BARCELONA, SPAIN

Barcelona is a Port built on a wide plain between the Besos River to the North and the Llobregat River to the South. Barcelona stretches West from the sea to the hill of Tibidabo, (from which is an excellent view of the city). The plain is dotted with hills, among them the Taber, site of the cathedral and Montjuich, crowned by a fort that is now a military museum.

Barcelona is divided into three well defined sections. The first is the old medieval area of winding streets and ancient buildings centered around the gothic cathedral. It includes the sailors' quarters, called Barceloneta, made up of narrow, dark streets, inhabited by seamen and artisians. The Ramblas, one of the most famous avenues in Europe, borders the Southwest side of the old quarter. Once a stream bed, it is now a wide boulevard filled with open air cafes, stalls selling birds and flowers and shops of every description.

The second section consists of 19th and 20th century extentions of the city- wide parallel avenues leading to the foothills. It is a fashionable residential district and contains the 100 year old university and the more modern university city restaurants and night clubs. Luxury shopping areas can be found here.

The third section consists of old villages scattered over the plain, now absorbed in the city.
