

Subject: Thrive. Part 5.

From: "John Winston" <johnfw@mlode.com>

Date: 27/05/2012, 06:54

Newsgroups: alt.conspiracy.area-51

Subject: Thrive. Part 5.
May 26, 2012.

Lately there was an article on CNN that Will Smith the star of the new movie called "Men In Black III" and his son were given a personal tour of the White House by O-ama. Wil's son by the name of Jadin asked his father if it would be Ok to ask the president about extraterrestrial. Will said, "No no don't you do it". The president antipated the question and said, "I preferr not to answer the question yes of no but I can assure you that if we did contact estraterresials it would be in room where you in right now.

.....

Here is the web site where the conversation can be found.

.....

From: Tahquitz

Will Smith's son Jaden spoke to Obama about aliens

<http://www.bbc.co.uk/newsbeat/18084048>

.....

Now on the subject at hand. Foster Gamble answers the question as to whether he fears for his life now.

.....
.....

Daily Bell:

Let's go back in time. When did you decide to make Thrive and why?

Foster Gamble:

As I mentioned, this was the movie I wanted to make since college but it was in 2003 that I finally felt that both my understanding of the real problems what's going on behind the scenes and that my understanding of the minimum, sufficient, coherent solution strategies to get us out of this, first came to fruition. That's when Kimberly and I started, and spent the last eight years making the movie and the website.

Daily Bell:

You come from a moneyed family and are presumably a rich man. Why were you driven to do this?

Foster Gamble:

First, I have been blessed with the privilege of choosing what I wanted to do with my life, and have been able to help some people along the way, but that's about it in terms of my wealth. I have what I would call an upper middle class income but the key thing is, I haven't had to work for it. So instead, I have devoted my life to working for a thriving planet, whatever that took, and I have been a very hard worker in that cause. I have spent most of my resources in getting to this point. What really inspired me to do the film, and the turning point, was when I learned about meditation. The deeper I went in meditation the more I kept hearing this sound, which turned out to be the wailing of the suffering of humanity. And once I started hearing that literally screaming inside my own being, which wasn't me in my privilege of Ivy League college but actually the humanity of which I'm a part, I committed myself to doing everything in my power and privilege to relieve that suffering. And when I made that commitment, that wailing went away from my meditation. So I think that was the major turning point and everything in my life that I have learned has only made me want to do more to relieve suffering and to help humanity discover the principles and practices that can allow everyone to thrive, without exception.

Daily Bell:

Are you afraid for your life and that of your loved ones?

Foster Gamble:

No, I'm not. It has been a definite consideration, given that we cover about a dozen topics in the film any one of which people have been threatened or harmed for even bringing up. It's definitely been a consideration and we've learned from many of the people who are in the movie, like David I-ke Catherine Austin Fitts, James G-lliland, Steven Greer, Patrick Flannigan and many others who have been threatened and harmed or had their work stopped by the powers that shouldn't be. We learned from them a lot of how to go about this as realistically and eyes-open as possible.

We've taken every precaution we know how to take but the main one was to stay under the radar until the movie was out. The toothpaste is out of the tube, and to harm us would only reinforce what we are saying about how this kind of information is very often suppressed. I am happy to say there are the usual debunking sites on the Internet, where they try to make things up about the movie and me, but so far, so good.

Daily Bell:

If the elites are as terrible as they say, don't you think they won't take their revenge on you?

Foster Gamble:

No, I don't.

Daily Bell:

You mention a lot of solutions toward the end of the movie but we have come to believe, like Larken Rose, among others, that the best thing that can happen is that society, Western society anyway, collapses. How do you respond?

Foster Gamble:

Yes, that's a really interesting question because obviously there is a tremendous amount of suffering in collapse. What I am dedicating my current efforts to is I'm travelling all over the country and all over the world, meeting with Thrive -inspired groups, that are self-creating communities and sharing with them what we call the Thrive solutions model. It is a very highly leveraged and effective means of organizing in a local community by sector and then linking together with other communities around the world to leverage the actions that people are taking.

I think the systems as we know them are crumbling; in fact, they are being intentionally taken down, as I described before, so that they can be taken over at a whole new level. I don't think there's been a more important time for people to catch on to self-sustaining, localized energy access and food access and media access, and to the principles of liberty around which we can organize and actually create non-coercive, sustainable alternatives.

I'm a big fan of Larken Rose, and in particular, Stefan Molyneux, and others who have been willing to try to think through, 'OK ... how would civilization actually work if there were no coercion, if there were no mandatory taxes, if there were no states as we know it?' That's what got me really excited because there are not only viable alternatives; they are, in fact, the only alternatives that I know of that could actually work because when t-ranny rears its head there's always a r-volution, and in these days of nu-lear, chemical and biological we-pons, even single individuals can begin the destruction of life as we know it. So we absolutely have to organize effectively and create the new systems on a decentralized basis. And to me, as I say in the movie, the non-aggression principle is the absolute core navigating insight around which we can do that.

Daily Bell:

We noticed that you emphasize in the movie group solutions and not necessarily individual ones. Is that a correct interpretation?

Foster Gamble:

No. I am recommending that all solutions be based on honoring the individual and voluntary association. So when people come together, I think they are going to be a lot more effective when they create groups. Whether it's a protest or a petition or a new alternative currency bank or a gold-backed currency, they are going to be more effective as they organize in groups, as long as the groups are never based on violating the rights of the individual.

Interestingly enough, I just came back from Olympia, Washington, where I was invited to address and participate at the O-cupy Solidarity Social Forum, where they brought the representatives from Oc-upy sites from all over the country for this conference. The most popular and intense conversation that was going on at that entire conference was centered on exactly these liberty issues. They had set aside one room among many, many workshops I think there were 70 workshops or so but they had set aside one small room where a style s-cialist was going to debate a young Ron P-ul advocate. Well, they should have had it in the auditorium because it was packed, standing room only and spilling out into the halls. The debate was so intense that unfortunately I didn't get to hear all of it and what I heard was not well informed or articulated.

But also when I did my screening of Thrive with an hour of questions and answers and solutions brainstorming, I would say the most compelling topic to everyone was: How do we resolve this left versus right split? If we trust going with the individual, are people who are disadvantaged going to be taken care of? This whole notion of how do we create solutions without violating our core ethics is the one that is emerging, even in Occ-py. I am seeing it everywhere I go. At different screenings of Thrive around the world, this is primary. Besides fr-e energy this is the most popular topic and that excites me.

Part 5.

John Winston. johnfw@mlode.com