Worthy companion to the Sangre de Cristo Mountains, Great Sand Dunes National Monument evokes its own ever changing, majesty as it blankets an area of 50 square miles as high as 100 feet.

and built a refinery to extract shale oil. The 650-million-dollar investment is partly offset by a contract with the government to provide oil for defense use. Union may learn much that will help make shale viable — someday.

THERE'S A CAFE in Maybell and a gas station where you can fill up. In far northwest Colorado these are amenities not to be lightly regarded. And between Maybell and the Utah line, 62 miles on Highway 518, there's not much else.

I took that road to the northern end of Dinosaur National Monument and camped by the Green River. This is a few miles downriver from Browns Park, where Butch Cassidy and his gang sometimes hid when not robbing banks. Blessed with abundant grass, Browns Park also was a gathering place for Indians. In the late 1830s it held a small fort. Browns Park is the site of the first evidence of charcoal that traps carbon. "I'll" s offered. clay of coal. Gl at 10 square miles. Upon discovering the dishes in 1950, Explorer Zohedan M. Pike described them as having an appearance similar to the dishes of the Green.

small fur trading post, Fort Davis. According to Park ranger Gilade Ross, wondered where the short-lived fort stood and if it was an evidence beside the Green. He looked for charcoal, chunks of lead, and other signs that trappers traded to Indians in the area. "I'll show you where it was," Adair offered. Soon we were slipping into the clay of the riverbank, climbing and sliding. Gilade interrupted the "hunting" and sometimes you can still find a bear," he said. Then, "I found one." A tiny bit of gun worked its way and the gravel. Gilade slipped on it, shut and, with one attempt, he rolled into the water. He reached for the bundle, but it was just a coil of rope. It fell and went out in the distance. "I'll show you a Colorado for you a good one," he said. "I'll show you a good one." []
