Subject: Uses Of The Principles Of French Coil.
June 3, 2012.

When I found out about the uses of the French Coil I got to thinking about the fact that if this does help the health of a plant and removes insects that are on the plant then what effect would it have on the human body. That also made me think about the Interatron. I may discuss it at a future time.

FRENCH COIL - PEST CONTROL

Extracted from an article by ` Marcel `Triau, a member of the `ASD. Of all the systems of insect control in use today, the majority are artificial. However, nature is very precariously balanced and the least tampering can bring about disastrous results - as evidenced by indiscriminate use of insecticides and upsetting the prey predator ratio.

For the past 18 years I have used and researched a safe and simple system of pest control which takes advantage of some little known and little understood laws of nature. Because we cannot scientifically define and analyze these laws many people disbelieve them.

However, nature is full of mystery and even the working of our own bodies is not fully understood.

This particular system is called the ` French Coil ' because it originated in France in the 1930's and consists of a coil of wire. The equipment needed is a long piece of copper wire (# 10 for small trees, # 8 for larger trees), sticks for support, rubber for insulation, and of course, an infested tree.

One end of the wire is buried in the earth at the base of the tree to provide a ground and prevent short circuits. The wire is then coiled around the tree trunk several items with the free end left pointing into the air - to act as an antenna. The coil can be held in position by wooden stakes with insulation to prevent grounding the wire to the stakes.

Perhaps the minute amounts of electricity in the air flows into the wire and the tree and creates a magnetic field around the tree, giving the tree more health and strength and weakening the pests resulting in their destruction. You should install the French Coil before the sap starts to run.

A Tree has a " front door " - a certain place on the trunk, about 6 to 18 inches long, where this energy enters the tree. It usually faces northwest but varies slightly from tree to tree. On the opposite side of the trunk is the "back door " which acts as a safety valve allowing the release of electricity should the tree become overcharged. The " front door " demonstrates its affinity for electricity following the path of an electrical storm; it returns to its original position when the storm is over.

However, the " front door " and " back door " are undetectable to the eye as is the atmospheric electricity - except when it manifests itself as lightning or static electricity. The " front door " and " back door " must be detected by a dowser, who must supervise the entire set up.

Note: To find the front door, use your index finger of one hand as a pointer, and ask your Pendulum (held in your other hand) to indicate the location and the top (or bottom) position. The wire must be wound around the tree in a right hand spiral starting from the " front door ", three to five inches away from the surface of the bark. The dowser will determine the number of coils needed and the distance between the loops. The free end of the wire must be within the limits of the " front door ".

The height of the first coil is unimportant but it must be below the level of the front door.

Now the system is ready to work and there is absolutely no danger to anyone who comes near or touches the tree or wire. I have used the Coil on many types of trees and types of pests.

It has k-lled caterpillars in apple trees in New England and snails in grapefruit trees in the Bahamas. While I have not been able to methodically test its effectiveness against every common tree and pest, there are no known reasons to doubt its effectiveness on any tree or pest.
