Here is some information about some underground facilities many of which may have been blown up by now.

The Intel Hub

(The following is Part 1 of an exclusive underground base series brought to you by The Intel Hub with excerpts from the book Hidden in Plain Sight: Beyond the X-Files, written by acclaimed underground base researcher and author, Dr. Richard Sa-der.)

In the preliminary stages of my research in the early 1990s, I had no informed idea of how deep below the surface underground bases could reach. By chance I had gone to hear a public talk by a man I did not know, on a topic that had nothing whatsoever to do with underground bases.

However, during the talk he unexpectedly made an offhand comment that caused me to think that he knew something about se-cret underground facilities. A few days later, I telephoned him and asked if I could come by his office to speak with him.

He consented to give me a little of his time, so I went by and asked him some questions, including about a specific location where I believed there was a sec-et underground base. He verified that there was a base there and told me that it was one mile deep.

At the time, that seemed improbably deep to me. I now understand, however, that it is well within the state of the art of the underground excavation and construction industries to build facilities one mile deep. In fact, facilities can be even deeper than that.

Other information that has since been given to me has raised the question of facilities possibly as deep as 12 to 14 miles. Frankly, I do not know what the technological limits are in the super-sec-et, b-ack budget realm of compartmentalized programs.

But I can make some fairly well educated deductions based on what I have been told and information gleaned from the open engineering and industrial literature.

At a minimum, my investigation suggests that depths up to three miles are feasible, and that conclusion is based on a careful reading of the open scientific, mining and civil engineering literature.

At one time I considered greater depths than that as unattainable, but no longer. While I don't know the limitations of the technology in the clandestine realm, based on everything I have heard over the years it must surpass the limits found in the open technical literature.

It could be that with classified improvements in material science and mining engineering that bases can be sited many miles beneath the surface of the land or the seafloor. Frankly, I now surmise that we are dealing with a science-fiction-like reality that has been held back from public knowledge.

In that regard, it is clear to me that there are power structures on this planet that closely interface with, and yet remain separate from, the official power establishment of any nation as publicly presented in the mainstream news media.

The sum total of all the many years of reading and research I have done, coupled with the myriad conversations I have had with an extremely eclectic selection of individuals, even raises the question as to whether some control structures and agencies for this planet may possibly extend off-planet.

But even if that is not the case, we are certainly dealing at the least with trillions of dollars of off-the-books money, very advance technology, an incredible infrastructure of secrecy, thousands and thousands of people who are in the know but say little or nothing about what they know, all of which revolves around projects of tremendous scope and complexity, carried out over a long period of time, and about which there is almost zero public knowledge.

Alex Thomas: The trillions of dollars off the books, advanced technology, and the infrastructure of secrecy have all been brought about by numerous globalist organizations such as the CFR, the Trilateral Commission, and the Bilderberg Group as well as many other even more secretive groups that are not even known by name. Those involved with underground bases may literally know that they will be immediately killed if they speak out about what they know.

I don't know how many secret underground bases there are, but they surely do exist, there is no question of that.

In 1987, Lloyd A. Dusch, the then-Deputy Director of Engineering and Construction for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, gave a talk at an engineering conference entitled Underground Facilities for Defense Experience and Lessons. In the first paragraph of his talk he stated that:

After World War II, political and economic factors changed the underground construction picture and caused a renewed interest to think underground. As a result of this interest, the Corps of Engineers became involved in the design and construction of some very complex and interesting military projects. [1]

A little further on he said: Although the conference program indicates the topic to be Underground Facilities for Defense Experience and Lessons, I must deviate a little because several of the most interesting facilities that have been designed and constructed by the Corps are classified. [2]

Subsequently Mr. Dusch went into a discussion of the Corps involvement in the 1960s in the construction of the large and elaborate NORAD base buried deep beneath Cheyenne Mountain, in Colorado. And then he said: As stated earlier, there are other projects of similar scope, which I cannot identify, but which included multiple chambers up to 50 feet wide and 100 feet high using the same excavation procedures mentioned for the NORAD facility. [3]

You will not find a franker public admission of the existence of secret, underground bases than that.

It carries all the more weight coming from Lloyd Dusch, given his high position in the military-industrial complex.

Sheard: I myself have conducted an interview with the owner of a major private underground base & shelter construction firm. What he told Bob Tuckin and myself off air during a commercial break was absolutely mind-blowing.

He literally admitted that most of his clientele is Illuminati affiliated, including politicians, movie stars, and more. He maintained that client confidentiality was a factor, claiming that half of the business is reinforced homes. Leaving the other 50% up to speculation.

The company has even built 3 massive arks for a doomsday scenario just like you see in the movie 2012. This was covered by CNN.

The Project Paperclip, Nazi Connection

It is not accidental that Lloyd Dusch mentioned the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers increased interest in underground bases and construction in the post-World War II period. In the closing stages of WW II, the U.S. military overran the Third Reich and confiscated a treasure trove of Nazi technology, engineering facilities and research laboratories. The American military also apprehended and detained large numbers of Nazi scientists, engineers and technicians, many of whom were brought to the United States under the auspices of the infamous Project Paperclip and integrated into American industry, research institutes and into the military and other official agencies.

Read Project Paperclip File 1 Read Project Paperclip File 2 Read Project Paperclip File 3, The cases of such Project Paperclip notables as Wernher von Braun, and other Nazis who were put to work building rockets and missiles for the military and NASA, are well known.

The American political and military establishments were very impressed with Nazi V-2 and buzz bomb missile technology, and brought Von Br-un and his team to the USA at w--r's end to continue and advance the research and design they had done under Hi-ler's Third Reich. The development of the manned space program, satellite technology, deep space probes, intercontinental n-clear missiles and cruise missiles are all fruits of their work. But Project Paperclip had another aspect which has received almost no publicity. And that aspect had to do with the underground facilities that the American mi-itary discovered when they entered the remnants of the Third Reich in the concluding stages of open mil-tary hostilities between the Allied and Axis powers in the European theater. I have two de-lassified Project Paperclip memoranda in my files that specifically request four men with expertise in underground construction, one of whom is Xaver Do-sch. Project Paperclip File Xaver Dor-ch File. The other men are not known to me, but Xaver Dors-h is. He was the director of the so-called To-t Organization in the closing phase of WW II. The Tod- Organization was originally headed by Fritz -odt, whence the name. Fritz T-dt was the designer and creator of the well-known German autobahn system of highways. The To-t organization served a somewhat analogous function in the Third Reich to that of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers or the U.S. N-vy Seabees in the present American mi-itary system.

In other words, it was a civil engineering agency that supported the operations of the German mili-ary, though, unlike the case of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers or the U.S. Na-y Seabees in the American system, the To-t Organization was not a formal part of the German milit-ry structure.
