Moore-Cameron Nov.30,1989

Cameron: Are you following the African crash story?

Moore: Ya.

Cameron: And what is your conclusion?

Moore: I don't have any conclusion.

Cameron: Your getting your stuff thro' Azehdedel?

Moore: No. I'm not.

Cameron: You have a different source?

Moore: Ya.

Cameron: There is a claim of briefing documents. Do you have these?

Moore: Ya.

Cameron: There is a story of an electromagnetic pulse weapon. Have you heard this?

Moore: It's described as a particle beam-lasar weapon.

Cameron: Azed. is making all sorts of claims as to what he has. The other story that I wanted to see if your following is this story in Vegas. The story deals with Robert Lazar who claims to have worked at Dreamland?

Moore: Ya, but I'm not impressed as I can't verify Lazar as being who he claims to be.

Cameron: Have you talked to Knapp? I tried to contact him as to how he tried to verify this guy?

Moore: I don't know but I know his claims are pretty extravagant, and they just don't seem to click with some of the things that I know to be so. I'm very sceptical right now. I know that Lear was involved with the guy for a while. I don't know. I'm prepared to leave room for it, but the checking that I've done doesn't confirm the claims that the guy is making about who he is.

Cameron: One more item. I was talking to Tom, and he mentioned, I guess at your conversation with him at the conference - that you had come up with Kissinger before Steinman.

Moore: I mentioned Kissinger to Steinman for crying out loud.

Cameron: OK. What did you base this on?

Moore: Because of what's her name over there in New Mexico?

Cameron: Wang?

Moore: Ya. Because she had mentioned him. Because when I started checking on her story his name came up. It may only have been that Kissinger and Wang were friends, I don't know. You know Steinman built huge mountains out of small piles of sand. She really didn't say to me that her husband had reported to him, only that he had discussed some of these ideas with him. Out of that Steinman built this whole thing that Kissinger had to be the head of it and on and on. I was the one who put Steinman on to Wang.

Cameron: That's about all I had so I'll let you know what I get on this South African thing.

Moore: Well. I've got a very good pipeline on it. In fact I've got the transcripts of phone conversations which I don't think anyone else has got. In fact I'm sure Azehdedel hasn't got them.

Cameron: What do you think about Azehdedel?

Moore: Well, he just got out of jail for one thing.

Cameron: Do you know where he gets all the money to research as he does?

Moore: I have no idea. He seems to have some contact with at least British Intelligence. Beyond that I don't know what they are. I know he has made extravagant claims about having worked closely with Bud Hopkins. Bud was here two weeks ago, and I spent some time with him, and that's one of the names that came up. Bud said that the sum total of his relationship with Henry was one conversation. Azehdedel has pawned himself off as physicist to some people, and as an obstetrician-gynaecologist to other people. Maybe he's both but I kind of doubt it. He's been marginally reliable on anything that he's talked to me about. So I've got real reservations about the guy. Now there is a distinct possibility that this whole South African thing is another Bennewitz thing, and that someone is just trying to stir the pot again. What better way to do it than to involve a country that is basically inaccessible, or at least very difficult. The relationship between the U.S. Gov't and South Africa is shaky. Militarily, the relationship is shaky. Now as far as the international intelligence community, we do have a fairly good relationship with South Africa, and in fact somewhat better than some people would like to believe. That however does not extend much beyond the gathering and planning of information. I've run it past a couple of people, and their reaction to it is basically one of interest. It's not out of the question, but nobody is willing to say too much about it. I've got one pipeline of information which is quite useful, and supplying a lot of it. I think that I have probably more than anyone else, and I don't know what Azehdedel has.

Cameron: I had just heard thro' Mickus that he's claiming to have piles of stuff. I talked to Stringfield and he claimed that he had been in contact with Azehdedel 8 weeks back, and that he had been promised a file. Nothing has arrived yet. A part that bothered me about this story is why they would have this type of weapon in South Africa. If this is the top technology, this would seem like a pretty unstable place to keep it.

Moore: It certainly does, especially mounted on a fighter. A Mirage. I do have the name of the weapon. That name does at least appear to be a bonified name. There does seem to be such a weapon, or at least such a project. I should have a considerably clearer picture on it next week. I'm going to go off in the next couple of days, and talk to the source that has been keeping me posted on it. He has a direct connection to Germany.

Cameron: And this South African intelligence officer that's running across Europe - you're aware of him?

Moore: I'm aware of him. I don't have any direct contacts with him. He's a Major or something.

Cameron: The claim thro' Azehdedel is that this guy spent two weeks with him, and that Henry put him into hiding.

Moore: Well. I hadn't heard that Henry has spent time with him. I don't know. It may be an interesting story, unless it's another Bennewitz. We'll just have to wait and see. I should have a better position on that some time next week. Also I should know something more about Dr. W.

Cameron: Ya. Azehdedal is claiming that Walker didn't go to Russia, and that he was in England three years ago. Mickus asked him how he knew all this, and Henry said don't ask.

Moore: He's an odd duck. Timothy Good doesn't have a lot of respect for him. It's very hard to call the shot. Henry called here about a week ago, at some ungodly hour - 4:30 A.M. or something. I'm not even too sure who it was in the house who picked it up - but one of the people picked it up. They said "are you aware of what time it is here." Apparently the person said Yes, or I don't know what was said. It was one of these things where the people were half asleep. I didn't even hear about it until the morning. Anyway the drift was - call back at a more reasonable hour and someone will talk to you. They were quite rude about it. I tend to be when the phone rings at that time in the morning. I'd likely be real rude. I don't know what he wanted, but frankly I don't trust him. I am aware of a lot of that information - thro' another souce - not thro' him. So we'll see.

Cameron: OK. I'll keep in touch.

Moore: Ya. I got your letter to seedy Allen. I'd give the guy credit with having the brain of about a chimp. There is no such thing as above top secret because there are only three classifications. Right. Sure. I don't even write to him anymore. If I do it's some type of ridiculous giberish, and then he'll answer it. It kills me.

Cameron: Well how close is he to Klass?

Moore: Very. In fact Tim Good calls him " The English Klass."

Cameron: I guess that's what he's struggling for.

Moore. Ya. Well I hope that he makes it, because I think that the British Sceptical community deserves him. He goes off about my maths, and he's the guy who couldn't even count the postage on the envelope. And he says my math is bad. I got called into account last week by a character at a symposium here. He got up and called me to account for what he called - my bad image - when he's standing up in the crowd with a brass pyramid on his head. He's talking about my image. The whole crowd just laughed, and I did too.

Cameron: You've got a lot of those strange ones down there.

Moore: I'm telling you!

Cameron: Is Cooper still going. I had heard that he had seen some of the South African stuff.

Moore: Ya. He's off on that binge already. The last I had heard he had an engagement set up for Dec. in Vegas at $15.00 a head at the Showboat. Then he got one set up in San Diego which is $20.00 a head. And people are flocking! And he really gives them the word. As you are probably aware he is a storefront preacher when he's not peddling UFOs - then he's peddling God. The Adamski Foundation has now resumed regular monthly public meetings, and getting crowds. So it's really getting strange. This is where we came in at - remember?
