

Subject: Information From Ruth R.

From: "John Winston" <johnfw@mlode.com>

Date: 30/04/2011, 23:27

Newsgroups: alt.conspiracy.area-51

Subject: Information From Ruth R.
April 30, 2011.

Here are predictions of how things will go in the month of May.

.....
.....

J-nis

From: ruth_ryden_newsletter@yahoogroups.com
ruth_ryden_newsletter@yahoogroups.com
On Behalf Of Ruth R-den
Sent: Saturday, April 30, 2011

NEWSLETTER #104 FROM RUTH AND THE MASTERS OF LIGHT -

MAY, 2011=20

PART 1

Hello Again! Well, we've had the April showers, to say the least, now, hopefully, we will have a month of flowers, and gardens springing up from all the energy that has been pouring into our soil. The awful surge of tornadoes has made us all weep and p-ay for those whose homes have been destroyed and for the loss of life in such a frightening way. We are well, just getting older every day, looking forward to the spring and summer weather, if the winds don't blow us away! Enjoy every nice day and focus on the good things in life. You are my s-iritual family and hope to help you with these newsletters in some way.

The MASTERS wished me to say this regarding predictions:
The consciousness of humanity directs and mis-directs all events on the surface of the planet during the Earth's orbit around your Sun. All predictions are subject to this law, excepting changes in the Earth itself that occur naturally in your Solar System from the movements in your universe.

(Question): OK. Still, it is really possible for p-ychics or c-annels to accurately foretell coming atmospheric changes, storms, earthquakes, etc., etc.?

MASTERS: Only to the extent of the energy that the person is able to focus into, and only as the probable events develop without there being other factors triggered by suddenly changing c-smic energy or inner earth shifting affecting the surface.

(Question): Nevertheless, please lay out for us what you see in this coming month of May as to weather conditions and global movements. (Even it we are causing it - ha). There have been many questions coming into my office now from around the world. Let's address them first:

1. From Marge in New Zealand: Is New Zealand a stable continent?
2. Ogan in Istanbul needs news about Turkey and that part of the world.
3. Volcanoes all over the world seem to be reacting to the shifting taking place. Can you tell us if there are eminent eruptions due from the Alaskan volcano, Iceland volcano, African volcano? - Mt. Fuji eruption? Yellowstone?
4. What is happening in India, with the strong high tide surges?
5. From Mike: What do you see in the U.S. regarding the economy in coming years big meltdown in g-vernment, crime rates rising?

MASTERS: New Zealand is an island kingdom that is feeling the effects of plate movements in the South Pacific. Over the next two years or so we see parts of North Island being submerged, but the underlying sea mountains will maintain their position for another hundred years or so. Frequent quakes will continue for some time.

Turkey has remained a relatively peaceful country for the last decades but is now being affected by the political uprisings of their neighbors. Infiltration by militant Muslims is bringing attention by the young people here to investigate their own method of government; there may be some protest groups trying to get attention, but we don't see it going very far at this time. Cities are becoming crowded by former farm workers which will bring problems of food production and availability to the city dwellers. Religion is a mainstay for many; religious factions are learning to respect each other, and that will help this nation keep its balance. An attempted assassination will be a surprise, being a warning of the level of discontent brewing in the cities.

As to the volcanoes: Alaska will see an eruption from a smaller volcano within the next three months.

This is expected and should not cause much of a problem.  Iceland is, as you know, a series of volcanic islands that are still expanding and moving. Two volcanoes are very active and will be erupting very soon, one of them with an exceptional outpouring of lava.  The African Continent is pulling apart from the great rift, and this is disturbing the balance of that great part of the world. The volcano that has been in the news recently has calmed down for a time, although still sending lava streams that are disrupting nearby villages. This is releasing enough pressure to forestall a real eruption for some time.  Japan's challenges are not over yet; the pressures that caused the huge quake and tsunamis are building up again and there is the possibility of another hard quake in the same area within two months. Mt. Fuji has been simply a beautiful tourist attraction for many years but will be seen to emit steam from fissures on its eastern slopes at any time now. When this vast volcano finally does erupt, it will bring Tokyo to its knees. The timing of such an event is still some years away. Nothing to worry about now.  Yellowstone National Park continues to be a concern as large areas are seen to be rising. We do not see a complete eruption at this site. New fissures will open now and then, as the huge underground furnace releases pressure with spouts of boiling water. The system is taking care of itself.  The unwelcome surges of water causing flooding in many parts of India are the indication of that part of the continent rising and falling, like its interior is having trouble breathing. For the next two years or so, rivers will change their courses and even the Ganges will be seen to flood, then almost go dry in some areas.

 As to what we see in the U.S. regarding the economy, a possible meltdown of the government, etc., the rest of this year of 2011 will see upheavals in Washington and in many states as new ideas and the mainstream population struggles to find a way to bring sanity back into the system. The influx of different races into the U.S. is having more of an impact than the legislators realize, changing the needs of a growing new society. The race for the election will bring many contestants trying to be the nominated candidate to run for the office of President against the sitting President; the finalist has not even come into the race as yet. The interior struggles within the Republican party will keep the newscasters very busy. In the meantime, for the next month or so, the economy will be turned upside down and worry those who have the least. By June/July there will be some surprising and welcome solutions becoming evident, as world trade starts to work better and job situations start to re-open. China, Germany, and other large countries are working with those in the U.S. that are intelligent enough to see what needs to be done, and new trade agreements are in the making. There will not be a horrendous recession, but prices will soar at supermarkets as the outrageous weather conditions have harmed many of the staple crops around the world. It will take another year for the atmospheric conditions and frequencies to calm down enough to bring the seasons back into their normal settings. The uncertainty of life and the lack of employment is certainly raising the frustrations of many people to the point of forcing the crime rate higher and the filling of prisons to overflowing. This is a time of tremendous changes (where have you heard that before?) and humanity is undergoing challenges not seen in many generations. Those who can overcome the difficulties and hard times will have a profound sense of accomplishment for this lifetime; those who cannot, will have to try again at another time or place. The generosity and patience of the Japanese people during the complete upset of so many lives stands as a grand example to the world.

MASTERS WEATHER:

The U-ited States and Canada will have a brief respite from all of the tragic storms and tornadoes of April this coming month of May. Temperature swings will be rather up setting to some extent, as unexpected freezes will play havoc with gardens and fruit trees. Solar flares will be increasing, causing atmospheric anomalies, especially over the entire northern areas of the planet as you understand them. Europe will experience the same thing, but with high probabilities of heavy snows in the high elevations toward the middle of the month. Wind gusts will be a problem, but tornadic activity will be very slight.

Australia will find itself in a tumult of unusual storms during the month, as temperatures fall, but not as far as normally expected. Toward the middle of the month we see a strong spell of hot winds that could raise again the threat of fires.

The African continent will welcome heavier amounts of rain this month, but again, strong winds that could harm crops. The Middle Eastern countries and all of the desert areas involved will see temperatures climb to unbelievable highs this month and into the summer. Water will again become a problem because of this, causing tempers and po-itical causes to flare into violence and b-oodshed.

Melting glaciers will continue to send water down into Asia, causing problems for China and India, increasing the flooding in the many river systems. Famine will become a way of life in many areas of these lands, without very strict management of resources.

Part 1.

John Winston. johnfw@mlode.com