Look at your results. Thanks to Norm B-yden

Wa- of the Sons of Light and Sons of Darkness

Astronauts have always been distinguished men of valor and exploits. A couple of years ago, Dr. Edgar M-tchell and I had a brief conversation after we spoke to about fifty Congressional staff personnel in Washington DC. He indicated as I do that we may be visited by some type of intelligence from space. I asked Edgar, what he thought was the real sec-et to all of this concerning UFOs. He said, The answers are all in the Dead Sea Scrolls. Even now not all of these scrolls have not been revealed. I searched the scrolls myself later to find some meaning. The text of the -ar of the Sons of Light and Sons of Darkness describes where two sides are in an apocalyptic battle for Earth. The -ngels are described as being part of the fight.

Warrior a-gels are in our muster, and He that is mighty in Wa- is in our throng. The army of His spir-ts marches beside us. Our horsemen come like clouds or like banks of dew, to cover the earth, or like torrential showers, to rain judgment on all that grows in it. Opposing the good forces are the forces of darkness. But for corru-tion thou hast made Belial, an a-gel of hostility. All his dominion is darkness and guilt. All the s-irits that are associated with him are an-els of destruction. They follow only the laws of darkness, and their craving is directed toward it. Pages 414-416 The Dead Sea S-riptides. In his scholarly book, Egyptian Ideas of the Afterlife, British Egyptologist E.A. Wallis Budge said that the ancient Egyptians were preoccupied with life beyond the grave and that over thousands of years ancient Egyptians had a wealth of ideas and beliefs concerning immortality and the after life. Ancient Egyptian records described a fleet of UFOs moving across the clear blue sky over ancient Egypt.

UK Possible UFO Worship Stonehenge's Timber Twin and Cursus. During my four year Air F-rce tour in England I visited many prehistoric sites such as Stonehenge that could have been a landing place for disc shaped UFOs. A couple miles away is Woodhenge older than Stonehenge and was made from wood also in the shape of a disc. Archeologists claim the ancients worshipped the Sun or Moon, but these are balls not discs shaped. The timber circles were uncovered at Durrington Walls, the site of a Stone Age village and prehistoric earthworks were discovered in the early summer of 1925 as Squadron Leader Insall sat at the controls of his Sopwith Snipe and noticed the recently ploughed remains of several disc barrows which had been almost obliterated by decades of farming. One particular barrow in Dough Covert caught his eye as it appeared to resemble Stonehenge, visible two miles away. Woodhenge was made by skilled carpenters who lived 4000 years ago.

It was 127 feet in diameter and contained 2750 yards of wooden framework that required ten acres of land.

It was probably built prior to Stonehenge and may have been as a model for the stone monolith. I suggest the ancients w-rshipped Unidentified Flying Objects that are frequently seen over the Stonehenge area.

Woodhenge Timberhenge, and Stonehenge are disc shaped structures.

Theunis Bates writes, -- Stonehenge, that ancient and mysterious circle of giant obelisks on England's Salisbury Plain, may once have had a nearby wooden twin, according to a pioneering new archaeological survey. The idea of finding something as significant and dramatic as this monument, so close to Stonehenge, is just brilliant, Henry Chapman, an archaeologist at the University of Birmingham and a member of the team that made the discovery, told AOL News. It will completely change the way we think about Stonehenge and the surrounding landscape. The discovery of the timber henge (a term used to describe any British circular ritual site dating from 3,000 to 2,000 B.C.) was made by a multinational team of archaeologists, who started surveying the land around Stonehenge with sensors that provide a high-definition 3-D view of what's under the ground. Every time you excavate, you damage the site by moving material, Chapman says.

With the technology we use, such as ground-penetrating radar, there's no need to dig.

Nearby is so-called Woodhenge, a monument once composed of six rings of wooden posts enclosed by an earthen embankment.

A week after they started examining the area, the team spotted what appeared to be a circle of 24 post holes under the ground, less than 3,000 feet to the northwest of Stonehenge. The ring measured about 82 feet in diameter -- just 17 feet less than Stonehenge -- and was enclosed by an inner ditch and possibly an outer bank.

The post holes are up to a meter in diameter, which suggests that the timbers they'd have held would have been at least 10 feet high, Chapman says. He adds that the towering structure was likely built about 4,500 years ago, on the basis of comparing it with similar sites.

That's approximately the same time that Stonehenge's world-famous trilithons -- a prehistoric structure with two upright stone blocks supporting a third placed across the top -- were erected. And curiously, the newly discovered monument mirrors a similar henge some 4,270 feet southeast of Stonehenge, which was first uncovered in 1937. Like the newly discovered site, that circle overlooks the ancient stone structure and has two entrances.

All three henges appear to have been deliberately aligned. The latest find throws into question previous assumptions about Britain's most famous ancient monument. Many interpretations have traditionally placed Stonehenge at the center of the site in isolation, Chapman says. But what we're seeing is that Stonehenge, when it entered its very grand phase, wasn't the only structure in the area. It was surrounded by other complex structures, that may have been used much like medieval cathedrals. So instead of being the focus of all the ancient folks' attention, Stonehenge was likely just one -- admittedly impressive -- part of the religious landscape. As the ancient Britons didn't record their thoughts, we'll likely never know exactly why they built Stonehenge and its smaller siblings. But Chapman says the latest discovery offers an insight into their beliefs. He suggests that the wood and stone circles may have been placed close together as the two materials had intertwined symbolic meanings for Neolithic Brits. That ties in with the thinking of Mike Parker Pearson, a Sheffield University archaeologist and henge expert, who has suggested that the wooden structures might have been associated with feasts for the living, while stone circles were realms of the dead. The discovery of the new wooden henge is likely just the first of many surprise discoveries to come from Chapman and his fellow archaeologists. By 2014, they intend to have scanned about 5 square miles of land around Stonehenge, which will then be collated into a detailed map.

I think in the next four years, we're going to have quite a different understanding of Stonehenge, Chapman says. We're going to fill in the detail between the standing monuments, and hopefully by doing that, show the complexities and subtleties of the Neolithic people who were here.

Nearby is the Stonehenge Cursus a long rectangular earthwork that runs for about 3km (1.8 miles) on an east-west alignment. It was built during the Neolithic period, around 3100 BC, making it slightly earlier than the circular bank and ditch of the first phase of Stonehenge. Although similar cursus monuments exist in England and many theories have been put forward, we do not know the purpose of these mysterious monuments. They generally survive only as marks, shallow banks and ditches visible only from the air. Cursus (plural 'curs s' or 'cursuses') was a name given by early Stonehenge.

British archaeologists such as William Stukeley to the large parallel lengths of banks with external ditches which they thought were early Roman athletic courses, hence the Latin name cursus, meaning course.
