Subject: Where Is Elvis P. Now? Part 2 of 2.
Oct. 15, 2011.

Here is some more information about the after-life.

"I feel like they're protective and care for me," she said. "There's just a lot of people who love this house and have a hard time letting go. My biggest fear is that I'll end up haunting this place some day," Lynn said with a chuckle.

Before conducting an investigation, Hauntings Research conducts tours through the house, listening to stories of reported paranormal activity. Upon hearing stories, the group does its best to debunk paranormal claims.

Lisa Hilty, a member of Hauntings Research from Elizabeth, said it's important to find an earthly explanation for paranormal sightings, instead of jumping to conclusions.

For example, Lynne claimed to see s-irits in the parlor mirror, which sits above the mantle, whenever they take a photo. The group took several pictures and examined the mirror to make sure it doesn't have any defects, which would affect the picture.

"You have to rule out all natural influences, before assuming it's anything," Hilty said. "You can't assume that every sound, creak or settling board is something paranormal."

Hauntings Research strives to document paranormal activity with photographs and recordings, said Ozosky, who also leads a paranormal-studies class at Community College of Allegheny County's South Campus in West Mifflin.

The group uses several cameras; EMF meters, which are used to find the electromagnetic fields of power sources in homes and on construction sites; and voice recorders to document investigations.

They also use digital-voice recorders, in hope of catching an electric voice phenomenon (EVP), which could be sp-rits speaking.

All of the group's findings are based on audio, photographic and video findings, Ozosky said.

"It's great to have a personal experience during an investigation, but without some kind of proof, there's no way to prove it actually happened," Ozosky said. "They're interesting experiences, but unless you document them, they really don't count for beans."

During the recent tour of the mansion, Hauntings Research members broke off into several groups, each exploring a different part of the bed-and-breakfast.

Each member was armed with electro-magnetic field detectors, video cameras, digital cameras and digital-voice recorders, in hope of communicating with any Larimer Mansion spi-its.

Members spent nearly seven hours investigating the mansion, wrapping up their investigation at 3 a.m.

Hauntings Reserach wraps up an investigation in three to six weeks.

Investigators must view and listen to hours, upon hours of video and audio footage, as well as review each picture taken during an investigation, Ozosky said.

If investigators find something in the footage or photographs, they send it to Hauntings Research's analyzing committee, which double-checks the discovery.

"Once everything is reviewed, we try to pick out the clearest and most obvious occurrences, which cannot be explained, and show it to our clients," Ozosky said. "We usually call that our reveal."

The group plans to meet with the Moiseys and the Norwin Star in October to review the findings. - pittsburghlive

Video: Night Investigation at the Haunted Windmill

From Chris Halton

<http://www.youtube.com/user/Constantine99999>

: As a `one off`, Haunted Earth were permitted to investigate the 200 year old John Webb`s Windmill in Thaxted, Essex. This beautiful old tower mill is a restored and working windmill in trust, with it`s own unique museum of rural crafts. This proved to be an exciting visit with p-ranormal activity captured and shared in this video.
