This talks about the life of a lady and her son.

Few relationships are as profound as those between a mother and her children. The relationship between Nancy C. and her son, David, however, was marked by an added dimension a remarkable p-ychic connection that bound them throughout the tragic challenges of David's young life... and beyond.

This is Nancy and David's true story:

David was my second son. He was born on my birthday. Since David was born, I felt that I was going to lose him, but I did not feel confident that anyone, especially my own parents, would believe me. Since I was a little girl, I have had the ability to foresee the future, mostly tragedies. Not many people, especially family members, believed in the paranormal. I just knew what I felt and I always followed through.

So every time either David or his brother Carl, who was 22 months older than David, seemed ill or would not eat, I would take them to the doctor. Their doctor felt that I was just a nervous mother. Carl was thriving well, thankfully. Yet, although I couldn't put my finger on it, I knew something was going to happen to David.

The frightening discovery

By the time David was in first grade, something compelled me look at the back of his head. I didn't see anything, of course, but I felt that something was going to be there. It didn't take too much longer. Once David started second grade and was now eight years old, he came home from school one day and complained about a headache. This was very unusual for him and I had a sinking feeling inside of me, but I did not panic. I kept a close eye on him. I gave him an analgesic and told him to lie down, but to tell me if he felt another headache coming on. The headaches progressed. I started getting calls from his teacher. I took him to the doctor, who felt that David might merely be showing symptoms of stress. I didn't buy that diagnosis at all. He was now projectile vomiting and by this time could barely walk, making his way with an unsteady gait. The doctor took an X-ray of David's sinus, which he said showed he had a sinus infection. I told the doctor he was wrong and I felt that my son needed to have a CT scan or an MRI. Although I already knew what was going to happen, I was not going to let my son leave me without a good fight. David was scheduled for a CT scan. Two days before the scan, I had a premonition of David's illness. I knew he had a brain tumor. I called the doctor's answering service to have him call me. The doctor called me back and said that I was absolutely wrong. He said that David's symptoms did not coincide with someone that had a brain tumor. I didn't care. I knew my son was going to leave me. I felt it.

David had his CT scan... which proved my feelings were correct. David indeed had a brain tumor. I felt my whole world coming to an end, plus I had another child that needed me. I p-ayed that maybe G-d would give David a chance and give me the tumor. I would suffer and d-e for my children any day.

Recovery and tragedy

David had surgery to remove the tumor and all went well. But I was not prepared for what the extreme dose of radiation was going to do to my son in the long run.

Five years following his long rode back to recovery, I started to notice little things happening to David that I brought up to his oncologist. David was having MRIs on a six-month follow-up basis. The results of one showed something growing in David's brain stem. It was called a glioblastoma.

David was sent to a well-known doctor in another state, who thought my son looked just fine and there was nothing to worry about. As David became more ill by the day, this doctor's team of surgeons performed a type of biopsy on my son that caused him to eventually hemorrhage to death.

Apparently, this machinery was loaned to them from another hospital and these doctors were not sure how to use it correctly. I was told I could sue these doctors, but no money in the world could bring back my little birthday present.

David's gift to his mother

One evening, while crying in bed, I prayed that I could see my David and to see how he lives. I was so heartbroken for a long time, always trying to figure out why him? He was a very religious child. He built crosses out of wood and put them around his room. He would also donate his clothing to the poor. I never knew a child like him in my life!

This night I had a vision. I saw my son approach me. He took my hand, and although he didn't speak to me verbally, I was able to hear him telepathically.

He told me not to be frightened.

Together we followed a beautiful light. When we stopped, I looked around me and I knew exactly where I was. It looked like we were in Heaven. There could not have been any other place that is as comforting and beautiful as what I felt and saw.

The colors of the sky were so beautiful and vibrant! Even the color of the grass seemed much brighter. There were temple-like buildings, benches and gazebos. The architecture was phenomenal! I saw a beautiful waterfall, and the color of the water was just so breathtaking, as was the rainbow that was close by.

I started to cry. I looked at my son and I said that if people only knew what they have to look forward to, they would probably live the kind of life that would bring them to Heaven while they have the chance. I could not help it, but I continued to cry until the next thing I recalled was waking up in my bed and gasping for air.

Since David left us, this would not be my only experience either with messages from angels regarding David or visits to the other side.
