Subject: Poison On Strawberries.
July 16, 2011.

I eat a lot of strawberries and wonder if they a healthy to eat. This article talks about that subject.

In a time of intense propaganda about food safety, California recently approved the use of a chemical regularly used to create c-ncer in lab animals for use on strawberries that will be shipped around the world. The chemical is methyl iodide and some scientists call it the most dangerous chemical known to man.

Scientists use protective gear when using it in the lab because of the ca-cer risk and the chemical's easy ability to damage our DNA. Of course, damaged DNA leads to problems for the holder of that DNA, and for all future generations that inherit it too. The chemical is also known to cause brain and reproductive damage, so it's a move that California has made to ensure strawberries will be about as unsafe as possible.

It's also a move that calls into question what exactly food safety is all about. In a lot of minds, having produce that isn't grown in a toxic soup of po-sons would be a very logical first step. Getting rid of factory farms that improperly feed and d-ug the animals, pollute the air and water, and turn out dise-sed animals would be another logical step. Instead, the g-vernment supports these activities and allows even more toxic chemicals into our food supply, like methyl iodide - in spite of consumer and scientific community protest.

Scientists have assured us that using methyl iodide on strawberries will mean it will end up in California's groundwater. And groundwater makes up over 30 percent of the water delivered to California homes. California water already has numerous pois-ns in it and even if people drink purified water, it's common to absorb about a gallon of water with each shower.

California regulators have failed to look at what this will do to the future of California and California's children. In years to come, it's unlikely property values will maintain, when even more of the population is developing ca-cer due to this canc-r-causing chemical being pumped into homes as drinking water. Just ask residents of Pompton Lakes, New Jersey.

It's a DuP-nt factory town with pois-ned groundwater and an uncanny number of residents with can-er - and they're finding it's really hard to sell their homes.

Some Native Americans live by the principle of seven generations. This means they look at how their actions today affect the population seven generations down the line. Today, lawmakers often have trouble looking even one generation down the line. If they did, decisions like this one to use pois-ns in the food supply would never be made. It's a sad reflection of the state of consciousness of legislators and 700 California strawberry farmers that would just as soon po-son the population, as try something different. A process called soil solarization has been shown to be just as effective in improving crop yield and controlling pests as the use of dangerous chemicals like methyl iodide. And soil solarization only involves covering the fields with plastic tarps for a few weeks before planting to heat the soils. The heating process effectively destroys many pathogens and it also releases beneficial nutrients from the soil. Solarization is also less expensive for farmers than chemical treatments, which is a bonus, but when it comes down to whether or not to p-ison the Earth and population, cost shouldn't be the dominate factor. If strawberries are grown without toxic chemicals, they're very healthy foods. They're known to protect our cells and heart and they have anti-inflammatory and anti-ca-cer properties too. Strawberries are actually the most popular berry fruit in the world - and ninety percent of the strawberries eaten in the U.S. are grown in California. More:

About the author

Kim Evans is an author, photographer, and natural health writer. Her book, Cleaning Up! The Ultimate Body cleanse, outlines deep and powerful at-home detoxification methods to address the root cause of most health problems. While it's becoming common knowledge that most people carry an extreme toxic burden and that these toxins can cause any disease imaginable, most people don't know that there is a direct connection between our spiritual reality and the state of our bodies. Actually, these are all of the clean/unclean references in the Bible that no one really knows what they are referring to. It's funny, but it turns out that Cleaning Up! may be a Biblical and Nostradamus prophecy too. In Nostradamus Lost Book, he gave us seven images pointing to the time leading to 2012 and if one looks closely at the images, one will see that all he's doing is drawing the Revelation prophecy which is of a book (or scroll) that is delivered that leads humankind to the light. The truly entertaining part is that in Nostradamus' image he drew someone who looks just like Kim writing the book, and then, albeit cryptically, stuck her first and middle name in the image too. You can see Kim's profile and this image here:

has recently been updated and the author believes that the seven seals in the Revelation prophecy are methods in her book. Since the Bible states that all humans will be judged by in the book in the prophecy, maybe you want to get your copy today? Cleaning Up! also explains Nostradamus' seven end of time images and on December 21, 2012, the entire Revelation prophecy will be publically revealed.
