Incident #79 -- Kennedy' Virginia -- April 1967

There is no astronomical explanation for this incident. While, however, observed considerable attention, because of the experience of the observer and the fact that the observation was made through a theodolite and that observation could be read with a good balance. The observation, therefore, a good estimate of altitude, of relative size, and of speed as much more reliable than those given in most reports.

This investigator would like to re-emphasize that these and other pilot observations be utilized as to other possible, unreported sightings.
