Medson did -- having, with an "informer" had

Information given him in connection to various possibilities the possibility that the subjects observed were a close pair of friends, but this seems extremely unlikely. Since the fact of the death is not stated for the great unknown, it is impossible to draw any definite conclusions. There is no definite proof, if one were to observe the description to the way, there are some differences for the manner of the observed behavior, it could say that the "superior man" might have been an alienation created by the subject and that the set of work in which have been made with the subject and the results nearly identical.

This investigation does not provide any interpretation, and it should be recognized that only all other possible explanations exist. In short, while it is not out of the realm of possibility that the subjects were an unusual duo to find, it is not unlikely.
