Viewer 099 Session Report

Time: 1030 - 1141

Summary:

(Refer to sketches) Site description: Vegetation-covered hills or mountains located to the immediate east of a city. The city lies on a flat plain. There is water to its west, possibly a river (but probably an ocean). [Strong AOLs of Central/Latin America and Mexico City].

A members of a small army, wearing green uniforms, are positioned in the hills overlooking the city; they have an objective below. [At this point I went into AOL drive (per project manager), took a break, and restarted].

There is a bureaucratic-official, located far to the east (beyond the mountains), who issues orders to the small army. [AI-Surprise at naivete of the unit's leader, who does not recognize the official for the "snake-in-the-grass" that he is].

The militia, or small army, attacks to the north of the city against what seems to be the main north-south route leading into the city. Mostly small arms (automatic weapons) are used in the attack. The attackers actually consider themselves as the "defenders"---almost like the target represents "oppression" in some sense. The "target" seems to be people who would rather call for help than fight (like civilians). Not a lot of damage is inflicted.

The objective seems to be simply a disruption of the transportation route. This attack does not seem to represent a single incident, but rather a continuing series of such things in this area of the world. [AOL - "reform"].
