jurisdiction questions (1908). Other topics discussed are downtown development of shops and a theatre (1919-1928), telephone service (1920), rural electrification and the Rural Electrification Administration (1934, 1936), the possible restoration of Bath, NC (1938), a timber breakwater at the mouth of Pantego Creek in Belhaven Harbor, NC (1939-1942), and the dividing lines between Beaufort and Martin counties (1935-1937) and Beaufort and Craven counties.

Records pertaining to the economy and taxes include information on an installment plan revenue bill (1931); the First Congressional District Tax Relief Association (1933); sales and food tax; Civil Works Administration funds for county work projects that involved the Caswell Training School in Kinston, NC (1933); Beaufort County Home improvements (1933); property taxes (1934); Civilian Conservation Corps forestry work; Norfolk Southern Railroad back taxes (1934); the Bankhead Bill (1935); and liquor taxes (1937).

Throughout the collection, land issues and land development are noted. Correspondence and flyers from land companies include information on investment potential, lists of Beaufort County RFD inhabitants, and the Virginia-NC Joint Stock Land Bank (1920-1923). Files on the Clarendon Coal Field Company (1920-1939) involved a company in Moore and Chatham counties, NC, for which J. Bryan Grimes served as director. Information includes stock advertisements (1923), oil and gas royalties, and timber sales (1930). These records also contain lists of stockholders with their amounts of stock noted, maps of the field, clippings, director's meeting minutes, financial statements, and company debts. Other records include information on land dispute cases concerning the Currituck Sound Swan Island Club (1930-1931) and land and fishing rights of squatters on Bogue Banks (1942-1944).

Further files contain information pertaining to suits against railroads that involved improper cutting and removal of timber (1909-1910), killing of farm animals (1909-1911), damage or loss of freight (1922-1924), fires started from engine sparks (1922, 1927-1928), and accidents (1932-1933). One particularly well documented case concerned a fire caused by an unsafe heating apparatus in a freight depot that resulted in damage to surrounding warehouses owned by the S. R. Fowle and Son Company of Washington, NC (1907-1908).

War-related correspondence concerns Mexican border fighting, World War I, and World War II. Correspondence from Colonel Wiley C. Rodman describes preparations for surveillance of the Mexican border by the Second NC Infantry, first at Camp Glenn, NC, and later at Camp Steward in El Paso, TX (1916). World War I related material includes records pertaining to Grimes's appointment as chairman of the #1 Victory Liberty Loan Committee (1919); information on the Lafayette Flying Squadron, a U.S. volunteer flying corps that was connected with the French Army (1919); and a Battery B celebration for the 113th U.S. Field Artillery. World War II records concern the establishment of a local Selective Service Board (1940); selective service petitions to avoid service (1942-1943); the naming of Liberty ships and Merchant Marine ships built in Wilmington, NC (1943); and the Red Cross War Fund (1943). Other war-time materials pertain to crop allotments, threshing records, and licenses (1942); the abolition of the Farm Security Administration and the Farm Crop Service Program (1943); farm defense program forms that include estimates of production; a strike at an industrial plant (1943); and mob violence near Williamston, NC (1943).

Grimes was a member of the Vestry of St. Peter's Episcopal Church in Washington, NC, and church activities are often mentioned in correspondence including finances; Vestry minutes; the church's 100th anniversary (1922); the transfer of graves to make space for aparish house annex (1926-1944); synod meetings (1942); liquidation of the diocesan debt (1943); Bishop Thomas Wright's election (1945); and the thirty-year consecration anniversary celebration of Bishop Thomas C. Darst. Other religious and charitable concerns mentioned were Thompson Orphanage (1919, 1941); the "Holy Rollers" (Pentecostals) and their annual meeting between Grimesland and Chocowinity, NC (1922); the Children's Home Society of NC (1925); a property dispute involving the Smithwick Creek Primitive Baptist Church (1930-1934); Caswell Training School in Kinston, NC (1933); the Beaufort County Public Welfare Department (1935); and the Children's Home Society (1941). Correspondence also mentions various health issues that affected the community including malaria, tuberculosis (1919-1920), influenza (1920), sterilization (1935), and venereal disease (1937).

Miscellaneous items and case files include information on a worker's compensation hearing (1931); the Stone Mountain Memorial Commission (1924); a survey of Knobs Creek and the Elizabeth City harbor for the purpose of providing a turning basin for barges and tugs (1925); arrest and detention laws (1936); Beaufort County's jail architecture (1938); and Venable and Moore family genealogical information. Oversized materials complete the collection and include a penciled drawing of various Washington, NC, businesses located on the wharf including S. R. Fowle, J. and W. Havens, and Morris's; a map of disputed land near Broad Creek; and a map of lands claimed by the state that are north and west of the Pungo River (February 1897). Other large items include Pungo River drainage tax lists (1917-1922).

Air Line Pilots Association Collection
ALPA Governing Bodies: The Board of Directors (BOD)
Records, 1932-1990
22 Storage Boxes (28 linear feet)

Accession Number 247

The meeting transcripts and related materials of the ALPA Board of Directors were deposited in the Archives of Labor and Urban Affairs by ALPA's Data Preparation and Data Resources Departments; ALPA President's Department; ALPA Engineering and Air Safety Department; and Governing Bodies Support of the Air Line Pilots Association from 1967 through the present. These materials were opened for research in August of 2001.

The Air Line Pilots Association was founded in 1930. As part of its organizational structure, the Association formed a Board of Directors in addition to creating ALPA officer posts of President, First Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five regional Vice- Presidents. The Board of Directors, or BOD, is the highest governing body of the Association, and is vested with the control of ALPA, the union's general management, and ALPA business affairs. The Board of Directors is comprised of the chairmen (Captain) and senior copilot (Second Officer) representatives of all Local Executive Councils (LECs; a LEC is the ALPA equivalent of a local union). The five Regional Vice-Presidents are ex officio members of the BOD without voting rights.

Association conventions are synonymous with a Board of Directors Regular Meeting, which occur every two years. Consequently, convention proceedings and Board of Director meeting transcripts are one in the same for regular meetings.

During a non-convention year (i.e., when the BOD is out of session), the two other governing bodies of ALPA, the Executive Committee and the Executive Board, must seek the advice or approval of the Board when a major policy change or determination is imminent. Usually members of the Board of Directors are balloted for their opinions and decisions when they are out of session. In addition, special meetings of the BOD can be called at any time by the Executive Committee, the Executive Board, or by the Association President in event of an emergency or on issues of vital importance to ALPA. In session, the Board of Directors speaks for the entire membership of ALPA.

The ALPA Board of Directors is the highest authority among the three governing bodies of the Association. Both the Executive Board and the Executive Committee, formed by the Association at Board of Directors regular meetings (ALPA conventions) in 1947 and 1952, respectively, draw their power and authority from the BOD. The decisions of the Board of Directors, whether rendered by ballot or in session, are the final governing decisions and are binding on the Association.

The meeting transcripts of ALPA's Board of Directors reflect the entity's role as primary governing body for the Air Line Pilots Association. Included with the transcripts are reports to the Board of Directors from various committees.

Non-transcript and non-report BOD-related materials may also be found in the ALPA President's Department collection. Informational reports submitted to the BOD either in non-convention years or while out of session during a convention year may be found in the ALPA Library Collection.

NOTE: During the 1980s, ALPA reproduced Compilations of Actions for BOD meetings dating back to the beginning of the Association. In some instances there also exist Compilation of Actions that were originally produced shortly after the meetings. Both sets of Compilation of Actions were retained because their respective index entries differ between the older and newer Compilation of Actions.

Important correspondents include:

Non-Manuscript Materials

Many of the BOD transcripts were microfilmed by the President's Department of ALPA.

BOD transcripts for the years 1932-1978 are contained on ALPA microfilm reels numbered 993-1022. The December 1944 BOD transcript is contained on ALPA reel number 1261.

These thirty-one (31) reels of microfilm have been transferred to the Archives' Audiovisual Department.

Two (2) audio cassette tapes of the 32nd BOD, dated Oct 24, 1990 and numbered tapes 2 and 3 by ALPA, have been transferred to the Archives' Audiovisual Department.

Digital Imaging Policy Statement

For the purpose of preserving its collections, the Reuther Library has made digital imaging the default option for reproduction of materials in our Reading Room. The Reuther Library urges patrons to bring digital cameras with them if they wish to have reproductions made from manuscript materials. For patrons who do not bring their own digital cameras, the Reuther Library will, on a first come, first served basis, furnish a digital camera. In special circumstances, and at the discretion of the Reference Archivist, the Reuther Library will offer a limited photocopy service.

Please review the attached files "Digital Imaging Procedure for Patrons" and "Digitizing Services" below for specific information pertaining to charges and policy. Contact our Reference Archivist with any questions about digital imaging.

Reference Service Mission Statement

The rules for use of archival materials at the Walter P. Reuther Library have been established to provide the fullest possible access to collections while maintaining strict preservation standards. Failure to comply with these rules will result in the denial of access to the collections. The archivist at the Reading Room desk will be glad to assist you or will refer you to a staff archivist knowledgeable in your field of interest.

General Information

The collections housed in the Reuther Library are open to anyone engaged in serious research. Persons planning on visiting the archives are advised to write, telephone, or e-mail the Reference Archivist at reutherreference@wayne.edu in advance. To view collections and engage in research in person, patrons are asked to register at the Reuther Library front desk. From the front desk, patrons are guided to the Reading Room or one of several specialized audio-visual viewing rooms.

Limited research may also be conducted by a member of our staff. Please contact the Reference Archivist or the appropriate staff member.

Catalog records for many of the archival collections, periodicals, and books may also be accessed on the Wayne State University Library Online Catalog.

Historical Note +/-

The Fife Folklore Archives Student Folklore Genre Collection consists of folklore items collected by undergraduate students in Utah State University folklore classes from the late 1960s to the present and folklore items collected by undergraduate students in Brigham Young University folklore and anthropology classes during 1960-1978. Most items include informant data, context, text (the folklore item), texture (stylistic notation), and collector data. The items of folklore are in text form on 8 ½ x 11 sheets of line-free paper. Since, 1999 genre items also include release forms. The materials do not circulate. The collection is separated into nine groups:

- Group 1: customs (foodways)
- Group 2: belief
- Group 3: speech
- Group 4: tales and jokes
- Group 5: songs
- Group 6: games and pranks
- Group 7: legends: character, contemporary, etiological, human condition, supernatural non-religious and supernatural religious
- Group 8: material culture
- Group 9: e-lore: electronically transmitted folklore (Xerox, facsimile and e-mail)

In the late 1960s, folklore courses were first taught at USU by Professor Austin Fife. At this time, Fife (a French professor) had his students collect items of folklore on pre-printed index cards. The information on the cards has now been transferred to 8 ½ x 11 sheets of paper and the items have been added to the genre collection. At about the same time (1967) at Brigham Young University (BYU) in Provo, Utah, Professor William A. Wilson began teaching folklore classes. Wilson had his students collect folklore using both genre collections and major project (focused) collections. The genre items were separated and filed by genre. Also included in the BYU genre collection were items from two other BYU professors who had their students collect folklore: John Sorenson and Thomas Cheney. The student collections from Sorenson and Cheney were given to Wilson and he added them to the genre collection along with his students' work. On these items, in the upper right hand corner above all other information, Wilson noted "SC" for Sorenson Collection and "CC" for Cheney Collection.

In 1978, William A. Wilson left Brigham Young University to direct the newly established Folklore Program and Folklore Archives at Utah State University. Wilson brought to USU the student genre collection that he had amassed at BYU, with a copy of the genre collection remaining at the BYU library. At the USU folklore archives (later named the Fife Folklore Archives for Austin and Alta Fife), William A. Wilson and Barbara [Garrett] [Walker] Lloyd used the already sorted BYU materials when creating the collection classification system. This classification system, with its roots in the Finnish archive tradition, is still used at the Fife Folklore Archives.

Wilson was at USU until 1985 when he returned to BYU to head the English Department. However, the BYU administration gave him a year's leave of absence to copy all the student materials in the Fife Folklore Archives at USU and bring them with him to BYU. Wilson notes: "Hannele [wife] and I practically lived in the USU archive. Max [Peterson, Director of the Merrill Library] brought a copy machine into the archive, and we copied day after day. First we copied the entire BYU genre collection. Then we copied all the items in the accumulated genre piles [of USU items]." Thus, in 1985 the BYU and USU folklore genre and focused collections were identical. During the following years, William A. Wilson and later Kristi Bell at BYU's Folklore Archives (now named the William A. Wilson Folklore Archives) and Barbara [Garrett] [Walker] Lloyd and later Randy Williams at the Fife Folklore Archives at USU worked to maintain the same classification system at both universities' folklore archives. However, the materials submitted by students from the two universities began, of course, to differ from each other, as students generally collect the kinds of materials their professors talk about in class.

In 1985 Professor Barre Toelken came to USU (from the University of Oregon) to direct the Folklore Program. He continued the folklore-collecting legacy that Austin Fife and William A. Wilson began. Over the years Professors Steve Siporin, Patricia Gardner, Jan Roush, Jeannie Thomas, Lisa Gabbert and Lynne McNeill and instructors Barbara [Garrett] [Walker] Lloyd, Randy Williams, and Michael Christensen (and others) have all had their students collect and deposit folklore items to the Fife Folklore Archives. And thus, the USU Student Genre Collection continues to grow. The format has changed somewhat over the years to reflect the trends in folkloristics. As stated above, many of the early submissions had little contextual data, and often limited, if any, informant data. William A. Wilson created a collecting format that included: informant data, contextual data, and text (item of folklore). Barre Toelken and Randy Williams added "texture" to the format of genre collections, allowing the collector to give "the feel" of the item to potential researchers. In in 1998, students were asked to include release forms with their genre items, following a trend in the folklore field that addresses not only the item (which in some cases, like a joke, may been seen as part of the public domain materials and therefore not needing a release) but also the performance of the lore (and therefore necessary for a release from the performer informant).In 2002, the collection was moved from hundreds of three-ringed binders to archival folders and boxes, making the collection more physically stable and easier to manage and use. In 2003, the collection finding aids were encoded in HTML as a means of hosting them on-line for greater research accessibility. In 2012, the finding aids were hosted in EAD.

Content Description

The USU Student Folklore Genre Collection: Group 4: Tales and Jokes consists of approximately 1,200 individual items of tales and jokes collected by undergraduate students. Most items include informant, context, text (the folklore item), texture (stylistic notation), and collector data. The materials reflect both insider (esoteric) and outsider (exoteric) views of a folk group and may be prejudiced or stereotyped.

Description of the Papers

Jessica Helfand, a graduate of the Yale School of Art Graphic Design Program (MFA ‘89) and a respected critic of visual culture, collected hundreds of examples of the volvelle format. In December of 2004, Helfand donated the collection to the Arts Library. Volvelles, or graphic wheels, are “various reckoning devices consisting of movable discs surmounted by or carrying other graduated or figured circles for calculating, for example, phases of the moon, the time of the rising or setting sun, or the times of the tides.”[1] They are efficient tools for collating a large amount of information into a compact delivery device, yet have also been used purely for novelty. Topics of the volvelles range from astronomy to pop culture and fashion. Several, such as language and geographic wheels, serve as educational tools; others have more technical and scientific applications. The volvelles are made of a variety of materials including many forms of paper and card stock, plastic, metal, and leather. Helfand's book, Reinventing the Wheel, which was published by Princeton Architectural Press in 2002, served as the catalogue for an exhibition of the same title at The Grolier Club in New York City in the spring of 2004. The volume contains many of the volvelles that are a part of this collection, although some titles vary from those listed in this finding aid. Ms. Helfand also gave a number of books containing volvelles to the Library. The books are catalogued individually in Orbis, Yale’s online catalog, and can be found by conducting a Special Collections Subject search for “volvelle collection.” In addition to the volvelles, the collection contains one box of Helfand's files relating to her book and to her Grolier Club exhibit.

Arrangement

The volvelles are arranged alphabetically by title within various size categories. Each volvelle title has a unique number; pamphlets, brochures, etc. that accompany volvelles are filed under the number of the respective volvelle. A box listing of Helfand's files follows the listing of the volvelles.

Arts Library Special Collections

Policies

Please refer to Visiting ALSC for general information about ALSC hours, material requests, etc.

Reading Room Policy

- Each visitor must sign the ALSC log upon entering the Special Collections reception area
- Each reader must have a current registration form on file at the front desk to consult materials. Registrations forms are good for one academic year (September - May) or one summer (June - August).
- Readers must present photographic identification at the time of registration and at each visit where materials are used.
- Readers must fill out a material request form, in person or online, for each visit to the ALSC Reading Room.
- All coats and bags must be left outside the reading room. There are lockers and a coat closet near the front door for your convenience.
- Notebooks, sketchbooks, laptops, or other note taking devices are permitted. The staff reserves the right to inspect personal papers at any time.
- Only pencils may be used for note taking. Pencils are provided at the front desk if you do not have one.
- Readers may pull any materials on open shelves in the reading room. We request that these items be used only on the reading table. Do not stand and read the materials. Do not reshelve any books, however briefly you consulted the item.

Classroom Policy

Classes must be scheduled at least two weeks in advance with a Special Collections staff member. Such classes are by appointment only and at the discretion of the staff pending classroom availability and staffing coverage. Every effort will be made to accommodate a preferred time and date, however availability is limited. Classes are limited to 15 participants, including accompanying teachers.

For Yale groups, materials requested by the professor to be used during class time must be submitted to the contact person for approval at least one week before the scheduled class. ALSC staff will pull approved selections so they are ready at the time of the class. ALSC staff strives to make materials available, but reserves the right to limit the use of fragile, in process, or other restricted materials. ALSC staff can provide consultation in the selection of materials with ample notice. The librarians at ALSC are eager to partner with you in developing instruction sessions using the rare and unique materials in our collections to further your teaching goals.

For non-Yale groups, materials to be used during class time must be selected by the teacher of the class and submitted to the ALSC contact person for approval at least one week before the scheduled class. ALSC staff will pull approved selections so they are ready at the time of the class. ALSC staff strives to make materials available, but reserves the right to limit the use of fragile, in process, or other restricted materials. ALSC staff are not able to spend more than one hour creating lists of materials for a class to review. Additionally, ALSC staff are not available to give drop-in tours.

Reproduction Policy

ALSC permits readers to photograph materials, without use of flash or tripod, once they have signed a release form.

When condition permits, scans of materials in the collections can be made by ALSC staff. In some cases, copyright restrictions apply. For detailed information on costs and size restrictions, consult the full policy.

If a faculty member requires digital images for teaching purposes, the request must be made through the Visual Resources Collection (VRC), next door to the ALSC Reading Room. ALSC staff will work with VRC staff to make ALSC materials available for reproduction. ALSC reserves the right to prohibit the reproduction of fragile or light-sensitive items.

Biographical/Historical note

Anne Morrow Lindbergh (1906 Jun 22 - 2001 Feb 7), author and aviator, was born Anne Spencer Morrow in Englewood, New Jersey, the daughter of Dwight W. Morrow, an investment banker, diplomat, and United States senator and Elizabeth Reeve Cutter, an educator. She had three siblings, Elisabeth, Dwight, Jr., and Constance. She was educated at Miss Chapin's School and Smith College. During her senior year she was introduced to Charles Augustus Lindbergh in December 1927 at the American Embassy in Mexico City where her father was serving as ambassador. They were married in a secret ceremony in May 1929 at her parents' estate in Englewood, New Jersey. She wanted to become a professional aviator and undertook an intense study of flying, radio theory, Morse code, and navigation, earning a pilot's license and setting a transcontinental speed record with her husband in 1930 when she was seven months pregnant. Anne Lindbergh was the first woman in the United States to obtain a glider pilot's license

In July 1931, the Lindberghs took off on an extended survey flight for Pan American Airways over the Arctic Circle in Canada to Japan and China. After the tragic kidnapping and murder of her son Charles Jr., in 1932, she took some comfort in narrating her experiences as co-pilot and navigator in her first book, North to the Orient, published in 1935. The memoir went on to win the National Book Award and launch a celebrated career. After the birth of their second son, Jon, they undertook a second air survey expedition through the North Atlantic spending a happy period of time in Greenland where they mapped the mountain ranges and took air samples. They then flew south through Europe to Africa returning across the South Atlantic to Brazil and north to New York. In 1934, the National Geographic Society recognized her forty thousand miles of exploration with its prestigious Hubbard Award. She was the first woman to receive it.

To protect their son Jon from intrusive publicity, the Lindberghs moved to England in 1935 after the kidnapping and murder trial of Bruno Hauptmann. In 1938 they moved to France to be near her husband's scientific colleague Alexis Carrel. During those years she wrote about their Atlantic expedition, first for National Geographic and in a second bestselling book, Listen! The Wind, published in 1938. In The Wave of the Future (1940), a book-length essay, she tried to interpret their non-interventionist position to the public. During World War II she was kept busy raising four children: Jon, Land, Scott, and Anne. While Charles worked on bomber development at the Ford factory, Anne found some time to study sculpting at the Cranbrook Academy of Art. Her last child, Reeve, was born in 1945. From the late 1940s through the 1960s, Anne Lindbergh published a large number of articles and poems in literary, women's, and general magazines on a variety of personal and international issues. She wrote about the importance of balancing personal needs, social expectations, and obligations to family and community in her most popular and enduring work, Gift from the Sea (1955). Next to the Bible, it was the non-fiction best seller of the year and sold 430,000 copies. To date, well over eight million copies have been sold, and at least 30,000 copies are sold annually.

Anne Morrow Lindbergh was motivated to write an essay, "The Heron and the Astronaut," after the Lindberghs attended the Apollo 8 launch from the Kennedy Space Center on December 21, 1968, the astronauts' first flight into the orbit of the moon. It was published in 1969 under the title Earth Shine, with her essay on Africa, "Immersion in Life." The Lindberghs built a modest home in Hana, Maui, Hawaii, in 1969-1970. Working with the Nature Conservancy, Anne and Charles Lindbergh made substantial contributions toward the purchase of land in the Valley of the Seven Sacred Pools in Maui to extend Haleakala National Park more than 4000 acres from the inland crater to the ocean. After her husband's death in 1974, she devoted much of her time to editing and publishing five volumes of her diaries and letters covering her life through the end of World War II.

Anne Morrow Lindbergh was enshrined in the National Aviation Hall of Fame July 21, 1979, "for outstanding contributions to aviation by her participation in pioneering flights surveying air routes to the Orient and Europe, and as an extraordinary author encouraging public appreciation of aviation and air travel." In the 1990s she moved from her home in Connecticut to her daughter Reeve's family farm in Vermont. Reeve Lindbergh dealt with the last seventeen months of her mother's life in the book No More Words, a sensitive and loving memoir of their time together, published in 2001. In 2012, the fourteenth book of her writings was published, Against Wind and Tide: Letters and Journals, 1947-1986, based on her papers in Manuscripts and Archives.

Her family correspondence contains letters exchanged by Anne Morrow Lindbergh and members of her immediate family as well as members of the Morrow, Lindbergh and Cutter families.

In the introduction to the first published volume of her diaries and letters, Bring Me a Unicorn, Anne Morrow Lindbergh noted that in the Morrow family “an experience was not finished, not truly experienced, unless written down or shared with another.” This passion for committing experiences and events to writing is one of the unifying forces in Anne Morrow Lindbergh’s life. Her personal papers are a rarity for a contemporary individual, in that they provide almost complete documentation for the entirety of her life.

Through her papers Anne Morrow Lindbergh can be studied from a number of perspectives: as a writer (diarist, poet, essayist, and novelist); social critic; pioneer aviator; conservationist; and mother, housekeeper, and wife of one of the century's most noted persons. Taken as a whole, the collection documents her continuing efforts at self realization.

Biographical Note

Frank Linn Snell was born in Kansas City, Missouri on December 23, 1899. While working in his father's grocery store as a boy, he attended the Kansas City public schools. In 1924 Snell received his law degree from the University of Kansas. Upon graduation Snell moved to Miami, Arizona, where he established an independent practice on the advice of his uncle. While in Miami, Snell met and married Elizabeth Berlin. The couple had two children, daughter Kathryn and son Richard.

In 1927 the family moved to Phoenix, where Snell became a partner in the law firm of Elliot & Snell. In 1934, Elliot entered semi-retirement and Snell took over the practice. With the expansion of the law firm Snell decided it was time to seek an attorney with courtroom experience. Upon the recommendation of three Maricopa County Superior Court judges, Snell formed a partnership with Mark Wilmer and established the law firm of Snell & Wilmer. Snell handled most of the firm's business and commercial aspects while Wilmer served as the firm's trial lawyer.

The Snell & Wilmer LLP Law Offices are still in existence and include offices in California, Utah, Colorado, and Nevada. During Snell's time with the firm he led a group of citizens to secure the resignations of the Mayor and Chief of Police of Phoenix, both of whom were perceived as corrupt. The political situation threatened Phoenix's growth, which was increasing due to the influx of war veterans and their families. Snell also facilitated the merger of the state's two major utility companies to form the Arizona Public Service Company and acquired agreements for the firm's industrial clients outside Phoenix city limits. Finally, the firm handled one of the state's most important lawsuits, Arizona v. California, in the United States Supreme Court. This case secured Arizona's rights to the waters of the Colorado River.

Snell's personal achievements are documented in the activities he participated in outside of Snell & Wilmer. Soon after his move to Phoenix, Snell became friends with Gene Pulliam (owner of The Phoenix Gazette and The Arizona Republic) and Walter Bimson (chief of Valley National Bank). These men comprised the "Big Three" and went on to found the Phoenix 40. With the establishment of these relationships, Snell had a significant impact on Arizona's civic affairs. Some of his accomplishments include founding the American Graduate School of International Management and serving as chairman of the Civic Plaza Art Enrichment Committee. Snell also served as president, director, committee member, and volunteer for many prominent Arizona organizations. His numerous awards include being one of the first inductees to the Arizona Business Hall of Fame in 1987. In 1992, Snell received the Arizona Heritage Award from the Arizona Chamber of Commerce.

While Snell reduced his role in Snell & Wilmer throughout the years, he would still go to his office on a daily basis and continued to participate in organizational and volunteer work. Betty (Berlin) Snell died of cancer in 1983 and Frank Snell married Mary Jean Thompson (who had a daughter, Kirstin, from a previous relationship) in 1987. Snell passed away on September 5, 1994 at the age of 94 and was an active member of the community until two weeks before his death. He was survived by his wife Mary Jean, children Kathryn and Richard, step-daughter Kirstin, six grandchildren, and two great grandchildren.

Scope and Content Note

This collection houses speeches, correspondence (professional and personal), photos, news clippings, programs, brochures and booklets, meeting minutes, agendas, stock certificates, and blueprints documenting Frank L. Snell's personal and professional activities. The majority of the materials show Snell's relationships with various organizations. Large blueprints, oversized material, and three-dimensional objects are stored off site.

Series I: Personal contains biographical information, blueprints, news clippings, photographs, home specifications, stock certificates, and speeches dating from 1949 to 1964. These documents illustrate items of personal interest to Snell. Of particular interest are documents showing Barry Goldwater's presidential campaign that express Snell's political interests. This series is arranged alphabetically.

Series II: Correspondence contains letters and notes that Snell received and sent. The letters include such enclosures as news clippings, programs, membership certificates, business cards, photographs, invitations, and brochures. The majority of the correspondence is of a professional nature but a few personal letters to family and friends are also included. Of particular interest are Governor Lloyd C. Stark's letters regarding the Central Arizona Project (1947) and Snell's resignation letter from Snell & Wilmer. This series is arranged in original chronological order.

Series III: Organizations contains correspondence, meeting minutes, agendas, membership lists, budgets, news clippings, programs, speeches, photographs, and invitations documenting Snell's association with various organizations. Of particular interest are documents showing Snell's work with the Phoenix Civic Plaza. This series is arranged alphabetically.

Series IV: Events contains correspondence, news clippings, programs, invitations, and speeches documenting Snell's involvement in various events from 1966 to 1993. These events include those held in Snell's honor as well as those held to honor others. This series is arranged alphabetically.

Series V: Media contains news clippings that were either sent to or retained by Snell. These clippings describe various people (including obituaries) and the city of Phoenix. Of particular interest is an oral interview with Snell conducted on January 13, 1993 (transcript not available; tape in good condition) and a publication by Snell & Wilmer that includes a brief biography of Snell. This series is arranged alphabetically.

Scope and Content

The papers of Leo Alexander span the years 1883-2001. However, most of the items in this collection fall between the years 1929 and 1947.
The collection includes correspondence, memoranda, trial documents, articles, news clippings, medical research, financial statements, legal documents, telegrams, translated documents, drafts of documents, handwritten notes, personal writings, off-prints, video tapes, photographs, reports, a diary, blueprints, and school notebooks and documents. Many of the documents are in German, with most of the correspondence being in English.
The papers of Leo Alexander relate primarily to his work as a professor of psychiatry and neurology at the Boston City Hospital, Harvard Medical School, Duke University and Peiping Union Medical College. Also included are documents and correspondence from his position as a key medical advisor to the prosecution during the Nuremberg Doctors' Trial. There are also items relating to his personal life in Austria, China and the United States.
The collection includes a visual materials component. For more information, please contact the Curator of Modern Manuscripts.

COLLECTIONS

Library Collections

The Harvard Law School Library is a global library, providing access to the world's legal information. The Library makes every effort to provide its patrons with at minimum a core collection of the primary law, both contemporary and historical, of each of the world's jurisdictions. For more information about our collection practices and policy, see our Collections page.

Historical & Special Collections

With nearly 2,000 linear feet of manuscripts, over 200,000 rare books, and more than 70,000 visual images, Historical & Special Collections houses one of the world's most comprehensive collections of research materials for the study of legal history. Its chief mission is to acquire, catalog, preserve, and make available to researchers materials that document the history of the law in general and of Anglo-American law in particular. For more information, see the HLS Library's Historical & Special Collections portal page.

Digital Collections

The Library is dedicated to digitizing and making available online selections of its rare and important materials. In addition to bringing these materials to a wider audience, digitization facilitates access to unique and valuable materials while preserving and protecting fragile originals. For more information, see our Digital Collections and Exhibitions page.

LIBRARY SERVICES

- Research Training

  During the academic year, research librarians offer classes covering a variety of research-related topics. To view the schedule and sign up, see our research training calendar.

- Research Consultations

  Members of the Harvard University community may request a research appointment with a research librarian who will provide advice on defining your topic, developing your research strategy, locating and using subject-specific data sources, and identifying potential research problem areas. Request an appointment.

- Research Guides

  The Harvard Law School librarians have created research guides covering a full range of legal topics as well as general categories like treatises, legislative history, and publishing. See our research guides to get started.

- Interlibrary Loan

  Interlibrary Loan borrowing is provided to any member of the Harvard Law School community (faculty, students and staff). If you need a book or journal article that is unavailable within the Harvard University library system, we will attempt to borrow it from another library. For more information about ILL at Harvard Law School, see our Interlibrary Loan Services page.

- Resource Purchase Request

  We welcome recommendations for improving our collections. Use our purchase request form to request the purchase of a book, journal, database, electronic resource or other item.

VISITOR POLICIES

- Access

The Harvard Law School Library is a private research facility that exists primarily to support the educational and research needs of the HLS faculty, staff and students by providing a superb collection of legal materials and by offering the highest possible level of service. To the extent consistent with its mission, the Library supports the research needs of the greater Harvard community as well as scholars from outside the Harvard community requiring access to its unique collections. Borrowing is limited to current Harvard ID holders. During exam periods, access is restricted to current HLS affiliates and collection users. Harvard University ID holders can always enter to retrieve a book to check out at the Circulation Desk. Library staff is not available for legal advice. Manuscript and visual materials, along with rare books, are housed in the Library's Historical & Special Collections. For information concerning access to these materials, please see the Harvard Law School Library Historical & Special Collections portal page. For more information, please see our Admission to the Library page.

BIOGRAPHY

Nancy Lee Caroline, daughter of Leo and Zelda Caroline, was born on June 27, 1944, in Newton, Massachusetts. From a young age, Caroline had a strong social conscience and a strong sense of her identity as a Jew; these two qualitites informed many of the professional and personal choices she made throughout her life. She began her medical career while still a teenager, as a photographer and lab worker at Massachusetts General Hospital, and received her B.A. in linguistics from Radcliffe College and her M.D. from Case Western Reserve University in 1966 and 1971, respectively. After carrying out residencies at University Hospitals and the Veterans' Administration Hospital in Cleveland, Ohio, Caroline began a fellowship in critical care medicine at the University of Pittsburgh. In 1974, the university received a grant from the U.S. Department of Transportation to create a curriculum for nation-wide emergency medical services; this project was overseen by Dr. Peter Safar, but much of the work was delegated to Caroline, who also served as advisor to President Gerald Ford on emergency medical services.
Safar also recruited Caroline as medical director of the Freedom House Enterprises Ambulance Service, which provided emergency medical care to the city of Pittsburgh. The ambulance service had been established in 1967, to provide an opportunity for underprivileged African Americans to train as paramedics; the organization had encountered police opposition and financial and administrative difficulties and was on the brink of collapse when Caroline became involved. Despite Caroline's successful rehabilitation of the service, funding was cut in 1975, when the city of Pittsburgh decided to launch its own ambulance service. In 1976, Caroline became deputy director of the emergency department of Shadyside Hospital in Pittsburgh.
In 1977, Caroline immigrated to Israel, where she began work as the first medical director of Magen David Adom, Israel's Red Cross Society. Caroline developed a training program which enabled emergency workers to respond to terrorist attacks within minutes, but she experienced some frustrations with Magen David Adom and left in 1981. She served as medical consultant to several hospitals before relocating, in 1982, to Nairobi, Kenya, to become Senior Medical Officer of the African Medical and Research Foundation (AMREF). At AMREF, she managed the Flying Doctors emergency service, conducted classes for health workers throughout Kenya, Tanzania, Uganda, and southern Sudan, and wrote a weekly health advice column, "Ask Dr. AMREF," for the The Standard, Kenya's main daily newspaper. During this time she also served as a medical consultant for the League of Red Cross Societies, writing a handbook on basic life support and running a Red Cross seminar on first aid for African nations. She also worked with the Ethiopian Orthodox Church to provide better nourishment and health care to children in over 600 orphanages, and developed a non-profit organization, Agro-Africa Limited, which set up small-scale agricultural projects to provide assistance to victims of Kenya's massive droughts. In addition, Caroline served as director of medical programs for the American Joint Distribution Committee in Addis Ababa, overseeing medical projects in the Gondar Province.
Returning to Israel in 1987, she served as medical consultant for the Center for Educational Technology and for AMREF, developing training materials in emergency medicine and writing correspondence courses for rural health workers in Africa. She also served as an adjunct professor at the University of Pittsburgh's medical school, and, on a volunteer basis, as a doctor and medical advisor for Magen David Adom, the Department of Oncology at Chiam Sheba Medical Center, and Tel Hashomer Hospice. In 1995, concerned about the limited care provided patients with advanced cancer, she founded the Hospice of the Upper Galilee; this hospice cared for her when she herself became ill with cancer. In 2002, she married geneticist and molecular biologist Lazarus Astrachan, whom she had first met while in medical school. She died at home in Metulla, Israel, of multiple myeloma on December 12, 2002.
Caroline wrote numerous books and articles, primarily in the field of emergency medical services. In 1979, her book, Emergency Care in the Streets, became the first, and, for a decade, the only, resource for paramedic care; several editions of this book have been published. The following is a list of additional books written by Caroline.

- National Training Course, Emergency Medical Technician, Paramedic: Course Guide, 1977
- Workbook for Emergency Care in the Streets (with James C. McClintock), 3rd edition, 1987
- Ambulance Calls: Review Problems for the Paramedic, 3rd edition, 1991
- CPR for All: An Illustrated Manual of Basic Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation (CPR) in Adults, Children, and Infants (with Ilan Yeshua), 1991
- Emergency Medical Treatment: A Textbook for EMT-As and EMT-Intermediates, 1991
- A Manual for Instructors Adapted to Emergency Medical Treatment, 3rd edition, 1991
- Workbook for Emergency Medical Treatment: Review Problems for EMTs: With Answers, 1991
- Handbook of Prehospital Medications, 1995
- Study Guide for Emergency Care in the Streets, 5th Edition, 1995
- Handbook of Palliative Care (with Alexander Waller), 2nd edition, 2000

SCOPE AND CONTENT

This collection documents Caroline's private and professional life, and provides information on the Freedom House Ambulance Service and on the development of emergency medical care in Israel and Africa. The collection consists of correspondence, diaries, school notes, essays, newspaper columns, articles, and other writings, photographs, school yearbooks, and memorabilia, including wooden objects and sixteen buttons and a ribbon originally attached to a 3.5"x28" strip of fabric. There is material in German, Hebrew, and Yiddish. The bulk of the folder headings were created by Caroline; those folder headings created by the processor appear in square brackets.
The collection is arranged in six series:

- Series I. Family papers
- Series II. Biographical and personal
  - Subseries A. Biographical
  - Subseries B. Personal
  - Subseries C. Diaries
  - Subseries D. Schoolwork and research
- Series III. Writings
  - Subseries A. Articles
  - Subseries B. Other writings
- Series IV. Correspondence
  - Subseries A. By correspondent
  - Subseries B. Correspondence with publishers
  - Subseries C. General correspondence
- Series V. Professional
  - Subseries A. Freedom House Ambulance Service
  - Subseries B. Israel
  - Subseries C. Africa
  - Subseries D. Conferences and speeches
  - Subseries E. Awards, honors, and memorials
  - Subseries F. General
- Series VI. Photographs

Series I, Family papers (#1.1-1.11, OD.1), consists of family trees, and correspondence, essays, poems, and clippings related to members of Caroline's extended family, including her parents, brother Peter, sister-in-law Sally, and nieces Rebecca and Melinda. The series is arranged chronologically.
Series II, Biographical and personal (#1.12-14.10, FD.1-FD.2, OD.1, 47F+B.1v, Mem.1-Mem.19), consists of four subseries, arranged chronologically, except where noted.
Subseries A, Biographical (#1.12-1.17), consists of Caroline's curricula vitae and other items providing information about her life.
Subseries B, Personal (#1.18-3.6, FD.1-FD.2, OD.1, 47F+B.1v, Mem.1-Mem.19), consists of personal items kept by Caroline, such as a coloring book she designed with her brother, visas, passports, and political buttons. Also included are two scrapbooks covering Caroline's life until approximately 1971. These include childhood Valentines, report cards, letters of sympathy on the death of Leo Caroline, and photographs of friends and of neighborhoods in Boston and Cleveland. (Several photographs of Boston's West End are included, as well as Caroline's essays on the demise of that neighborhood.) The scrapbooks also include clippings on local and national events, and items related to Caroline's involvement in the civil rights movement, such as her ticket to the 15th anniversary convention of the Americans for Democratic Action in 1962.
Subseries C, Diaries (#3.7-9.9), offers a detailed look at Caroline's life from the age of 10 to 52. Entries provide information on her schooling; her thoughts about family and religion, particularly her identity as a Jew; her feelings for Israel; work; and romantic relationships. Included is a moving description of her trip to Atlanta in April 1968, to attend Martin Luther King Jr.'s funeral. Pages and entries in several volumes have been torn out, presumably by Caroline. Several folders include clippings in Hebrew or Yiddish. This subseries is closed until December 31, 2012.
Subseries D, Schoolwork and research (#9.10-14.11, OD.1), consists primarily of notes for courses taken at Radcliffe. Also included are school yearbooks, elementary and high school report cards, Caroline's own childhood assessments of her elementary school accomplishments, her undergraduate thesis and correspondence regarding the possibility of its publication, notes on experiments undertaken in medical school, and records dealing with medical boards and licensing. The subseries is arranged in the following groupings: elementary and high school, college, leukemia research (including an unpublished novel), and medical school and licensing.
Series III, Writings (#14.12-16.15), consists of two subseries.
Subseries A, Articles (#14.12-15.9), contains published articles with supporting correspondence. Topics range from the curative powers of chicken soup to death with dignity, to emergency medical response to a terrorist attack. Some rejection slips are also included here.
Subseries B, Other writings (#15.10-16.15), consists of poetry and prose by Caroline, including an unpublished novel, essays on the professors and doctors who played key roles in her life and on experiences in hospital work, memories of her childhood home, other autobiographical writings, some rejected articles, and publicity material for her books. This subseries is arranged chronologically.
Series IV, Correspondence (#16.16-40.5, OD.1, Mem.20-Mem.21), consists of three subseries.
Subseries A, By correspondent (#16.16-31.3, OD.1, Mem.20-Mem.21), includes correspondence with Caroline's mother, brother, and eventual husband, as well as with friends and former teachers. (Correspondence with some of these individuals also appears in Subseries C.) The subseries provides detailed information about Caroline's work, difficulties she encountered, and her feelings about Israel. Some letters sent to Zelda Caroline by other individuals are also included here. The subseries is arranged alphabetically.
Subseries B, Correspondence with publishers (#31.4-35.8, OD.1), is arranged chronologically and consists of correspondence with Little, Brown and Company and other publishers of Caroline's books. Correspondence with co-writers and editors is also included. Caroline's brother Peter provided cartoon illustrations for Ambulance Calls: Review Problems in Emergency Care, and some correspondence focuses on that.
Subseries C, General correspondence (#35.9-40.5), consists of correspondence with a variety of individuals, some of whom are also represented in Subseries A. Some overlap with Subseries B also exists. Correspondence with cousins and other relatives is included here. The subseries is arranged chronologically.
Series V, Professional (#40.6-46.25, FD.1, OD.1-OD.2, Vt-139, DVD-2, Mem.22-Mem.27), consists of six subseries, arranged chronologically, except where noted.
Subseries A, Freedom House Ambulance Service (#40.6-41.7, Mem.22), describes the development, activities, and eventual demise of the ambulance service. Detailed descriptions of daily ambulance runs and types of patients encountered are also included.
Subseries B, Israel (#41.8-42.7, OD.1, SD.1, Mem.23-Mem.24), is arranged first with correspondence and other documents related to Caroline's decision to immigrate to Israel, and her work for, and frustrations with, Magen David Adom, followed by material documenting other aspects of her work in Israel. Included are fragments from a katyusha rocket which almost hit her in 1981. Some material in this subseries is in Hebrew and Yiddish.
Subseries C, Africa (#42.8-45.10, OD.1-OD.2, Mem.25-Mem.27, documents Caroline's work in various regions of Africa. Included are her health column, "Ask Dr. AMREF," correspondence with the African Medical and Research Foundation and other agencies, surveys and health care materials drawn up for Ethiopian orphanages, and materials related to a massacre in Kenya's Northeast Province. These include a detailed account of the massacre and Caroline's efforts to provide aid. The series is arranged with folders related to specific organizations and locales appearing first, followed by more general material.
Subseries D, Conferences and speeches (#45.11-46.1), consists of presentations given by Caroline, and conference programs and announcements.
Subseries E, Awards, honors, and memorials (#46.2-46.10, FD.1, Vt-139, DVD-2), includes honors and awards Caroline received during her lifetime, as well as tributes accorded her after her death.
Subseries F, General (#46.11-46.25, OD.1), includes material related to Caroline's work at Shadyside Hospital as well as letters of recommendation.
Series VI, Photographs (#PD.1-PD.64), includes numerous images of Caroline and family, friends, and colleagues. Photographs of Caroline and emergency workers in Pittsburgh and in Israel and Africa are included, as well as disturbing images of victims of a massacre in Kenya. A number of photograph albums focus on Caroline's farming initiatives in Africa.

OVERVIEW OF THE COLLECTION

Creator: Farwell, Asa J.
Title: Letters
Dates: 1903-1904
Call No.: Doc. 1087
Acc. No.: 77x111
Quantity: 4 items (ca. 106 pages)
Location: 31 G 4

BIOGRAPHICAL STATEMENT

Asa J. Farwell lived in Brooklyn, New York, in 1903-1904, and was a clerk in a bank. That much is certain.

A search of a genealogy web site found Asa J. Farwell, born July 27, 1857, in Connecticut, the son of John I. and Emma Farwell. The father died in 1862 and the mother remarried a Mr. Wraight. She also had daughters named Emma and Catherine Farwell. This Asa died Sept. 1, 1916, and he is buried in Connecticut. He was listed in the 1905 New York state census and the 1910 federal census as being in New York. The 1900 census listed him in Lynn, Massachusetts, living with his mother and his two sisters (evidently both widows).

SCOPE AND CONTENT

This collection of four long letters written by Asa J. Farwell in 1903 and 1904 serves as a travel diary that recounts his journey between Boston and Los Angeles and back to New York. He addressed the first letter to James and the others were to Miss Grimes. All are on illustrated stationery that features pictures of famous sites in California and Colorado. Farwell's route of travel included stops in New York, Chicago, Denver, Colorado Springs, Pueblo, Salt Lake City, Sacramento, San Francisco, Santa Cruz, Long Beach, Pasadena, Catalina Island, and Los Angeles. Highlights of his trip were a visit to the Bronx Zoo, an excursion to Salt Air Beach near Salt Lake City, a festival in San Francisco's Chinatown, a visit to an orange grove and an ostrich farm in Pasadena, a visit to Catalina Island off the coast near Long Beach, and a visit to the Mormon Tabernacle in Salt Lake City. He captured many of the sights in photographs with what he called his "pocket Kodak," which was, at one point, plucked from his hand by an ostrich as he photographed it. On his journey west, his train derailed between Pueblo and Salt Lake City, due to a damaged trestle over a river. Uninjured, he commented on the rescue efforts.

The last letter was not intended to be a description of his journey, although in it, he makes references to photographs he took on his trip. The letter begins with a discussion of opera singers and the best place in Mechanics Hall in Boston to hear opera. Farwell also mentions the noise in his boarding house, the wonderful views from the Brooklyn Bridge, an exhibit of landscapes by George Inness, a visit to the American Museum of Natural History, and writes a bit about Christmas.

Friend James:

I wrote you that I would send you an account of my trip from Los Angeles, and I would have written it before had there been a rainy day or a park[?] [illegible] large enough to write a letter in, but as I stopped at a hotel on one of the principal streets where trams and electrics were constantly passing, I could not get in the mood for writing such an account of the trip as I wanted to.

Here the conditions are decidedly better, as I am sitting on a third story balcony which extends the length of the front of the hotel, from which, as I write, I can get a view of the surf of the Pacific breaking in long lines on the beach. Just now I can see four long lines of the white foaming water stretching along the beach in front of the hotel, while the long pier on which many people are promenading is in view a quarter of a mile or so distant.

I hardly know what to write you for I must limit myself to what I think may interest you for fear of overtaxing your patience, whereas I could really write a book of the sights and experiences of this trip which has been full of interest to me ever since I left Boston. Mind I do not say that the book would interest anyone else, but I have material enough to write one.

I stopped over a couple of days in New York, and there I had an opportunity to see in addition to the grand collection of paintings belonging to the Metropolitan Museum of Art the greater part of George W. Vanderbilt's fine collection, 160 paintings, everyone [sic] of which was by a famous artist; and among which I saw the originals of several engravings with which I was familiar. There was not one among them that was not a masterpiece, and they included fully twenty by Meissonier, one of which the artist had told Mr. Wm. K. Vanderbilt was his very best. I visited the Museum both days, and so I took away a pretty good idea of it.

I also visited Bronx Park, which had been acquired and laid out by the city since I lived there; and I am sure that it will some day become the most celebrated in the country for its zoological collection, as that part has been planned with a long look ahead, and provision has been made for a wonderful growth, which will be wholly along scientific lines as the New York Zoological Society has complete care of it and charge of the plans and arrangements.

They have built a lion house at an expense of $125,000 – which is a wonderful building, having perfect ventilation and sanitary equipment, and in which the accommodations for the animals are grand, each set having a suite of three large rooms, one opening inside the building provided with a high rocky platform on which the animals can rest and take their after dinner siesta; one large open air room opening outside the building, with a like platform; while between and connecting these two rooms is a large cave-like room where the animals can retire and rest in seclusion.

I happened to be in this house when the animals were fed, and it was most interesting to watch the display of their different characteristics.

One cage contained a large lioness and four baby lions, and it was great fun to watch them after they had eaten their dinner: the old one played with the cubs just as a cat would with its kittens, and it was just as gentle, using its huge paws to chide them with just as slight a touch as a cat would. I saw it punish one of the cubs for insisting on keeping to itself an extra piece of bone and meat that was left after the rest had been eaten, and it was more entertaining than a play by trained animals would have been, for this was natural and quite human like.

There were some grand specimens of lions, tigers, &c, in this house, and they all were in perfect condition and looked happy and contented.

The Zoological Society makes a study of the nature and characteristics of the different animals, and their natural habitats, and tries to provide for them houses and conditions a near the natural as possible.

They have an aviary, a large fine building, containing a great variety of birds, but more interesting than this building is what they call the flying cage, which is a framework as large as a big building covered with strong wire netting in which are shrubs and trees, many large ones about which fly countless birds, large and small, ranging in size from a condor measuring at least six feet between tips of wings to a canary. While I was there near the wire side the great condor made a swoop, and I involuntarily jumped back, although he of course could not break through. There were also in this cage white and grey cranes, beautiful pink flamingoes, and ungainly pelicans: all interesting in not being native to New England.

The beavers had a large pond in which there were many trees growing, some of which they were allowed to cut down, which they could do very neatly. The trees reserved were protected by strong wire netting. I was there towards evening, but I did not see a beaver: they will not come out of their houses until evening if anyone is around; and they work at night.

There was also a fine collection of bears, which had natural looking caves provided for their accommodation.

There was also a great variety of other kinds of animals, and it was interesting and pleasant to see the care and study shown in the clearly apparent endeavor to make them comfortable and happy.

I bought my ticket for Los Angeles of the Chicago Burlington & Quincy R.R. and came via Lehigh Valley, CB&Q, Denver & Rio Grande, and Southern Pacific.

I stopped over en route at Chicago, Denver, Colorado Springs, Pueblo, Salida (involuntarily on account of wreck of our train), Salt Lake City, Sacramento, San Francisco, Santa Cruz, and finally reached Los Angeles about two weeks ago.

I have not seen any rain with the exception of night [illegible] since I left N.Y. City: at first I wished for a shower or rainy day for a change and to freshen things up and wash off the dust, but now I have gotten so used to this continuing pleasant weather that I do not think of rain at all and enjoy this as it is.

I stopped at Denver only during a morning and part of an afternoon, but I managed to see a great part of the city and most of the sights by taking a trolley ride called “Seeing Denver,” which extended about twenty miles and took in most of the city except the best residential part: this I walked through, and so I consider that I saw most of Denver; and I was not greatly impressed with it. Perhaps it was because it was the first Western city that I had seen, and expected too much.

Colorado Springs is not very large although it would seem that they try to impress you with its size by charging a double fare on the electrics whenever you go. But what it lacks in size it makes up in points of interest: one could easily remain there for weeks. I remained only two days, and I crowded into that time so much that I am thinking of stopping over there again in order to get just impression of its surrounding grandeur.

I took the trip up Pike’s Peak by cog-road at 2 a.m. on a bright moonlight night in order to see the sun-rise. The trip up the mountain, which took over two hours, was a fine one, as the bright moonlight enabled us to see quite an extent of the scenery which had a decidedly weird[?] appearance: and the electric lights of the cities of Pueblo, fifty miles distant, and Colorado Springs showed up brightly.

There was quite a heavy mist at sunrise but no clouds, and so, although we missed seeing the sun come up, as it were, out of a sea, we did see it apparently come up through a crack in what appeared a flat dark surface: we could see this dark flat surface extending back and in front of the red round disc which was coming up through what, as I have said, appeared to be a crack. It was a peculiar sight and I risked several films in trying to photograph it with my pocket Kodak, and I hope that I shall get some sort of a picture of it.

Pike's Peak is 14,147 ft. high hence the rarified atmosphere was very noticeable. When I stepped from the car at the top I noticed it quite perceptibly, but soon I could skip about the rocks right lively. Several of us hunted for snow, and found a little after quite a hunt in a crevise [sic]. One could probably find as much with less trouble on Mt. Washington.

The height of Pike's Peak does not show from Colorado Springs and vicinity, as the town is nearly 6000 ft. high or almost as high as Mt. Washington, hence the Peak appears to be about 8000 ft. high.

The descent on the cog-road was most interesting as the day was a fine one and the views were perfect. I sat on the rear seat of the rear car, where I could see all the steep grades, and they were many and might steep.
[sheet 5]

But really, Cheyenne Canyon impressed me more, for there one sees precipitous slides thousands of feet high separated by only a narrow space through which flows a stream which makes a series of seven falls, most beautiful! before it reaches the level. There is a series of flights of stairs extending to the top of the falls, but the sides of the canyon are considerable higher: I walked up the stairs and attempted to climb the rest of the distance to the top, but the path was gravelly, and hence the footing insecure which made me feel that there was a liability of slipping over the edge, although there was not as the path was several feet wide, yet the feeling of insecurity so different from that given by the firm granite footing of the White Mts. nearly unnerved[?] me when the path approached the edge, and I had carefully to make may way back to the top of the stairs. I hope to visit the canyon again and to be able to sit at the top of these stairs for an hour or more that I may absorb more fully the sense of grandeur: it is truly one of the most wonderful places I have ever seen.

I also visited the "Garden of the Gods" at Manitou, but I was really disappointed in its wonders, for it took quite an imagination to appreciate many of the objects they pointed out; yet it was well worth visiting.

At Colorado Springs I also saw many of those peculiar animals, the burros. I bought a book containing photographs of them, and I sent you some so that you may see how they appear around Colorado Springs, for I should think that most of the photos were taken there. I saw a whole cavalcade of them at the top of Pike's Peak, and saw them start on the homeward trip. I say that I saw them start, for it was impossible for their riders or the assistants to start them, before they were ready of their own free will to make the start themselves. I saw several persons at work on a single burro, but the little fellow looked around unconcernedly until he took it into his head to start, when he ambled along the path as though he had lots of time and did not intend to hurry.

I photographed several little tots on them at Cheyenne Canyon and in the "Garden of the Gods," and I hope that I was successful in getting good pictures, for they looked mighty cute.

I stopped over in Pueblo to get a good night's rest for I had only four or five hours sleep at Colorado Springs owning to taking the Pike's Peak train so early in the morning.

I went to Pueblo because Colorado Springs was overcrowded and it was impossible to get good accommodations there.

At Pueblo I first realized the different between the effect of high temperature in a dry atmosphere and that in the East. The thermometer registered over 90°, and, while I stood in the sunshine waiting for a car, I was somewhat conscious of it, but when I stepped back into the shade of a tree I felt comfortable. In like manner at Los Angeles last Friday the thermometer registered 95°, yet I could walk briskly in the sunshine without perspiring, and when about 1 o'clock I sat in the shade of a large peppertree at the ostrich farm I was really comfortable, and I had no idea that the temperature was so high: truly there is a difference!

I had quite a little trouble at Pueblo in endeavoring to get a seat in car for Salt Lake City owing to their running the trains in sections made up principally of Pullman cars and with certain cars reserved for organizations of the Grand Army: after I had tried several sections, and spent a couple of hours in chasing after the trains as they came in, I went to the Superintendent and complained, and insisted that if I did not get a seat on the next train I would hunt through the railroad yard for an empty car, and if I found one I would make him attach it to the train. As a result of this complaint I was informed when the next train came in, and allowed to get a seat in it a half hour before the rest of the passengers were admitted.

And what do you think! This seat was in about the worst position in a railroad wreck, for our car was twisted and our part the rear of car rested almost on its side more than halfway down a sixty foot embankment, being attached to another car which rested wholly on its side.

The accident occurred at half past ten o'clock at night, and was caused by a cloud-burst wreaking the supports of a trestle over a waterway. The engineer of the first engine, there were two on the train, was looking from the cab-window as we approached this place, and he said that the track looked straight and perfectly firm, but when the engine got on to trestle he felt it give, and then he knew that there would be an accident, and so he put on full steam hoping to get the train over, but his engine broke away from the second and stopped in the wreck two hundred feet ahead of it.

The way the train appeared after the wreck was as follows: the first engine was off the track two hundred feet ahead of the train; the second engine, with its tender tipped over, was next; the baggage car had fallen on its top to the foot of the embankment and had split its sides apart and smashed the front end into kindling wood; the smoker rested on its front end down along (kaTa) the side of embankment; the next car was on top of embankment but off the track; our car, which was next, was at its front end attached to this car, and at the rear end attached to the Tourist car, which lay on its side at foot of embankment, hence it was twisted and our part was almost on its side three quarters down the embankment; the Tourist car was on its side with rear part in five feet of water; the Pullman coaches, three in number, broke away from Tourist car and remained on track on other side of trestle.

I was occupying a seat in chair car and had just made myself comfortable for several hours' sleep: in fact, I had called to a gentleman across the isle [sic] that I was good for at least six hours sleep and was just dozing when there came a strong sudden jar, at which I jumped up and grabbed the back of seat in front, and then began to perform like a monkey on a stick, conforming as much as possible to the jolting and swaying and the gradual turning over and slipping back of the car.

When the car had settled firmly I shoved my window back, for it was almost horizontal, and raised myself by my hands and arms, as I used to do in the gymnasium on parallel bars and looked out. It was a wild and terrible sight that met my eyes, for high up on the track across the broken trestle I could see the lights of the Pullman coaches, while between them and our car was what appeared to be a rushing, roaring river, while the Tourist car was nowhere to be seen. I thought that it must be in the water, and my heart seemed to stop beating, and I dropped back into the car. Then I raised myself again and sat on the side of the window, when a man in car rushed up and told me to jump. I told him that it was no place to jump, and, when he insisted and was going to jump himself, I asked him to hand me my grip and I would show him, which I quickly did by tossing it on what he said was solid ground when [or where] it bounded back and disappeared down the embankment under the car. Then I told him that I would creep along on the side of the car and find a place where we could step from car to firm ground, and that I would knock on window there, and I told him to open that one and we would help passengers out.

This we did, and after I had helped many of the passengers from window to the firm ground, they handed me a child about two or three years old, and when I turned to hand it on there wasn't anyone to whom to hand it, and so, as the mother came out next with an infant, and I knew that they were traveling alone, I saw that my duty lay there, and hence I took charge of the little family and made them as comfortable as possible until they could be transferred to a Pullman car that was made ready for injured and children.

They only thing I personally saved from the wreck was my umbrella, which I used as a cane to steady me as I crept along the car, but my grip was found for me, and even my pocket Kodak was brought to me: the only thing I lost was a hat. I was unable to hunt for anything, as the little child I took charge of went to sleep after the excitement had subsided. It seemed strange to me that some woman did not come forward to help, but not one offered.

One of the tram-men, who had been in three wrecks before, said that considering the condition of the cars after the wreck our escape was truly miraculous; for only two passengers were seriously injured: one man had his leg broken, and a woman had her shoulder badly bruised. Some thirty had received bruises, including the lady who had received a bad bruise by hitting its face against the arm of the seat.
[sheet 9]

A young man who was stealing a ride on tender of second engine was thrown against a rock and he had his skull fractured.

After the wreck we had to return to Salida, a small town about seventeen miles back, and here we were detained until the next afternoon, when I proceeded to Salt Lake City, where I stopped two days.

Salt Lake City is a beautiful city, one of the very finest I have ever seen, but its atmosphere is something fierce. The first afternoon I spent there I thought that the water was brackish, but I was informed that that was impossible, as the water came from the mountains. On the second day, I felt as though I had a sore throat and had gargled with salt and water, while during the next day it seemed as though the roof of my mouth was encrusted with salt and my tongue was parched and dry, so that really I felt comfortable only while I was drinking ice-cream soda through straws. Previous to visiting Salt Lake City I had tried only one ice-cream soda, but I think that I made up for my missed opportunities on the second day I spent there. But, as I have said, the city is a beautiful one.

One afternoon I went out to Salt Air Beach, the shore resort of the city. It happened to be what the management termed “Ladies’ Day,” when all ladies and children were given a free excursion and free admittance, and I should really think that nearly all the ladies and children had taken advantage of the invitation, for our train numbered 21 cars and I counted 22 cars on a train arriving later, and we found a multitude there when we arrived. The principal attraction of the place was the bathing, which I failed to participate in, as, owing to the numbers, it was impossible within a reasonable time to get a key to a bath-house appartment [sic].

It is said to be great fun, as the water is so heavy with salt (five pails of the water provides by evaporation one pail of salt) that it is difficult to keep ones feet on the bottom, and should they get off the bottom there is no way to get them back, and one has to float in, taking care to keep face above the surface. While I was standing there someone shouted “I have learned to float!” to which someone else added “Couldn’t help it!”

Along the route to the beach we saw a number of large shallow reservoirs to which water of the lake is brought by an aqueduct and here evaporated producing vast quantities of crude salt, which is afterwards refined and marketed. The aqueduct leaked in spots; and here “salt-cylces” formed by evaporation, and while the train was delayed here a few minutes, many rushed and secured some: I was given a piece of one, and I found that it was slightly stronger than the roof of my mouth tasted.

Between Salt Lake City and Sacramento I again had to assert my right to a seat on the train in return for a first-class ticket, and after a contest of brains with the conductor was permitted to occupy seat in Pullman sleeper until they added a car at Truckee (for my personal convenience the conductor said); which they had declined to do at Ogden some five hours earlier. After our argumentative debate in the presence, I afterward learned, of the Division Superintendent, he asked me if I was a lawyer, and on my replying that I was not, he volunteered the opinion that I ought to be. He told me the next morning that in the twenty one years that he had been conductor on that road that was the first time that it had worked: he said that people had often gotten into the sleepers without special tickets, but they had always gotten them

out. But I would not pay extra for a seat in the sleeper as I did not want a berth, as they are stuffy and I stopped over at some city every other night and had a good bath at a hotel and a good night's rest and continued my journey next day refreshed.

I had been told years ago that it was the law that a first-class ticket entitles the holder to a seat on the train: if there should not be one in chair car but an unoccupied in the Pullman then the holder of the first-class ticket is entitled to that until a seat has been provided for him in chair car. I found that information of value as it saved me from paying for what I did not want, and it helped not only myself but many who had been standing or sitting on the arms of seats for the five hours until the car was added (for my personal convenience according to conductor).

The kind of car differed a little, but the principle was the same, and Massachusetts law prevailed.

I stopped over a day in Sacramento and found it to be a fine little city, with a beautiful capitol situated in the middle of a small park ornamented profusely with luxuriant flowers and shrubs and trees of semi-tropical growth. Here I saw my first examples of such, and they compare well with what I have seen since: I felt repaid for stopping over even[?] by the beauty of the scene.

I spent two weeks in San Francisco, and I must say that it is the most like an Eastern city of the New York & Boston type that I have seen since leaving New York & Chicago. There is an air of business to it that causes one to brace up and move lively and, the people look like Eastern people, and have the same air about them. A healthier looking people I never saw: it struck me so one day, and then I took notice for a time, and was surprised to note the result of my observation. I suggested that it might be a case of the "survival of the fittest," as the climate is pretty severe, but I was told that it was due to the fogs, which, but in another sense, was really the pith of my idea.

I hope that my little mementoes arrived safely, and in good condition: I had great pleasure in selecting them, as it was like visiting again the World's Fair, for I saw things as wonderfully curious and beautiful as I did there, and the selecting gave me an excuse with a purpose for visiting wonderful stores and examining goods that could well have a place in a museum.

I did not go "through Chinatown" in the accepted sense of the term, for I neither went into or under, and hence saw none of the disagreeable features, but I went through the streets of Chinatown and have many pleasant impressions of it.

One day while passing through I saw a group of youngsters just going into a mission school, and had the pleasure of taking a snap-shot of those who were willing to be photographed. One of the group, a little fellow about 5 years old the teacher said, asked me if I would give him one, and when I told him that I would send him one if he would give me his address, he gave it promptly and fully without any hesitation.

Another day a little fellow asked me if I would take his photograph which I did, and he wrote out his address which was in care of the Mun Kee Telephone Co. A queer name as pronounced, isn't it? He asked me if I would send him five, which I hope to have the pleasure of doing.

I also took a number of photographs of the ladies and children of Chinatown arrayed in their very best: many of the costumes were richly embroidered and all were genuinely Chinese.
[sheet 13]

It seems that it was a festival celebration which occupies three days of the year, when the ladies hold receptions where they display the work in embroidery, &c, which they have done during the year, and all visit each other and view the work.

They apparently would meet and form processions, and many of these would number as many as twenty, ranging in age from small children to elderly women. Some bands would carry large white feather fans, others embroidered silk ones, and many wore stilt-like shoes which kept the feet, supported under the instep, several inches from the ground.

By using my pocket-kodak I was able to get many photographs, which I think will made interesting pictures.

San Francisco also resembles the large cities of the East in its street-car service. The cars are very inferior, but one does not have to wait many minutes on the corner, and their transfer system is excellent.

One thing I missed in San Francisco that is a feature of most cities, namely a fine residential section. I hardly saw what one could call a really fine residence, one that was worth standing to admire; and as for an ensemble, any street or section of a street, I did not see one that was worth visiting a second time.

I visited their principal art gallery, and found that only a dozen or so really great artists were represented, and they by only a single example of their work.

But they have a fine park, and when they have the right kind of weather the people can enjoy it. I attempted to write a letter there one Sunday, and listened while doing so to many remarks such as; “He ought to be writing by his own fireside with a good log burning on the hearth”; and I had to acknowledge the good sense of this later, as I caught a cold which affected a defective wisdom-tooth, so that as a result I had a swollen face for nearly two weeks.

And I saw on that day that which, if I could have gotten it into my camera, would have typified the San Francisco climate. In the parade of carriages during the band concert I saw in one carriage two ladies dressed in flimsy white and carrying white parasols edged with deep white lace, looking decidedly Summery, while in the third carriage behind them was a lady wearing a large fur cape: I wished much for my Kodak!

It is a common sight to see men wearing overcoats and straw hats.

I went over to Berkeley where the California University is located, and while there happened upon a baseball game between the freshmen and sophomores, and actually saw sophomores applaud a freshman’s good play! And there was no cheering or encouragement given either nine until nearly the close of the game: during most of it the students, of whom there were hardly more than a hundred present, were perfectly quiet. I couldn’t account for it: it is so different in the East. One student explained it by lack of class feeling; and I should think that there was a lack of something!

I saw the wonderful seal-rocks, and watched the clumsy animals tumble each other into the water; and listened so attentively to their barking that I was able to recognize from afar that of the poor lone seal in West Lake Park Los Angeles. The poor seal there gets lonesome apparently and makes friends with everybody: and, too, it has not water enough to dive in, and what there is is not kept fresh enough. It strikes me that it is almost worthy the attention of the society with the long name.

I went out to the Presidio several times. On one day I saw a fine drill by several batteries of heavy artillery; on another I enjoyed an athletic field-day of the 7th infantry; while on a third I saw a dress parade by the 7th. There were several squadrons, about a dozen companies, of cavalry there, but they were without mounts as they were there only as a rendezvous preparatory to leaving for the Philippines.

The Presidio is an immense place and an ideal one for the purpose: its location is magnificent, looking out on the Golden Gate.

I am inclined to believe that you will think this is a long letter, but really
[sheet 15]

if I get a chance I am going to continue it at San Francisco, and the only way you can avoid being made "twice tired" will be by refusing to read the second installment.

Of course, you will not think that I have written this at one sitting (the different dates[?] do not affect it), and you are at full liberty to take as many in reading it: and I hope that you will survive[?].

With kind regards to all I will close this long instalment [sic].

Yours sincerely,
Asa J. Farwell

P.S. By the way please tell your father that those "[illegible]" were a memento, and I hope that he has found them of use.

Letter 2: Nov. 22, 1903, written from New York

This letter is written on 8 sheets of stationery, decorated with California poppies, and each with 3 photographic images. (The same style stationery was used for letter 4.)

The images are as follows:

New York, Nov. 22/03

My dear Miss Grimes:

I was very pleased to learn that my first instalment [sic] did not thoroughly tire you all, for I can now take advantage of you to change this rainy Sunday in New York into one of sunshine by spending it in memory in the "Land of Sunshine and Flowers." Think of a land where from the 1st of May until October one can count on every day being sunshiny, and where the flowers bloom profusely every month in the year except one! Where geraniums, fuschias [sic] and heliotrope, almost constantly in bloom, grow to the height of ten to fifteen feet! I stopped at a hotel, the Sea Beach, at Santa Cruz where the broad piazza, at the height of half a dozen steps from the ground, was screened by geraniums, fuchsias and heliotrope instead of vines; and the evenings I spent there, which happened to be at the full of the moon, sitting on the piazza looking out through this screen over a sloping lawn luxuriant with semi-tropical foliage onto the moonlit Pacific while inhaling the sea air scented with the heliotrope, are truly memorable. It seems that this hotel is called in Los Angeles and San Francisco, and, perhaps throughout the state, "the Spoon-holder." Perhaps you may guess why, but in order that you may not miss the joke I will tell you: they say that is is especially favored by the "Richardsons." The scene as I saw it was truly most poetic!

If I remember rightly I ended my first instalment [sic] at the close of my first visit in San Francisco.

On my way from there to Los Angeles I stopped over a couple of days at Santa Cruz with the intention of visiting the redwoods, but, as I found that our train had really passed through the grove, and that I had had an excellent view of many of them, I decided not to spend a day in visiting them, but to enjoy the beauty of the ocean from the beach and cliffs at Santa Cruz.

The redwoods were not disappointing in appearance, although I, of course, did not see the very tallest, which are in Mariposa Grove in another part of the state: the ones I saw were only from 200 to 300 feet high, but they were tall enough to give one an excellent idea of what a redwood is.
[sheet 2]

The beach at Santa Cruz is a fine one and perfectly safe, but the cliffs, so called, are not to be compared with the sturdy rocky ones of New England. They were composed of some material that is soft and consequently easily worn away by the action of the ocean into caverns and natural bridges; and as they are slippery in addition to being soft they give an insecure footing that takes away the pleasure in climbing about them, in just the same way that the gravelly composition of the Rockies does. I saw some splendid surf caused by merely the natural swell of the ocean. You know no storm sirs the ocean there from May 1st to October!

On my way from Santa Cruz I had a rather odd experience, at which I could laugh as it happened not to cause me any inconvenience, whereby my ignorance of Spanish pronunciation cost me 65 cents. I knew by my railroad time-table that I must change cars at Pajaro, which I read Pa-jar-o, and so when the brakeman called out something in regard to Par-har-o without mentioning Los Angeles, I paid no attention to it, and consequently I had to pay them 65 cents for the privilege of meeting the Los Angeles train at the next station. The joke is that I one Winter started to study Spanish and French at the same time, but as I found that words spelled identically alike in both languages had radically different pronunciations I stopped the Spanish for the sake of the French: thus was the Spanish language avenged!

And what can I write about Los Angeles! Or rather to what can I limit myself?

It is a beautiful clean city with stores and hotels comparing well with the best in New York and Boston, though of course smaller, and with many interesting and delightful suburbs: for Pasadena and the beaches are really only suburbs of Los Angeles, as they are connected with the city by electric railroads which are I am inclined to believe, as I have heard them called, the finest in the world.
[sheet 3]

One road especially, that from Los Angeles to Long Beach, has a road-bed and rails superior to many steam-roads, and its cars are like the finest passenger coaches, while they think nothing of making the distance between Los Angeles and Long Beach, 22 miles, in half an hour: as several miles of this distance are within Lost Angeles the greatest part must be made at the rate of a mile a minute, but this speed is made without any discomfort whatever, as the road is nearly straight and well ballasted, which the rails and cars are heavy. It makes a grand ride!

And the roads to Redondo, Santa Monica, and San Pedro, on the shore, and the two to Pasadena in the other direction, rank well with this one.

Pasadena is probably the suburb (this would undoubtedly call forth a protest from the residents) of which you have heard most. It is a beautiful city, having many fine residences, in fact it is distinctively a city of homes for they are mostly single, each with its own grass-plot and palm, presided over by the ever present garden-hose, which is a necessary attachment to every house; for where no rain falls from May to October it requires lots of stored water to keep the lawns green.

At first the brown appearance of the mountains hills and vacant lots caused me to wish: “Oh! For a good rain to wash the dust off and freshen up nature,” but after awhile I became used to the appearance of the hills and was content to look to the lawns for the green, and to enjoy the continuous sunshine and the freedom from that often weighty question as to whether I should carry an umbrella or not.

They say there that one can tell an Easterner by the umbrella he carries under his arm, and, after I had been there a month or more, I was not surprised at seeing two umbrellas in a curio store, for it really seemed a very appropriate place for them.

[sheet 4]
At Pasadena are many orange groves, and, although I was there really between seasons and most of the oranges were of deep green color, I saw many ripe ones on tree and ground. The trees ranged in size from that of a bush to that of a large apple-tree, the smaller bearing the choisest [sic] oranges.

I was surprised to learn that orange-groves require even more attention that a vegetable garden: I thought that an orange-grove in Southern California, where frosts are unknown, was like an apple orchard in New England, but it is decidedly different.

Before planting an orange-grove it is necessary to first provide a wind-break, then the best trees are grafted on three year old lemon trees: the orchard has to be ploughed and fertilized each year, and the ground must be kept loose and smooth, and the trees must be pruned and sprayed, and the fruited thinned out: in fact, a large grove requires almost constant attention to bring the best results. An orchard left to itself soon shows its neglect.

While writing about Pasadena I must not omit the Ostrich Farm, which is a mighty interesting place, as they have there over 160 large birds and a number of “chickens”; while Mr. & Mrs. Washington you will be told are patiently sitting 40 days and 40 nights on a nest of eggs, which you can see if you happen to be around when the patience is shifted. I happened to be on hand during one of the interims, and I should think that there were about a dozen eggs in the nest: I snapped a photo of Mr. W just as he was about sitting down. I took a small pocket-Kodak with me, and I have many interesting souvenirs in consequence.

While at the farm, I thought that I should like to take a photograph of an ostrich’s head, and so I held the camera at the top of the fence to their enclosure and waited as one approached, noting in the finder the head becoming larger until suddenly there was an eclipse, which I found was due to the ostrich having taken the front part of the camera between its beak. I touched the button but fear that I did not get any photograph, as, you know, it requires a time exposure for an interior view.

I just missed seeing several of the birds “plucked.” This sounds cruel, but they are not hurt as the feathers are cut several inches from the wing proper, and the stubs dry and fall off, so the ostrich suffers no pain. They spread out the wing of one bird that would be ready for plucking in two months, and it looked as if it would already make a fine fan.

The chickens grow very rapidly, something I should judge as a St. Bernard puppy does: you can almost see them grow. I think that I sent a photo of some just hatched: I enclose a small one of them at the age of five weeks.

The beaches of Los Angeles, one might say as they are so directly connected with the city, Redondo, Santa Monica, and Long Beach, are all fine ones: Redondo being the least attractive, and Long Beach, I think, the most. Santa Monica has a stretch of beach fully three miles long with cottages extending the whole distance: one part called Ocean Point has a settlement of modern substantial and pretty cottages with small well-kept grass-plots facing on regular streets running back from the beach: it must be a fine Sumer resort for families, for everything about it is first-class and the people that I saw on the porches and piazzas and promenading on the wide board walks looked substantial and “all right”: and the beach is of the whitest sand.

[sheet 6]
But the ocean I think is best at Long Beach, for there, due probably to some conformation, the natural swell of the ocean on the incoming tide produces four distinct lines of white surf.

I think that I wrote of the pleasure I had in writing a whole Sunday while sitting on the third story piazza of a hotel looking out on that beautiful phase of the Pacific.

All the beaches have long piers extending into the ocean, and here again I think Long Beach surpasses the others, for its pier, conveniently located and connected with a fine pavillion [sic], is long and kept in excellent order as a promenade, while the one at Santa Monica, although celebrated for its length, is remote and hence somewhat inaccessible to the best part of the beach: that at Redondo has two lines of railroad track on it, and is almost always blocked by lumber or other merchandise unloading from vessels along its sides. All the piers usually have from fifty to a hundred men, women and children fishing from their sides, some of whom arrive early to get good positions and often do not adjourn even for lunch, as this is brought to them by friends or relations [or relatives], and remain until it grows dark.

I have at different times watched them for a half hour or so sitting there patiently without being rewarded with even a bite, and I have heard some say as they reeled in their lines" "I have not had a bite the whole afternoon." I cannot understand such patience: but, of course, they do sometimes get good and many fish, but such times seemed to me to be the exception.

I visited Redondo several times for the great sport of gathering moonstones, so called. One part of the beach is called Moonstone Beach, for here, owing to something nobody seemed to know what, the ocean brings in and displays, for the space of time represented by the interim between the waves, stones called by some moonstones, by others water opals; and if one is spry he can sometimes secure a gem before the next wave takes them back. On two different occasions I was quite successful and I send you herewith a few testimonials to my agility. I would state that if one does not secure the stone when shown it is useless to seek it, for it is not covered by the sand but taken back.

From Long Beach several small gasoline launches run to the different points of interest every day during the season; one of them even taking parties to Catalina Island twenty seven miles out in the ocean. They asked me to make one of a party on one occasion, but I took a good look at the small boat and then thankfully declined. But they knew the Pacific better than I did, and made the trip without accident: a boat of that size would not be used even in the outer harbor of Boston.

I took the trip later on a larger steamer, and shall always treasure the memory of that visit to that peculiar place. It is unnecessary to state that the day was fine, for all the days were fine ones, and the sail over most enjoyable. I tried to realize that I was on the Pacific, and I succeeded when I saw a peculiar looking animal flitting[?] along a few feet above the water, supporting itself on what appeared to be a double set of wings, but, as I noticed that it glistened in the sunshine, I was not deceived into thinking, as a young lady did, who, on seeing one on the other side of the boat, exclaimed: "Oh, see that queer bird"! for I thought at once that it must be a flying-fish, and my estimate was confirmed later by a folder that was passed around, which in describing the trip over mentioned that the steamer often started them up. But the sight of it helped me to appreciate the fact that I was on a strange ocean.

Avalon Catalina Island is a most peculiar place, wholly and only a place of transcient [sic] resort, and when I returned to Los Angeles I was really glad to get back to a really live and everyday city, but owing to this peculiarity it is well worth visiting; but I should not care to remain there long.

Well, I think that I had better give you a chance to recuperate, for it will really require another instalment [sic] for me to complete the trip; and I am going to take that advantage of you – but you can remain at Avalon if you choose, and I will give you my word that it is a place of quiet and rest.

I was glad to hear that the second cup & saucer reached you safely: the artist-proprietor packed it himself, and he assured [several words along the fold line are difficult to read] safely, and his assurance was evidently based on sound knowledge, for the second one I sent my sister-in-law also arrived unbroken, although the wooden box enclosing it did not fare so well.

I took great pleasure in making the purchases in the Japanese & Chinese stores, for they were veritable museums; and I am glad that the souvenirs pleased you. By the way, I am going to take the liberty to send you what I intended to be a part of the memento, but which, owing to a misunderstanding of Mr. Weisman's, I did not receive until my return from my trip. Has your father used the micro-audiphones[?] enough to get used to them? I hope so, as my cousin says that they really did help him, but he would not get used to them.

I have had a hundred or so of my trip negatives printed, and some of them are capital: I will enclose a few: if I had had the camera at Franconia I should have gotten a fine photo of those kittens sparring I am sure. I suppose that these incubator chicks are now good sized chickens: what did James think of the ostrich "chicks"? With kind regards to all .

Yours sincerely,
Asa J. Farwell

My dear Miss Grimes:

Perhaps before leaving you at Avalon Catalina Island, as I did in my second instalment [sic], I should have described the place so that you could have better appreciated your sojourn there: Excuse the omission, please, and permit me to supply it in this third test of your endurance.

Avalon is surrounded on three sides by high hills, while it fronts on a bay so protected from breezes that there is hardly more than a ripple on the water any time unless the wind comes from the North-east, which very seldom happens:

hence the air is fairly lifeless and the atmosphere oppressive, while the stillness is weirdly unnatural, for, as there is practically only one street, a very wide one edging on the shore and backed by the hotels and stores, there are no teams rattling about as there is no need of them, for hand-trucks serve all requirements.

It seems in reality what they term it: “An Enchanted City”; under some spell.

When the sun shines brightly it is decidedly beautiful, but when the sun does not shine it has an unnatural gloom and oppression, that, as I have said, gives one the impression of enchantment. I would not care to remain there long, but I would like to visit it again “in the season.”

It is described as being “a land of dreams,” and it even now seems as though it were a dream that I was there: it is a mighty peculiar place. I took several photos of the place, and I shall prize them as substantiations of the impressions.

[sheet 2]
I cannot describe the impression of the unnatural quiet! Even the tide rises and falls without producing noise, and the occasional shout of a bather is heard all along the beach and strikes one as a shock: and the voices of a couple of boat agents soliciting patronage for trips to the beaches seem wholly out of place and sound like mockery.

And if one yields and takes a trip the idea of enchantment is intensified, for you make the trip with eyes riveted toward the bottom of the boat, where, through large panes of glass, you view the “Gardens of Neptune”; and seem to be yourself, buy the ever-changing scene, passing through and among the beautiful flowers, shrubs, and trees, a very companion of the countless golden, blue, and varied colored fish of all sizes and many shapes.

It is a wonderful trip, and the impression a strange one.

I went out fishing and caught a twenty pounder --- in my camera: another man in the boat hooked it and brought it into the boat: I got three different photographs of the operation. But, as I did not get even a bite, the fishing hardly seems real: you may smile at this, but I had company, as the majority of the party experienced a like unreality.

The twenty pounder gave us the best catch of the day, but hardly reconciled the party to the failure to make a season’s record.

[sheet 3]
I climbed one of the hills to a wireless telegraph station, but as the foot-trail, path we should call it, was of the usual loose gravel, and in some places quite steep, I chose to make a detour and to return by the wagon-trail -- after I was struck with a chill at just missing sprawling all over an opuntia robusta (as you may not be aware of what an opuntia robusta is, I will explain), a wide-spreading cactus of great lobster-claw pattern, with which the hillside abounded. I think that opuntia robusta has the right sound to it to express the impression it made on me at that time: for it was truly formidable.

I was afterwards told that the paths were really quite dangerous, persons slipping from them frequently, and sometimes with serious injury. A gentleman told me that he had seen a man killed that season by falling from a path which I had been recommended to climb for the sake of a view; but I had told them that there was no fun in climbing their gravel heaps, and I could dispense with the view. I took some photographs of Avalon and vicinity, and they all seem in deep shadow and really characteristic of the place.

Catalina Island is celebrated for its fishing, and during each season several black sea-bass are caught weighing from 300 lbs to the weight of the record fish 487 lbs; as well as many tunas, arranging [?] five feet and more in length: both kinds giving the fisherman an exhausting fight of from three to five hours’ duration.

A sport in true keeping with the “peculiarity” of the island is sometimes indulged in when the guests go gunning for flying fish. Where else would men go fishing with a gun!

I visited an aquarium there and saw what appeared to be flowers eat fish; saw them while in the process of eating.

You will probably recognize the “flower” as the Sea Anemone: I had never seen them feeding before, and so found it interesting.
[sheet 4]
I saw sea-porcupines; fish with beautiful opal-like eyes; fish that climbed over rocks; starfish that were climbing up the glass side of their tank; electric fish; specimens of the horrible octopus; and, in fact, fish of enough peculiarities to give one a nightmare: again in keeping with the pervading impression of the place.

It is truly a strange place, and the return to Los Angeles was like returning to the real from the unreal.

I spent several days at Los Angeles after my visit to Catalina Island, and visited with keen pleasure the beautiful locality about Chester Place.

By the way, I believe that in describing so fully the suburbs of Los Angeles I omitted to say much about the city itself.

This Chester Place is really the very most beautiful (excuse, please, the tautology, for it is worth it) street I have ever seen. I wish that you all could see it, for I am not equal to a description of it. But I will try just to give you some idea of it.

It is not a long street, and is protected at both ends by beautiful high double-swinging iron gates of handsome design and supported by graceful ornamental granite posts, such as you may see at the entrance of some fine private estate. Whether these gate are ever closed I do not know, but I hardly think so, as the city evidently controls and takes care of the roadway.

The residences, about twenty in number, set back from the street and are surrounded on sides and front by green velvety lawns extending to the edge of the wide granolith walk, and being embellished with graceful date-palms and luxuriant semi-tropical shrubs and flowering plants which show in their arrangement the hand of a skilled landscape gardener.

Between the sidewalk and the curbing is another stretch of fine lawn fully ten feet wide, through the center of which extends a row of tall palms and yuccas at regular intervals, planted around which and trained up to whose trunks to the height of ten feet or so are geraniums, heliotrope, morning glories, ivy, and several varieties of vines bearing lavender, scarlet, blue, and other colored blossoms, while between these trees are interspersed large century plants, beautiful lilies of various colors, flowering coleus, and many Southern plants.
[sheet 5]

My favorite point of view was at the end of the street, where, in the shade of a large pepper tree, I looked out on a picture framed by its graceful dropping foliage. Opposite was a residence built of wood painted a bright canary yellow with white trimmings, having in front four large white pillars extending up two stories supporting the roof of a wide porch: while its lawn, bordered next the house with variegated flowers, was embellished with artistically arranged shrubs and trees of various kinds, including a grand specimen of the beautiful date-palm.

The next residence, forming a background for another arrangement of shrubs and trees, was built in Southern style of architecture having thick walls of cement open on second story in wide arches under which was fitted boxes containing bright flowering plants. This residence was painted a terra cotta color with salmon color trimmings.

The strip of lawn between sidewalk and curbing in front of the canary colored residence had a large bayonet-shaped leafed plant bearing white flowers, and a large pink lily, while the palm tree trunk had trained up to it a vine bearing a brilliant blue blossom: in the space between this palm and the next was a large scarlet flowered coleus and a large century plant, while the next palm tree trunk was made to blossom with morning-glories, blue, pink, and white, in color, and many times larger than those of New England.
[sheet 6]
The first space on the side where I stood had a foliage plant and a handsome Southern plant bearing a bright yellow flower, while the palm tree trunk bore a delicate vine with a lavender blossom.

Add to this display of color and form the atmospheric effect and the gradations of sunshine and shadow and I think that you will admit that on each visit I enjoyed a perfect symphony: -- not a Beethoven, but a Schubert.

But an artist should paint it for you – or better you should see it for yourself, for I am unequal to it.

The whole section about there is fine, including as it does St. James Park, Adams St., and Figueroa St.: but Chester Place is the gem.

To return to the foresaid, but important, business section of the city. It is that of a thriving live city and is mostly embraced by three parallel streets, extending in length something like two miles, and the intersecting streets.

One street, the most Eastern, Broadway, is the ladies' shopping street, and it has whole blocks of stores that will compare in quality, though, of course, not in size, with the best of New York and Boston, catering as they do to the patronage of the guests of the wonderful hotels of Pasadena and Los Angeles, and to the wealthy residents.

I was told in all seriousness by a resident of Pasadena that there were more millionaires living on Orange Grove Ave., Pasadena, than there were in any other city in the United States. I straightway informed him that that statement was ridiculous, and told him that there was probably twice as many living within a half a dozen blocks of each other in New York, and that there were undoubtedly from ten to twenty times as many in the city. He claimed also that Orange Grove Ave. was the finest street in that section: I agreed that it was a grand street, lined on either side for over a mile by fine estates with elegant residences; but Chester Place is as a choice mosaic in comparison with it.

The middle street, Spring St., is the men's street, containing, as it does, the best hotels, the Post office, the railroad and telegraph offices, and the large office buildings. There are no buildings of the class of the New York skyscrapers, from 20 to 30 stories high, but there are several of ten stories or more and several building.

The third street is a mixture and hence rather less important.

Well, I have given you an exhaustive and at the same time, I fear, exhausting description of Los Angeles; but really I think the city is worth it.

On September 27th (almost on time), just before going up to San Francisco, I was treated to a drizzling rain. I had often during the first few days of my visit expressed the wish that we might have a rain to wash the dust off the trees and freshen up nature – and we got it and it washed the dust off the trees onto my umbrella and left it thoroughly streaked.

I went up to the ostrich farm that day to arrange for the printing of some photographs, and was invited in to see how the ostriches behaved on a rainy day; and it was a strange sight to see them all sitting down, as is their custom during a rain. The grown ones were left in the open, but the chicks were housed as they are somewhat delicate.

I returned to San Francisco via the Coast Line Division of the Southern Pacific, and was treated to a ride for hours along the edge of the ocean with the surf breaking on the beach in full sight, and then on leaving the shore to a climb over a range of mountains which furnished a continuous series of beautiful and wonderful views. The journey took fourteen hours, but I enjoyed it thoroughly.

I spent only a few days in San Francisco, renewing my acquaintance with Golden Gate Park and Cliff House, principally.
[sheet 8]

The park really improved on better acquaintance, for I was at leisure to appreciate how thoroughly it is the people's park. There are no signs around requesting all to keep off the grass, and the people roam about at will. And I discovered even another provision for recreation: this a bowling-green for the men. I had never seen one before, and I became greatly interested in a club-tournament game, in which an elderly man with very gray hair gave a great exhibition of skill, being able, when it became so dark that the scorers had to use a handkerchief to indicate the mark, to bowl the ball within a few inches of it.

The balls are bowled across the green, which is a perfectly level and velvety lawn, and only those that stop nearest the mark count, hence it is a part of the game to knock away the nearest if it be that of an opponent; and it seemed to me that this idea interfered somewhat with the old gentleman's bowling while it was light enough for him to see the whole field, but when only the mark was indicated he showed what he could do, and it was wonderful.

And so I must add that to the list of the pleasure grounds in the park which, as I believe I wrote you, comprise croquet, tennis, base-ball, a picnic ground provided with tables and seats and a lot of public swings for the small children. There are also boats on the lake, a zoo, a fine museum and a band stand which cost $30,000 – in which concerts are given which are listened to by thousands of people seated on settees placed in rows through a grove fronting it, and by hundreds seated in an ever-moving procession of carriages.

It is, as I have said, a grand pleasure ground for the people, who flock there in great numbers every day. It is in addition a most beautiful park, as it abounds in flowers and luxuriant semi-tropical plants and trees, for there is no fear of a frost injuring them.
[sheet 9]

Did I write that I saw many water-pipes on the outside of houses? Probably water was introduced after the house was built and that was the easiest and cheapest way to provide for it. No wonder that the plumbers there will not sell even a washer for a faucet to a layman, but require him to pay a plumber to attend to it. Think of the luxury of freedom from bursting pipes!

I overheard a person on the train from San Francisco to Santa Cruz telling another about a visit to Alaska, and she said that the most wonderful thing she saw there was the snow and ice, and she stated that it looked quite different from what she supposed it would. And she must have been thirty five years old! Experiences differ with localities truly.

I stopped over during a day at Salt Lake City just to break the journey and freshen up, and was thus enabled to visit the interior of the Mormon Tabernacle, which I had omitted to do on my way West. It is truly a wonderful structure, having a dome supported by wooden trusses which enabled them to dispense with pillars, hence everyone of the ten thousand seats has an uninterrupted view of the stage; and the acoustic properties are so perfect that it is possible to hear and understand a whisper from the pulpit in any seat in the building. A man dropped a pin on the railing near the pulpit, and it was perfectly audible to me at a distance of two hundred and fifty feet. This building was designed and built by Brigham Young, and was constructed without nails.

We visited the Assembly Hall, but not the Temple as "gentiles" are not allowed inside it. I got some fine photographs of the different buildings.

I think I told you in my first instalment [sic] that I thought Salt Lake City one of the finest cities I had ever seen, and that it was a city of homes, so many [illegible] single ones. On mentioning this opinion to the guide, he remarked: "Yes, and the best thing about it is that most of them are owned by the people who live in them.["]
[sheet 10]

I think I wrote you about my experience at the lake resort, ten miles or so from Salt Lake City, Salt Air Beach: I will enclose a photograph showing the crowd. By the way, I hope that you did not hunt for enclosures in my second instalment [sic], for I did not enclose them as I had loaned them and they were not returned in time: I shall try to do better this time. I shall enclose some blue prints, as I think them cleaner than the regular ones.

I returned to Colorado Springs, where I spent a couple of days, by the Colorado Midland RR instead of by the Denver and Rio Grande, which, as you may recall, tumbled me down an embankment on my way West.

I got better treatment on this road, for I passed through the best scenery by daylight on a day perfect in every respect: all the conditions were conducive to the highest enjoyment. If fact, a gentleman who had taken the same trip towards evening exclaimed: “This has been the very best day of the whole trip: I have enjoyed it most!” And so far as the traveling was concerned, I could fully agree with him, for, as there were few passengers, there was lots of room, enabling us to change from one side of car to the other at will: and the conductor was pleasant and obliging, and he tried to make it enjoyable for the passengers.

I spent the greater part of the day in the vestibules where it was possible to get views ahead and back as well as on the sides, and sometimes these forward and back views were thrilling.

While we were in the valley we discovered some lofty snow-capped peaks, and when we asked the conductor about them he informed us that we should climb that range, though of course not the peaks: and from there on until dark
[sheet 11]
there was presented one continuous succession of views, wonderful and green.

We saw from the heights the narrow source of the Arkansas River, and later from along the top of the range we could see several lines of the track by which we had climbed the mountain at different elevations, with the beautiful Arkansas Valley bright with sunshine spread out below.

At one place the line of track by a double curve formed a perfect loop to the view though being really of course at different elevations.

I was very glad that I had selected almost the same route to return by, for the Colorado Midland follows about the course as the Denver & Rio Grande, as I obtained a very different impression of the appearance and grandeur of the Rockies of Colorado than I received on my way West; and I have a much better opinion of them than when I wrote my first instalment. [sic] This was owing to the fact that their brown gravelly appearance (I called them great gravel heaps) harmonized with the Autumnal tints of the foliage, and there had evidently been heavy rains to freshen things up, while the day, as I have said, was perfection; clear, bright, and inclining to be crisp. Then too the highest peaks were covered with a light fall of snow which caused them to glisten in the sunlight, and, forming as they did with the lower ranges, which were often in shadow, a constantly changing picture, they gave one a truer idea of their height and grandeur. But the grand old Granite Hills are worth a hundred of them, for they always look grand and are always beautiful; they do not require a coating of snow to conceal a yellow gravelly top, and they look relatively almost as high, excepting Pike’s Peak and a few others, as the Rockies rise from a level that ranges from 4000 to 6000 ft in height.
[sheet 12]

That guest at Mt. Jackson House [in Franconia, N.H.] who seemed to depreciate the Franconia Mountains I am sure inwardly congratulated herself that she lived nearer the White Mts., and I am also sure that she would not swap those “foot-hills” for whole ranges of the “gravel heaps.”

The foliage along the route was gorgeous, and I was surprised to see so much of it, for I did not realize on the way out that there were so many trees, but now they were all brilliant, and each one was conspicuous although together they formed beautiful harmonious pictures.

Even the rivers, along whose edges our train sped, took on the tints of the neighboring trees and bushes and looked like rapidly flowing streams of amber, ruby, and emerald. Add to this a background at the right perspective distance of high precipitous cliffs, colored some red others yellow, and I think you will agree that it was a picture for an artist. Think of a whole day of such enjoyment! It was truly a memorable one.

And it included a sight of Leadville, that celebrated town, where we stopped ten minutes, giving us a chance to step out on the platform of the station and inhale the air at an elevation of 10,200 feet; nearly twice as high as grand old Lafayette [Mount Lafayette is in the Franconia Range]: but it did not look it. Still there was a beautiful picture, as the surrounding peaks were sprinkled with snow.

[sheet 13]
We reached Colorado Springs in the evening, but I did not find any difficulty in getting accommodations at a good hotel: you may remember that on my former visit there accommodations were at a premium, and, after stopping the night of my trip up Pike's Peak at Manitou, I went to Pueblo the next afternoon to get a good night's rest.

The next day I renewed my acquaintance with South Cheyenne Canyon and Seven Falls, and they too improved on acquaintance, for I now have a thoroughly clear impression of it, and it is that of a most wonderful place.

I think that I described it to you in my first instalment [sic], and, as this will prove a severe enough test of your endurance without repetitions, I will refrain from any attempt here, except to add that a tree on the edge of a perpendicular cliff, a thousand or more feet high, was pointed out to me as being the one under which Helen Hunt Jackson wrote her novels, and the place was most appropriately called "Inspiration Point"; and, recalling the Pine Grove of Mt. Jackson House, I could sympathize with the idea.

I planned to take an early train the next morning for Denver, and was called in consequence at 6 o'clock, but, when on looking out of my window I discovered that snow had covered Pike's Peak during the night, and that it was presenting just the phase I had wished to see but hardly hoped to, I changed my plans and spent the morning at the Springs.

I was out while yet the sun lighted up the peak alone, even before its rays touched the lower ranges, and so I was able to view the mountain in all its majesty, wearing, as it were, a glistening crown, which well became its lofty head.
[sheet 14]

Wasn't I fortunate? Another wonderful impression to be added to the already rich store.

From a good vantage point I just stood and gazed until the sunlight tipped the top of the lower ranges, and then I watched it while it gradually crept down the sides until it finally lighted up the valley.

During the morning I took a car-ride to a lake that is located on a plateau from which is obtained the best impression of the whole range, including Pike's Peak and several almost as high. It was a wonderfully grand panorama, with a background of mountains topped by a whole row and ridge of snow-capped ones, while the city, beautiful in the sunlight, lay between.

These grand old snow-caps kept me company until I reached Denver, yes, I really did not lose them until I had left that city several hours behind.

Then followed a rather uninteresting, because monotonous, journey of a night and a day through Nebraska and Iowa to Chicago, where I spent an evening and a part of a morning visiting a sister who resides there.

Then an eventless journey of a day and a half, but one enlivened by the mildly grand and beautiful scenery of Pennsylvania and New York, and I had used up the two yards-in-length ticket with which I had started from Los Angeles, and my most enjoyable and enlightening trip was ended, to be continued indefinitely in memory, and, I am inclined to believe you have reason to think, -- on paper.
[sheet 15]

I was glad to hear that your mother and others can endorse my opinion of Hilton's Specific No. 3, for I am sure that it has during the past two weeks saved me from pneumonia, and cured a cold for a friend; and so enabling him to enjoy a $5 dinner that he fully anticipated losing. But I was sorry to hear that your father did not give the "phones" a longer trial, as he seems to have tired of them even sooner than my cousin, who persisted long enough to show his family that they were really a benefit: but I suppose that they are mighty disagreeable and hard to become accustomed to: still he may find them of benefit on extraordinary occasions.

I have changed my address to Brooklyn, as I am now with the Fifth Guarantee & Trust Co. of this city and New York City.

The climate here is so different from Los Angeles! A rather odd lament for an Easterner, isn't it? But I have had a cold for the past two weeks, and during that time I have thought of the "Land where Frosts are unknown, and where Flowers bloom eleven months of the Year": but really I am sure that I should enjoy seeing and experiencing the huge drifts of New Hampshire, for I can well remember the pleasure I derived from them years ago in Connecticut: and the Winter period of "Nature's Serial Story," which, by the way, is one of my choicest favorites, which I have read many times; and each time I enjoy it better than the time before: I think it a wonderful book. [Nature's Serial Story was written by Edward Payson Roe.]

Have you read that idyl [sic] by E.P. Roe? I spoke to James about it, and I think that he said he had read it.

Please tell James that I was reminded of him the other day, when, in passing a store-window, I saw a large brood of chicks just from an incubator: I send him with this a calendar appropriate for the little house on the hill.
[sheet 16]

By the way, you guessed rightly in regard to enclosures, or the failure to enclose would, perhaps, be more accurate. I had loaned the small photos, and did not receive them back in time to forward them; and I came across some choicer moonstones, which I want to get polished before sending.

I am going to enclose with this a slight propitiatory offering, for such a number of pages must be an infliction.

Wishing you all:
A Merry Christmas And
A Happy New Year,
I am
Yours sincerely,
Asa J. Farwell

[a blank sheet of stationery was enclosed with this letter, evidently sent because of the pictures on it]

Letter 4: Brooklyn, Feb. 7 and 14, 1904

This letter is written on 14 sheets of stationery, decorated with California poppies, and each with 3 photographic images. (The same style stationery was used for letter 2.)

The images are as follows:

Sheet 1: quadrangle of Stanford University, Yosemite Falls, Cliff House [in San Francisco];
Sheets 2 and 10: Union Square and Spreckels Building, Market St. showing Chronicle Building, Music Stand [in] Golden Gate Park; Sheet 3: Mt. Shasta; Glacier Point in Yosemite Valley, rocks at Cliff House;
Sheets 4, 9, and 12: Fisherman's Wharf, [San Francisco]. "Wawona" on road to Yosemite [large redwood with tunnel cut through it], and City Hall, [San Francisco];
Sheets 5 and 11: Fort Point showing Golden Gate, Claus Spreckels Building; [elk at a lake]
Sheets 6 and 13: Yosemite Valley, street scene in Chinatown, view from Mt. Tamalpais;
Sheet 7: Ferry depot and piers, [San Francisco], Donohue Fountain, Golden Gate [with sail boats];
Sheets 8 and 14: Carmel Mission, redwood grove, Mission Dolores [in San Francisco];

142 Henry St.
Brooklyn, Feby. 7/04

My dear Miss Grimes:

I think that you will acknowledge that it was in kindness that your mother retained the "instalment" [sic] until your return home, for you will need the strength resulting from your recreation visit to help you bear up under it, for it is the greatest test of your endurance with which you have been inflicted: I do not recall just the number of pages, but I think they total something like thirty. Think of that – and thank your mother! You will notice that I am using "Souvenir" paper, and I ask you to excuse it, for after having spread myself over so much of this sized paper I find it difficult to limit myself to the regulation note paper.

You wrote that you had heard Melba. [Nellie Melba, the famed opera singer] You should hear her in opera where you could hear her voice in arias and duets, and then I am sure that you would be enthusiastic in praise. I heard her with Jean DeReshe in Romeo and Juliette when at the close of the opera the audience, which nearly filled Mechanics Hall in Boston, called them before the curtain more than twenty times; one near me counted up to twenty and then devoted himself to applauding until the curtain was raised and an upright piano was rolled in on the stage, and Melba sang "Home Sweet Home" to the accompaniment of Jean DeReshe. I had my favorite position as usual that evening, and remember well the wonderful singing.

If you happen to be in Boston during the Spring opera season, and the operas happen to be given at Mechanics Hall, I should advise you to go "rush" once, i.e. on [illegible] admission ticket, and try my favorite position which is on the right side facing the stage in second balcony just in front of second arch.

It is not very tiresome standing there (there are no seats in second balcony) as there is a wide railing to lean on which can be made comfortable by a folded coat: and it is possible to sit during the intermissions. Sisters of a friend of mine often buy two dollar seats in order to be admitted before the line of waiters, so that they can stand near "my position." It is not necessary to pay even the two dollars, or to stand in line, as one can buy a position near the head of the line by paying some boy or man from twenty five to fifty cents. These young ladies and the brother sometimes sit in what would be called the orchestra, but they say that they enjoy the music better standing there in second balcony.

And I had my opinion most strongly endorsed one evening at the first performance of Verdi's then new opera, "Falstaff," when three of the greatest musical critics, including Philip Hale and Wolff, came from the orchestra and stood, scorebooks in hand, just back of me for over an hour during the 2nd act of the opera, remarking when they reached "my position": "Here is the very best place in the whole hall to get the effect of the music."

My finding "the very best place in the hall" was not the result of chance, but deliberate choice after trying many other places, for I had attended operas there from the first performances when Abbey [Henry Eugene Abbey] had his great company, including Patti, Gerster, Fursch-Madi, & Campanini [Adelina Patti, Etelka Gerster, Emma Fursch-Madi, and Italo Campanini]; when owing to trouble with management of Boston Theater Mechanics Hall was used as an emergency, and the orchestra chairs were common unpainted kitchen chairs fastened together in rows by boards underneath, and with the rear rows on the same level as the front. But the singing sounded just as well in the second balcony, and I had the pleasure of attending many times during the engagement. And every season after I made sure of securing my position for the best performances, and so I have had the pleasure of hearing most of the great singers many times.

I attended Beethoven's beautiful opera Fidelio last evening and heard Ternina [Milka Ternina] for the first time. She has a fine voice, but in the arias her high notes did not have a perfectly clear sweet tone, there seemed to be just a slight wornness, as it were, that was very aggravating as the effect produced just fell short of what you wanted and expected.
[sheet 4]

But as Isolde is considered her great role, that probably accounts for it for a voice can hardly answer the demands of Isolde and produce the best effects of Fidelio.

I heard Tristan and Isolde when Sucher and Alvary sang in it [Rosa Sucher and Max Alvary], and, so far as they were concerned, it seemed a contrast in screeching: first Sucher would screech and then Alvary would seem to say I think I can screech louder, to which Sucher would respond with a greater effort, which would be met by Albary, until I fairly put my thumbs in my ears and waited until they stopped: and often I felt like calling out to them to stop and not interfere with the orchestra, for when it had a chance it showed that the music was grandly beautiful.

As Termina is to sing the part next Saturday evening I may go over to hear the opera sung. It was the same way with "Das Rheingold": I wished that the singers would not interrupt the orchestra. But it was not so when I heard Lehman [Lille Lehman] and Alvary in "Siegfried," "Die Walkurie" and "Die Gotterdammerung." I shall never forget that great duet in "Siegfried" between Lehman and Alvary.

February 14, 1904

I have gotten so accustomed to writing in "instalments" [sic] that I find it difficult to limit myself to one sitting, hence I put off finishing this letter until I could write a second instalment: which really has seemed possible only on Sundays for there are so many rooming in this house that there is really never quiet for the space of many minutes at a time, which condition is not conducive to letter writing. It is a fine house on "the Heights" and the people and everything in every way first-class, and there is no more noise than one would expect from so many, but there is hardly a minute during the evening until late that one does not hear loud talking, whistling, or some noise, to say nothing of two pianos, a violin, a 'cello, or a viola, and an harmonica, which is just enough intrusion to interfere with writing. One can read very well and pay no attention to it, but I find it difficult to write under these conditions: quite in contrast with "Inspiration Point" at South Cheyenne Canyon.

I did not go to hear Termina in Isolde last evening, but expect to hear her with Sembrich and Gadski on next Thursday evening in "The Magic Flute." [Marcella Sembrich and Johanna Gadski]

I enclose a picture clipped from last week's paper, which is from a photograph of New York as it looks in early evening from the Brooklyn Bridge. A few weeks ago I walked over between 5.30 and 6 o'clock just for the pleasure of seeing this picture, and a wonderfully beautiful picture it is. This clipping does not give a good idea of it, for it merely shows the buildings to be seen in one direction and it gives no idea of their beauty, aglow with their countless yellow lights. And to this part of the picture must be added the brilliant white star fixed to the torch of the great statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," and the moving picture of the myriad of ferry boats with their double rows of yellow lighted windows and their brilliant red and green lights above, these again multiplied by their reflection in the river: while to the North appears the great arch of strong white electric lights marking the vast span of that new "World's Wonder," the Williamsburgh Bridge, while below it and between us and the bridge move hither and thither their courses indicated by their red and green lights another flotilla of ferry boats: and if you are fortunate enough to be on the bridge, not "at midnight," but soon after five o'clock, the procession of Boston, Providence, & Stonington Steamboats, four or five in number, adds an element of stately grandeur.

It is truly a picture well worth seeing.

And I never tire of the view from the bridge by daylight. I frequently walk over and back just for the view and exercise: it is a mile each way when one can enjoy the good fresh air without inhaling any portion of that alotted [sic] "frick[?]": and at the same time can find entertainment in the ever changing picture below him for the river is always alive with a great variety of craft: one can usually see among them one or more ocean steamers, either arriving from or leaving for Foreign ports. It is interesting to watch the small tugs maneuver to get the great leviathans out into the channel and headed for the ocean: they generally have to back them out and turn them around, while the tide, if strong, in the meantime takes them some distance either up or down the river.

Friday being a holiday I went over to New York about noon, and walked up to Central Park. On the way I stopped at an art gallery on Fifth Ave. to see an exhibition of Inness' [George Inness] wonderful landscape paintings: there were several that I hope the Metropolitan Museum of Art bought, for I should like to see them often. While looking at them you could almost enjoy being in the fields or woods, for the impression was so perfectly painted that you could say that you had seen the woods and fields in just such condition of color light and atmosphere.
[sheet 7]
Some of them seemed to surpass the examples owned by the museum, perhaps because they appealed to my recognition of just such a phase of nature: they were wonderful.

At the park, I watched the skating for some time, being entertained by the fancy skating of some and amused at the efforts of several men, who evidently had not been on skates many times before: one man in particular seemed to think that he was doing finely, while the difference in the length of his strokes[?] and the frequency of his slides reminded me of my brief experience with roller-skates, while I was in training for a "Rinking Party," which a military company to which I belonged was to give.

From the Park, I went over to the Museum of Natural History, where in two of the departments I saw mammals and birds ranging from the Moose to the Mouse, and from the Condor to the Frilled Coguette [sic, i.e. coquette]. As you may not be acquainted with the Frilled Coguette I will explain that it is the smallest sized hummingbird, not over an inch or so in length and about as large as a lead pencil, but a beautiful little mite arrayed in green, bronze, and blue.

It is really impossible for one to visit all the departments in one afternoon, unless he should walk through them rapidly, paying little attention to the exhibits: and I should think that it would take many to do it justice.

There is a most wonderful collection of butterflys [sic], gathered from many states and countries, which would be the despair of any artist to try to paint.

There is an extensive ethnological exhibition representative of the tribes of Alaska and the Indians, which is most interesting
[sheet 8]
And there is an immense and complete collection of minerals, precious and semi-precious, embracing everything from the "ites" to the diamond. By the way, I asked the Professor what those so-called moonstones were that I brought from California, and he said that they were agates, "but very pretty." When I can get over to New York during business hours I am going to have some polished, and will send those that I failed to with that "instalment."

Each department of the museum is so arranged that one can easily get an intelligent idea of the collections comprising it, and visited systematically, is decidedly educational.

There is a wonderful collection of fossils which make history of millions of years ago, and by means of them and the charts shown it is possible to have learn a lot without reading a book. For one thing, they show the development of the horse from the small five toed prehistoric animal to the present race-horse: and they show skeletons of a number of "'saurs" that make you glad that you did not live when they roamed the woods and fields. I would hardly have the same feeling on meeting one of those that I did on seeing that antlered deer jump across the road way back of the sugar grove.

They have many exhibits in large glass cases showing birds with their nests on trees, in chimneys, in clay banks, or plastered against the side of a cliff, according to their natural custom.
[sheet 9]

I returned home feeling that I had spent my holiday well and enjoyably.

I should have begun this – I can hardly call it a letter as it has outgrown all proportions of a letter – infliction is a better term two weeks ago, had I not spent the day with a friend who has two mighty interesting boys, the older is in the Polytechnic Institute, while the younger one is still at home being between three and four years old. He is a bright, sunny-dispositioned littler fellow with the profile of a cherub and a mass of yellow curls.

After dinner he insisted on my going upstairs to see the toys that Santa Claus brought him. He said that he wrote a letter to Santa Claus and put it into the fireplace so that no one else should see it.

When I remarked on seeing the abundance of toys that he must have been a very good boy to have had Santa Claus bring him so many toys, he replied: "But Santa Claus did not know when I was bad": and when I repeated that he must be a good boy he said: "I am bad sometimes." Wasn't that good? He is a dear little fellow, and his father says that he is markedly considerate of everyone.

The paper stated today that a thirty four story building was to built only fifty feed wide: it does not seem possible when you read it, but I enclose a clipping showing a building that actually exists to the discomfort, and discomfiture often, of many who have to weather it in a gale, for, through its location and by its conformation, it gives a moderate wind the force of a gale, and so almost always deprives strangers of their hats and often of their footing: natives pass on the other side unless necessity compels them to weather it when they brace themselves and cling to their hats. It has something the appearance of the bow of a steamship heading for Madison Square. This prospective skyscraper will have more the appearance of a tower; the more so as it is to be located near Central Park where there are no skyscrapers that will detract from its individual and peculiar appearance.

Did I write you that I lost my umbrella while loading my Santa Claus pack; that umbrella! the only thing I personally saved at the time of railroad wreck; the umbrella I carried about from place to place during two and a half months of sunshiny weather; the umbrella that traveled with me 7500 miles: think of losing it by separating from it not more than twenty feet, while at Reno, Nev. I let it travel on a different section of our train half a day until I caught up with it. Had I once supposed that I should have lost it so carelessly I would have had a case made for it and preserved it as a memento of my trip.

But there were pleasant associations connected with its loss, for I was purchasing presents for the two boys I mentioned, and for some young cousins residing in East Orange, N.J. where I passed a mighty happy Christmas in the presence of a Christmas tree and in the atmosphere of the children's happiness.

My appearance on Christmas Eve while on my way to my friend's called forth from a prosaic policeman the title of "Santa Claus." I was then rather wishing for those "eight tiny reindeer" for the package was weighted with a box of blocks in the shape of a good sized cart fully rigged for transporting them. I thought once when coming across City Hall Park in New York (I purchased them on 6th Ave.) of taking off the stout paper wrapping and drawing them. My friend says that the little fellow takes great pleasure with them, building houses, forts, and everything buildable.

I have had some photographs of Santa Cruz and vicinity printed, and I herewith enclose a few from which you may be able to get some slight idea of the beauty of the location and surroundings of "The Spoonholder." The geraniums fuchsias and heliotrope do not, perhaps, show up in the photos to be as wonderful as I described, but please note the height of piazza and railing from the ground and see how much they extend above it, and I think that you will concede that from ten to fifteen feet is a low estimate.
[sheet 12]

The orange tree does not show up, nor does the coloring of the blooms and variegated shrubs and plants, but, as I have written, the photos may give you a slight idea of the scene, and so I enclose them.

You will notice the natural bridge formed by the action of the ocean and bear in mind that the cliffs are not formed of the same material as the rugged cliffs of New England, but of a soft rock which is easily worn away, forming frequent natural bridges and many caverns, often causing the surface to cave in. You should have seen that great dash of spray lighted by the sun, and the picture which shows framed by the arch. I think that this makes an exceedingly fine and effective photograph for one so small.

[sheet 13]
In the other photograph of the cliffs the apparent white side of the cliff is really spray which was dashed over the top of it, and this surf was caused, not by any storm, but by the usual swell of the ocean.

That picture of the ocean framed by the palms made with its frame a most beautiful one, and was one of those to be had from the piazza of the hotel: in the light of the full moon it was especially beautiful.

I also enclose a photo of the tennis courts in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, with two games in progress: for such a small photo I think that the scope and detail are wonderful; as it is a new one it will not duplicate any I have sent you.

I also enclose two rather comical photos of an ostrich which I snapped about the time of that eclipse I mentioned in one of my “instalments.” [sic]

It may puzzle you at first to find the ostrich in one of the photos, but he is there: I showed the film
[sheet 14]
to my friend the Sunday I dined with him, and neither he nor I could find any ostrich; but I knew he was there, so I had the film printed; and sure enough there he was looking over the post at me. The other one is plainer, but the light was not strong enough to produce a good clear photo: there are too many shade trees in the farm for instantaneous photographing.

They say that it has been a cloudy, dull, cheerless, day but I have not noticed it: and so please be considerate and excuse this infliction.

With kind regards to all. I am
Yours sincerely,
Asa J. Farwell

I send this to Franconia thinking that you must have returned ere this. I enclose some clippings for James showing some phases of the ostrich raising business.

Biographical note

Walter M. Rosene, Sr. (1880-1941), a native of Ogden, Iowa, first worked with his father in the harness business (Ogden, Iowa, 1896-1901) and then in a wholesale saddlery house (Chicago, IL, 1901-1902). He then was employed by the State Bank of Ogden (1902-1935) in various positions and eventually became its president, as well as selling insurance (1937-1941). His special interest was the study of birds. He was one of the founders and a president of the Iowa Ornithologists' Union and was also involved with the Wilson Ornithological Club. Rosene was director of bird-study at the Wild Life School at McGregor (Iowa) and gave lectures on the subject of birds throughout Iowa.

Collection description

This collection (1871-2008, n.d.) contains lantern slides, photographs, photographic negatives and glass plate negatives created by Walter Rosene, Sr. The collection also contains the bird watching records of Rosene, which include journals, writings, correspondence, and photographs. There are also several publications and bulletins regarding birds and Iowa's state parks. The collection is grouped into the following series:

Series 1, Lantern Slides contains black and white and color lantern slides, the majority of which were taken by Rosene; showing birds, animals, plant life, Rosene and his colleagues, natural phenomena and maps of bird migration routes.

Series 2, Photographs and Negatives contains black and white photographic stills of birds taken by Rosene and corresponding black and white negatives. This series also contains a few photographs of Rosene's family and the corresponding negatives. This series also contains images of the McGregor Wildlife School (McGregor, Iowa), locations near the Mississippi River, the Meskwaki Pow Wow in Tama, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, California, animals, fish, flowers, and scenery.

Series 3, Bird Watching Records contains a collection of Iowa Ornithologists' Union Daily Field Checking Guides completed by Walter Rosene, 1931-1941; a journal compiled by Rosene during a bird watching trip to Iowa, Minnesota, and North Dakota, June 14-30, 1924; photographs of the Ledges, McGregor, Iowa, and of a mother opossum with a baby opossum on her back, a hand colored black and white photograph of Pease Creek at the Ledges in Boone County Iowa; a personal reminiscences typescript (photographic scrapbook) documenting Rosene's trips to the Ledges to bird watch, 1921-1941; and a folder of writings including correspondence related to his writing and bird watching activities, inspirational poetry, and descriptions of his bird watching excursions, 1925-1941. The majority of the objects in this collection date from 1921-1941 and document Rosene's fieldwork with birds in Iowa and the Dakotas. A number of different species are depicted at various stages of nesting and growth. There are also a few images of Rosene himself, working in the field.

Series 4, Glass Plate Negatives contains black and white pictures of Rosene's hometown of Ogden, Iowa, his family's house and farm, and many of his family members (circa 1893-1907), as well as images of the 1893 Chicago World's Fair.

Series 5, Bulletins, Publications, and Correspondence contains Rosene's personal daily journal, bulletins regarding Iowa State parks, guides and publications regarding bird life and snakes, and Rosene's correspondence with the Los Angeles Times.

Organization

The collection is organized into five series:

Series 1, Lantern Slides, ca. 1930s, n.d. (original order)
Series 2, Photographs and Negatives, 1871-1941, n.d. (original order)
Series 3, Bird Watching Records, 1921-1941, n.d. (alphabetical)
Series 4, Glass Plate Negatives, 1893-1916, n.d. (original order)
Series 5, Bulletins, Publications, and Correspondence, 1922-2008, n.d. (chronological)

Archives of Women in Science and Engineering

The Archives of Women in Science and Engineering collects the personal and professional papers of women in all areas of the sciences and engineering, except that of the medical sciences. The Archives also solicits the records of women's organizations in these fields.

Manuscript Collections

Browse and search the manuscript collections stored in Special Collections. Collections include papers and records of individuals and organizations primarily in the fields of life sciences, agricultural and rural life, and engineering.

University Archives

The University Archives collects, describes, preserves and exhibits university records that contain historical, administrative, legal, or fiscal value. The records include departmental records and the papers of faculty and alumni.

Artifact Collection

The Special Collections Department also collects a variety of three-dimensional items that document the history of Iowa State University, agriculture, science, and technology. Currently, there are about 2,500 items in the artifact collection dating from 1849 to the present.

Digital Documents

The Special Collections Department maintains millions of documents found in over 1,500 collections. Several documents and books have been digitized to provide better access for researchers. Access to these items can be obtained through the Library's Digital Collections site or through the Department's page on Scribd.

Film Collection

The Special Collections Department maintains a film collection of approximately 10,000 titles.

Photograph Collection

The Special Collections Department maintains over 1,000,000 photographs. The majority of the images are about Iowa State University and focus on the activities of faculty, staff, students, and alumni.

Content Description +/-

The collection in comprised of artwork stored in solander cases; correspondence, manuscripts and other written materials in manuscript boxes; copies of children's books which Werth illustrated; personal photographs; wood blocks used for printing; and art supplies.

Solander cases: The collection contains 95% of Werth's American output, which are predominantly illustrations for books for children. The artwork is filed alphabetically by book title; the last two solander cases contain non-manuscript and miscellaneous artwork.

The illustrations for children's books include artwork for 54 books, over half of which were published. Published books with artwork in the collection span the period 1952 (Rosalys Hall's The Merry Miller) to 1974 (Hall's The Three Beggar Kings).

Some of the authors of notes with whom Werth worked are poets Maxine Kumin (Faraway Farm) and Phyllis McGinley (How Mrs. Santa Claus Saved Christmas and The Year Without a Santa Claus); Sid Fleischman (McBroom and the Big Wind, and other McBroom titles); and Charlotte Zolotow (A Tiger Called Thomas, The Quiet Mother and the Noisy Little Boy).

The artwork for children's books represents a variety of stages in the illustration process, some titles being more complete than others. Titles in the collection having the widest range of illustration stages are Hear Ye of Boston and The Three Beggar Kings. Other titles showing a good range of illustration stages are: How Mrs. Santa Claus Saved Christmas, It's Fun to Rhyme, Molly and the Giant, Samuel Clemens, Scat the Witch's Cat, and Stop It, Moppit!

Artwork for Sid Fleischman's McBroom's Zoo is interesting because one of the two dummies included bares holographic comments on the drawings by editor Harriet McDougal of Grosset & Dunlap.

Non-manuscript artwork (solander cases 11 and 12) includes many printed book covers; illustrations from the magazines Common Sense, Free World, Harper's, New York Times, Querschnitt, Simplicissimus, Tomorrow (all from the early period); greeting cards and woodcuts, probably done in Germany, many signed.

Manuscript boxes: Contained here are biographical material, correspondence, and manuscripts, predominantly for children's books, by a variety of authors, but especially Werth who rewrote or adapted many traditional tales for children. Published stories by Werth with manuscripts in various stages include The Cobbler's Dilemma, King Thrushbeard, and The Monkey, the Lion, and the Snake. Of interest is the correspondence for It's Fun to Rhyme, Molly and the Giant, and What Are You Afraid Of? Which is included in the manuscript file for each title. Other written materials such as personal memorabilia, story fragments, and manuscripts and poems by Werth's wife, Margaret Werth, are also included.

Books: Of the 186 books kept with the collection, there are three limited edition titles published in the 1920's in Germany: Euripides' Die Bachen, Puschkin's Pique Dame, and Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Other: Personal photographs of the Werth family, all taken in Europe, 1926-1938, have been removed to the Photograph Collection. Fifteen wood blocks used for printed, approximately 4 x 4, are boxes at the end of the collection, as well as Werth's art supplies consisting of tubes of paint, toothbrushes, rollers, linseed oil, and similar items.

Historical Note

Kurt Werth, a leading illustrator of books for children, was born September 21, 1896 in Leipzig, Germany. His parents, Rudolph Werth, a salesman, and Emma Helbig, did not encourage their son's artistic inclinations. However, he entered the State Academy for the Graphic Arts in Leipzig in 1913 and studied there for two years before being drafted into the army. When not in action, he filled sketchbooks with scenes of the life around him, and illustrated a copy of Rilke's The Cornet Rilke. All of these sketchbooks have been lost.

After the war he returned for two more years of study at the State Academy, leaving in 1921 for Munich where he began illustrating limited edition books which included Shakespeare's Trolius and Cressida, and books by Euripides, Puschkin, Kipling, and the German authors Wasserman and Kleist.

In 1924, Werth began drawing satirical cartoons for the Munich magazine, The Jugend, and the Swiss magazine, Nebelspalter. Four years later he and his wife Margaret, an actress, moved to Berlin where she became part of the City Theater. Werth heightened his activity here as a creator of satirical cartoons with his work for the Berliner Tageblatt, and the magazines Querschnitt and Simplicissimus, among others.

With Hitler's increasing power, the magazines folded, and Margaret Werth, who was Jewish, was not allowed to work. In the 1939 the Werths immigrated to the United States where Werth found employment illustrating a Sunday column in the New York Times magazine.

When the United States became involved in World War II, Werth began drawing cartoons for a number of the new magazines that had appeared on the political scene: Common Sense, Free World, The New Republic, Tomorrow, as well as Harper's.

The bulk of these publications disappeared with the war's conclusion, so Werth returned to book publishing, illustrating textbooks for Oxford University Press and other publishing houses. One of his first attempts at illustrating a picture book for children, Rosalys Hall's The Merry Miller, received much favorable notice and opened the door to requests from other authors and publishers.

Werth states, "As a German I was certainly influenced by the tradition of exact and thorough training in drawing. This goes back to Durer and even farther." He attempts to illustrate children's books in a "modern style." "Books have to be illustrated in our times. They should show the style of our times. Not all of them do it."

Kurt Werth died in New York City on August 25, 1983.

Processing Information:

These records were processed by staff in the Harvard University Archives probably prior to 1985. The finding aid was encoded at the American Institute of Physics and revised to conform to Harvard University guidelines.

History of the Radio Research Laboratory

The Radio Research Laboratory (RRL) was established in 1942 to develop countermeasures to radar. These countermeasures were simultaneously under development at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT). First located at MIT , the RRL soon moved to Harvard where it was operated by the University during World War II under contract with the U.S. Office of Scientific Research and Development.

Scope and Contents of Collection

These records document research projects, including the development of countermeasure prototypes ; operations research, including the development of probability models ; establishment of production guidelines and contracts; as well as the administration of the Laboratory itself. Topics include radar, radar countermeasures, microwaves, research methodology, and the relationship of federally-sponsored research to the industrial sector. The greatest volume of material covers the administration of the laboratory.

Access to Collection :

Personnel and student records are restricted for a period of 80 years from the date of their creation. Contact the reference staff in the Harvard University Archives for details.

Container List

- Series: Administrative Records ca. 44.4 cubic feet (135 containers and 2 volumes)
  Scope and Content: This series documents the administration of the Radio Research Laboratory.
  Arrangement: The Administrative Records are in 13 subseries:
  - General Administrative Records
  - Meeting Minutes and Chronological Files
  - Administrative Reports
  - Instructions ... for Alterations to the Biological Laboratory
  - Records Concerning Field Stations and Branch Laboratories
  - Photographs of Field Operations
  - Records Concerning Demobilization and Laboratory History

  - Time Sheets
  - Forms
  - UAV 728.95.1 General Administrative Records, 1942-1946 6.9 cubic feet (20 containers)
    Scope and Content: This series documents the administration of the Radio Research Laboratory (RRL). These files were maintained chiefly by the Laboratory Director, Frederick E. Terman (FET). The topics covered in the files include management of the Laboratory, personnel, budgets, field stations, publicity, committees, relations with the U. S. Navy, relations with the U. S. Army, relations with the Office of Scientific Research and Development (OSRD), research projects, transition of devices from experimental to production phases, and demobilization at the end of the war. Field stations included the American British Laboratory (ABL) and the Florosa Station Laboratory (FSL).
    Arrangement: In alphabetical order by topic.

  Scope and Content: This subseries documents the demobilization of the Radio Research Laboratory. This subseries also contains documents that appear to have been collected to illustrate the history of the RRL, and perhaps more broadly, the use of radar in defense. Forms of documentation include directories, abstracts, reports, correspondence, data on allied and enemy electronic equipment and radar, and lists of documents intended for a "Radio Research Laboratory Archives." Also included are numerous files which the Laboratory labeled "Miscellaneous" in which individual documents are numbered.

- UAV 728.295.6 Press Accounts, 1942-1946 (2 volumes)
  Related Material: The majority of press releases are in the General Administrative Records series.
  Scope and Content: This subseries consists of scrapbooks containing press accounts of radio countermeasures. Most of the press accounts are newspaper clippings, but also included are two press releases and a booklet entitled: Electronic Warfare: A Report on Radar Countermeasures .
- UAV 728.26 Human resources, 1942-ca. 1946 ca. 4 cubic feet (12 containers)
  Scope and Content: These records document administration of personnel at the Radio Research Laboratory. They contain information relating to policies, security, recruitment, training, health insurance, and other areas of interest to managers of personnel.
  Arrangement: In alphabetical order by subject.

- UAV 728.254 Medical Records of Radio Research Laboratory Personnel, [ca. 1940-ca. 1946?] .3 cubic foot (1 box)
  Scope and Content: These records document the kind of medical information maintained by the Laboratory about its employees. These records are only a sample of the personnel medical records. The sample consists of the letter "A" only.
  Arrangement: In alphabetical order by employee name.
- UAV 728.286 Time sheets (1 folder)
  Scope and Content: These records document the routine recording of time spent on the job. These records are only a sample of the time sheets used to record an individual employee's hours.
- UAV 728.229 Forms (1 folder)

- Series: Research Records ca. 7.3 cubic feet (17 containers)
  Scope and Content: This series documents the research conducted at the Radio Research Laboratory.
  Arrangement:
  - Technical Reports
  - Invention Disclosure Cards
  - Images of Equipment, Graphs, and Charts
  - Flying Dutchman Target-Complexity Indicator System Sound Recordings
- UAV 728.295.1 Technical Reports, 1942-1946 6.7 cubic feet (14 containers)
  Scope and Content: This subseries documents the results of research carried out by the Radio Research Laboratory. Also included here are operating instructions for equipment, progress reports, and a catalogue of equipment developed by the Laboratory. In this subseries, researchers will also find information bulletins and other publications issued by the Laboratory and subject indexes to the reports.

ABOUT

General | Amenities

The Harvard University Archives is the oldest and one of the largest institutional academic archives in the nation.

The Harvard University Archives collects, organizes, preserves and provides access to a comprehensive record of more than 375 years of life at Harvard. From 17th and 18th century diaries and scientific observations to 21st century web sites, the Harvard University Archives' collections comprise over 51,000 feet of University records and related historical materials.

This activity is tied integrally to records management services for Harvard University staff, administrators and faculty. Records management staff provide guidance and resources for all stages in the records and information lifecycle, from creating records through destruction of non-permanent records or transfer of permanent records to the Harvard University Archives.

Biographical Note +/-

Michael Mansfield was born March 16, 1903 and raised in Great Falls, Montana. He was educated in Montana, with two quarters on his Ph. D at the University of California, Los Angeles. In 1917, he enlisted in the U.S. Navy. In 1919 he enlisted in the U.S. Army for one year, and then served in the U.S. Marine Corps from 1920 to 1922. During his military service, he traveled to and established his lifelong interest in Asia. He then returned to Butte, Montana, where he worked as a miner and mining engineer until 1930. He was admitted to Montana School of Mines in Butte by examination and studied there from 1927 to 1928. He married Maureen Hayes, a former Butte high school teacher. He then transferred to Montana State University in Missoula, where he completed his B.A. and M.A. From 1933 to 1943, he was Professor of Latin American and Far Eastern History at Montana State University.

Mansfield was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1942 and served five terms as representative of Montana's 1st District. In October 1951, he was appointed by President Truman as a delegate to the United Nations Sixth Session in Paris. He was elected to the U.S. Senate in 1952 and re-elected in 1958, 1964 and 1970. In 1958, President Eisenhower appointed Mansfield as United States Delegate to the 13th General Assembly of the United Nations. In November and December 1962, he undertook a foreign policy assignment to West Berlin and Southeast Asia for President Kennedy, and took a similar assignment for President Nixon in 1965. He visited the People's Republic of China with the Senate Minority Leader in 1972 on invitation from Premier Chou-En-Lai. In December 1974 and September 1976, he again visited China at the invitation of their government. Through all of this international work, he remained very close to the people and concerns of Montana, and was notorious for his close contact with citizens around the state.

Mansfield's responsibility and prestige steadily increased through his tenure in Congress. He became Assistant Majority Leader (Majority Whip) of the Senate in January 1957, and served in that capacity until 1961, when he was elected Majority Leader of the Senate. He held that position until he retired from the Senate in 1977- longer than any other Majority Leader in the history of the U.S. Senate.

President Jimmy Carter appointed Mansfield Ambassador to Japan in 1977, and he served in that position until 1988. Mansfield was a consultant to Goldman Sachs in Washington, DC. Maureen died in 2000; Mike Mansfield died in October 2001.

Administrative Information

Detailed Description of the Collection

Series I: House: Bills Introduced by Mansfield, 1942-1952

7.5 linear feet

This series covers all the bills that Mansfield introduced during his time in the House of Representatives. They include the 78th to the 82nd Congress. The series contains a broad range of materials relating to all aspects of legislation. The number of bills introduced by Mansfield increases with each Congress as the gains seniority. The bills also grow more substantive and related to national policy issues.

The series contains copies of each bill introduced and correspondence relating to the bill. When a bill was introduced in more than one session, the folder generally contains all previous drafts of the bill. Many folders have original working drafts of bills that include notes and revisions in Mansfield's hand. The folders also contain newspaper clippings and numerous letters from constituents, interest groups, and Congressional colleagues. A number of the bills are personal relief bills introduced on behalf of constituents in need of help. They provide a glimpse of the hardships many Montanans faced during World War II and its aftermath. Many cases relate to immigration difficulties and the struggles of veterans. There are letters from various government agencies, particularly the War and State departments, relating to relief cases. The relief folders often contain photographs and effusive thank-you notes.

The folders contain Mansfield's speeches to Congressional committees and on the House floor. There are several handwritten working drafts of speeches that include Mansfield's corrections. Planned testimony on pending legislation and specific pages from the Congressional Record are included as well.

Letters from constituents relating to pending bills offer insight into the political and economic opinions of Montanans during this era. A number of bills relate to federal land management, Native American policies, and large federal work projects in Montana. These folders contain numerous maps, blueprints, and photographs relating to specific projects. Of particular interest is the vigorous support for mining, flood control, and irrigation.

The rest of the series is comprised of Mansfield's replies to constituents, reports to congressional committees, telegrams, press releases, and memorandums. There are also copies of public laws after legislation was passed, letters from Senator James Murray, newsletters from constituent interest groups, and legal documents from various cases.

The series is arranged in five subseries: 78th Congress, 79th Congress, 80th Congress, 81st Congress, and 82nd Congress. Within each subseries, each folder contains information on a single bill. Substantive bills often occupy several folders. Some of the material relates directly to other series, including the Montana files, Projects, Federal Agencies, and Case Mail.

Series II: House: Legislation, 1942-1952

35 linear feet

This series consists of material relating to all the legislation Mansfield's office handled during his time in the House of Representatives. The series is inclusive and covers a broad range of bills in both the House and the Senate. While the series does not contain every piece of pending legislation during this time, any bill that related to Montana or Mansfield's committee assignments is included. The series generally consists of correspondence, committee reports, copies of the pending bills, and newspaper clippings.

More specifically, the folders contain a predictable sequence of documents throughout the series. In general all material relating to a specific piece of legislation is contained in a single file, though some bills, like the Smith-Connolly Bill of 1943, take up several folders. The information contained in the series covers a broad spectrum of issues and includes virtually any subject that might have relevance to Mansfield's tenure in the House. Included in the files are bills relating to wildlife conservation, veteran's benefits, housing, the Kerr Commission, Civil Service, Armed Forces, coal, World War II, agriculture, mining, timber, and foreign relations. A file typically will have all the information on a particular bill, though this covers a broad sweep of documents. The majority of the series consists of correspondence. The letters are predominantly from constituents and interest groups with concerns over the effect of a specific piece of pending legislation. The constituent letters provide a reflection of the concerns of average Montanans during and following World War II. They project an intimacy between Mansfield and Montana citizens that seems a remarkable reflection of both Mansfield's appeal and a more communal era in Montana politics. The letters from interest groups reveal the key players in Montana politics, particularly the strong voices of farmers, ranchers, loggers, and miners. Groups representing these constituencies are very well represented in this series and their letters appear in virtually every folder. A copy of each bill being considered is included in the relevant file and both previous and subsequent drafts of the bill often appear. Some of the bills have Mansfield's handwritten notes, offering his objections or suggestions. Reports to House and Senate Committees and copies of Committee hearings accompany specific legislation. To supplement reports and testimony, interest groups often produced their own reports to convince Mansfield and his Congressional colleagues of the merits of their particular viewpoint. The rest of the series is rounded out by letters and memorandums from Congressional colleagues, press releases, Mansfield's speeches and testimony, newspaper clippings sent by constituents, telegrams, and reports and letters from federal agencies.

The series is arranged in five subseries: 78th Congress, 79th Congress, 80th Congress, 81st Congress, and 82nd Congress. Within the subseries, materials are arranged in a rough chronological order. Aside from chronology, many folders contain a single piece of legislation and its attendant documents while others are grouped by subject. For example all the bills relating to veterans for a particular period are contained in folders titled "Veteran's Affairs," though a very important bill might be listed individually. There is no apparent order to the arrangement of files within a particular time period, though some may be arranged alphabetically by subject. To add to the difficulties in locating information in this series, some subject files contain material spanning the entire decade. In general using subject and chronology headings will yield approximate locations for researchers, though finding specific information depends on serendipity as much as science.

Series III: House: Montana Files, 1942-1952

This series contains information relating to Montana projects and concerns while Mansfield was a member of the House of Representatives. The files include material linked to legislation and more general information relating to constituent concerns and federal policies and works projects affecting Montana. The folders usually contain information of specific interest groups in the state. A single file typically has letters, legislation, reports, and newspaper clippings relevant to an interest group and spanning the whole era in which Mansfield was in the House.

The majority of the material focuses on either Montana interest groups or public works projects. In addition to these two categories, folders relate to specific businesses, government agencies, and issues in Montana. Many folders have copies of any legislation that a particular group expressed interest in or concern about. Besides copies of bills, there are numerous reports from various federal agencies with information about mining, airports, dams, flood control, labor, and agriculture. The extent of specific files is a gauge of the importance of various groups and issues in Montana. For example, the Bureau of Reclamation's flood control work on the Flathead River occupies an entire box, while the West Yellowstone Airport folder contains only a few letters from constituents and the Department of Commerce. Groups like the Montana Wool Growers Association, the Montana Farmer's Union, and the Mining Association of Montana have thick files filled with letters from members advocating support of their groups. Public works also receive support from constituents, and there are numerous letters urging Mansfield's backing for legislation and appropriations of federal projects.

The series is rounded out with newsletters and policy directives from interest groups. There are letters from Congressional colleagues, cabinet members, and various other officials from both the federal and Montana government. Of particular interest are letters from Secretary of Interior Harold Ickes on mining policy. There are copies of Mansfield's press releases and newspaper clippings submitted by constituents in almost every folder, providing a gauge of public opinion on a range of issues. Blueprints, photographs, petitions, and telegrams are present as well.

Much of the material here relates to material in other series, including Legislation, Projects, Federal Agencies, and Case Mail. Since this series is relatively short, it may be a good starting point in a search for materials and topics that may appear in several places in the collection.

The folders are organized neither alphabetically nor chronologically; folder titles are the best guide to material in the series.In 2009 contents in this series were removed from the envelopes in which they had been filed by Mansfield's office and placed into acid-free folders. Some title / content information which did not appear in the pre-2009 guide to this collection are now included as folder titles; consequently some box and folder numbers within this series have changed. See archivist for details.

Series IV: House: Foreign Affairs, 1930-1949

12.5 linear ft.

This series contains material relating to both the House Committee on Foreign Affairs and Mansfield's own congressional interest in foreign matters. Material in the series concentrates on the years 1947 to 1949, but includes lecture notes presumably from courses Mansfield taught at the University of Montana prior to 1943.

The country files in the series encompass a broad range of subjects relevant to individual nations. There are copies of foreign affairs bills from the House and the Senate. Loans and other foreign aid provide much of the material in individual folders. Letters in the country files include correspondence between Mansfield and various ambassadors and State Department officials. Letters from companies and constituents with strong interests in specific countries are also well-represented in these files. Other letters are from government organizations including the War Department, the State Department, the Army, and the Marine Corps. There are reports from government agencies on specific foreign relations challenges like the Panama Canal. United Nations reports also appear in the series, and congressional hearings and committee reports accompany legislation. There are notes in Mansfield's hand from committee hearings. Items from the Congressional Record pertaining to specific countries are also included in folders for individual countries. Proposals for large quantities of foreign aid spending elicited the most vehement responses. A given spending measure typically drew letters of both criticism and praise; many Montanans expressed displeasure with Congress' willingness to spend money overseas when domestic problems persisted. Foreign nationals and American expatriates also wrote Mansfield to support or decry a particular policy or proposal. Country files also contain newspaper clippings, magazine articles, American and international publications, and press releases.

This series also contains information on specific political issues like the demobilization of troops in China, Burma, and India following World War II. These folders contain many of the same types of materials as the country files. In addition, there are presidential press releases, citizen petitions, telegrams, and photographs. There are also folders with information and documents concerning Mansfield's official trips abroad. This series chronicles the beginning of Mansfield's career-long involvement in foreign policy and provides insight into the constituent opinions and congressional concerns about foreign affairs during and after World War II.

The folders are divided by individual country, by issues like demobilization, and by Mansfield's official trips abroad. The organization of the series is unclear; there is no apparent chronological or alphabetical order to the boxes and folders. Often a similar subject like the United Fruit Company in Central America appears in several folders under different titles; in this case, both Central America and Costa Rica. The boxes and folders do not specify time periods and often skip all over the globe and through a number of years.In 2009 contents in this series were removed from the envelopes in which they had been filed by Mansfield's office and placed into acid-free folders. Some title / content information which did not appear in the pre-2009 guide to this collection are now included as folder titles; consequently some box and folder numbers within this series have changed. See archivist for details.

Series V: House: Federal Agencies, 1943-1953

47.0 linear feet

This series covers a variety of federal agencies during Mansfield's tenure in the House. The material provides an excellent sample of the range of concerns and interests that a member of Congress faces. The folders contain material as mundane as the delivery of Christmas packages to troops and as critical as the food situation in Germany in 1945 and trimming manpower from the Marine Corps. The bulk of the series focuses on relatively basic issues like individual deferments and discharges from the Army.

The series contains information on the whole array of federal agencies, but the more visible and critical agencies receive more attention. As expected during this time period, the Army and Armed Forces files are extensive. They contain numerous letters from constituents on a variety of war-related topics. Most plead for emergency furloughs or deferments for friends or family members, hinting at the impact the war had on Montana families. There are also letters voicing concern over federal wartime policies like rationing and price supports for agriculture. Reports from various branches of the armed service appear throughout these folders. Besides deferments, there are numerous files concerning court martials, discharges, dependent benefits, and GI benefits. Reports and correspondence from the War Department, the State Department, the National Security Agency, and the Veteran's Administration round out these boxes. They address Reserve Officers Training Corps and training issues, prisoner of war exchanges, military contracts, and local draft boards.

Many other non-military agencies are also represented. Due to the extent of federal land in Montana and the importance of agriculture, the departments of the Interior and Agriculture figure prominently. The Federal Power Commission's proposal to import natural gas from Canada sparked controversy and elicited letters from around Montana. Small business owners seem particularly likely to voice concerns over federal agency policies. Their letters offer a nice survey of the range of small businesses in Montana in the late 1940s and the early 1950s. There are also letters between Mansfield and various agencies. Congressional hearings reports and copies of legislation are scattered throughout the series. Letters from congressional colleagues and interest groups accompany nearly every folder. The series also contains blueprints, photographs, copies of federal regulations, telegrams, press releases, and newspaper clippings.

The materials offer an excellent window on the complexity of the federal government. It also highlights the constant demands placed on members of Congress and the need for legislators to balance the demands of constituents with the demands of governing the nation.

The series is arranged both chronologically and alphabetically. For example, the Armed Services occupy the first box in the series, followed by other agencies in alphabetical order, but the Army files for 1950-1952 reappear in box 60 near the end of the series. Overall the organization is relatively clear, but often boxes and folders contain overlapping information.

Series VI: House: General Correspondence, 1942-1952

6 linear feet

This relatively brief series serves as a catchall for information from Mansfield's House years that apparently did not logically fit anywhere else in the files. The information contained here might best be described as documentary rather than substantive. Many of the boxes include up to sixty folders that consist of little more than a single letter or two relating to the folder's subject. Several boxes contain nothing more than constituent requests for government publications while others contain information on organizations, advertising for campaigns, federal policies, and press releases.

More specifically, the series contains numerous requests for Agricultural Yearbooks from Montanans. Boxes Five, Six, and Seven include only a chronological sequence of such requests stretching from 1947 to 1954. The bulk of the letters come from individual Montana farmers and ranchers, though a number of interest groups and universities also ask for Yearbooks. The primary value of these boxes is a strong picture of the state of agriculture in Montana during this period and the wide range of farms and ranches scattered across the Big Sky. Their letterhead provides an informal survey and chronicle of farming in this era. Another box includes only information on newspapers in the state. Most of these files are focused on ensuring Mansfield wide campaign advertising coverage in Montana and generally contain two letters: one from Mansfield's office inquiring about advertising deadlines and rates and a reply from the individual newspapers with the information. The Organization and General boxes contain more varied documents including letters soliciting Mansfield's membership, newspaper clippings, reports from interest groups, constituent letters regarding specific policies or legislation, and articles Mansfield authored for publication. Of particular interest are the organizations that Mansfield belonged to and letters relating to his activities in those groups. Of note are the American Legion, the Marine Corps League, and the Ancient Order of Hibernians. He was solicited by organizations ranging from the Friendly Sons of Saint Patrick to the National Farmers' Union to the Sidewalk Cowboys Association of America. The letters provide an indicator of the coalition of interests that supported Mansfield, in particular labor, Catholic, veterans, and Irish organizations. In the General box there are also files that cover specific appointments for judges, international trade treaties, dams, political action committees, the Red Cross, and the problems with un-sliced bread during World War II. The boxes with newspaper and radio station information offer and excellent view of media in Montana in the 1940s and 1950s and proof of the importance of newspapers statewide. The remainder of the series is an odd assortment of letters from constituents, federal agencies, newspaper clippings, copies of hearings before Congressional Committees, and requests for interviews.

The organization is typical of a series titled General Correspondence. Within specific subject headings it is fairly easy to locate information, for example tracking campaign advertising in newspapers. The series itself lacks an overall structure beyond vague subject headings; actual folder names probably provide the best source for locating specific information.

Series VII: House/Senate: Case Mail, 1943-1977

This series provides an alphabetical listing of correspondence and material related to specific constituents. The files contain a vast array of information regarding individual constituents and most often relate to requests for help from Montanans. Most of the individual folders contain letters relating to a single incident or circumstance that was important in the constituent's life. There are, however, extensive files for constituents who either wrote prolifically over a number of years or who figured prominently in politics. Some folders contain letters written over a few weeks while others span from 1945 to 1970. There are both 'retired' and active files in the series, although there is no explanation given for why some files are labeled 'retired', nor is there any discernible pattern for this labeling system.

The specifics of the series fit into fairly clear parameters, though in a series of this size the range of topics is virtually unlimited. A typical file might contain information regarding a soldier's discharge from the Army. Usually such a file has a letter from the soldier protesting an injustice and appealing to Mansfield for help. Typically there are also letters from Mansfield inquiring into the specific case, letters and reports from the Army relating to the soldier in question, some legal papers from a lawyer representing the soldier, and letters and documents both defending and attacking the soldier in question. This pattern of documentation is repeated for a variety of cases dealing with the Armed Forces, immigration, various federal agencies, particularly the Veteran's Administration, and bank foreclosures. There are many files that contain information on a specific legislative issue and include letters, clippings, telegrams, and reports asking Mansfield to support or defeat the legislation in question. Many of the writers are prominent Montana politicians including a number of state legislators, governors, secretaries of state, and attorneys general. The vast majority are ordinary citizens and reflect a constituent's passing concern with a particular issue. Some of the letters are from school children requesting information or asking for help. The people that Mansfield was able to help often wrote extravagantly grateful letters and sent photographs of themselves. There are a number of requests for federal jobs or for employment reference letters. Many of the materials in this series overlap with any number of other series in the collection, including Montana Files, Correspondence, Legislation, and Personal. This series is probably most useful to locate a specific person and to review their individual correspondence. It also provides an excellent and voluminous source of Montanans' individual worries and political opinions over the entire period Mansfield served in Washington.

This series is restricted. Individuals and direct descendants may view their own case mail only.

Series VIII: Senate: Bills Introduced by Mansfield, 1953-1976

55 linear feet

This series is a chronological listing of all the legislation Mansfield introduced during his tenure in the Senate. It bears a likeness in organization to Series I: House: Bills Introduced. The series includes the 83rd to the 94th Congresses. The series contains a broad range of material relating to all aspects of legislation. The number of bills introduced by Mansfield rises with each Congress as he gains seniority. In particular, after he becomes Senate Majority Leader his role in introducing legislation grows more substantive. This is particularly seen in the number of Senate Joint Resolutions that Mansfield introduces as he gains seniority and prominence. Some of the boxes specify a particular Senatorial term or Congressional session, but the boxes do not specify exact time periods. The entire series proceeds chronologically in each Congressional session from the first bill Mansfield introduced.

The series contains copies of each bill and correspondence relating to the bill. When a bill was introduced in more than one session, the folder generally contains all previous drafts of the bill. Many folders have original working drafts of bills including Mansfield's notes with corrections and revisions. Individual files also contain numerous reports and hearings before Senate Committees. Mansfield's rising power in the Senate is apparent in the increase of correspondence from Congressional colleagues. Both Republican opponents and Democratic allies alike seek his help and sponsorship of legislation. The folders also contain memorandums from Senate committees, newspaper clippings, and correspondence. The bulk of letters come from constituents and interest groups.

The bills cover a whole range of issues but focus on federal policies relating to land use in the West. There are still a number of personal relief bills introduced on behalf of specific constituents in need of help. Many cases relate to immigration difficulties, but the number declines as Mansfield grows in importance. There are many letters from various government agencies, particularly the Interior and Agriculture Departments, relating to pending land use legislation. These bills often elicit significant constituent mail, reflecting the importance of federal policies in the livelihoods of Montanans in resource extractive industries. Much of the legislation relates to irrigation, agriculture, Indian policies, and federal public works projects. There is significant correspondence from the Army Corps of Engineers, Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the Department of Interior regarding these projects. There are numerous reports from federal agencies to support or oppose pending legislation. The vigorous support of mining, timber, flood control, and irrigation voiced by constituents in Series I is continued here, though the ideas of protecting wilderness also surface in letters beginning in the mid-1960s.

The rest of the series is comprised of Mansfield's replies to constituents, reports to Congressional Committees, telegrams, press releases, and memorandums. There are also copies of public laws after legislation has been passed, letters from Congressional colleagues, newsletters from constituent interest groups, and legal documents from various cases. The series is arranged logically and each folder contains information pertaining to a single bill. Each Congressional session follows chronologically and uses bill numbers to establish the series order. Several bills that contain significant materials occupy two or three folders. Some of the material contained in this series relates directly to other series including Montana Files, Projects, Federal Agencies, and Case Mail.

Series IX: Senate: Legislation, 1953-1977

183 linear feet

This series covers all legislation relevant to Mansfield during his twenty-four years in the Senate. The documents and information in this series is similar to the information contained in Series II: House: Legislation. Since Mansfield was in the Senate for more than twice as long as he spent in the House and he held significantly more important positions there, the series is both more extensive and more substantive. Despite greater breadth and depth, the core of the series' content remains the same. The series contains a broad spectrum of legislation including Senate and House bills. The files reflect all phases of the legislative process from proposals to introduce legislation to copies of public laws.

More specifically, the folders contain a predictable sequence of documents throughout the series. The series generally consists of correspondence, committee reports, copies of the pending bills, press releases, telegrams, and newspaper clippings. In general all material relating to a specific piece of legislation is contained in a single file, though some folders focus on a specific sub-committee and the bills before it during a single session. For example, Box 60 contains all the bills before the Senate Judiciary Committee in 1959. Both House and Senate legislation for the era are included, though they generally are grouped by related subject. Included in the files are bills relating to wilderness designation, Vietnam, the Equal Rights Amendment, Alaskan statehood, Senate appropriations, tax reform, cigarette advertising, farm programs, mining, timber, and foreign relations. A file typically will have all the information on a particular bill; often a single folder will contain all the documents for a ten or twenty year period leading up to the introduction of the legislation.

The majority of the series consists of correspondence. The letters are predominantly from constituents and interest groups with concerns over the effect of a specific piece of pending legislation. Almost every folder also contains copies of Mansfield's replies to these letters. The letters still project an intimacy between Mansfield and Montana citizens that seems remarkable though the later folders have fewer personal anecdotes and less informal chatter about friends and family. The letters from interest groups continue to reveal the key players in Montana politics, particularly the strong voices of farmers, ranchers, loggers, and miners. As Mansfield tackles more national and international legislation, their letters appear less in the files. Certain issues raise significant interest among Montana voters, particularly increasing foreign aid and any proposed cuts in federal support for agriculture. The rest of the series is rounded out by letters and memorandums from Congressional colleagues, press releases, Mansfield's speeches and testimony, newspaper clippings sent by constituents, telegrams, and reports and letters from Federal Agencies.

The series is arranged chronologically in twelve subseries: 83rd Congress, 84th Congress, 85th Congress, 86th Congress, 87th Congress, 88th Congress, 89th Congress, 90th Congress, 91st Congress, 92nd Congress, 93rd Congress, and 94th Congress. Some boxes follow the number sequence of Senate bills from a particular session, but this does not hold consistently true. Generally folders contain information relating to a single bill. However, specific subjects like Public Works may be grouped together in a folder and a box may be organized by subject within a legislative session. Like the House Legislation series, the Senate series does not contain every piece of pending legislation during this time but any bill that related to Montana or Mansfield's.

Series X: Senate: Federal Agencies, 1953-1977

285 linear feet

This series is an orderly chronicle of all Mansfield's interactions and interests in federal agencies during his time in the Senate. The series is broken up by senatorial term and proceeds alphabetically by the name of the agency. Most of the information in these files relates to interactions between federal agencies and Montanans, though subjects as basic as the Postmasterships in Forsyth and as exotic as evacuations in Pakistan are covered. Many of the files focus on the day-to-day worries of constituents and the multitude of complaints and concerns they have in connection to federal agencies. The bulk of the series consists of correspondence, agency reports and newsletters, legal documents, speeches, press releases, and newspaper clippings.

More specifically, the series begins with the Department of Agriculture and covers all relevant programs of the agency for Mansfield's first term in the Senate. It includes most of the programs that Agriculture administers like the Farmer's Home Administration, the Farm Credit Administration, and the Forest Service. This same pattern repeats itself through the entire spectrum of federal agencies, beginning anew with each Senatorial term. Agencies with particularly extensive files also proceed by year within a given term. The Department of the Navy is an example of this. Within each agency there is a wide range of subject matter. There are numerous letters from constituents and interest groups. Most of these are accompanied by copies of Mansfield's replies. Problems with agencies that directly affected people's finances form the core of these letters. Timber sales, loans for farms and ranches, opening and closing military bases, federal job appointments, grazing fees, disaster relief, and dam projects all figure prominently. Complaints about specific policies and appeals to change these policies also appear frequently. Many folders contain letters from agencies justifying the policies under attack and more basic letters keeping Mansfield informed of general progress with various federal programs. Correspondence between Senate colleagues, and particularly between Mansfield and the rest of Montana's Congressional delegation appears throughout the series. Besides letters, many folders contain agency reports ranging from basic records of timber sales to Treasury fiscal investigation results. Many of the military files reflect information similar to that in other series regarding court martials, discharges, transfers, and personnel assignments. The State Department files reflect the concerns of Cold War America, including investigations and reports of Communist strength domestically and abroad. State files also range from the administration of the Civil Service exam to strategic concerns in Southeast Asia. The remainder of the series consists of numerous newspaper clippings sent by constituents, press releases, drafts of Mansfield's speeches, excerpts from the Congressional Record, and agency memorandums.

It is relatively easy to understand the basic structure of this series, though its sheer size makes locating specific documents difficult. Using rough chronology and manually scanning folders is probably the best approach, especially for periods when folders are vaguely titled, for example "Agriculture Miscellaneous." There is considerable overlap in subject matter with other series, especially the Montana and Legislation series, and cross-referencing a particular subject in these other series is worthwhile.

The series is divided into four chronological Subseries: First Term, Second Term, Third Term, and Fourth Term.

Series XI: Senate: Montana, 1953-1976

53 linear feet

This series contains documents relating to Mansfield's four terms in the Senate and items and projects of special importance to the state of Montana. The materials in the series include correspondence, reports from federal and state agencies, promotional materials from the state of Montana, photographs, and newspaper clippings. The organization of this series is a little unclear. It generally follows a chronological sequence beginning with Mansfield's first term in the Senate. Aside from a vague chronology, there is no clear organizational method, although the end of the series contains unanswered mail from Montana filed by year.

It is unclear what separates the material that ended up in this series from other series containing overlapping information. Distinguishing features were hard to discern aside from the basic fact that all the folders focused on Montana. In particular, the folders contain extensive information on federal public works programs in Montana. A number of Bureau of Reclamation projects are thoroughly documented including Canyon Ferry, Buffalo Rapids, Tiber Dam, and the Bull Hook Project near Havre. Files also contain information on nearly every other type of federal program operating in Montana. Water pollution control, alcohol and drug treatment programs, hospital review systems, and agricultural support all appear in the series.

The bulk of the series is composed of correspondence. Letters from constituents and interest groups inside the state of Montana account for most of the correspondence. These letters generally center on obtaining funding for federal programs operating in the state or supporting federal works projects. The unanswered letter folders give a glimpse into the quantity and off-beat nature of the mail that members of Congress often receive. Many are unsigned and contain a variety of complaints or allegations about the operations of government or Mansfield's political stands. The subjects of Chappaquiddick, Watergate, Vietnam, and taxes account for the majority of these letters. There is significant correspondence from Montana legislators and other state government officials. Letters Montana's Congressional delegation, particularly Lee Metcalf, figure prominently. There is an entire box containing information on Montana's Territorial Centennial complete with booster materials and press releases. Displays for the traveling Centennial train, legislation relating to the Centennial, commemorative materials, numerous canceled Charles Russell stamps, photographs, invitations to Mansfield for various celebrations in Montana, and copies of Montana Magazine are in this box. These materials reveal a great deal about Montana's conception of itself and its history in 1964. Other boxes contain reports from various federal agencies on the progress of programs in Montana, legal documents, newspaper clippings sent by constituents and local Chambers of Commerce, press releases, and dozens of photographs of flooding from Havre. There are also a number of maps scattered throughout the series and photographs of Montana's Centennial train. Worthy of note are two canceled checks from the Montana Territory to Samuel Mansfield dated 1887 and 1889.

Generally the material contained here is best accessed by using the rough chronology of senatorial terms and then locating specific files from the container list. The individual folders hold a quirky mixture of materials and vary widely from routine form letter replies to voter mail to critical agency reports. Many of the topics covered here are also referenced in the Federal Agencies series. Unfortunately there is no exact way of knowing precisely which series material has been filed in and cross-referencing other series to find overlapping information is recommended.

Series XII: Senate: Miscellaneous, 1953-1977

173.5 linear feet

This series serves as a catchall for information and documents from Mansfield's years in the Senate that do not fit neatly into any other category. Given the extent of the series, the range of subjects is very broad and determining exact folder contents is difficult. There are significant accumulations of documents in several categories: incoming correspondence, document requests, and copies of form letter replies from Mansfield's office. A number of boxes also contain folders labeled simply miscellaneous. For example Box 30 contains folders titled chronologically beginning "Miscellaneous-January 1961." Within miscellaneous folders there are letters, reports, newspaper clippings, and excerpts from the Congressional Record.

The specific contents of the series range widely and include both substantive documents on government operations and multiple copies of routine letters. Their subjects reflect the spice and the drudgery of Congressional tasks. The beginning of the series consists of document requests from constituents, interests groups, and federal agencies. Like the House Miscellaneous series, there are numerous requests for Agricultural Yearbooks and Department of Agriculture Bulletins. In addition, Montana voters ask for copies of Committee hearings, the Bill of Rights, relief maps, Mineral Yearbooks, Supreme Court documents, Atomic Energy Commission Reports, Montana state information, and Bureau of Indian Affairs policy documents. A wide array of government publications were requested and provide an excellent survey on the documents available to the public over nearly a quarter of a century. Beyond document requests, there are multiple boxes of "Green Copies." These are copies of letters that are too specific, too general, or too old for further use as form letters. The "Green Copies" filed by senatorial term and then listed by subject within each term. A single folder might contain letters on a specific subject spanning the entire six years of the term.

The Correspondence Incoming boxes collect all letters to Mansfield during a single senatorial term on a particular topic. The correspondence seems to be divided by legislative session as well as term. Generally folders relate to pending legislation and span only a few months, though particularly divisive legislation like the Wilderness Act might inspire letters for several years. The bulk of letters are from constituents and interest groups supporting or opposing pending bills. It is unclear whether the letters included here also accompany the folder in Legislation on the same bill or not. The files here seem to contain more letters on specific legislation than Series X, but it is unclear what distinguishing criteria for inclusion in each series is.

The Miscellaneous boxes hold an unpredictable range of documents. These files are generally arranged by senatorial term and then chronologically by month. There are letters from constituents and interest groups with Mansfield's replies, numerous get-well cards and Saint Patrick's Day wishes, thank-yous, photographs, federal program reports, copies of Mansfield's speeches, requests for tickets to presidential inaugurations, the musical score for a Montana song, personal letters from other Senators, drawings from schoolchildren, and the galley proofs to a book. Newspaper clippings, magazine articles mailed by voters, tax forms, receipts, and gifts to John F. Kennedy round out the series.

The series is organized in four chronological Subseries: First Term, Second Term, Third Term, and Fourth Term. There are also numerous sub-groupings like those mentioned above that lend coherence to a series with little outward structure. Locating material within the boxes containing only "Miscellaneous" folders is difficult though the chronological titles on the files help. Some of the material overlaps with more substantive series and the remainder is the accumulated esoterica of twenty-four years in the Senate.
