CONTEMPORARY CONTACTEES

If, as is highly probable, you have never heard of the Unarius Academy of Science, you may find it mildly surprising that the UAS, ("a nonprofit, tax-exempt, educational and scientific organisation established in 1954 by Dr. Ernest and Ruth E. Norman, Cosmic Visionaries"), has heard of SIGAP. The database from which their multicolour brochure was launched contained not only SIGAP's full title and address, but also your chairman's forename and honorary military rank, listing for us their fax number, email address and acceptable credit cards. The UAS is definitely in business, and successfully too.

Their brochure is mainly an invitation to a weekend in San Diego, Ca., to celebrate their 13th Annual Interplanetary Conclave of Light. On its front page in full colour against a background of stars in an azure heaven, is pictured an elderly lady, heavily made-up and elegantly coiffed, wearing a silver robe and carrying a sceptre. The caption assures us this is Uriel, a Cosmic Visionary, but my guess is that it is actually Mrs. Norman. A message below tells us that a Pleiadian starship will land on a rising portion of Atlantis in the Bermuda Triangle in the year 2001, and that the UAS has purchased 67 acres of virgin land to receive the 33 spaceships of the Interplanetary Confederation who will also be arriving to work for the benefit of humankind. One can learn more about these momentous events by registering for the Conclave, ($175, accomodation not included).

California has long been notorious as the home of every variety of newage nutcase, but the really sad thing is that they obviously believe SIGAP is made up of people likely to credit their sort of nonsense, and who will make the dual Atlantic crossing to witness inter alia their parade of individuals carrying the ethnic flags of each of the 33 planets and accompanied by the music of the spheres!

Worst of all, there are probably also people who will come to believe that this is the kind of thing ufologists do.

BIRDS OF A FEATHER

BY RICHARD J. BOYLAN Ph.D.

Since sometime in the 1970's, a small group of individuals with extremely high security clearances, who were working on various aspects of UFO research and policy, began to interact unofficially on a regular basis to pool information. Their objectives were to coordinate data, see the big picture, analyze the meaning of UFOs and extraterrestrial contact with Earth, use this knowledge to gain access to additional information on the hyper secret Majestic-12 (MJ-12, the government's ultimate UFO-information control and policy group) and gain special influence through their collective power. This elite group of roughly a dozen individuals working on national security assignments gave themselves code names, using mostly bird names. Collectively, they came to be called the "aviary."

The relationship of Aviary members to MJ-12 group is murky. More than one UFO researcher estimates that some overlap in membership has occurred, in other words that MJ-12 has quietly infiltrated the Aviary to keep it under control. Dr. Steven Greer, Director of CSETI, has reported that the MJ-12 Group is now designated PI-40. This hyper classified group deals with the most sensitive compartmented information regarding extraterrestrials and is so covert a special-access program that, reportedly, the President and Congress exercise no control over it and know of it only through rumor. Dick D'Amato, National and International Security Specialist for Senator Robert Byrd and a member of the N.S.C., stated in 1991 that an incredibly powerful "black arm" of the government has been keeping UFO information secret and has also been illegally spending enormous sums of money in this operation. D'Amato said that the NSC is trying to identify this "blackarm." Ironically, the answer may be right under their noses. It is quite possible, that PI-40 exists within a highly, compartmented, special-access program, yet with informal informational links to the National Security Council's "5240" (Black Projects) Committee. While there may be some overlap between the Aviary and the PI-40 group, they remain two separate entities. PI-40 is clearly at the top; it is the policy and decision group which has orchestrated the UFO cover-up since 1947, simultaneously releasing little fragments of UFO/ET information to gradually condition the American public to the slowly-dawning realization of UFO reality. Leaked reports from sources close to some Aviary members, suggest that there is a split within the group (which may well mirror a split within PI-40). On one side are Aviary members who feel that information about UFO and ET contacts should be broadly disclosed. They feel that the public is ready for this information and generally can handle it. Others within the Aviary resist such disclosure. They do not want to lose the power their "information monopoly" gives them. They do not welcome close public scrutiny of their role in the UFO cover-up, either. Additionally, some have reportedly engaged in illegal and sometimes injurious projects and operations. The split over disclosure is creating a climate in which leaks are increasing, as some try to force disclosure and establish a track record for themselves of (belated) candor with the American public. Most Aviary members appear to be well-intentioned scientists or former military or intelligence officers with careers spanning the Cold War, who no doubt sincerely believe that secrecy about UFOs was once vital.

Following is a list of reported Aviary members:

- o BLUE JAY: Dr. Christopher "Kit" Green, MD, Ph.D; Chief, Biomedical Sciences Department, General Motors, former head of the CIA's UFO files at the "Weird Desk."
- o SEA GULL: Bruce Maccabee, Ph.D., research scientist in optical physics and laser weapons applications at the U.S. Naval Surface Weapons Lab, Maryland; MUFON physics/photo-interpretive consultant and prolific author of and consultant expert on selected "leaked" or disinformational UFO cases/topics.
- o PELICAN: Ron Pandolfi, CIA Deputy Director for the Division of Science and Technology and current custodian of UFO files at the "Weird Desk"; may be involved in the White House initiative to promptly release UFO information to the public.
- o OWL: Hal Puthoff, physicist with the Institute for Advanced Research in Austin, Texas, who specializes in Zero-Point Energy, a quantum/resonance physics phenomenon with reported potential for above-unity ("free") energy.
- o PENGUIN: John Alexander, Ph.D. in Death Sciences; Lt. Col. U.S. Army Intelligence and Security Command, which is undoubtedly the military cover for the National Security Agency, Col. Alexander is director of the Non-Lethal Weapons Department, Los Alamos National Laboratory, and has been reportedly involved in counter-intelligence remote viewing, psychic warfare, psychotronic and mind-control projects with military/security applications.
- o HAWK: Ernie Kellerstrauss, security cleared for UFO information; worked at Wright-Patterson AFB in the 1970s and reportedly lived with an extraterrestrial for a while.
- o CHICKADEE: Cmdr. C.B. Scott Jones, Ph.D., USN (Ret.), former officer with the Office of Naval intelligence and other agencies; 30 years service in U.S. intelligence overseas; involved in government research and development projects for the Defense Nuclear Agency, Defense Intelligence Agency, Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, and other organizations; former aide to Sen. Clairborne Pell, who has had a long-standing interest in UFOs and the paranormal and has tried to arrange Congressional hearings on UFOs.
- o CONDOR; Capt. Bob Collins, USAF (Ret.); Special Agent, Air Force Office of Special Investigations, engaged in UFO-related intelligence operations, reportedly appeared clandestinely on the 1988 Kodak-produced network television disinformation program "UFO Cover-Up Live"
- o FALCON; Sgt. Richard "Dick" Doty, USAF (Ret.); Special Agent, Air Force Office of Special Investigations; reported to have engaged in UFO disinformation projects, including reportedly hoaxing TV producer Linda Howe concerning availability of a tape showing a UFO landing at Holloman Air Force Base, N.M. and allegedly waging psychological warfare on Albuquerque defense electronic contractor Paul Bennewitz.

- o CHICKEN LITTLE: Dan Smith, civilian UFO research/volunteer liaison among sources within the Central Intelligence Agency, the Congressional Intelligence Committees and civilian UFO researchers. Smith continually exchanges information and networks with key UFO researchers, serves as their interlocutor and shares their findings and his own with his sources at the CIA and on Capitol Hill. Undoubtedly, other "assets" and low-profile intermediaries of the Aviary operate for the UFO-interest community as its ears and surrogate mouthpieces among the general public.

EDITORIAL NOTE

Perhaps it is as well to remind readers that the above article, like many others we publish, is presented for their personal evaluation without any guarantee of its veracity. If PEGASUS was obliged to print only items known to be absolutely and beyond question totally factual, it would be a much smaller and duller journal! We assume, as always, that our members are well enough informed on these matters to be capable of making their own intelligent judgements of material offered. It is characteristic of much material on the UFO theme that we find information and disinformation mingled: SIGAP members must decide for themselves which is which. - G.M.

AUSTRALIAN UFOs STRIKE AGAIN

According to the June 23, 1996 issue of the Melbourne Sunday Sun-Herald, a familiar squadron of UFOs--five bright orange spheres-- overflowed the Melbourne area that weekend. On Friday, June 21, residents of Chelsea and Frankston spotted the five UFOs flying swiftly over their towns. That same night, Ross Dowe of Australia's National UFO Hotline received 20 calls from people in Cranbourne, reporting a V-shaped formation of five orange lights passing over their neighborhood. The same five UFOs were also seen later that night in Carrum.

According to the Adelaide Sunday Mail of June 16, 1996, "unexplained colored lights" were seen in the skies over Ararat, Aberfoyle Park, Newcastle and Noarlunga. Some were stationary and others were seen moving at fantastic speeds. Adelaide ufologist Collin Norris said city residents had seen "a light flashing distinctly different colors." On May 24, 1996, Norris added, at about 10:40 p.m., "many people reported two lights in the north-eastern sky, soon joined by three others."

Other UFO sightings were reported along the shore in Stockport, Victoria Harbor, Port Noarlunga and on the Eyre Peninsula. The Mail also reported a "spectacular" sighting in Gladstone, Queensland on May 24. "A disc-shaped blue spinning object" hovered over several Gladstone homes. Its take-off vibrations had the houses shaking "as if in an earthquake." Gladstone police received several calls about a light "moving and changing colors in the sky."

Another UFO was reported the same night over the Royal Australian Air Force (RAAF) base at Amberley, north of Brisbane.

1996 CROP CIRCLES MOST COMPLEX EVER

The largest, most complex crop circle formation ever was discovered on the slope of Windmill Hill, facing the A4 motorway, in Wiltshire, England on July 29. The pattern is a three-armed spiral composed of three Julia Sets with 194 circles, measuring [in total] approximately 1,000 feet in diameter. It is a larger version of the previously discovered "Stonehenge Julia Set" which appeared on July 7. (A Julia Set is a computer-generated fractal, a highly complex mathematical equation relating to the science of Chaos Theory. The famous Mandelbrot Set fractal is composed of an infinite number of Julia Sets). The pattern displays stunningly perfect geometry, with standing centre tufts of crop in some circles, and complex, intricate woven "nests" in the centres of others. Still other circles have "fan" centres, with the crop splayed outward from the centre instead of being flattened in a spiral pattern. These features have also been seen in other formations this year.

The longest-ever crop formation appeared near Etchilhampton in Wiltshire on July 30. Stretching for about 8/10 of a mile (approximately 4,100 feet), it consists of a long central pathway with 14 large circles along it. The largest circle contains an odd triangular "symbol" similar to that in another formation near Roundway, Wiltshire found on July 21 and another large pattern near Chisledon, Wiltshire on August 2.

The British Ministry of Defense, Police, Stonehenge Security and scientists from around the world are continuing to investigate the remarkable "Stonehenge Julia Set", a huge 508-foot diameter spiral with 149 circles, which appeared in a field only a few hundred feet from the famous Stonehenge monument in the early evening of July 7. Witnesses at the site said that the formation was definitely not there at 5:30 that evening, but was there no later than 6:15 pm, meaning it was created in, at most, 45 minutes -- seemingly out of the question for hoaxers (it was also broad daylight). Reports indicate that no one, including Stonehenge Security, the farmer or motorists on the busy A303 motorway which passes the field, saw or heard anything or anyone in the field during that time.

The "DNA Helix" appeared on June 17 under similar circumstances, within a 30-minute time period. This formation, located at Alton Barnes, measured 648 feet long and consisted of 89 circles forming twin interwoven strands that strongly resembled a diagram of the DNA double helix. Over 80 formations of a wide variety have now appeared in Britain so far this year. On the morning of August 12, video footage was taken of several "luminosities" hovering over a large 390-foot formation which appeared on the night of August 11 near Oliver's Castle in Wiltshire. As a result of the incredible new formations this year, interest by the British media and public has again grown. Thousands of people have visited the "DNA Helix", "Stonehenge Julia Set" and "Triple Julia Set" formations, the most spectacular patterns that have ever appeared. Reports have been carried by various British newspapers, radio and television networks.

Meanwhile, in the United States, a 700-foot formation (the largest yet in the U.S.) appeared near Chehalis, Washington on July 17, close to where another pictogram was found in 1994. The pattern resembles "thought bubble" type formations in Britain. In the U.S., circle formations have also now been reported in California, Colorado, Iowa, Connecticut, Vermont, Maine, Ohio, Indiana and Nebraska this year.

A number of circles and pictograms have also been reported in Canada (three small 10-foot circles in grass near Langruth, Manitoba on July 17), Holland, Denmark, Austria, the Czech Republic and Germany. Lab testing in the U.S. and England on plants from many circle formations in both countries continues to show evidence of "microwave-type energy effects" on plant samples, which are not reproduceable by simple hoaxing. Copies of lab reports, additional articles and other information can be obtained from Paul Anderson, Director, Circles Phenomenon Research International/CPR-Canada, Tel/Fax: 604.731.8522, E-Mail: psa@daf.com

IMPLANTEE URGES CAUTION ON REMOVAL

Pat Parrinello underwent surgery to remove a possible "implant" from his hand on August 19, 1995. As this article goes to press, Parrinello is still waiting for final lab reports on the nature of the object. Meanwhile, having had a year to assess the results of the surgery from his own unique perspective, Parrinello now says it may not have been such a good idea. Here, he explains his current views. The questions were inserted after the fact by the editor to fit Parrinello's remarks, which were excerpted from various correspondence. PEGASUS thanks ISCNI*Flash and Pat Parrinello for permission to publish this story.]

Q: As interest in the possibility of "implant removal" has grown over the past year, a number of abductees and researchers have raised important questions concerning "ownership" of surgically removed objects.

What is your view on this issue? Do you retain "ownership" of the object taken from your hand?

Pat: My answer is simply to judge one's own motives. Mine are to find meaning or truth as to what is going on. So, naturally I conceded "ownership" to those whose interest matched my motives. I have been told that the reports on findings will be available in about a month. I am keen to know the metallurgical data as I feel that this will give me some clues as to why I was "selected" for an implant in the first place. Having it taken out was my choice. Further, having the thing tested was another choice that I could in no way have made without the generousities of those people involved. So, do I "own" the implant? NO! In my opinion it belongs to the whole of humanity if it turns out to have value in furthering our knowledge of what is going on.

Q: Are you saying that you are convinced that what was removed was indeed an "implant"?

Pat: I was convinced before anyone knew anything but me.

Q: You've had a year to assess the results of the surgery in terms of your own physical and psychological response. On that basis, what advice would you give to others who might wish to undergo such surgery?

Pat: For anyone considering having an "implant" removed, I offer this advice. First, let's assume it is a genuine alien implant. What the heck is it for? Why was it placed? Those questions plagued me and led me to make an offer to any researcher interested in it to take it and find out what it is. One did, Derrel Sims. It was through Dale Musser via Fidonet UFO that these communications took place a couple of years ago and ultimately led to that day in Los Angeles, August 19, 1995, when the implant was removed. It was then, on that day, that I found out something really strange. The watchers are watching the watcher watchers! In other words, the "aliens" are keenly aware that they have been "discovered" and have now taken a formidable interest in those who are aware of and watching them. They wanted those at the clinic to know it too. I will detail this at a later time. Back to the advice. Don't do it. At least think long and hard and define your motives for doing it. If you can justify your reasons for having an "alien" implant removed, then go ahead. But consider this. If it is indeed a "genuine article," you just may be in for a few surprises and changes in your personal makeup that you had not counted on. I lost my psychic intuition to a great degree. I notice that it is slowly returning but seems to work differently. Maybe that's good, I just don't know. Maybe "they" felt sorry for me and fixed it. I can tell you this, if you have any psychic abilities, you are going to feel naked in the world the day you lose them!

Q: Are you saying that you believe other people would be likely to experience similar negative side effects if they undergo this kind of surgery?

Pat: No. But consider this. If any such "implant" is in a nerve path, and that nerve path presents no known impulses - i.e. pain or [other sensations] - then I'd hold such a placement to be highly suspect as a possible "psychic link" and advise against removal based on my experience. That [object] was "linked in" to my autonomic nerve system and as such nothing untoward was felt by me, only its physical aspect [i.e. presence in his hand].

Q: In the absence of lab reports, how can you be sure that the object was connected to your nervous system?

Pat: Well, my experience is that it most definitely was. When [the surgeon] connected with the object, my body felt like the Christmas tree at the White House. Then it was gone. If your whole body were your elbow and someone hit your funny bone, you'd understand.

Q: According to some of the researchers associated with these surgeries, a large number of people are now requesting implant removal surgery. How do you feel about this?

Pat: I think it wise for me to admonish in the negative on implant removal. Let the "chips" fall where they may. I foresee implant removal relegated to the same class as cosmetic surgery in the near future if this "go for it" trend of removal continues... There are plenty of doctors around who will capitalize on the "implant removal trend," and that alone is enough for me to tell you to watch out!

THE PENTAGON'S NEW PRIORITIES

The Budget You Can't See

By Bill Sweetman

Late in May, on a bright afternoon in Dayton, Ohio, a group of engineers in their fifties and sixties posed happily for cameras in front of a strange blue airplane, with a bluff nose and tapering, flipper-like tail that had earned it the nickname Whale. It could have been the public debut of any new aircraft, with one exception: the plane had been completed 14 years earlier. The Whale, a prototype radar plane officially known only as Tacit Blue, had made its first flight in 1982 and its last flight in 1985 when somebody eliminated its mission. The Air Force won't tell you where it spent the next 11 years because the Whale is a creature of the military's "black world," in which tens of thousands of people work on projects in an environment of pervasive, rigorous secrecy.

The massive growth of a clandestine military was one of the most criticized features of the Reagan-Bush defense build-up. Over 12 years, hundreds of billions of dollars were spent in secret on airplanes and spacecraft, on test facilities and bases and on covert operations. With the end of the Cold War and a new administration, some people predicted that the Pentagon might cut back and bring these projects into the light.

They were wrong. Under the Clinton administration, clandestine projects are still expensive and still secret. That part of the black military budget that can be glimpsed stands at more than $14 billion - close to its 1980s peak. But this is mostly for research and development as well as some production. It does not include undiscoverable billions spent for operations, support and construction projects.

Pushing this trend is a Pentagon led by a substantial number of civilian and military officials with extensive black budget experience. Starting with Secretary of Defense William Perry, they believe that the clandestine development of costly, high-tech weapons is the best way to provide the United States with a battlefield advantage. Coming at a time when much other military spending is declining, the effect is a shift in Pentagon priorities that has not been debated.

For instance, under the Clinton administration's budget request for next year, the Air Force - which has historically handled the bulk of black programs --plans to spend two-thirds more on secret research and development than it did under the last budget that George Bush sent to Congress, a $2.1 billion increase. Clinton wants to spend another $5.9 billion of the Air Force budget on producing secret weapons, a small reduction from the last Bush budget, but more than offset by the surge in research.

In 1997, almost 40 cents of every dollar that the USAF will spend on equipment will be spent on secret projects. The secret Air Force spends 25 percent more on weapons development than the entire United States Army. The same trend is repeated, to a lesser degree, in the Navy. Despite generally lower budgets, the Navy still spends a relatively steady $1.6 billion a year on secret research projects.

You won't find these numbers in a public document, but it is possible to estimate the cost because some of the figures are only thinly concealed in the unclassified version of the Pentagon budget. Three methods are used:

In the research and development budget, the line items listed for "operational systems development" do not add up to the total for that section. The difference -- $4.8 billion in the Air Force budget -- is accounted for by classified programs.

Generic line items cover many programs. The best example is the "Selected Activities" line in the Air Force procurement budget: At $4.67 billion, it is the largest line item in the entire budget. It is much more than the Air Force will spend on buying airplanes.

Some programs are listed but carry code names. The Air Force uses a random Pentagonese name generator to produce "Advanced Program Evaluation" or "Special Evaluation System" while the Navy hits the garden-center catalog for "Link Laurel" and "Retract Maple."

Where all this money goes is a deepening mystery. In the 1980s and early 1990s, most secret spending went for two items: stealth aircraft and satellites developed by the National Reconnaissance Office (NRO). But the biggest stealth projects -- such as the B-2 and F-117 -- have been brought into the white world. At the same time, satellites last longer -- something which may explain the drop in secret production funds. It is hardly surprising that many people do not believe the CIA and the Air Force when they deny the existence of large programs like the rumored 4,000-mph Aurora spyplane.

The key number is the surge in research and development -- which often precedes much larger spending when it comes time to build the weapons. Every morning in Las Vegas, between 700 and 1,000 people board anonymous 737 jetliners and fly to Area 51, the Nevada flight-test base which has been the home of classified airplane projects since 1955. In 1992, McDonnell Douglas set up the Phantom Works to pursue classified research and development projects. Its success is one of the reasons why the company's Pentagon business has stayed high despite the winding down of orders for its fighters.

Lockheed Martin's renowned Skunk Works employs 4,000 people -- even though the only aircraft it is known to have built since 1990 are two small spy drones. The Air Force's research campus at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, in Dayton, is bustling. Construction continues on a new office complex -- a strange sight in the midst of a defense drawdown. And these are no ordinary offices: with nine-inch-thick internal doors, two basement levels with separate staircases, and high-security video-conference facilities.

There is no doubt that part of what the black budget is paying for is aircraft that are as yet undisclosed. Area 51 was significantly expanded just after the Whale -- its most recent known resident -- ended its flying career. Another enigma centers on the secure air base at Tonopah, Nev., where the F-117 Stealth fighter became operational in 1983. Just after the Gulf War, the Stealth fighters were evicted and moved to Holloman Air Force Base in New Mexico. Yet Tonopah is still active. Support for these ventures comes from the top. When Les Aspin, Clinton's first defense secretary, conducted a "bottom-up" spending review in September 1993, he left secret programs unscathed. When Aspin unexpectedly resigned after less than a year, Clinton turned to Aspin's deputy, William Perry, a defense entrepreneur. Sometimes called "the godfather of Stealth," Perry had been instrumental in the development of the first stealth airplanes -- as a key member of President Carter's Pentagon team in the late 1970s.

During Perry's tenure, the upper Pentagon ranks have filled with people who have similarly long backgrounds in classified programs. Paul Kaminski, the senior official in charge of Pentagon research, was Perry's special assistant on the stealth programs. Air Force Secretary Sheila Widnall is a former trustee of the Aerospace Corp. in Los Angeles, a low-profile non-profit company which manages many of the Air Force's classified space projects. The Air Force's senior official in charge of research and development, Arthur Money, came to the Pentagon after 23 years at ESL, the electronic surveillance equipment company that Perry had founded. The first operational stealth fighter unit, the 4450th Tactical Group, existed for only six years and was smaller than a normal Air Force wing -- yet seven of its former group and squadron commanders are now generals.

The White House has been cooperative with the Pentagon's requests in expanding its secret world. Take the case of Area 51, which the Air Force refuses to admit exists even though photographs of the base have appeared in dozens of magazines. When the Air Force decided to seize two tracts of public land that overlooked the base, the Department of the Interior was told to comply. When an attorney filed a lawsuit on behalf of some Area 51 workers who claimed to have been injured by toxic materials, President Clinton signed an "exemption," telling a United States district court judge that the Air Force need not disclose any documents relating to the base.

The direct cost of this secrecy is substantial. Between 10 and 15 percent of the cost of a black program is absorbed by security measures: from the establishment of separate financial and administrative systems for every project to the cost of flying people to work every morning. When Tacit Blue was unveiled, one of the program managers told me that Pentagon undercover agents were assigned to contact the spouses of people on the program, attempting to find out if anyone had violated the law by answering the question "How was your day at work, dear?"

Accountability is the real issue. Congressional national security and intelligence committees, in theory, oversee black programs. Judging by the fact that the NRO has confessed to losing track of $4 billion in surplus funds, this oversight seems less than effective. It does not cover the blackest of all black projects -- the "waived" programs, which are secret even from the committees.

The black world prospers and becomes ever more established while a compliant administration overrides the judiciary at its request. The Pentagon's leaders are immersed in its culture. It briefs a few members of Congress who are cleared into some -- but not all of its programs, and who lack the data and the time needed to map the secret labyrinth. Most citizens accept the need for secrecy in times of crisis. And most would accept the need for the country to pursue technical breakthroughs sheltered from prying eyes. But the question is whether a secret military should be such a thriving, unaccountable institution when the security of the nation is less threatened than it has been for decades.

UFO INFO - WHO HOLDS THE KEY?

BY QUAESTOR

During the last decade, rumours of an imminent announcement have circulated throughout the ufological community. This "Announcement" concerns official government confirmation of what many of us have always suspected; that UFOs are structured, technological craft designed, built, and operated by non-human intelligence.

Non-human intelligence is the generic term for the UFO occupants, while the term "aliens" usually presupposes an extraterrestrial origin, and tends to ignore the equally viable theories that the Visitors may be time-travellers from our own distant future, currently unknown life forms, or even metaphysical/spiritual entities.

While each of these theories has some credibility, none can explain all the observed data regarding UFOs. In fact, the phenomenon may be a synthesis of two or more of these theories, or equally likely, none of the above. Those on the "outside" just don't have enough data to reach any firm conclusions.

The "insiders," however, undoubtedly have access to much more data in the form of gun-camera films, radar logs, satellite data, signal intelligence, purported necropsy reports, and other technical data derived from over 40 years of tracking the UFO phenomenon. Naturally, any findings by the "outsiders" in the ufological community will ultimately make its way into the "insiders'" UFO database.

"Insiders" are sometimes known as The Controllers, guardians of the UFO secret and managers of classified UFO information. Presumably, this group constitutes a tight-lipped assortment of intelligence operatives and analysts, military personnel, scientists, and a select group of hi-tech industrialists.

Perhaps the most relevant question is whether these Controllers are under the command and control of the executive branch of government. Could UFO secrecy be maintained if all incoming presidents and prime ministers were briefed on the phenomenon? There have been nine U.S. presidential administrations since the purported Roswell crash, but not a word of UFO revelations from any of them. In U.K. the attitude is best summarised by Nick Pope - "Open Skies - Closed Minds".

This could indicate that:

- a) Governments, despite the technical means at their disposal worldwide, have not been able to learn anything at all about the UFO phenomenon.
- b) The reasons for the containment of UFO information were so compelling that everybody officially briefed on the UFO situation unanimously supported the secrecy policy, resulting in no unauthorized leaks during nine successive U.S. administrations.
- c) UFO policy has been managed covertly by the Controllers, free from executive branch supervision.

Assuming that each successive administration was briefed, how and why could the UFO cover-up be successfully maintained so long? The most likely reason would be political. If a UFO did crash near Roswell in 1947, and artifacts were recovered, would the U.S. have wanted to alert the Soviet intelligence apparatus to this technological windfall? Considering the potential strategic advantages that could be gleaned from a sample of advanced technology (metallurgy, electronics, propulsion, etc.) it would be only logical to retract the "crashed UFO" story and begin the now-familiar program of denial and ridicule.

Another political factor could conceivably be how the concept of nationalism would fare in light of revelations concerning the presence of non-human Visitors possessing technological prowess far ahead of our own. The Capitalist/Communist competition has been reduced to insignificance - much to the horror of the military/industrial complex (on both sides of the Atlantic) which owes much to the fears generated by the East-West rivalry.

Other factors could have influenced the decision to institute and maintain a UFO cover-up. It should be remembered that Orson Welles' Halloween broadcast of "War of the Worlds" occurred only nine years before the alleged Roswell incident. Memories of the panic that ensued would still be fresh in the minds of policy makers. The notion of Visitors From Space was only seriously considered after the wave of "flying saucer" sightings that began in 1947. It could have been reasonably argued then that a period of psychological preparation was required to acclimatise the populace to this possibility.

These are examples of what could be considered a "benign" cover-up - official U.S. policy based on legitimate national security concerns and executed through the constitutional chain-of-command on orders from the president. But, in the light of recent world political changes and all the years of pop-culture conditioning regarding the possibility of non-human Visitors, the reasons for maintaining the UFO cover-up would seem less and less compelling.

It has been argued that the UFO cover-up is maintained due to policy momentum, that to reveal the cover-up after 40 years of denial and ridicule would have unacceptable political fallout. One would think the avoidance of public disclosure based on "political embarrassment" for participation in the cover-up would not be a valid concern for a newly elected president, especially if he was of a political party different from his predecessors.

One scenario that might explain the maintenance of UFO secrecy concerns the widespread construction of underground installations, flight tests of non-conventional aircraft at Area 51, and continued funding of SDI ballistic missile defense and beam-weapons research. Is the U.S. defence establishment attempting to bridge a technology gap between us and our Visitors? This would imply that the Controllers have discovered that the Visitors' agenda may not be benevolent. However, if the Visitors do have hostile intent, why would they allow us the opportunity to develop defences presumably based in-part (if reports about Roswell are correct) on technology derived from their own downed craft?

Or perhaps the UFO cover-up is based on sinister human motives. If all incoming presidents were not briefed and the UFO project remained hidden from executive branch review, the Controllers would be engaged in a "rogue" operation with drastic constitutional ramifications. If this is the case, the motivation of the Controllers would be suspect. If not part of the constitutional chain-of-command, the Controllers would have to resort to budgetary skimming, off-budget manoeuvres and other criminal activity to fund any long-term UFO project. During the Iran-Contra hearings, we discovered how covert U.S. operations were funded through illegal arms sales. There is evidence that these covert operations may have even imported illegal drugs to fund their operations. It is possible that the Controllers engage in illegal activities to fund a secret, "unofficial" UFO project that does not have access to legitimate funding through legal constitutional channels.

Another possible source of funding could come from defence contractors who hope to reap enormous profits by leap-frogging "linear" R&D through access to UFO technology. Corporate participants in such a scheme could even be ignorant of the fact that the UFO project they subsidize might be an illegal "rogue" operation. Whether funded by criminal activities or through naive corporate sponsorship, a hypothetical UFO operation could not function without the coordination and control of active-duty military and intelligence personnel in violation of their oaths of loyalty.

If the Controllers are a rogue operation, one has to wonder what could be their motivation. Since power and wealth would presumably already be within their grasp, could the motivation be something more sinister? Could the Controllers be a cabal engaged in achieving global domination? It is conceivable that a relatively small force armed with super-technology derived from crashed UFOs could neutralize conventional and nuclear forces worldwide to accomplish this. Another possibility is that the Visitors themselves control the Controllers. Could the Visitors have dictated that secrecy be maintained, or could the Controllers actually be "cosmic Quislings" conspiring with alien invaders against the best interests of humanity?

If the Controllers are such an operation, no announcement concerning the UFO phenomenon should be expected soon, but if they are functioning legally within constitutional frameworks, such an announcement could be forthcoming -- mainly because a policy that was deemed necessary in 1947 may not be necessary today. At this stage in world affairs, maintenance of UFO secrecy in the interests of national security would no longer seem to be justifiable. A newly installed administration would have no political liability in the cover-up, and thus would not suffer politically from any announcement. In fact, the government would probably gain political points for initiating UFO glasnost.

Fear of widespread panic would also be questionable, considering that almost every citizen is sure to have at least contemplated the possibility of "aliens landing on the White House lawn." After all, one would think there is much more danger associated with terrestrial developments like nuclear weapons in the hands of human monsters like Saddam Hussein than the scenario of overt alien contact.

The announcement could be made through informal release of information to ufologists, which would obtain publicity in the ufological press. Names of major officials in the UFO programme would be included in these releases. Mainstream journalists could check some of the statements attributed to them and surprisingly receive confirmation from these selected public officials. The public perception would begin to be more accepting as headlines announce that government officials are going "on the record" concerning the reality of the UFO situation.

The information would be presented as comforting, reassuring, and of no cause for alarm. Probably there have been contingency plans in place for such a development for decades. Picture Walter Cronkite, Carl Sagan, or Patrick Moore calmly interviewing experts, political leaders and theologians, interspersed between video clips of UFOs and the Visitors themselves. It would be a mind-boggling, paradigm-shifting event to be sure, but not something that would shatter a collective national psyche. After a year or so, the sensation would die down and the story would inevitably fade from the front pages, to be replaced by the usual shootings and scandals.

There are four important reasons why, if there is a UFO cover-up, governments should come clean:

1) A democratic government hinges on the presumption of an informed electorate. Maintaining secrecy on an issue of such potential importance betrays the cornerstone of our democratic principles.

2) Many people claim to have had contact with our purported Visitors; if the government were to release its UFO data it could confirm whether or not these purported experiences were the result of actual contact with non-human intelligence or some neurological/psychological disorder. These people deserve no less.

3) Due to the long-standing and pervasive secrecy surrounding UFO projects, many technological and scientific discoveries based on UFO technology may not have been fully exploited.

4) The historic nature of contact with non-human intelligence is too important to be suppressed. The announcement would make for a much more interesting and marvellous reality than we currently know. How would we judge the Spanish if the news of Columbus' discovery of the New World had been suppressed?

I can only hope the Controllers are benevolent. If they are, they should be aware of the paranoia their cover-up engenders - which is still another reason for lifting the veil of secrecy. It should be noted that ufologists who "know too much" don't just mysteriously disappear, but instead seem to be co-opted by the Controllers. (Not always! - Ed.) Since there have been no (known) constitutional crises sparked by renegade recruits or defectors from the putative Grand UFO Conspiracy "blowing the whistle", and since the UFO cover-up has apparently been successfully maintained through nine U.S. administrations, I would like to assume that the Controllers are "good guys" operating under the command of successive administrations. But if they are "bad guys," a rogue operation operating outside the law for whatever purpose, I'm afraid our main priority should be stockpiling food and ammunition.

CUBA DECLASSIFIES REPORTS ON 1995 UFO FLAP

Spanish-language listeners were shocked Thursday, July 4, 1996, when a Cuban radio station began broadcasting newly-released information about a UFO landing on the island last October. According to Dr. Virgilio Sanchez Ocejo at the Miami UFO Center, Radio Rebelde in Havana ran a special program in Spanish on the UFO sightings.

On October 15, 1995, at 9:30 a.m., a UFO landed in the town of Torriente, in Matanzas province, not far from Playa Giron (Bay of Pigs). An eyewitness, Adolfo Zerate, 74, a farmer from Torriente, told the Direccion General de Inteligencia (DGI) that he was working in the fields when "an apparatus like a tortoise shell" (a bell-shaped object) came down from the clouds and landed in the vegetable field. Concealing himself behind some tropical shrubbery, Zerate saw "dos hombrecitos" (two little men), one behind a window aboard the UFO and the other walking around outside the object. Zerate said both of the occupants "seemed to be wearing diving suits."

The occupant outside the UFO spent several minutes collecting "malanga," a kind of potato, from the field. Then, with his small arms full of uprooted plants, he reboarded the UFO. The "apparatus" began to give off "blue fire and white smoke" and then it "disappeared among the clouds at high speed." After Zerate called the police, the DGI arrived and collected physical evidence of the UFO's presence, including impressions of the occupant's footprints and leaves scorched black by the UFO's electrical field effects. The material was reportedly turned over to the Cuban Academy of Sciences, which is still investigating the case.

Three days later, on October 18, at 10 p.m., an unnamed woman told the DGI that she had seen a UFO in Puerto Padre, a small town in Las Lunas province. She described her UFO as an intensely "bright light" and claimed to have seen it "several days earlier."

"At the beginning, we thought it was an airplane," she said, "But it didn't make any noise. It went up and down and sideways. Then it made a low pass over the town and dropped toward the city of Hoguin." The same night, October 18, another UFO was reported in Santi Spiritu at 10 p.m. Also, at Majibacoa and at Calixto Garcia in Hoguin province, Cuban army officers and troops "saw an intense light in the sky for several minutes." At first they thought it was a helicopter, but then "the light flew away at a very great speed."

The Radio Rebelde broadcast was unprecedented. This is the first time in 36 years that Fidel Castro's government has admitted to the presence of UFOs in Cuba.

MARTIAN LIFE INGREDIENTS KNOWN FOR DECADES

[This text was written by Vincent DiPietro, one of the original discoverers of the "Face on Mars" and a serious scientist who has argued for nearly two decades that the Cydonia landforms may be evidence of advanced intelligence beyond Earth. Here, DiPietro describes work done by himself and several other reputable scientists which showed as early as 1975 that Mars rocks contain signs of life, and that some regions of Mars may still be able to support life.]

There is nothing new about the carbonaceous meteorites disclosed recently by NASA. It is time that credit due to Dr. Bartholomew Nagy is properly given. Dr. Nagy (pronounced NAAAG) of the University of Arizona announced his discoveries in 1975 from a culmination of work as far back as 1966 (30 years ago). He published a book, "Carbonaceous Meteorites," (ISBN 0-444-41189-5) in 1975 (prior to the Viking spacecraft's encounter with Mars) which describes his findings of the meteorites from Orgueil, Ivuna, Revelstoke and other areas on Earth. What appear to be fossil remains of creatures including cellular structure have been found and pictured in the book. Dr. Nagy believes that the meteorites have their origin from extraterrestrial sources.

Dr. Nagy did very good work, but it was not considered "good Science" because the meteorite from France -- Orgueil -- was contaminated with Earth biological entities. Therefore, the entire work was cast aside, and has remained this way for 30 years. Dr. Nagy passed away this year, and is not able to defend his pioneering effort, but Dr. John Brandenburg managed to converse with Dr. Nagy several times. Dr. Nagy insisted up until his death that he did indeed show that the fossils that he found were from other than this Earth. To quote Dr. Nagy: "Perhaps it is well not to draw conclusions, but it appears most likely that the carbonaceous compounds and small carbonaceous objects found in these meteorites would be confidently assumed to be of biological origin if found on earth."

There have been several significant discoveries which point to the possibility that intelligent ancient life may have existed on Mars about 1.5 billion years ago. There are several research papers and discoveries to back up this claim.

Dr. Ian Wright has analyzed SNC meteorites taken from the Antarctic region of the Earth. The general opinion of many scientists around the world is that these meteorites are now believed to have come from Mars. Within the meteorites, Dr. Wright also found traces of ORGANIC CARBON. The organic carbon has been dated at 1.5 billion years old. Dr. Wright has published his findings in "NATURE," volume 340, dated July 20, 1989, pages 220-222. Dr. Leonard Martin of the Lowell Observatory in Flagstaff, Arizona discovered a large water spout erupting in two images in 1980, and was published in the NASA Activities, Dec. 1980, vol. 11, no. 12. The images -- 775A10 and 775A11 -- are included in the referenced book, "Unusual Mars Surface Features." If NASA is serious about retrieving "possible LIVE" specimens from Mars, this is the place to go. Peroxides cannot exist in this warm wet environment, but mold, bacteria and other "buggies" can and probably do. There were two overlapping photos taken 4-1/2 seconds apart which clearly show this geyser eruption of water. This area is significant in establishing that water still exists on Mars.

Like all of the work that we have done on the Cydonia region, Dr. Martin's work also has never been seen or heard from again since 1980. When I went to Flagstaff, to the Lowell Observatory a few years ago, the attendants at the visitor's center informed me that Dr. Martin was still there, but none of them had ever heard of the water spout, and of course, the pictures were NOT on display. It seems like almost a conspiracy to cover up any evidence that Mars could have or still contains the prime ingredients for life. You may also wish to refer to our book, "Unusual Mars Surface Features" (pps. 60-66) which give the details and frame numbers of this discovery by Dr. Martin. The images in the Cydonia region reveal what appears to be a human face complete with mouth, teeth, eye sockets, eyeball and pupil, and hairline or headress, and the FACE appears to be bi-symmetrical.

Dr. Stan McDaniel published the McDaniel Report which emphasizes the work of DiPietro and the image processing techniques. Excerpts of the work can be seen at the following web pages:

http://ourworld.compuserve.com:80/homepages/mcdrpt/Hartman's Model in the Journal of Geophysical Research, volume 78, no. 20, dated July 10, 1973, pages 4096-4116 suggest an age of the Cydonia site at 0.6 billion years ago, not a half million as proposed by some writers. Brandenburg and DiPietro have published "The Cydonia Hypothesis" in the Journal of Scientific Exploration, volume 5, no. 1, pages 1-25. Brandenburg published "Mars as the Parent Body of the CI Carbonaceous Chondrites" in Geophysical Research Letters, vol. 23, no. 9, pages 961-964, May 1, 1996.

DiPietro published "Did the Lyot Impact end the Liquid Water Era on Mars?": Mars Eos at the American Geophysical Union in Baltimore, June 2, 1995 76,17, p.197. The papers suggest that the meteorites examined by Dr. Nagy with the fossils have come from Mars. The meteorites exhibit water spots and mineral layers which suggest that their origin is from a place with gravity such as a planet. The most likely planet with water and gravity is Mars. The crater Lyott (pronounced LEO) may have been responsible for the damage to the planet, and the extinction of life there. Crater Lyott dates at 300 million to 900 million years ago.

There have been numerous newspaper, magazine, television, and radio coverage of articles on the Mars findings since 1979. Unfortunately, there have been other writers who have used the research data which DiPietro, Molenaar, and Brandenburg have worked with. These other writers have invented speculative ideas about the findings without supporting evidence or accepted refereed papers in any journal. The researchers DiPietro, Molenaar, and Brandenburg do not support the claims of those who have distorted the data as it was originally presented.

We urge all those who are interested in our work on Mars to contact his or her Congressional Representative and Senator to promote further studies of the planet Mars. We endorse the Manned Mission to Mars by the United States government, however unlikely it appears to be in today's political arena. We welcome scientific study of our work, and await new data from new spacecraft.

IMPLANT REMOVAL: STRANGER THAN YOU THINK

by Debra L. Lindemann, C.Ht.

Pat Parrinello remembers well the evening he awoke feeling paralyzed. Although he was only six years old at the time, this is the type of experience one never forgets. When Pat had an "implant" surgically removed last August 19, 1995 by Dr. Roger Leir, it represented a culmination of unusual sightings and paranormal events that began at the age of six. All of Pat's memories are consciously recalled, and he has never undergone any regressive hypnosis. Long before anyone knew much about Pat and his experiences, and before he had decided to have his implant removed, he was convinced that he indeed had an implant. He didn't need anyone to validate it for him. There were too many unusual incidents in his life, too many sightings. Somehow he knew it all related to the strange object in his left hand.

By the time Pat had decided to have his implant removed, he had come to the conclusion that the aliens were keenly aware that they had been discovered. He noticed that about the time he definitely made the decision to have the surgery, he began having massive headaches in the frontal area of his head, much like migraines. This was approximately one and a half months prior to surgery. He had never been plagued by such painful headaches before. Still stranger was the fact that the headaches completely stopped after removal of his implant. He believes that perhaps he was being warned by the beings not to have his implant removed. Perhaps they were indeed watching his interest and awareness of them.

This suspicion was amplified even further one night about two weeks before his scheduled surgery. He and his dog went as usual to the store next to his home. The store was full of people, so he and the dog walked around the store building and to the back of his apartment complex. As Pat was sitting there, he looked to the east and noticed a large orange full moon rising. After about ten minutes, he returned to the store. He didn't think much of it at the time.

Pat was only in the store for about five minutes. When he came back out of the grocery he noticed that the moon had risen about 45 to 50 degrees in the sky. At the time, he thought, "Damn, the moon has risen in a big hurry!" As he was witnessing this huge moon, he noticed a sort of pulsing in his left earlobe. As he reached up to feel his earlobe, he felt something rather peculiar, like a small knot. His wife also felt the strange object in his ear. Over the next few weeks, this object seemed to slowly travel upward in his ear from the lobe. By the day of the implant surgery for his hand, the knot in his ear completely dissolved or disappeared.

About a week before his implant surgery, a friend called to let Pat know about an upcoming television program on implants that Pat might be interested in watching. Pat and his wife watched and videotaped the program. Then the day before Pat was scheduled to fly to California for his surgery, he decided to re-watch his video of the program. As Pat watched the video, he was amazed to find that an entire segment on ear implants had been removed from the video, as though it were never recorded in the first place. He knew for a fact that this particular segment was part of the program. Both he and his wife saw the original program, and all of it was recorded. He reviewed the video over and over again, thinking that perhaps he was going nuts. There was no space or glitch in the video. If both he and his wife hadn't seen the program together, he might have begun to doubt his own sanity. To this day, Pat cannot make sense of this experience. He has decided to put it in the category of "high strangeness."

Pat Parrinello feels strongly about examining the motivations behind implant removal. He feels this is an important decision that shouldn't be made hastily or without thought. He feels that fear is not the right reason for implant removal. Regarding his relationship with whatever beings are behind this phenomenon, Pat says that if the opportunity presented itself to walk right into a craft and meet them, he'd be there. Fear was never a part of his reasoning for removal of the implant. He understands how others may have fear concerning the presence of such a device, particularly if they felt that they were being controlled through it. But he strongly emphasizes that we need to find out the real purpose of these devices and why they're being placed into people. This is the reason he decided to have his implant removed. Once we know the real purpose or function, then individuals can make more intelligent choices on whether to remove them or not.

Pat is convinced that at least one of the purposes of his implant was some type of communications or psychic function. Pat only realized after his implant was removed that something he had taken for granted all of his life as normal, wasn't. That was his psychic or intuitive ability. Pat relied on his intuitive sense as something that was always there for him. Though it landed him in many childhood fights and he often felt ostracized by other kids, it always came in handy during his adult years. He learned to depend on those insights. Suddenly, after implant removal, he felt naked. It was as though someone took him "off line." He does believe, however, that either a certain percentage of his psychic ability remains, or that some of it is beginning to come back. But the frequency is unclear and his intuitive glimpses seem somewhat muddled.

Removal of Pat's implant has not stopped the unusual sightings that are a trademark of his life, however. Though Pat had his implant removed in August of 1995, on November 14, 15 and 16, 1995 he videotaped a remarkable series of daylight sightings in West Columbia, Texas. Sightings in themselves don't necessarily equate with contact; however, most of us have never experienced even one sighting. Did Pat just coincidentally happen to be at the right place at the right time; or is there still some type of continuing relationship that even he is unaware of? Perhaps removal of his implant hasn't completely severed the visitor umbilical cord.

Like all of us, Pat remains anxious for the final laboratory results of the implant analysis. He doesn't know any more about its properties than anyone else outside the testing loop. He has been told that hopefully within one more month, the results should be in. All he could say now, based on the limited information given to him, is that it's "God-awful different from anything that is terrestrial."

Despite the loss of much of his psychic ability and other changes in his life, is Pat glad he made the decision to have the implant removed? His answer was a resounding "yes." He's committed to understanding this mystery further.

REPORT CLAIMS IBM TESTED BRAIN IMPLANTS

Alleged Tests Show Implant Can Control Criminals

["Implant" is a concept around which many shades of weirdness and horror seem to converge. Many "abductees" believe they carry implants in their bodies, placed there by alien beings for reasons unknown. Several recent surgical procedures reported previously have purportedly removed such "alien implants." But some researchers believe that many, if not most, of these implants are not alien at all, but instead the products of human manufacture, placed in human recipients for reasons ranging from identification to tracking to behavior control or worse. Allegations of such human-built implants shade over into dark scenarios of an evil New World Order, to which may be added the supposition that "alien encounters" in general are fabrications of this same evil Order, a kind of convoluted camouflage behind which the human architects of world domination carry forward their schemes.

The following text is one of the few ever received by ISCNI that strikes us as possibly credible documentation of human-built implants designed for behavior control. ISCNI*Flash has not substantiated the claims in this text and cautions our readers that this text may be inaccurate or fraudulent. We will endeavor to learn more, and we invite any reader with additional information to forward it to us.

This text was printed in "Conspiracy Nation," Vol.8, No.97, edited by John DiNardo, and is a transcript of a radio broadcast on shortwave station WWCR, 5.065 megahertz (5065 kilohertz) from Nashville, Tennessee. The program, titled INTELLIGENCE REPORT, was heard on August 7, 1996, hosted by John Stadtmiller. The following is a verbatim reading of a confidential document alleged to have been circulated inside the IBM Corporation in October 1995. This text has been somewhat edited for length.]

[John Stadtmiller speaking]: This was a confidential report that was put through the "Intelli-Connection," Security Division of IBM Corporation. It was "CONFIDENTIAL," "LIMITED DISTRIBUTION ONLY," "LEVEL-9 COMMUNICATION." It is on the "20/20 Neutral Chip Implant."

[NOTE: It is possible that the word "Neutral" here and elsewhere in this text is a misprint which should read "Neural." We have left it as it was in the text. - Ed.]

"The control of crime will be of paramount concern in the 21st Century. We must be ready with our security products when the demand for them becomes popular. Our Research and Development Division has been in contact with the Federal Bureau of Prisons, the California Department of Corrections, the Texas Department of Public Safety, and the Massachusetts Department of Corrections to run limited trials of the 20/20 Neutral Chip Implant. "We have established representatives of our interests in both management and institutional-level positions with these departments.

"Federal regulations do not permit testing of implants on prisoners, but we have entered into contractual agreements with privatized health care professionals and specified correctional personnel to do limited testing of our products. We also have had major successes, in privately-owned sanitariums, with implant technology."

"We need, however, to expand our testing to research how effective the 20/20 Neutral Chip Implant performs in those people identified as most aggressive in our society.

"Limited testing has produced a number of results.

"In California, several prisoners were identified as members of the 'security threat group,' E.M.E., or Mexican Mafia. They were brought to the Health Services Unit at Pelican Bay and tranquilized with advanced sedatives developed by our Cambridge, Massachusetts laboratory.

"The implant procedure takes 60 to 90 minutes, depending upon the experience of the technician. We are working on a device which will reduce that time by as much as sixty percent.

"The results of implants on eight prisoners yielded the following results: Implants served as surveillance monitoring devices for 'threat group' activity. Implants disabled two subjects during an assault on correctional staff members.

"Universal side effects in all eight test subjects revealed that when the implant was set to [a frequency of] 116 megahertz, all subjects became lethargic and slept on an average of 18 to 22 hours per day. All subjects refused recreation periods for fourteen days during the 116 megahertz test evaluation. Seven out of the eight subjects did not exercise inside the cell or outside of the cell, and five of the eight subjects refused showers for up to three days at a time.

"Each subject was monitored for aggressive activity during the test period, and findings are conclusive that seven out of eight test subjects exhibited no aggression, even when provoked.

"Each subject experienced only minor bleeding from the nose and ears 48 hours after the initial chip implant adjustment.

"Each subject had no knowledge of his implant for the test period, and each implant was retrieved under the guise of 'medical treatment.' "Essentially, these implants make the unsuspecting prisoner a walking, talking recording of every event that he comes into contact with. "In Massachusetts, the Department of Corrections has already entered into high-level discussions about releasing certain offenders, with the 20/20 Neutral Chip Implant, into the community.

"Our people are not altogether against the idea. However, attorneys at the Intelli-Connection have advised against implant technology outside of strict control settings. Under the present governmental structure, our liability would be enormous.

"We have a strong lobby in the Congress and in various state legislatures favoring our product.

"We will continue to explore community uses of the 20/20 Neutral Chip Implant, and our company representatives would be attached to all law enforcement operations, with an 'extraction crew' that could be on-site in two hours, from anywhere, at any time."

(PEGASUS thanks ISCNI for the last 3 items.)

ABDUCTIONS

by DANIEL K.DRISKELL (kent6@juno.com)

Well, out of the closet I come after 47 years of hiding from the world. To begin with ,I was first abducted when I was 3 years old by the alien greys in Arkansas, up in the hills. My family was on a family reunion, and we had a large picnic at a park in the hills, and I was playing with some other kids when I saw a funny little guy in the distance. So I went to him, and lo and behold the funny guy and two other ones took me on board their ship.

At that age you think it is all fun and games, but it wasn't. They did some horrible things to me, scared me and implanted a thing in my neck; marked me, stuck a probe in my penis, and did a few other things. Then they let me go, but not in the same place I was at to start with, but in WEST VA., in a tobacco field. I had no clothes on and wandered out to a main highway. A car came by and stopped and asked me what I was doing out here and I told them I was dropped off by some grey people.

The people took me to the police station in town, and asked me where I was from. I said "Harrison, Arkansas" and they said "Are you visiting here with your parents?" and I said "No, they're in Harrison". I found out later that 4 hours had gone by from the time I left point A to the time I got to point B. In the mean time my parents thought I had been kidnapped and had called the police. One day later the police in West Va. put out a message that a 3 year old boy was found here. The F.B.I. said it could not be me because the trip from point A to point B, no one could get there from here that fast, but I did.

That's when it all started. My abductions have been about every 3 months since then. I am now 50 years old, and very lonely due to I can't keep a lady close to me when they find out about them. They, the ladies go nuts, or think I am. My point is that, does any one else have this problem with other people? And after all the years, and so much info I have gotten from them, does anyone find that they just can't get it right yet? I mean the tests. Oh, and I am somewhat very scared to say this, was anyone else that you know of forced to have sex with the other women that are abducted on to their ship? They make me do that all the time and I don't like this. They say it is for the good of their people, for us to make babies for them, but if you've been there you see the walls covered with bottles of tiny babies being fed through tubes and them in a fluid of some kind and they don't move at all.

I have many others things to tell about them but later. Thanks for reading this and please give me feedback on this if you can. - Dan
