absolutely no sound and the speed was incredible, only 8 (eight) seconds to move across the sky from horizon to horizon. This was certainly no aircraft or weather balloon and the low altitude and excessive speed seems to rule out satellites which I understand usually need to operate at high altitudes.

I have seen Tumble-Jet aircraft coming in to land at Vancouver Airport on many occasions using a slightly more northern but similar flight path but the object I saw was three times the size of such aircraft, even though it was travelling at a slightly higher altitude than the usual aircraft I see.

Please let me know if anyone else has seen such an object and if possible whether it is identified as yet. I found the experience a little disturbing to say the least but am also curious as to the origins!

Yours sincerely
