UFO Event in Cornwall April 28th 2014

AN UNIDENTIFIED flying object (UFO) was spotted by several people in the skies above Porthreath last night.

The mystery object, which has been described as “quite large” and “triangular”, was spotted around 11pm by households in the Porthreath and Helston areas.

Now founder of the Cornwall UFO Research Group (Cuforg), Dave Gillham, is appealing for witnesses to come forward to shed some light on the unexplained aircraft. Mr Gillham said: “I like to log these things to find out what they are.

“Apparently there were quite a few people who saw the sighting last night.

“It’s nice to hear from people who have seen sightings and most people do appreciate someone who is interested in it as when they tell people who are not interested they tend to get ridiculed and they become reluctant to talk about sightings.”

Mr Gillham said: “It had a lot of white lights at the front but none that I could see at the back.”

“It came from the Porthreath area and very slowly and quieter than a helicopter or plane [and] headed towards Helston.”

“It was definitely not a helicopter or plane.”

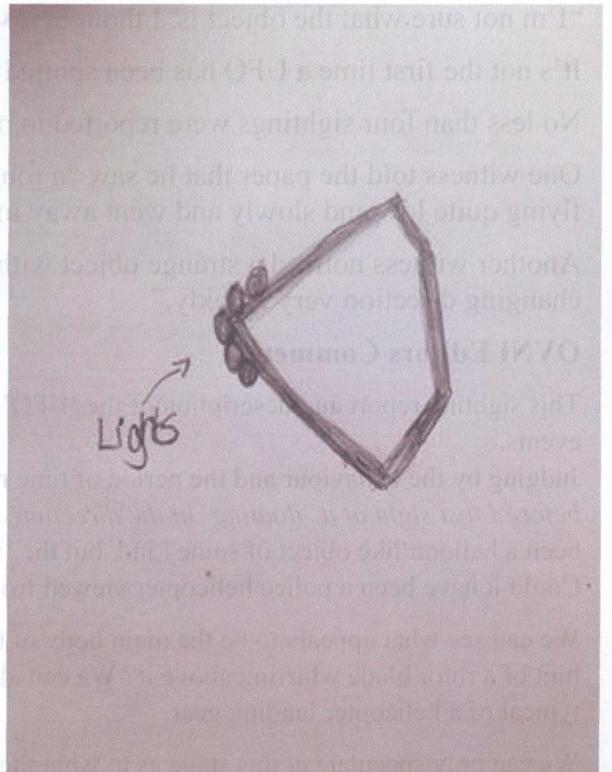

“It was quite clearly visible to the naked eye but not on my camera phone.”

One witness, who wishes to remain anonymous, had an eerie experience after attempting to capture the UFO on her camera phone.

She said: “It was an odd shape, very bright and quieter than normal. It was not an aeroplane or helicopter

“I videoed it, watched it [and] went inside and next morning it was gone from my phone. Just a mass of bright light.”

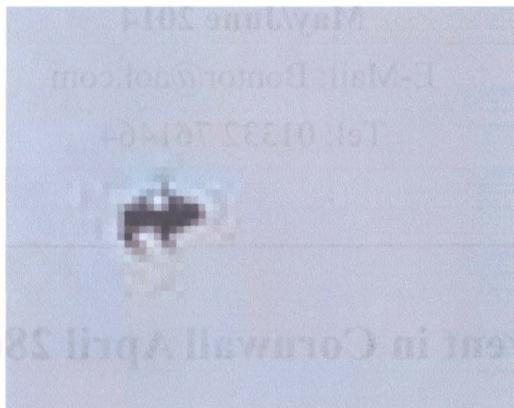

Mr Gillham is keeping an open mind about the UFO and has admitted that it was seen on a flight path to the RNAS Culdrose naval base. Anyone with information about the sighting can call Dave Gillham on, 01872 276381.

Are UFO's flying over London?

Facebook user claims image of 'rotating' object is UFO

Posted by National UFO Centre

April 30th 2014

This weird object-described by the photographer as 'rotating'-was reportedly spotted in the skies over Islington, north London.

The witness was so excited by the sighting, they took to Facebook, posting the images under the Mixtris UFO-images (the Mirror reports).

In the text accompanying the images, the user wrote: "I captured this object a couple of streets away from where I live. The object appeared black in colour and was rotating as it moved along."

"I captured nearly 5 minutes of video before I lost sight of it floating in the direction of Highbury and Islington."

"I'm not sure what the object is. I thought it was a balloon, but there appears to be a light on it."

It's not the first time a UFO has been spotted in Islington, home to celebrities, bankers and media types.

No less than four sightings were reported in one year, the 'Islington Gazette' reports.

One witness told the paper that he saw "a round luminous object over the green. It was pretty big and flying quite low and slowly and went away in the clouds."

Another witness noticed a strange object with bright lights, moving like a "hovercraft suddenly changing direction very quickly."

OVNI Editors Comment:

This sighting report and description of the 'UFO' does not compare with previous historically recorded UFO events.

Judging by the behaviour and the period of time relating to the sighting "I captured nearly 5 minutes of video before I lost sight of it 'floating' in the direction of Highbury and Islington." this unidentified object may have been a balloon/like object of some kind, but the 'light' remains an unknown source, possibly a reflection. Could it have been a police helicopter viewed from a distance?

We can see what appears to be the main body of the object, with a vertical shaft protruding upwards and is there a hint of a rotor blade whirring above it? We can also see what may be twin skids attached under the craft, which is typical of a helicopter landing gear.

We can only speculate at this stage as to what the "UFO" was, but judging by the noted behaviour and performance of the object it does appear extremely unlikely that it was an 'Alien' craft of any kind..

St Leonard's-on-Sea, East Sussex, I was in the garden with the dogs when I look up to west there was a ball shape going in and out of the cloud April 24th 2014, at 10:45 AM. Then a plane went over from east to west where the ball shape was the ball went into a cloud. Then when it came out it was closer to me then behind the cloud another one appeared then looking to left there was a Grey shaped like satellite. Then the plane came back from the west to east, at that time the three 3 ufos went into the cloud. Thanks to John Hayes www.UFOinfo.com

Cwmbran, Monmouthshire, and Wales -- My husband and I were walking back from the local village when I noticed an unusual bright light above us on April 19th 2014, at 9.40 PM. I pointed the bright orange object out to my husband. We could just make out that there were smaller lights on it. When I first saw the object it was moving quite fast then as we watched it slowed down to almost stop then started moving very slowly toward heading towards Twmbarlwn and the mountain in Cwmbran. It was not a plane or helicopter. This was too bright and its shape was nothing like normal. My husband said it was about 100 feet above us. We watched it disappear over the mountain. Ireland Experiences Cork – I'm nearly 60 years old having experiences since childhood. I have perfect knowledge of Bible after 20 years daily study and perfect belief in the Lord. I have salvation by the Lord's sacrifice on the cross. I have seen spirits of humans and spirits of alien looking persons and other beings. I have dreams where I was facing non humans.

I was awake on my bed relaxing and the next thing I was in a cockpit of a circular craft and could see out through the walls of a fantastic futuristic craft. I saw a low object passing that I knew was a strange and out of the ordinary. It was a full circle of white and red light on top and red underneath with the red covering the bottom slightly to the right of the circle. It flew in a mild arc with a slight dip all the way.

One night I saw an 8 foot tall spirit in my bedroom. Several times in my life I got messages telepathically that saved my bacon in some way. The spirits I saw were like human with bodies and beautiful features out of this world really, some were tall whites and one stood next to me a few times. I know he was friendly explanation of entities. Thanks to MUFON CMS

South Africa Triangle

Johannesburg – I scrutinized the night sky April 23/24, 2014 we had clear and crisp conditions and the Milky Way was clear. At around 9 PM, I observed an object appear very suddenly (almost as if ejected) from the general area of the Belt of Orion. Its triangular V shape was apparent only due to the thin V-shaped wisps of cloud engulfing its "flanks". The "inside borders" of the clouds were straight and clearly defined. The "craft" appeared to be quite low and sped directly across the sky, disappearing behind the tree line in my garden in a northerly direction. Its altitude, speed and direction were constant.

There was absolutely no sound. We often see odd "behavior" at night, but this particular sighting had me in a state. My mom was walking the dog and I know she saw it too. She was initially very distressed and now refuses to discuss it. I went outside again an hour or so later and looked up to see the exact same occurrence, as if the "video" had been looped. Within seconds thereafter, a solid triangular craft with light blue lights on each corner appeared from the same area and followed the same flight path. This craft was very different to the first 2. It was very clearly defined and obviously solid, flew at a much higher altitude and seemed to be somewhat faster than the first loti have seen this craft before on a cloudy night (about 2 months ago). Two things I feel are noteworthy: - 1. After each of the 3 craft flew over, an aeroplane happened to fly over and 2. A dark helicopter with searchlights circled the sky above.

In closing, I have thus far never bothered posting any of the numerous sightings I've experienced, but I feel it is high time we South Africans start talking about and sharing these experiences. I am convinced that reporting such events will greatly contribute towards a growing movement of consciousness and awakening!

A New Meteor Shower in May?

Meteor shower in May could turn out to be a STORM - with up to 1,000 shooting stars an HOUR

- A remarkable new meteor shower is set to take place later this month
- Event will occur during the nights of 23 and 24 May in the US and Canada
- The origin of the shower is Comet 209P/LINEAR, first spotted in 2004
- But this will be the first time Earth has passed through its 'tail' of debris
- Astronomers predict sky watchers might see up to 1,000 meteors an hour

By Jonathan O'Callaghan Published: 12:14, 6 May 2014 | Updated: 12:39, 6 May 2014 (Mail On Line)

Later this month we might be in store for a meteor storm that has never been seen before as Earth passes through the tail of a comet. As our planet passes through debris from Comet 209P/LINEAR, astronomers say we could see as many as 1,000 shooting stars per hour.

The event will occur on the nights of 23 and 24 May, when Earth's path crosses that of the comet, and will first be most visible from the northern US and southern Canada as well as parts of Europe.

From the UK the event is not expected to be visible, although on before dawn on 24 May some meteors may still be visible.

As our planet moves into the 'blizzard' of ice and rock chunks, they will burn up in the atmosphere, providing observers below with slow moving but bright meteors.

The reason we could see so many meteors is because all of the debris it has ejected between 1803 and 1924 will be in Earth's path.

'This potential new shower is so new that astronomers aren't sure what to expect,' said Jane Houston of Nasa's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, California.

'Predictions run from less than 100 meteors per hour up to an unlikely but possible meteor storm as high as 1,000 per hour.'

However, there is still a chance the event will not be as impressive as predicted.

'The idea of a brand new meteor shower is indeed very exciting,' astronomer Gemma Lavender from All About Space magazine stated. 'The shower has been referred to as a "meteor storm", however, judging by recent calculations, the idea of a phenomena that will see 1,000 meteors per hour is in fact dwindling.

'We're more likely to see a strong shower rather than a storm of meteors.

'However, of course, we won't know it's true strength until we head outside and observe the meteor shower for ourselves when 209P/LINEAR arrives.'

The comet was first spotted back in February 2004, but this is the first chance encounter between it and Earth.

The discovery was made by the Lincoln Near-Earth Asteroid Research (LINEAR) project.

It completes an orbit of the Sun every 5.09 years, with its orbit ranging from just inside that of Earth to almost as far as Jupiter.

Following our encounter with its tail, the comet will be as close as 5 million miles (8.3 million kilometres) to Earth on 29 May before it makes its way out towards Jupiter again on its orbit.

The meteor storm will be visible in the night sky from the northern US and southern Canada, as well as other swathes of the Northern Hemisphere. The best views will be towards the North Star (Polaris) above Camelopardalis, with this meteor storm being dubbed Camelopardid

NOT A UFO but an Unexplained Night Light.

Written by Derek Kendall of Kawerau New Zealand and dated 23 March 2014.

Tuesday morning 12.25 am 18 March 2014. Night fine and clear of clouds. Full moon with a light north- east breeze. I was staying at my daughter's house for the first time at night.

This is at Papamoa in the Bay of Plenty on the east coast of the North Island.

Now as I saw it. This house is in the lower hills and is up a private road that serves about six other well spread out houses and down below is a house-bus.

Now I came out from the added on balcony bedroom onto the balcony deck and looked north.

The moon was full and just coming over a ridge to my right but obscured by the building unless stretching over the balcony fence. In front of me were two of several pine fir trees one on the left with a gap between the one on the right. (See the photo).

Between these two trees in the background you can see trees on the skyline almost at the same level but a little higher. Now just to the left of the right hand side tree a branch sticks out at right angles. A flat oval shape light that was yellow with an orange streak from the middle to the left was just suspended there.

I watched this for about three minutes when I got cold and went back to my bed. I looked from the bed through the bed level window to the trees and saw the light twinkle through the branch.

I went back out to the deck which was six steps from the bed and the light was still there in the same position.

This time it moved very slightly to the left but did not get near the left side tree then just moved the slight amount it was in before.

Once again I got cold and went back inside. I wish I had put a blanket around me now. About five minutes later I went back out but it had gone.

Now being night time it appeared to me that this light was large but a long way away from me between the trees.

In the morning light how things looked so different. The two trees the one on the left was closer to me and the right one would be 10 to 15 metres further away. I thought at night that the light was a long way away, now in the daylight I think it was close to the right side tree and not obscured by it.

It was certainly well positioned for me to see it CLEARLY between the trees and was just there for me to see it.

The size of the light would be the size of the long finger but flat oval. So it may have been in the valley itself or being large could have been over the trees right behind at the back.

Footnote.

I have been studying UFO things since 1976 and have never seen anything unusual before.

UFOs Descend on Deer in Mississippi Woods

By BRIAN CANOVA | Good Morning America – Fri, Apr 4, 2014 1:06 PM EDT

Eerie lights illuminate a group of deer in a wooded area of Mississippi

An Mississippi couple who were camping in this area had set up a 'trail camera' which operates at night using an infra-red system. Instead of just photographing the local wildlife, they were mystified when on the following day, they viewed the nights filming from the trail camera and captured eerie images involving a group of deer and floating lights.

At 7.24pm deer appear on the camera and all is normal, 7.29pm a dim light appears, at 7.35pm the light gets brighter at 7.53pm a weird shape appears and the deer are lit up brightly, but how, as the cameras are operating with infra-red and don't emit light?

At 7.56pm another light appears and the light seems focussed on the deer, it looks like headlights but they are well off the ground and there's no road. Then shortly afterwards the light flies away.

It was on the following day that the previous nights filming was viewed. The couple were mystified by what they had seen. They drove back to the area and looked for anything that could account for the strange lights, but there was nothing.

The couple later showed the film to friends, but nobody could find an explanation "What was that!" was the comment.

They later said, "they don't know whether it was 'Aliens' or a UFO, but admit it has turned out to be just a bit of fun!"

There's something mysterious in the sky. Sometimes it's a saucer-shaped object. Sometimes it's a series of lights that change in formation, color and speed. Other times someone steps forward to admit that the mystery is, well, nothing more than a hoax. One thing is certain: the phenomena of UFOs, or unidentified flying objects, will keep many with their eyes (and cameras) fixed on the skies for years to come.

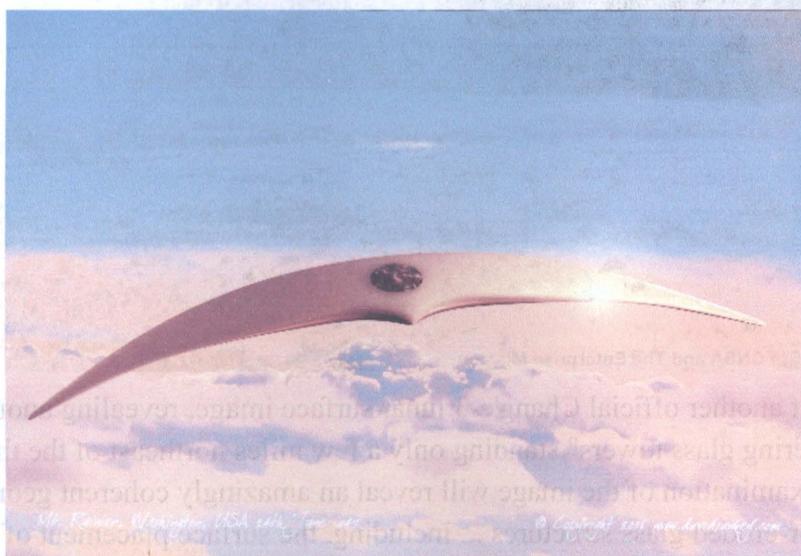

UFOs Descend on Deer in Mississippi Woods

KELSTERBACH, GERMANY, 2007.

The sighting occurred on Monday May 14, 2007 in the German city of Kelsterbach between 1:00 AM and 1:50 AM. Two friends (Identity hidden by request) saw a boomerang shaped flying object in the clear night sky which was flying very low over one of the witnesses yard. The other friend saw it first and initially it appeared to be a very fast moving cloud. It uncloaked itself and initially it appeared to be transparent. Then he was able to see some small lights on the bottom (which by that time were turned on). He was able to see whole ship, it appeared to be of a silvery colour with a strong reflecting effect like a mirror, it looked heavily polished.

As soon as it had passed the Great Dipper it cloaked again and disappeared. It had an orange glow at the front, some sort of dome at the rear and some sort of lights (which were turned off) and the bottom. They were able to see this object in full detail. The ship's body and its dome were silver in colour. The big lights at the bottom appeared to be tinted, the small lights described above were not visible any longer because they seem to be turned off at the end of the sighting. The estimate craft's wingspan was the size of at least three or four Airbus A380 Airplanes put together. The sighting didn't last long, maybe a couple of minutes and a few seconds.

Compare the picture above (produced by artist David Sankey) of the sighting made by Kenneth Arnold of nine strange objects on 24 June 1947, while flying near the Cascade Mountains, Washington State, in search of a missing aircraft. Arnold described the crescent-shaped objects as similar to a 'saucer' skipping over water and so began the era of the 'Flying Saucer'.

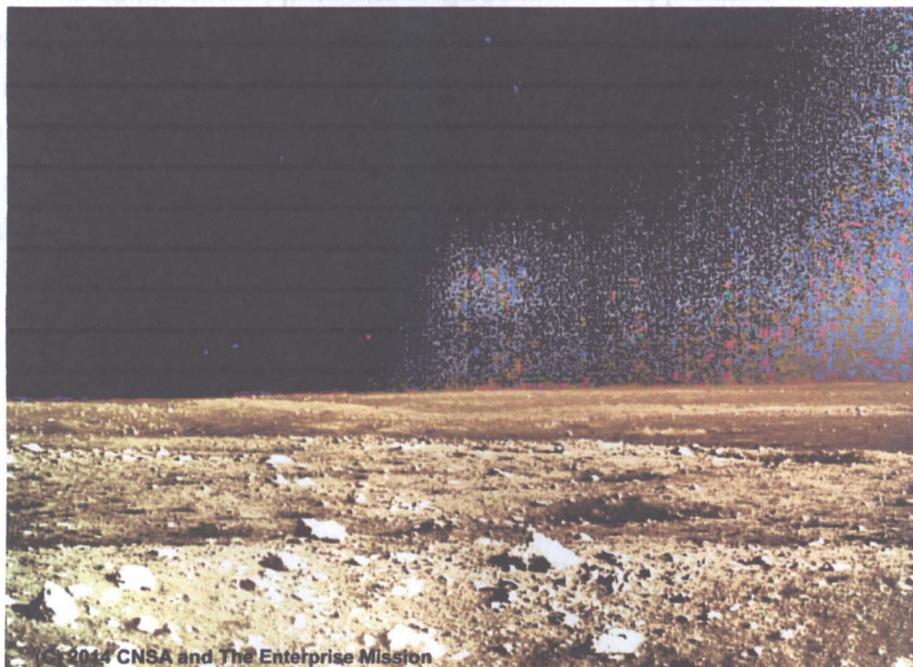

CHINESE LUNAR IMAGES

From 'Coast to Coast': April 23 2014

On Tuesday nights show Richard C Hoagland revealed 'history changing' results of the recent four month old Chinese Chang'e-3 unmanned landing on the Moon. He presented what the Chinese have really discovered on the Moon. Using photo-processing with the official Chinese photo's he 'equalized' (turned up the grain) darker areas, which then showed evidence for the ruins of "tall, glass crystalline skyscrapers that may be miles high!"

This dramatic comparison is between a Chang'e-3 lunar image (left), officially posted on the Chinese Army government website, and an "equalized" version of the same Chinese lunar image (right). The "glittering, vertical glass curtains" blatantly visible in the "equalized-image version," are stunning proof now of the reality behind the Enterprise Mission's decades-old "ancient lunar dome" hypothesis.

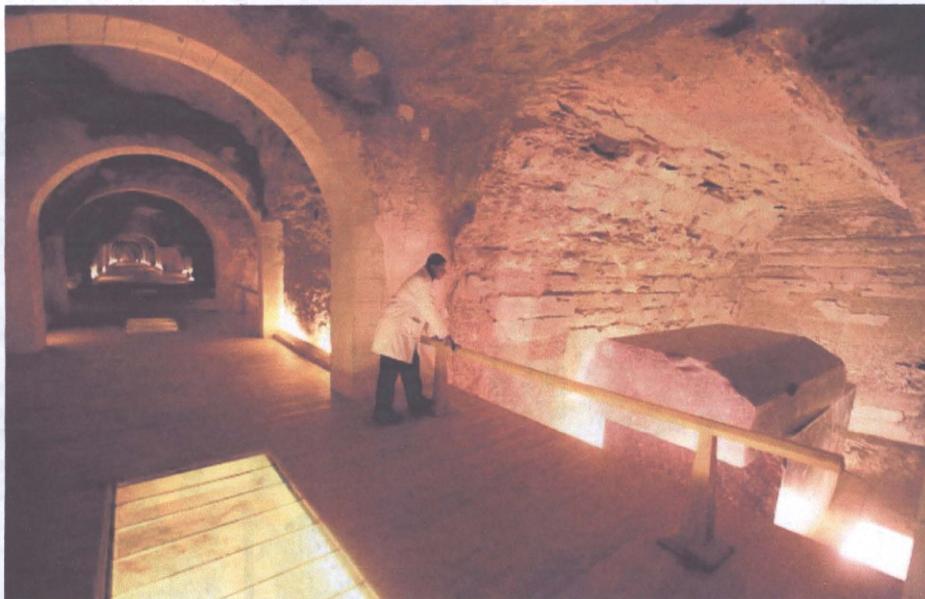

"Equalized version" of another official Chang'e-3 lunar surface image, revealing another set of the Moon's startling "glittering glass towers" standing only a few miles northeast of the the Chang'e-3 landing site. Careful examination of the image will reveal an amazingly coherent geometry to these ancient, heavily meteor-eroded glass structures ... including, the surface placement of the still-glowing "colored blue and red panels" appearing at these structures' base and to the extreme right -- apparently energized colored panels "embedded in the ancient glass." Scientists Speechless At What They Find Beneath Egypt! One of the Most Controversial Mysteries Ever–Solved!

(Before It's News Sunday, April 20, 2014)

For many generations, it has been questioned and debated. Many long hours and much time has been spent pouring over the evidence, yet with no clear answers and no hard proof. However, today, more evidence keeps piling up that proves the ancients did have technology far beyond what we can even begin to imagine.

Brien Foerester takes you down dark tunnels, beneath pyramids, and inside places you have only seen in your imagination.

But now he goes even further and takes you beneath Egypt, where mysterious 100 ton stone boxes were discovered. Some people believe they were used for burial purposes, but Brien clearly shows us how they were used for ancient 'high' technology.

Is it possible that the technology of the ancients was so advanced, it goes above and beyond ours today? Where we believe we have gone forward and advanced throughout history, is it possible we are actually far behind, and that someone else a long time ago knew all the secrets we have yet to uncover?

Time and again, mankind has been stunned by the ancient megaliths, wondering how they could possibly have been erected by the humans of that time. But the nephilim and raphaim were extremely intelligent, insanely strong, and quite frightful to look upon. They were also giants! This is exactly how it was that ancient megalithic structures were built.

Brien writes:

Inside a tunnel system carved out of the solid limestone bedrock in the desert of Egypt, more than 20 granite boxes made of precision shaped Aswan granite are a true enigma. Said by some to have been the burial places of prized bulls, their real function is far more intriguing. And they are clear examples of Lost Ancient High Technology created before the time of the Dynastic Egyptians.

Egypt Underground: The Ancient 100 Ton Stone Boxes of the Serapeum

OVNI Editor: We regret that we do not have sufficient space to publish the full article on this subject, but it once again asks more questions than there are answers. If you ever have the opportunity to visit these ancient sites and it is safe to do so! Then I guarantee it is well worth while trip!

Out of Place in Time: Was This Hammer Made 100 Million Years Ago?

(‘Before It’s News: April 2014 : Extracts)

Replica of the London Hammer as presented in a slide by Dr. Doug Newton of the non-profit organization Trinity Creation Studies.

Oopart (out of place artifact) is a term applied to dozens of prehistoric objects found in various places around the world that seem to show a level of technological advancement incongruous with the times in which they were made. Ooparts often frustrate conventional scientists, delight adventurous investigators open to alternative theories, and spark debate.

A hammer was found in London, Texas, in 1934 encased in stone that had formed around it. The rock surrounding the hammer is said to be more than 100 million years old, suggesting the hammer was made well before humans who could have made such an object are thought to have existed.

Much mystery surrounds the so-called “London Hammer.”

Carl Baugh, who is in possession of the artifact, announced that it was tested by Battelle Laboratory in Columbus, Ohio, a lab that has tested moon rocks for NASA. The tests found the hammer to have unusual metallurgy—96.6 percent iron, 2.6 percent chlorine, 0.74 percent sulfur, and no carbon.

Carbon is usually what strengthens brittle iron, so it is strange that carbon is absent. Chlorine is not usually found in iron. The iron shows a high degree of craftsmanship without bubbles in the metal. Furthermore, it is said to be coated in an iron oxide that would not readily form under natural conditions and which prevents rust.

Baugh’s website says, however, that the fossils in the stone surrounding the hammer “retain fine detail, indicating that they were not reworked, but [are] part of the original formation.” This would suggest the fossils and the hammer are from the same time period, that the fossils did not just get mixed up in materials that formed rock around the hammer at a later date.

The object was found by a hiker, and it seems it was not found embedded in the original layer of rock, which would have made a stronger case for an ancient origin. It was a chunk of rock found resting on a ledge, perhaps having tumbled there from within a larger formation.

As evidence of the hammer’s age, Baugh said part of the wooden handle had turned to coal. The photos of the hammer show a black part of the hammer that looks like it could be coal.

The debate surrounding the hammer’s origin has become bound up with the creationism versus evolutionism debate. Baugh is a creationist. Kuban is a creationist-turned-skeptic (or a much more moderate creationist). Various creationist organizations take different stances on this artifact, and many evolutionists dismiss it as a creationist hoax. But the object remains a fascinating one, apart from its role in this controversy.

Lunar Soil Is a Treasure Trove of Energy Potential

NASA has confirmed it has crashed an object into the Moon on April 18, 2014, to study the sparse atmosphere of the moon, which is so sparse that it differs little from a vacuum. Former NASA employee Clark McClelland claims that Moon mining operations were observed by the Apollo 15 Astronaut crew composed of David R. Scott, Commander, Alfred M. Worden, Command Module Pilot, and James B. Irwin, Lunar Module Pilot in 1971. Remote viewer Ingo Swan spotted mining of a dark ore on the Moon. My friend Ingo is the original remote viewer establishing remote viewing at The Stanford Research Institute and later with government intelligence agency. They asked him to remote view the dark side of the Moon. Swann saw extensive buildings, roads, and human forms digging. His viewing was confirmed by NASA, Chinese, Japanese and Navy photographs.

A report published in the journal Science on September 2, the Lunar Prospector spacecraft currently orbiting the moon has sent back data indicating the probable presence of billions of tons of water ice at the moon's poles. "This makes colonizing the moon a lot more attractive. We know the Moon has traces of Rare Earth Elements such as europium and tantalum, which are used in everything from electronics to advanced weaponry. Astronaut Dr. Harrison "Jack" Schmitt voyaged to the moon in 1972 and feels Earth's energy needs could be met by the moon. If Schmitt has his way, the moon could one day be home to a mining colony on the Moon. Astronaut Schmitt once bunny-hopped his way across the lunar surface is confident that the economic case can be made for mining settlements, operations, and so-called "company towns" on the moon.

Schmitt says "We know now that we can live on the moon, live independently of the Earth, and there are the resources there to do that," said Schmitt to attendees of the Prospectors and Developers Association of Canada's Student-Industry Mineral Exploration Workshop at the Science North INCO Cavern. "It's probably time that we seriously consider not only going back to the moon but to see if we meant that we wanted to leave the cradle we call the Earth."

Few people are as qualified to speculate on the suitability of mining the moon as Schmitt, who was the lunar module pilot on the final lunar mission Apollo 17 in 1972. He is one of 12 people to walk on the moon and the only geoscientist to ever do so. This legacy is a lasting one: due to the lack of erosion, his lunar footprints will stay in recognizable form for a million years.

These days, the former United States senator chairs the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) Advisory Council. He also serves as adjunct professor and research consultant at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, where he studies the feasibility of using a rare atomic isotope known as helium-3 as fuel from the moon. It's in this capacity that he's been making the case for mining operations on the moon, where helium-3 is much more abundant than on Earth. While various engineering problems have yet to make it a reality, using helium-3 in nuclear fusion would result in no radioactive waste while producing considerable power.

According to Schmitt's estimates, a 1,000-megawatt fusion power plant would require no more than 75 kilograms of helium-3 per year, which would be the equivalent of US $280 million of steam coal. "That's a tremendous amount of energy and a small amount of helium-3." To acquire 100 kilograms of helium-3, workers would have to extract and process two square kilometers of lunar dirt, or regolith, to a depth of three meters.

Objects photographed by an Apollo crew show evidence of mining.

To make operations economically feasible, launch costs to return the material to Earth would have to be $3,000 per kilogram, a factor of 20 lower than the costs at the time of Apollo 17. While this number seems daunting, Schmitt says many technologies have become considerably cheaper since that time, and private-sector involvement should further reduce costs.

Other costs, however, are much more daunting. Schmitt estimates that merely demonstrating the commercial viability of helium-3 fusion would require $5 billion. Another $2.5 billion would be needed to develop habitats and processing facilities for lunar settlements capable of annually producing 100 kilograms of helium-3. Semi-automated mining robots will likely need to be part of the solution. Few governments have expressed an interest in the potential of lunar helium-3 fusion

SpaceX Successfully Soft-Lands on Earth for First Time ~ Is Mars Next?

Monday, April 28, 2014 (Before It's News)

After flying to the edge of space, a spent SpaceX Falcon 9 rocket booster successfully returned to Earth, deployed its landing legs, and hovered for a moment. The ability, known as a soft landing, could allow the company to dramatically reduce the cost of spaceflight and one day land rockets on Mars.

Because it came down at a spot in the Atlantic Ocean, SpaceX's rocket had nothing solid to land on. It crashed into the ocean and was lost to large waves from a storm before the company could get a boat out to recover it. But in the next few months, SpaceX hopes to reproduce the achievement.

"We expect to get more and more precise with each landing. If all goes well, I am optimistic that we can land a stage back at Cape Canaveral at the end of the year," said entrepreneur and SpaceX founder Elon Musk, during a press conference Apr. 25 in Washington D.C.

Soft landing a rocket is something that Musk and SpaceX have been working towards since the company's inception. After burning through their fuel, today's rocket stages simply crash into the ocean and are lost. Each new launch requires building a brand new rocket. By recovering the spent stages, SpaceX predicts it could reduce the cost of their launches, currently around $60 million per flight, by as much as 70 percent. Musk hopes that in the future the company would be able to fly a rocket stage to space, bring it back to a launch pad on the ground, refurbish and refuel it, and potentially fly it again the same day. Their goal is to eventually bring the cost of a single launch down to between $5 and $7 million.

Though unstated at the press conference, this technology is also a first step in setting SpaceX up for one of Musk's long-term stated desires: placing a human on Mars. Though NASA was able to put the 1-ton Curiosity rover on the Red Planet's surface in 2012, we currently lack the capability to land anything heavier. A human mission to Mars could require landing as much as 40 tons of material on the surface, an impossible task with today's technology.

The problem is that Mars' thin atmosphere prevents parachutes from inflating enough to slow a lander down. But a technology called supersonic retropropulsion would allow a rocket to fire its engines downward to slow and hover above the ground before landing. NASA has made some strides toward testing and building this technology but is far from making it practical. By achieving a soft landing on Earth, SpaceX has shown itself capable of one day developing similar technology for a Mars landing.

At the press conference, Musk said that the Falcon 9 rocket stage came down within a few miles of its intended target. With better accuracy, SpaceX wants to bring this precision to within a mile. Eventually, the company "should be able to land with the accuracy of a helicopter," said Musk, achieving a precision "within a meter of its target."

Dr. John Mack feature film (E-Mail 9/5/14 to OVNI Editor from Will Bueche Assoc. Producer)

I'm aware from having worked for Dr. John Mack that you had great respect for his writings, and were often in correspondence with him. I'm also aware you are a person with a keen interest in the subject matter to which Dr. Mack devoted the latter part of his life.

Therefore I am writing to you with news about the John Mack movie-the feature film that was mentioned last year in Vanity Fair magazine which has the support of the Mack family, and interest from some major studios. The producer has made a promotional video at <http://JohnMackMovie.com> which I hope may be of interest. If so I'd be grateful if you'd share this with any friends who you feel may be interested. Thank you very much. Will Bueche Associate Producer.

'Take me to your leader.' Sure, give us a minute...

Aliens had better not be on their way to meet us any time soon...we're just not ready for it. Space psychologists say our perception of our place in the order of the universe is just too flimsy and we would be unable to grasp the momentous nature of meeting an alien. Prof. Gabriel de la Torre questioned 116 American, Italian and Spanish university students. Most lacked awareness of many aspects of astronomy and their views were coloured by religion.

'A cosmic awareness must be further promoted-where our mind is increasingly conscious of the global reality that surrounds us-using the best tool available to us-education. We need a new Galileo to lead this journey,' said Prof. De la Torre, from the University of Cadiz. (Source 'Metro' 11 May 14)

Jeff Whitear (PRA member, Guildford, Surrey) writes...

Jeff has viewed the 'Human Mutilation' DVD (shown to members recently) and he says 'NO' the Aliens are not nasty by mutilating the animals and humans! They are just checking on us arrogant humans to see how we are being affected by the pollution and radiation that we have caused on Earth.

He makes the point that the removal of the animals tongue and lips are because that is the first part of the animal to be in contact with the polluted food. The removal of the blood from the animal is to check the level of radiation which passes through all the organs. The rectum removal is to see what damage has been done by the passing of radiation into the stools.

So who are the evil ones? The Aliens that mutilate the animals (and some humans?) or the Human race that has contaminated our planet with radiation and pollution?

ED: I do not think it necessary to completely drain a body of blood to analyse the state of the blood, when a small sample should suffice. I agree with the view that our planet is polluted. The Aliens have reportedly shown abductees, hologram views of coming Earthly disasters and they have stated that they are not permitted to interfere with the results of our lifestyle!
