Interim summary: "Machine-like" object seems to be tall, round, very shiny. It is enclosed, and seems to be sitting on top of the ground, rather than attached to a floor, etc. It may be attached to smtg at some point higher up. "Floor" or base of enclosure seems very rough (AOL: more like gravel than like a floor).

SUMMARY:

Overall area of site seems to be a land/water interface which is dark at (psychic) time of viewing. The area seems relatively flat. There seems to be some kind of a manmade at the site which is of importance. It seems to be more of an object than a structure, but seems to be enclosed within a large structure of some unusual kind, which may be partially buried, with the top open. The "floor" or base of the enclosure seems very rough (AOL: more like gravel than like a floor).

The main "object of importance" is large, tall, slender, and round. It is larger at the bottom than at the top with a sudden but smooth change in size at one point along the way up. It seems to be some kind of a tall, round machine which is shiny & smooth-surfaced. I get the impression that it may be painted a brownish-grey color. There is someone there, evidently to work on it. This person seems amazingly short, squat and fat. The machine seems to be sitting on top of the rough "ground" floor of the enclosure rather than attached to it (not bolted down). It may be attached to something at some point higher up.

There appears to be nothing else of major importance enclosed with the main object at the site. The main object is hollow, but the area inside seems small and gives a "cramped" feeling. It seems to be empty of anything important.

EVALUATION:

From the moment I first worked with the envelope, I was barraged with vague, but vividly colored visuals. These visuals and the inability to dispell them repeatedly drove me away from working on the site. Working this "INGO" method today has worked through them, but has also seemed to reinforce the concepts they were presenting: a single machine with graceful curves, sleek lines (AOL: like a car), possibly for some kind of transportation.

I am frustrated by the lack of things which seem to be "important" at the site, and the lack of activity there. I feel confident about the session, but don't feel that it was very productive.
