incidents do not really involve tangible physical objects.

Third, if this type of investigation is to be continued, men with proved scientific and technical ability should be assigned to carry out the interrogations and investigations. It would be preferable either that the interrogator and technical specialist be the same person or, at least, that they work together in close harmony. Such an arrangement would aid greatly in becoming the completeness and consistency of evidence which has thus far hindered the explanation of our "flying saucer" incidents.
