There is going to be a film made about this incident. The subject is about the fact that the subject was in view 14 to 20 seconds, not indicating that the airplane had time to shift a position and so to fly low over the water surface, and also to extend 15 seconds of 20 ft. film.

In my opinion, however, looking for the fact that no other trail was observed, except of the subject, outside the visibility of the water, even without film. There is not enough "solid balls" or solid objects.

A better estimate of what is possible. The possibility remains that the subject may have been an unidentified, colored balloon.
