

CIA's Extraterrestrial Affair: Where disturbing worlds collide

The real-life tall-tale of espionage you are about to read spins around a confrontation between a former CIA official and officers of the United States Air Force.

Twenty years later, the game continues where disturbing worlds collide.

At the heart of the matter, a U.S. Government UFO Working Group, dark secrets kept in the shadows under the guise of counter-intelligence operations of the United States Air Force, and decades-old rumors of extraterrestrial contact with "something not of this world."

The official concern hidden within these "Real Life X-Files" appears to have been aimed at the dangers of a viral marketing scheme intended to elicit real classified information from past and present intelligence officers.

At the center of the latest controversy is an obscure book by former USAF intelligence officer Robert M. Collins.

Exempt from Disclosure revisits tales of conspiracy and intrigue that have been the mainstay of legends whispered within the USAF since at least the early 1980s, when I was first told by "Sarge" about Air Force involvement in an extraterrestrial affair.

Open-source materials published on line document the involvement of former senior intelligence persons in the search for the U.S. Government's role in alleged alien contact. One source, who remains active in government business, including a role as a CIA consultant and involvement with the Department of Homeland Security, confirmed knowledge of high-level rumors of extraterrestrial contact.

According to Exempt from Disclosure, beginning in 1986, researcher Bill Moore and Jaime Shandera, a TV producer, initiated meetings with interested parties including Ernie Kellerstrass of General Dynamics, Wright Patterson Air Force Base, Rick Doty, a former USAF counter-intelligence officer who had been assigned to cold-war Eastern Europe, Dr. Hal Puthoff, a physicist with several government contracts on his resume, and the author, Captain Robert Collins.

The group was later joined by Dr. Christopher "Kit" Green, who had retired from a very senior position with CIA a few years earlier.

Bird names were assigned to conceal the identities of the various participants. The names stuck, and thus was born the AVIARY.

As the group continued to meet, strategies were discussed to propel a movement leading to government disclosure of the strangeness allegedly centered on bodies of dead aliens and recovered artifacts from alien spacecraft.

Collins writes, "Kit Green took center stage by proposing several lines of attack involving disclosure strategies."

Verbal shots were soon exchanged between a ranking Air Force Officer and a member of the AVIARY within the hallowed walls of secrecy in an office at CIA.

Twenty years later, the birds of a feather may no longer flock together, but the squawking never ceased, fueled by the emerging communication role of the Internet.

Some of the most revealing chatter allegedly took place over government channels, involving a different kind of disclosure altogether.

Last year, email messages were deliberately passed by a sitting Senior Intelligence Official (SIO) via his close contact in the civilian world, in full knowledge they would be handed to a foreign national of a friendly nation. Curiously the SIO previously suggested this same person might be an agent for the British Secret Intelligence Service, better known as the home of James Bond, or MI-6.

Rich with details, the information contained in the numerous messages includes a first-hand account of an AVIAN confrontation at CIA with officers from the USAF.

The dispute with the USAF officials, over their interpretation of a polygraph interview of one of their own counter-intelligence officers, was so heated that one USAF Official asked that the AVIARY member's security clearances "be revoked."

Apparently the USAF position interpreted the polygraph to indicate that their agent was lying.

Examination by the AVIARY expert had shown otherwise: there was no indication of confabulation on the part of the USAF agent. From the point of view of the AVIARY expert, the USAF officials appeared to be lying.

Curiously, the polygraph had nothing to do with UFOs, aliens, or any of the other weirdness that intrigued AVIARY members.

The incident was resurrected within the leaked messages, supported by a leaked audio recording of the Senior Intelligence Official about the existence of a government UFO Working Group, and new intrigue suggestive of elicitation of intelligence using an Internet "viral marketing scheme" transmitted in the guise of UFO investigations.

The worst case scenario under discussion included an assault by foreign intelligence agents against America's most sensitive institutions: a possible "false flag" operation conducted under the alias of phony DIA officials.

Messages deliberately leaked by the SIO include discussion of a search through DIA electronic databases for two names given to an AVIARY member. A search of DIA records failed to find the two individuals in question, but apparently elicited a strong reaction from one official at DIA, who reported that "nothing like that had ever happened to him after such a routine request in his over thirty years at DIA."

Ultimately it was concluded that "complete review of all databases indicates that there are no DIA employees with those names."

The motive behind the SIO release of the messages remains a mystery, although we note for the record we were asked not to reveal details as "methods are more important than sources."

The messages also confirmed a discussion with the FBI, as well as cooperation by two of the AVIAN birds with Internal Affairs and the Justice Department.

Lost among all of the latest spy games is the CORE STORY of extraterrestrial contact.

A recent public posting at the Internet forum realityuncovered.net, made by one AVIAN, who currently has clients including the Department of Defense, the CIA, the DIA, the National Academy of Sciences, among others, clarifies some of the mystery:

We all agree that there is a CORE STORY. I was the one that originally reported on the 1986 Denny's [meeting] ... We agree on small, tiny, overlapping Core Elements for which we have sufficient data to believe ... It happened. Once or twice. No abductions. Ever ... It isn't anyone's business who told me, or the millions of hours of work that leads to this fragile, subjective, and personal and unsupportable conclusion based on inductive (not deductive) logic ... I know zero, anymore, that is (any longer) classified. I believe a Reverse Engineering program has been going on for decades. It has been singularly unsuccessful. It was moved to the private sector in the '70s and the '80s. Uncle [Sam] is quite clueless. Some guys in the I.C. [Intelligence Community] are playing bad games, mostly because they are clueless, know they are, and want to figure out how to find, and get, inside.

A Disturbing Tale: Why we may never see government UFO disclosure

A "core secret" is so sensitive, its very existence is a secret. In the U.S. Intelligence Community, the tale of an extraterrestrial presence is known as the CORE STORY.

Astronaut Edgar Mitchell explains why the UFO subject is a core secret, and we speculate about the "disturbing" consequences.

I have bad news for the UFO disclosure crowd.

If the alleged extraterrestrial presence is real, the odds are against disclosure.

Among some members of the Intelligence Community, the tale of the alien presence is known as the CORE STORY of contact between the aliens and the government.

The strong rumor is there is a "disturbing" aspect to this CORE STORY, something so dire it leaves battle-hardened military types shaking in their boots.

An example of a real government program so secret that revealing its very existence endangers the national security involves martial law plans and preparations in the event of first strike use of nuclear weapons.

A 1992 cover story for TIME Magazine, called "The Domsday Blueprints," pieces together early cold war preparations intended to enable the survival of the government following a catastrophic nuclear exchange.

"What they envisioned was an America darkened not only by nuclear war but also by the imposition of martial law, food rationing, censorship and the suspension of many civil liberties," explains the article's author, who adds, "while preparations for rescuing the nation's leaders and cultural treasures remain in place, efforts to shield the civilian population were virtually abandoned decades ago."

In my series "Knowing the Future: CIA, 9/11, UFOs and the Extraterrestrial Presence," I examine the methods and sources of confirmed members of the Intelligence Community, as they tracked and investigated UFO-related technology and "persons of interest."

According to one of the intelligence officials who pursue the UFO topic (and many are at the highest levels of the government) the CORE STORY may fall outside of the President of the United States' "need to know."

Perhaps that explains the failure of previous efforts to seek out help from the Clinton White House for UFO disclosure, like the mid-1990s Laurance Rockefeller disclosure initiative.

(For background, see presidentialufo.com)

Although it remains difficult to determine where official business ends and personal interests take over, there is solid evidence of high ranking intelligence involvement with the UFO and alien contact topic.

Dr. Edgar Mitchell, the Apollo astronaut who was the sixth man to walk on the moon, remains an outspoken supporter of the CORE STORY explanation for government secrecy.

Mitchell spoke of his contact with a ranking Admiral with the Joint Chiefs who agreed to investigate the CORE STORY of alien contact and report back. Some reporters were miffed when Mitchell refused to disclose the name of the Admiral, but Mitchell did provide to me confirmation that another report was "essentially correct."

Mitchell requested my help in clarifying why his testimony appeared to be contradicted by the Admiral, who had been identified by the Herald Tribune as Rear Admiral Thomas R. Wilson.

Quoting an article taken from the prestigious Jane's Defence Weekly, Mitchell implied that the Admiral had discovered that the CORE STORY was protected by a "Special Access Program."

As explained by Jane's, such a "black program" must remain unacknowledged when it is "considered so sensitive that the fact of its existence is a 'core-secret,'" defined as "any item, progress, strategy or element of information, the compromise of which would result in unrecoverable failure."

Astronaut Mitchell then added, "The UFO program that the Admiral sought would be in this category. Thus by law he would be required to deny the existence of such a program. For a core secret SAP, even a 'no comment' would be a breach of security."

Consider, as an example, that in 1948 President Truman signed the "United States Policy on Atomic Warfare" which stated "the decision as to the employment of atomic weapons in the event of war is to be made by the Chief Executive."

This effectively allowed for a possible, although unlikely U.S. first-use first-strike with nuclear weapons.

A few years later, when President Eisenhower's "Doomsday Blueprints" were put into place, knowledge of their existence threatened more than "unrecoverable failure" of the government's survival plans.

The existence of doomsday plans and the initialed martial law order was a "core secret."

Knowledge of the existence of doomsday plans risked misinterpretation or manipulation by Soviet intelligence who might interpret them as evidence of an impending first strike by the United States, resulting in possible undesirable actions by the Soviets.

Evidence of the existence of UFOs and an alien presence, or worse, of manipulation by an alien intelligence in the affairs of the human race, would constitute a "core secret" at the deepest levels of the government.

An even more disturbing possibility would be the existence of government doomsday survival plans in the event of massive extraterrestrial manipulation of the world's population.

Would the government draw up plans for massive retaliation against the population, knowing that an "alien virus," an otherworldly manipulation had altered members of the human race in such a way as to effectively threaten the powers that be?

The ground-truth reasons for the cover-up of the CORE STORY, a truly disturbing tale, is one mystery that almost certainly will never be made known.

Invasion: Earth?

Following the trail of phenomenology and the U.S. government requires a great deal of patience, but here at STARstream Research, we feel that our efforts are gradually making progress.

The idea for a Spacetime Threat Assessment Report available to the general public and the international community was born from a need to produce material that was not normally distributed outside of those close knit scientists on the cutting edge of speculative science, or others with top secret clearance on a need to know basis.

For the past ten years we have been on the trail of a phenomenology transition, where ambiguous and superstitious rumors meet hard nosed science and national security. There are many sides and facets to this story; no simple answers need apply to solve this mystery. It is at once born of our darkest fears and nightmares, constantly reinforced and disseminated by the media, now super-amplified thanks to the world wide web, and familiar in the day by day increase in our knowledge, driven by reason and technology.

We know a great deal more about the world around us in 2006 than we did in 1996. We have also learned a great deal more about what we do not know and do not yet understand, like the mysterious dark matter and dark energy that dominates the universe in which we live.

For our "Invasion: Earth?" series, I wanted to both stretch out a bit farther and at the same time withdraw deeper into the comfort zone of reason. The premise is simple enough: given the vastness of the creation around us that is observable today, and the implied much greater and perhaps infinite vastness of reality beyond, what are the real threats to human civilization from beyond our shiny blue home world?

One need only postulate some form of intelligent, or even non-intelligent but self-replicating exotic form from another world, to realize that an invasion is far from out of the question.

It is our opinion that the greater mystery is not whether or not Earth might some day find itself at the mercy of otherworldly forces, but rather why we presently do not appear to find ourselves under the thumb of extraterrestrial or ultra-terrestrial intelligence.

Curiously, the rumors and facts surrounding the American government's interests in such matters appear to lend some support to the answer to the later question: We 'appear' to be independent of the thumb of otherworldly intelligence because they don't want (all of?) us to know that they are here, and perhaps they have been with us for some time.

This is the interference question: is it possible to surmise some of the activities of higher intelligent beings in the affairs of the human race?

Do they sometimes make their existence known to a few hand-selected representatives of the human race?

In summary, our findings, if they are valid at all, suggest less an invasion than a caretaker scenario. One must also keep in mind that caretakers may fail, or loose interest in our small world. Should that be the case, then we must be prepared to accept that invasion might be inevitable.

And that, dear reader, does constitute a genuine spacetime threat.

To the Moon and Back, With Love

Government consultant Ingo Swann's tale of covert extraterrestrial activity on the moon takes on a new twist, now that the CIA STAR GATE documents support many of his claims.

"The result of the promised 'contact' was that if I had any doubts about whether they existed, such doubts were shortly to be resolved. I almost got killed in the process."

A program in biofield measurements was initiated in July, 1972 with a preliminary experiment with Mr. [Ingo] Swann. In this work using a shielded magnetometer, Mr. Swann apparently demonstrated an ability to increase and decrease at will the magnetic field within a superconducting magnetic shield. This experiment made use of an existing facility and we have confidence that Mr. Swann had no prior knowledge of either the apparatus or of our intended experiment.

This is the bizarre true tale of Ingo Swann's psychic work for the U.S Government, at various agencies including the CIA and the DIA (now substantiated by the CIA release of roughly two thirds of the existing STAR GATE documents) and his personal allegations of a mysterious black operation that first contacted him during the peak of CIA sponsored testing at the Stanford Research Institute.

If Ingo Swann is to be believed, and this coming from a man with top secret clearance that in his day briefed and trained officers from the USAF, the Defense Intelligence Agency, INSCOM, and many others too numerous to mention, then there is some truth to the rumors of an otherworldly intelligence working behind the scenes here on Earth. Not only are they already here, according to Swann's testimony from a rare out-of-print book, self-published in 1998, but they are building something on the far side of the moon.

And they are not friendly.

"I spent the next few months wondering if the ET's were going to find me and zap my brains out of existence."

The truth is stranger than fiction, and this story is guaranteed to stretch the imagination right back into reality.

For Ingo Swann, the turning point leading into the cloak and dagger world of deep black ops and weird requests for psychic surveillance of the moon and beyond began in early 1975. When Swann published his tale in 1998, most of the CIA and DIA classified documents from the secret STAR GATE program were still unavailable to the general public.

As this story goes to press, in the summer of 2006, more than 80,000 pages of documents are close at hand here at STARstream Research, including the results of medical and psychological tests conducted on Mr. Swann as a result of his CIA sponsored testing while working with SRI: The Stanford Research Institute, in the 1970's.

Recently, two individuals, Mr. Uri Geller and Mr. Ingo Swann, appear to have demonstrated certain of these abilities [paraphysical effects] under controlled laboratory conditions. The abilities of these individuals (unwitting of Agency [CIA] sponsorship) are being submitted to a serious scientific investigation, part of which is being supported by the above mentioned project.

The CIA STAR GATE Program

In the early 1970's concerns began to float about the various intelligence agencies over a psychic war gap with the Soviet Union. Unknown to the general public, the Soviets were busy exploring fringe science: application of the dark shadow of the paranormal world for espionage.

Swann's abilities had been tracked for some time, but they really attracted the powers that be in Langley with the recording of an apparent perturbation of delicate test equipment by Swann's mental perception. In addition to disturbing the output of this sensitive instrument, Swann was able to produce a rough description of the device, which he had never seen previously.

In 1972 reports of paranormal activities being documented at SRI by Dr. H. Puthoff and Mr. R. Targ reached the Agency. The original contracts were [redacted] OTS/APB and [redacted] ORD/TC. A small work order type contract (approximately $10,000) was initiated by [redacted] with the permission of Dr. S. Gottlieb, D/OTS. This contract arranged for SRI to administer controlled laboratory testing of Mr. Ingo Swann, a New York City artist, with claimed paranormal abilities. Mr. Swann was tested and produced significant data under controlled conditions.

In a letter dated June 27, 1972, Dr. Hal Puthoff of SRI wrote:

At the suggestion of Russell Targ I am writing you about an observation in the laboratory involving one Ingo Swann, a New York artist ... An interesting side light of the experiment was that Ingo was able to describe rather well what the interior of the device looked like, apparently with some form of direct observation.

Although redacted, it is likely that the recipient of this letter was at the CIA. Apparently sponsorship of Dr. Puthoff's interest in Swann's mental interaction with the test equipment followed quickly.

Among the STAR GATE files is a Stanford Research Institute (SRI) Technical Memorandum dated 22 February, 1973, prepared by Dr. Hal Puthoff and Russell Targ, Contract Number 1471(S)73 and tagged by CIA/ORD # 1416-73:

A program in biofield measurements was initiated in July, 1972 with a preliminary experiment with Mr. [Ingo] Swann. In this work using a shielded magnetometer, Mr. Swann apparently demonstrated an ability to increase and decrease at will the magnetic field within a superconducting magnetic shield. This experiment made use of an existing facility and we have confidence that Mr. Swann had no prior knowledge of either the apparatus or of our intended experiment.

An August, 1972 memo to the Chief of TSD/BAB at the CIA notes:

[name redacted] and somebody named [redacted] from [CIA] Life Sciences are planning a trip to the West Coast on 11 August, when they will meet Ingo Swann and have a chance to watch him flex his sphincter... Life Sciences is planning on forming a coordinating committee to work on ESP and the data that is coming in...

When we contacted the unnamed former officer from CIA Life Sciences, he confirmed the authenticity of the document, but denied any knowledge of Swann's tale.

An undated draft memorandum from Deputy Director for Operations William Colby, addressed to the "Director of Central Intelligence," reveals the clandestine nature of CIA involvement in research using human subjects:

Recently, two individuals, Mr. Uri Geller and Mr. Ingo Swann, appear to have demonstrated certain of these abilities [paraphysical effects] under controlled laboratory conditions. The abilities of these individuals (unwitting of Agency [CIA] sponsorship) are being submitted to a serious scientific investigation, part of which is being supported by the above mentioned project.

An anonymous source, working in the alternative energy and transportation industry recently commented:

Actually, they became interested in Swann when he RV'ed [psychically remote viewed] some of their well-hidden deep underground vaults, and the contents thereof. This was when they approached SRI because they were finally truly scared about the reality of RV [psychic remote viewing] as a tool in the hands of the Soviets.

Based upon the available records in STAR GATE, no one seems to have seriously considered that all of these manifestations of the impossible were strong indications of interference in human affairs by higher intelligence with more powerful technologies at their disposal.

Or did they?

Swann's account in his book suggests that someone lurking in the shadows was paying very close attention; someone whose reach included the often super-secret work done at SRI.

Medical Tests

STARstream Research was able to uncover Swann's medical and psychological test results from SRI documents, even though the test subjects were referred to only as S1 through S6. One of the CIA memos failed to redact the names of the participants, and it was simple enough to use the process of elimination of sex and age to determine the identity of Ingo Swann and Pat Price, two of SRI's early star performers.

According to the official record, Swann was in almost every way perfectly normal. He certainly wasn't delusional, as the tests confirmed.

(SRI data on medical and psych tests are available to view at www.starpod.org)

During the early days the CIA funded SRI research team harbored concerns that the Soviet KGB would be interested in the work they were doing, and always held in the back of their minds that they might someday be kidnapped, or worse. Cold war paranoia was still in full bloom during the early days of psychic-spy research.

Mr. Axelrod

Swann's departure from psychic experiments funded by the CIA, into the mysterious black unknown, began with his recruitment by a man who called himself "Mr. Axelrod."

A CIA memorandum for the record dated 21 January, 1975, documents the status of the SRI program just prior to Axelrod's appearance:

In 1972 reports of paranormal activities being documented at SRI by Dr. H. Puthoff and Mr. R. Targ reached the Agency. The original contracts were [redacted] OTS APB and [redacted] ORD/TC. A small work order type contract (approximately $10,000) was initiated by [redacted] with the permission of Dr. S. Gottlieb, D/OTS. This contract arranged for SRI to administer controlled laboratory testing of Mr. Ingo Swann, a New York City artist, with claimed paranormal abilities. Mr. Swann was tested and produced significant data under controlled conditions.

We will only mention that Dr. Sidney Gottlieb, D/OTS was heavily involved in the notorious CIA experimentation on human subjects using LSD, under a project called MKULTRA.

In late February, 1975, Swann's affair with the mysterious operation interested in extraterrestrial activity was initiated by a phone call from a well placed acquaintance, who alerted Swann to a forthcoming contact with a real-life man in the black.

Weeks later the call came in at 3AM, requesting Swann's presence in Washington, D.C.

The mysterious contact from Mr. Axelrod directed Swann through a series of covert meetings at various locations. In the first meeting Swann was instructed to wait at the Museum of Natural History at the Smithsonian, until he was contacted by Axelrod's operatives. In a scene worthy of a Hollywood movie, Swann was subjected to a full body search while en-route to the clandestine meeting. To prevent Swann from knowing the location of Axelrod's secret underground lair, a black hood was placed over his head.

Needless to say, by this point Swann's mind was spinning, wondering what on Earth he had gotten himself into.

The strange twists and turns of Swann's recruitment into black ops psychic spying would eventually culminate in a close physical encounter with what appeared to be an alien machine.

Who was this Mr. Axelrod?

One legendary group of alleged deep black government insiders, brought into the limelight by a series of 'leaked' papers (unlike the STAR GATE files, which were officially released by the CIA) is known as MAJESTIC. Our anonymous source questioned the likelihood of Swann's mysterious Mr. Axelrod being involved with the so-called MJ-12 MAJESTIC group, which the FBI has declared as originating from bogus UFO documents. Although the FBI has stated that the various MAJESTIC documents are fakes, one of our other intelligence sources recently suggested that the bogus documents may have been used to pass real intelligence to the Russians.

(See "Trickster Tales" by Caryn Anscomb at www.starpod.org)

Mr. Axelrod's mission statement to recruit Swann was purely verbal: there was to be no paper trail; no secrecy statement; lending some evidence that Axelrod's people might have been working under non-official-cover (NOC) -- they would be denied by those in charge if their activities were ever revealed.

Swann soon learned Axelrod's primary interests were less than Earthly. In addition to the potential of remote viewing the lunar surface, Axelrod also had a fascination with the concept of telepathy, the sharing of thoughts in a conscious interface.

Confirmation that the human race had fallen under the finger of higher intelligence with advanced technology was also a strong indication of the correctness of the simulation argument: any interaction between a 'natural' reality and a much more developed intelligence automatically meant that simulation had entered the picture.

The interface of human-mind with alien-mind as a complex simulation scenario had not yet been fully evaluated in the available CIA-sponsored research literature of the time.

The personal mental environment is largely an assembled experience or simulation based upon millions of years of development. The idea of 'telepathy' or the mind-to-mind interface is an artifice introduced to bridge many individual simulations, each with their unique point of view of the same natural environment: The world out there in a telepathic network merges the individual with an undivided whole.

Perhaps there was a general subconscious discomfort level and fear induced by the knowledge that a higher intelligence appeared to have developed a means of interacting directly with the human brain and higher conscious mind functions as a form of communication, or worse, as mind-control. Once a form of direct to brain communication was accepted, a network of minds linked in a cosmic internet was the next logical assumption.

Recent research using functional MRI technology to read the state of a human brain and correlate that state with behavior is an example of a primitive means of interfacing mind and machine. The idea floating around in government circles today is to use the fMRI to spot terrorists intending to cause mayhem and destruction, by detecting their thoughts. In a related story, the American Civil Liberties Union has raised concerns that such devices are an invasion of privacy and may have been used to interrogate suspected terrorists.

Given a few million or more years to advance their technology, one might ask what kind of device might be evolved into the brain-mind of an alien civilization?

Axelrod debriefed Swann about his work at SRI, in particular the psychic method that later came to be known as coordinate remote viewing.

How did it work?

At first Axelrod limited discussions to the power of the group mind, and discussion of 'memory' addressing.

Were remote viewers accessing the universal mind-computer?

Thirty years prior to the recent serious discussions that the human race might be embedded in a simulation of reality, Axelrod was probing Swann about a stored memory of all possible worlds and outcomes, and a means of accessing this potential database underlying reality.

Dinner conversation also included discussion of telepathy: mind-to-mind communication, something that the DIA would become very interested in later, as shown by the STAR GATE files.

Soon the discussion turned to Swann's experimental remote viewing of the planet Jupiter which had yielded apparent hits, like the existence of rings around the planet.

Axelrod was interested in Swann's 'trip' to Jupiter, an attempt to see if he could psychically discover unknown details about the gas giant that might later be confirmed by the NASA Pioneer spacecraft.

And then he asked, "Ingo, what do you know about the moon?"

Moon Base: Ocular Luna

Swann had quickly agreed to accept $1000-a-day compensation to remote view the moon.

Axelrod tasked Ingo with a series of moon coordinates. Unknown to Swann, the targeted moon coordinates, about ten different locations, would bring him mind-to-mind with what he soon realized was an unearthly extraterrestrial presence.

Swann 'saw' with his mind's eye craters in darkness, and decided that he must be seeing the hidden side of the moon, the side that always faces away from the Earth. Upon achieving psychic contact with the lunar surface, Swann first came upon what looked like trails of tractor-tread marks. Confusion set in until Swann realized that he was 'seeing' intelligent activity and structures on the moon.

In the depths of a crater he viewed a green, dusty haze lit by banks of artificial lights mounted on very large, tall towers. Swann was stunned by the realization that 'someone' or 'something' appeared, under the aegis of his mind's eye, to be building a base on the moon. He had been inducted into an interplanetary operation and brought to Mr. Axelrod's underground facility by the need to monitor extraterrestrial activities in an unconventional way. Swann decided that Axelrod and company had been given the task of psychically spying on the alien moon base because the extraterrestrials had been less than friendly about conventional human curiosity.

When Ingo sensed that he had been psychically 'spotted' by two of the humanoid-looking inhabitants of the moon base, he questioned whether or not he was at risk.

Axelrod was less than forthcoming.

"I spent the next few months wondering if the ET's were going to find me and zap my brains out of existence."

After being released from his work at the underground facility, Swann returned home and sketched what he could recall of the Axelrod sessions, and locked them away until the late 1990's.

They are reproduced in his book.

The sketch is dated March 14, 1975.

A recent TV documentary, Apollo 11: The Untold Story, may have added additional support to Swann's moon-base tale.

Apollo 11 astronaut Buzz Aldrin reported they had seen a UFO during their historic flight to land the first man on the moon.

"There was something out there, close enough to be observed, and what could it be? Now, obviously the three of us weren't going to blurt out, Hey, Houston, we've got something moving alongside of us and we don't know what it is, you know? Can you tell us what it is?"

Mr. Axelrod's reach even extended within SRI.

At the time of first contact, STAR GATE records prove that Swann was still officially unaware that the experiments and tests at SRI were being conducted under the auspices of the CIA.

Taken at face value Swann's account could be interpreted as the passing of information about CIA sponsored research to a organization of unknown origin for an extended period of at least a couple of years.

At one point Swann was instructed to relay to Axelrod the status of the SRI psychic results. In a classic example of the spy art, Swann was instructed to write the number 65 on a piece of paper to alert Axelrod when they had achieved a 65 percent hit rate using remote viewing. One might wonder if this was an indication of a security breach at SRI, or merely a means of checking Swann's loyalty.

g the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Axelrod warned, "I feel obliged to tell you that she is really dangerous."

From the Moon, with love

Sometime in the late summer of 1976, Swann made several trips between SRI and Los Angeles to spend time with friends. Little did he know, but he was about to encounter Axelrod's operatives again. During an ordinary trip to a Hollywood supermarket he was attracted to a super-sexy woman. As he stood near the scantily clad beauty, he experienced an 'electric-shock' that sent waves of goosebumps over his entire body, and stood his hair on end. Swann interpreted this psychic alert as a warning that all was not right with this woman.

In fact, he decided that she must be an extraterrestrial.

Swann's 'shocking' experience is far from unusual. It has been reported in many cases that lead to paranormal activity. Starstream Research was recently contacted about what appeared to be an animal mutilation that produced a similar 'shocking' effect upon physical contact with the carcass. We know of other cases involving telephone calls from weird mechanical sounding voices, and from personal contact with another human being that has had paraphysical experiences.

Swann had little time to react, however, as his shock turned to panic.

Looking down the aisle he saw both of Mr. Axelrod's operatives, real-life men in black; not like the character played by Will Smith, in suit and tie, but more like Arnold Schwarzenegger in "The Terminator," dressed in black jeans, boots and tank tops. They were watching the strange, unearthly woman. Swann quickly left, knowing that Axelrod would soon be calling.

The renewed phone contact by Axelrod was far from ordinary. First Swann received a mysterious phone call from a female operative, directing him to a different phone. The call ended in dead silence, suggesting that the phone line had been cut and spliced into.

Once he reached the designated phone, Swann engaged in a scrambled conversation with Axelrod, asking about the strange sexy woman in the supermarket.

Axelrod warned, "I feel obliged to tell you that she is really dangerous."

Apparently Swann believed that Axelrod's warning had confirmed his worst fear. Not only were extraterrestrials on the moon, but they had operatives here on Earth, among the ordinary people. If Axelrod was to be believed, they were to be avoided at all possible cost.

"Expect Contact"

Axelrod inquired about how the remote viewing work at SRI was going.

Axelrod told Ingo, "We have a special task." He needed to know when Swann had reached 65 percent accuracy.

Axelrod instructed Ingo to place an ordinary sheet of paper with the number 65 written on it under his ink blotter on his desk, in a secure office at SRI, once the goal had been achieved.

In his book Swann mused about the possibilities:

"Who were this Axelrod and his henchmen / operatives anyway? CIA, KGB, Mossad, M-5, some ultra-secret military goings-on?"

"Then one morning when I lifted the blotter the hair on my arms once again stood up. The signal (the piece of paper with 65 written on it) was gone. In its place was some dust-like powder in which a finger had scrawled two words."

"Expect contact."

Swann continues:

"The result of the promised 'contact' was that if I had any doubts about whether they existed, such doubts were shortly to be resolved. I almost got killed in the process."

"The expected contact came in July, 1977, a few days after I discovered the message in the dust."

"As I remember it, the thing did not 'transport' itself. It GREW in place right where it appeared."

Strange UFO encounter over a lake

Swann was surprised to see Mr. Axelrod standing in the dining hall at SRI. After a brief meet-up with Axelrod in the men's room, Swann was directed to Axelrod's Jeep, waiting outside in the parking lot.

Axelrod drove Swann to a Lear Jet waiting at the San Jose airport, and informed him that they might have an opportunity to see a UFO, "rather close up."

After several hours of flight the plane made a covert landing without any lights onto a dark runway. This was followed by a two-hour drive into cold, dark mountains. Swann noticed that the van moved even after the van's motor appeared to go silent.

Once they reached their destination, Axelrod, Swann and Axelrod's two operatives hiked their way to the intended location.

Axelrod instructed Ingo, "Just observe, we'll debrief later...Do not move unless I tell you to. They detect heat, noise, motion like mad."

Swann, Axelrod and the two operatives watched, and waited. Above a small lake, a gray fog began to rise. Swann was startled as the fog was suddenly awash in luminous colors. Purple, red and yellow lightning bolts silently shot out in all directions.

Then, suddenly an object appeared, fading into view over the lake waters. Swann described the object as triangular, almost diamond shaped.

"As I remember it, the thing did not 'transport' itself. It GREW in place right where it appeared."

With the appearance of the object a wind passed overhead, causing pine cones and branches to fall to the ground. Swann writes that "ruby-red laser beams" began shooting out from the object, which still appeared to be growing in size, even though it remain stationary over the same location above the lake.

Swann estimated the fully visible object at ninety feet wide.

Laser beams hit the trees, and in the commotion of blasting pine and low-frequency pulsations, Swann was dragged out of harm's way by Axelrod's operatives. A beam cracked the branches at the location they had only moments before abandoned in urgent haste. Looking back for a final glimpse, Swann noticed that the water of the lake was being sucked up into the weird object.

Swann writes, "I was virtually petrified with a kind of terror for which there are few words to describe."

"The last I saw of Mr. Axelrod was at the San Jose airport, and so there ends the tale of my encounters with him and his ultra-subterranean covert mission."

Upon returning to the airfield, Swann observed an USA-Alaska mail plane. He surmised that they had been in far northern Alaska.

Axelrod explained, "Our mission will be disbanded shortly and the work picked up by others, because of strategic security reasons involved..."

"Next week you will be summoned for a complete physical examination, ostensibly in line with overseeing the health status of the people on your project. We just want to be sure you experienced no physical damage. The physicians performing the examination will be ordinary doctors who have no knowledge of our existence."

Swann mentions that he sustained a leg injury while viewing the UFO. We have yet to find any mention of this in the STAR

...pe -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games
According to Swann, "The last I saw of Mr. Axelrod was at the San Jose airport, and so there ends the tale of my encounters with him and his ultra-subterranean covert mission."

GRILL FLAME and Beyond

A CIA released memo on SRI stationary, dated November 2, 1978, from Hal [Puthoff] states:

Just a quick note. For what it's worth, Swann now has a T/S [TOP SECRET] clearance with DoD [Department of Defense].

Indeed, Swann was ushered into the inner sanctum of many top secret, limited access military programs, coming as a result of the success of the SRI psychic research. The turning point was the move from experimental work into operational programs, and Swann's knowledge and ability was to become the reference point for many. By 1984 he was personally training military personnel to become working psychic spies.

The CIA's role had been moved from cutting edge research sponsor to "tasking customer," with the various Department of Defense military service elements taking the lead.

A summary of activity requested by Senate Appropriations Committee via Congressionally Directed Action states:

During the period between 1975 and 1979, the following DoD Service elements supported psi [psychic] research:

[Note: The various programs were grouped together under a project titled GRILL FLAME]

The U.S. Navy program was to evaluate an individual's ability to perceive remote visual stimuli ...

The U.S Air Force National Air Intelligence Center, formerly the Foreign Technology Division (FTD), initiated its program by asking whether the phenomena existed and whether it could be used to collect intelligence...[redacted service or agency] research effort focused on the use of RV [remote viewing] to collect intelligence data...During the period that DoD Service organizations were involved, DIA also pursued some aspects of psychoenergetics [remote viewing and perturbation, mind over matter]. Its activities were restricted, however, to aspects clearly related to threat assessment and intelligence data collection. DIA contracted research with SRI to train individuals to do RV [remote viewing] and supported attempts by experienced remote viewers to collect intelligence on former Soviet sites of operational interest.

Of potential interest to the Ingo Swann tale, the report continues with:

The U.S. Army's Missile Research and Development Command (MIRADCOM) had Stanford Research Institute (SRI) under contract from August 1977 to 1978. The work was done under the sponsorship of the Missile Intelligence Agency (MIA). The object of the MIA program was to determine whether selected individuals could interact and influence, by mental means only, sensitive electronic equipment...

Curiously, the MIRADCOM program began in August 1977, one month following Swann's alleged encounter with the alien machine in Alaska. The implication was that remote perturbation, commonly called psychokinesis, or mind over matter, could somehow be used to sabotage our nuclear missile deterrent.

Of the subjects tested at SRI, it was Swann that had allegedly perturbed sensitive test equipment, and remote viewed the interior of the device.

The report continues:

From May 1979 to September 1979, SRI assisted MIRADCOM in developing sensitive measurement equipment for the experiment [to test for remote perturbation by mind over matter] ... the Army Material Systems Analysts Activity (AMSAA) extended the applications-oriented research lines begun by other organizations ... During this same period of time the U.S. Army Intelligence and Security Command (USA INSCOM) was also asked whether RV [remote viewing] could be used to collect intelligence data.

The report also notes:

During the period that DoD Service organizations were involved, DIA also pursued some aspects of psychoenergetics [remote viewing and perturbation, mind over matter]. Its activities were restricted, however, to aspects clearly related to threat assessment and intelligence data collection. DIA contracted research with SRI to train individuals to do RV [remote viewing] and supported attempts by experienced remote viewers to collect intelligence on former Soviet sites of operational interest.

Is there anything to be gleaned by looking closer at the various agencies involved in the official record, that might help to identify Mr. Axelrod and his black operation?

One possibility involves the numerous reports of nuclear missiles going off-line when UFO's have buzzed the launch field.

This clearly registers as a major breach of the national security.

Perhaps there was concern that the UFO's buzzing air bases might be related to sightings during various space missions, like the recent revelation that a UFO had shadowed the Apollo 11 mission?

It is possible that target locations on the moon were selected based upon observations of UFO's by the astronauts. It is also quite conceivable that someone might have decided it was worth a try to have Swann, notable for his Earthly remote viewing of super-secret installations here on Earth, take a minds-eye view of the moonscape to see what was going on in the darkness.

Fans of the hit television series, "The X-Files," will tell you, "The truth is out there."

For real-life psychic operative Ingo Swann, the truth is still in his head, and he isn't talking anymore.

Today ...

Today we are told that Swann lives alone, and shuns contact with the public and the media about the glory days of psychic research, and the strange tales of intelligent agencies and psychic spies.

An email sent to Swann's web site contact address will return the following reply:

Howdy,

This is an automated reply to your e-mail to info@biomindsuperpowers.com .

I've faxed your note to Ingo. Unfortunately, he isn't online. Thanks for your interest. Whether you hear back from him or not, I do know he greatly appreciates it. He said at the outset that being online would take too much time away from his work.

He doesn't offer remote viewing courses. He doesn't grant media interviews. He isn't interested in traditional publishing of The Real Story (yet).

Best sources for out-of-print books would be either the library, used book stores, or internet book dealers. Despite the demand, he has no plans for book reprints (presently). He doesn't have any plans for selling any paintings or prints.

Extraterrestrial Interference in Human Affairs?

Are ultra-terrestrial beings actually interfering with human affairs?

Physicist Beatriz Gato-Rivera writes, "The fact that our civilization has never been attacked by aggressive aliens, as far as history knows, could be a clue that we belong to a non-aggressive advanced civilization which protects planet Earth, as part of its territory."

Informational channels recorded and reported by various sources suggest extra-human intervention, or at least unique anticipatory aspects of the human mind previously untapped.

Gato-Rivera continues, "The existence of special psychic capabilities, such as telepathy, has not been discarded yet and therefore it could happen that specially-gifted people could see and/or communicate telepathically with beings coming from such universes with different laws of Physics than ours."

Telepathy might be applied as a kind of remote viewing of extra-human technology, including advances in technology that might someday be discovered by potential 'future humans' that have not yet come into existence.

I strongly suggest that the entire CIA Intelligence program under STAR GATE was seriously flawed, to the extent that it is represented in the declassified record. It appears to have neglected the apparent influence of an unknown intelligence interacting in human affairs.

Given that existing (if virtual relationships) were predicted in July 1974 by unknown exotic 'human effects' and other apparently intelligent phenomenology, there may be some reason to document possible references made by the phenomena to then classified work at SRI.

REFERENCE: <http://arxiv.org/pdf/physics/0512062v3>

A Solution to the Fermi Paradox: The Solar System, part of a Galactic Hypercivilization?

Beatriz Gato-Rivera

(Submitted on 7 Dec 2005 (v1), last revised 12 Jan 2006 (this version, v3))

I introduce the Fermi Paradox and some of its solutions. Then I present my own solution which includes two proposals called the Subanthropic Principle and the Undetectability Conjecture. After discussing some consequences of this solution, I make some comments about brane world scenarios and their potential to strengthen the Fermi Paradox. Finally, in the appendix I have included some questions and answers that came up during this Forum.

Secrecy and the Dark World of the Government Phenomenologist

The powers that be, those that supervise intelligence operations and disclosure of government interests and applications of phenomenology, are operating in the darkness.

STARstream Research maintains close contact with a private party that has provided us with evidence that he interacts with a high ranking government officer and an independent government consultant.

In spite of these close connections this person has yet to provide any evidence demonstrating how much they know versus their personal insightful intuition. I suspect that they rely primarily on "just the facts" when it comes down to the core reality of the situation.

STARstream Research has confirmed that at least one high ranking government consultant is aware of the 'telepathic' phenomenology problem, having detected a non-endogenous signal in the brain.

The 'telepathic' internet is certainly the first logical place to look for the nuts and bolts crowd, given the immediate mixing of signals and personal identity that results. The reality of the 'telepathic internet' then points to a deeper phenomenology, the cosmic internet or group mind of the universe; and from that 'solution' to the information network one may also infer a greater multiverse network; in that network coherence of the mind-net forms structure across the multiverse of all possible worlds.

The telepathic situation is therefore at the heart of the CORE STORY; it reappears in the NIDS Skinwalker data and forms the basis of the simulated universe.

Mind apprehends appearances but the underlying network is the foundation of existence.

When we query the grand database of the 'telepathic' internet, the mind apprehends a slice of the underlying activity supporting the reality of our perceptions.

Recently STARstream Research has examined official documentation supporting two 'intuitive' claims made by a STARstream Research consultant in 1999:

[1] American interest in jamming foreign remote viewing

[2] Soviet work in remote killing via bio-chemical disruption using 'telepathics' to target emotional centers in the brain.

The dark side of this activity appears to be supported by an overall archetypal intelligence.

The secrecy that encloses the deep secret of phenomenology is motivated by the need to remain in darkness, and is a suckling to the archetypal dark force. Disclosure may remain as the only final remedy to this problem. As long as our government phenomenologists remain concealed behind the facade of secrecy they will also remain protected, and restricted by the archetype of darkness.

Feeding the Enemy's Mind

Why spend valuable funds on the small chance that off-the-wall alternative research might pay off with a spectacular breakthrough, when you can sit back and wait for your nemesis to do the work for you?

It's an interesting problem:

How do you know if reports of alternative science are smoke-and-mirrors error or deception, or notice of a vital new result which threatens the national security?

Take, as an example from recent history, the spectacular reports of bizarre antigravity effects in experiments conducted by Evgeny Podkletnov, including an impulse gravity-like force-beam capable of smashing bricks at a distance.

Any new emerging scientific phenomena requires (at a minimum) a sound theoretical understanding of the underlying parameters at play. For the Podkletnov results, Giovanni Modenase provided much of the theoretical basis used to explain the effect.

It is worth noting that NASA attempted to duplicate the original Podkletnov experiment, but not the alleged impulse gravity effect.

STAR GATE, the U.S. Government program charged with investigating Anomalous Mental Phenomena, forged ahead without a sound theoretical basis to explain the alleged psychic phenomena.

(Spies using anomalous mental phenomena were tasked against enemy targets by the military. For an overall history of the STAR GATE effort, I recommend former military psychic Paul Smith's book, Reading the Enemy's Mind.)

Both American efforts ended in failure, or so we are led to believe, keeping in mind that counterintelligence considerations would take advantage of past failures in order to conceal ongoing efforts.

The NASA experiment reportedly failed to duplicate the original Podkletnov design with precision. Related research was later funded by a military seeking pie-in-the-sky dreams of floating tanks and antimissile beam weapons.

It is not surprising that the scientific leadership at CIA sought to kill the DIA STAR GATE program, given the near absence of any theoretical basis for how the reported mental phenomena was able to access distant events in space and time.

The historical records found within the secret STAR GATE files (now partially declassified and released to the public) tell us that a decision was made to reveal previous U.S. efforts and engage former Soviet researchers, to further scientific understanding of anomalous results that had been closely held by the U.S. Intelligence Community.

Since 1995, when the existence of STAR GATE was officially revealed to a disinterested public, several scientific revolutions have provided a tantalizing glimpse of a future theory of psychic phenomena.

We have learned that atoms are not the primary entities in the universe, which now appears to extend into an infinity of repeating variations of parallel worlds, each containing a quantum image of the same variations.

To paraphrase physicist Michio Kaku, we co-exist with the quantum wave functions of dinosaurs and aliens, of mythical beasts and alternative outcomes.

In some remote nation, perhaps in an alternative universe, a young child's imagination has been set on fire by Dr. Kaku's visions.

Some day that child will awaken to his own dream, and from that enchanted light receive a piece of the puzzle never glimpsed by the mind of man.

And when, after years of struggle, he puts his vision to the test, it is likely the Intelligence Community will be there.

Daz Digs Up More DI55 "X-Files"

Daz Smith, author of Surfing the Psychic Internet, has been using the Freedom of Information Act to look into the British version of the REAL X-Files: The once secretive investigations of the DI55.

It's interesting to compare the documents Daz has uncovered against the spin being fed to the public by the mainstream media.

For example:

"The truth is out there... and it's a bit of a letdown," By Sarah Freeman:

The Ministry of Defence is about to open its UFO files, but the contents threaten to reveal more about Cold War blunders than extraterrestrials.

The truth often has a habit of disappointing.

When the Ministry of Defence announced it was going to parse up all the reports it had ever made on UFOs and send them to the National Archive it created a wave of excited chatter in chat rooms and web blogs devoted to all things paranormal.

According to the conspiracy theorists its staff have been too busy covering up alien landings to hold press conferences and publish books, their filing cabinets overflowing with documents containing precise co-ordinates of extra-terrestrial visits to planet Earth. However, those who've had an early glimpse of what's on offer insist that those wanting photographic evidence of little green men will remain disappointed.

The above is not exactly consistent with the files Daz Smith has uncovered.

Daz wrote to us:

Guys just to keep you informed as it does have some relevance to recent threads.

I have been using the FOIA in the U.K to try to access documents detailing meetings between the 'Stargate' military team and a strange bunch At the U.K. MoD, in a brand of defence Intelligence called DI55.

I recently found out that the UK MOD had an archived 1000 page file on remote viewing in two parts:

DI51/GO21: Novel Bio - Effects Psychotronics Remote Viewing

DI51/GO28: Novel Phenomena, Remote Viewing

So after this information as a start I also requested the names of the defence intel files in between the numbers 21 - 28.

Today I got the reply and copies of all the non public remote viewing material in these files not exempt from disclosure due to international relations.

Firstly the files in between are:

DI51/GO22 - Gravitational theory

DI51/GO23 - FASC reports - Novel Energy technology - zero point

DI51/GO24 - Laser & optics Conf St Petersburg 1993/95

DI51/GO25 - Visit to XXXXX By xxxxxx staff 1991-95

DI51/GO26 - Novel energy technology

DI51/GO27 - Aharanov-Bohm Effect - St Andrews University papers.

I also received a pack of photocopied documents that mainly detail USSR research into Morphogenetic fields, non locality, morphogenetic fields in modulated space, The quantum nonlocality of Genomes, amongst other stuff.

I haven't read all the documents yet but thought I would share with you.

All the best...

Daz

So what does this mean?

It's a direct connection made by the powers-that-be in England between paranormal mind and UFO-related technologies.

More important: this is direct evidence of intelligence agency interest in reverse engineering "extraterrestrial technology."

Spies, Lies, and MI6?

Guardian.co.uk reports:

MI6 is using the social networking site Facebook to recruit the next generation of spies. The Secret Intelligence Service, which has traditionally scoured the country's elite universities for recruits, launched a series of online adverts this month as part of its attempts to attract people from a variety of backgrounds.

And, as noted at the official SIS/MI6 website:

As Britain's secret service, SIS provides the British Government with a global covert capability to promote and defend the national security and economic well-being of the United Kingdom. SIS operates world-wide to collect secret foreign intelligence in support of the British Government's policies and objectives.

One of the more interesting (and down to earth) aspects emerging from tales of "spies, lies and polygraph tape" is the appearance of well-placed persons from the intelligence community in the nooks and crannies of the Internet UFO underground.

As with all things spy related, nothing is truly as it appears.

Files released by the British Ministry of Defence (MoD) confirm the UFO phenomenon (also known as Unidentified Aerial Phenomena) was studied covertly for years.

Other MoD files obtained by "Daz" Smith using the FOIA confirm interest in exotic phenomena for intelligence collection, including "remote viewing" and Russian research into "biological morphic fields."

Whether or not there is any reality to the phenomena in question, there is no longer any question of government interest and covert investigations.

The "X-files" are real.

And, I suspect, the spy game is just as real.

Which brings us back to MI6, and their mission to "collect secret foreign intelligence in support of the British Government's policies and objectives."

When meetings in the United States with intelligence persons knowledgeable about the UFO question failed to materialize, we were informed that our investigative source had been accused of an association with MI6.

Based upon MoD files we have seen, it appears not unreasonable to suspect some level of interest from MI6 over the spy games being played in the United States.

Most of the key players from the American spy trade are also known for having an interest in UFOs and the psychic spy programs.

And based upon leaked email messages, at least some of those persons were concerned about the intense interest in the UFO subject exhibited by British nationals.

As noted by the MoD UAP (UFO) executive summary:

The relevance of plasma and magnetic fields to UAP were an unexpected feature of the study. It is recommended that further investigation should be into the applicability of various characteristics of plasmas in novel military applications. With respect to the possibility of the use of plasmas for military applications, such as target radar signature control and antennas, it is noted that the implications have already been briefed to the relevant MoD technology managers.

Once again, we note the close association between the UFO subject and interest in novel methods for new stealth technologies.

NSA Warrantless Mind-taps?

The National Security Agency has received a lot of press recently.

For example, Washington Post Staff Writer Dan Eggen reported that Director of National Intelligence Mike McConnell disclosed that President Bush had "authorized a series of secret surveillance activities under a single executive order in late 2001," and "Bush's order included undisclosed activities beyond the warrantless surveillance of emails and phone calls."

In a letter to Arlen Specter, dated July 31st, 2007, DCI McConnell explains:

One particular aspect of these [intelligence] activities, and nothing more, was publicly acknowledged by the President ... the Administration first used the term 'Terrorist Surveillance Program' to refer specifically to that particular activity ... This is the only aspect of the NSA activities that can be discussed publicly because it is the only aspect of those various activities whose existence has been officially acknowledged.

Thus Eggen concludes, and we concur, "NSA was clearly engaged in activities that were distinct enough to require different 'legal bases' authorizing their use."

The above led us to ask whether any of the various activities included exotic methods of penetrating the enemy's intent; methods that have been alluded to by some of our contacts that are routinely involved with members of the intelligence community.

One item that immediately comes to mind is the use of fMRI technology to observe the brain and by interpretation, penetrate into the thoughts of an adversary, to determine the truthfulness of their stated intentions.

We have been on the receiving end of documentation of government contracts for research to determine the practical use of fMRI as lie detection technology.

A key party involved in the research has a long and distinguished history with the Central Intelligence Agency.

Whether any of this technology has been adapted for immediate use by the NSA is unknown, but we wouldn't be surprised if several programs were already in place.

A more bizarre, and potentially troubling item on the alternative agenda, and one that the same gentleman mentioned above has been involved with, in government and the private sector, is the use of "direct mind to mind communication" to directly access the thoughts of another person.

So-called 'telepathic communication' has been an active area of research funded by the U.S. Government, continues to be of interest for numerous alternative scientists, including one of our contacts in China, and has been reported by private anomalous investigators from the National Institute of Discovery Science (NIDS) as real. The gentlemen from NIDS that confirmed 'telepathy' are also government consultants.

A private investigative journalist, known for more conventional research, passed on that his NSA contact had confirmed the continuing use of 'psychic' intelligence, which we also heard second-hand from several other sources.

Looking back at some of the last research conducted by defense contractor SAIC for STAR GATE, in the mid-1990's, there are reports suggesting physical mind-to-mind correlations and a new kind of 'causal field' acting as a physical information channel.

If some form of mind-to-mind communication is a reality, it must involve a physical medium of connectivity (the mantra of modern information theory is 'no information without physical representation') -- and thus involves a kind of 'wire' -- a

...the ... of ...

ET Source?
National Security Agency thwarted by

...the ... of ...

...the ... of ...

(that is, 89,000 pages are available to the public, with another 50,000 or so remaining classified).

One explanation may be found in 1994 briefings that renewed interest in Russian phenomenology, with the discovery of a possible signal carrying mechanism for psychic phenomena, referred to as AMP -- anomalous mental phenomena -- reported by SAIC in the STAR GATE documents.

One agency known to have been involved with phenomenology has been conspicuously absent from STAR GATE documents -- the National Security Agency -- presumably hidden under the ubiquitous use of black highlighter in the public version of the documents.

If NSA inherited the program, we expect a transmission mechanism was discovered during STAR GATE research. That would immediately have changed the focus from HUMINT -- human intelligence sources -- to SIGINT -- signal intelligence sources -- with the resulting closure of the program at CIA conveniently covering for new efforts elsewhere.

Here is where the situation really gets weird:

"The source says the program encountered problems when foreign targets were being blocked by an extraterrestrial source that has never been identified."

For the more religious phenomenologists out there, don't be surprised if the extraterrestrial source has two horns, a tail and a pitchfork.

"Or, not."

I should add that the day this information was passed to Russo my PDA phone, untouched and resting on top of my desk, spontaneously dialed Russo's number by itself. And to add to the mystery, the speaker-phone in my office was often discovered to be left hanging on monitor.

Just coincidence, right?

(BTW -- if there are any NSA phenomenologists in need of assistance in dealing with their extraterrestrial problem, feel free to give us a call. We'd be glad to help!)

Son of STAR GATE: The NSA Psychic Spy Program

Yesterday we received an email from Gus Russo confirming his source told him that the National Security Agency (NSA) was presently engaged in the use of phenomenology -- aka 'psychic spying' -- to collection intelligence.

Gus Russo is well known for shooting down JFK assassination conspiracies in his book Live by the Sword: The Secret War Against Castro and the Death of JFK.

Russo describes the research leading up to publication of his JFK book.

My combined work over the years with PBS and other media interests allowed me to interview thousands of individuals who claimed to know something about the case - - from Sergio Arcacha, who ran the Cuban Revolutionary Council in New Orleans, to Master Sergeant James A. Zahm, head of training at the Marine Quantico unit-and everyone in between. Many were helpful, but some seemed only too aware that one of the easiest ways to turn a profit or attain celebrity status was to feed off the public's natural paranoia regarding THE GOVERNMENT.

Our contributing source, Caryn Anscorb, asked Russo to rate the credibility of his source for the latest NSA revelation.

Russo replied, "His speculations are sometimes further than I would go...But his accuracy re: facts has never been in question."

Some of the most vocal opponents to the existence of an on-going government psychic-spy program were involved in the original STAR GATE programs

STAR GATE is the nickname given to a series of paranormal government projects, beginning in the 1970's at SRI International, which later evolved into operational programs managed by the Defense Intelligence Agency into the mid 1990's, with scientific support provided by Science Applications International Corporation (SAIC), a top defense contractor.

I emailed Paul H. Smith, President of the IRVA -- the International Remote Viewing Association -- a group comprised of veterans of previous government programs and next generation private sector trained psychics.

I asked Mr. Smith if he was aware of a psychic spy program being run out of NSA, and a simple "yes, no, or no comment would suffice."

Paul Smith replied, "If there still actually is one, I have no info on it. I guess that is equivalent to a 'no' or 'no comment!'"

Gus Russo's source told him, "NSA considers remote viewing a valid SIGINT tool. The program was relocated from CIA and is one of the most highly classified at NSA."

Colonel John B. Alexander, best known as an advocate for non-lethal weapons, as well as for his interest in all things phenomenological, from antigravity to psychic spying, told Coast to Coast AM host George Noory that he doubted the government was currently involved in remote viewing.

"The talent pool is really relatively small ... and most of these people all know each other."

Russo implied that NSA viewers had received special training.

Who was involved in preparing the next generation of government psychics?

We suspect covert university-level involvement based upon a greatly improved understanding of the mechanism involved, perhaps enhanced by the NSA's expertise in breaking encryption -- assuming the remote viewing 'signals' are biologically sent and received and can be detected artificially.

A major security breach occurred in 1973 when, according to numerous accounts, SRI remote viewers Pat Price and Ingo Swann spied on NSA's Sugar Grove facility in West Virginia.

The tale of this incident was told by CIA's Ken Kress in a revised version of a formerly secret story written for CIA's internal Studies in Intelligence 1977:

No maps were permitted, and the subjects were asked to give an immediate response of what they remotely viewed at these coordinates. The subject came back with descriptions which were apparent misses. They both talked about a military-like facility...To the surprise of the [CIA] OSI officer, he soon discovered a sensitive government installation a few miles from the vacation property. This discovery led to a request to have Price provide information concerning the interior workings of this particular site. All the data produced by the two subjects were reviewed in CIA and the Agency [NSA] concerned.

Pat Price, who had no military or intelligence background, provided a list of project titles associated with current and past activities including one of extreme sensitivity. Also, the codename of the site was provided. Other information concerning the physical layout of the site was accurate. Some information, such as the names of the people at the site, proved incorrect.

Years later, following Price's death, it was alleged by the FBI that Price had been passing information about the SRI research to a private organization.

Kress addressed this incident in the 1999 public version of his CIA article:

In the late 1970s, several years after the project was terminated, I got a secure line call from a person who identified himself as an FBI agent...The FBI agent proceeded to explain that Pat Price was a member of an organization that was recently raided for documents indicative of illegal activity. The organization was vigorously resisting the government investigation but the raid produced hundreds of files and papers that supported the government's allegations. These documents were now in the public domain as part of the discovery process in the legal proceedings. One such file included debriefings of Pat Price about his CIA remote viewing projects...As the file made clear, Pat, who had signed an official secrecy agreement, would immediately go to his superior in the organization after sessions with me and divulge everything.

NSA certainly had a vested interest in discovering the true nature of how detailed information had been obtained about their secret government facility and passed into the private sector.

A Psychic Spy's Memorandum for the Record

In his story "The Real X-Files: Is Uncle Sam a Closet UFOlogist?" author Gus Russo writes about U.S. intelligence interest in email lists, bloggers and web sites catering to public curiosity about an extraterrestrial presence and the alleged government cover up.

Russo writes:

Summing it all up, there is certainly a very small percentage government officials with intelligence clearance -- some active some retired -- who are interested in the UFO research community, if not UFOs themselves. Some of these men are of the impression, rightly or wrongly, that a very few individuals in government and the private sector are keeping the big secret even from them.

We can speculate until the cows come home (or get mutilated by the aliens!) but any evidence of official interest is probably filed away, or even classified, and beyond the immediate reach of a FOIA request. We can, however, examine previously classified or confidential documents that have been already been released, to guide our intuitions about the current situation. And, as it turns out, there are good analogs for some of the intelligence interest detailed by Russo, in the CIA/DIA STAR GATE files.

In the early to mid-1990's, STAR GATE was still a classified program, albeit one with numerous leaks into the public sector.

In a letter from STAR GATE's SAIC research director Ed May, concerns were raised about Jim Schnabel, author of an newspaper expose' about the psychic spy program, and later one of the first books published about the history of the formerly secret project. Schnabel was doing a lot of digging, and making contact with personnel sworn to secrecy by their security clearances.

May wrote:

It has come to my attention that Mr. James Schnabel, xxxx xxxxxxxx Drive, xxxxx xxxxxx, xx xxxxxx, Phone xxx.xxx.xxxx is writing a piece for Channel 4 on British television. He outlined the gist of the program to one of our staff as two fold. The first part involves CIA's Project Scanate and the history of the putative Army's involvement in remote view to include details of A1 organization and it's predecessors, specifics of some of the live missions, which agencies had used the service, and who were the major players. Mr. Schnabel listed 5 individuals by name all of whom have retired from [redacted] program in the past. He also listed the names of some of the current personnel and retired senior government personnel who were associated with the program but not directly involved.

It is my impression that Schnabel and Channel 4 are interested in an expose' and have garnered full cooperation of past project personnel. Knowing how long these things take, I do not believe that anything will be presented until late summer and perhaps then only in England, although there is a close relationship between Channel 4 and -die Discovery Channel here in the States.

[redacted] this raises once again the question of the veracity of past agreements between personnel and the government. When we meet, I will provide the complete text of a memo-to-record about the whole Schnabel repeated incidents.

Ed May wasn't the only STAR GATE alumni to raise concerns. A much longer document, from military remote viewer 001 Joe McMoneagle, describes on-going efforts by Schnabel to penetrate the classified program.

In a "Memorandum for the Record," McMoneagle states:

Over the past eight months, a writer by the name of, James Schnabel, approached me at least six or seven times via phone in an attempt to interview me for a book he was writing on remote viewing and its history. Initially he insisted that he was only interested in the science side of the subject, the developmental program at SRI-International, as well as current work being done at Science Applications International Corporation (SAIC).

In the case of each contact, I recommended he call either of the companies direct, since I was only a sub-contractor working for them. I told him that the work I performed was proprietary.

When he asked for a specific name to reference, I stated that I couldn't give him one, since in both cases, I understood that the laboratories doing the work had since been shut down.

Apparently Schnabel had managed to learn quite a bit about the project from former personnel, as McMoneagle continues:

[redacted] assured me that Schnabel was very pro-remote viewing, that it was his intention to do only the right thing with regard towards the broadcast, and he wasn't interested in anything that would do remote viewing reputational damage. I asked how he justified speaking with Schnabel at all, given his signature was on security agreement documents the old office and he stated that he felt those restrictions were pertinent on specific operations, and of course he wasn't discussing any of these with Schnabel. I told [redacted] that my understanding was that we were to neither confirm nor deny any allegation or information pertinent to the old office, so I was reluctant to talk with Schnabel at all. [Redacted] pressed me. so, I agreed that if I was called, I would once again speak with Schnabel, but added that it would only be after the end of the seminar, and then, only to hear what he had to say. I didn't want to start a war with Schnabel prior to my evening talk on remote viewing at the [Monroe] Institute.

In typical good-spy fashion, McMoneagle then turned the situation to his advantage, to gain information from Schnabel about his investigation.

On the evening of the 25th of May, I received another call from Mr. Schnabel asking if I still intended to speak with him. I told him that I would have breakfast with the group on Friday (the next morning), and would talk with him before he left the Institute. During that meeting and subsequent conversation he related the following information: The Production is being undertaken in the United States on behalf of British TV Channel 4. The Producer's name he didn't share with me. He told me the camera team was probably going to be headed up by someone with the first name of Astro, a cameraman for Discovery Channel. He said the writer of record was himself (James Schnabel, of xxxx xxxxxxxx Drive, xxxxx xxxxx, xx xxxxx, (xxx) xxx-xxxx). He outlined the gist of the program as two fold. The first part was how the special project started - CIA SCANATE effort, etc., and the full history of the Army's involvement in remote viewing, to include details about the Ft. Meade project, how it was/had been used in the cold war effort, to include the specifics of some of the live missions, which agencies had used it, some of the specific successes, and who the major players are/were. Part two would cover the science side of the effort, both at SRI-international and SAIC, would also include other applications, what the current state of the art is considered to be, and who the best viewers are, and major players. He also stated that they wanted to present a live remote viewing and that was why he wanted my participation in the program.

It is interesting, and instructive for the present situation involving UFOlogists, phenomenologists, and intelligence officials, to see how much information McMoneagle was able to pass on to the powers-that-be from one brief meeting with writer Schnabel.

McMoneagle even persuaded Schnabel to reveal his sources, listed as retired and active project members, although their names have been redacted from the STAR GATE document. Schnabel also told McMoneagle of four others he could not identify to McMoneagle.

McMoneagle's testimony continues for a total of nine pages, including the entirely redacted final page, expressing his many concerns about the leaked information, including a film of a remote viewing session done at the Monroe Institute in 1983, noting:

What could be particularly damaging about the film clip is that its contents were produced while Mr. Robert Monroe was under contract from the old office at Ft. Meade. We paid him for experiments performed in his lab in support of the Ft. Meade effort. Use of the film out of context would not be particularly meaningful, however, if it were presented within the original context, it could be very revealing and only add to the sensationalism of the show Mr. Schnabel is attempting to produce. Since Mr. Monroe is now dead, only [sic] and I know of the circumstances surrounding the film clip. I suspect that [redacted] has filled Schnabel in.

A document from sessions held at the Monroe Institute in late December 1983, discussed a terrorist attack against the U.S. Capitol Building, involving the use of an airplane as a bomb, although we don't know if this is the specific experiment McMoneagle referred to.

In my discussion with Schnabel, it was obvious, that a great deal of information has leaked regarding the old office at Ft. Meade. The extent of this information leak was implied by the content of Schnabel's conversation and overall knowledgeability, especially while referencing individuals by name. The following indicates what I believe has been implied by my conversation with Schnabel: [and in typical spy fashion, this is redacted from the public version of the document] Has been having quite open conversations with Schnabel, in which he has provided substantial historical data. [Redacted] has specifically stated he has not provided any mission related data - which may be the case, but it is obvious that he has provided many of the names, inter-connections, meaningful historical ties, etc., between all or most players at all levels. I believe that he may have engineered the entire series of contacts between Schnabel and others.

The question in my mind?

"Who is the man behind the curtain," pulling the levers on the Internet machine that appears to have engineered the present situation?

CIA's "Flying Saucer" files and Psychological Warfare

The National Security Council has recognized as a national security problem our present limited capabilities in making prompt positive visual or mechanical identification of flying objects. The problem is recognized also as one which bears directly upon both offensive and defensive capabilities of the armed forces; as one of concern to operations as well as to intelligence; and is one having possible implications for psychological warfare.

-- CIA archive

In a phone conversation I had with AQUARIUM's Dan Smith over the weekend, we discussed the modern day on-going equivalent of yesterdays UFO/Flying Saucer problem now slowly coming to light in the FOIA archives of the CIA.

Smith noted that his friend Ron, the former CIA analyst (who was last confirmed working for the Office of the Director of National Intelligence DIA/MASINT), told him that because the phenomena are real but cannot be nailed down physically intelligence operations focus on tracking the people who are involved with the phenomena instead.

Meanwhile the CIA appears to be working overtime to throw a monkey wrench into the Freedom of Information process with their new CREST document archive.

For example, a quick search for "flying saucer" at the CREST 25-year project on-line search site brings up numerous documents with titles, such as:

ABOARD A FLYING SAUCER THE ADVENTURES OF TWO 'KIDNAPPED' HUMANS

Unfortunately, unless you are prepared to invest a lot of time and money, that may be as far as you get. The documents at CREST cannot be accessed on line like the handful available at the CIA FOIA Electronic Reading Room.

As the Federation of American Scientists pointed out, "By refusing to place the CREST database online (or to release it to others who will do so), the CIA is undermining the 'effective utilization' of this existing agency database."

The Mother Jones article cited by the FAS explains:

In a quiet, fluorescently lit room in the National Archives' auxiliary campus in suburban College Park, Maryland, 10 miles outside of Washington, are four computer terminals, each providing instant access to the more than 10 million pages of documents the CIA has declassified since 1995.

There's only one problem: these are the only publicly available computers in the world that do so. At a time when Google is scanning and posting the contents of entire libraries to the Web, the agency refuses to link this large collection of documents -- accessible through the CIA Records Search Tool, or CREST -- to the Internet. This has effectively placed the CIA's declassified library beyond the reach of most Americans.

Mother Jones goes on to explain:

CIA officials also believe that even sanitized documents, if made available online, could potentially compromise "sources and methods." The fear is that foreign spies, utilizing the so-called "mosaic principle," could piece together fragments of information from a wide range of declassified sources to make deductions about ongoing intelligence operations.

<http://motherjones.com/politics/2009/04/cias-open-secrets>

One might well wonder what is so sensitive about the flying saucers that might be pieced together to make deductions about on-going intelligence operations.

CIA's "Flying Saucer" files and Psychological Warfare

The National Security Council has recognized as a national security problem our present limited capabilities in making prompt positive visual or mechanical identification of flying objects. The problem is recognized also as one which bears directly upon both offensive and defensive capabilities of the armed forces; as one of concern to operations as well as to intelligence; and is one having possible implications for psychological warfare.

-- CIA archive

In a phone conversation I had with AQUARIUM's Dan Smith over the weekend, we discussed the modern day on-going equivalent of yesterdays UFO/Flying Saucer problem now slowly coming to light in the FOIA archives of the CIA.

Smith noted that his friend Ron, the former CIA analyst (who was last confirmed working for the Office of the Director of National Intelligence DIA/MASINT), told him that because the phenomena are real but cannot be nailed down physically, intelligence operations focus on tracking the people who are involved with the phenomena instead.

Meanwhile the CIA appears to be working overtime to throw a monkey wrench into the Freedom of Information process with their new CREST document archive.

For example , a quick search for "flying saucer" at the CREST 25-year project on-line search site brings up numerous documents with titles, such as:

ABOARD A FLYING SAUCER THE ADVENTURES OF TWO 'KIDNAPPED' HUMANS

Unfortunately, unless you are prepared to invest a lot of time and money, that may be as far as you get. The documents at CREST cannot be accessed on line like the handful available at the CIA FOIA Electronic Reading Room.

As the Federation of American Scientists pointed out, "By refusing to place the CREST database online (or to release it to others who will do so), the CIA is undermining the 'effective utilization' of this existing agency database."

The Mother Jones article cited by the FAS explains:

In a quiet, fluorescently lit room in the National Archives' auxiliary campus in suburban College Park, Maryland, 10 miles outside of Washington, are four computer terminals, each providing instant access to the more than 10 million pages of documents the CIA has declassified since 1995.

There's only one problem: these are the only publicly available computers in the world that do so. At a time when Google is scanning and posting the contents of entire libraries to the Web, the agency refuses to link this large collection of documents -- accessible through the CIA Records Search Tool, or CREST -- to the Internet. This has effectively placed the CIA's declassified library beyond the reach of most Americans.

Mother Jones goes on to explain:

CIA officials also believe that even sanitized documents, if made available online, could potentially compromise "sources and methods." The fear is that foreign spies, utilizing the so-called "mosaic principle," could piece together fragments of information from a wide range of declassified sources to make deductions about ongoing intelligence operations.

<http://motherjones.com/politics/2009/04/cias-open-secrets>

One might well wonder what is so sensitive about the flying saucers that might be pieced together to make deductions about on-going intelligence operations.

The on-line fiasco known as SERPO comes to mind, given the numerous past and present intelligence officials involved, as well as their connections to high level CIA related operations like IN-Q-TEL and recent overtures to Chinese researchers.

One very badly reproduced "flying saucer" document that might shed a little light on this subject is available to examine at the CIA electronic reading room (or until they read this post and pull it off the system!), from Director of Central Intelligence W.B. SMITH.

CIA calls General Walter Bedell Smith, the fourth Director of Central Intelligence from 1950 to 1953, during the heyday of the flying saucer era, "one of CIA's most successful and influential directors."

The cover letter to an undated 26 page memorandum from DCI Smith to the Director of the Psychological Strategy Board states:

I am today transmitting to the National Security Council a proposal (TAB A) in which it is concluded that the problems connected with unidentified flying objects appear to have implications for psychological warfare as well as for Intelligence and operations.

Later Smith calls for the "determination of what if any utilization should be made of these phenomena by US psychological warfare planners and what, if any, defense should be planned in anticipation of Soviet attempts to utilize them."

The fact that the phenomena remain unknown does not appear to deter this effort.

Intelligence problems include...Knowledge of the exact nature of the phenomena...Whether any are susceptible to control, and can be thus utilized for other military or psychological offense or defense.

A National Security Council (NSC) ACTION is recommended: a centrally administered research program under RD3 should be established with research objective requirements to be specified by the Secretary of Defense, the Director of Central Intelligence, and Director Psychological Strategy Board.

Another draft page notes:

The National Security Council has recognized as a national security problem our present limited capabilities in making prompt positive visual or mechanical identification of flying objects. The problem is recognized also as one which bears directly upon both offensive and defensive capabilities of the armed forces; as one of concern to operations as well as to intelligence; and is one having possible implications for psychological warfare.

Note: For more information, see "Knowing the Future Part Eight."

The AVIARY:

A collection of witting and unwitting spooks and their associates, who often appear to be associated with the topic of UFOs, psychic spies, and extraterrestrial visitations.

Focus on extraterrestrial technologies?

The AQUARIUM:

A collection of witting and unwitting spooks and their associates, who often appear to be associated with the topic of UFOs, psychic spies, and extraterrestrial visitations.

Focus on eschatology?

Tricky Fish: An Adventure in the AQUARIUM

The nature of the existence of the mind has been explored since the beginning of human self-perception.

More recently, this question has gradually moved into the fringe edges of scientific thought.

Is there a physics of consciousness?

What does it mean, exactly, that our conscious existence provides for a means of knowing that we simply are?

A few physicists have scratched their heads and, on occasion, put their hearts into this question.

This is the forbidden zone, where physics meets metaphysics. A nether man's region where experimental verification slips elusively into the ether of empty realities.

Yet, here we are. Here we exist, and here we act, think, feel and more. Somehow there is an explanation for this world.

And now, to explain this one world, the world of our daily experience, we need to invoke countless others.

How many worlds are out there, beyond our own?

By latest estimate, an infinite sea of parallel worlds floats beyond our reach; so many worlds, that they repeat themselves over and over, an infinite number of copies and variations of the world in which we find our conscious awareness. This one world is a mere slice in the bulk of a megaverse of possible universes, a sample of one universe embedded in a multiverse.

In this sea of infinite possibilities, some have asked, and reasoned, how our particular set of experiences becomes selected out from all of the others. Can we obtain a glimpse of some of those other worlds? Is there a portal by which we can peer into the void and seek answers for the questions we find ourselves asking here in this world?

If the answer is yes, then surely our imagination is one of our greatest resources.

I have a poster in my office, featuring a picture of Albert Einstein, with the quote:

"Imagination is more important than knowledge; knowledge is limited; imagination encircles the world."

A marvelous resource, imagination: one that can literally stretch our existence out and beyond this thin slice of reality that we know as home.

The Hollywood magic machine has produced a continuous series of stories of other worlds where man and exotic beings from other worlds play, work, and fight together out in the cosmos. Yes, imagination truly has no boundaries. There are no laws of physics, or plot, for that matter, that must constrain the imagination unleashed.

The real world, or real worlds, are not quite the same. Laws must be obeyed, as to what is and is not possible. Laws of physics determine the landscape of the worlds floating in the megaverse.

Laws may change, perhaps, from universe to universe, but they must be self-consistent, otherwise there would be no existence. What cannot be held together by law forfeits the right to reality, and is subsequently left as the fabric that dreams are made of.

Immaterial fantasy is played out by the simulation and stimulation of the perceptual machinery.

Once again, we are drawn back to that final question of existence: what is the mind, that it can perceive existence?

Governments impose upon us their laws, meant to bring order to the chaos of nocturnal dreams painted in the many minds of humanity at large.

The Government is also not immune to this simple fact: our minds are the ultimate arbitrators of reality.

Secret programs have existed, and likely still continue in some form somewhere in the hidden shadows of government affairs, that are tasked with exploring the very nature of this abstract concept of the mind.

Exactly what is the mind, that it emerges from a physical world that we can challenge and test with our experiments?

What is the nature of something so fundamental to human behavior and ambition, yet remains so distant from the sciences that support the modern industrialized world?

Is there a place for the mind in the world of espionage, and in the control of human society?

The answer is yes.

The government has explored and exploited features of the mind which cannot be addressed by known science.

Powers of the imagination have been used to penetrate the ever shifting veil that separates fact from fancy.

Information has been extracted, at times, from that darkening region of perception, and brought out into the daylight where it can be tested against what is known.

In the United States, a series of programs explored the use of the human mind to collect information that could not be accessed by any normal means. Collectively these programs came to be known as STAR GATE. Following the transfer of control of the programs from the Defense Intelligence Agency to the Central Intelligence Agency in the mid-1990's, the programs were partially declassified, and documents were finally made available to the public via the Freedom of Information Act.

The STAR GATE documents explore a wide range of interests. There is much to be learned about the secret machinery, and personalities at play within the American government. The STAR GATE files are more than a curious historical side note about the strangeness lurking in the intelligence community. They are an objective lesson in how the government deals with topics known to be too controversial for the general public, and their elected leaders.

Amongst the players in this bizarre cavalcade of imaginative explorers is an "aquarium" filled with "tricky fish."

There is a problem with the metaphysics of government players swimming the dark waters of the AQUARIUM.

That problem is known amongst some of the players as the CORE STORY.

There is a gap between the solid physical world of scientific theory and the nebulous mystical realms of the mind at play in the vast reaches of the metaverse.

The question is how to bridge the gap. What construction of human mental engineering can best connect these two disparate areas of human experience?

What could solid hard core facts possibly have in common with wispy, dream-like visions of intelligent interlopers weaving between the lines of reality and wakeful conscious experience?

The lucidity of the experience is the key to the metaphysical bridge. The exact rules of logical construction provide the necessary framework required to bridge the gap. Without a formal structure, all that remains is chaotic and ephemeral images, thoughts, feelings and desires.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Information bridges the gap between these worlds.

Information is the key to accessing the exotic areas of the human mind.

Fortunately, there are solid theories of information and physics that can be applied to solve the mysteries, at least in part.

Will all knowledge be amenable to access from the proper conceptual key? I highly doubt that is possible, even in part.

The "forever key" cannot be solved in total, nor can that key be turned to unlock the eternal mysteries generated by the metaverse, and physically expressed here in the multiverse.

The key is not constant; rather it is self-referential and eternally alive with change.

We wouldn't want it any other way: otherwise you would find yourself living in the "boring universe" and creative development would eventually cease.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Astronaut Gordon Cooper: Spies, Lies, or ET?

From the STARstream Research archives:

An unnamed source (we know who he is) sheds new light on a strange tale from U.S. Mercury Astronaut Gordon Cooper's autobiography, co-authored by Bruce Henderson.

Were the "higher powers" mentioned by Cooper spies, feeding him information in a counter-intelligence scheme, made up lies or fantasy coming from Ransone, or ET sources?

If you haven't read Cooper and Henderson's book, Leap of Faith, I highly recommend picking up a copy.

Here's one of the most interesting mysteries Cooper revealed, from Chapter 15, page 227:

It was December 1978. Valerie Ransone and I had been working for a solid year...The warning came to her during one of her 'transmissions.' She had no idea when they would arrive -- the telepathic messages she believed were from an extraterrestrial source of intelligence...

I flew to Houston to see Bennett "Ben" James, an experienced engineer and supervisor in NASA's Flight Operations whom I knew from Mercury and trusted like a wing-man...I now told him that it was possible that my business partner was in contact with "higher powers somewhere that might have better information than we do...

NASA engineers...quickly identified and, within days, fixed the potential problem...just as outlined in the transmission I carried in my briefcase...Valerie Ransone was not an engineer, had never worked for NASA, and wasn't involved in aviation. If this vital and very detailed information hadn't come from a source of higher intelligence that for some reason was monitoring the U.S. space program, then where did it come from?

We may now be able to shed some light on this tale.

According to an unnamed background source:

Valerie told me the same story. And a hundred others like it.

She was HIGHLY technically savvy...and while not an "engineer" knew more engineering self-taught (she had/had a genius IQ and read lay technical material all the time) than most graduate engineers...She also took me to a beach North of San Diego the same year. She took me there because she wanted me to see the UFO landing she knew was about to occur.

The source continued:

It was rather clear, very dramatic, and a lengthy landing and take-off...from the water 100 yards out from our vantage point, and then it came to shore, landed and stayed for about 30 minutes...took off, went back to the water and re-entered. The night was crystal clear with a full moon, for the first hour, and then, after the craft re-entered the water...it clouded up and started to rain.

However, there was a catch:

Oh, I forgot to mention...all the above (except the water and the beach and the clear sky followed by the light rain) was only seen by Valerie...who had to describe it to me. Somehow...no matter how hard I tried...I just couldn't see a thing see was seeing...that I just described above...from her observation alone.

There were lots of other people on the beach...but they also didn't appear to notice anything unusual.

Gordon later described seeing the same sort of thing, at another beach.

Dreams and the Universe Next Door

Dreams are the simulations of other worlds, often with very different rules of behavior from our waking reality. In recent years it has become popular for physicists to dream up the idea of other parallel universes, called brane-worlds, floating near each other in a higher dimensional bulk space.

Dreams flow in the subjective domain like parallel layers of thought. We personally experience dreams as a natural aspect of the human mental 'operating system,' just beyond the reach of objective reality. We reach out to touch them, but they disappear in the mist under the light of lucid consciousness.

From information theory, we know that they must have an ontological reality. All information, dreams included, must have physical representation. Dreams therefore exist in some very real sense, apart from the measure taken by our mental apparatus. Dreams are the simulations of other worlds, often with very different rules of behavior from our waking reality.

In recent years it has become popular for physicists to dream up the idea of other parallel universes, called brane-worlds, floating near each other in a higher dimensional bulk space. In this theory there is an extremely weak coupling of the brane-worlds coming from the exchange of gravitons -- quantum particles of the gravitational force -- which are heavily diluted by the higher dimensional space that they escape into. Physicists like this idea because it helps to solve several long-standing problems in physics, not the least of which is why gravity is so weak compared to the other forces of nature.

Gravitons are the quantum manifestation of gravity, which is the classical curvature of spacetime. Brane worlds are thought to be spatially flat and in parallel with each other, but all of the other forces of ordinary matter are confined to each brane world, and do not interact across the bulk higher dimensional space. We are stuck like flies on fly paper by the very forces that allow for our existence. Only gravity is allowed to pass between the worlds.

About ten years ago, Sir Roger Penrose invoked gravity as the determining player in consciousness, by allowing different spacetime curvatures to introduce a non-computable selection process into fundamental reality. At the classical level the brain cell microtubules discussed by his associate, anesthesiologist Stuart Hameroff, operate like multi-celled binary information processors, based upon the conformation (shape) of their proteins. The shape of each individual tiny protein structure is determined by an individual quanta of charge (the location of an electron) which in turn is affected by the selection of its path due to the shape of spacetime. One shape could be represented by a one, the other by a zero. Thus in the Penrose-Hameroff theory, the output of a quantum mind appears as a classical computer. Prior to the classical selection of a thought (represented by the configuration of ones and zeros) the quantum mind is in a superposition of different outcomes, or a thought may be found in more than one place at the same time.

All of this is conjecture, but real, material brane worlds might be detected by high energy experiments in the next couple of years, when we 'observe' the graviton leaving our brane world and entering the bulk. By the way, each flat brane-world must be less than 1/10 mm from the next. So it would be true to say that the universe next door is right at your fingertips!

Imagine an alien device tunneling via a wormhole into the brane world next door; the brane could serve as a base of operation inaccessible to the human race. Carefully controlled micro-wormholes could then be used to penetrate into the material space of our brane-world, nearly invisible except to the extent that the aliens desire to interact strongly with our material world. In this scenario the aliens are operating from an alien base (based upon the moon, perhaps?) but that base cannot be accessed by human technology, nor observed by ordinary means. If our minds are quantum-gravity related as in Penrose-Hameroff, then perhaps we might 'remote view' these alternative worlds via gravity fields across the bulk hyperspace?

Intelligence Agents of the Simulated Universe

One of my personal, favorite themes to ponder, in the 'fictionalized' version of our contacts with human agents of the 'real-life' intelligence agencies involved in 'real-life X-files' research, involves living in a vast, infinite quantum-computing multiverse of parallel worlds, that are running as simulations in the cosmic computer.

Never mind that several heavy-weight scientists and philosophers, like Max Tegmark and Nick Bostrom, actually put some credence behind that idea. Or that others have experienced effects (including some UFO-related phenomena) that might actually, in some vaguely real sense, appear to be evidence that this picture is the correct one.

If the idea that human existence might actually be a simulation strikes you as fantasy, I suggest checking out the new "Simulation Argument FAQ" provided by Oxford philosopher Nick Bostrom:

<http://www.simulation-argument.com/>

What is the Simulation argument?

The argument shows that at least one of the following propositions is true:

(1) the human species is very likely to go extinct before reaching a "posthuman" stage

(2) any posthuman civilization is extremely unlikely to run a significant number of simulations of their evolutionary history (or variations thereof)

(3) we are almost certainly living in a computer simulation. It follows that the belief that there is a significant chance that we will one day become posthumans who run ancestor-simulations is false, unless we are currently living in a simulation. A number of other consequences of this result are also discussed.

Six Minutes Past Midnight

Sharon Weinberger wrote an interesting post for WIRED's Danger Room blog, beginning with the American Civil Liberties Union Surveillance Society Clock website.

If the ACLU is to be believed, the clock is at six minutes to midnight.

If you ask a qualified expert in AMP -- anomalous mental phenomena -- or better yet, someone allegedly exposed to the 'extraterrestrial' version -- they'll tell you the clock hand is much closer.

In fact, it might be six minutes past midnight.

The subject of a surveillance society is worthy of a dedicated blog -- so here we'll concentrate on the more unusual aspects of surveillance in the 21st Century and Beyond.

Weinberger questioned:

"Reading minds through walls? My bet is on more than 10 years."

A BBC article cited by Weinberger discussed detection of signals emitted by human beings.

A more interesting, and certainly disturbing possibility, would be the detection and interpretation of signals corresponding directly to human thoughts.

BBC asked Dr. Tony Tether of DARPA -- the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency -- about the future issues we will face in reaction to emerging technologies:

"We ask the top people what keeps them awake at night," said its enthusiastic and forthright director Dr Tony Tether, "what problems they see long after they have left their posts ... "

And exactly what dangers await on the horizon?

"I'd prefer not to say. It's classified."

The PSI SPY's TIGER Tales

Loose nukes and Star Gate 9/11.
Warp drives and wormholes.
Vacuum reaction weapons.
Skinwalkers and more.

STARstream Research examines how the U.S. Government intends to leap beyond science fiction on a quest for the ultimate weapons.

Revelation of the NSA domestic phone record collection program is only the tip of the iceberg.

Evidence suggests that highly placed government officials are seeking to use the ultimate internet in the war on terror: the collective unconscious mind.

Psychic spies and the war on terror?

Forget about wire taps and NSA phone call records -- the privacy issue of the 21st century may involve direct access into your private thoughts.

Thirty four years and millions of dollars later, CIA documents reveal the amazing success and dismal failures of STAR GATE, the formerly top secret intelligence agency programs used to "remote view" information that couldn't be accessed by any normal means of collection.

STARstream Research has uncovered new files strongly suggesting that America's psychic intelligence agents were picking up information warning of the rise of Usama bin Ladin and the devastating attacks of September 11, 2001. The latest finds include a CIA released DIA document that identifies "Project 911" and drawings that strongly resemble Usama bin Ladin before and after the 9/11 attacks. You can view some of the original documents at the STARstream Research web site.

www.starpod.org

The STAR GATE files pointing to the 9/11 events were only the beginning.

According to British author and filmmaker Jon Ronson, following the 9/11 attacks, psychic Uri Geller was reactivated into the ranks of intelligence agency psychic spies. The 'spooky' spooks are likely used to track the movement of terrorists and weapons of mass destruction.

Ronson claims that Uri Geller was reticent to speak of his work with the American CIA, but broke down and revealed one interesting tidbit of information. Ronson claims that Uri told him that the name of the man who reactivated his mental powers for intelligence was called Ron.

Based on information provided to us by various sources, we strongly suspect that Ron is a former high ranking CIA agency analyst, previously tasked to monitor technology developments in China. The big question remains: which intelligence agencies might be involved in the latest version of a psychic black ops antiterrorist unit? MASINT (Measurement and Signatures Intelligence) is a likely candidate, but our present understanding is that Ron is working for John Negroponte at the Department of National Intelligence.

Rumors persist that America's DIA trained psychic intelligence sources are viewing mushroom clouds over numerous cities in the homeland. Taken in tandem with the constant rumors of loose nukes, it appears that the psychic spies may have been reactivated, at least in part, by the man said to have had a hand in shutting down the original DIA STAR GATE psychic spy program.

All in all it would seem that there is something about space, time and beyond that we don't understand. Researchers have discovered mirror neurons that empathetically fire in your brain when you are watching someone else get poked by a needle, for example. Somehow the neurons in a remote viewer must fire empathetically for information about distant events, removed from ordinary sensory detection.

Last year the Air Force received a great deal of flak from the press about a research paper they commissioned to examine the use of teleportation for military purposes. Apparently the journalists didn't realize that quantum teleportation has been an active area of mainstream research, ever since it was discovered by a team at IBM in the 1990's. MIT Professor Seth Lloyd has been researching the use of quantum teleportation for communication networks. Lloyd's support includes DARPA, the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency. Recently he also developed an interest in quantum gravity, the elusive theory that would unite Einstein's theory of bending space and time with the foundation stone of all modern electronics and atomic engineering: the quantum theory.

In the mid 1990's, Dr. Stuart Hameroff at the University of Arizona, and Oxford's Sir Roger Penrose proposed that quantum processes might be involved in the emergence of human consciousness. Penrose is well known for his work in mathematics and the physics of black holes. The idea of creating a synthesis of quantum teleportation and brain function quickly followed as a theory of telepathy. In the Penrose-Hameroff theory, the shape of switch-like structures in the brain are controlled by the location of single electrons, the quantum of electric charge, and these structures resemble quantum computing circuits.

Seth Lloyd's theory of quantum gravity is based on quantum computing circuits. In other words, Lloyd believes that spacetime is fundamentally a computational quantum process.

Is this beginning to sound a little bit like "The Matrix?" It should.

The STAR GATE legacy stands as evidence that the military will make operational use of anything appearing to offer a technical advantage, whether or not there is scientific support for the technology.

One unnamed high level source has confirmed that paranormal data was discussed by members of an elite government committee.

Strange events investigated by Las Vegas businessman Bob Bigelow's National Institute of Discovery Science (NIDS) have been the topic of discussion between members at DIA sponsored meetings on the threats of emerging technologies.

Dr. Eric Davis, author of the highly controversial report on teleportation commissioned by the U.S. Air Force, has been very forthcoming answering questions about observations of strange creatures and other anomalous phenomena made by NIDS personnel at Bigelow's Skinwalker Ranch.

The Skinwalker is a shape shifting being said to haunt this remote part of Utah near Salt Lake City.

Strange creatures, strange objects, floating black triangles, animal mutilations, disintegrated dogs, telepathic messages -- a smorgasbord of every strange and imaginable terror has been served to those unfortunates spending any period of time at the ranch.

The strangeness is reported in Hunt for the Skinwalker, by former NIDS staff scientist Colm A. Kelleher, and veteran UFO reporter George Knapp. In the Air Force teleportation study Davis examines potential scientific explanations for the weird phenomena, including spacetime wormholes, teleportation, and manipulation of the quantum vacuum.

If the STAR GATE program was any measure of the interest displayed by the DIA in this kind of weirdness, it wouldn't be surprising to learn that the Utah ranch has been the subject of at least a few confidential memos for the record. Perhaps the DIA would like to 'read in' a Skinwalker or two as part of their secret paranormal war on terror.

Shortly after STARstream Research uncovered files that America's psychic intelligence agents had remote viewed information warning of the rise of Osama bin Ladin and the devastating attacks of September 11, 2001, we inquired about on-going interest in the use of paranormal phenomena by the Defense Intelligence Agency.

We have received additional confirmation that anomalous mental and parapsychical phenomena continue to elicit high interest in high places.

A highly placed source, who has asked to remain anonymous, has confirmed that the strange events investigated by Las Vegas businessman Bob Bigelow's National Institute of Discovery Sciences have been the subject of discussion at DIA sponsored meetings on the threats of emerging technologies.

(Disclaimer: We have received a request to refrain from posting anything too sensitive that might already have come our way. Actually, we have received such requests on more than one occasion. That can be good for business, if some of your business involves revealing bits and pieces of formerly secret government machinery. It tends to lend an air of authenticity to the process of digging around between what is real and what is fantasy.)

One more caveat:

We are more than willing to acknowledge that a good portion of the information coming our way via the world wide web is nothing more than disinformation and unsubstantiated rumor.

Swimming in the Aquarium

Rumors are one thing - confirmation from a highly placed advisor to the U.S. government should be a different kettle of fish, altogether.

This particular 'fish-story' lends at least some credence to rumors of continued government interest in accessing paranormal parapsychical phenomena in the guise of advanced technology.

In other words, 'they' want to reverse engineer technology not of this world.

Weird Science

Of course, it is likely that some of the information we received is provided as cover for a larger set of activities.

Our source for this particular tidbit of information remains unnamed at his request, is a former officer with CIA/OSI Life Sciences Division. He is presently a member on a DIA sponsored committee tasked with monitoring developments in future technologies that might pose a surprise threat to the national security.

NIDS, Intelligence, Disclosure

In the 1990's, Bob Bigelow created the National Institute of Discovery Science (NIDS) to explore reports of paranormal activity. Recently there has been a lot of discussion of the bizarre paranormal activity at Bigelow's Utah based "Skinwalker Ranch."

Strange creatures, strange objects, floating black triangles, animal mutilations, disintegrated dogs, telepathic messages -- a smorgasbord of every strange and imaginable terror has been served to those unfortunates that spent any period of time at the ranch.

For readers curious about this strange 'threat' from spacetime and beyond, I suggest tracking down the book Hunt for the Skinwalker by former NIDS staff scientist Colm A. Kelleher, and veteran UFO reporter George Knapp.

A STARstream Research contact who teaches at the University of Utah, Salt Lake City, and is not prone to flights of fantasy, actually observed a floating black triangle above the mountains.

Something is out there, but we aren't quite sure what to make of all of this yet.

Our high level source confirmed that NIDS data has been discussed by members of an elite DIA committee, at least informally. Life sciences are probably more concerned these days with the avian virus, but never underestimate the appetite for weird and wild science, even at an official level. A list of names of committee members involved in this particular wild 'tiger tale' apparently was intercepted by the NSA, or so we are told.

On a private level, the NIDS investigation of the Skinwalker phenomena was flawed as a result of budget constraints. One of the lead investigators, a physicist who has recently worked under government contract, lamented the lack of available detection equipment. Some of the 'creatures' on the ranch could only be seen using ITT night vision binoculars. The lack of a color thermal imager meant there was no means of determining if the shadowy beings emitted heat.

This particular 'entity' was completely invisible to the unaided eye.

The ability to enter an environment without detection and interact with the local surroundings, would be of immense interest to the DIA.

Paranormal stealth was a driving force behind the original STAR GATE psychic spy programs.

Worse yet, the ability of an unseen entity to enter into American top secret government installations should send up red flags throughout the military community.

Covert psychic spying was heralded as a useful supplement to conventional intelligence gathering, but the real diamond in the rough was remote perturbation, the desire to use psychokinesis to affect the operation of command and control systems.

Consider the implications.

Physics tells us that all information requires physical representation. Information is no longer considered an abstract quality. Information is the driving physical mechanism that controls the national defense from the operation of electronics on the battlefield, to the bio-physical mental functioning of the Commander in Chief.

The metaphysical barrier can be crossed, when and where it becomes possible to detect the actions of the unknown phenomena upon known material systems. Actual detection of the invisible NIDS Utah ranch entity using night vision equipment may signal a new era in the application of weird phenomena for military purposes.

Science is a moving target, and there is never a shortage of researchers looking to upset the status quo. The problem nowadays for the would be alternative scientist, is that the mainstream is getting back into the game as well. Not only are some of the mainstream leaders discovering exciting possibilities in previously forbidden ground, but there is data coming in that supports a whole new view of man, mind, and the (multi/mega) universe.

Cosmic surprise

One of our favorite mainstream scientists is MIT cosmologist Max Tegmark. This man has probably done more for the idea of a multiverse of many worlds than anyone else in recent memory.

We recently forwarded links to several of Tegmark's papers to Mr. Paul Murad at the Defense Intelligence Agency. Murad runs a program on breakthrough propulsion physics that strongly features alternatives to the mainstream.

Murad responded that he intends to read Tegmark's papers. They are an eye opening experience for the uninitiated. It seems that it is not enough to consider invisible parallel universes right in front of our nose.

Tegmark claims, and presents supporting evidence in his arguments, that there are actually four different levels of parallel universes in the multiverse.

Is there more to consider beyond the four levels of parallel universes in Tegmark's description of reality? Apparently so.

Lenny Susskind, one of the expectant parents of string theory, the 20th Century embryo of a 21st Century "final theory of everything," is now promoting the idea of a cosmic landscape. It seems that parallel worlds are not enough.

The laws of physics, the rules that determine the structure of the universe are up for grabs.

At least one of our contacts, a Russian physicist has been writing about altering the laws of physics since the early 1990's.

Given that the laws of physics are encoded in the cosmic landscape, they appear safely protected from human tampering.

On the other hand, any experiment energetic enough to accidentally rupture the wall of our universe might create an unstoppable vacuum reaction, a bubble of total destruction spreading outwards at the speed of light.

It is well known that such a vacuum reaction would not only destroy the entire earth, the sun, and all of the stars in our galaxy, it would eventually destroy the entire observable universe.

In a new paper, Max Tegmark and Nick Bostrom examine this possibility, and conclude that it is extremely unlikely.

On the other hand, it is true that if someone else out there in the depths of space has already broken the wall, we will never know about it.

Since the reaction spreads outward at the speed of light, it is impossible for a signal to arrive ahead of the reaction in order to warn us of our impending doom.

In any case, according to multiverse theory, there are an infinite number of copies of all of us in the megaverse, so if we are destroyed, we will all continue on somewhere else.

Punching a hole in the wall of our world

It was to be the final experiment for all time.

The temptation of absolute power had overrun the wisdom of a prescient collective conscience.

Judgment day was at hand.

The experiment had only been intended to produce a small change in the laws of physics, in a local region of space and time in the laboratory. Such a possibility had been considered by the Russians, and in the 1970's Andrei Sakharov, the father of the Soviet H-bomb, warned that such research should be forbidden.

In the military industrial complex, there was no constraint on forbidden research, and in the black hidden sector of the mighty economic machine, theory became reality, and a device was completed. The intention of the experiment was to test the laws of physics in a infinitesimally small location within the device, and to observe changes in the emitted radiation. Unfortunately, the experiment failed to deliver the goods. Instead, the device accidentally blew a hole right through the wall of the universe, at a point where the laws of physics had been safely encoded in the false vacuum. An opening was created through the domain wall, spilling into the void of the true vacuum.

The sudden phase transition in the previously meta-stable vacuum supporting the universe was catastrophic. An immense wave of absolute destruction spread out from the source of the experiment, moving uniformly at the speed of light. In less than a twentieth of a second, the entire planet had been engulfed by the expanding vacuum bubble, an all-destroying nothingness, and was no more. A little more than a second later, had clocks remained near the origin of the destruction, the bubble had reached the moon orbiting the planet, and it too was gone. Roughly eight minutes later, the star that had preserved living creatures for some four billion planetary orbital cycles was consumed by the bubble, and within a few short hours most of the star system had been destroyed. No one was left to mourn the loss of their children.

Four years and a few months later, an observer probe stationed in orbit around a nearby star system suddenly went dead without warning, and ceased broadcasting to the home world. There was no warning. Just an awful silence that could never be detected. The silence and the wave of destruction were one and the same.

A few hundred thousand years had passed, and the entire galaxy surrounding the star system disappeared into the void. Hundreds of billions of stars had given up their existence. The life sustained by countless child-worlds had been lost as sacrificial slaughter to intellectual fallibility and pride. The void continued to expand, passing through the deep space between the galaxies. An observer gazing through a telescope looked up into the night sky, and wondered about the beautiful spiral arms of the closest galactic neighbor, some two and a half million light years distant. There was no way for the observer to know that the billions of star systems were no longer there. The observer had no means of receiving information about his own impending destruction.

A small clandestine group within government on the observer's world knew better. They had developed strange, weird parapsychical phenomenology for the purpose of spying on their enemies. Known as remote viewing, it defied all attempts at scientific understanding. Somehow, it seemed that space and time became transparent in some fashion and the opaque veil imposed by the universal limit, the speed of light, fell away from their mental gaze. They had tapped into the cosmic internet, a database outside of the understanding of mere mortal beings.

For the moment our tale must end. We leave the observer safely nestled within the blue and living planet Earth, with a lesson and a warning for any reckless soul willing to play with the fabric of space and time. Time is distance in the vastness of space, and the time we have remaining may be determined by how far we are from the phase transition of the vacuum. We may have billions of years ahead of us, or perhaps only fractions of a second.

Recently cosmologist Max Tegmark and philosopher Nick Bostrom took a new look at the possibility of catastrophic destruction of our world and our universe.

They noted:

One might think that since life here on Earth has survived for nearly 4 Gyr (Gigayears), such catastrophic events must be extremely rare. Unfortunately, such an argument is flawed, giving us a false sense of security. It fails to take into account the observation selection effect that precludes any observer from observing anything other than that their own species has survived up to the point where they make the observation.

If someone out in the depths of space has already punched through the wall, we will never know about it. Since the reaction spreads outward at the speed of light, it is impossible for a signal to arrive ahead of the reaction in order to warn us of our impending doom. In any case, according to the latest multiverse theory, there are an infinite number of copies of all of us in the megaverse, so if we are destroyed, we will all continue on somewhere else.

You might not take much comfort from that last statement.

Avian dreams: Mr. Smith goes to Washington

What emerged from the swirling tunnel was unlike anything seen in our world. Weirdly alien-neurological electricity, like a living sheath of charged blackness. There was the impression of massiveness, and as the intruder took form it was four feet across and six feet in height. A fluid perfect blackness took shape as a liquid black hole of living intent ...

This is a true story about a couple of "tricky fish" floating in the intelligence pond affectionately known as "The Aquarium."

Like all good fish tales, the size of the catch has almost certainly been exaggerated.

On the other hand we may have uncovered a tale of a sea monster or two lurking beneath the surface.

From the world of psychic spies, paranormal goat killers, and Skinwalkers haunting remote regions of Utah, something wicked and wacky this way comes.

Our real-life "X-files" mystery continues with the introduction of a few strange characters and even stranger ideas.

"Uri," I said, "please give me something to go on. Please tell me one more thing." Uri sighed. "Okay," he said. "I will tell you one more thing only. The man who reactivated me is . . ." Uri paused, then he said, "called Ron." From page 12 of The Men Who Stare at Goats by Jon Ronson...

Let us introduce one of the main characters in our Orwellian tale, a man we shall designate as Ron.

Ron has a job doing the work of the US Government.

His employer, an intelligence agency, won't say a great deal about what Ron actually does.

We do know more about Ron than many of his associates thanks to his brief appearance in the New York Times a few years ago.

More on that later.

Ron developed the reputation of being the chief phenomenologist at the CIA. Something about a file filled with strangeness called the "weird desk." It is said that Ron inherited this assignment from a certain retired CIA officer, who continues as government consultant in the critical area of reviewing advanced technologies with possible military applications. This gentleman holds the distinction of appearing in a photograph in the March 2006 "Reader's Digest."

Inside the alleged "weird desk" is the CORE STORY about visitors not of our world. The extraterrestrial tale has spread with some help from a group of present and former intelligence agents and military types in a loose network popularly known as "The Aviary." Another source with close ties to the alleged members of the AVIARY group revealed that the same CORE STORY had been confirmed by the former Director of Central Intelligence, Richard Helms, just prior to his death in 2002.

{ We wondered if the "weird desk" really existed. So did Nick Cook from Jane's Information Group. Nick asked us, and so we inquired. We contacted an associate of Ron's in the private sector, that we shall designate Mr. Smith.

Ron's activities are either overt or covert with respect to the so-called visitors, per Mr. Smith. I suggest they are covert, perhaps even with respect to his activities at DIA...As I have already pointed out to Mr. Smith, it is suggested that Ron is working as CIA representative at DIA on passive radar technologies and their various applications, which might include foreign stealth and of stealthy UFO's ...In other words Ron may be working with DIA on improved methods for tracking 'visitors' - a situation brought briefly to the public's attention by the Mexican report on invisible UFO's...

A MITRE document confirmed that a new kind of radar is under development, using personal computers.

We suspect that the new radar is a passive system intended to detect unwanted intrusions into U.S. air space. As for the nature of the intruders, that is best left to the imagination. There has been a great deal of chatter by persons in the know that the UFO question, in particular the military implication of violation of sovereign airspace, is taken very seriously. Unless there is a terrestrial explanation for the intruders, we must assume that those (sources) protected by classification have also accepted the possibility that this phenomenology is foreign to our world. As Mr. Smith tells us, this is a "gray area" - a useful term which implies that the interpretation is ambiguous and open to manipulation by the most powerful players.

Recently we learned through a back channel source with close ties to intelligence types in suits, that our disclosure of an interest in all things 'alien' by members of the DIA sponsored TIGER committee had provoked a split between some of the key players. TIGER is the "standing committee on Technology Insight-Gauge Evaluate Review." Naturally our first reaction was that anyone desiring confidentiality would not intentionally promote the fact that such a committee existed in the first place. Putting two and two together, and adding in a bit of raw speculation we obtain five. Our present opinion is that there is a rift and that the reference to the committee on an open email list of government employees and journalists was deliberate. The said result apparently threatened the continuance of the alleged UFO group on the committee. Sabotage might be too strong a word but that is how it is beginning to look from our end.

In 1993 the DIA STAR GATE project initiated a pilot study into the feasibility of using telepathy for command, control and communication for soldiers behind enemy lines, in situations where normal communication wasn't possible. If the government is serious about developing mind to mind com links, then they must also be considering the threat of 'foreign' developments. This is known as C^4: Command, Control, Communication, Computers. Telepathy merely takes this to the next level. It provides a command and control signal line for communication. The computer is the biological material inside the human brain. Wiggle this brain here, and that one over there responds. Wiggle hard enough, and perhaps you have created a remote control system.

Combine the ideas behind passive radar with telepathy, and you have a unique C^4 system capable of distinguishing the flow of unconscious information around the planet. The AVIARY is concerned not so much with the hardware of an 'alien' civilization, but with a deeper and more sinister dilemma. Take command and control of the flow of the collective unconscious mind, and you have taken control of the human race. A meme is an idea that spreads like a virus: an idea that replicates, evolves and infects like the common cold, moving from host to host. It would seem that the AVIARY's CORE STORY has revealed a virus of unearthly intent set upon the leadership of our planet.

Getting past the sci-fi implications of a paranormal C^4 scenario, we have to wonder about all of the smoke and mirrors presented by the alleged Avian virus. Will Mr. Smith make it in time to warn Washington? What about the White House? Are they ready for this? Are these folks for real?

A shape shifting intelligence had arrived on the scene for an unknown nefarious purpose. The effect was brief, but effectively shocking. Spun into our world the unearthly source appeared to grow an arm, and then a hand flowed from the shapeless mass, and reached out for the human's wrist. A strong tugging sensation gave way to total shock passing through the body, as the entity pulled its human host towards the tunnel. What emerged from the swirling tunnel was unlike anything seen in our world. Weirdly alien-neurological electricity, like a living sheath of charged blackness. There was the impression of massiveness, and as the intruder took form it was four feet across and six feet in height. A fluid perfect blackness took shape as a liquid black hole of living intent.

Lisa Randall, physicist and author of the book "Warped Passages," appeared on the "Coast to Coast" talk radio program with host Art Bell. We have to give Lisa credit for her reasoned and conservative answers to Bell's questions. Randall's responses highlight the core problem with any kind of weird and exotic phenomenology. She was very careful not to tread into areas that she knows cannot (as yet) be falsified, but are too far flung from the comfort zone of her peers in science.

The fear of flying too far, too fast, and too high, keeps the mainstream crowd's seat-belts fastened to the middle of the scientific curve. It was the thrill of flying higher, going farther, and progressing faster than the enemy, that drove the radical intelligence community on a grail quest for the strange and weird in the black world of psi versus spy.

The hard problem for any parapsychical research is how to discriminate between purely mental phenomenology and allegations of the physical manifestation of weirdness that might be amenable to genuine scientific inquiry.

A good example was an observation reported to me several years ago, of knives lifted by an invisible force and slammed into a wall.

The problem with these kinds of events -- if they are real -- is that their transient nature doesn't translate into scientific repeatability in a laboratory.

Some of the effects might be explainable as brane-world coupling, involving unknown interactions between our brane world and the alien brane floating in the universe next door. It's an interesting possibility, and is certainly worth considering.

Most of the time what happens on our brane world should be independent from events in an alien brane that might literally exist right in front of your nose. We know from the present state of the experimental art of physics that if alien brane worlds exist, they must be closer than a millimeter to our own brane. That presents the possibility of a sandwich of realities with the gravitational force passing between them.

The problem for parapsychical phenomenology is that our familiar large scale reality is mostly a product of the electromagnetic force. The electromagnetic force is thought to be confined onto our brane world, like a tiny piece of string with both ends stuck to the brane like bugs on flypaper. The force of gravity, which is free to pass between brane worlds, is far too feeble to interact strongly enough to produce the kind of localized effects often reported in parapsychics.

As new scientific possibilities appear -- such as brane worlds next door, or invisible alien nanotechnology -- closer examination finds that the real roots of the phenomenological CORE STORY are dug even deeper into metaphysical ground.

The latest incursion by mother synchronicity might have involved Vice President Dick Cheney's recent problems with all things explosive, including firearms and foreign policy issues.

That appears to be the underlying working hypothesis of Mr. Smith, as he makes his way to Washington in search of ears willing to get bent in the phenomenological direction.

Who knows, perhaps Mr. Smith's hunch is right and Cheney owes his recent problems to a collective solution building in the unconscious mindset out in the heartland?

While there is no denying that reports of physical nuts and bolts hardware attract the most interest, especially for the Department of Defense, our opinion remains that the phenomenology of immediate concern directly impacts the bio-physical thought structures of the human mind-body machine.

This is slippery ground and a fish out of water can quickly squirm their way out of hand.

Having cast our net in that direction, we have been wondering lately how many different kinds of tricky fish are swimming out there in the deep blue sea.

There are lessons to be learned from history, and the story of parapsychics at Stanford Research Institute in the 1970's readily illustrates the fish mindset.

In this cunning tale of fish catching fish we are struck by the similarity to current events.

In the 1977 CIA internal document, Studies in Intelligence, author Ken Kress describes his first meeting with Stanford Research Institute psychic test subject Pat Price.

When Price identifies Kress' employer as the CIA, he notes:

"Since I was then a covert employee, the response was meaningful."

In another previously classified document, the author questions the best way for the company to present themselves to psychic Uri Geller.

"...with appropriate backstopping, we could pass ourselves off as NIH officials...if we pose as NIH, the rationale for our interest is simple -- straight basic research."

In the vast internal multiverse of 'brain worlds' and 'cosmic politics' gone awry, we are left wondering about the aftermath of all things related to the STAR GATE.

Do we really need the brane worlds in order to comprehend the mystery? Perhaps Mr. Smith is correct that the phenomenology is more about the politics of our virtual realities than any 'real' extra-worldly presence. One might suspect as Mr. Smith goes to Washington, that a very surprised catch is about to be delivered to the White House front door.

We recently examined a highly confidential report detailing issues that might be of concern if ultra-high level technologies are introduced into society at large. The issues are huge and hang over the heads of nearly every living entity on this planet.

The technology in question is said to involve manipulation of spacetime and gravitational properties presently considered to be immutable, for all practical purposes.

The standard assumption of mainstream science is that the energy scales required to manipulate space and time are far beyond any conceivable human technology. The new technology must therefore involve manipulation of the higher energy spacetime structure using some form of lower scale energy control.

We have heard that this spacetime bending phenomenology is observable using very high voltages.

Moving on and inside the cloak and dagger world of new technological surprise, we suspect that the 'official' cover story involves recovery and reverse engineering of an unknown technology, suggestive of the crash of an otherworldly unconventional flying object.

The important point from our end, assuming that any of this rings true, is the high level of some of the players in this new ball game, and planetary disclosure and implementation of technology we consider beyond the moral capacity of the human species.

The level of secrecy for anything of this magnitude should be tight enough to keep the science under wraps indefinitely.

Interest at the DIA, and the CIA background of key persons involved in moving this issue before the committee, has left us wondering if a splinter group of outsiders managed to get close enough to hidden government machinery that they were able to ferret out some of the secrets.

The implication from sharing this technology would be nothing short of a major phase transition in the human species, and for society at large.

The religious implications are staggering. Indeed, it is likely that such a technology has the potential to exceed the present mainstream belief in the godly powers of the supernatural world by an order of magnitude.

We need to reemphasize that last point: this kind of technology may offer capabilities exceeding the general population's conception of ultimate power in a supernatural creation.

We are making an important distinction here. This does not mean that the technology exceeds the power of The Creator, as one might interpret coming from a religious point of view. We are merely pointing out the limitations of the human mind to conceive of either concept, once manifested into corporeal reality.

There is another issue that should be of concern.

A phase transition in the information alignment of the human species, due to the introduction of super-advanced technology, may splinter our species into two or more groups, creating additional divisiveness amongst the population.

Some may decide, on the basis of religious, moral or ethical values, to refrain from endorsing the technology.

Extremists may outright condemn the movement toward a new type of human being, and attempt to sabotage the transition point.

Given the enormous power claimed for this advanced technology, most direct resistance would be futile.

It is conceivable that some fundamentalists might access the power with the intent to direct the technology towards self-destruction. This is a primary issue that needs to be fully addressed before the population, prior to any genuine application of the technology.

Another serious concern is the integration of the technology within the existing world view and spiritual beliefs of the general population.

The leadership of this blue planet may be acting from deeply held world views that may have no basis in reality, but offer a supporting structure of personal direction and guidance. The most serious issue would be the ultimate nature of our religious traditions, with respect to the real hierarchy of mind, matter, and order in the multi-megaverse.

Divergent human trajectories, as allowed by this kind of technology, offer a means to satisfy a wide criterion for the place holder of the self in the multiverse at large.

Other groups may converge towards universal observance of a creator or principle of order, symmetry and purpose, and focus upon this source in their deeply felt traditions.

Insiders refer to the CORE STORY, suggesting the reality of the source of exotic technology.

The CORE STORY may require our collective acceptance that "all good things must come to an end," and that includes humanity and civilization as we know it.

If the CORE STORY concerns the final collective breath of the human race -- in this home universe, lost among the infinite metaphysical and physical multi-megaverse -- then perhaps we are now observing the first words in the final chapter of human existence.

The multi-megaverse is said to be limitless, if repetitive, and offers the manifestation of all possible worlds.

Let's hope that by chance, fortune or guidance from above, that we end up finding ourselves in the best of all possible worlds.

Can you catch a TIGER by a tale?

CIA leaks are a fact of life in Washington. Recently it was alleged that President George W. Bush ordered the leak of classified material in order to justify the invasion of Iraq.

If the recent CIA leaks are coming down hard on the intelligence community, we have to wonder: who turned on the psychic spy faucet?

Some of our sources recently opened up about numerous, previously taboo topics, including supernatural events at Skinwalker Ranch in Utah, and government interest in paranormal phenomena.

Surprise attacks come in many flavors. Often they are anticipated, but warnings remain unheeded, to the benefit of the enemy.

Take the recently formed TIGER committee, for example.

http://www7.nationalacademies.org/afstb/tiger_home_page.html

The TIGER committee followed from a DIA report on the threat of surprise advances in weaponized technology.

One source, a TIGER committee member, hints that more than human threats are of concern.

Apparently we struck a bit of a nerve when we publicly mentioned the TIGER committee, and comments made by our source that otherworldly phenomena had been a topic of discussion between TIGER members.

We pointed out that any discussion, formal or informal, added a certain air of authenticity to the strangeness reported by veteran reporter George Knapp of bizarre events alleged to have occurred at the Skinwalker Ranch in Utah.

Following our revelation of the TIGER committee, Knapp took the lead and asked Dr. Eric Davis, former Skinwalker research scientist working with the National Institute of Discovery Science, and later the author of a controversial USAF study into teleportation technology, about DIA interests in the paranormal events that allegedly took place on the ranch. Dr. Davis noted that he was a personal associate of our source, and confirmed that the ranch had been the topic of informal discussion by committee members.

We should mention that our source claimed this topic had been discussed, "ad nauseam," suggesting more than brief, polite dinner conversation.

We also received an email from Dr. Davis, stating that one of the physicists studying the phenomena at Skinwalker Ranch had received a warning in the form of a powerful, 'telepathic' message.

We assume that means he heard "a voice" speaking to him inside of his head.

We wondered if our articles, and George Knapp's interview with Dr. Davis on Coast to Coast AM radio, had provoked any kind of reaction.

Another well placed source reported to us that, "Ron did ask if (our source on TIGER) had been saying anything more about it. I said no, and he said good. So that might constitute a reaction of sorts."

TIGER, the Defense Intelligence Agency sponsored National Research Council standing committee on Technology, Insight-Gauge, Evaluate, and Review is chaired by Dr. Ruth David, of ANSER, Inc. According to the biography of Dr. David provided by the ANSER website at www.anser.org, Ms. David provided as the Deputy Director for Science and Technology at the Central Intelligence Agency from September 1995 to September 1998. She has received numerous awards from the CIA, the NSA, and the DIA. In addition to her position as chair of the TIGER committee, she is a member of the Department of Homeland Security Advisory Council and serves on the National Security Agency Advisory board. Dr. David is behind ANSER's homeland defense strategy and often lectures and briefs on the issues faced by the ever increasing dangers from terrorist groups and rogue nations. In 2004 the Department of Homeland Security tapped ANSER to create the government funded Homeland Security Institute.

Our undisclosed source, a member of Dr. Ruth David's TIGER committee, confirmed to STARstream Research his opinion that the existence of mind to mind communication, popularly known as telepathy, is an accepted reality. This source is a highly placed government consultant, formerly with CIA during the early days of research into psychic phenomena at the Stanford Research Institute. The early CIA research was focused on so-called natural psychics, unlike the official top-secret psychic spy programs that involved select military personnel.

Official TIGER committee interests include intelligence and threat analysis in the areas of new materials, nanotechnology, biotechnology, chemistry, electronics, communication systems, computer science, physics, aerodynamics and propulsion, with new weapons and spy systems in sight.

The arena of psychological intelligence and warfare is missing from the official shopping list of TIGER concerns.

Natural Psychics and the War on Terror

As pointed out in Forbes Open Source Intelligence, by Robert David Steele, "...the only hijacked airplane that failed to hit its target on Sept. 11 was the one where informed citizens were able to take direct action. It gave proof that our national security establishment is broken. A $500 billion per year defense department and a $50 billion per year secret intelligence community failed where a few brave citizens armed only with cell phones succeeded."

Closure of the formerly secret DIA STAR GATE program, the 'official' secret military psychic spy effort, is another example of national security establishment failure.

In the case of Flight 93, a handful of heroic citizens prevented Ziad Jarrah and his accomplices from crashing an airplane into the Capitol Building. Although military psychic sources had warned of this attack as early as 1983, there is no evidence in the records released to date that any action was ever taken to prevent this attack.

Author Jon Ronson, in his book, The Men Who Stare at Goats, wrote about the use of non-military psychic spies to track down terrorist activities.

If Ronson's sources ring true, then there must exist a collection effort to obtain information from so-called natural psychics in the population at large.

Mr. Smith, one of our contacts who often rubs shoulders with associates involved in intelligence matters, has mentioned a specific domestic intelligence collection waiver, a prerequisite for any domestic collection effort.

Mushroom clouds over the private psychic landscape of America

Jon Ronson, in his exposé of military interest in the paranormal, The Men Who Stare at Goats, reported that Angela Thompson, a remote viewer who had been trained by former psychic spies of the Defense Intelligence Agency, reported in 2002 that she was seeing mushroom clouds over Denver, Seattle, and Florida.

Similar warnings have been received by sources in the intelligence community tasked with the responsibility of protecting the lives and property of the population.

General complacency concerning non-specific warnings means that the very best action that can be expected may be rapid response to tragedy when it takes place.

There is a certain inevitability that leads to the acceptance of events as if the future must be written in stone, but the quantum theory of the many worlds of the multiverse tells us that the future is yet to be determined.

Mushroom clouds over the private psychic landscape of America

Jon Ronson, in his exposé of military interest in the paranormal, The Men Who Stare at Goats, reported that Angela Thompson, a remote viewer who had been trained by former psychic spies of the Defense Intelligence Agency, reported in 2002 that she was seeing mushroom clouds over Denver, Seattle, and Florida.

Similar warnings have been received by sources in the intelligence community tasked with the responsibility of protecting the lives and property of the population.

General complacency concerning non-specific warnings means that the very best action that can be expected may be rapid response to tragedy when it takes place.

There is a certain inevitability that leads to the acceptance of events as if the future must be written in stone, but the quantum theory of the many worlds of the multiverse tells us that the future is yet to be determined.

These so-called "black budget programs" are deliberately kept from the public eye and from most political leaders.

CNN reported that in the United States the black budget projects for Year 2004 were funded at a level of more than 20 billion dollars.

In the summer of 2000, I contacted Nick Cook, the former aviation editor and presently a key spokesperson for Jane's Information Group, the private international military affairs publication company. Cook had been investigating black budget super-secret research into exotic physics for advanced propulsion technologies. Cook was intrigued when I pointed out the apparent connections between various private investors, defense contractors, NASA, INSCOM (American military intelligence), and the CIA.

I had been monitoring electronic discussions between various American and Russian scientists theorizing about rectifying the quantum vacuum for advanced space drive. Several groups of scientists, partitioned into various research organizations, were exploring what NASA called "Breakthrough Propulsion Physics" -- exotic technologies for advanced space travel to traverse the vast distances between stars. Partly inspired by the pulp science fiction stories of their youth, and partly by reports of multiple radar tracking tapes of unidentified objects performing impossible maneuvers in the sky, these scientists were on a quest to uncover the most likely new physics for star travel.

The NASA program was run by Marc Millis, financed under the Advanced Space Transportation Program Office (ASTP).

Joe Firmage, then the 28-year-old Silicon Valley CEO of the three billion dollar Internet firm US Web, began to fund research in parallel with NASA.

Firmage hired NASA Ames nano-technology scientist Creon Levit, to run his International Space Sciences Organization, a move which apparently alarmed the management at NASA. The San Francisco based Hearst Examiner reported that NASA's Office of Inspector General assigned Special Agent Keith Tate to investigate whether any proprietary NASA technology might have been leaking into the private sector.

Antigravity Weapons

In the summer of 2002, an unusual story, by Nick Cook, appeared in Jane's Defence Weekly.

Cook revealed that the American aerospace contractor Boeing was investigating antigravity technology at their Phantom Works facility.

Now it can be proven that the American military was also investigating antigravity technology for weapons research. Evidence that the US Military had an interest in developing so-called antigravity technology for new super-weapons systems can be found in a 2001 Department of Defense budget document.

Buried in the obscure, "Annual Report on Cooperative Agreements and Other Transactions Entered into During FY2001," the US Army Aviation and Missile Command awarded funds to experimentally test superconductors for the manipulation of the gravitational field.

Heading this effort was Dr. Ning Li and her company AC Gravity Inc.

Ning Li predicted effects similar to the claims of Russian scientist Evgeny Podkletnov, which apparently had sparked Boeing's interest.

Of primary concern for the military are the claims of coherent repulsive antigravity beams, capable of disrupting physical materials. Recently Podkletnov has described new experiments demonstrating an "impulse gravity" effect. Cook and others have suggested that gravity beam weapons might be used in a "Star Wars" missile defense system.

According to the abstract for the Gravito-Electro Magnetic Superconductivity Experiment:

The ability to generate gravitational forces artificially would

... ..

... ..

... ..

... ..

... ..

... ..

... ..

... ..

... ..

... ..

The Sub-Quantum Bomb

The

... ..

... ..

... ..

... ..

"Such research should be forbidden!"

In the early 1970's Soviet physicists were concerned that the vacuum of our universe was only one possible state of empty space. The fundamental state of empty space is called the "true vacuum." Our universe was thought to reside in a "false vacuum," protected from the true vacuum by the wall of our world. A change from one vacuum state to another is known as a phase transition. This is analogous to the transition between frozen and liquid water.

Lev Okun, a Russian physicist and historian, recalls Andrei Sakharov, the father of the Soviet hydrogen bomb, expressing his concern about research into the phase transitions of the vacuum. If the wall between vacuum states was to be breached, calculations showed that an unstoppable expanding bubble would continue to grow until it destroyed our entire universe.

Sakharov declared, "Such research should be forbidden!"

According to Okun, Sakharov feared that an experiment might accidentally trigger a vacuum phase transition.

Could the wall of our universe be breached from within? The amount of energy required to punch a hole through the wall appeared to be enormous, and no known natural physical phenomena, even the most energetic, had punched through either. A recent report commissioned to examine potential dangers at the Large Hadron Collider, a next generation particle accelerator, concluded that we are safe to the best of our existing scientific estimates.

Others are not so certain.

Recently cosmologist Max Tegmark and philosopher Nick Bostrom took a new look at the possibility of catastrophic destruction of our world and our universe.

Tegmark and Bostrom explained:

One might think that since life here on Earth has survived for nearly 4 Gyr [four billion years], such catastrophic events must be extremely rare. Unfortunately, such an argument is flawed, giving us a false sense of security. It fails to take into account the observation selection effect that precludes any observer from observing anything other than that their own species has survived up to the point where they make the observation.

If someone out in the depths of space has already punched through the wall, we will never know about it. Since the reaction spreads outward at the speed of light, it is impossible for a signal to arrive ahead of the reaction in order to warn us of our impending doom.

At least one of the Russian physicists I had corresponded with was said to have been a former associate of Andrei Sakharov. He strongly hinted at new theories the Russians had developed which allow for the manipulation of the fundamental constants of nature, but he never revealed more than a sketch of his ideas. His claim was that a breakthrough was within reach, perhaps within five years.

Recent theoretical explorations may suggest another approach to the physics of the vacuum. Some physicists have speculated that the invisible gravitating dark matter could be the other side of the invisible dark energy coin, and that suggests the possibility of manipulating the vacuum for energy release. If a controllable parameter could be found to mediate the balance between the invisible dark forces, the result would unleash the vacuum energy of creation in all of its awful power and majesty.

If it were possible to control the dark sides of the force then spacetime, the arena where everything we know takes place, could be bent and twisted with infinitely greater ease than was ever suspected. This would open Pandora's box to everything from vacuum energy weapons of mass destruction (capable of destroying the universe!) to spacetime warp drives and time machines.

A quick survey of the international electronic archive of physics papers at <http://www.arXiv.org> shows that research into the vacuum of spacetime is alive and well. Most authors are independent researchers struggling with limited funding and resources, yet their theoretical results suggest that somewhere in Nick Cook's black world a major breakthrough has already taken place.

Most likely the United States and Russia are in the lead. China, France, Ukraine, Iran, India, Cuba and Saudi Arabia all have scientists actively pursuing the fundamental physics that determine the fabric of our reality, and are seeking the theory and the means to access the enormous energies locked inside of the vacuum since the creation of the universe.

Building a Dark Energy Vacuum Bomb?

Recently Dr. Jack Sarfatti, a controversial independent physicist warned, "If done too fast with a large enough Exotic Vacuum Object this would be a powerful bomb -- more powerful than thermonuclear."

For many years experimentalist Ken Shoulders has claimed that electrons are behaving in ways thought to be impossible. A new and previously unknown force appears to be binding the electrons at short range into clusters of electron charge. Shoulders calls these clusters Exotic Vacuum Objects, or EVO's.

Shoulders describes this as "a short-range force resembling a positive charge negating the effect of repulsive electronic charge."

Other independent groups of scientists working in several nations have noted that the Shoulders' short-range force may be a key factor in so-called cold-fusion reactions. Although cold-fusion has been the pariah of the physics establishment, the American government has re-examined the evidence and the possibility of unusual fusion reactions remains an open question.

One of Ken Shoulder's papers suggests nefarious uses for charged cluster technology based on EVO's:

The author can easily imagine a scenario where instructions are generated with enough clarity for about 1 person in 1,000 to perform the necessary operations to refine and store a gallon jug of electrons in the form of Exotic Vacuum Objects (EVO's) ... there is no doubt that this jug would be light enough to carry and be highly sensitive to destabilization of a catastrophic nature ...

Although Sarfatti hopes for carefully controlled release of energy from the EVO's, both Sarfatti and Shoulders warn that rapid release of a large EVO would be explosive, perhaps more powerful than a thermonuclear device.

Recently Shoulders claims to have produced what he calls "dark matter projectiles" in the laboratory. Dark matter is the elusive gravitating substance that makes up about a third of the universe. Scientists call it dark matter because it is invisible and can only be detected by the gravitational effect it produces on ordinary matter, which is a mere four percent of the known universe.

In a recent paper Shoulders connected his work to the data provided by the Canadian independent experimentalist John Hutchison, and Russian scientist Evgeny Podkletnov. Both Hutchison and Podkletnov have reported unusual gravity-like effects coming from their experimental test equipment.

Hutchison's work was previously the subject of a secret investigation by a team from Los Alamos, as reported by Nick Cook in his book, "The Hunt for Zero Point."

Shoulders refers to the dark matter component of his experiments as coming from the EVO's, or Exotic Vacuum Objects. A new force is required to bind electrons into these larger clusters, involving the quantum vacuum.

In the case of Podkletnov's latest experiments, a force beam is said to emerge from his apparatus and is capable of punching through materials like concrete blocks as if they were hit by a sledgehammer.

Ken Shoulders' work and his interpretation of the Podkletnov and Hutchison research is of interest on many fronts, including new weapons of destruction such as force beam antimissile systems and perhaps EVO-type atomic bombs.

Another potential application that should be of enormous interest to the CIA and the NSA is mentioned by Shoulders in his paper, "Projectiles from the Dark Side."

Shoulders notes:

A type of radar using dark matter projectiles...capable of exceedingly deep penetration into material objects leaves no

*...for anything to hide...Interaction of specially prepared
...EVO's with complex organic structures...raises the hope
...finding a high-rate, electronic growth process for morphing
...complex EVO like structures. Can the spirit world be far from
...?"*

Black Budget World

Even if the black budget world has yet to unleash the enormous potential of vacuum energy, there are signs that those in power may have begun to take notice.

Dr. Harold Puthoff, a scientist with strong government connections, has previously worked on classified projects for the CIA, is a major proponent of vacuum energy physics. Nick Cook's book, The Hunt for Zero Point, and stories on zero point energy in Jane's Defence Weekly have also brought attention to the dangers and military potential of vacuum research.

The American intelligence community financed so-called psychic spies for over twenty years and through four presidential administrations. It is highly unlikely that they would ignore the potential of the quantum vacuum.

Scientists argue over the details of the theory of vacuum, but generally agree that there is a potential for weapons of mass destruction.

I emailed Dr. Puthoff:

The immediate issue that must be addressed is a 'proof of concept' for the use of clusters of electron charge held together by the dark energy, as Rambaut's paper suggests the release of nuclear energy, perhaps even an electronic nuclear device scaled to catastrophic thermonuclear energy release. Such a 'proof of concept' should also be considered highly sensitive or even secret given the potential for proliferation should such concepts come to fruition. This was the case, as I recall, for the proof of concept of the original fission device.

Dr. Puthoff replied: "My approach considers Casimir vacuum energy rather than dark energy as providing the binding force, but the implications are the same."

I also emailed a distinguished Program Director at the National

"What is the WMD potential from a causal de Broglie 'double-solution' realist quantum theory?"

He replied:

If it turns out to be the critical clue that tells us how to manipulate magnetic monopoles or dyons...there is some Russian work saying that could be used to catalyze baryon decay...Let me translate. Efficient, fast baryon decay would imply the ability to use ANY earth matter as a nuclear fuel, with 1,000 times as much energy produced per gram of nuclear fuel as we now have with fission or fusion. I think I understand why there was some Russian interest in that, dating back to Sakharov -- But -- it would be speculative to imagine this would be any more of a WMD threat, say, than Tokomak research. Who knows? WAY too early to know. Even if it happens, which is also speculative...

In a special series, "What is Your Dangerous Idea," the always thought provoking on-line publication www.edge.org published the dark future vision of Professor Frank Tipler. Tipler also warns of a new kind of weapon of mass destruction, yielding the equivalent of a 1,000 megaton atomic bomb.

According to Tipler, "I have recently come to believe that the consistency of quantum field theory requires that it should be possible to convert up to 100 kilograms of ordinary matter into pure energy via this process using a device that could fit inside the trunk of a car, a device that could be manufactured in a small factory."

~~Handwritten text, mostly illegible due to blurring and bleed-through.~~

~~Handwritten text, mostly illegible due to blurring and bleed-through.~~

...MIGHT, SOME BE FURTHER...
...THEY...
...THEY...
...THEY...

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

The Chapline and Sarfatti pictures offer a more direct interaction with new physics than the brane-world ideas.

Sarfatti's personal vision is to find a means of using electromagnetic fields to couple to the virtual fields that control the shape of spacetime, in order to realize warp drive.

One wonders, could the black budget world have created some of the technology needed to explore and test these new realms? Without funding and vision, those in the private sector are limited to exploring the theoretical possibilities. Real money is needed to bring these kinds of visions to the test, but the stakes are so enormously large that any existing program would almost certainly be unacknowledged.

The discovery of gamma-ray isomer triggering has been called a key that unlocks the release of stored energy. My Russian contact described a key that controls the creation of new physics in local regions of our existing spacetime.

Controlling the creation of new physics is another way of saying that the fundamental laws of physics are not fixed forever but can be adjusted to create exotic new phenomena.

Human beings will continue to discover new and more efficient methods of mass destruction hidden behind the doors of our ignorance. Somewhere near the intersection of our fantasies, the imagination of creative scientists, and the real world in which they reside, are the keys that unlock the doors of our destiny.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

References:

<http://www.acq.osd.mil/dpap/Docs/FY01RPT.doc>

Agreement Number: DAAH01-01-9-R001
Type of Agreement: Other Transaction for Prototype
Title: Gravito - Electro Magnetic Superconductivity Experiment
Awarding Office: US Army Aviation and Missile Command (AMCOM), AMSAM-AC-RD-BA
Awardee: AC Gravity, LLD
Effective Date: 25 Apr 2001
Completion Date: 25 Sep 2002
U.S. Government Dollars: $448,970

Approved For Release 2000/08/08: STAR GATE CIA-RDP96-00789ROO0500190006-1

~~SECRET~~

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

I also wonder how many copies of the same have been intercepted by foreign intelligence services?
And why, having done the above, did the spy "get naked" for all to see?

The first part of the book is a history of the...
The second part is a description of the...
The third part is a collection of...
The fourth part is a collection of...

CHAPTER IV

The first part of this chapter is a...
The second part is a description of...
The third part is a collection of...

Birds of a Feather meet Fish in a Tank: The Ron and Dan Show

"It appears that Ron wants me to be a bus driver. He wants me to obtain a bus and paint it to look like an 'official' MTA bus, and go around the city picking up passengers at the bus stops, but instead of delivering them to their usual destinations, I will take them on an eschatological tour. When I told Ron that this might be construed as being illegal, he did not seem perturbed. Would I lie to you? Do you think for a minute that these were not my 'official' instructions from a person who seems no longer inclined to deny membership in 'MTA-12'? These, my friends, are your tax dollars at work. Imagine how many bureaucrats it takes to figure out how to capture a Tiger by a Tale. It even boggles the mind of the putative Conductor. Why, aren't you impressed, yet?"

-- Dan T. Smith

"Is it a ferret or a weasel that Dan will be adopting for the avian birthday? They are closely related, but they have very different characteristics. I always suspected they lived in a home near Towson. I am ready to purchase a bus ticket for Dan's eschatological tour, as long as I get to select at least one of the stops. Who else will join the adventure? Where will it end?"

-- Ron Pandolfi, September 30, 2000.

"You folks are delusional. I hope Ron doesn't distinguish this garbage with an answer. There are actually people who might believe you, however."

-- a mutual acquaintance of Ron and Dan

Getting Naked: The Spy Who Exposed Himself

When a former USAF Counterintelligence officer told a Defense Intelligence Agency TIGER Committee member he had received classified information from current government officials, our investigation revealed a trail of spies, lies and polygraph tape.

We have been asked by the spy who exposed himself not to mention his name, his government office, and his intelligence affiliation in anything we post on line. That said, most of you still curious enough to read this post already have a pretty good idea of who this man is, where he used to work (it was a very well known and sometimes notorious three-letter government agency), and his current assignment.

First, a few caveats about the following rant.

What follows is actually lifted from a post I wrote for a new Blog -- <http://stargate007.blogspot.com/> -- and is intended to provide additional behind-the-scenes reporting of the strange activity behind my official stories released by The American Chronicle, an on-line newspaper run by editors with enough intestinal fortitude to actually publish my writing.

It is presented here in a blatant act of self-aggrandizing promotion, and in hope of eliciting more interest in the strangeness the researchers at STARstream Research have uncovered at the highest levels of the U.S. Intelligence Community.

That said, what follows carries with it an intentionally ambiguous message encoded within the various oblique references.

For anyone new to this story, we suggest first checking out the "Spies, Lies and Polygraph Tape" series and then spending a little time browsing the files at STARstream Research.

Getting Naked

Ok, let's be clear about one thing:

We have been asked by the spy who exposed himself not to mention his name, his government office, and his intelligence affiliation in anything we post on line.

That said, most of you still curious enough to read this post already have a pretty good idea of who this man is, where he used to work (it was a very well known and sometimes notorious three-letter government agency), and his current assignment.

We'll deal with the former spy, the wisely conservative yet very public medicine man, in a future post.

If you have read this far, you likely suspect the identity of this person as well.

If you have absolutely no idea who or what we are talking about, we suggest checking out a few of our stories at:

www.starstreamresearch.com and www.starpod.org

Recently there has been a lot of discussion on various Internet forums about the Naked Spy, posting of his real name and government affiliations, and why his appearance bodes well for plans to officially disclosure what the government knows about the UFO phenomena.

We are more interested in why the spy got naked in the first place.

Imagine our surprise at being flashed, then politely asked to keep our mouth shut.

The Naked Spy enlisted a well known Private Investigator and associate to add additional support to his cover-up operation.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

We don't question the veracity of the glowing comments the P.I. made about the spy and his service to the U.S.A. -- "Unsuspecting Space Aliens" -- which by coincidence appeared in a computer printout superimposed over the name of the golf course nearest to our home base.

We have always assumed privacy was thrown out the window once we poked our nose into this sordid business, even if our role is purely voyeuristic in nature. Apparently we aren't the only voyeurs curious about the new nakedness, or why the Naked Man is interested in Alien Recovery Vehicles and Replicated Alien Machines.

So why get naked and then try to hide that fact by jumping back into the closet?

Maybe it had something to do with our exposure of the U.S.G. TIGER Committee and the UFO AVIARY.

A press release we issued last year over PRWEB has racked up more than 165,000 hits, with greater than 3,100 hits coming from media outlets. Since our recent exposure to the naked truth, PRWEB has grown cold feet and refused to release several of our recent PR statements.

Fortunately, there are other outlets on the Internet with more balls. Otherwise, just stay tuned right here.

Perhaps the Naked Spy's problem comes from over-exposure, when our stories appear in The American Chronicle, an on-line newspaper, and often rank in the top ten for Google News search terms like "spies."

Imagine the chuckles heard 'round the water cooler at the Office of the Director of National Intelligence. In the Intel business it might just as well have been the chuckle heard 'round the world. Flashing a few UFO junkies is one thing, but having your nakedness paraded before the world by the likes of the Washington Post or the New York Times might be more than this small operation intended.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

We have more bad news for those expecting to be flashed with nodding approval for their pet theories of aliens and UFO tales.

The Naked Spy has a history of exposing himself in the past, and it wasn't always about UFO's and extraterrestrial contacts.

At one time he also exposed his identity, location and activities targeted against illegal Asian trade operations.

In a previous decade there was a very public exposure involving a major newspaper and hearings in DC involving nothing less than impropriety and three-letter-leadership.

We doubt this kind of reckless behavior is anything less than setting the bait in a deliberately orchestrated trap.

Sorry folks, we suspect some of you have been taken hook, line and sinker.

When it comes to spy game antics surrounding the AVIARY and the AQUARIUM, its best to keep in mind that some birds eat fish.

This particular Cat (fish?) is sometimes associated with the Pelican.

You have been warned.

So what to do with those old audio recordings that demonstrate our naked friend's previous openness in discussing the bird games of twenty-some years ago?

We have the advantage that one of us has actually confirmed the voice based upon a personal meeting with the gentleman last year.

We question whether the recordings were made by permission, thus they languish in our archives.

We can confirm that in the audio interview, the Naked Man claims to have been a member of the US government's UFO Working Group, as told in former New York Times reporter Howard Blum's book, Out There.

And we are reminded, once again:

Those that ignore history are doomed to repeat it.

Is the Sky Falling Over Chicken Little?

His name is Dan T. Smith.

Mr. Smith's father, Harvard economist Dan Throop Smith, was the Treasury Department's number one tax adviser during the Eisenhower White House. He has two sisters, one that once taught in a one-room school in Montana, and according to Smith's Blog, lives without the luxury of television or the Internet. Mr. Smith's other sister, the wife of business executive Charles Leighton, is a friend of President George W. Bush's aunt, Nancy Bush Ellis. Mr. Leighton earned a Jack Anderson story in the Washington Post over a bizarre cuff link affair.

His personal meetings have included former and present representatives of the U.S. Government Intelligence Community, and their political associates, like Chris Straub, a former member of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence.

Clearly Mr. Smith moves, almost at will, amongst the elite corps of movers and shakers in the brain vs. brain game of "Spies, Lies and Polygraph Tape." His claim is to seek out "The Truth" about the "Best Possible World," and damn any and all facts to the contrary. His gospel is directed towards the powers that be, with claims he receives direction from a contact close to the center of the government's inner circle of knowledge.

Mr. Smith's activities are under new light as The United States of America awakens to the threat of information exchanged informally over the Internet. New rules are in place, and the spying game is changing rapidly.

And now the sky appears to be falling over Mr. Smith over his habitual foray into enigmatic blogging.

As reported previously, part of Mr. Smith's modus operandi is to subtly and overtly identify this party, leaving him naked for all the world to see.

The Naked Spy has been revealed, but is anyone paying attention, outside of the obvious parties in the service of foreign counterintelligence agencies?

To fully understand Mr. Smith's dilemma, one must travel back in time some twenty-plus years, to a previous enigmatic situation involving a great deal of confusion and finger pointing between intelligence organizations, private citizens, and a deliberate effort to undermine investigations into extraterrestrial intervention in human affairs.

Welcome to the twilight zone of artifice and entrapment commonly known as the "Real X-Files."

The background story began with a USAF Office of Special Investigations cover-up operation, a quiet conspiracy to silence a man interested in sights and signals monitored over Kirtland Air Force Base, and a top secret series of programs applying psychic powers to spy on American adversaries. The tale exploded shortly afterwards with the arrival of a package containing photographic copies of what appeared to be secret documents concerning MJ-12, allegedly a shadowy group of men united to address the "alien problem" following the end of World War II. A secretive government working group tasked with examining the implications of an alien presence suggested by the UFO data, including anomalous "Fastwalker" registrations in space tracking radar signals, followed shortly, as did an official FBI investigation into whether or not the MJ-12 documents were real.

And, for Mr. Smith, the story was about to unfold, beginning with his relationship to the Naked Spy. By coincidence, and according to a phone interview with the Naked Spy, preserved on audio tape by a researcher in Great Britain, the Naked Spy was in fact an original member of the U.S. Government's UFO Working Group.

To add to the mystery, during the phone interview, the Naked Spy also identified a colleague as the founder of the working group, a man Smith identifies with "CoR25."

"CoR25" tells us he only attended one meeting of the working group, a claim in dispute with the Naked Spy's testimony. Curiously the Naked Spy claims to have only attended the first meeting as well.

"CoR25" confirmed to associates of STARstream Research that he was fairly certain that alien contact had occurred, based upon conversations with some of the highest ranking intelligence community members he had the pleasure of knowing. We note this includes several former Directors of Central Intelligence.

And then there was that problem of the polygraph tape, and a dispute between CIA officers and representatives and the USAF. The matter of the polygraph tape was first disputed by the Naked Spy; then a later confession of faulty memory when "CoR25" confirmed the confrontation.

If a polygraph tape never lies, then USAF OSI Special Agent Richard C. Doty, who publicly claimed the U.S. Government had been in contact with representatives from another world, was telling the truth.

Alas, that issue may have to ultimately be deferred to the latest in lie detection scenarios involving functional Magnetic Resonance Imaging. Oh, and we should mention in passing that Mr. Doty was involved in the previously mentioned cover-up, and has been recently implicated by the Naked Spy as the man behind recent email forgeries involving John Gannon, a TIGER committee member.

That's TIGER, for Technology Insight Gauge Evaluate Review, a joint effort coming from a DIA request to the National Academies of Science under AFSB (Air Force Studies Board).

If Mr. Doty is the fall guy this time around, then what exactly does Mr. Smith -- aka "Chicken Little" of the now-infamous AVIARY of Intelligence Officers, united for (or against?) disclosure of government secrets about our extraterrestrial friends and foes -- see as the evidence that the sky is falling?

Is Mr. Smith being bamboozled, a victim of a Paper TIGER conspiracy, involving high-level USG game players with a wrapped sense of humor?

Or is Mr. Smith twisting in the winds of his own delusional meanderings, an annoying thorn that protocol requires be tolerated by men better tasked with serving their day job to protect a nation?

On the Trail of the Goat Killers

A few years ago British author Jon Ronson wrote a very entertaining book titled The Men Who Stare at Goats, about the American military interest in Anomalous Mental Perturbation, a scientific term for mind over matter, or psychokinesis.

Ronson's search for 'the goat people' began with a clue offered by world-famous psychic (and former covert CIA test subject!) Uri Geller.

According to Ronson's book, Uri said "The man who reactivated me is ... called Ron."

"And that was it. ..."

Anyone who is a regular reader of the "Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape" blog knows who Ron is.

Either Ronson didn't know, or wasn't comfortable in revealing Ron's identity, which was then left to us.

The reason for all of this, now, is we are still on the trail of 'the goat killers' based upon a few curiosities found in the STAR GATE files, including a project named PHOENIX, which is related to the mind over matter issue and, possibly, Russian work on torsion or spin fields.

Meanwhile, here are the other references to Ron, thanks to Amazon's on-line reader service:

1. on Page 12:

"... will tell you one more thing only. The man who reactivated me is ..." Uri paused, then he said, "called Ron." And that was it. ..."

2. on Page 13:

"... " And so it was that my quest to track down Ron took me to Hawaii, to a house on the road between Honolulu and Pearl Harbor, ..."

3. on Page 14:
"... My plan was to ask Glenn about his psychic spying days and then try to broach the subject of Ron, ..."
4. on Page 53:
"... "Big bonfires!" he said. "And guys with snakes on their heads!" He laughed. "Have you heard of Ron?" I asked him. "Ron?" said Colonel Alexander. ..."
5. on Page 248:
"... Uri Geller had his telephone call from Ron, but that is all I know about Uri and Ron. A number of second-generation remote viewers (..."
6. on Page 250:
"... again." "I know that," I said. I told him about Ed and Angela and Prudence and Uri and the mysterious Ron. 250 -9 el ..."
7. on Page 251:
"... THE EXIT "I don't suppose you know who Ron is?" I asked him. "I'm not talking about those remote viewers," he said. ..."

Measurement and Signature of a Psychic Spy

MASINT -- Measurement And Signature INTelligence -- is making news:

In a story posted by the Wall Street Journal, Robert Block writes:

A 2005 study commissioned by the U.S. intelligence community, which recommended granting access to the spy satellites for Homeland Security, noted: 'There is little if any policy, guidance or procedures regarding the collection, exploitation and dissemination of domestic MASINT.'

MASINT stands for Measurement and Signatures Intelligence, a particular kind of information collected by spy satellites which would for the first time become available to civilian agencies. According to defense experts, MASINT uses radar, lasers, infrared, electromagnetic data and other technologies to see through cloud cover, forest canopies and even concrete to create images or gather data.

It is interesting that psychic Uri Geller told author Jon Ronson that following 9/11, he had been reactivated by Ron, who we have learned is associated with MASINT.

Since Ron tells us that psychic spying offers no operational usefulness, whatsoever, he shouldn't mind if we provide a bit of AMP-based intelligence about his MASINT interests.

AMP-based results seem to indicate that Ron is more interested in photomultipliers and signal registration than psychic spies.

Perhaps he is in "active denial" about his interest in lasers and lensing, and post-traumatic 'negative' reflexivity between reading daily logs and non-disclosure agreements, budgets and other less interesting aspects of the trade.

... Lies and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

It is for strictly interested in "the nuts, and the bolts" of "alien dumpsters" [also known as UFOs] fly?

It does appear that he is motivated to solicit new "sources and methods" but are any of those sources 'psychic spies' as allegedly carried by Uri Geller?

A deeper question remains: exactly what is the measurement and signature of a psychic spy?

... Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

DIA to Increase Outsourcing of Intelligence

The Washington Post is reporting:

The Defense Intelligence Agency is preparing to pay private contractors up to $1 billion to conduct core intelligence tasks of analysis and collection over the next five years, an amount that would set a record in the outsourcing of such functions by the Pentagon's top spying agency.

We wonder if that includes contracts to perform anomalous mental phenomena intelligence collection, aka psychic spying?

Our best guess for an existing program, based on rumors from multiple sources, pointed to the National Security Agency.

Based on declassified documents, we know that past interest in the application of phenomenology (psychic powers, UFO human effects, etc.) involved the CIA, the USAF, Army, DIA, Navy, NSA, FBI, and others.

The DIA is also involved in the exotic propulsion program at the STAIF conference.

STAIF stands for Space Technology Applications International Forum.

The DIA's Mr. Paul Murad chairs the "outside the box" Force on "UFO-like" propulsion systems.

Intelligence Analyst Exposed by Washington Insider

Information in this story was originally redacted in response to a request from a Senior Government Official.

Leaked background information from Washington insider Dan T. Smith has made its way into a widely distributed email list, resulting in the public exposure of a top intelligence analyst.

July 3, 2006

His name is Ron Pandolfi, also widely known (thanks in part to Jon Ronson's book, The Men Who Stare at Goats) as "Ron," the real-life Fox Mulder of the CIA.

In 1998 Pandolfi appeared in a Pulitzer Prize winning story in the New York Times, concerning his role in the CIA investigation of a controversial missile technology transfer between Hughes Electronic Corporation and China. Today Pandolfi sports a shiny new DIA military email address, lending some support to Mr. Smith's claim that Pandolfi has moved to MASINT under Director of National Intelligence John Negroponte.

(Note: Previously STARstream Research was erroneously informed that a source had provided false information about the results of a polygraph examination allegedly discussed at a meeting between CIA and USAF personnel. Eventually we killed the original story when concerns were raised by a government officer.)

In an email addressed to STARstream Research founder Gary S. Bekkum, the officer had requested removal of his name and position, as, "These are irrelevant to your story and compromise personal and national security."

Following redaction of the sensitive information, an associate of the officer raised additional concerns about the content of the story, resulting in an editorial decision to remove the article.

New information has forced a re-evaluation of our original story. It appears that the eye-witness source that disputed details about the meeting had been unaware of the veracity of certain details, primarily regarding a contentious discussion over the results of a polygraph test administered to an 'AVIAN' source.

As a result of the new information, STARstream Research has made an editorial decision to re-release the original story, as originally written, with only the name and position of the officer redacted.

A series of allegations were passed by Mr. Smith to Victor Martinez, and shortly thereafter appeared in a series of emails distributed by Martinez to an extensive list of contacts, including numerous scientists with government email addresses, a Nobel prize winner, various journalists, a former Director of the CIA, and other former and present government employees and consultants. Several of the recipients are high ranking intelligence officials and consultants to the U.S. government in the area of national security.

Allegations coming from Mr. Smith include claims that bits of actual top secret information had been passed in a series of bogus UFO papers, popularly known as the MJ-12 documents.

At issue was the identity of "Falcon," an alleged member of the so-called AVIARY group of U.S. government insiders interested in the impact of the UFO question on national security.

Smith mentions a 1988 meeting at the CIA between Air Force Colonels Hennessey and Weaver and the CIA's Pandolfi to discuss questionable activities by ex-AFOSI Special Agent Richard C. Doty.

Doty is well known for his involvement in Air Force counter-intelligence activities involving UFO's. One item of discussion at the 1988 meeting was the result of a polygraph test administered to Agent Doty. When CIA analyst Pandolfi and Kit

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Green, a polygraph expert, disputed Hennessey's claim that Doty had failed the test, Smith says they walked out.

In an email response to a request for confirmation of Mr. Smith's allegations, Pandolfi offered the following opinion:

"It was Doty who claimed Col. Hennessey was the Falcon, and it was Doty who claimed Col. Hennessey had provided him (Doty) with UFO documents for release to the public. My opinion is that Doty personally forged these documents, that he used the Falcon name to cover his tracks, and that he had absolutely no professional or personal relationship with Col. Hennessey."

According to his official USAF biography, Colonel Hennessey is "a member of the Defense Intelligence Senior Executive Service, is Director of Security, Counterintelligence and Special Program Oversight, Office of the Secretary of the Air Force, Washington, D.C. He is responsible for security and CI (counter-intelligence) policy as well as management oversight of all Air Force Security and Special Access Programs, which includes ensuring the security of various research projects with significant potential impact on the defense capabilities of this country."

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

CIA's Ron Pandolfi on the UFO Working Group

The following excerpt has been transcribed from the recording of a telephone conversation, which appears to have been taped sometime around 1991 or 1992.

An associate of STARstream Research, who met with Ron Pandolfi in Washington, D.C. in 2006, is confident that the voice on the tape is indeed Dr. Pandolfi.

The recording begins as follows:

01:22 (Phone rings)

Pandolfi: "Hello."

Caller: "Could I speak to Ron Pandolfi please."

Pandolfi: "That's me."

Caller: "Mr. Pandolfi, this is Dr. Victorian. I am calling from United Kingdom."

Pandolfi: "Uh, hmm."

Caller: "Ah, Mr. Pandolfi. I am a researcher in the area that you have vested interest."

Pandolfi: "Which area is that?"

Caller: "Psychotronic weapons. UFO subject."

Pandolfi: "O.K. ..."

Caller: "I understand that I am addressing also to Pelican, am I correct?"

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Pandolfi: "Ah, That's correct, yes."

Caller: "I have very good information which has come from your senior friends about the AVIARY."

Pandolfi: "From my who?"

Caller: "From your -- other colleagues."

Pandolfi: "Other colleagues in the AVIARY, O.K."

19:16 [Later]

Pandolfi: "Have you read the book, what was that called, it was a book published, ah, last year, [the] Howard Blum book, Out There."

Caller: "Ah, well, yeah, I'm familiar with Howard's book."

Pandolfi: "O.K. Yeah, and it talked about like a Working Group. You know, I was a member of that Working Group, ah, when it started."

Caller: "Uh Huh. In DIA?"

Pandolfi: "Well, it was a ... Yeah, it started out that way, I was a member of it, but I, I resigned I guess after the first meeting."

Caller: "Who, who were the other members?"

Pandolfi: "Who were the other members? Well the meeting was organized by, ah, the first meeting was organized by, ah, Kit Green, and um, John Alexander. And um, it was about a dozen people there. But I don't, ah, you know I don't remember how it evolved. It evolved really quickly, but I left pretty quickly after the first meeting."

Caller: "But there was also a Navy guy in it."

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Pandolfi: "Maybe Maccabee, I don't know."

Caller: "No, no, another person, go ahead, from ONI."

Pandolfi: "From ONI?"

Caller: "Yeah."

Pandolfi: "No, I'm not, I wasn't familiar with anybody from ONI."

Caller: "Uh huh. O.K. go ahead, well what happened, they actually [garbled] it?"

Pandolfi: "They went on and I think they still exist, I mean, I think John Alexander still runs that thing."

Caller: "Huh. [dropout] Yes, I know, he's out of Los Alamos, I know..."

Pandolfi: "Yeah, I don't have his ... number."

[The left page of the notebook is almost entirely obscured by dense, illegible handwriting. The text is written in dark ink and covers most of the page area.]

The first rule is the fact of a Russian operative living in the United States. According to the intelligence agencies believe Montreal was chosen as it is the center of the Canadian Aerospace Industry.

There is a close network of contacts connecting the aerospace industry military industrial complex with the often wacky but interestingly serious alternative science network. It is not surprising that we find officers of the U.S. government involved.

This is the first rule. The fact of a Russian operative living in the United States. According to the intelligence agencies believe Montreal was chosen as it is the center of the Canadian Aerospace Industry.

There is a close network of contacts connecting the aerospace industry military industrial complex with the often wacky but interestingly serious alternative science network. It is not surprising that we find officers of the U.S. government involved.

The first rule is the fact of a Russian operative living in the United States. According to the intelligence agencies believe Montreal was chosen as it is the center of the Canadian Aerospace Industry.

There is a close network of contacts connecting the aerospace industry military industrial complex with the often wacky but interestingly serious alternative science network. It is not surprising that we find officers of the U.S. government involved.

[A few lines of handwritten text at the bottom of the right page, which appear to be a signature or a specific note.]

Investigation Uncovers Spy Game Surrounding UFO Mystery

Were secure vaults breached at Los Alamos, a USAF base, and other locations? A national security issue buried in a UFO tale has been 'interpreted' to an official under the Office of the Director of National Intelligence.

FBI Warning: Foreign Spies Seeking Sensitive Research

One of the reasons we suspect the UFO community has been under observation by U.S. Government Intelligence operatives is the close relationship between cutting edge research and members of the UFO community. No one knows when or where the next super-revolution in scientific knowledge will arrive, but one is almost certain: any major advance in knowledge will have consequences for the national security of the United States.

Consider, as an example, the consequence of the discovery that fundamental reality obeys quantum rules, which overturned the classical picture of scientific reality at the beginning of the 20th Century. Less than fifty years passed before the quantum revolution was realized in the detonation of the first atomic bombs, resulting in the destruction of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, Japan, and plunging the world into the nuclear arms race for the later half of the century.

Current research with the potential to revolutionize scientific technologies include charge clusters and cold fusion, quantum teleportation, quantum computers, vacuum research, negative energy, wormholes and warp drive, to name just a few. A discovery in any of these areas has the potential to easily dwarf the quantum and atomic revolutions, and seriously damage or even permanently impair American security.

A story posted by CNN:

<http://www.cnn.com/2007/EDUCATION/06/12/fbi.colleges.ap/>

... reports that the head of the FBI's Boston Office is warning top universities to be wary of foreign spies and potential terrorists.

According to CNN:

FBI agents met recently with officials at Harvard University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the University of Massachusetts and other schools to train professors, students and security staff on how to recognize anyone who might be trying to exploit research, Special Agent in Charge Warren Bamford said. More visits are scheduled as part of a larger nationwide program, he said. Bamford stressed that the FBI is not seeking to censor information or stop the free flow of information, just raise awareness.

In the CNN article Worcester Polytechnic Institute President Dennis Berkey was quoted as saying, "The general point was, if there is unnatural or unexplained interest in your research and you're nervous about it, here's how to be in touch with us."

There are indications that similar concerns exist about communication between foreigners and American researchers over the Internet. The potential to use the Internet to gather intelligence and to pass disinformation to the enemy appears to have drawn attention to discussion forums and email groups.

A recent example involved contact from a man claiming to be an Iranian student interested in wormhole technology and the STAIF program on advanced propulsion technologies.

STARstream Research often has contact with foreign scientists in China and Russia about their on-going efforts in alternative research, as well as maintaining contact with Americans doing similar research.

Recently another journalist working in the alternative technology area, who claims to have been approached by military intelligence from Fort Meade, wrote to us:

"Whether or not you want to believe it, you're an intelligence asset."

Tales of Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape

Numerous violations of trust paved the trail that brought us to the heart of this tale, a sordid affair of betrayal, disinformation, and sheer confusion.

Caught up by the spinning web of a viral, self-organizing and self-reproducing mind-game born within the dark confines of the intelligence community, a handful of well placed intelligence advisers are discretely moving towards public disclosure. Each man presents a personal clouded vision of the shattered pieces of a dark puzzle, begging for life in an assembled nightmare of the future.

The enigma at the heart of the CORE STORY is embedded within a belief system fostered by very intelligent, well educated professionals -- men tasked with the security and safety of a nation -- men who cannot come forward directly, but by necessity reside under the cover offered to deep background sources.

In the midst of the roiling turmoil we have been handed a shocking revelation:

There has been talk at the highest levels of the U.S. Government about an otherworldly intelligence, and contact was with physical, materially real entities.

We have been informed that this comes from the direct testimony of senior government officers.

One name that was passed was the late Richard Helms, former Director of Central Intelligence.

Helms allegedly confirmed to an unwitting source at the National Research Council the same CORE STORY of physical contact with another world.

Apparently rumor respects no rank in the intelligence community.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Perhaps the real shock is that the nation's former top intelligence executive, a man once charged with oversight of the entire intelligence community, could so readily accept such a tall tale as fact.

However, there is far more to this tale than the CORE STORY.

The story is broad and infects all aspects of the intelligence and security of the nations of this world. It even plays a role in the current crisis with Iran over nuclear technology, albeit indirectly.

Regardless of the truth of the rumor wrapped inside the CORE STORY, there is a race between the nations to discover the next level of the intelligence game.

The next level is firmly supported by the CORE STORY, because it involves tampering with the human mind and forcing a confrontation with an alien environment.

This is the landscape where the intelligence game becomes the key objective and counterintelligence operations play out as the nemesis of morality.

Confirmation of high-level government belief in physical contact with 'higher intelligence' remains a signature event, nonetheless.

STARstream Research intends to maintain an on-going investigation and relationship with sources to further explore the origin of the CORE STORY, and the intersection of the key players with earthly intelligence operations.

The earthly intersection leads directly to Dr. Ronald S. (Ron) Pandolfi, a former CIA analyst brought into the public limelight many years ago in a story by Jeff Gerth published by the New York Times.

Pandolfi is no stranger to controversy, having produced a 1996 National Intelligence Estimate (NIE) that warned of the transfer of sensitive missile information from Hughes Electronic

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Corporation to China. Pandolfi's NIE was ultimately rejected, but questions over the politics that killed the report resulted in Pandolfi's testimony at a closed session of the Senate Intelligence Committee.

Dr. Pandolfi's interests continue to focus on the dangers of advanced technology.

Based upon his semi-public presence as communicated over the Internet, Pandolfi appears to have been caught with his fingers in the alternative science and technology cookie-jar.

Whether or not Dr. Pandolfi's interests are merely an overt expression of his personal interest in science-fiction technology, or originate from a deeper covert monitoring of the scientific underground, remains to be determined.

In the past Dr. Pandolfi requested that we withhold information about his current activities within the intelligence community. Pandolfi even expressed some concern about email messages that mentioned his name.

In October of 2004 he wrote to us, "I am an open employee meaning there is no secret concerning my employment with CIA. That does not mean I endorse Dan [Dan T. Smith, an associate of Pandolfi in the private sector] or others spreading my name over e-mail distributions. Please assist by keeping my name out of your e-mails. Thanks."

We found this curious on several fronts.

Dr. Pandolfi's activities are easily accessible to anyone with an Internet connection and the Google search engine. For example, following the Hughes report, Dr. Pandolfi organized an allegedly 'private' group called TACP, the Technology Assisted Counter-Poaching initiative, based in Arlington, Virginia.

The TACP 'network' involved the use of advanced surveillance systems, ostensibly to help protect an endangered species against poaching by organized crime. Pandolfi assembled an impressive staff that included experts in physics based simulation, communication systems engineering, and a senior systems analyst and specialist in Russian sensor technologies.

Whether or not 'wild tiger' survival was truly the goal of the short lived appearance of the TACP network on the world wide web, it soon became apparent that Pandolfi was often associated with the big cats. TIGER -- Technology Insight-Gauge, Evaluate and Review -- an official USAF DIA collaboration, includes several former and present associates of Pandolfi from his days at CIA.

Pandolfi was also cited on line in a MITRE document, as the CIA liaison to the National Intelligence Council. The subject of MITRE document involved passive radar, an indirect means of detecting and identifying flying objects.

The largest volume of information on Dr. Pandolfi's more exotic interests can be found in countless emails, often copied and forwarded over Internet distribution lists. On occasion Dr. Pandolfi makes a brief personal appearance to comment about the characters behind the varied discussions on the theoretical and philosophical aspects of potential exotic technologies.

Unlike Valerie Plame's cover as a covert agent of the CIA, Pandolfi apparently prefers to play his role in the spy games by remaining hidden in plain sight.

Citizen Dan Smith remains Dr. Pandolfi's most visible outlet to express his penchant for the strange and unusual. Mr. Smith tells us his father was Dan Throop Smith, a Harvard economist, and one time tax adviser to the Treasury Department under the Eisenhower Administration. Smith often muses over a Washington Post story about his brother-in-law, Charles Leighton, and a fiasco involving cuff-links from President George Herbert Walker Bush, the one time Director of Central Intelligence. In his pre-presidential days as the DCI, Bush had been briefed about the early efforts of STAR GATE, a generic program name for psychic research and operations involving the intelligence community.

Mr. Smith also questioned Pandolfi's interests. In the early days of his association with the good doctor from CIA, Smith says he consulted with Chris Straub, then ranking member for the Senate Intelligence Committee.

The appearance of Pandolfi at one 1995 meeting likely set the stage for the actions of the Senate Intelligence Committee a few years later, when CIA killed Pandolfi's National Intelligence Estimate warning of the danger of information transfer between Hughes and China.

Smith confirmed to STARstream Research that he had reported his relationship with Pandolfi to the FBI on two occasions. The second time around, he met with a female agent outside of the offices of the Baltimore FBI, to report that Pandolfi had prior knowledge of the events of September 11th, 2001.

Smith also claims to have been indirectly responsible for a previous investigation of Pandolfi, in which Pandolfi was cleared of any wrong doing. According to Smith, the investigation lasted six months at a cost to taxpayers of a hundred-thousand dollars.

STARstream Research had also been in contact with the Minneapolis office of the FBI about our contacts with parties active in the intelligence community.

A Special Agent from the Joint Counterterrorism Task Force responded, "Please call me if with your concerns on this issue. You are correct in that there are some guidelines that must be followed for contact but, I am not comfortable detailing those here. "

One particular breach of confidentiality stands out because the original source is claimed to have been Pandolfi himself. This involves information 'requested in an official capacity' that appears to have been deliberately leaked to Dan Smith, and passed to other associates.

All of this merely sets the stage for a new act, one that intersects the world of strange and unusual, and the mundane problems faced by doing business in the spy trade.

Dumb and Dumber? Maybe Not So Dumb After All

"Because hiding secrets in a meth lab is just too secure..."

-- Noah Shachtman, WIRED Danger Room Blog

It's a fact: a high-level person in the United States Government Intelligence Community lectured me by email about "revealing sources and methods" and in particular, about revealing methods used to collect information that has potential use for intelligence.

At STARstream Research, we have observed a pattern over the years of careless disregard for national security. Recently the media have reported several cases of a blatant lapse of basic protocol involving secrets of the US Government.

We have also heard rumors of similar 'lapses' of security involving former and present intelligence persons of the United States.

It does appear that we becoming a nation of the dumb, and dumber, at least where our most sensitive information is concerned.

The latest fiasco involved emailing top secret data about nuclear weapons over an open network.

According to the story by Associated Press writers Baker and Talhelm:

The breach occurred when a consultant to the LANS board, Harold Smith, sent an e-mail containing highly classified, non-encrypted nuclear weapons information to several board members, who forwarded it to other members, according to a Washington aide familiar with the investigation who asked not to be named because the information is sensitive.

Last year, we heard from members of the intelligence grapevine that concerns had been raised about Internet activities -- yes, including email lists and private messages -- that were being used to pass secret information encoded in discussions of 'far-out' topics like UFOs, aliens, and disclosure of government secrets.

We suspect -- and this based purely on personal speculation -- one method lurking in the 'spooky' intelligence arsenal requires passing bogus disinformation to the enemy in the form of leaks and disclosures, sealed by plausible deniability.

The Baker/Talhelm article quotes National Nuclear Security Administration spokesman Bryan Wilkes:

"As a matter of federal law, we don't confirm, deny or acknowledge allegations of security violations."

Dumb and Dumber?

Maybe, not so dumb after all.

From the WIRED DANGER ROOM:

Military Report: Secretly 'Recruit or Hire Bloggers'

I've been writing about this for a while:

The Intelligence Community is interested in co-opting blogs and web sites for counter-intelligence purposes.

One prominent web site owner was approached about becoming a "spy" based upon his unique position as a journalist interacting with foreign and domestic scientists, among other "persons of interest."

And then there is the mystery of why a Senior Intelligence Official would deliberately leak email messages to a newsgroup.

Now comes a story at WIRED Magazine's DANGER ROOM blog about a military report to secretly "recruit or hire bloggers."

We are reminded of an admonition from the Senior Intelligence Official that "methods are more important than sources."

A study, written for U.S. Special Operations Command, suggested "clandestinely recruiting or hiring prominent bloggers."

This 2006 report for the Joint Special Operations University, "Blogs and Military Information Strategy," offers a third approach -- co-opting bloggers, or even putting them on the payroll. "Hiring a block of bloggers to verbally attack a specific person or promote a specific message may be worth considering," write the report's co-authors, James Kinniburgh and Dorothy Denning.

The first part of the manuscript is a list of names and dates, which appears to be a record of some kind of transactions or events. The entries are written in a cursive hand
 and are somewhat difficult to read. The list includes names such as "John",
 "Mary", and "James",
 along with dates ranging from 1780 to 1800.

The second part of the manuscript is a more detailed account of the events mentioned in the first part. It is written in a similar cursive hand and provides a narrative of the transactions or events. The text is somewhat faded and difficult to read in places, but it appears to be a continuation of the record.

The third part of the manuscript is a list of names and dates, which appears to be a record of some kind of transactions
 or events. The entries are written in a cursive hand
 and are somewhat difficult to read. The list includes names such as "John",
 "Mary", and "James",
 along with dates ranging
 from 1780 to 1800.

High Strangeness, or Strange Goings on in High Places?

Recently there has been some discussion of the non-technological phenomenological solution.

STARstream Research launched the "Invasion: Earth?" series to examine the question of intelligent interference in human affairs. In the next phase of the series we will examine the possibility that a 'viral' information 'infection' has been largely responsible for reports of strange phenomena by otherwise intelligent, and credible observers. In recent years, and largely due to the Freedom of Information Act, we have learned of extensive government interest in the application of phenomenology, primarily as an addition to the espionage toolkit. When we discovered that weirdness had taken center stage at the highest levels of our government, we were left wondering if this business was about high strangeness, or strange goings on in high places.

Our source close to the center of strangeness in Washington, D.C. tells us that phenomenology is elusive and ephemeral. You cannot use technology to track the weirdness, you can only track the personalities that interact with the phenomena. It appears that for certain special individuals, a 'Star Gate' briefly opens the doorway to another realm of existence, then quickly closes to prevent investigators from gaining access.

I have been reviewing the history of ten years of efforts to reproduce the alleged behavior of unconventional and 'unidentified flying objects' by the military industrial complex in the western world.

There are a few examples offering sufficient intrigue worthy of investigation. Among the notable attempts are so-called antigravity devices, coming from research conducted by Podkletnov and Ning Li, as well as other alternative efforts such as Dr. Jim Corum's rectification force. Curiously these three individuals appear to have withdrawn into relative obscurity.

Other efforts are known to us, but remain in our archives for future exploration.

Perhaps the technological solution remains too near to merely human ideals. Although experts like Oxford's David Deutsch have produced compelling arguments supporting the intimate relationship between the nature of reality and advancing technology, many phenomenologists are quick to point to the psycho-physical factors of the human mind.

The problem comes into focus when one considers the simulation solution: Intelligent Beings may operate from a different layer of existence, with the power to alter the laws of the physics to suit their purpose.

Does this mean that UFO's are merely glitches in the underlying operating system of reality? Or are they 'windows' opening up into our world under the auspices of the true players of the game? The supernatural implications, if taken literally, are staggering for the intelligence community.

This new vision of the phenomena, the government, and the destiny of the world forms a synthesis beyond the ordinary view of consensus reality.

"Follow the money" translates into "follow the memes" -- follow the patterns of interaction amongst the human players and their "phenomenological handlers."

As a dark and sinister force moves across the world to secure an ending to their liking, we wonder why it often appears born of human intent. Is there room for the human mind to be completely replaced by the alien intelligentsia required by the simulation hypothesis?

Our man in Washington is fond of telling us that the phenomenology merely serves to demonstrate the failure of our technological and scientific endeavor to rule the world. One need only take the temperature of the times to realize the consequences of our failure of nerve to take a leap of faith into the phenomenological solution.

SERPO the SOAP OPERA by Anonymous

A certain former spy likes to refer to the UFO - ET - alien visitation rumor mill as the "soap opera."

To paraphrase this gentleman, "My public and private involvement is over; unless I am guaranteed abject and permanent anonymity."

As in SOAP OPERA ANONYMOUS.

Or SOAP OPERATIONS ANONYMOUS.

Another curious coincidence comes to mind:

The letters found in "Soap Opera" are "S,O,P,E,R, and A."

Which also map nicely to SERPO A-nonymous.

You see, the SERPO tale comes from a source known as "Anonymous," which is clearly explained at the serpo.org website:

"The information began to be released on 2 November 2005 by a retired senior official within the US Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA) who calls himself 'Anonymous'. Until he chooses to make his name known, this is the way he will be represented here. Anonymous reports that he is not acting individually and is part of a group of six DIA personnel working together as an alliance: three current and three former employees. He is their chief spokesman. Of course we know the identity of the first gentleman seeking "total anonymity."

And we know a little about the spies, lies, and polygraph tapes behind the tales.

More on that later. Stay tuned.

SERPO: Anagram for SPORE

Here's another interesting 'coincidence' I discovered about SERPO:

SERPO is an anagram of SPORE.

Wikipedia defines "spore":

In biology, a spore is a reproductive structure that is adapted for dispersion and surviving for extended periods of time in unfavorable conditions ... Once conditions are favorable, the spore can develop into a new organism using mitotic division, producing a multicellular gametophyte, which eventually goes on to produce gametes.

If we forget the "soap opera" attached to the SERPO saga, it is interesting to consider the idea of extraterrestrial panspermia:

Panspermia is the hypothesis that "seeds" of life exist already in the Universe, that life on Earth may have originated through these "seeds", and that they may deliver or have delivered life to other habitable bodies.

One item that I cannot immediately dismiss comes from a highly placed source -- an informal confirmation that extraterrestrial biological contact has taken place three different times in recent Earth history.

(According to the source, the visitations took place in 1947, 1983, and 1992.)

The typical assumption involves alien spacecraft (UFOs) and humanoid-insectoid-reptilian entities.

Perhaps ET arrived by drifting to Earth, sent long ago on a mission to seek out human hosts?

NASA is already considering the idea of swarms based on nanotechnology. Intelligence agencies are conducting research into hybrid insect-machines. The trend is to work at smaller and smaller scales combining lessons from technological innovation with lessons from nature.

Professor Michio Kaku has even suggested nano-scale wormholes as transport for extremely advanced ET:

Perhaps we could send only atom-sized particles through a wormhole. In this case, this civilization may embark upon the ultimate solution: passing an atomic-sized 'seed' through the wormhole capable of regenerating the civilization on the other side. This process is commonly found in nature. The seed of an oak tree, for example, is compact, rugged and designed to survive a long journey and live off the land. It also contains all the genetic information needed to regenerate the tree ... An advanced civilization might want to send enough information through the wormhole to create a 'nanobot,' a self-replicating atomic-sized machine, built with nanotechnology.

SERPO = SPORE? A reproductive structure that is adapted for dispersion and surviving for extended periods of time in unfavorable conditions.

Or, perhaps, a reproductive "nanobot" biological-machine hybrid?

Or, more likely: a reproductive viral meme adapted for dispersion and surviving for extended periods of time on the Internet.

What do you think?

DIA Threat Assessment: Mind Control is REAL

Among the STAR GATE files released by the CIA under the Freedom of Information Act are reports commissioned by the Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA) on various topics of interest.

One report includes an assessment of "mind control" research.

(Bear in mind this report was issued in 1978. It provides a revealing picture of military cold war paranoia from that time period.)

The report includes a chart which concludes that "partial to total behavior control" was already "operational"; energy fields could be utilized to produce "non-detectable" control, fright, disorientation and debilitation; some of these technologies were already "experimentally operational at moderate range"; "psychosurgery" could produce mind control with "implants" for "complete external control" and production of "extraordinary memory behaviors, etc." with a potential for "robot-like behavior" or complete control of "small groups" within "2 to 15" years.

The Distribution List for this report was extensive, including DoD and Joint Activities, U.S. Army, U.S. Navy, U.S. Air Force, Unified and Specific Commands, as well as CIA and NSA and the Dept. of Energy and the State Dept.

A quick review of basic rules of journalism can be found in the guidelines used by The Washington Post:

When we use an unnamed source, we are asking our readers to take an extra step to trust the credibility of the information we are providing. We must be certain in our own minds that the benefit to readers is worth the cost in credibility.

If a particular source refuses to allow us to identify him or her, the reporter should consider seeking the information elsewhere.

We must strive to tell our readers as much as we can about why our unnamed sources deserve our confidence. Our obligation is to serve readers, not sources.

Where are the real documents, containing information that might be verified, to a degree of plausibility?

Who are the sources?

Who are the individuals alive today that allegedly attended the meeting?

Why should we even consider such a poorly documented tale from a dubious unnamed source?

At STARpod.org we seek to verify information from open source government documents, multiple independent sources, etc.

Where is the use of "alleged" in any of the SERPO information being promoted as "real" and distributed on the Internet?

SERPO and the Origin of the CORE STORY

We are told that the CORE STORY tale of extraterrestrial intelligence, comes in several flavors, according to taste.

The first, presumably the original CORE STORY, was invented in a Denny's restaurant in San Jose, California, "on the fifteenth of July, 1986, immediately after new and veridical data had been received ..." from the director of a major national laboratory.

The second was appropriated by others and is familiar as the CORE STORY described in the book Exempt From Disclosure, by Robert Collins, et al.

Comments about the second version suggest a very different tale from the "original" identified above.

One well-informed party described the second version of the CORE STORY as "grounded in fantasy."

So what about the first version of the legendary tale?

According to information provided to us, the original tale is "supported" by "data or circumstantial testimony from credible government sources."

Of course there are undoubtedly numerous tales spread between "credible government sources."

As for the original CORE STORY, no one seems ready to come out of the closet and go on the record.

One subject does appear to be sensitive, however:

A private meeting was allegedly requested by former Director of Central Intelligence Richard Helms, about a certain individual of interest, including, allegedly, confirmation of the same Denny's inspired core tale behind the legend.

It should be noted that Helms was caught with his hand in the phenomenological cookie jar; as was documented in memos about psychic intelligence going back to the early 1960s.

(This was a decade before the better known STAR GATE efforts.)

The apparent connection to more recent investigations began with an email received by a party involved in a confrontation between a former CIA official and USAF officers.

At the heart of the confrontation was a polygraph tape, and a disagreement on the interpretation of the results.

Our understanding is that Helms vouched for the AFOSI agent who had taken the polygraph.

According to leaked messages obtained by an associate, what took place at the meeting at CIA with USAF officials was described in detail in an email (this story was verified by someone present at the original meeting):

"He quoted what I said, what you did, and the circumstances of the meeting to convince me of who he was. He also told me the essence of the SERPO story was true."

Unless, to paraphrase that same source again, "it was not."

Space OPERATIONS: The SERPO Space Opera as Cover Story

Ingo Swann filled his long out-of-print tome about his encounters with UFO-seeking black-ops' investigations with numerous clues for the present-day SERPO UFO soap opera.

Swann claims to have been involved with a group that approached him in 1975 with a request to use his 'psychic talents' to observe extraterrestrial activities on the moon.

Apparently Swann never knew the true source of his mysterious compatriots, headed by a mysterious "Mr. Axelrod," who had enlisted him in the battle to defend the Earth against laser-beam wielding triangular shaped "diamond" space drones.

Swann wrote:

WHO WERE this Axelrod and his henchmen, anyway? I spent days, weeks, cycling through the possibilities. CIA, KGB, Mossad, M-5, some ultra-secret military goings-on? Worst of all was the speculation they, themselves, might be extraterrestrial. Perhaps there was a SPACE OPERA on in which two different sets of extraterrestrial troops were fighting some kind of war here on Earth -- while both at the same time were somehow ensuring that HUMANS never realize that they, themselves, are psychic.

Apparently Swann may have believed that East and West were locked together on the psychic battlefield as PROXIES for otherworldly powers?

It is an interesting coincidence that SERPO may be derived from SOAP OPERA with the addition of the letter "A."

More interesting is SPACE OPERATIONS may be reduced to S-OPER.

A small adjustment in the order of the letters becomes SERPO.

Another coincidence?

Perhaps.

However, do note for the record that, according to a memo from the STAR GATE files, USAF FTD (Foreign Technology Division) was already engaged in psychic activities at SRI (where CIA had been covertly testing Swann without his overt knowledge) -- by 1976.

Swann's mysterious "Axelrod" made first contact in March of 1975, later tasking Swann against a 'live' UFO target in 1977.

To further mix the waters, another memo includes an offer from the Navy to act as a cut-out for the CIA if CIA continued to covertly research paranormal phenomena, and report the results back to naval intelligence.

The mini-book series inside the book

Knowing the Future: CIA, 9/11, UFOs, and the Extraterrestrial Presence --
The UFO Spy Games

What would you do if you could see into the future?

And what if your visions were filled with images of terror?

The CIA and other intelligence agencies have been asking this question from the beginning.

Is it really possible to see into the future?

And why did government psychics and others report visions of crashing into buildings prior to 9/11?

Visions of 9/11

Is it really possible to know the future?

Ask a modern physicist steeped in Einstein's theory of General Relativity, in which space and time may be curved into time machines by wormholes and exotic negative energy, and the answer might be a highly qualified "maybe."

Mix in a little quantum theory, and interpret the results as parallel universes, and the answer is, as explained by popular physicist and author Michio Kaku:

"Apparently, time travel seems to be consistent with the known laws of physics."

The truth is, as always, stranger than the simple explanations of time machines portrayed in popular films and television.

Tales and rumors of the future are the stuff of dreams, from which Internet myths become viral memes, ideas spread like a disease over the world wide web of deceit and confusion.

Hidden within the flood of insanity and paranoia are little truths: predictions come true, warnings unheeded, and coincidences of misfortune.

Or perhaps, genuine knowing of the future.

The US government would like to put "the knowing" into a national intelligence briefing, if it were possible.

As documented at the STARpod.org website, more than twenty years ago, the Defense Intelligence Agency extended a program initiated by the CIA, to determine if the future was written, not in the stars, but on the front page of newspapers yet to be published.

Called Project "P," the idea was to determine if trained psychics, also under the tutelage of the intelligence agency, would be able to predict with deadly accuracy the headlines of tomorrow's newspapers.

Intelligence officials had some reason to expect success: it had been demonstrated that their psychics could "read" aspects of documents hidden and locked behind closed doors. This was during the heyday of America's secret infatuation with paranormal espionage in the mid 1980s.

Unfortunately the psychics missed most of the targeted headlines, leading DIA intelligence officials to conclude that Project "P" "revealed a near total inability to predict future events. Except for a few and isolated, eye-catching successes, there was no evidence of consistency or reliability in the results obtained from remote viewing efforts conducted in a predictive mode."

One curious coincidence from Project "P" is notable.

According to CIA STAR GATE files, released under the Freedom of Information Act, DIA psychic spy 079 described a "secret project" called "911" when tasked to view a future edition of the Washington Post. Typically the DIA psychics were tasked in secret, without revealing the actual target they were intended to "view."

Some of the STAR GATE Project "P" files may be viewed at the STARpod.org website.

Agent 079 described the vision of June 18th, 1987:

I saw pieces of white paper with black print. One piece of paper said a formula or project's number was 911. These papers were on a long light brown table sitting out and they were in draft form.

Was the future yet to be written in draft form waiting for that fateful day when aircraft would be used as weapons of mass destruction against buildings in New York City and Washington, D.C.?

DIA psychics also reported interrupted viewing sessions filled with terrible visions of aircraft flow as weapons against the U.S. Capitol Building and simultaneous attacks in New York City and against the Pentagon and the White House in Washington.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Closer to the fateful events of September 11th, 2001, Professor Gary E.R. Schwartz was testing paranormal dreamer Chris Robinson, a British citizen who had predicted various catastrophes by carefully interpreting symbols in his nocturnal visions. In August of 2001, at the University of Arizona where the tests were being staged, he told Schwartz of a horrific dream of airplanes crashing into buildings.

Was this vision related to a DIA psychic's 1986 brush with future fear?

In the 1986 vision, the psychic spy saw "A rather large, tall structure ..."

Site is a massive grey structure. It has a stepped or different level feeling, stacked...newspaper headlines have something to do with a collapse of a building -- a lot of people hurt or injured. I also sense a feeling of panic, people scrambling and perhaps something to do with an aircraft...I sense that the object may cause structural damage as it crashes through the building. All of this takes place sometime in the future.

According to the DIA records:

This particular Source commented later that these perceptions were so strong and clear that she attempted to flag down a member of the interviewer staff on the highway to report her on-going perceptions. The Source further became somewhat anxious by her unusually clear perceptions due to two personal agendas - a spouse who is assigned to the Pentagon and a sister who is intending to participate in the [1986] NYC ceremonies. She went so far as to request guidance from the interviewer staff on what actions, if any she should take, to insure the safety of her relatives, bearing in mind that as of yet, she has not been told the nature of the questions or the entire project.

It was the responsibility of DIA intelligence officers in charge of the project to interpret the meaning behind the psychics warnings of an impending attack.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

They concluded:

NYC (New York City) will be the target of an unexpected terrorist attack, by air and ground, of...suicide-forces... Washington will also be a target, simultaneously with (the) primary targets (being) the White House...(and the) Pentagon...

Then, on September 11, 2001, terrorists unleashed the unthinkable.

Professor Gary E.R. Schwartz was in shock.

A little more than a year prior to the 9/11 attacks, I had been in virtual discussion over the Internet with Professor Schwartz and physicist Jack Sarfatti, both well known for their alternative view that within the mind's eye the future can reach into the past.

Internet entrepreneur Joe Firmage had recently come out of the closet about his belief in an extraterrestrial presence, and launched the ISSO -- the International Space Sciences Organization -- to review possible modes of intergalactic travel.

It was reported that NASA launched an investigation, worried that proprietary government information might be discussed at ISSO where foreign physicists were among the elite UFO believers.

And not too far removed in the shadows, CIA was in the loop.

Joe Firmage and the ISSO

I first heard of Internet entrepreneur Joe Firmage in an email I received in late 1998, from San Francisco based alternative physicist Dr. Jack Sarfatti.

"Joe, Talk to the people in the above CC list above who actually KNOW me AND/OR understand my work."

This message, sent to several persons including Dr. Harold (Hal) Puthoff, a physicist best known for his role in the CIA investigation of paranormal research for spying on the Soviets, was shortly followed by another.

"Please give your candid assessment to JF on my sanity, competence and the significance of post-quantum physics. Thanks."

Post-quantum physics was Sarfatti's vision of 21st Century knowledge unrestrained by 20th Century physics dogma.

Naively I replied to Sarfatti, "Who is JF?" to which he responded, "A man with a lot of money."

Almost two years earlier, USWeb CEO Joe Firmage had been quoted in Hearst publication The San Francisco Chronicle.

"We plan to build the world's largest professional service company for the Internet."

SF Chronicle added, "After one year in existence, US Web has a nationwide network of nearly 50 offices specializing in Web site design."

Months before Sarfatti mentioned "JF," the Chronicle reported that "design firm US Web Corp. yesterday agreed to buy advertising agency CKS Group Inc. in a stock swap worth about $300 million."

US Web had become a multi-billion dollar operation.

Change was in the air for Firmage.

US Web had made JF "a man with a lot of money."

Some of that money was about to be spent in the pursuit of reverse engineering "extraterrestrial technology."

Former US government physicist Hal Puthoff emailed the press release:

SANTA CLARA, CA: December 14, 1998. The following statement was released today by Joseph Firmage, chairman of the International Space Sciences Organization, and primary author of The Truth (www.TheWordIsTruth.org).

Now that the new MAJESTIC 12 documents are in broad circulation, it is appropriate for me to make a few comments regarding their authenticity and their role in support of the hypothesis contained in The Truth...

MAJESTIC 12 (MJ-12) was a collection of ever growing and highly controversial UFO documents about a super-secret committee inside of the government, tasked with the UFO problem.

The FBI had declared the so-called MJ-12 documents to be "BOGUS," allegedly based upon a source from the Air Force Office of Special Investigations (OSI).

In "The Word Is Truth," Firmage argued for a revised view of human history, in the context of a cosmos teaming with alien intelligence.

The media responded with a hail storm of written bullets.

Weeks after issuing the press release about "The Truth" Firmage left US Web.

A front page feature story in the SF Chronicle reported:

Joe Firmage -- the Fox Mulder of Silicon Valley -- resigned yesterday from the firm he founded so he could promote his belief that many of today's high-tech advancements, including semiconductors, fiber optics and lasers, came from aliens.

The SF Chronicle noted a similarity between Firmage's resignation from US Web and a television program:

Firmage's situation is eerily similar to a recent plot in the TV show "Ally McBeal," in which a respected stockbroker is fired from his job after claiming to have seen a unicorn.

The strangeness that had launched Firmage on this new course of his life had actually been mirrored on television, seven years prior to a personal visitation.

"A remarkable being, clothed in brilliant white light, appeared hovering over my bed in my room," according to Firmage.

After a brief discussion about space travel, the 'visitor' emitted a ball of light, "about the size of a basketball," which then entered Firmage, leaving him with a sensation almost beyond words.

Seven years before Firmage's 1997 experience, fictional FBI Special Agent Dale Cooper experienced a similar visitation on the quirky TV show "Twin Peaks," when he was visited by a supernatural giant.

The giant tells Cooper, "Sorry to wake you."

Cooper responds, "I'm not dreaming."

A few words later the giant sends a ball of light about the size of a basketball into Cooper.

The fictional Cooper goes on to investigate the fictional murder of Laura Palmer, using clues provided by the fictional giant.

The ball of light that entered Joe Firmage had another effect altogether.

Firmage threw money on the flames of media buzz, even purchasing full page promotional advertisements in the Wall Street Journal and USA Today, to emphasize the seriousness of his new venture.

I still have my copy of the Feb. 19, 1999 full page UFO-promotion from USA Today.

"This guy IS serious," I thought.

By October of 1999, Matt Beer, technology writer for The Examiner reported:

According to three sources who asked to remain anonymous, Firmage intends to announce that a technology officer from a large Fortune 100 company has agreed to head up International Space Sciences, an organization dedicated to studying advances in physics and their relationship to UFO phenomena. These sources say the organization is slated to receive some $100 million in funds from Silicon Valley executives who agree with Firmage's beliefs.

Three days later Beer added:

Special Agent Keith Tate, an investigator with the Long Beach branch of NASA's Office of Inspector General, has been calling Silicon Valley sources, including The Examiner, seeking information about a planned Tuesday meeting between research scientists and Silicon Valley high-tech executives. At that meeting, first reported by The Examiner, attendees, including scientists from the NASA Ames Research Center in Mountain View, will discuss propulsion technologies.

Knowing the future had taken former USWeb CEO Joe Firmage on a quest to reverse engineer technologies that could only be possessed by the aliens.

And NASA wanted to know what it was all about.

NASA was not alone. Other government agencies, including CIA, were interested as well.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Either you give up on these phenomena -- you give up on all that stuff -- or else you have to open yourself up to really crazy things...

Ten years have passed since Werbos gave his talk and Firmage initiated his UFO investigation.

Today it is not MAJESTIC, but HER MAJESTY's SECRET files that provide a slim entry into the international intrigue hidden under the rubric of exotic technology.

Daz Smith is the author of Surfing the Psychic Internet.

Curious as to what exactly Her Majesty's Ministry of Defence actually knew, Smith filed a request for copies of the "British X-files."

Smith shared with me a 2008 Freedom of Information response from the MoD.

"X-files" provided by the MoD revealed Her Majesty's official interest in fringe subjects like gravitation, zero point energy extracted from empty space, and other exotic energy technologies which had been the focus of Joe Firmage's UFO venture.

The MoD files are concerned with "novel phenomena" like psychic "remote viewing," "bio-effects psychotronics," requests for copies of US psychic research by the Stanford Research Institute, and exotic morphogenetic fields thought to control DNA in living organisms.

Redacted copies of email communications discuss "bioactivity of DNA-modulated radiowaves" and other pseudo-scientific fringe research from the former Soviet Union.

Other formerly secret MoD UFO files discuss propulsion related exotic hypothetical physics, the so-called torsion, spin, or leptonic fields, noting:

Large scale studies of 'torsion fields' and their manifestation in nature have been made in Russia and, it is claimed, 'have resulted in the development of several unique methods and technologies unparalleled anywhere in the world and with which important fundamental and applied problems can be tackled in many areas of science and technology.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Applications of this alleged Russian super-technology were claimed to include "remote sensing," and "extraction, filtering, visualization, processing and analysis of torsion field information" -- however, there was "no indication in the papers discovered of the potential use of torsion fields for direct propulsion."

And, according to documents produced for the International Space Sciences Organization from 1999 to 2000, torsion fields had been a core topic of study in collaborative efforts with the Russians.

A congressional mandate had led to the disclosure of STAR GATE, in part to effect cooperation with former Soviet researchers.

In 2005, an anonymous source known as "UFO Black Ops" posted an explanation of events at ISSO on the Internet:

This was an operation done with full knowledge of top levels of the USG Intelligence Community who monitored it. Several former Soviet-bloc physicists were brought in as consultants including Dr. Valdimir Poponin, allegedly a personal acquaintance of Gorbachev's. We were interested in evaluating the controversial claims of 'Russian torsion field weapons' and, therefore brought Gennady Shipov over from Moscow several times. On one trip Shipov lived with Sarfatti for about 2 weeks. Richard Hammond, an American physicist from Fargo working on torsion fields for US Navy at one time was brought in as well as R. Kiehn a former scientist for US SAC and retired professor from University of Houston. Shipov worked with Akimov in Moscow who allegedly had strong military connections in the Soviet era.

In the Autumn of 2000, as ISSO operations were about to wind down, email based discussions of alternative physics and consciousness topics between ISSO researchers and others across the globe arrived daily on my computer screen.

NASA had invested in a Breakthrough Propulsion Physics program to travel to the stars.

In Europe, BAE Systems had a similar program called Project Greenglow.

Former Soviet block researchers were involved in everything exotic from torsion spin fields to cold fusion and beyond.

A high-ranking CIA analyst named Ron Pandolfi popped in for a comment or two in response to his civilian friend Dan Smith's cryptic allegations concerning "the extraterrestrials at Los Alamos."

Gary E.R. Schwartz would soon be testing "dream detective" Chris Robinson at the University of Arizona. By August of 2001, Robinson would be suffering from nightmares of airplanes crashing into buildings.

And a young engineering student named Ziad Jarrah was preparing to fly a plane into the U.S. Capitol Building, just as military psychics had warned he would do, in 1983.

A Hidden Agenda

On July 28th, 1999, during the very month that Nostradamus had predicted the world would see a "great and terrible king" arrive, former US Web CEO Joe Firmage issued this statement concerning his venture to reverse engineering alien technology:

I am hoping to receive the backing of 20 leaders of commerce. ISSO is accepting 20 ten million dollar philanthropic investments...exclusively from those with the most ability and therefore the most responsibility to support humanity in both social good and accomplishment. If I fail to raise these funds, then ISSO will probably fail.

In little over a year, and in spite of Firmage promoting his ideas in the press, over the Internet, and on national radio in interviews with paranormal talk show host Art Bell, ISSO had faded quietly from public view.

In an interview with ZDTV's Big Thinkers, Firmage explained his view of the secrecy behind the alleged cover-up of extraterrestrial technology:

I'll tell you the best information I have. The best information I have is that the organization that does have, shall we say, better knowledge than the public is much smaller than you might guess. It is very small. It is also quasi-private, established over a half a century ago and essentially custodians for one of the greatest secrets of all time.

By October of 1999, the world was still here, and NASA was interested in what secrets may or may not have been passed at Firmage's International Space Sciences Organization.

The Examiner reported that NASA Special Agent Keith Tate had been calling around looking for information about ISSO meetings.

In July, Firmage had announced the appointment of a NASA Ames Research Center veteran, Creon Levit, as Director of Research for ISSO Science.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Levit, who worked for NASA on "Aerospace applications of molecular nanotechnology," had previously coauthored a paper with Dr. Jack Sarfatti.

Sarfatti was quietly working behind the scenes and across the Internet on the problem of finding a new physics to explain the strange flight behavior observed in alleged UFO sightings.

Sarfatti had spent years on the Internet writing about topics connecting conscious awareness and extraterrestrial inspired technologies, such as "sentient warp drive beyond the quantum," long before Firmage arrived on the scene.

Levit had also explored the fringe edge of nanotechnology at NASA.

One topic of interest at NASA Ames was the idea of using swarms of nano-robots: active materials that could in principle "change shape and exert force on their environment under software control."

Swarming technology might explain the strange morphing behavior reported by some UFO witnesses.

Levit's role at ISSO, combined with numerous physicists from Russia and elsewhere, almost certainly had set off alarm bells.

Space propulsion was not the only item of interest to the ISSO.

Alternative energy, perhaps even explosively powerful alternative energy, was also under discussion.

Rumors of a "subquantum atomic bomb" concept were among the new ideas leaking from ISSO research.

And foreign scientists were involved, including J.P. Vigier, who had been the personal assistant to one of the founders of quantum theory, and was a known supporter of communism.

Other foreign sources ISSO investigated made claims of unusual nuclear reactions in their experiments.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Although the NASA investigation was reported in the media, less is known about CIA's interest in Firmage's efforts.

One person who may have been interested in the "sources and methods" behind ISSO research was Dr. Ron Pandolfi.

By 1999, Pandolfi was already well known in the mainstream press, for his involvement in official investigations, as well as alternative topics, like UFOs.

According to a 2002 Congressional Research Service report:

A CIA analyst, Ronald Pandolfi, had reportedly prepared a National Intelligence Estimate (NIE) on how Hughes may have helped improve China's missile capabilities in reviewing the explosion of a Long March rocket in January 1995 ... Pandolfi, briefed the Senate Intelligence Committee on what he had found ... the CIA then allegedly alerted Hughes about Pandolfi's briefing, reportedly according to an internal CIA cable dated Sept. 23, 1998. The committee then asked Attorney General Janet Reno for a criminal investigation into whether the CIA improperly obstructed a Senate investigation.

A story by Kenneth Timmerman reported, "After Pandolfi testified in closed session before Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Shelby (R-Ala.), he was removed from the China division and put to work on developing alternative energy sources."

And then Joe Firmage arrived on the scene.

The mystery surrounding so many persons involved in both intelligence work and alternative physics attracted the attention of journalists investigating the secret world of black budget government research.

Nick Cook, author and aerospace journalist for Jane's Information Group in the UK, wrote to me, "What intrigues me in this whole business are the connections...I wonder why so many of these names keep recurring in these peripherally related -- but deeply weird -- orbits."

The connections go even deeper, and twist and wrap around seemingly disconnected threads.

In September 2005, I contacted Dan T. Smith, the civilian associate of Dr. Pandolfi. Smith claimed his friend at CIA seemed to have prior knowledge of the events of September 11th, 2001.

"I understand that you have gone to the FBI with this information?" I asked.

"Correct. On about 9/19/01 I met with a female agent right outside the Baltimore FBI office and gave her my and Ron's particulars and a synopsis of what had transpired between us in the previous two weeks. She took notes and said they would handle it. They would have already been aware of my being part of Ron's special domestic collection effort. On that same day I also contacted Chris Straub, former ranking member on the Senate Select Intelligence Committee, with whom Ron and I had previously met."

Six weeks prior to Mr. Smith's trip to FBI, dream-psychic Chris Robinson, who was under observation by Professor Gary E.R. Schwartz at the University of Arizona, had a nightmare of planes crashing into buildings -- only this nightmare repeated, until the fateful events of September 11, 2001.

I wondered if CIA had been monitoring Schwartz and Robinson and the nightmare that foreshadowed 9/11.

I also wondered if anyone had paid attention to the DIA psychics spies and their warnings of planes used as weapons of mass destruction, nearly twenty years earlier.

Psychic Cold War

In 1983, few Americans knew, or would have believed, that the US government was training psychics to spy on the enemy.

By December of 1983 some of America's psychic spies were receiving special mental training at the Monroe Institute of Applied Sciences.

For his part of the training program, Mr. Robert Monroe was granted SECRET security clearance and $24,400.

In return for the $24,400, the government may have received the first known warning of the terrorist attack of September 11th, 2001.

The 1983 warning, that an airplane was about to be used as a weapon of mass destruction against Washington, D.C., had been pieced together from statements made by four different Army personnel who had "provided accurate information in the past."

Since the warning did not result from official tasking of the military psychics, a CONFIDENTIAL memo was issued describing a future terrorist event.

The memo was reviewed for release by the CIA shortly before the 9/11 attacks.

The original statements given by "four different sources" who provided "the same basic elements" were not included with the released version of the memo, which provided an interpretation of the psychics' warnings in the context of the world of 1983.

The 1983 interpretation failed to grasp the details and the scale of the 9/11 events.

The "basic elements," on the other hand, seem to foreshadow the failed attempt by 9/11 pilot Ziad Jarrah to crash Flight 93 into the US Capitol Building.

According to the report, a "jet type aircraft" "loaded with explosives (not further identified)" will "fly to Washington, D.C. with the mission of crashing into the US Capitol Building."

The 1983 psychics identified the pilot as a "foreigner," "not in the country as of 12 Dec. 83," "speaks English and perhaps French," would enter the country on a passport, with a name that "sound[s] like Jerry, Gerard or Geraldo," all which match closely to 9/11 Flight 93 pilot Ziad Jarrah.

They also identified key locations associated with Jarrah and the 9/11 attacks: New Jersey and New York.

Flight 93 departed from Newark, New Jersey.

A few years later another U.S. government psychic, DIA SOURCE 21, warned of simultaneous attacks in New York City and Washington, D.C.

A 1986 SECRET Defense Intelligence Agency document quotes SOURCE 21's raw and un-interpreted vision of terror:

Newspaper headlines have something to do with the collapse of a building -- a lot of people hurt or injured. I also sense a feeling of panic, people scrambling and perhaps something to do with an aircraft. In summary, standing on top of a building, which is crowded inside with people, tourists, there is a perception of a large object falling -- heading -- toward the building...I sense the object may cause structural damage as it crashes through the building. All of this takes place sometime in the future.

In August of 2001, psychic dream detective Chris Robinson was visiting with Professor Gary E. R. Schwartz at the University of Arizona.

Schwartz had arranged a series of tests to see if Chris Robinson was able to describe locations where he would be taken at a future date.

Robinson's dreams were interrupted by disturbing images: airplanes crashing into buildings.

According to Robinson, who had previously worked with law enforcement in the UK, the authorities were notified when the dreams kept recurring.

A month later Robinson's nightmares were no longer confined to his dreams.

Dan Smith was concerned enough about his friend from CIA to contact the FBI days later.

Smith wrote to me, "I have no idea what they [the FBI] know. I spoke to an agent in the Baltimore office concerning my speculations. It was perfunctory and there was no follow up. I told Ron [Pandolfi] I had done this."

Jon Ronson, in his darkly humorous book The Men Who Stare at Goats (that was made into a fictionalized feature film starring George Clooney), claims that Israeli psychic-mentalist Uri Geller identified "Ron" as the man behind his reinstatement as a government psychic spook.

Ronson met with Geller weeks after Dan Smith met with Baltimore FBI. Ronson's search for Ron eventually lead him into a dark world of military psychic "goat killers."

"Spy Talk" blogger Jeff Stein recently reported that FBI had "blocked two of its veteran counterterrorism agents from going public with accusations that CIA deliberately withheld crucial intelligence before the Sept. 11th, 2001 attacks."

FBI Special Agents Mark Rossini and Douglas Miller had sought permission to appear on a PBS documentary for "NOVA" written and produced by James Bamford, author of several books about the National Security Agency.

Jeff Stein reported that "FBI 'doesn't want to stir up old

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

conflicts with the CIA,' according to multiple reliable sources."

Investigative author Gus Russo confirmed to me that "Jeff Stein, Mark Rossini and Jim Bamford are all good friends of mine."

A couple of years after Ronson's book, Dan Smith contracted Russo to write "The Real X-files: Is Uncle Sam a Closet UFOlogist?"

Russo had provided me with a lead about an alleged National Security Agency 'psychic-spy' program.

Russo's source said the new psychic effort was buried deep inside the blackest heart of NSA.

Russo did not identify the source of his information.

(Note: Russo recently released the identity of his source to STARstream Research.)

On January 18, 2006, Dr. Jack Sarfatti forwarded an email to my attention asking if I had sent an email concerning the alleged National Academy of Sciences "UFO" TIGER team.

Sarfatti speculated that Ron Pandolfi had sent the names of TIGER members interested in UFO technology in an email that had been "intercepted by NSA."

In typical spy-elicitation style, the message Sarfatti forwarded to me read:

Jack,

Ron P. told me today that you very likely know the names of all the members of the National Academy of Sciences "UFO" tiger team. If this is true, could you please tell me who they are. I have come up with something he wants briefed to them.

Mark.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Ron and the Men Who Stare at Goats

The man who reactivated me is ..." Uri paused, then he said, "called Ron."

I was reading Jon Ronson's book The Men Who Stare at Goats.

Ronson wrote, "Was Ron FBI? CIA? Military intelligence? Homeland Security? Could Ron be MI5? MI6?"

"Ah ha!" I thought. "Now it makes sense."

I knew that Ron worked for CIA.

And why psychic mentalist Uri Geller would claim to have been 'reactivated' for the war on terror.

It was December 6th, 2005.

Smith had forwarded the latest rumor concerning his friend Ron, the former CIA analyst made famous by a Pulitzer prize winning story from the New York Times.

What do you think about Ron encouraging Gordon to go to Iraq, support RC [Ramsey Clark] 'because people in D.C. would appreciate it' (my paraphrasing) and help Sadaam?[sp] Risky for a senior officer? Obviously not in Ron's mind. But his note 'from a Senior Negroponte Deputy' encouraging defense of SH is making quite a stir on the internet.

Dan Smith would soon confirm to me his meetings with the FBI over concerns of Ron's involvement in Smith's affairs.

Dan Smith appears to be at the center of a 'virtual' conspiracy covered with 'extraterrestrial' contact, most notable for the involvement of his friends who are real U.S. government intelligence persons.

Smith's claim to fame include his father, Dan Throop Smith, "a renowned Harvard economist who had served as the Treasury Department's top tax adviser during the Eisenhower administration" according to the Washington Post, and his older sister, Deborah, a friend of President G.H.W. Bush according to the White House, as reported in another Washington Post story about Presidential cuff links used to impress Toyota.

Smith wrote to me, "I'm hearing that you may have some precog. concerns about my specific role vis a vis Ron and the CIA/DNI."

My first direct contact from Ron Pandolfi had arrived unsolicited on September 30th, 2000.

Ron wrote:

Is it a ferret or a weasel that Dan will be adopting for the avian birthday? They are closely related, but they have very different characteristics. I always suspected they lived in a home near Towson.

I am ready to purchase a bus ticket for Dan's eschatological tour, as long as I get to select at least one of the stops. Who else will join the adventure? Where will it end?

Eschatology is the study of the final events, destiny and fate of the human race. The "avian" birthday probably refers to a legendary group of past and present government intelligence persons who had been assigned bird names to conceal their identities as part of a 1980s UFO cover-up investigation.

It now appears that "the avians" behind the 1988 "UFO Cover-up Live" investigation hosted by Mike Farrell provided for the broadcast of secret government information on national television.

A chart shown during the program revealed the existence of the Defense Intelligence Agency secret paranormal research Special Access Program (SAP) called SUN STREAK, which was not officially declassified until 1995.

Another UFO researcher, Lee Graham, who previously held a security clearance, and was later the subject of a Defense Investigative Service investigation, claimed that code words used on CRT screens tracking flying objects were revealed during the same broadcast.

The recipients of Pandolfi's September 2000 reply to the previous day's revelation by Smith included former USWeb CEO Joe Firmage, who was investigating reverse engineered alien technology at the International Space Sciences Organization, and Uri Geller, who would allegedly tell British pop investigator Jon Ronson that "Ron" had "reactivated" his psychic abilities for the Bush "war on terror."

Although Jon Ronson initiated his own investigation with the search for "Ron," he was diverted by former military types into another direction altogether (as told in his book).

Dan Smith's "tour bus" of the "world wide web," the same sticky net that had brought riches to Joe Firmage, was about to become a spidery snare for intelligence persons and paranormalists everywhere.

In the intelligence world it is known as "flypaper theory."

Ultimately one learns that the paranormal strangeness is shared by government officials in numerous services and agencies.

How they interact with each other over questions of psychic spying and alleged alien interventions is harder to discern.

As for any official government action, that is even less than certain, although the previous government effort known as STAR GATE provides some historical precedent from 1953 to 1995, when Ron's CIA effectively killed the program.

Pandolfi's afternoon message had been in response to Smith's disclosure earlier in the day.

Smith had blogged and emailed a cleverly cryptic report of his meeting with Ron under the title "Ferreting out the Answer, or a Tiger by the Tale."

Smith's September 30th, 2000 contribution to conspiracy paranoia was summed up in a not-too-well-disguised reference to the alleged MAJESTIC MJ-12 MAJIC government UFO cabal:

Also it appears that Ron wants me to be a bus driver. He wants me to obtain a bus and paint it to look like an 'official' MTA bus, and go around the city picking up passengers at the bus stops, but instead of delivering them to their usual destinations, I will take them on an eschatological tour. When I told Ron that might be construed as being illegal, he did not seem perturbed.

And then, for those not paying close attention, Dan added:

Would I lie to you? Do you think for a minute that these were not my 'official' instructions from a person who seems no longer inclined to deny membership in 'MTA-12'?

According to Dan Smith, his interaction with Ron some eight years prior to the planned 'eschatological MJ-12 tour' had landed Ron in hot water and cost the taxpayers a considerable sum of money.

Smith went to the FBI for guidance.

And in 2004, so did I.

The email response to my inquiry arrived from the local FBI Joint Terrorism Task Force.

"Please call me with your concerns on this issue. You are correct in that there are some guidelines that must be followed for contact but, I am not comfortable detailing those here."

Dan Smith claimed two contacts with FBI concerning Ron.

The second time Dan claims to have visited Baltimore FBI to report on his interaction with Ron just prior to 9/11.

The first time around it was concerning Ron's interest in Dan and his "joint mission" with paranormalist Rosemary Ellen Guiley.

Smith wrote to me:

The first time was to get some feedback on CF ["Cat Fish" is one of Smith's code-names for Ron Pandolfi]. I was unable to get any until I had three meetings with Chris Straub, c.'95. He was then the ranking staff member for the Senate Intel. Comm. CF joined us for the final meeting that was in the cafeteria. Bottom line: Chris was knowledgeable concerning eschatology, and he told me, 'to rest assured that I was dealing with some very competent people'...

Recall that I was indirectly responsible for the Inspector General's investigation of CF in '92-93,...CF reported that it was a six month, $100K investigation in which he was cleared of any wrong doing.

According to Smith:

In the previous attempt at a joint mission (c. 1992) I was told, somewhat after the fact, that my prospective partner's agenda was simply unknown. Whatever it was, it quickly degenerated into her personal agenda. BTW, she was being vectored in my direction by ONI (Office of Naval Intelligence). And now she has been vectored back to Towson, as she announced last weekend.

And according to CRS Reports for Congress, and several articles in the New York Times, Ron would soon be mired in another CIA controversy involving the Senate Intelligence Committee.

Ken Timmerman in American Spectator wrote that "Ronald Pandolfi was the CIA's highest ranking scientist when he visited the headquarters of Hughes Space and Communications in El Segundo, California in 1996."

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

In April 1996, CRS Reports state:

A CIA analyst, Ronald Pandolfi, briefed the Senate Intelligence Committee on what he had found in 1995 about Hughes' review of the explosion of a Long March rocket in January 1995. The CIA then allegedly alerted Hughes about Pandolfi's briefing, reportedly according to an internal CIA cable dated September 23, 1998. The committee then asked Attorney General Janet Reno for a criminal investigation into whether the CIA improperly obstructed a Senate investigation.

Jeff Gerth, writing for the New York Times, reported:

The concern of Congress involves broad issues of national security. It was the Senate panel on proliferation that asked the Pentagon to assess the national security implications of the 1995 accident review. And the Senate Intelligence Committee, officials said, is looking at whether what happened to Pandolfi is part of a larger question: Has the Clinton administration's strategic partnership with Beijing affected the way the intelligence community sees China?

In the next ten years China would be at the center of another technology concern of Pandolfi's: the alleged conversion of electromagnetic microwaves to high frequency gravity waves.

Uncovering the real secrets of Dan Smith's friends from the intelligence world involved the reverse engineering of science fiction inspired extraterrestrial technologies; the Holy Grail of UFO enthusiasts: antigravity, time machines, and human paranormal psychology.

I kept wondering about the odd message forwarded by Sarfatti:

Ron P told me that you very likely know the names of all the members of the National Academy of Science 'UFO' TIGER team. If this is true, could you please tell me who they are. I have come up with something that he wants briefed to them.

And therein lies a TIGER by the tale of spies, lies, and polygraph tape.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

A Proof of Sorts

Call it the "Weird Science of National Insecurity."

According to official records released by the CIA, it's been going on since 1953.

According to the legend, it all started in the summer of 1947.

Whispered alongside concerns about new Chinese offensive capabilities against the US Pacific Fleet -- missile "bomblets" for which the US Navy has no existing deterrent -- is the "phenomenology problem."

In keeping with the times, this particular problem of "high strangeness" appears to have been outsourced by the intelligence community.

Recently I obtained a proof of sorts from an open study issued by the highest intelligence authority in the land: the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, and the elite advisory group known as JASON, commissioned by Dr. Ronald (Ron) Pandolfi.

And if some of my sources, both inside and outside of government, are to be believed, it always comes back to the UFO issue.

The question on everyone's mind remains: are the UFOs from 'out there' or is there a more earthly explanation involving the intelligence community, and deep black covert military cover stories?

Working the darkness with "deep throat" contacts unwilling to go on the record, and open source contacts chosen as "useful idiots" who are protected by their "plausible deniability," has driven many investigative journalists near the border of madness.

Most days it comes down to juggling a handful of spies, lies,

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games and a tale of polygraph tape.

Nearly twenty years ago, veteran journalist Howard Blum, formerly with the New York Times, summed it up in his book Out There:

I had worked my way through dozens of official barriers, documented previously undisclosed levels of government interest and involvement in the search for extraterrestrial life, only to find that one more tormenting question remained. This last, hard secret was impenetrable. Why was the government so committed, so conspiratorially determined, to perpetuate the mystery surrounding its fascination with other worlds? Why was the government not telling us everything?

Like Blum, my own efforts led me to believe there was something more: a presence, an agenda, lurking in the darkness before me.

Entering the unknown chamber of covert intentions can be occasionally rewarding.

There are sources willing to speak, in private, and strictly off the record.

They point to the darkness ahead and tell you to "go this way."

The more you penetrate into the black, the more you risk falling over the edge from a runaway imagination and deliberate misdirection.

It's all part of the spy games being played in the UFO community.

I was fortunate enough to eventually obtain a small bit of confirmation, thanks to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence and a civilian source who claims to have an inside connection.

Dan Smith is the eccentric son of an economic advisor to the

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games
Eisenhower administration.

Over the last several years, Smith has been more forthcoming about information he receives from contacts working for the US government Intelligence Community.

When Smith, who maintains a personal friendship with Ron Pandolfi, the oft-rumored real-life "Fox Mulder" of the CIA's infamous "weird desk," emailed me concerning an investigation of government consultants, American fringe researchers, Chinese scientists, and the UFO physics of "high frequency gravity waves," I took notes with the intention of following up at a later date.

Some of the "usual suspects" -- intelligence agency veterans who regularly expose themselves on line -- reacted with the stroke of a keyboard concerning the new allegations.

One gentleman responded:

Publicly accusing a person with seven current contracts with the Intelligence Community, four classified...with a distinguished career in Intelligence to boot, and who is the current Chair of the Science Board for the Undersecretary of Defense for Chem/Nuclear/Biological matters...as being in the pay of a Foreign Power who is wittingly passing them classified material...

It all did seem to revolve around the Chinese connection.

Not knowing exactly where to go with this developing line of spy talk, I eventually succumbed to the necessity of ambiguity and added a twist by wrapping the tale with titles borrowed from films by Alfred Hitchcock.

In the fall of 2007, American Chronicle published my story as "Inside the Spy Game with the Man Who Knew Too Much."

I wrote:

Smith's allegation (that a meeting with physicist Robert Park, arranged by Smith at the request of a Senior Intelligence Official at the DIA, who reports to the Director of National Intelligence) was about potential misuse of government resources for research into high-frequency gravity waves.

Rumors continued to reach me concerning the alleged "Chinese connection" and UFO physics.

One source, a journalist in the field of innovative propulsion technology, confessed that military intelligence had solicited his services to spy on foreign researchers and produce articles that fit their covert requirements.

He noted that the lack of willful imagination in the United States had dried up funding for risky science. China offered a potential oasis for the parched researcher in need of monetary support.

He called this overture to the Chinese "potentially treasonous."

Long before I learned about the "Chinese connection," Smith announced that his friend Pandolfi, the CIA's "X-files" keeper of the weird, had moved up in the world.

According to a 2005 video interview of Smith hosted by alternative physics author Fred Alan Wolf, and recorded by Jack Sarfatti, Pandolfi left the CIA angry over senior CIA rejection of a National Intelligence Estimate that stated there were "no weapons of mass destruction in Iraq" prior to the US lead invasion.

Recently Smith also suggested that Israeli intelligence may have co-opted the so-called Bible Code -- apocalyptic encrypted messages of impending nuclear conflict -- to influence the George W. Bush administration's decision to invade Iraq.

In the 1990s Pandolfi had been called before the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence to testify about the transfer of technology expertise to the Chinese by American defense contractors.

Several major newspapers carried the story, including the New York Times.

Although the names of CIA employees are not recorded in the public record of the SSCI hearing, Pandolfi was "outed" by the mainstream media and in subsequent Congressional Research Reports.

According to Smith, his friend was now running MASINT, a highly technical form of intelligence on the front stage of the war on terror.

During the interview, filled with tall tales of an extraterrestrial visitation CORE STORY, Smith explained that Pandolfi had left CIA and was working for the new Office of the Director of National Intelligence under the command of John Negroponte.

Other items reinforced Smith's claims, including messages bearing Pandolfi's Defense Intelligence Agency email address.

As with most of the rumors passed about the UFO community, and in spite of the numerous sources who had taken one small footstep into the light, actual confirmation seemed to remain firmly within Pandolfi's grasp.

When Pandolfi asked that certain information be redacted from one of my articles, he cited protection of "sources and methods."

The mainstream media overlooked the fact that this very high ranking senior intelligence official had been openly conducting intelligence-related activities on the Internet.

The UFO physics of high frequency gravity waves, the Chinese connection, and a possible case of international espionage concealed inside the UFO CORE STORY were the proverbial tips of an iceberg.

In the fall of 2008, one year after I ran with the "Man Who Knew Too Much," to tell the public about fringe science and the I.C., the Office of the Director of National Intelligence issued the sanitized version of the High Frequency Gravity Wave Study.

JASON was asked by staff at the National MASINT Committee of ODNI to evaluate the scientific, technological, and national security significance of high frequency gravitational waves (HFGW).

The subject of High Frequency Gravitational Waves (HFGW) has attracted considerable interest in the US government over the last few years.

We are especially grateful to Ronald Pandolfi and Mark Pesses of ODNI for their continued help in arranging briefers and documentation.

<http://www.fas.org/irp/agency/dod/jason/gravwaves.pdf>

Even Noah Shachtman at Wired Magazine's on line blog Danger Room had noticed, when he blogged:

Interestingly, a fellow by the name of Ronald Pandolfi arranged for many of the HFGW speakers and presentations. In certain circles, Pandolfi is known as the "CIA's UFO expert."

My own "considerable interest," which had originated with Mr. Smith's observations, had been confirmed in an "official document," less the "classified portion" which I suspected would include information about the Chinese connection.

I wondered how much more could be learned from Smith's cryptic references to his friend?

Inside the Spy Game With the Man Who Knew Too Much

Sunday, October 7, 2007

Publicly accusing a person with seven current contracts with the Intelligence Community, four classified...with a distinguished career in Intelligence to boot, and who is the current Chair of the Science Board for the Undersecretary of Defense for Chem/Nuclear/Biological matters...as being in the pay of a Foreign Power who is wittingly passing them classified material...

(See if you can spot all of the titles of films by Alfred Hitchcock in this article.)

Mr. Dan Smith is either breaking the spy game rules or playing by someone else's covert game plan.

At issue: Smith's allegations (that a meeting with physicist Robert Park, arranged by Smith at the request of a Senior Intelligence Official at the DIA, who reports to the Director of National Intelligence) was about potential misuse of government resources for research into high-frequency gravity waves.

A response to Mr. Smith's allegations from a physicist, and another top former intelligence officer and professional consultant to the U.S. Government, exposed a more serious allegation of impropriety on the part of the Senior Intelligence Official.

Physicist Robert Park is a well-known skeptic of all things paranormal. He is the author of the book Voodoo Science: The Road from Foolishness to Fraud.

Park failed to respond to our request for his comments.

Citizen Smith's involvement in an elastic affair involving the Intelligence Community began shortly after the torn curtain

Handwritten title at the top of page 566.

Handwritten text block at the top of page 566, below the title.

Handwritten text block below the first paragraph on page 566.

Handwritten text block in the middle of page 566.

Handwritten text block below the middle paragraph on page 566.

Handwritten text block below the second paragraph on page 566.

Large handwritten text block in the lower half of page 566.

Handwritten text block at the bottom of page 566.

Handwritten text block at the bottom of page 566.

Handwritten text block at the very bottom of page 566.

Handwritten text block at the top of page 567.

Handwritten text block below the first paragraph on page 567.

Handwritten text block in the middle of page 567.

Handwritten text block below the middle paragraph on page 567.

Handwritten text block below the second paragraph on page 567.

Handwritten text block below the third paragraph on page 567.

Handwritten text block at the bottom of page 567.

Richard Helms and the CORE STORY

In 1963, future CIA Director of Intelligence Richard Helms was thinking about the phenomenology problem, too. And like the fictional Twin Peaks, which mixed the supernatural with real UFO topics like Project BLUE BOOK, the real CORE STORY seemed to have its roots in the paranormal.

According to Dan T. Smith, son of the Harvard economist who served as tax advisor to the Eisenhower administration, there is a "phenomenology problem" faced by today's Intelligence Community.

So what exactly is meant by a "phenomenology problem," and how was it recognized in the first place?

According to an undated CIA memorandum, Walter B. Smith, Director of Central Intelligence in the early 1950s, sent a proposal to the National Security Council which concluded that "the problems with unidentified flying objects appear to have implications for psychological warfare, as well as for intelligence and operations."

Smith, both Dan and Walter, point to the same "phenomenology problem" now, as then.

It is no longer a matter of uninformed speculation: the United States, Great Britain, China, Russia, and the Former Soviet Union, to name a few, are concerned about strange phenomena.

As the Freedom of Information Act pushed tightly held secrets into the harsh light of public opinion, bits and pieces of a dark -- some might say disturbing -- secret world have been revealed.

In some Intelligence Community (I.C.) circles it is known as the CORE STORY.

And the secrets are alleged to involve government contact with an extraterrestrial intelligence.

To begin to untangle the myth and reality behind the spy games played with these UFO tales, one must take a journey into the historical record.

Like many older Americans, I can clearly recall a dreary, mist filled November afternoon in 1963.

It was announced over the intercom that our President, John F. Kennedy, had been shot, and that school would be dismissed immediately.

I waited, a small child standing alone in the cold rain, for a ride home. That one brief moment remains indelibly etched in my mind.

A nation was in mourning. I was too young to understand, but the national agony, being played endlessly on our single receivable TV channel, was tangible.

A month after President Kennedy had been assassinated, Richard Helms, a man once quoted as saying "the only sin in espionage is getting caught," issued a request concerning the "phenomenology problem."

And like DCI Walter B. Smith, the future DCI Helms was interested in using phenomena to his advantage in the sordid business of human intelligence.

At the CIA's website, David Robarge writes of Helms:

*Throughout his career, and especially as DCI, Helms hewed to several basic principles of intelligence activity. He expressed most of them in catch phrases, which he used often. Focus on the core missions: collecting and analyzing foreign intelligence.

Somewhere, within those "core missions" of collecting and analyzing foreign intelligence, there was buried a catch phrase later to be known as the CORE STORY.

On the day after Christmas Day, 1963, while the national was still in shock over the loss of their President, Richard Helms wrote to the CIA Deputy Director for Science and Technology:

Recently, reports from various sources on life science research in the Soviet Union have been called to my attention. These reports indicate a current preoccupation by an important sector of Soviet biological science with cybernetics, telepathy, hypnosis, and related subjects. Stimulated by these reports, I would like to pass on to you some thoughts on the possible significance of these activities to the Clandestine Services.

And the Soviets were not alone in these pursuits.

CIA's Technical Services Division had been exploring phenomena since 1953, according to Helms.

Nearly forty-four years after Helms penned his memo, Gus Russo, an investigative author best known for his investigative work on the Kennedy assassination plot, would be asked by Dan Smith to write an article about how the I.C.'s "phenomenology problem" had lead to counterintelligence operations involving U.S. citizens.

Russo examined material from numerous sources.

I discussed some of my own observations with Russo. Together we laughed about why some of our mutual sources in the I.C. would request absolute anonymity when their names were already plastered atop the UFO CORE STORY on the Internet.

In his article "The Real X-files: Is Uncle Sam a Closet UFOlogist," available at the starpod.org website, Russo expressed his opinion of the high-strangeness of intelligence operations involving psychic spies and UFOs:

Summing it all up, there is certainly a very small percentage of government officials with intelligence clearance -- some active, some retired -- who are interested in the UFO research community, if not UFOs themselves. Some of these men are of the impression, rightly or wrongly, that a very few individuals in government and the private sector are keeping the big secret even from them. This is small consolation to earnest UFO researchers, but at least they should no longer feel alone and marginalized as kooks completely at odds with officialdom.

"Jim," an expert formerly with CIA who continues to consult for the agency, told Russo:

I believe there's a 'core story'...but I don't know what it is. I have been told by people more senior than me that there is some truth to it, but they told me time and time again to stop pursuing it with CIA people and other Intel types. Two very senior officials told me they saw briefing books, [however] the only ones who would be cleared to know the story are the most senior Pentagon career officers...I have spoken to three former Presidents and the subject always comes up, not as a briefing, but they also want to know the truth. But apparently they aren't cleared for it.

If the President of the United States isn't cleared for the CORE STORY, then who is?

Neither Confirm Nor Deny

Quoting former UFO Working Group member, CIA analyst and more recently Office of the Director of National Intelligence (ODNI) MASINT official Ron Pandolfi, from an email to one of his associates who consults to CIA in the private sector, one must generally define:

What you know absolutely to be true.

What you assess to be true based on indirect information.

What you know nothing about at all.

What we know to be absolutely true is this: the U.S. government has been very interested in unusual phenomena for a variety of purposes since the 1950s, and probably much earlier.

Those interests, which have been concealed in deep black shadows under rules of secrecy, range from the use of unexplained phenomena like UFO reports for psychological operations, to the use of psychics to gather intelligence against America's enemies.

(Examples are provided in previous articles in this series, and are available at STARpod.org.)

One thing is clear, regardless of the intended purpose behind government involvement with the very weird:

There remains a clear pattern of government concealment of the core of the story behind the strands of the story known to the public.

As surmised by investigative author Gus Russo in his "Real X-files" article (also available for viewing at the STARpod.org website), the government's motivation "it now appears certain, can be summed up in two words: national security."

A recent example comes by way of Lee Graham, presently retired, who was accused during his years working in the aerospace industry of "asking questions outside his need to know."

Graham continues to ask questions by taking advantage of the Freedom of Information Act.

Time and again the government has denied Graham's FOIA requests on the grounds of national security.

Graham recently appealed a request concerning extraterrestrial artificially controlled objects allegedly detected by an American early warning satellite.

The Department of the Air Force, Washington, D.C. replied:

*You submitted FOIA requests...requesting copies of a satellite related record depicting an image allegedly taken by a DSP Infrared Telescope of an explosion occurring in Kokomo, Indiana and for the records allegedly depicting the UFO "Fast Walker" detected by one of the DSP Infrared Telescopes on May 5, 1984. FOIA Exemption 1, 5 U.S.C. & 552 (b) (1), permits the withholding of information specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive Order (E.O.), currently E.O. 12958, as amended, to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy if properly classified pursuant to such E.O. Therefore, the Air Force can neither confirm nor deny the existence of the information you have requested.

This "can neither confirm nor deny" escape clause is known as the "Glomar Response," named after the once super-secret CIA vessel used to recover a sunken Soviet nuclear submarine.

According to a review of a previous and related Graham filing found at a Department of Energy website, the "Glomar Response" is required "where the existence or non-existence of requested documents is itself a classified fact exempt from disclosure ... or where admission that documents exist would indicate that the agency was involved in a certain issue ... or that an individual is the target of investigation or surveillance ... [or where] the existence or non-existence of requested documents is classified."

It would have been much easier for the Air Force to respond, "we have no records on file where a DSP satellite has detected the presence of an extraterrestrial object."

Unless ... perhaps, there is more to the story.

Graham is not alone in having risked his career by asking questions "outside of his need to know."

Others, placed much higher in government, have done the same. If they are to be believed, some of the UFO information exists even outside of the President's need to know.

It isn't hard to find persons of intelligence -- or persons from an intelligence agency of the U.S. government -- who are involved at some level of interest with the UFO issue. UFO interests come from top level CIA technology analysts, like Ron Pandolfi, who admitted in a covertly tape recorded phone conversation with a foreign national to having been a member of the once secret "UFO Working Group." They come from former astronauts, like Dr. Edgar Mitchell, one of twelve human beings to have walked on the moon. And they are discussed by numerous lesser known experts who have heard the rumors or seen the classified documents first hand.

Over the past ten years the evidence has continued to mount in favor of the involvement of the government of the United States with the alleged "extraterrestrial presence."

For some, like Dr. Christopher "Kit" Green, even the existence or nonexistence of the mystery remains concealed and may be "legally protected."

Green's career at CIA included work on the Glomar recovery project and his involvement in the early days of psychic warfare research at the Stanford Research Institute, a matter of the record where he is named by Ken Kress in a declassified edition of the CIA's Studies In Intelligence.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Green has since left CIA but continues as a consultant to the government. He is also a member of the National Academies of Science / Defense Intelligence Agency TIGER Committee, where he provides expert analysis on emerging defense applications in the field of neuroscience.

The TIGER Committee is notable for membership which includes Ruth David, the former head of CIA Science and Technology, and John Gannon, former CIA Deputy Director for Intelligence.

Green's past and present position and his involvement with government interests in phenomenology have made him an unwitting target of considerable gossip on the Internet.

In January of 2006, in a privately distributed email list, Green referenced a discussion of exotic propulsion and energy topics at one of the TIGER meetings. Exotic energy concepts include so-called zero point energy or vacuum energy, which many physicists consider the 21st century equivalent of the perpetual motion machine. Zero point energy is also closely associated with the "reverse engineering" of UFO propulsion systems.

I alluded to the TIGER meetings in a series of articles called "The Psi Spy," which eventually led to USAF consultant Eric Davis stating, "I have no knowledge" of the DIA involvement, during an interview with George Knapp on the Coast to Coast AM radio program.

One message forwarded to me in January of 2006 appeared designed to connect Ron Pandolfi, the previously mentioned CIA analyst from the UFO Working Group, then at the DIA, to the TIGER committee:

Ron P told me that you very likely know the names of all the members of the National Academy of Science "UFO" TIGER team. If this is true, could you please tell me who they are. I have come up with something that he wants briefed to them.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Clearly someone was pursuing an agenda to link Pandolfi and the UFO topic to the TIGER committee.

And hidden in that linkage were seeds of a tale spun of spies, lies, and a polygraph tape incident.

At the core of this particular story: allegations that TIGER's Dr. John Gannon was involved in covertly spread UFO tales on the Internet. And a series of deliberately leaked email messages forwarded from Dr. Ron Pandolfi.

Was a private intelligence operation behind the scheme?

Unconventional Methods

To understand the UFO tales of spies, lies, and polygraph tape, one must first become familiar with the key players sitting at the spy game table, and learn why they are important to U.S. National Security.

Dr. Ron Pandolfi, a former CIA analyst recently with the ODNI, has a reputation for using "unconventional methods."

Dr. Pandolfi's prior use of "unconventional methods" (while investigating missile technology transfer to China during the Clinton administration) landed him in front of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, and would eventually launch a Justice Department investigation into the actions of his superiors at CIA.

The drama, which was initiated by the explosion of a Chinese rocket leading to technical assistance provided by Hughes, was reported by several mainstream media outlets including the New York Times (for background see the on-line STARpod.org "Pandolfi file" archives from STARstream Research).

A few years before being called to testify in the closed SSCI hearings, Pandolfi received a call from a foreign national using the alias "Dr. Armen Victorian."

During a lengthy phone conversation "Dr. Victorian" grilled Pandolfi on his involvement with the official weirdness that had transpired at the DIA in the mid-1980s.

The DIA had been connecting their ultra-secret psychic spy research, which included plans to track Soviet submarines using "anomalous mental phenomena," to reports of unidentified flying objects.

At one point in the conversation Pandolfi mentions former New York Times journalist Howard Blum and his book Out There.

Blum's narrative was built around his exposure of a secret government "UFO Working Group."

In the recorded conversation obtained by STARstream Research, Pandolfi nonchalantly tells Dr. Victorian, "I was a member of that working group."

(An excerpt of Pandolfi discussing the working group is available to download as an MP3 file at the STARpod.org website.)

Pandolfi goes on to discuss numerous points of interest to UFO researchers, noting that his own interest in the UFO subject should not be interpreted as representing official CIA involvement.

(Pandolfi's most recently confirmed position was with the MASINT Committee of the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, as witnessed by an open MITRE JASON study initiated by Pandolfi from his DIA based office. The Office of the Director of National Intelligence is the highest publicly acknowledged intelligence authority in the United States government. The President of the United States is briefed by the Director of National Intelligence, a job formerly handled by the Director of Central Intelligence.)

(JASON is a group of elite scientific experts providing consultation services to the government.)

The JASON study initiated by Pandolfi debunked a Chinese-American research collaboration into the theory and application of "high frequency gravity waves" (HFGW) for communication and surveillance.

Some theories of HFGW are loosely related to the esoteric research of UFO propulsion systems, including the so-called Podkletnov effect, named after the Russian experimentalist who briefly dazzled the aerospace industry, including NASA, with claims of anti-gravity effects and gravity-like force beams.

Many of Pandolfi's former CIA associates have moved into important private sector homeland security related positions, including Dr. Ruth David, Dr. John Gannon, and Pandolfi's former mentor, Dr. Christopher "Kit" Green.

David, Gannon, and Green share membership on the DIA National Academy of Science "Technology Insight Gauge Evaluate and Review" TIGER committee -- the same committee alleged to have a "UFO" team, according to an email forwarded to me by Dr. Jack Sarfatti, a physicist based in San Francisco.

The originator of the email forwarded by Sarfatti was someone named Mark, who wrote:

Ron P told me that you very likely know the names of all the members of the National Academy of Science "UFO" TIGER team. If this is true, could you please tell me who they are. I have come up with something that he wants briefed to them.

The JASON HFGW study notes:

We are especially grateful to Ronald Pandolfi and Mark Pesses of ODNI for their continued help in arranging briefers and documentation.

Sarfatti claims to have been present at the Pandolfi MITRE JASON briefings.

Pandolfi's response to my inquiry about Sarfatti's contribution was typically ambiguous.

"It is up to Jack [Sarfatti] whether to mention his participation in the JASON meeting, but I do not recall Jack bringing up Chiao's work. Perhaps he mentioned it during breaks or lunch."

Dr. Raymond Chiao, a respected expert on quantum physics including the real science behind high frequency gravity wave research, was notably missing from the MITRE JASON study.

The MITRE JASON study was released to the public in October of 2008.

When the MITRE JASON study was released I forwarded the link to Dr. Chiao for his comments.

Dr. Chiao responded to my email and copied his response to several persons in the government, including persons with email addresses at the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA).

(Dr. Chiao's HFGW work is completely independent of the research debunked by the MITRE JASON report, and appears inexplicably missing from the study. Later I raised a concern that Dr. Chiao's work might be inadvertently negatively impacted by Pandolfi's study.)

I blogged about the MITRE HFGW study a year before it was released and distributed to the public by the Federation of American Scientists (FAS), based upon input from emails and multiple sources including Dan Smith.

A year later the release of the JASON report provided confirmation of my own sources' information.

It is worth noting that Pandolfi's move from CIA to the MASINT Committee was first reported (correctly) by Dan Smith at his Best Possible World blog, a strange mixture of "end of the world" philosophy, loosely concealed spy talk, and "exopolitics" (the movement by certain groups to politicize the expose' of the government's alleged role in concealing knowledge of alien visitations from the public, as well as claimed technological benefits from the alleged contact).

(Dan Smith is the son of Dan Throop Smith, who was President Eisenhower's tax advisor.)

Smith remains a good friend of Dr. Pandolfi, and often "interprets" Pandolfi's activities at his blog, and at the Internet's Open Minds Forum.

Smith often recounts the tale of his first encounters with Pandolfi, when Ron allegedly told Smith he was "going to Los Alamos to see the aliens."

The reemergence of the extraterrestrial intelligence antics began shortly after 9/11.

I first reported on Kit Green, Hal Puthoff, and Ron Pandolfi's UFO interests crossing paths with the DIA TIGER Committee in early 2006.

Later that same year, accusations of DIA connections to UFO tales on the Internet were squarely aimed at Dr. John Gannon of the TIGER committee, and this appears to have triggered another unconventional response from Dr. Pandolfi.

Dr. Gannon is the highly respected former CIA Director for Intelligence, who was also involved in the creation of the Department of Homeland Security. Dr. Gannon is currently with defense contractor BAE Systems, the parent of another UFO propulsion effort called Project Greenglow.

Pandolfi has since moved on to another government office, based upon reports from both Dan Smith and Mark Pesses of the ODNI MASINT. His new assignment remains unknown.

The release of the MITRE JASON study appears intended to be an officially sanctioned "outing" of Pandolfi. Names of active government officials are often redacted from officially released documents.

When I was first made aware of Dr. Pandolfi's position at ODNI, Pandolfi requested that I remove his association with DIA and MASINT from one of my articles.

In addition to the testimony provided by Smith, an email was forwarded to me from Pandolfi confirming that he was working out of an office operated by the DIA. Some email messages sent by Pandolfi appeared to have originated from DIA servers.

In 2006, an acting source to STARstream Research (STARpod.org) from the United Kingdom visited with Smith, Ron Pandolfi and Pandolfi's former spouse, who works for MITRE.

Pandolfi later reported to us that our source, the foreign national, had asked "inappropriate questions" about his "real work."

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Both our source and Mr. Dan Smith, who was also present, deny this.

One possibly sensitive topic of conversation may have been the CIA's 1970s Glomar recovery operation. Detailed information concerning the Glomar "Project Jennifer" recovery remains a closely held secret.

(It was recently revealed that "Jennifer" was actually called AZORIAN.)

According to Mr. Smith, as a young college student Pandolfi was visited by "a couple of suits" when he questioned the true nature of the Glomar operation, based upon lab analysis of alleged Glomar samples provided by Pandolfi's uncle.

According to his (unclassified) CV, the former CIA Senior Analyst Dr. Christopher "Kit" Green was also involved in the Glomar Explorer Project.

The Glomar Explorer was designed to covertly recover a sunken Soviet nuclear submarine from the ocean floor.

Green's CV tells of his past role at CIA:

Reporting to the Director of the Agency, Dr. Green was the Senior Division Analyst with the Office of Scientific and Weapons Intelligence ... His medical specialty is forensic medicine and toxicology, and his doctoral work in neurophysiology concerned human biochemical functioning of the brain ... Dr. Green has also been responsible for evaluations of other forensic issues such as the use of novel techniques for assassination by Soviet and Bulgarian services...

The on-line version of one episode of the PBS series Secrets of the Dead tells the story of how Dr. Green solved the "umbrella assassination" mystery.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

http://www.pbs.org/wnet/secrets/previous_seasons/case_umbrella/interview.html

Dr. Green was also at the center of CIA sponsored research (conducted at the Stanford Research Institute) to develop psychic intelligence collection against the Soviet Union.

A key researcher at SRI was Dr. Hal Puthoff, whose private institute focuses on UFO-related exotic energy production. While at SRI, Puthoff and his associates were funded by various government agencies with the goal of developing an operational psychic spy unit within the Intelligence Community. That goal was effectively reached during the 1980s, and managed by the DIA (Defense Intelligence Agency).

The existence of the DIA umbrella for paranormal research was illegally reported in a graphic chart broadcast over national television, and presumably passed to Russia via satellite hook-up, during the 1988 TV special UFO Cover-up Live.

A TOP SECRET document dated 1 May 1986, released by the CIA in 2003, and signed by Leonard H. Perroots, Lt. General, USAF, Director, to the Deputy Secretary of Defense states:

*Initial applications will be limited to tasks where psychoenergetics [a generic term for various psychic skills] data complement information from other intelligence collection sources... Psychoenergetics data may also have potential in a tip-off role (e.g. predict new terrorist activity).

Shortly after 9/11 British author Jon Ronson interviewed psychic superstar Uri Geller in London.

According to Ronson, Uri Geller hinted that he had been "reactivated" to use his psychic skills in the war on terror. When Ronson pushed Geller for a name, Geller told him the man who had recalled his talents for espionage was named "Ron."

Ronson's search for the mysterious "Ron" is told in his book The Men Who Stare at Goats, which was recently produced as a fictionalized film adaptation starring George Clooney.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Perroots, then acting Director of the DIA, continued:

An Intelligence Community Task Coordinating Group has been established to identify potential tasks for consideration in future SUN STREAK [codename for this DIA program] operations. Members of this group are senior executives from DIA, CIA, AIA, AF/IN, DNI, C3I and NSA.

This information was "Above Top Secret" in the sense that it was highly compartmentalized which limited access on a strict "need to know" basis.

The TOP SECRET document clearly spells out involvement by a major segment of the U.S. Intelligence Community, including CIA and NSA.

In 1995 the CIA was handed control of the DIA program which effectively killed the DIA psychic operations. Some individuals, including Commander L.R. Bremseth of the United States Navy, have speculated that CIA's killing of psychic warfare operations was meant for public consumption, and that the real programs were taken deeper into the black.

The fact that so much of the DIA program had been exposed before it was declassified in 1995 lends some support to this idea.

As for Dr. Green, according to his CV, he left the CIA officially in March of 1985, prior to the operational unit and the IC Task Coordinating Group. However, Green was a "Member of the Army Science Board 1985-1995" and continues to consult on issues of national security.

The threads connecting Pandolfi, Green, Puthoff and the SRI psychic research, and the allegations concerning our primary source asking "inappropriate questions" superficially converge on the Glomar recovery effort, a UFO mystery reported by a key DIA psychic, and the mysterious sinking of the Soviet K-129 nuclear submarine.

According to some rumored accounts, Ingo Swann, the man responsible for developing the methodology used by DIA's psychic spies, may have identified a saucer shaped UFO attacking the Soviet K-129 submarine.

The K-129 has been at the center of numerous conspiracies, the least of which is the actual CIA recovery of parts of the vessel. One conspiracy theory places the K-129 as ready to launch a nuclear armed missile at the United States as part of a false flag operation.

UFOs are often reported near government nuclear weapons facilities. The sinking of the K-129 by a flying saucer at the key moment just prior to unleashing nuclear destruction against the United States fits neatly into the ever-expanding UFO mythology of extraterrestrial intervention in human affairs.

It would soon be apparent that the "extraterrestrial presence" was tasking members of the terrestrial-based AVIARY UFO group to spread a mind-seducing "alien virus" over the Internet.

Washington D.C. was the target of this "Avian Viral Invasion" and the Office of the President of the United States was in sight.

Forbidden Topics

One man, and one man alone appears to occupy the best possible position to probe into the facts, fantasies, and fallacies behind the real-life "X-files" of UFOs, alien visitors, spies, lies, and polygraph tape.

And it was this same official, CIA's "rocket man" Ronald (Ron) S. Pandolfi, who in the latter half of 2006, forwarded a series of emails discussing a possible violation of national security.

(Note: In writing this account I have taken into consideration Pandolfi's role in providing the messages, his friend Dan Smith's analysis, as well as the opinion of our contributing source.)

The series of messages provided by Pandolfi tie together several threads directed towards government disclosure of the alleged "phenomenology problem" as well as raise new questions about the methods, motivations, and sources behind government-related persons and their involvement with forbidden topics.

To date, in this series I have presented an overview of how verified members of the American Intelligence Community (IC) have infiltrated and monitored various groups interested in extraterrestrial derived technologies: ideas inspired by the world of science fiction with the potential, no matter how remote, to be realized at some point in the future. 64

Among the various ideas under consideration are telepathy, psychic perception (remote viewing), precognition of future events for the war on terror, anti-gravity, gravity-like force beams, clusters of electrical charge for use as weapons, extracting energy from empty space, wormholes and warps drives, to name but a few.

This is the real-life "Fringe" of "Making STAR TREK Real" (coined by Jack Sarfatti) also known as the "Real X-files."

Some of these far-out ideas have already been funded by the United States government, as shown in the declassified record.

In this chapter, however, the tale turns much darker.

The messages in question appear to have been exchanged by Pandolfi with Rick Doty, a former USAF AFOSI agent working for New Mexico law enforcement, and Dr. Christopher "Kit" Green, who remains close to some of the top scientific intelligence advisers to the U.S. government.

Among the intelligence circles of Pandolfi, Green, and Doty, the rumor of extraterrestrial alien contact with the government of the United States of America is called the CORE STORY.

In response to our inquiry, Dr. Pandolfi presented an explanation for why he released a group of email messages through a foreign national, who in 2006 also provided STARstream Research and STARpod.org with intelligence gathered during a personal investigation, citing sensitive sources and methods.

Dr. Green (who expressed personal outrage over the release) raised the issue of the ethics of spreading what had been understood to be personal and professional confidential information he had provided to Dr. Pandolfi. In addition Dr. Green noted that some of the exchanges were conducted over official government channels using DIA email servers.

Dr. Green, in spite of his impressive record and intelligence connections, appeared willing to have his personal response restrained by the fact that Pandolfi was positioned as a Senior Intelligence Adviser to the Director of National Intelligence.

At one point in the exchange Pandolfi told Doty the affair in question was outside the legal framework, which inspired the STARstream Research series EXEMPT FROM LEGAL RECOURSE:

"You have no legal recourse. I am interpreting your threat to the Official of the Director of National Intelligence as potentially outside the legal framework, and I will advise the FBI and your supervisor to take appropriate actions."

Dr. Pandolfi and Dr. Green are both veterans of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Dr. Green left the agency in 1985, but according to his CV continues to provide professional (and classified) support to the U.S. Intelligence Community. His current presence on the DIA National Academies of Science TIGER Committee requires security clearance.

Dr. Pandolfi moved to the MASINT Committee of the Office of the Director of National Intelligence at the Defense Intelligence Agency, as noted in an official ODNI MITRE study obtained by the Federation of American Scientists.

Pandolfi remains a good friend of Dan T. Smith, another source from the private sector, who often provides details of Dr. Pandolfi's activities at his Best Possible World blog and at the Open Minds Forum on the Internet. Many items concerning Pandolfi's interests and activities, first mentioned by Mr. Smith, have later been verified.

We obtained copies of the Pandolfi distributed email messages from our acting source based in London, who in 2006 was a contributing journalist to STARstream Research. Several months after meeting with Pandolfi in 2006, our source was instructed to pass the email messages to the managers of another Internet forum, Reality Uncovered, as authorized by Dr. Pandolfi.

It is generally assumed this tale began in late 2005 when an anonymous source began providing details about "SERPO," an alleged human-extraterrestrial biological entity exchange program.

The real story, as best as can be discerned from additional information provided in early to mid 2005, may have been initiated by an earlier effort by Dan Smith to reach then President George W. Bush concerning the alleged "extraterrestrial presence."

It is Mr. Smith's opinion that a previous incident involving his sister, brother-in-law, and a gift of Presidential cuff-links from the elder President George Bush, which exploded into a mainstream media expose' in the Washington Post, is related to his personal UFO-phenomenology disclosure effort.

According to Smith, his sister blamed the relationship between Smith and Pandolfi for the Washington Post article.

As for any Presidential involvement with the I.C. CORE STORY, one source to investigative author Gus Russo explained that "apparently the President does not have need to know" the truth behind the extraterrestrial UFO tales.

In the 2005 series of leaked messages, the originating source wrote, "For the time being, I do not need any additional named sources. I just need reasonable confidence that I have a reliable independent source for the CORE STORY. Despite Ron's occasional protestations, you remain my first preference."

This series of messages, which we refer to as "the team of three," involved discussion of how to best promote government disclosure of the alleged extraterrestrial CORE STORY, confirmation of some related details from the late DCI Richard Helms, and one team member offering that "I will think about this seriously, as long as our three-person team (you, me, and Ron) remains protected."

He then added, "I will cut and run the first instant I get a whiff that some list ... or whomever gets interested in me."

It was later added:

To the extent the 'core story' or any part of it is true, I believe it is being properly and legally protected. To the extent it is not true, or partly not true, that part is delusional or at best, rumor.

Taken out of context, the above might appear as the smoking gun for a UFO conspiracy, however:

I have no intention trying to 'out' a story that may be legally being protected. In fact, I have taken an oath to not do so on my own recognizance.

And that, it would appear, is the conundrum faced by anyone who would bring the CORE STORY to the attention of the President of the United States.

To the extent that there is any reality to the CORE STORY, and if it is true that the President, our Commander in Chief, has been isolated from the core intelligence of alien visitation by "no need to know," any valid disclosure effort must rely on creating enough curiosity for the White House to issue a statement, followed by official and mainstream media interest in tracking down the nature of black operations deemed too sensitive for Presidential knowledge.

Like you, I will take my counsel from Ron. I want no more involvement in the soap opera.

Curiously, as 2005 wound down, the UFO CORE STORY "soap opera" would reappear on the Internet from a source we call "SERPO-A," taken from a quasi-anagram of the merging of "soap" and "opera."

"SERPO-A," or "SERPO Anonymous," promoted a human-extraterrestrial exchange tale first told on a national TV special broadcast in 1988 called UFO Cover-up Live by a source identified as FALCON of the AVIARY.

During that broadcast, which included a satellite feed to Soviet Russia, the existence of then SECRET paranormal research managed by the Defense Intelligence Agency was illegally revealed to the world.

By early 2006, the SERPO tale had infected various UFO groups and their related Internet discussions, and was continuing to spread.

Many, including Ron Pandolfi himself, would point to former AFOSI agent Rick Doty as the most likely source of the SERPO material -- "SERPO-A" -- and by June of 2006, our sources informed us of Pandolfi's intention to use an "unconventional method" to remove Doty from the picture.

On September 2, 2006, Pandolfi (taken from the messages Pandolfi released to our source) wrote to his colleague:

Your expansion of the story of the two DIA employees visiting LANL and being known to others has me concerned. The names you provided do not correspond to any DIA employees. There are no people with those names that have TS//SCI clearances. If the story of the sources/visitors is true, they are falsely representing themselves as DIA employees, possibly to access sensitive facilities and acquire classified information for a foreign service.

Later, Pandolfi would write to Rick Doty:

My colleague brought this issue to the Defense Intelligence Agency and the Office of the Director of National Intelligence in the course of his official duties. I opened a direct dialog with you in order to provide you with an opportunity to provide additional information, and my colleague offered to facilitate your cooperation. You did not agree to cooperate via either venue. Rather you provided extraneous information and a string of threats. My official report will note your refusal to cooperate and include your e-mails containing threats.

SERPO - A: The John Gannon Affair

"Look up John Gannon ... top secret and didn't come from me." My contributing source then added, "Nudge, nudge, wink wink!" and I knew a new spy game was afoot.

In their search to know the future, CIA and other elements in the U.S. Intelligence Community have been shadowed by a growing number of private "intelligence" operations.

I wondered about their Internet presence as new clues to the UFO spy game came into focus.

The tales of spies, lies, and polygraph tape emerge at an unexpected intersection where the CIA, 9/11, UFOs, and a CORE STORY of an extraterrestrial presence are played as spy games on the Internet.

And by September of 2006, the UFO spy game was taken to a new level with allegations that John Gannon, a highly respected senior intelligence official, was one of the players.

The story would soon come into better focus with a series of emails deliberately leaked by Dr. Ron Pandolfi, a former CIA scientist who had moved to the newly formed Office of the Director of National Intelligence.

One source noted, "The focus of attention has been on the alleged role of John Gannon as the original 'anonymous' source of the SERPO material."

Ah yes, I understood: SERPO, the Space Alien Internet "Soap Opera" alleged to have been delivered by "Source A" or SERPO-A, which curiously is an anagram of "OPERAS."

Sometimes "operas" provide convenient and deniable cover for "operations."

Was there more to SERPO than a nice little story intended to entertain the rank and file of UFO believers?

In less than a year SERPO had infected vast segments of the Internet underground with a tale of a government sanctioned alien and human exchange program.

Another source added that it had been reported that "John [Gannon] would neither confirm nor deny his involvement."

Ron Pandolfi, operating from the DIA for ODNI MASINT, wrote to a colleague and associate of John Gannon:

You and I both have interests and reasons for having interests in getting at the truth regarding activities that potentially threaten national security. Let me be clear...I am not implying any potential truth in the SERPO story. But behind any story there are motivations, players, and possibly facts that are rather disturbing. As such some of us are forced to ask some questions and try to get some answers.

John Gannon, the former CIA Deputy Director for Intelligence, was the chairman of the National Intelligence Council in 1999 when a report was produced warning that suicide bombers "could crash-land an aircraft packed with high explosives into the Pentagon, the headquarters of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), or the White House."

Gannon confirmed to CBS News that "officials long have known a suicide hijacking was a threat."

The 1999 report, produced during the Clinton Administration, mirrored earlier warnings produced by America's psychic spies, going back to the 1980s.

An unofficial memo, issued during a 1983 training exercise to enhance psychic intelligence, warned of a future plot to crash a jet aircraft packed with explosives into the U.S. Capitol Building.

In an eerie foreshadowing of 9/11, the memo predicted that a foreign pilot of Mideastern origin, with a name that "sounds like Jerry, Gerard, or Geraldo" would fly the suicide mission.

The name of the actual terrorist pilot who flew the failed attempt against the U.S. Capitol Building on 9/11 was Jarrah.

Gannon has since moved from government service to the private sector as Vice President for Global Analysis with BAE Systems. Along the way he served as Staff Director of the House Homeland Security Committee, and as team leader in the White House's Transitional Planning Office for the Department of Homeland Security.

In his book Spies For Hire, author Tim Shorrock describes John Gannon's BAE Global Analysis unit as "a miniature version of the U.S. Intelligence Community" with "a staff of more than eight hundred analysts with security clearances."

When Shorrock interviewed John Gannon in the Fall of 2006, just as the "spies, lies, and polygraph tape affair" came to my attention, Gannon told Shorrock "that contracting had probably gone too far in intelligence."

Gannon told Shorrock that a good amount of private intelligence is bad, and "there's a lot of real hucksters out there."

Dr. John Gannon serves on the Defense Intelligence Agency TIGER standing committee with Dr. Ruth David, the former Deputy Director for Science and Technology at CIA, and Dr. Christopher Kit Green, a former senior analyst with CIA who continues to consult on matters of intelligence for the government.

The TIGER committee was first connected to "UFO physics" in early 2006 when it was revealed by Dr. Green that the exotic propulsion and new energy research of Dr. Hal Puthoff had "been tabled a a recent meeting."

Early meetings of TIGER included "Air Force and Department of Defense Aerospace Propulsion Needs."

I was alerted to the "John Gannon Affair" by contributing sources to STARstream Research on August 25th, 2006, who had brought forward several items suggestive of espionage to Dr. Ronald (Ron) S. Pandolfi.

Ron Pandolfi was known for "operating outside of customary channels" during his previous national security investigations. He had previously acquired the reputation of being "CIA & UFO" point of contact.

One of the other principles involved in the "John Gannon Affair" also expressed the opinion that a privately-based intelligence service might have been playing the spies with their own spy games on the Internet.

Soon the focus of the "leaked" version of Pandolfi's investigation would be directed at Richard (Rick) C. Doty, who was best known for morphing his role at the Air Force Office of Special Investigation in the 1980s into a small cottage industry of alien involvement with the US government.

A source wrote to Pandolfi, "When I pressed the point about Kit's [Dr. Green's] involvement, you shifted the culpability to Rick Doty...The idea that Rick is the sole contributor to the notion of high-level complicity in ufology has never been sustainable to scrutiny."

It was commonly known that Dr. Green had an interest in "exotic phenomena" and "human effects" going back to the CIA's covert psychic research program at the Stanford Research Institute in the 1970s.

According to Dr. Green's TIGER Committee biographical sketch, Green "holds the National Intelligence Medal and is a fellow in the American Academy of Forensic Sciences" following a "distinguished career with the CIA" where he was "senior division analyst and assistant national intelligence officer for science and technology."

Someone intended to use the Internet to associate the TIGER with UFOs and the SERPO soap opera. Adding John Gannon's name to the mix had only stirred the waters.

By September 1st Pandolfi emailed one of his sources:

"I have concluded that the J.G. connection was fabricated, most likely by Doty with possibly the assistance of others."

At this point I was advised that the email stream involving Pandolfi and Green concerning Rick Doty was "being staged."

Pandolfi's source replied:

Don't tell me that this man is working on his own! He takes direction from someone in Washington. If his work is legitimate government work I have no right prying, whether I agree with the methods employed, or not. If it isn't legitimate, then he is fair game.

Within a few days Pandolfi had gone from paying his teenagers to delete SEPPO-related emails to actively engaging the issue over "national security concerns" with allegations of questionable persons and access to government facilities.

Pandolfi wrote to his colleague:

Your expansion of the story of the two DIA employees visiting LANL [Los Alamos National Laboratory] and being known to others has me concerned. The names you provided do not correspond to any DIA employees. There are no people with these names that have TS SCI clearances. If the story of the sources/visitors is true, they are falsely representing themselves as DIA employees, possibly to access sensitive facilities and acquire classified information for a foreign service.

Rick Doty had allegedly given access to a British documentary film crew, a well established method of obtaining intelligence from sensitive government facilities.

Spy Games Revealed

This is a tale about a tale, filled with spies, lies, and polygraph tape.

The core of this story involves high level government intelligence persons and SERPO, a "soap opera" about US government contact with an extraterrestrial alien intelligence.

For some, SERPO may be an entertaining work of fiction, virally amplified to mythic status by the Internet.

For others, including a high level official from the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, former CIA analyst Ron Pandolfi; and Kit Green, another former senior CIA division head who consults on national security issues of rapidly advancing technologies for the DIA TIGER Committee, more may be at stake.

The "fall guy" in our tale, who continues to be the target of allegations of creating and distributing the UFO CORE STORY, is Richard (Rick) C. Doty, a law enforcement officer in New Mexico.

During the 1980s, while working as a counterintelligence operative for the USAF (according to Doty's own testimony on national radio), Doty emerged as the point man spreading the extraterrestrial intelligence trail.

Doty remains the most publicly visible player in the UFO spy game.

Stepping forward from the shadows (largely through his civilian proxy, Dan T. Smith) CIA's Dr. Ron Pandolfi provided a measured revelation of his interests and investigations into the extraterrestrial CORE STORY, and more serious concerns of core tales used to access real core government secrets.

In June 2005, Dan T. Smith contacted Dr. Kit Green about his intention to pursue government disclosure of the CORE STORY.

Smith cited several items which he believed signaled the possibility of a core revelation, including Pandolfi's "recent elevation at DNI [Office of the Director of National Intelligence]," a book by former USAF Captain Robert Collins which claimed to reveal the details behind an outlandish government cover-up of the UFO CORE STORY, and a proposed meeting to approach Dr. Henry Kissinger, who was rumored to have held the highest level position within an alleged UFO committee at the National Security Council.

"Mr. Smith is correct regarding my position with the Office of the Director of National Intelligence," Pandolfi would later write to one researcher, a fact now verified by the official release of Pandolfi's DIA/MASINT high frequency gravity wave study.

"Currently my component is housed within a DIA facility and we use their servers for Internet access so my official e-mail ends with @dia.mil. My close friend and colleague Dr. Green has investigated the SERPO story and may be able to offer some clues as to who might be behind the story."

A few months earlier Pandolfi had questioned whether the seduction of otherworldly sources within the CORE STORY had been used to penetrate the blackness of government secrecy.

Pandolfi's personal use of "sources and methods" was, as always, unconventional.

In June 2006 Mr. Smith described a conversation with Pandolfi involving the UFO CORE STORY and a previous revelation of government complicity of the extraterrestrial kind.

In the 1980s, UFO revelations were largely driven by a series of "leaked" but unconfirmed documents about a government group known as MAJESTIC, presumably managed by the Joint Chiefs of Staff as MAJIC (JIC being the ubiquitous acronym for Joint Intelligence Committee) and under command of MJ-12.

Over time the ever growing number of MJ related documents were debunked by skeptics for various flaws and their

Spy Games Revealed

This is a tale about a tale, filled with spies, lies, and polygraph tape.

The core of this story involves high level government intelligence persons and SERPO, a "soap opera" about US government contact with an extraterrestrial alien intelligence.

For some, SERPO may be an entertaining work of fiction, virally amplified to mythic status by the Internet.

For others, including a high level official from the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, former CIA analyst Ron Pandolfi; and Kit Green, another former senior CIA division head who consults on national security issues of rapidly advancing technologies for the DIA TIGER Committee, more may be at stake.

The "fall guy" in our tale, who continues to be the target of allegations of creating and distributing the UFO CORE STORY, is Richard (Rick) C. Doty, a law enforcement officer in New Mexico.

During the 1980s, while working as a counterintelligence operative for the USAF (according to Doty's own testimony on national radio), Doty emerged as the point man spreading the extraterrestrial intelligence trail.

Doty remains the most publicly visible player in the UFO spy game.

Stepping forward from the shadows (largely through his civilian proxy, Dan T. Smith) CIA's Dr. Ron Pandolfi provided a measured revelation of his interests and investigations into the extraterrestrial CORE STORY, and more serious concerns of core tales used to access real core government secrets.

In June 2005, Dan T. Smith contacted Dr. Kit Green about his intention to pursue government disclosure of the CORE STORY.

Smith cited several items which he believed signaled the possibility of a core revelation, including Pandolfi's "recent elevation at DNI [Office of the Director of National Intelligence]," a book by former USAF Captain Robert Collins which claimed to reveal the details behind an outlandish government cover-up of the UFO CORE STORY, and a proposed meeting to approach Dr. Henry Kissinger, who was rumored to have held the highest level position within an alleged UFO committee at the National Security Council.

"Mr. Smith is correct regarding my position with the Office of the Director of National Intelligence," Pandolfi would later write to one researcher, a fact now verified by the official release of Pandolfi's DIA/MASINT high frequency gravity wave study.

"Currently my component is housed within a DIA facility and we use their servers for Internet access so my official e-mail ends with @dia.mil. My close friend and colleague Dr. Green has investigated the SERPO story and may be able to offer some clues as to who might be behind the story."

A few months earlier Pandolfi had questioned whether the seduction of otherworldly sources within the CORE STORY had been used to penetrate the blackness of government secrecy.

Pandolfi's personal use of "sources and methods" was, as always, unconventional.

In June 2006 Mr. Smith described a conversation with Pandolfi involving the UFO CORE STORY and a previous revelation of government complicity of the extraterrestrial kind.

In the 1980s, UFO revelations were largely driven by a series of "leaked" but unconfirmed documents about a government group known as MAJESTIC, presumably managed by the Joint Chiefs of Staff as MAJIC (JIC being the ubiquitous acronym for Joint Intelligence Committee) and under command of MJ-12.

Over time the ever growing number of MJ related documents were debunked by skeptics for various flaws and their idiosyncratic design.

Smith reported:

Ron [Pandolfi] is now stating that some of the faked MJ-12 documents contained actually declassified information unrelated to UFO's...Ron wondered out loud if persons involved in the MJ-12 document affair would respond to an FBI warrant concerning the transfer of classified material to the KGB.

The related 1988 national broadcast of UFO Cover-Up Live, that had brought together American intelligence sources identified only by bird names (the so-called AVIARY) with Soviet UFO researchers, revealed SECRET government information hidden within the broadcast.

Two "birds" from the AVIARY appeared during the broadcast: FALCON and CONDOR.

One man whose name is often identified with investigation of the AVIAN/MJ-12 Affair is USAF Colonel Barry Hennessey.

It was Pandolfi who had initially blessed Mr. Smith's efforts to mention Barry Hennessey in a public forum, as early as June 2006.

According to Mr. Smith, Pandolfi had been searching for traces of the classified portion of the USAF BLUE BOOK during a visit to Wright Patterson Air Force Base.

BLUE BOOK was an acknowledged Air Force investigation into the UFO phenomena which had been closed down at the end of the 1960s. According to Smith, Pandolfi was then working with someone who had been involved with BLUE BOOK.

Many have questioned the veracity of Mr. Smith regarding his reporting of the activities of his friend Ron Pandolfi, which Smith loosely conceals using "code names" wrapped inside of his own philosophical meanderings.

Pandolfi would later confirm to another researcher interested in the origins of the SERPO tale:

"Although sometimes acting in the capacity of the insane, Mr. Smith is very clever, capable, and well informed."

Mr. Smith tells his version of the story of the events that immediately followed the 1988 AVIARY disclosure:

Colonels Hennessey and Weaver [from the USAF] were called over to the CIA after the 1988 TV show [UFO Cover-Up Live] to discuss Rick Doty's situation. They denied any continuing connection with Doty, claiming he was nothing more than a petty criminal. The alleged proof of that was that Rick Doty had failed a polygraph test relative to his case. Kit Green [a former senior CIA analyst and division head] had [seen] the polygraph charts...the conclusion was that Doty had not lied.

Although the actual meeting was not in question, having been confirmed by both Pandolfi and Green, there was no consensus about the polygraph issue Green allegedly raised with the two men from the USAF.

Smith explained:

When confronted with the evidence, Hennessey and Weaver walked out of the meeting...now that [Ron] has raised the issue of espionage in connection with the Doty case, Hennessey would have even more reason to find out who the [AVIARY] FALCON is, especially since he is now head of security for the Air Force's special access programs.

Pandolfi apparently felt the need to quench the "leak" of his involvement in the search for the FALCON.

In July of 2006, Pandolfi wrote to me requesting certain information be withheld from an impending article.

Pandolfi clarified his position on the Hennessey affair:

It was Doty who claimed Col. Hennessey was the Falcon, and it was Doty who claimed Col. Hennessey had provided him (Doty) with UFO documents for release to the public. My opinion is that Doty personally forged these documents, that he used the FALCON name to cover his tracks, and that he had absolutely no professional or personal relationship with Col. Hennessey." Regardless of any involvement by Hennessey in the FALCON matter, other documents evidence his involvement in dealing with persons snooping for information on the UFO issue.

One 1986 Defense Investigative Service document about defense worker Lee Graham, who doggedly pursued his belief in the extraterrestrial issue using the Freedom of Information Act, noted:

It has come to our attention that Subject [Graham] has had frequent correspondance with the U.S. Air Force regarding UFOs. His correspondence may be reviewed by contacting Col. Barry Hennessey, USAF, Office of Special Projects, at the Pentagon.

Lee Graham sent me a hand-written letter, purportedly from the late John Andrews of Testor Corp., to the late Ben Rich of Lockheed.

The letter is dated 28 May 1987.

We have (the researcher groups) finally gotten the National Security Council to release a document indicating the NSC Special Studies Project Group known as MJ-12 did indeed exist.

The handwriting in the letter appears to match another document from Graham's FOIA provided DIS file marked UNCLASSIFIED.

Andrews continues:

I have known of MJ-12 for many years even though, officially, it 'didn't exist.' There was an Air Force radar (AC&W) detachment at Sinop, Turkey under the cover of the Turkey-U.S. Logistics Agency (TUSLOG) who tracked Soviet aircraft and, many times UFOs. It was standard for the detachment to forward radar tapes of the UFOs to MJ-12. That was policy. I knew it because a man who was stationed there revealed 'MJ-12' in conversation. It is doubtful he knew how high the MJ-12 group was.

An unrelated source familiar with TUSLOG, who was former USAF and later NSA, was unable to confirm any of this information.

Another letter attributed to John Andrews dated 16 Sep. 1987 describes some of the fallout from the Andrews and Graham attempts to penetrate secret UFO information.

Col. Hennessey (Barry) was in my office yesterday -- perhaps at the same time FBI was talking with you ... [Hennessey] then got on the topic of a Lockheed airplane -- Instructing me to not use its 'F' number in further writing not its codename. He did not ask me how I learned such things and I didn't offer. I -- just guessing -- feel your FBI talk may be related.

On the date in question, Lee Graham was visited by FBI Agent Hurley and another man, concerning information he had received from John Andrews. Agent Hurley later confirmed to Graham's employer, AeroJet, the other gentleman was Special Agent Mickey Wilson of the OSI.

In another letter attributed to Andrews, addressed to "Ron," Andrews writes, "I knew of a NJ-12/MJ-12 long before Bill Moore's papers. I also know AC&W radars of USAF were sending their signal information (when 'UFOs' were picked up) to NJ-12/MJ-12."

According to this letter, the radar data was sent on to USAF SECURITY COMMAND at Medina Base (Medina Annex) at Kelly AFB in Texas.

One letter attributed to Andrews, marked UNCLASSIFIED, states:

Col. Barry Hennessey has been my AFOSI contact ... I should point out FOIA requests to AFOSI, FBI, CIA have all indicated I have never been 'investigated'...

Lee Graham continued to request information from the Air Force.

After receiving confirmation that "some records have surfaced" he received a letter signed by Col. Richard L. Weaver that "the Air Force has no responsive records."

It was Col. Weaver who accompanied Col. Hennessey to the 1988 meeting, according to Smith, Pandolfi and Green.

It is possible that Pandolfi had been sitting on this information for years, and saw the SERPO affair as an opportunity to proceed using unconventional methods.

Controversy surrounded Pandolfi, but history supported his methods.

Pandolfi's previous concerns about Hughes providing the Chinese assistance to improve their missile technology, "were not warmly received back at CIA headquarters," according to New York Times journalist Jeff Gerth, who added "the agency killed his study, called a National Intelligence Estimate [NIE]."

Eventually enough questions were raised about why CIA killed the NIE that Pandolfi was called to testify before closed sessions of the Senate Intelligence Committee. That information remains classified.

By the end of 2006, no one seemed to really know the status of Pandolfi's UFO-related espionage investigation, either.

Pandolfi told one interested party, "Keep in mind that the SERPO storytellers left many false links back to DIA and other intelligence organizations while protecting their own trail with false e-mail addresses."

Strangely enough, the most flammable information had been provided by Pandolfi himself, a few months earlier.

Pandolfi released a series of email exchanges between Pandolfi and Green, concerning Rick Doty, phony DIA persons, SERPO, and the 1980s meeting with USAF Colonels Hennessey and Weaver at Pandolfi's CIA office.

When he learned of the release, Dr. Green was alarmed.

Green immediately raised his concerns that the information he had provided was "requested in an official capacity."

"I am not sure, but I believe it is a federal offense, a felony, for a stated member of the Executive or State governments to disclose publicly information they have requested as official under guise of confidentiality."

Green expressed his personal concerns to a STARstream Research contributing writer in London, who had been given copies for editing and eventual distribution.

"If, however," Green wrote, "any emails that were private from me, or to me, or from the Police Officer to me for Ron, as Ron requested, and they related to what I and the FBI has told me is an official investigation, I will naturally turn the set over to the Justice Department and the New Mexico State Police Internal Affairs office who is investigating the case for the Justice Department, at the Police Officer's request."

One of the messages appeared to contain a potential bombshell concerning an alleged source for the SERPO tale:

I need you to know that Col. Weaver has contacted me and said he is Gene Loscowski. Her [sic] referred in detail to the meeting you and I had with Barry Hennessey about Rick's polygraph records...He quoted what I said, what you did, and the circumstances of the meeting to convince me of who he was. He also told me the essence of the SERPO story was true.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

sources, including the CIA.

There is a clear pattern of interest in a "phenomenology problem" and even greater interest in "how can we use this" with an emphasis on "clandestine services."

Stranger than the historical record is the verified present day involvement of key intelligence officials in UFO-related matters.

Over the past several years a new "phenomenology problem" has appeared, this time on the Internet.

One of the best known, and most controversial, is the strange tale of SERPO, an on-line "disclosure" of the US government and extraterrestrial aliens.

The knotty twists and turns of the SERPO "SoaP OpERa" wind around various players, with email messages shared among a "Team of Three" and later another "Team of Five," unknown sources claiming to work for the DIA, citizen snoops faking Internet identities and hacking into private email accounts to gain access to personal communications, all followed by intelligence officials and contractors scrambling to provide "damage control" and redirect the course of the various agendas at play.

Perhaps more was at stake than a few bruised reputations.

It was Ron Pandolfi, the highly placed intelligence official and friend of Dan Smith, who released a series of email messages to and from Dr. Christopher Kit Green of the DIA TIGER Committee -- messages which include discussion of FBI involvement and the Justice Department.

The questionable use or misuse of references to FBI by both Green and Pandolfi are particularly troubling, given a generic inquiry to the FBI about Internet contact with CIA and DIA officials returned a response from the local Joint Terrorism Task Force.

It is a matter of public record that Pandolfi and his associates operated from the DIA, and Green consulted to TIGER, a DIA National Academies of Science committee.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

Following the SERPO email affair, AFP and other mainstream news sources reported that the DIA "can operate in cyberspace" and can "conduct the operations inside the United States as well as overseas."

The DIA cyberspace initiative had begun in 2006 "on a trial basis," around the same time Green engaged Pandolfi over the SERPO affair.

The AFP report, which quoted Toby Sullivan, a senior Pentagon CI (Counter-Intelligence) official, noted that the on-line operations were "not intended to catch spies but to turn their operations to US ends."

The operational use of the Internet by the DIA, inside of the United States, suggests the concept of "virtual flypaper" and "flypaper theory."

It is not entirely impossible for official US Intelligence or their proxies in the private sector to establish enticing "sticky" topics to attract spy-flies. The big question is how much collateral damage spills over onto US citizens.

Pandolfi seemed determined to identify former USAF operative Rick Doty as the source of the SERPO madness, at least as far as the public was concerned.

In September of 2006, he wrote to Doty:

What concerns me is whether you are working for a foreign intelligence service. That has been my sole interest in you from when I first heard your name and it has been the sole focus of my interactions with OSI and FBI concerning your behaviors and whereabouts. Recently Dr. Green relayed to me a claim attributed to you that two DIA employees had identified John Gannon as the source of the SERPO story and Mr. Anonymous. As I anticipated the two names you provided to Dr. Green are not those of DIA employees. The most likely case is that you invented these sources to cover your unauthorized access to sensitive facilities including Los Alamos and SANDIA where you may have attempted to access classified information.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

From the beginning the Internet spies had been aware of allegations claiming that John Gannon, the former Deputy Director for Intelligence at CIA, was the original SERPO Anonymous source.

In 2006, the Intelligence Community was being widely outsourced, and Gannon's new role at BAE Systems put him in charge of hundreds of qualified analysts in the private sector.

Was a private intelligence operation involved in the machinations of the SERPO Affair?

One source seemed to think so.

Pandolfi would later explain to a colleague, "You were correct that my interest is not specifically in Doty. My interest in temporarily removing Doty from the plot is to test whether another actor will fill the role."

Months later Pandolfi responded to my request for an explanation of his unusual methods.

"None of the e-mails I provided to Dan involved government activities," Pandolfi explained, somewhat elusively, "They involved personal communications between me, Dan, Kit, and Rick, concerning fabricated e-mail accounts used to disseminate false documents about UFOs, SERPO, etc. for which government (intelligence) officials such as John Gannon were falsely implicated."

Pandolfi then noted the issue of "sources and methods" and later requested numerous redactions.

Either members of the intelligence community had contracted Internet madness, or something else was at play.

I questioned why highly placed and respected individuals would risk so much by exposing themselves to ridicule, not to mention the attention of the world intelligence community, some who are not as friendly as their American counterparts.

Spies, Lies, and Polygraph Tape -- Knowing the Future: The UFO Spy Games

A small coincidence eventually provided another ephemeral piece to the mystery.

Mind Wars

Working the darkness to solve the mystery brings us to the gateway that leads to the CORE STORY of the Extraterrestrial Presence.

We take an allegorical trip through the museum of disclosure along the way.

The end may be near: we enter a forbidden zone of minds, machines, and madness.

Dangling a TIGER by an allegorical tale ...

If you pull hard on enough UFO tales, you may find one of them is attached to a TIGER. This particular tale quickly becomes particularly disturbing at the core.

Welcome!

Welcome to the gateway that leads to the face of the extraterrestrial presence. Watch your step, please, one exhibit at a time, thank you!

Having guided you sideways, beyond the slippery-soapy UFO inspired SERPO-A operas, and the convoluted slithering copulating-snake-ball of Internet memes, and past the home for misfits confounded by misinformation, redirection, and spy games ...

We provide, next, for your greater amusement and more importantly, for your distraction, a series of popular pastimes guaranteed to provide momentary relief from the "disturbing" entry into the core of this story, which is yet to come.

Please do tread cautiously past the crashed saucers -- no touching, we wouldn't want your hand to pass through the virtual metal -- no one will be disappointed here, so long as you follow along with us.

If you see or hear things you do not understand, please, do not be intimidated. Ask questions! That is why we are here to guide you.

RAM? and ARV? Reverse engineered extraterrestrial technologies?

Yes, well, (whispering)...they are really human constructions, but please don't believe me. (It's better for all of us that you don't.)

Next, we come to our wax museum, where you may observe Mr. Smith as he goes to Washington, to crash the secret UFO party at the White House...Oh yes, he really is alive, he only appears like an alien cadaver strung from the ceiling after a good "filleting."

Do take note that Mr. Smith performs the same song and dance routine, time and again, as he waits for disclosure.

A very patient man, our Mr. Smith.

Now: down this next corridor...if you don't hold your gaze for too long, you may glance from the corner of your eye...here is the submerged AQUARIUM: there, you see, above that Russian submarine, in fits and starts...oh, wait. I'm sorry, this exhibit has been closed due to technical difficulties.

You may address your complaints to the AQUARIUM division of the Office of Naval Intelligence, thank you!

If you must persist with your complaining, I suggest you try the AVIARY instead.

Please, now, do move ahead!

You, there, let go of that tale. You don't want to disturb the DIA's TIGER. They have real work to do.

You don't seem to understand.

Technology Insight-Gauge, Evaluate, and Review. That, my friend, is real world stuff.

Nothing of interest to us belongs in the real world.

Past this point, beyond the TIGER, the "real" world will no longer exist. Move along.

By the way, I must mention that shaking a TIGER by a UFO tale may not lead you to answers, but it will likely introduce you to Dr. Christopher Kit Green, a man, who, like the rest of us, has plenty of questions.

Dr. Green's latest contribution to the DIA TIGER is a study done for the NAS National Research Council titled EMERGING COGNITIVE NEUROSCIENCE AND RELATED TECHNOLOGIES.

What, you may ask, does that have to do with UFOs and the CORE STORY of alien contact?

Perhaps nothing.

Or, perhaps, our core story is the one we are collectively creating, in a 21st Century where information acts as a catalyst to unleash the human extraterrestrial.

Pay attention now.

From this moment forward, all is not what it appears to be.

As you dangle the TIGER by a tale, you may notice the eyes have slits. Strangely beautiful, don't you think?

Almost -- alien?

Look carefully into those eyes.

Are they watching? Always, yes, it is what they were intended to do.

Notice how your reality has shifted, ever so slightly, as you look deeply into the eyes of the TIGER.

Watch now, closely. Something is happening inside of those eyes.

Something MAJIC?

You must have realized by now, this is no ordinary beast.

Feel the power, the strength, which grasps you. The electricity. Like a wave passing through you.

You no longer have hold of a TIGER by a tale.

From here you will be carried to the entrance of the dark secret.

Quietly there, go silently ahead. You have become your own dark tracker.

Hold tight, the dark secret will spin with you.

Please, do not let go. You will be guided, if you are patient.

Clues have already been provided to you.

Each alone has a meaning; together they are one.

"This one is the Bishop's Knight. This one is the White Knight. This the King's Four. Checkmate. The Black King falls and turns. He is summoned to the chamber. He turns towards a windy city. The walls collapse."

"You may expect contact. Now, let go."

The TIGER reappears.

A meeting is called, and Dr. Green has been tasked to identify and explore "several specific research areas that have implications for U.S. national security, and should therefore be monitored consistently by the intelligence community."

The TIGER listens.

We call our first Witness, the soulless mind, stripped bare before you.

To understand and detect the thoughts and intentions of men, you build eyes for the beast.

To understand the drugs and technologies that alter the physical and cognitive abilities of men, you build hands for the beast.

To watch the thoughts of men, you create an image for the beast.

To imitate the functions of the brain of men, you create a mind for the beast.

To touch the alien within, you invoke the soul of the beast.

Somewhere, lost amongst the extraterrestrial images, are the hearts of men.

As these fields continue to grow, it will be imperative that the intelligence community be able to identify scientific advances relevant to national security when they occur. To do so will require adequate funding, intelligence analysts with advanced training in science and technology, and increased collaboration with the scientific community, particularly academia.

Your tour will pause, momentarily, to catch a quick breath of fresh air, perhaps with a new appreciation of what it means to "know the future."

The CORE STORY? Yes, it's true. It is far, far more disturbing.

If you look ahead, there, near enough in the distance, you will see the entrance to the dark chamber.

Once entered, you cannot return from whence you came.

A Small Coincidence in the War on Terror

Is there any red-blooded American male alive today who hasn't fantasized about taking the place of FOX TV's Jack Bauer in the battle against the bad guys?

Most Americans can imagine the heart-pounding race to disarm a nuclear weapon seconds before it detonates and levels a major city.

The key to the above scenario requires locating the nuclear weapon in time. To that end, American authorities are willing to employ almost any means of detection, from both technological and human sources.

It remains a little known fact that elements within the United States Intelligence Community once employed psychics as part of their intelligence efforts.

Intelligence officials had hoped to task their psychics to "flash forward" and catch a glimpse of the future.

Less is known about whether or not psychics continue to assist the authorities in their pursuit of new terror plots.

British journalist Jon Ronson, author of the psychic-army expose' The Men Who Stare at Goats, was led to believe that the psychic "Jedi Warriors" "are back and fighting the War on Terror."

Ronson asked retired Major General Albert Stubblebine III, who once commanded INSCOM (the Army's Intelligence and Security Command) and a small group of psychic warriors at Fort Meade.

In 1983, members of that group had issued an alert about a plot to crash an airplane explosively into the U.S. Capitol Building.

"Are they back in business?" asked Ronson.

"I hope so," replied Stubblebine, who also expressed frustration at the exposure of the program by former members.

"I could wring some of their necks."

According to Ronson, Uri Geller, who had attracted serious interest at CIA in the 1970s, also hinted that the psychics were back in business.

Ronson also asked Skip Atwater, who had been involved in the previous government psychic spy program.

Atwater replied:

"I would suppose however, that since the years that I was privy to such information, these efforts have changed direction a bit and are now highly focused on counterterrorism."

The official US government speak for intelligence collection by psychics is called "remote viewing."

In keeping with the Intelligence Community trend to outsource special requirements, some suspect at least part of the psychic-spying business was moved into the private sector.

Jon Ronson expressed a similar opinion.

In his "goats" book Ronson writes, "A number of second-generation remote viewers (psychic spies who learned the trade from members of the Fort Meade unit, and subsequently set up their own training schools) were also contacted by the intelligence communities post 9/11."

In 2007, a source, known to have connections to persons from the Intelligence Community, shared unconfirmed information suggesting at least two old Soviet-era nuclear weapons had been smuggled into the United States and were being tracked as they were moved around the country.

According to the sources for this information, the alleged devices were no longer functional but still represented a serious threat. The same source also alleged intelligence had lost track of one of the devices, and was scrambling to locate it.

The source expressed a willingness to test the use of private remote viewing to locate the alleged device.

At the time, I was highly skeptical of the allegation. Various sources in the alternative media had been spreading rumors of "an American Hiroshima."

Checking with a few sources familiar with psychic perception phenomena produced little verifiable information.

Even the psychics seemed uncertain of their own bits and pieces of information.

I suspected that the threat had either fizzled into non-existence or had been fabricated.

The original source had cited the Department of Homeland Security.

One psychic source "remote viewed" the DHS and reported back that the only related impressions from DHS were "scenarios" of potential damage from nuclear attack, "winds etc. fallout effects or [a] dirty weapon. Property values, etc. damage to economy. Nothing on prevention. Just a drill?"

There was no psychic indication of any immediate threat from a nuclear WMD.

The original source of the information pressed for specifics:

"If you give me an answer I will send it to the proper USG people."

This time the psychic sources managed to produce new details and one even provided a specific location:

"Long Beach."

Fusing information from the psychic sources eventually predicted a "threat" to the Port of Long Beach associated with a "fire station" and the presence of numerous authorities.

Two years before the "psychic spies" reported on the threat to the Port of Long Beach, Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff had pushed to reorganize the DHS to focus on the most serious threats, including the "American Hiroshima" scenario.

Unlike some of the second generation psychics mentioned by Jon Ronson in his book, the psychic sources that identified the fire station at Long Beach did not report an actual detonation of a nuclear device, but did report that July 2007 was the time frame of concern. A sketch provided by a psychic source appeared to match a suspect on the FBI's persons of interest watch list.

In July of 2007, an intelligence source to ABC News reported that a secret law enforcement report prepared for the DHS warned that al Qaeda had planned to carry out "a spectacular attack" during the summer.

DHS Secretary Chertoff told Fox News, "We do not currently have any specific threat information that is credible about a particular attack on the United States."

Nevertheless, tensions were high due to attacks in London and Glasgow.

The psychic data had produced a few clear details about the alleged nuclear threat.

The target would affect the Port of Long Beach, a location with numerous fire stations.

Officials would be present, but it was uncertain as to their actual role.

Although a specific event had not been identified beyond the target location, the time frame of the psychic information was imminent: everything would be in place by July 4.

I was aware that the psychic information about Long Beach had passed through informal, but well connected channels. It was even possible that the psychic data had made its way into a threat assessment at DHS.

A small coincidence would only add to the mystery.

As the media reported on rumors of red-light warning bells passing through the government, Chertoff made an appearance at the Port of Los Angeles.

On July 21, 2007, The LA Times reported:

Flanked by lawmakers and law enforcement authorities at a fire station at the Port of Los Angeles, Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff on Friday unveiled a new strategy for the rapid resumption of trade after a terrorist attack at a major U.S. port.

As I read the LA Times, I realized the psychics had "coincidentally" identified Chertoff's appearance at a fire station.

But what of "Long Beach" and the nuclear threat?

A few paragraphs later I had my answer.

A nuclear explosion at the Port of Long Beach would immediately kill an estimated 60,000 people, expose 150,000 more to hazardous radiation and cause 10 times the economic loss from the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, according to a report prepared a year ago by Rand Corp.

Spy Game Disrupts UFO Disclosure

The biggest question faced by the extraterrestrial disclosure movement (exopolitics) is not whether the public has a right to know about the alleged alien presence, but does the current President of the United States, Barack Hussein Obama, have a "need to know."

A couple of years ago investigative author Gus Russo asked the question, "Is Uncle Sam a closet UFOlogist?"

After reading various materials supplied by his sponsor, Dan T. Smith, son of a famous Harvard economist who worked for the Eisenhower administration, Russo concluded that the reason Smith's friend, former CIA analyst Ronald "Ron" Pandolfi remained involved with UFO-related topics and persons, was "national security."

At the time of Russo's investigation, Pandolfi was with the Office of the Director of National Intelligence MASINT. The ODNI coordinates all national intelligence and is responsible for briefing the President.

(Gus Russo's article, "The Real X-Files" is available at the STARpod.org website.)

According to Smith, who notes that his older sister is a friend of Nancy Bush Ellis (President George H.W. Bush's sister), with every change of administration there is a ripple effect within the government's closely held secrets that he calls the "repositioning."

A recent example is the Presidential release of classified CIA "torture memos."

In spite of enhancements to Freedom Of Information (FOIA), attempts to gain access to UFO-related government memos remains torturous, with numerous escape clauses designed to protect the national security.

A recent attempt comes from Lee Graham, who was investigated by the Defense Investigative Service for his UFO interests. Graham asked the USAF for images of two specific anomalous "UFO" events.

The Air Force provided Graham with a "neither confirm nor deny" response on the grounds of national security.

One source to Russo, a gentleman who provides high level input to a Defense Intelligence Agency sponsored National Academies' scientific committee, was questioned about the extraterrestrial rumors:

I have spoken to three former Presidents and the subject always comes up, not as a briefing, but they also want to know the truth. But apparently they aren't cleared for it.

Perhaps the President is not allowed to discuss the topic with Senior Intelligence Officials who are not on a short and closely held "need to know" list.

One would hope (and naively expect) that "government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

Unfortunately the bitter history of secrets deemed too sensitive for consumption by the man on the street and foreign governments, both friend and foe, remains a stumbling block to further pursuit of the topic.

I take note of my previous line with a sense of disdain: the citizens of this nation and foreign nationals, both good and bad, have been compartmented together under an umbrella of national secrecy.

The historical record is pockmarked by ugly abuses of power, intended not for the protection of the people, but to conceal the nefarious activities of select persons and their shadow agendas.

And so we are left to look to our leaders, and the President of the United States, for guidance as we gaze into the dark unknown. If we cannot see into the darkness, and if the leader of our nation has "no need to know," then who remains accountable to our collective future?

At least the President remains comfortably visible.

We know for certain, based upon government documents and personal accounts shared by many past and present officials, there exists an interest in developing "crazy ideas" like telepathy, psychic remote viewing, mind to mind influence, earth penetrating gravity waves, anti-gravity propulsion, wormholes and warp drives, and other staples from science fiction.

These exploits appear on the surface to be "extraterrestrial derived technology."

Less is known about the levels of government in-the-know: one declassified example from the 1980s proves that TOP SECRET research into psychic warfare against terrorists was a topic directed to the Deputy Secretary of Defense when "human-use" guidelines required high-level approval.

It was the elder President H.W. Bush, a former DCI, who was later briefed on the psychic programs as Vice President during the Reagan Administration. With the officially sanctioned release of the CIA STAR GATE files, we are able to prove the almost unbelievable depth of secrecy used to protect "the men who stared at empty space" of their mind's eye in the 1980s.

It does give pause to the idea of obtaining any access to information about an alleged alien presence.

The topic of psychic defense returned following 9/11, as told by British author Jon Ronson in his book, The Men Who Stare at Goats. Ronson's book has been adapted into a fictional film starring George Clooney.

I have mentioned Ron Pandolfi, and Dan Smith's "repositioning" as it relates to government disclosure of an alleged "extraterrestrial presence."

For Jon Ronson, the trail began with the search for "Ron," a mysterious intelligence official psychic Uri Geller identified as the man who "reactivated" his services for the Bush War on Terror.

A prior effort to dislodge the secrets was launched with the repositioning taking place when Bill Clinton was elected, and Ron Pandolfi was involved as well.

The story is told by Grant Cameron at his <http://www.presidentialufo.com> website, and involved familiar names like Laurance Rockefeller, his friendship with Hillary Clinton, and many involved in the Bill Clinton Administration including Leon Panetta, the current Director of Central Intelligence (DCI).

It is worth noting that the job of briefing the President was taken from the DCI and handed to the Director of National Intelligence (DNI). Pandolfi's last known position with the Office of the DNI places him close to the primary authority for all US intelligence agencies.

It is also worth mentioning that in 2006, Pandolfi passed email messages to US and foreign nationals concerning a possible penetration of secure facilities, including some at Los Alamos, allegedly by a former USAF agent named Rick Doty, under an agenda to see "who would take Rick's place" in promoting a CORE STORY of extraterrestrial visitation.

Curiously this all went away without much fanfare, in spite of discussion of the FBI and Justice Department and the fact that Doty continues to work for law enforcement in New Mexico.

When Pandolfi was publicly confronted concerning this release, he requested redaction of specific detailed information concerning "sources and methods" and stated that the entire affair was a "personal matter" to protect John Gannon, former Deputy Director for Intelligence at CIA during the Clinton Administration.

John Gannon's name had been allegedly passed on by two "DIA sources" who were never identified, according to Pandolfi's email.

Meanwhile Pandolfi maintained a personal interest in other alleged "derived alien technology" including RAM -- Replication Alien Machine -- and ARV -- Alien Reproduction Vehicle.

A primary party interested in moving disclosure of the alleged RAM/ARV technologies is Gordon Novel, a man notable for his "intelligence file" which goes back to the Jim Garrison JFK assassination conspiracy investigation of the 1960s.

The "intelligence files" concerning Mr. Novel come from CIA, FBI, and ONI offices.

Based upon email exchanges I have seen, Pandolfi, the former CIA man and ODNI scientific expert, apparently supports Mr. Novel's right to pursue the alleged alien technology.

In recent years Mr. Novel, who was consulted by the late pop superstar Michael Jackson, according to a feature story in Vanity Fair, has been more forthcoming about his interest in the alleged ET technology.

Michael Jackson was a friend of Uri Geller, the UK based psychic star Jon Ronson claims sent him on a search for "Ron," resulting in Ronson's exploration of psychokinetic heart-stopping Men Who Stare at Goats.

Meanwhile Mr. Novel continues to promote the RAM/ARV quest, that includes a quietly conducted confidential study by a major university on the effect of time machines on human psychology.

This weird mixture of superstar personalities, scientific and techno-futurists, government intelligence officials, foreign nationals, use of the Internet in violation of government guidelines, and the personal agendas of the rich and strange has evolved into a convoluted spy game.

Rather than pressing disclosure of government secrecy forward, the spy game disrupts any serious attempt to engage the mainstream media for a sensible, reasoned evaluation of what may truly be going on behind the scenes.

A few years ago Sharon Weinberger, a well known author and defense journalist answered my request for a letter of reference on the topics of interest here.

Weinberger wrote:

The Pentagon and national security institutions are a reflection of society --meaning, as in society, there are those who in the Pentagon who believe in psychics, UFOs and similar things. Regardless of whether one agrees with their view -- the fact that these officials have influenced policy is fascinating, sometimes frightening, and certainly worth writing about.

It is time for the mainstream media to realize this is serious business: these are the people who will help direct the future course of our nation's defense.

It is time to move ahead of the spy game and engage the issue in a calm, clear, and unbiased fashion.

Information fed to the public directly impacts the national health and well being of countless millions of individuals. Deliberate disinformation, fantasy, and unfounded belief systems fed by quasi-official input from players at the spy game can and often does make people sick.

An esteemed American hero, Dr. Edgar Mitchell, the sixth human being to walk on the moon, has also called for a serious investigation based on rumors and roadblocks he has encountered concerning an "extraterrestrial presence."

When Dr. Mitchell's comments about alien visitation were picked up by the mainstream media last summer, he asked for my assistance in clarifying that the truth remains opaque to him as well.

Dr. Mitchell pointed to an article from Jane's Defence Weekly, the preeminent defense publication, where it was noted:

An unacknowledged SAP [Special Access Program] -- a black program -- is a program considered so sensitive that the fact of its existence is a "core secret," defined in USAF regulations as "any item, progress, strategy or element of information, the compromise of which would result in unrecoverable failure. In other words, revealing the existence of a black program would undermine its military value.

What is the acceptable cost to be paid by the public at large to protect "military value" -- especially when that protection appears to be making members of the public ill?

One item so secret it remained "in the black" for years was the existence of a doomsday martial law order initialed by President Eisenhower. The order was prepared and kept locked in a White House safe.

It was during those same dark years, when mortal men faced the untenable prospect of restoring order following a nuclear holocaust, that the legends of crashed flying saucers and alien recoveries are said to have taken place.

Nothing short of open intelligence committee hearings or action from the White House will resolve these issues, which remain an open sore on the public consciousness.

Dan Smith: "Ron" is Movin' On

According to Dan Smith, former CIA scientist Ronald "Ron" Pandolfi has "left his present job for an undisclosed location, a couple of weeks ago."

As reported in numerous articles and blogs across the Internet, Pandolfi is well known for his association with the "real-life X-files" intrigue surrounding the U.S. government and allegations of extraterrestrial technology.

Ron's real career as CIA analyst was revealed in the 1990s in a series of articles by Jeff Gerth, published by the New York Times.

Pandolfi is no stranger to controversy, having produced a 1996 National Intelligence Estimate (NIE) that warned of the transfer of sensitive missile information from Hughes Electronic Corporation to China. Pandolfi's NIE was ultimately rejected, but questions over the politics that killed the report resulted in Pandolfi's testimony at a closed session of the Senate Intelligence Committee.

More recently Pandolfi was also cited on line in a MITRE document, as the CIA liaison to the National Intelligence Council. The subject of MITRE document involved passive radar, an indirect means of detecting and identifying flying objects.

Jon Ronson, author of the darkly humorous book The Men Who Stare at Goats, claims he first heard of "Ron" from world-famous psychic Uri Geller at a private meeting shortly after the attacks of 9/11.

In Ronson's non-fiction book, Uri tells Ronson that "the man who reactivated me [to use psychic powers in the war on terror] is called Ron."

Ronson's book is the inspiration for the new George Clooney production by the same name.

According to the IMDB plot summary:

A reporter in Iraq might just have the story of a lifetime when he meets Lyn Cassidy, a guy who claims to be a former member of the U.S. Army's First Earth Battalion, a unit that employs paranormal powers in their missions.

In an interesting twist, Ron, who some claim was involved in the CIA closure of the DIA STAR GATE psychic spy program in 1995, is also known, thanks to the book by Jon Ronson, as the man behind the next generation of U.S. government psychic spying.

In response to an email request for clarification, Ron explicitly denied Ronson's claim:

As I never activated or reactivated Uri, all such claims are false. Of course Uri might perceive he was reactivated via some mental process as he is a self proclaimed mentalist.

Investigative author Gus Russo tells us the real psychic spy program is run out of a deep black sector of the NSA (National Security Agency).

The "White House Hamster Guy"

Jon Ronson's quest to track down Ron eventually led to men who stare at goats: Special Forces' psychic Goat Lab operations, including the psychic "death stare" -- but Ronson never revealed the mysterious Ron in his book.

I now have it on very good authority -- this from Ron himself -- that Ron is ... are you ready for this?

Forget the goats:

Ron is the "White House Hamster Guy."

That's right, it's on the (email) record:

Ron is THE White House Hamster Guy (In case you thought it was someone else, like Secretary of Defense Robert Gates).

Now it is true that the lowly hamster actually plays a bigger role than the famed goat in Jon Ronson's book. Perhaps this is because, as the rumor goes, Ron eventually shut down the Goat Lab.

It was Guy Savelli, according to Ronson, who dropped a goat stone dead at the Special Forces Goat Lab at Fort Bragg.

And it was Ron, according to his friend Dan T. Smith (the son of Presidential Tax Advisor Dan Throop Smith), who was "a point man for Special Forces" when he wasn't busy testifying in front of the Senate Select Intelligence Committee about his role at CIA.

Ronson asked Guy Savelli if he was the man who had stared a goat to death.

Savelli confessed to Ronson: "Yes, I did drop a goat when I was there."

Then he added, "Last week I killed my hamster."

Ronson wanted to make certain.

"Just by staring at it?"

"Yes."

"Hamsters drive me nuts."

According to Ronson's book, Guy Savelli had been contacted by the Special Forces shortly after 9/11, to reactivate his goat staring skill-set for the war on terror.

Savelli showed Ronson a video of his hamster dropping, legs straight up in the air.

It was tough to be a hamster during the Bush Administration.

If Ronson is right -- I truly suspect history will defend him -- it is the hamster, not the goat, that made a big comeback in the war on terror.

This, we have learned, goes all the way up to the top:

Ron is the White House Hamster Guy; Savelli is Master of his Hamster.

I have yet to hear of any serious challenge to either title!

Special Forces were not alone in the quest for superhuman psychic powers: Savelli showed Ronson email that was "absolutely, positively" written by an al Qaeda operative."

Ronson told Savelli: "You're bait."

Savelli had something else in mind for his visit to Special Forces at Fort Bragg.

"I am taking a hamster out there and I'm going to blow their minds with it," he told Ronson.

Then, in July 2004, the hamster "went black."

"I phone Guy Savelli repeatedly ..." wrote Ronson, "but still to no avail. He doesn't call back."

I hadn't heard much more about the hapless hamster until this past summer, when Dan Smith announced that Ron had presented him with a new hamster assignment.

These were not your garden variety all-American hamsters: It was alleged that Ron, the White House Hamster Guy, only works with special Afghan Hamsters.

Was Ron hinting that the Afghan Hamster occupies a special (forces?) role in the Obama White House?

Is our Commander in Chief protected from evil black sorcerers by a "canary in a coal mind" Heuristic Active Rodentia Alert Status System?

Who, exactly, are these mysterious men who would stare at hamsters?

What unspeakable acts may have been perpetrated by the Feds upon our furry little friends?

Inquiring minds want to know: Is our national insecurity guarded by an elite team of specially trained rodents in residence?

When I asked Ron to explain this strange hamster business, knowing that Dan Smith intended to drop by the White House gate for a visit, he replied:

Dan is welcome any time. We need to catch up on what he learned about hamsters...Dan knows that I am the White House Hamster Guy. He may have added things up and concluded that hamsters are aliens.

This just in: sources tell us the White House Hamster Guy is no longer at the White House.

As for the aliens, ah, I mean hamsters, the strong rumor is they have taken up residence in the basement of a secure government facility in Mc Lean.

STARstream Research is a private source of intelligence and analysis on futuristic national and international defense, security and risk developments.

Futurist and visionary Gary S. Bekkum is an independent 'occasional' rogue journalist & web author, and researcher of material that blurs the distinction between fiction and reality.

In 2004 Bekkum initiated STARstream Research, as an informal survey of exotic physics and consciousness concepts related to the survival or otherwise of the human race.

The STARstream Research material appears as the "Spacetime Threat Assessment Report," or STAR Report, which is targeted to various select defense industry personalities. The focus of STARstream Research remains on achieving a better understanding of the relationship between information flow and time in space and mind.

As a result of his efforts, Bekkum has reported numerous contacts with past and present intelligence officials interested in the application of exotic phenomena, ranging from antigravity to mind-to-mind communication.