Spielberg's UFO Secrets

By Robbie Graham and Matthew Alford

Steven Spielberg is obsessed with UFOs. Indeed, judging by the success of his alien movies to date, his obsession is infectious. Perhaps more so than any other filmmaker, Spielberg has moulded our perceptions of otherworldly visitors. Films such as Close Encounters of the Third Kind (1977) and E.T.: The Extraterrestrial (1982) abound with iconic imagery seared into the minds of millions: a mothership's miraculous ascension at Devil's Tower; a boy and his fugitive friend from the stars cycling in silhouette across the face of the moon. Even Spielberg's less memorable alien movies – War of the Worlds (2005) and Indiana Jones and the Kingdom of the Crystal Skull (2008) – have enjoyed enormous success at the worldwide box-office, raking in some $1.4 billion between them.

Although the 63 year old has donned his director's cap for just four alien-themed movies, his role as a producer has long seen him neck-deep in extraterrestrial entertainment. Spielberg's credits to date include, Batteries Not Included (1987), the Men in Black franchise (1997 -), the epic alien abduction mini-series Taken (2002) and the Transformers franchise (2007 -); he is also closely involved in the development of an as yet untitled alien invasion series, as well as the forthcoming 'Sci-fi-Western' Cowboys and Aliens – both due in 2011.

That Spielberg continues to make movies about life elsewhere is owed not simply to good business sense, but is due in large part to his own childhood fascination with UFOs; a fascination that would intensify into his late twenties and culminate in his cathartic production of Close Encounters – one of the director's most personal films. "I was mainly inspired when I began to meet people who had had experiences," Spielberg told Sight and Sound magazine in 1977. "I realised that just about every fifth person I talked to had looked up at the sky at some point in their lives and seen something that was not easy to explain. And then I began meeting people who had had close encounters... where undeniably something quite phenomenal was happening right before their eyes. It was this direct contact – the interviews – that got me interested in making the movie."¹ Spielberg's interest in UFOs even extended to a belief in an official cover-up: "I wouldn't put it past this government that a cosmic Watergate has been underway for the last 25 years," he remarked during a Close

Encounters promotional interview, “Eventually they might want to tell us something about what they’ve discovered over the decades.”ⁱⁱⁱ

That the world’s most successful living director has an overt fascination with UFOs has long fuelled conspiracy theories that he may have gained “inside knowledge” of a genuine “cosmic Watergate.” Spielberg, after all, is a generous campaign contributor to the Democratic Party and routinely rubs shoulders with the Washington power elite.ⁱⁱⁱ Some even peg Spielberg as the government’s go-to guy in what is thought to be a secret programme to acclimatise the public to the reality of extraterrestrials through entertainment media.

Spielberg has been inseparable from the political dimension of the UFO phenomenon since the early days of his career. In 1977, he spoke with relish of “rumours” that President Carter was due to make “some unsettling disclosures” about UFOs later that year.^{iv} Needless to say, no such disclosures were forthcoming, although not for lack of effort on Carter’s part. Jimmy Carter famously had reported his own UFO sighting in 1969 and it had made a believer of him^v – so much so that one of his informal campaign pledges had been to reveal the truth about UFOs.

While at a Wisconsin press conference in 1976, a few months prior to his election victory, Carter was asked if, as President, he would, “air what’s behind closed doors in regards to UFOs.” “Yes,” replied Carter, “I would make these kinds of data available to the public... to help resolve the mystery about it.”^{vi} Later that same year, however, when the now President-elect asked outgoing Director of Central Intelligence George Bush Sr. for, “the information that we have on UFOs and Extraterrestrial intelligence,” Bush denied Carter’s request, stating that, “simple curiosity on the part of the President” was inadequate, as the information existed, “on a need to know basis only.”^{vii} At a public event in 2008, a journalist seized the opportunity to ask Carter about his apparent failure to follow through on UFO disclosure during his time in office. Carter replied sheepishly before making a hasty exit: “We did release a lot of the information, but I’m not sure how much was not released.”^{viii}

Intriguingly, the Carter Presidential Library contains no record of the film-loving President having ever viewed Close Encounters while in office. But in a 1977 Canadian TV interview conducted directly after the movie’s official release, Spielberg said matter-of-factly that Carter had viewed the movie, “Last Saturday.” “We haven’t heard the direct feedback,” said Spielberg, but added, “We hear he [Carter] liked it quite a bit.”^{ix} Indeed, the following March, The Phoenix Gazette cited Close Encounters as, “Jimmy Carter’s favorite movie,” noting that, “The President has seen the movie many times.”^x This is not the only discrepancy over the official record concerning Carter and Spielberg. Officially, Spielberg never set foot in the Carter White House and had never met the President, yet a solitary photocopy of a photograph discovered in the Carter Presidential Library proves that the two men did indeed meet. The photo shows Carter and Spielberg in friendly conversation and is signed: “To Steven Spielberg, [from] Jimmy Carter.” An accompanying White House stationary note signed by White House Social Secretary Gretchen Poston and addressed to Spielberg reads: “The President thought you would enjoy receiving the enclosed photograph.”^{xi}

This apparent secrecy almost certainly resulted from a desire in the military-intelligence community – and even among Carter’s staff – to keep the Administration publicly from being further associated with flying saucers. A UFO-spotting President viewing the ultimate UFO movie at the White House and having get-togethers with its alien-obsessed director would have been a PR nightmare. Not only that, but it would likely have exacerbated the White House’s existing UFO-related problems.

Throughout the Spring and Summer of 1977 (before the release of Close Encounters), the Carter White House had been deluged with thousands of letters from the public pertaining to UFOs, the majority of which were handed off to the Air Force, which itself officially had washed its hands of the UFO problem in 1969. Exasperated, and ill-equipped to deal with the sheer mass of UFO letters, Carter’s Science Advisor Dr. Frank Press sought to offload the problem onto NASA, suggesting to Administrator Dr. Robert Frosch that the space agency not only become the “focal point for the UFO question,” but to pick up where the Air Force left off and spearhead a new government UFO investigations programme. This immediately set alarm bells ringing throughout the U.S. National Security apparatus and resulted in Colonel Charles Senn – Chief of Air Force Community Relations – advising NASA to steer well clear of the UFO issue. In a September 1st 1977 letter to NASA’s Lt. General Duward Crow, Colonel Senn wrote: “I sincerely hope you are successful in preventing a reopening of UFO investigations.”^{xii} NASA, it turned out, needed little dissuading and was already engaged in attempts to dampen the public’s enthusiasm for extraterrestrials.

Before Close Encounters had even entered into production, Spielberg’s self-penned script had raised a red flag at NASA and prompted the space agency to send the director a 20 page letter in an attempt to dissuade him from making the film. “When they read the script they got very angry and felt that it was a film that would be dangerous,” Spielberg told the film journal

Cinema Papers in 1978, "I felt they mainly wrote the letter because Jaws convinced so many people around the world that there were sharks in toilets and bathtubs, not just in the oceans and rivers. They were afraid the same kind of epidemic would happen with UFOs."^{xiii}

Our requests to NASA, the Pentagon and Spielberg for a copy of this letter have proven unsuccessful. Spielberg's publicist Marvin Levy assured us on two occasions that he would pursue Spielberg on the matter, but has since become unresponsive. There is, of course, the possibility that the letter never even existed. Spielberg's biographer, Ray Morton, pointed out to us that, "Steven likes to exaggerate and has a tendency to tell tall tales... he has a great talent for bending mundane facts into something more interesting."^{xiv} Still, the letter seemed real enough to Spielberg, who cited it as affirmation of his belief in alien life: "If NASA took the time to send me a 20 page letter, then I knew there must be something happening," he told Cinema Papers, "That's when I really found my faith."^{xv}

Spielberg's most successful alien film, E.T., was also an Oval Office favourite. Incumbent this time was Ronald Reagan, who, like both Carter and Spielberg, was also known to be keenly interested in UFOs. During a private screening of E.T. at the White House in 1982 in which Reagan and Spielberg were seated together, the President is reported to have leaned over to his guest and whispered: "You know, there aren't six people in this room who know how true this really is."^{xvi} Spielberg related this story to Hollywood television producer Jamie Shandera shortly after the screening.

was Director

Despite having had numerous opportunities over the years to refute the Reagan incident, Spielberg has yet to do so. In 1983, Emmy Award winning TV producer and journalist Linda Moulton Howe made multiple attempts to secure an interview with Spielberg to discuss Reagan's alleged comments but was told each time by the director's publicist that he was "away on location."^{xvii} Presidential researcher Grant Cameron made a similar attempt in 1988 only to be told by Spielberg's publicity coordinator Kris Kelly: "Unfortunately, Mr. Spielberg is currently away working on his next project and is unable to personally answer your question."^{xviii} On yet another occasion, Florida Today reporter Billy Cox also tried to crack Spielberg on the issue. This time, Spielberg's publicist, Marvin Levy, was more direct in his response, stating over the telephone: "Mr. Spielberg does not wish to discuss any private conversation held with the President."^{xix}

It is not hard to imagine Reagan having made the statement. Like President Carter, Reagan had also seen a UFO, not once but twice (whilst Governor of California), and his daughter,

Patti Davis, had spoken of her father as being, “fascinated with stories about unidentified flying objects and the possibility of life on other worlds.”^{xxx} Reagan’s belief in aliens even affected the content of key policy speeches. In a September 1987 address to the General Assembly of the United Nations, the President said: “I occasionally think how quickly our differences worldwide would vanish if we were facing an alien threat from outside this world...” He then paused, before posing a cryptic question: “And yet, I ask you, is not an alien force already among us?”^{xxxi} Most assumed he was speaking metaphorically, but a discussion two years previously at the Geneva summit conference between Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev raised the possibility that he may actually have meant it. Reagan had suggested that, in the event of an alien invasion, their two countries should fight back as one. Gorbachev himself acknowledged this discussion during a public speech at the Kremlin in 1987. “The US President said that if the Earth faced an invasion by extraterrestrials, the United States and the Soviet Union would join forces to repel such an invasion,” Gorbachev said, before adding, somewhat wryly, “I shall not dispute the hypothesis, though I think it’s early yet to worry about such an intrusion.”^{xxxii}

It’s no secret that Spielberg has discussed the UFO topic with at least two Presidents besides Reagan – these most likely being Democrats Carter (for the reasons cited above) and Clinton (with whom the director was known to be chummy). According to Spielberg, the Commanders in Chief in question had no special access to the government’s alleged UFO secrets. He even implied they had been deliberately kept out of the loop: “I know a couple of Presidents who certainly have not been ‘clued in’ – or at least they’re telling me they haven’t been clued in – as to the existence of any hard evidence that we’ve been gathering.”^{xxxiii} This would seem to gel with the allegations about President Carter’s failed attempts to access sensitive UFO information. Clinton, too, publicly has voiced his frustration at being stonewalled on the issue. At a speech in Belfast in 1995, Clinton made a point of bringing up the famous ‘Roswell Incident’ of 1947: “If the United States Air Force did recover alien bodies, they didn’t tell me about it, either, and I want to know.”^{xxxiv} He was even more direct in a question and answer session following a speech in Hong Kong in 2005. When asked about Roswell, the President replied: “I did attempt to find out if there were any secret government documents that revealed things. If there were, they were concealed from me too. And if there were, well I wouldn’t be the first American President that underlings have lied to, or that career bureaucrats have waited out. But there may be some career person sitting around somewhere, hiding these dark secrets, even from elected presidents. But if so, they successfully eluded me.”^{xxv}

wasn't asked about Roswell

As has been the case with many a Hollywood powerhouse before him, Spielberg’s reach in Tinseltown soon came to extend to the corridors of power. Just how friendly the director had become with the political glitterati was illustrated in June of 1999 when his name appeared on a leaked list of attendees of the annual Bilderberg conference held that year in Portugal. Also on the guest list, among many others, were Bill Clinton, Kofi Annan, Tony Blair, Bill Gates, Henry Kissinger, Rupert Murdoch and Pope John Paul II.^{xxvi} Those who receive the coveted Bilderberg invite do so because they are recognised by the world’s most powerful movers and shakers as having tremendous influence on the international stage, as well as being willing to ‘play ball’ with the Global Elite. Being a Bilderberger is known to have its perks – in the months to follow, Spielberg would receive the Department of Defense Medal for Distinguished Public Service from Secretary of Defense William Cohen,^{xxvii} and, from President Clinton himself, the National Humanities medal.^{xxviii} The director even received an honorary knighthood in a ceremony at the British Embassy in Washington. “The truth is,” said a puffed-up Spielberg afterwards to a small crowd which included his good friend Hillary Clinton, “I stand before you now and I’m a knight.”^{xxix}

“Sir” Steven may feign ignorance when it comes to inside knowledge of UFOs, but James Fox, the director of the 2009 UFO documentary I Know What I Saw, has a letter from Spielberg (obtained via a mutual friend) in which the Hollywood mogul allegedly makes some intriguing comments about its subject matter. Fox believes the letter to be important in the context of UFO secrecy and has requested Spielberg’s permission to go public with its contents. Despite Spielberg’s publicist initially suggesting that his boss would be, “happy to let that happen,” the director’s response was, “Not at this time.” “There won’t be a better time,” retorted Fox, who continues to press Spielberg on the issue. As for clues as to what Spielberg may have said in the letter, Fox told reporter and radio host Angelia Joiner: “Let’s suffice it to say, he’s an advocate of government transparency on the phenomena.”^{xxx}

So, is it really possible that Spielberg has the inside track on UFOs? With such hearty back-slapping between him and his friends in D.C., it’s not hard to see how such rumours got started. But a government programme to manipulate our perceptions of alien life? Strange though it may seem, the U.S. government has a long history of involving itself in UFO-related productions. In 1953 the CIA-sponsored Robertson Panel decided to, “strip [the] aura of mystery” from UFOs through the use of “mass media such as television [and] motion pictures.” The initiative had a direct impact on several films and TV shows in the 1950s and ‘60s, as with a UFO-themed episode of the Steve Canyon TV series (1958-59) and the Walter Cronkite TV special UFO: Friend, Foe or Fantasy? (1966) – both of which were heavily edited in line with the panel’s recommendations. In stark contrast, the government has, on occasion, actively promoted the notion of alien visitation. This was best demonstrated when UFOs: Past Present and Future (1974) – a Golden Globe nominated documentary supportive of the Extraterrestrial Hypothesis – received the full backing of the Air Force, Army, Navy, and even NASA.^{xxxix}

The U.S. government’s motives for involving itself in UFO-themed entertainment are unclear, although it may be of some significance that in 1952, CIA Director Walter Bedell Smith discussed seriously, “the possible offensive or defensive utilization of these phenomena [UFOs] for psychological warfare purposes.”^{xxxix} Others, meanwhile, prefer the theory that the government, by way of Hollywood, is conditioning us to the reality that we are not alone.

One final curiosity concerning Spielberg and UFOs is that, as of 2005, the director’s public stance on the phenomenon has shifted abruptly from die-hard believer to Doubting Thomas. “I’m a little less sure in my 50s than I was in my 20s that we will be visited,” Spielberg told the Chicago Sun Times. “Think of all the millions of video cameras out there now. But there are fewer photos of alleged UFOs today. But maybe it’s a UFO cold spell. It’s an off season.”^{xxxix}

Spielberg’s rationale is puzzling, to say the least. UFO data collated by governments and civilian research groups over the past decade show a clear increase in the number of reported sightings worldwide with the UK Ministry of Defence even declaring 2009 officially to be the second biggest year on record for UFO sightings, having logged 643 reports last year.^{xxxix} Sightings in the U.S. are also on the increase. In 2008, the Mutual UFO Network (MUFON) – America’s largest UFO investigations organisation – logged upwards of 5000 sighting reports.^{xxxix} Spielberg’s comments about a lack of photographic evidence are similarly puzzling as barely a week now passes without local and regional news programmes across the globe featuring fresh photos and video footage of inexplicable things in the sky.

How, then, might we account for Spielberg’s strange reversal in belief? Perhaps the director has now officially been let into the loop and thus been advised to adopt a more sceptical public position on UFOs, all the while continuing dutifully to manipulate public perception of aliens through his Hollywood productions. On the other hand, perhaps Spielberg is simply less clued in than he appears to be.

Frustratingly, as we approach our conclusion it seems we are left with more questions than answers – particularly regarding Spielberg’s secret letters. What might the director have revealed recently in the correspondence obtained by James Fox and which Spielberg has now deemed inappropriate for public release? And why, 34 years after receiving it, does he continue to remain tight-lipped about the content of his mysterious 20 page letter from NASA?

In a career spanning four decades, Steven Spielberg has brought the extraordinary into the ordinary lives of everyday folk and, for the price of a cinema ticket, allowed us to glimpse the mysteries which flit at the peripheries of our humdrum reality. He has rightfully cultivated a reputation as the people’s director. Perhaps, then, it’s time he shared with the people just what – if anything – he really knows about one of the greatest mysteries of them all.

Another Klassic: At a panel discussion on government documents, the focus of which was MJ-12, Moore related to an audience of about 200 that Jamie Shandera (pronounced SHAN-derray) had interviewed Steven Spielberg, who told him a fascinating story. Prior to the release of the movie "E.T.," Ronald Reagan had requested a private screening in the White House. When it was over, Reagan walked over to Spielberg, clapped him on the shoulder and said, "My friend, there aren't six people in this room who know how true that movie is." From the back of the MUFON audience, a semi-audible voice said, "Carter was President." Shandera, who was sitting behind me, turned around and said, "What was that? Speak up!" Klass stood up dramatically, poised to strike a death blow, and said, "In 1978, Jimmy Carter was President of the...." Moore cut him off with "E.T. was released in 1982, Mr. Klass. You stand corrected....AGAIN!" The audience exploded with applause, and Klass sank slowly back to his seat, a defeated man -- for the moment, anyway. [Continued]

As part of NASA's HRMS project, an all-sky survey was performed using a radio telescope. This type of survey looked for signals throughout the universe, and was performed at NASA's Goldstone Deep Space Network tracking station in the desert near Los Angeles, California. At the same time, other telescopes were used to search for signals from stars close to our galaxy. For example, in addition to the Arecibo telescope in Puerto Rico, the Parkes telescope, located 220 miles (354 kilometers) from Sydney, Australia, scanned radio waves in search of extraterrestrial life.

When the HRMS program ended in 1993, scientists at the SETI Institute in Mountain View, California, formed Project Phoenix to take its place. Scientists at observatories worldwide focused on more than 1,000 stars in a systematic sweep of the sky. No alien signals were received as a result of this search.

Scientists who have been determined to continue the search for alien life have often had to struggle to find funding and other support for their projects. The popular astronomer Carl Sagan cofounded the Planetary Society in 1982 to raise money and support for ongoing SETI projects. Steven Spielberg, the director of the movie E.T. The Extra-Terrestrial, donated $100,000 to help fund the Megachannel Extraterrestrial Assay (META). This search was conducted in 1985 from Harvard University's Oak Ridge Observatory in Massachusetts. In October 1995, the META project became the Billion Channel Extraterrestrial Assay (BETA).

Scientists believe that the key to a successful SETI program is the radio telescope. This instrument is similar to a television satellite dish. The radio telescope directs the radio waves that NASA soon may begin searching for civilizations on other planets. If it is undertaken, the 10-year quest may lead to the only communication earthlings ever have with beings on other worlds, if they exist.

Bernard M. Oliver, chief of NASA's tiny Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence (SETI) program, began calling for a systematic search for extraterrestrials long before Steven Spielberg ignited the American public's interest with his movies Close Encounters of the Third Kind in 1977 and E.T. — The Extraterrestrial in 1982.

Oliver has estimated that the round trip to a planet just four light years away would consume as much energy as the Earth uses in 350 years, an expense he considers prohibitive.

The alternative is to stay home, monitoring plausible radio frequencies from as many points of origin as possible for as long as it takes to hear an alien signal.

SETI can search constantly at little cost, yet the program is fighting for funding at the highest levels of NASA, nine months before its research money dries up.

Oliver has requested $70 million over a 10-year period to scan the sky with radio telescopes and a powerful computer. The amount is less than 1 percent of the annual budget of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

"NASA can hardly feel the amount we're asking for," Oliver said.

Ironically, the program could shut down even as scientific interest is peaking and NASA's administrator is endorsing the effort for the first time.

In mid-October at a space conference in Brighton, England, Administrator James C. Fletcher delivered "a very, very hearty endorsement of it, but a few weeks earlier he didn't lift a finger in a financial way for it," Oliver said last week.

Radio telescope at Parkes, New South Wales, searches sky.

Today some mainstream scientists are getting excited.

"I've never seen interest at such a high level," said Thomas R. McDonough, referring to past or planned Soviet, English, French, Canadian, Dutch, West German and Australian searches, and the recent publication in Japanese of his book, The Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence.

McDonough is SETI coordinator for the Planetary Society, a private group of some 100,000 members, the California based society started its own search on a shoestring budget in March 1983 after U.S. Sen. William Proxmire of Wisconsin killed NASA's request for SETI money in 1981.

were from the sky. "Other people in this whole SETI business have detected other weird signals in the past from other systems and the same problem exists. If the signal doesn't repeat, then you can't analyze it," McDonough said.

He now suspects earthly interference caused the sounds. NASA's Oliver intends to listen to 8 million broader frequencies within a relatively clear microwave "window."

The plan combines parallel strategies. An all-sky survey pointing in millions of different directions, but low in sensitivity, will be paired with a search focused on nearby stars likely to hold inhabited planets in orbit.

Oliver and his 23 program employees have been developing the computer equipment since 1983 to conduct such a massive search. They will be ready in the fall of 1989, he said, if NASA continues the $5 million annual funding it has given the program.

Actually making the search requires NASA's commitment to a "new start," a budgetary term for a program given official permission to get underway, and Oliver has already laid that battle out.

SPIELBERG Contribution

"Later, the Planetary Society and NASA together managed to convince the senator that the project was not just a couple of flaks getting together looking for little green men, but a justifiable scientific project," McDonough said.

The Planetary Society scans 8 million very narrow frequencies from the whole sky, thanks to a $100,000 gift from Spielberg that enhanced the equipment's capabilities in 1985. Three tantalizing signals arrived within the past year.

"We don't know anything in Mother Nature that could produce such a signal," McDonough said. "Unfortunately, they were not consistent. They came from several different areas of the sky, if they and you're out' sort of thing." Fletcher and the NASA hierarchy have been "generally supportive."

Oliver said "I think if we went through the same hoops next year, we'll get it."

comprehend is that they are neither evil nor benevolent in nature, even though science fiction has always portrayed them as being one or the other.

Instead, they are neutral toward humans, but also incapable of realizing the anguish they have wrought on their victims, he said. For all their technological prowess, said Hopkins, "they don't seem to understand what they're doing emotionally to people."

Mrs. Davis was unbelievably upset when she found out she was no longer pregnant. It wasn't just losing a baby. There was no baby, he said.

seem more credible to him. Often there are identical scars left in the same place on different abductees, or similar descriptions of dreams that he believes were the actual experiences of abductees, he said.

His book was published in April, and has led to interviews on "20/20" and "Nightline," and with the Voice of America and British Broadcasting Corp.

Hopkins realizes there is room to find more proof of UFOs.

"In essence, we can't say we absolutely know until, as my friend said, we can go up and kick the tires on one of them."

Still, he said, "I think the phenomena has shifted from simply a fringe philosophy to something that people have to take seriously."

Hopkins said there is evidence that the government is covering up the investigatory work it has done on UFOs. But he acknowledged that if the president were to come forward with a full account of what was known and how little can be done, it could be incredibly damaging.

Were the truth known, "I've always said I'd rather be in the liquor business than the real estate business," Hopkins said.

He said one thing that makes the UFOs he has studied difficult to be a slide-show focusing on the reported "Copley Woods" UFO abductions near Indianapolis, Indiana, along with a recording of a hypnosis session with someone believed to have been abducted.

Hopkins' interest in the Copley Woods incident began when he was contacted by a woman he calls Kathie Davis (not her real name after the 1981 publication of his first UFO book, "Missing Time").

The first evidence Hopkins encountered in the case was the scorched, hardened earth that appeared to have been left behind by a spaceship outside the Davises' home.

Hopkins said Mrs. Davis recalled "having seen strange lights the night before, but his later investigations led to a larger story of her being abducted so she could be artificially inseminated.

"Although the aliens usually are able to impose some sort of amnesia on their victims to mask the memory of the abductions," Hopkins said, he has used hypnosis and psychiatric examinations and other investigatory measures to turn up about 20 incidents like Mrs. Davis'.

In such cases, he said, the women's pregnancies mysteriously ended with no evidence of miscarriage because the aliens abort them again to remove the fetus.

"And this is the wildest thing," Hopkins said. "These people are later re-abducted and shown the fetus they had and asked to hold it, as if there is some kind of bond."

He speculates that "the aliens have reached some sort of 'evolutionary dead-end' and are trying to 'revivify' themselves through the genetic experimentation."

The similarities in the details of these accounts, as well as others Hopkins has studied, make them

PLAIN TWP. — An alien race visits Earth, abducts humans and performs genetic experiments in an effort to create a hybrid species.

It even artificially inseminates women and abducts them again later to remove the developing fetus.

The story line reads like a science-fiction novel plot or another laughable account in some trashy tabloid.

But it is the basis of "Intruders," a nonfiction book by New York City author Budd Hopkins, a longtime investigator of UFOs who realizes just how far out the kind of incident described in the book appears.

"I know it sounds totally crazy and I'm the first one to admit how bizarre the sounds," Hopkins said in a telephone interview. "But it continues to happen over and over again."

Hopkins will give a personal account of what he has learned in his 150 UFO investigations when he appears at Walsh College's Randall Campus Center at 8 p.m. Sunday. Admission is $5 for adults and $1 for children 12 and under.

London police verify UFO

LONDON — Scotland Yard officers with downbeat shrugs refuse to investigate the mysterious case of a UFO reported hovering over London a spokesman said.

Three witnesses, summoned by a two-page girl who spotted a bizarre object in the sky, reported the incident to police, spokesman said.

Michael Cook was seen a pale green saucer and at it burned. I was right. Zena Steer, 16, an astronomer, said she saw the British Broadcasting Corp. That's when I realized it couldn't have been a star.

She called police to verify the sighting. Police officers saw an unidentified object after a call from a member of the public, the Scotland Yard spokesman continued. "We are unable to say what it was."

Steer said the UFO disappeared after about two hours.

NEW YORK (Variety) - Steven Spielberg, the director of "ET" and "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," is heading off to outer space again with "Taken," a 20-hour miniseries focusing on alien abductions.

Spielberg will serve as executive producer of the DreamWorks TV project, which will screen on cable's Sci-Fi Channel in the third quarter of 2000. It will be based on reports of UFO landings in New Mexico dating back to 1947.

"Steven has always had an interest in this subject," said Barry

Diller, chairman and CEO of Sci-Fi's USA Networks parent.

He told Daily Variety that Spielberg's treatment starts from the premise "that there are abductions, that they're real and not made up. This will be a big story with multiple characters, protagonists and antagonists, and it'll span lots of decades."

In a statement, Spielberg called himself a fan of the Sci-Fi Channel, and said "no other place" is better suited for a miniseries of the "magnitude" of "Taken."

"Taken," which will cost upward of $40 million, will begin production this summer. The director and cast are still to be named. The Sci-Fi Channel plans to run it for two hours a night over 10 consecutive nights.

Dear Mr. Spielberg:

Nancy and I want you to know how much we enjoyed seeing "E.T." It is truly a film classic and you are to be congratulated for your splendid work. The quality and excitement of your films have helped to bring a much-needed boost to that industry and you should be proud of the mark you have made in movie history.

Again, we appreciate your sharing "E.T." with us. With our best wishes,

Sincerely,

RONALD REAGAN
