Subject: DK's Experiences Of Being Controlled. Part 4. Nov. 21, 2011.

Here he comes in contact with a person who actually believe that he was doing the right thing in torturing DK.

I gather they thought that the lightning could be used as a plausible explanation of what had initiated the psychotic breakdown, that they were arranging to simulate by using the brain implant. They then incessantly tortured me for three days. All along I was cursing them, and sincerely wished that they would suffer forever in the eternal fire. I don't think I have ever felt such a strong wish at any time. (I no longer feel that way about it.) During those days they ought to have understood, that I knew about the mind-control device, but I never stated it clearly and you never know with people. On the third day, I came to the decision that I would hang myself in one of the trees, if they hadn't stopped the torture, before the evening of the fourth day. Since there were no signs of much improvement, I made preparations, found a rope and tried to focus on the practical aspects of the hanging, of what could go wrong. I didn't want to survive with some severe brain damage or a broken neck or something. I thought that that particular forest wasn't a very inspiring place to die in, but I was really determined to get away from the deep humiliation, that they were forcing on me. A doctor was called by somebody and that doctor calmly tried to convince me not to kill myself. I never gave any explanation of why I had that intention, since I had never told anybody about the mind-control horror I was enduring. I felt sorry for the doctor. She had travelled a long way and I thought one should reward people for showing empathy like that. In any case, I accepted, to once more be sent to a mental hospital. At the hospital, there were some friendly people, who told me they had many fine medicines, that would be suitable. But this time there were no threats. I also had made a decision not to say anything about the reason for being there. I told them, they wouldn't believe me, and that I would be worse off if I told them. The torture did not stop at the mental hospital although the mind controllers, decreased the total amount of torture.

Not surprisingly, I had been placed in a room, where my room mate suffered from cyclic psychosis. The mind controllers regularly tortured and humiliated me in my room. Both on other previous occasions, and in the hospital, they subjected me to manipulations where the brain implant was used in a very sophisticated manner. To begin with, it was used to create sounds inside my head, that made it appear as if somebody was constantly manoeuvring the water tubes above my head. On the same time they were affecting those parts of the brain, through the implant, that affect the senses for heat and cold, making it appear as if they were really changing the temperature of the water in a chaotic manner. Everybody knows how watertaps can sometimes behave in very annoying ways, without any need for any deliberate sabotage, but here it wasn't any natural cause, and it was a deliberate harassment, intended to make my conditions unpleasant and to provide the symptoms of insanity that they were so eagerly striving for. Note that I had been prepared by actually being surveyed by people walking above my head for periods of several months or more, so it wouldn't have seemed out of the question, that somebody might actually be standing somewhere in some service shaft and adjusting the waterflow or the cold / warm water ratio. It isn't easy to tell exactly when a sound is a real one and when it's just inside your head. But there is a way that probably is quite reliable. If the real sound has very low dynamical content, that is the strongest and the weakest parts don't differ too much, then it's harder to tell the difference, but in most cases, genuine sounds, caused by some physical act, are usually accompanied by fairly strong impulses of various kinds that cause waves to travel several different ways and not only to the ear through the air, but also to the head through the legs from the ground, a seismic wave if you like. You get a more 3-dimensional feeling in a manner of speaking. The sounds they have produced so far, with the implant, can be characterised by lacking in that kind of content. The reason is probably that they can't afford to use a high dynamic range in the electronic equipment that they use, since that would lead to an audible noise level, significant for electronic equipment. But this technology is rapidly developing, and they will undoubtedly continue to perfect the illusion. During the torture session, which preceded this second encounter with the mental health care, among other things they used the brain implant to simulate that the water to the shower in the place where I stayed would be contaminated, smelling unpleasantly. There wasn't anything wrong with the water, but the illusion was quite good and it took a little while before I realized, that the sense of smell, can be just as easily manipulated through the brain implant as any of the other senses.

I am fully aware of the fact that there are some forms of brain damage or sickness, that sometimes can produce similar effects. This awareness also, made me keep all these observations to myself. If you constantly feed the controllers with information about your current impressions, you make it possible for them to be more successful in their deception and manipulation, but when you tell them nothing and you let the years go by, they have much fewer options and they have to be extremely cautious and planning to foresee everything. They are to some extent, but the task is too formidable. The Machiavellian mind needs a little input to thrive. So the best is not to give him any. This kind of counter measure only works as long as they want to study you 'live'. Otherwise it is possible to deprive a person of the control of the mind to any degree.

During the prolonged torture session, there were some incidents where they experimented with me in such a way that I could estimate the resolution that the electronic device had on my skin. It seemed to be very high and I knew that this meant that there must be a large number of independent connection points between the implant and the brain. Later I have learnt that modern brain implants exist, which establish such contact by somehow stimulating the neurons to grow, or move microscopically, so that they become partially encapsulated in small cavities in the electronic device.

I was wondering, whether the implant can be used to read a persons handwriting, by monitoring the signals in the brain caused by the motions of the hand. I don't think so, but that may be coming. All along I did have a very distinct impression that the mind controllers were arranging a well thought-out combination of symptoms, that would fit into some psychiatrists clinical experience, in order to turn the truthful recount of my experiences into a we-pon in the hands of the state perpetrators. I wonder how much of the clinical experience of present day psychiatry, which, unknowingly, derives from the study of such human guinea pigs.

Note added later:

Later, I read somewhere, that students of psychiatry are sometimes given examples of paranoid schizophrenia, which seem to be aimed at preparing unknowing psychiatrists for the situations typical when people are subject to state terror of the kind under discussion, so that the victims allegations and description of symptoms will, falsely, appear to be a common occurrence among genuine cases of schizophrenia.

This paragraph is written after the rest of the text, as an afterthought and inserted where it belongs chronologically, but I didn't remember this until after everything else was written.

As I am writing this, I suddenly also remember being talked to, at the time of the peak of the torture period, by more than a single person, but there was one that stood out. Somebody who seemed confident (selfassured) and enthusiastic about what he was doing. I also had the impression that this person had some sort of psychiatric background or at least was familiar with psychiatry. This may have lasted for less than an hour or at the most a few hours. This person seemed to think that, whatever it was that they intended to do or for whatever purpose, he was in his full right of doing it. I was going to get a lesson and he would be the teacher or the pilot or whatever. He didn't sound cruel. He just seemed to be very confident that he was doing the right thing. This would seem to fit better with a different explanation from that I gave earlier, namely that the intention would be some kind of shock therapy as a part of a long-term experiment. The fact that I was allowed to hear several voices may have been a way of telling me that there were several people behind the decision to treat me thus. Maybe those guys really feared that they would end up in the eternal fire and that they needed to strengthen their morale by showing me that they were at ease and that they were sure that they weren't doing anything bad. It was only I, stupid kid that I am, not to understand their great wisdom.
