UFO Dreams

Inventor Recounts Otherworldly Journeys

By Sherie Stark

First: there is the garden variety UFO dream. The kind sociologists and psychologists are interested in, the kind Carl Jung wrote about. This category of dream defines the UFO as an archetype from the collective unconscious, a symbol of wholeness, of our future, of ourselves. This level of dream is significant and interesting enough to take seriously in its own right, as a mirror of humanity, as well as foreshadowing how we as a culture will relate to extraterrestrial visitation if and when it becomes a more common, collective reality.

Then there's the UFO dream that purports to not be a dream at all, but an actual UFO experience that the person only remembers as a dream, because it is so unlike normal waking reality.

Most of the people who feel they've been abducted by extraterrestrials first remember their experiences as dreams. Through hypnotic regression, they come to remember more details of the experience, which include trance-like, involuntary obedience to the abducting entities and having their bodies "floated" onto the spacecraft via beams of light.

UFO researchers, who for years have discounted psychic or dream-like encounters with extraterrestrials as so much fanciful thinking, are suddenly taking these dreams seriously, because of two key distinctions: physical scars corroborating the abductees' stories, and the overwhelming correlation of the details of their stories, down to specific written symbols, medical instruments, etc.

This growing interest on the part of ufologists in people claiming extraterrestrial contact is revolutionary within the field, as previously it was predominantly UFO sightings, photos, landing traces, etc. that were considered worthwhile evidence.

It is also revolutionary because it pushes the bounds of subjective reality within the field, begging the question: what is a "real" UFO experience?

(Indeed, one abductee I interviewed recently expressed confusion about a recent dream he had. "Was it just a dream, or was it another contact?" he asked himself, not having been visited by what he identified as extraterrestrials for a few years. "It felt like a normal dream on one hand, and yet when they touched my legs, it felt too real to be a dream.")

In spite of inherent vagaries, the researchers in this field are convinced that the volume and corroboration of the evidence indicates "something real going on." (See Michael Grosso's Forum piece, this issue, for another theory about what that something may be.)

But many UFO researchers are assuming, prematurely, I think, that the reports they have compiled on abductions are the first and last word on possible extraterrestrial contact.

On a purely theoretical level, it would make sense that if one species of extraterrestrial is visiting us, more than one may be, and if that one species is approaching us in dream-like encounters, perhaps others would use that means as well. (Certainly, it would seem to make more sense for extraterrestrials to approach us in our dream states first, to avoid as much of our shock or disbelief reactions as possible.)

If the dream-like encounters associated with abduction cases are to be taken seriously, perhaps other dream-like encounters should be at least considered, rather than brushed off as being wishful thinking. If not physical scars, perhaps other types of validating factors can be found to separate the garden variety UFO dream from possible extraterrestrial contacts. . .

For this first part of our dream series, UFO interviewed a man who had a series of what he feels were physical UFO encounters during five years of his childhood. The encounters stopped, but he began having vividly realistic UFO dreams, which continue to this day.

What makes his story particularly interesting is that it appears his dreams may have some of those "validating factors—" not scars from medical examinations, but compelling nonetheless.

Jerry Willis dreams he is taken by a tall extraterrestrial named "M" to an otherworldly library, where he looks up technological information. In his waking life, he then creates the technology, stumbling upon inventions he has neither the educational background nor the financial support to logically be able to create, often months before NASA or some other institution patents similar prototypes.

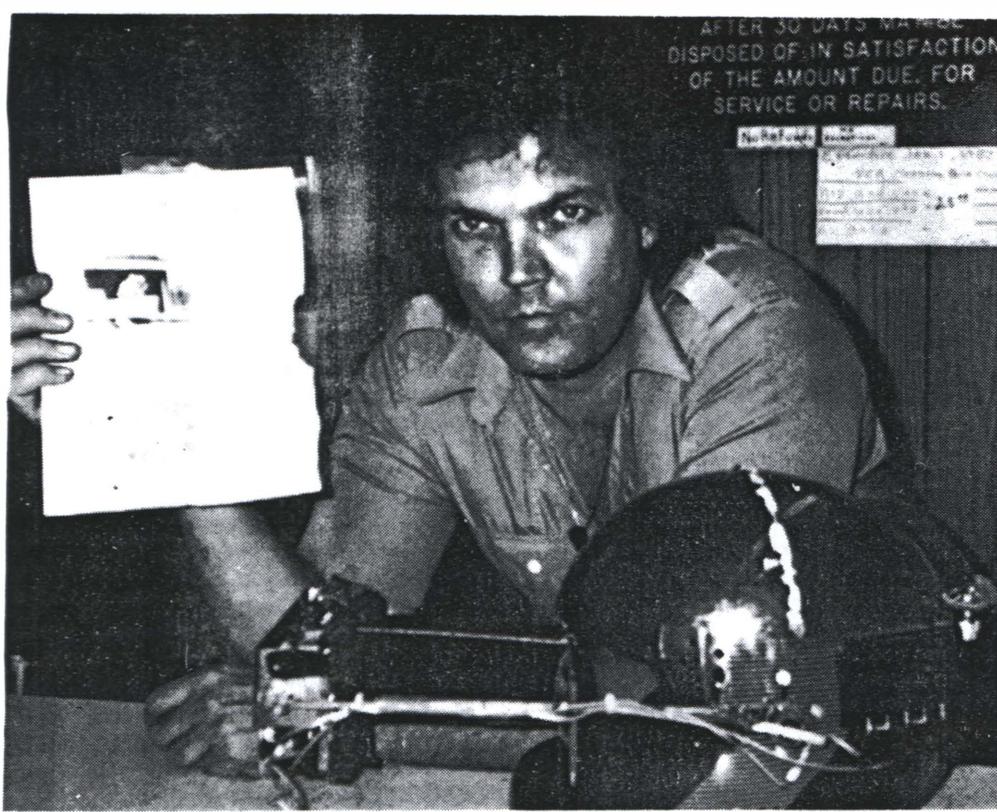

One of his inventions is a 3-D viewer using liquid crystal plastic glasses. His newest is a crystal device, amplified with a piece of phosphor, that emits light and is said to enable people to see their "auras."

Inventions throughout history have often occurred simultaneously in various locations around the world. This can be explained as coincidence, the product of minds with similar potential and similar resources happening upon the discovery at the same time.

But Jerry Willis makes his living repairing television sets and radios. His inventions are not based on years of scholarly trial and error—he says he builds them correctly, the first time, based on visual images he sees in his dreams. Is he tapping into a body of knowledge outside the confines of his own mind when he sleeps, an extraterrestrial or extradimensional library of information separate from his own subconscious?

We'll start his story at the beginning, with his first UFO encounters in rural Kentucky...

"One day when I was about 12 years old I was sitting in the woods, leaning against a tree, when this man walked up, dressed in a one-piece jumpsuit sort of thing, with a belt with a blue light flashing on it. I asked him who he was, and he said he was a friend.

"I told him I didn't think I'd ever seen him before and he smiled and didn't say anything. But he gave me a good feeling; for some reason I felt comfortable with him.

"I asked him where he was from, and he said he was from someplace very far away. He had an accent, so I thought he might be from England or someplace like that, but he looked down and shook his head and said 'no, no. I'm from much farther away than that. I'm from the stars... but we have a lot in common. I just want to ask you a few things.'"

"Over the next few months, we became friends. He wouldn't speak—he would telepathically put ideas into my mind. I asked him if he was talking to anyone else, and he said yes, but he didn't think it was necessary for me to know who they were.

"As time went by I started to suspect that the same thing was happening to David, a good friend of mine, and when I questioned him, he confirmed this. After that, David and I started doing things together where these people were concerned. There were a few times when we would meet out in the woods and wait for them to arrive. David lived about 30 miles away from me—maybe only 15 as the crow flies but the roads back there are long and winding. He would come by bicycle to the spot that we had been told to meet."

During the five years he and David had contact with them, Jerry says the extraterrestrials taught them about their sociology, their religion, and where they were as a civilization, as well as a lot about electronics, physics, astrophysics, astronomy and nuclear energy. "Sometimes when I need to I can draw on those memories, on the diagrams and pictures that they showed me," he says. "They taught by putting pictures into your mind in such a way that you could turn it, look at it and study it, analyze and understand it, instantly."

Jerry says the extraterrestrials taught them about a wide range of subjects, from electronic circuitry to the mechanics of the universe to survival methods in case of emergency here on earth. "They also taught us about compassion—what that really was—and love and caring, so there were a lot of abstract things too," he says.

He says the extraterrestrials showed him a star chart of where they were from, projected on a lucite pad/hologram viewing system. "The star system looked something like the Zeta Reticuli and Pleiadian systems. They said the name of their planet was Lanulos, meaning 'peaceful place,' or 'place where people live who care for each other.' "

He says the entities gave him and David shots to protect them from illnesses. "Whenever the other kids at school would get sick, we would never get whatever they had.

"They also put these things in the back of our heads, like an implant or a radio transmitter I think. It hurt, but it only lasted for a second, like a needleprick in the arm, or like rubbing the back of your head with an inkpen until it stung.

"I was surprised after reading Intruders that those extraterrestrials, who I've heard are from the 'other side,' and are called the Orions, do the same thing: they tag the people they are dealing with." Jerry says he feels that his implant may have protected him and David from being claimed by the Orions, the reptilian species he says abducts people for their own needs, unconcerned with how their activities traumatize the abductees.

"One night, the Orions called David and I out into the woods, and suddenly we found ourselves in a building. They had David strapped down to a table. I think maybe because I already had the implant from the others, I was able to snap out of this weird state of mind they had put us in, and we managed to get out of there. They never bothered us again."

Jerry says the extraterrestrials who implanted him took him aboard their space ships a few times to illustrate a specific point about physics or some other lesson they were giving. "The inside of the ships seem to be larger than the ship actually appeared to be on the outside. The understanding that I got was that the way the ship is powered pulls gravity around it, giving the optical illusion that it is smaller than it actually is."

He said the ships were rather plain inside, "nothing like in the science fiction movies, with lights flashing and all kinds of things going on."

He described that the ships had tables coming out from the walls or down from the ceiling, and places to sit. The only technological device he remembers is a black cube the size of a microwave oven cart, which when turned on became a three-dimensional viewing screen. "Occasionally, it would show you your outside surroundings. Once I remember seeing a view of us pulling away from the ground, although I couldn't feel any movement: it was like watching it on TV," he says.

Throughout these years, Jerry began having dreams in which he felt he was being astrally projected outside of his body to have "distant viewings" of things. "They were very different from the dreams I have now—they felt very ethereal and unreal," he says.

The last physical contact he feels he had with the UFO entities was when he was 17. "They told me I was well prepared for what the future had in store, and gave me a little box with what looked like a radio tube in it, and told me I was supposed to use it if I ever was in an emergency." (The box was later destroyed in his uncle's basement, which collapsed due to flooding, he said.)

Jerry's next UFO-related incident occurred about eight years ago, when he underwent hypnotic regression to try to sort out his memories of his early experiences. He says he also had some medical tests done to determine if his implant was still present, but the tests were missing when he subsequently went back to check on them, and there was no record of his ever having been to the hospital.

In his regression, he experienced a ride on a UFO that came down from the Earth's moon over the Canadian-American border and travelled to a nuclear test site near Mexico. "Some jet airplanes came up suddenly and surprised the UFO, fired upon it and disabled it, causing it to crash into the mountainside," he said. A few months later, he ran into an alleged government document account of the 'Roswell incident' at a UFO conference in Reno, Nevada. He says it sounded to him like the same story, told from the army's point of view.

"The stories overlapped perfectly, down to the ship coming down in a certain place where radar picked it up, how it zigzagged down the Rocky Mountains, the orders that were given for it to be chased by the jet planes, everything," he said.

On his way back to Phoenix, he and his travelling companions were detained at a small town called Goldfield. Jerry wandered off into a second-hand store and was drawn to a crystal ball amidst the junk.

"An old woman came out, and looked surprised to see me. She smiled like the guy I had met back in the woods smiled, this knowing, compassionate smile. I asked her if I could see the crystal, and she said 'You must be the one. Is your name Jerry?'"

"She said she had been instructed to give the crystal ball to me; she said 'you are to be the keeper. Protect this and you will be well.' Then she told me the same story I had experienced during hypnotic regression, the same story of the UFO being chased that was in the government document, only she filled in more of the blanks, talking about where I was from, and the family I had left behind on another planet. By this time my other friends showed up, and I told them to sit down and listen to this, because I knew otherwise nobody would ever believe me.

"The woman continued with her story, telling us that the crystal ball had been given to her in 1948 or '49 in southeastern New Mexico, where she had been living. She was told to give it to a traveler who would come through her life one day, and they had described me to her, which is how she recognized me. She also said they had spoken to her recently about me coming.

"At this point I asked her if she minded if I recorded what she was saying and she said it was impossible, that her voice couldn't be recorded, but that I could try if I wanted. I tested it a couple of times and she was right. The batteries were fine, just her voice wouldn't come out."

By the time Jerry and his companions got back to Phoenix, he says there were five or six psychics who knew he had the crystal ball, none of whom he had ever met before. "I don't know how they knew it: we hadn't stopped and called anybody," he said.

Jerry says the woman had told him that when he placed the crystal on another person's hand he was supposed to say that 'the law of the universe is being at one with the force of God, and that God was everything: everything you see is a reflection of different manifestations of the energy of God.'

"All this sounds well and good, and I did it for awhile, but people are strange—they tended to want to make a religion or something out of this. They would sit and pray to the crystal ball, and I didn't feel this was right. It was like worshipping a cow or something. So I hid it away, and dropped out of sight myself.

"When you're a teenager, it's easier to accept this sort of thing happening to you, but as an adult I was starting to have trouble dealing with it, and I withdrew for awhile."

A few months later, Jerry fell off the top of an airplane hangar and almost died. "That's when I first met 'M' face to face, although I had a sense that I had felt his presence before in my dreams. I saw myself lying 20 feet below, with all the people around me, and then M asked me if I wanted to go back. He told me I had more to do back here."

Jerry's dreams became much more realistic, and he began dreaming of meetings with M almost every night from that point. He says M explained to him that his UFO experiences had been part of his training progress, and that when the time came, they would return to him.

"M began taking me to this huge library and having me read these books about different things. The pages didn't have words on them, but symbols in light, and mental images would appear on the pages as I 'read' them. I started out looking up electronic solutions to simple things, things maybe I was dealing with that day at work. I studied other subjects, such as the history of extraterrestrial species, but mostly I focused on scientific or technological areas, and began experimenting during the day with ideas I learned in my dreams."

One of the triumphs of his invention efforts, he says, was a three-dimensional viewing system, something like the black cube system he remembers seeing on the UFO of his childhood encounters, only portable.

"I was playing with my little niece one day, and we were looking at her Viewmaster, when M popped into my head, which he sometimes does, and told me to study it closely, because I'd need to know its workings. About a year later I built my first 3-D system, using a motorcycle helmet and developing the first color liquid crystal systems. It cost me about $600.

"I got all ready to show it to the world, and I get my issue of Popular Science and see that there on page 27 or 37 is a story that NASA's beat me to it (although theirs was still just using the black and white liquid crystals). Of course I was floored."

Jerry says this same scenario has happened a lot since then. "I'll look up things in the books that M shows me and then find them later written up in Omni or Science Digest. My friends think I'm crazy that I don't start moving faster on these things."

Jerry went on to modify the 3-D concept, inventing a way to input video into the system, as well as producing a 3-D image on a regular TV by "fooling the optic nerves and by fooling the combining circuitry of the mind," he says. For this project he says he invented liquid crystal plastic, making glasses that oscillate at 120 cycles per second and stepping up the TV's signal to the same frequency. Again, he came up with the prototype a short time after someone else had patented the development. "The people who had funded my work, a medical company that was looking to apply it to microsurgery techniques, were disappointed in the timing, needless to say," he says.

Jerry's next invention was based on work he had started to help out a friend of his, a Ph.D. in parapsychology who lives in Arizona. "She wanted to try to photograph the human aura, taking someone like Uri Geller, who can really do something with their psychic energy, and photograph the energy going from them to the object they're trying to move or manipulate. So I went to the library and found all the information I could on the subject, and told her how to build the equipment."

Jerry says the woman couldn't afford the materials necessary to carry out the project, but that as a result of that research he learned about the human aura. "It was then that I came across the book 'The Guardian' in the library. After reading it for four or five nights of dreaming, I realized a way that I could make the human aura interact with light to create a field in which it would be visible."

What he devised is a light-generating crystal that uses no filament to illuminate itself, giving off light ranging in spectrum from bright red to bright green. A small energy source, such as a battery, releases a charge that causes a tiny speck of a rare solid gas phosphor to vibrate. This emits photons of light to the crystal, which amplifies the effect, resulting in a light source with a life expectancy Jerry estimates to be 10,000 years.

"The unique thing about this light source is that when you're looking into it, you start to see a misty kind of fog and other colors sparkling around in the fog. Once people see this, they start to see it in other settings, around their hands, or surrounding people they see on the street, at first peripherally, and then more distinctly. It opens up something in their brains that makes this phenomenon gradually more and more visible, in any situation."

Jerry thinks this colored, glowing fog is the human aura, moving back and forth between the person and the crystal. He is now marketing the crystals, phosphor and batteries, calling them "The Guardian," after the book he'd read.

His current dreams are focusing on how to amplify the human essence. "It's building on the work with The Guardian, but I want to be able to do this in a more direct way. I want to develop a way that anyone can learn to do things on the order of psychokinesis. I think with what I've been reading so far I have a pretty good idea of how to do it, but I have not been able to summon up the amount of mental control it's going to take."

He says that recently M instructed him to take a crystal and wrap silver around it, holding down pieces of luminescent material. "He told me this would have something to do with chakra activation and mind amplification techniques," Jerry says. "He said 'The whisper of the wind is but an indication of the force of the gale as it blows.' He's always talking strangely like that. He said something about if you could just gently blow a stream of air out of the corner of your mouth and see a leaf move, that's how much effort it would take to use your mind to move a mountain."

Jerry thinks the crystal device may also have something to do with healing, based on the reaction he got from one man who held it at a public lecture he gave to a small group in Arizona. "I passed it around, and this man held on to it, and kept turning it over and putting it on his wrist and holding it. He said 'everyone in here knows me and knows that I am not a sucker for this kind of thing, but my right hand has rheumatoid arthritis in it, and this is the first relief I've felt in it in years. Not only do I not have pain, but I can move my fingers, and the swelling has gone away.'

"This amazed me, and I asked him what he had done. He said he had noticed the feeling that the crystal was pulling energy out of his arm, so he decided to hold on to it for a minute and concentrate on the pain going away. After 15 minutes he said the pain was gone. I've talked to the guy since and he says he's starting to get a little pain again, so he wants me to come over with the crystal."

Jerry says he got another indication that the work he is doing may have healing properties when he recently saw a news report about a certain red frequency of color that is being found to show progress in killing cancer and purifying blood.

"That's the exact spectrum the original Guardians were made in," he says. "I only started making the green ones later, when people requested it."

He says many of his recent dreams have been about a device that will purify contaminated food and water, a device he feels may help stop the spread of AIDS if it ever enters the food chain. (He feels this may happen based on material he has read in the library about the adaptive properties of viruses.)

This device is based on the high energy propulsion of silver ions into the foodstuff, he says. He thinks it may have applications immediately in third world countries that are concerned about contaminated food, and is considering ways to begin building a prototype, in his waking, and in especially in his dreaming, state.

"I don't ask myself when or how this is supposed to happen, I just wait to see what will be put before me to do," he says. "It's an approach that has seemed to work for me so far."

REPORT FROM YOUNGSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA UFOCCI

By Dennis Viglo, Associate Director

It's been awhile since I last wrote, so I'll do my best to inform you of what is what.

First off, two co-workers at the place where I work have asked me to ask you some questions. These questions have to do with something that has happened to them and they were wondering if they have happened to anyone else out there. I told them, yes, I was sure of that but they would like to hear from others beside me, okay? So here goes.

Question 1. Have any of you in the last year or so seen an orange red light go through the sky at night?

Question 2. A short time later have any of you experienced unusual sleeping patterns? That is to say for example you go to bed at 11:00 p.m. and between 2:00 and 2:30 a.m. you are wide awake until 4:00 or 4:30 a.m. or longer. Sometimes you don't even go back to sleep and are bright eyed and bushy tailed and ready to go all day long while other times you sleep straight through until time to get up and work which I might say is by 6:00 a.m. and then complain that you feel like you are in a trance of some sort with very little motivation or energy. Some also complain about having stupid dreams with no ending or one long continual dream with no sense to it. If there is anyone out there experiencing this type of a thing or has had it happen to them, please drop me a line. Also if you have a cure for it I'd like to hear it. These people are in need of some answers not to mention me also.

One other thing, have any of you seen the white balls of disappearing light going through the night skies? Are they part of our so-called government or do they come from somewhere else. Unlike the reddish colored lights that travel from south to north, these travel in any direction. Sometimes high in the sky and sometimes they are a couple of hundred of feet up. Unlike the reds these tend to fade out right in front of your eyes. These are seen during cloudless nights. So much for the questions.

Now for a real life adventure.

I have one more true story to tell you all. I realize that some of my stories seem far fetched but not to me. The ones that pertain to my partner and I are 100% true. I don't believe in making up stories just for the fun of it. So here goes.

This happened in late winter just about two weeks before spring. My partner and his side kick for some reason had this dream about finding a cave that went deep into the ground and that when and if we were to find it we would find instructions on how to find an underground dwelling of some sort. Well needless to say, we came up empty handed. Plus the fact that we had a limited supply of light. That is to say, night had come. So with that in mind we decided to make our way back to the car. But somewhere along the way we got off track and ended up in the mountain laurel. For any of you out there who have ever gotten caught up in this stuff you know how hard it is to get out of it in the day time. Just imagine when it's pitch dark out and you only have a flashlight.

Well after wandering around for an hour or more I had come to the conclusion that we just may be lost. This conclusion brought about a slight panic to all. My partner's friend was already scared and wanted to start back down the hill and try to find our tracks and retrace them. I told him no, that it would be a long shot and a long walk. Besides as we walked along, so was something else and it seemed to be following us. It was then that my side kick and his friend both told me that earlier that night that they had seen what appeared to be some kind of an animal or thing walking up right through the woods and thought it might have been me. But when they called to it it just kept going until it had disappeared from view. I said; why hadn't they said something earlier when we met on the trail before we got lost. We would have never tried to take a short cut. As we stood there listening to something walking around us in the thicket, our fear was starting to increase. The more noise it made the more frightened we got. By now my partners friend was fit to be tied! He kept on insisting we try to find our way back down the hill. I still said no, and so did my partner.

The next part of this story you're going to find is very hard to believe but it's the honest to God's truth.

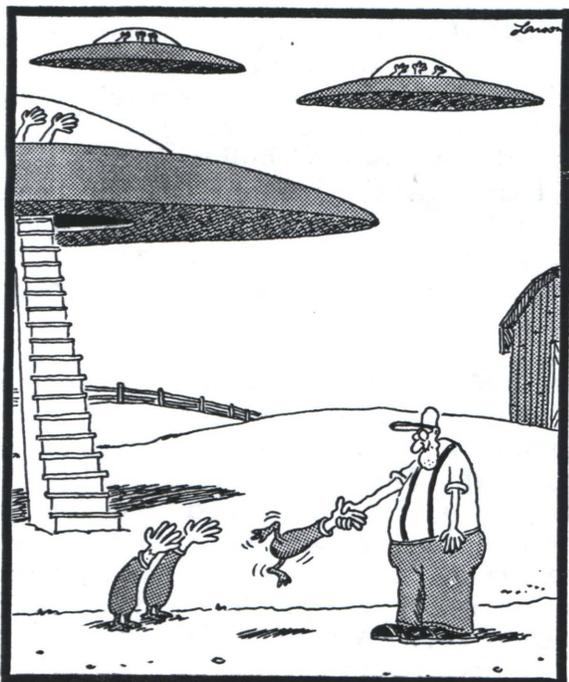

My partner turned to me and said, "Do you think our "friends" will help us find our way back?" (referring to the aliens) I said to him, if they're around the area I'm sure they would.

My partner put his hand in his pocket and brought out his crystal and proceeded to concentrate and go into a trance. His friend thought he was crazy and said that there was no one around. He no sooner said that and two red balls of light appeared on the top of the hill and lit up the area up there for us as a sign so we could find our way out. My partners friend by now was totally confused and didn't know what to say. The only thing he said was let's turn around and go back the way we came. The reason for that was he was really scared now and wanted nothing to do with the red balls of light. The red balls of light were stationary. They seemed to be in or just clearing the tops of the trees. The closer to the top we got the dimmer the lights got until they were gone. That's when we were able to hear the main highway. My guess is that we were no more than a fourth of a mile from it. It took us about 8 to 10 minutes to get to it. What a feeling of relief. Once on the highway we were about a mile from the car. Nothing more happened the rest of the way. So with that being the end of our real life adventure.

The enclosed picture shows what was left of a deer found on the path that goes to the circle area. As you can see, half of the deer is missing. The hindquarter of it was ripped away from the rest of the body. Fur was separated and piled on the ground. Your guess is as good as mine as to what did this. Some claim it was the coyotes. This may be possible, but; I don't know. I'm hoping to get a picture of still another strange animal killing; one where they just take certain organs out and leave the rest of the animal to rot.

I'll close for now and say may God bless and keep each and every one of you safe and happy.

A VIEW ON EXTRATERRESTRIAL VISITS

Phyllis Duran

Mysterious appearances and disappearances surrounding UFO contacts presents an enormous challenge to our rationalist concepts of reality. If it is real then it is there. But what if it is there and then it is not there anymore and then it is there again? This question is touched upon by both quantum theories and ancient cultures. Still, it is not widely addressed in the West outside of the Native American traditions with their distinct languages. Einstein commented on the way we think in 1941.

"What is it that brings such an ultimate connection between language and thinking? ...the mental development of the individual and his way of forming concepts depend to a high degree upon language. This makes us realize to what extent the same language means the same mentality."

Earth has grown into a global information/service economy, upping the costs of cultural and personal prejudices considerably, since UFOs appeared in numbers in the 1940's. Certainly we all interpret events through our language and culture mapping, preferences and experience. In becoming a global economy, English, a trade language, has been widely adopted. A group of physicist found that Sanskrit or Hopi contained the concepts to best express what they observed in quantum mechanics. Especially in addressing alien visits, we must lay aside our cultural and personal prejudices to examine the reports.

Displaying awesome sciences, alien visitors speak of universal laws of life while appearing to move effortlessly through time and universes. The visitors speak of originating from a variety of homes, some within our own universe and others from alternate universes and times, with a variety of motives and desires.

A Pleiadian woman explained to her contactee that another extraterrestrial group, Ceta Reticulum, came from our own time and physical dimension, unlike her. The visitors from Ceta Reticulum suggested that, "matter and energy are opposite polarities of the same phenomenon, that matter is convertible to energy and energy to matter. That matter is condensed energy or slowed down energy, and that energy is simply accelerated matter." In this well documented case, the visitors brought the contactee aboard their craft with a blue transference beam and later manifested, among other things, a small metal bar in his home through a blue light.

On a February day in 1976, Brian Scott stepped inside his living room in a trance and speaking in a strange voice after chasing a ball of orange light with a broom through his backyard. The police were called to investigate. Brian's two-year-old daughter soundlessly disappeared from the home and reappeared twice in the presence of the police. Two types of visitors appeared or manifested before Brian's family and close friends a number of times, holding lengthy conversations and providing instruction. Brian was given instructions for designing a bio-telemetry scan device, as well as numerous other projects. The visitors claimed to be from a primary and a secondary world.

LZ was watching what he believed to be an unusually large moon when he was taken aboard an unidentified craft in 1958. Meeting a panel of suited and helmeted humans, he saluted them with Hail Mary to ward off demons. After he was questioned and tested by the panel, LZ was told that Earth's science of physics contained elemental flaws and was given new principles called the science of falling bodies. He was told that it was important that he remember this in 1985, which coincidentally was the same year that holes in the ozone were discovered as predicted by another group of visiting aliens in 1975.

Anthropologist Baird Spalding described Emil planting kernels of corn and standing by while he watched the stalks grow while visiting the Far East in 1894. With the corn grown, Emil explained that the same principle that caused the corn to grow to make bread could as easily have produced what he really wanted in the first place -- bread to eat. With this Emil materialized a loaf of bread and then more.

Uri Geller sprouted seeds in his hand while I watched at a seminar in 1988. He did not understand how he bent spoons and keys or sprouted seeds, and neither did anybody else, but he explained the process he used. He described instances where objects have materialized in his presence or around him. At least a third of the 200 or so people in the audience bent spoons and keys that night. Uri Geller had made it clear that it was clearly within the range of human ability to do this and was not a special gift limited to him.

Emil explained to Baird Spalding that physical reality is composed of vibrations which can be increased or decreased to achieve different solidity of mass. Spalding told of an instance where a young chela in India used suggestion to create the illusion of an orange tree growing. The chela's guru was upset at this display and explained that the chela had been taught 12 levels of hypnotism as part of his training for other accomplishment but not for tricks. Spalding explained that it can be initially difficult to detect an illusion created from suggestion from the physical reality, but the camera never lies and will not photograph the illusion created by suggestion but will photograph the physical object manifested through matter.

The parapsychological study conducted by Thelma Moss at UCLA used photography extensively, especially kirlean, to study unusual abilities of Uri Geller and others. The Russians pioneered kirlean photography on several fronts including medical diagnosis of illness. The Moss group borrowed the specifications for kirlean cameras from the Russians and adapted them for vastly different concepts in American circuitry. One wonders what a bio-telemetry scan device, such as the aliens asked Brian Scott to design, might do.

Popular military explanations of early UFO sightings included swamp gas and mass hysteria, with unidentified craft commonly tracking at speeds of 2,000 plus on radar. Carl Jung pointed out in 1960 that until thought projections are measured on radar at several thousand miles per hour, more study needed to be done. Studies of UFO contactees and abductees conducted since 1970 reveal normal psychological functioning with high intelligence and psychic levels.

Concepts of reality are inherent in language and culture and taught at the most foundational levels of learning. Although the range of human perception and ability is consistent within the race, focusing on one line of development a culture necessarily places less emphasis on another line. Western development has led to high technology, bringing the world together through communication and trade and to the threshold of space travel. With this comes a duty of recognition and respect of other cultures and values. The ways people live.

The markers of focus between East and West balance on science and spirit, on external and internal. That extraterrestrial cultures exist is a certainty. We cannot begin to glimpse their focus and how they think until we are able to meet widely. We know that they have developed sufficient knowledge of natural law as science to travel to Earth. We know that they speak to a great number of contactees about concern for Man on Earth, particularly the use of nuclear power. Some say they visited and even colonized Earth in our ancient past but withdrew. In all, we know more about how they think of us than how they think of themselves.

In seeking knowledge of our and others' worlds, we will do well to bear in mind the words of Chief Seattle to the Western culture as it surrounded his own.

"...when your children's children think themselves alone in the field, the store, the stop upon the highway or in the silence of the pathless woods, they will not be alone. In the earth there is no place dedicated to solitude. At night when you think them deserted, they will throng with the returning hosts that once filled them and still love this beautiful land. The white man will never be alone. Let him be just and deal kindly with my people, for the dead are not powerless. "Dead", did I say? There is no death, only change of worlds."

Certainly, the forging of a global community of peace able to take its place in the larger galactic setting must be done in a crucible of Science and Spirit.

JIM SCHAFFER

MAY 11, 1960 - JULY 18, 1990

Recently I made the acquaintance of Jim Schaffer from Lancaster, New York. Although we never met in person I felt I knew him through his letters. There was something about his letters that drew me close to him - as has happened in so many of the abductees cases. I never know what it is but it is like the feeling one has about a member of one's own family.

Jim had planned on coming to the Jorjah and being regressed to remember his contact. In fact, he and another contact were riding out from New York together. It was with dismay and sadness that the other person called and said that Jim had died. I could not believe it. I called Jim's mother and she said he died of a heart attack.

I feel that he was a very special person - able to remember his past lives without hypnosis. In this life he gave psychic readings because he was very intuitive. He also was very funny and wrote comedy material.

At the time Jim died he was writing a book on his philosophy of life - one very close to my own. I would like to print some of that book in the Missing Link. Perhaps his mother will give us permission to do that so she can share her son with all of you. You will appreciate the unique person that he was.

When someone we care about in this big family we share, passes on, it affects us all because it makes us wonder about the reason they were contacted in the first place. Jim never was able to remember all of his contact but he knew there was a lot there. Personally, I feel cheated. Cheated to not be able to know Jim more because he was the kind of person that I would like to have for a life long friend. I also know that he is aware of my feelings at this very moment because I have been sending him kind and loving thoughts. He is that kind of person to pick them up. We will meet somewhere my friend....

I am going to share some of his last letters with you because I know you will enjoy the things he had to say.

* * *

You said you would never be too busy to listen, so maybe I should tell you a little about myself so you can get a feel for what I'm like. As I told you, I've worked as a psychic. Just looking at your picture I start picking up things. (You seem like an interesting old soul, as does that of your husband - but I get more "alien" vibes from him - a stronger E.T. connection.) I really didn't make a career of this because I don't feel comfortable charging for this.

I've done a lot of other strange things, as I tend to lean more toward the creative aspects of life. I've got a lot of inventions and things I need patented. I've worked with jewelry, studied karate, raised dogs, painted and fixed cars and a lot more. I guess I'm an old soul so it comes naturally. The most important thing at the moment is the book I'm writing. It's new age I guess, but hard to describe because it encompasses a lot. Lastly I should also mention that I've written some comedy material, but haven't pursued that yet. It seems the book is most important.

Unfortunately none of these have brought me financial freedom yet.

One of my ideas will bring needed money, because I feel the time is coming when many of the wiser souls must retreat to prepare. In spite of others who seem to foresee a wonderful new age beginning, I feel its going to get worse, before it does eventually get better. We live in a most deceptive time, in which silently, and powerfully, the dark forces rule. Many new age people are very naive as to what they must go up against. In their foolishness, and inability to look objectively, they become much easier to manipulate. I'm writing of this in my book along with practical new age advice, predictions and more.

Just before I met a friend that seemed to manipulate me the frequency of strange events had increased. (I've always had some!) My dreams had become very vivid, especially in that twilight sleep, where all things seem to happen, and the mind is so receptive. Much of these dreams seemed to be more like memories of actual events. It seemed like a time in which many different forces were contacting me. There seemed to be many types of aliens. I can remember a Spock-like character, small impish twins, and a being calling itself "Apollo" or Apollonius.

Why so many would have an interest in me, I can't say. I know that they wanted something from me, for it seems that I must play a part (again!) in the New Age to come. What exactly that part is, I'm not quite certain. My "future" dreams picked up, again and again, I saw the great deluge that is to come. And is coming! There were also many dreams of alien worlds, and UFOs.

Once I thought I saw a 6 - 8" quivering disc in my room (but always half asleep). I kept record of all these dreams, and some are really wild! So just as all this interesting stuff is happening, my evil "friend" enters the picture. Then, as I said, things really got weird. Obviously, he preyed upon a weakness of mine, so it was a lesson that had to be learned. I think I died in my last life totally trusting him. That was, I believe around 1944. We were best buddies in Germany during the great war. His U-boat went down in the North Atlantic, and he died before I had the chance to realize what a jerk he was.

I do remember Nazi Germany most vividly, and I can tell you it was not at all as history portrays it. But most of our history as a whole is a joke anyway! Much as taught is complete fabrication. I don't have quite all the details about those times yet. There is a new book out called "The Occult Conspiracy". It tells of how Hitler was a member of the "Thule Geschelschart", an Aryan occult lodge. Many of the high party officials were secret members. They believed that "Thule" was the northern province of Atlantis. They also believed that man, the original form of man as is now, was formed from the Thule. In other words, they were the original mold, thus the "Master Race." Also, it was believed that the world was disintegrating racially-genetically from what once was.

The most important aspect of the times, is they captured the "Nordic Spirit" of the Thule. They basically were thinking as did their ancestors from old Atlantis. (sort of a strong "Conan type.")

If you sensed a little "protectiveness" toward the Third Reich, perhaps its true. I hope that doesn't turn you off, it's just a small part of me, but it was only 46 years ago. I've still people that knew me over there!

A lot of the peripheral things still remain. I love imported German Schnapps. I actually have a pair of those tall boots and I did have a German pistol from that period.

It's kinda funny but the "Horst Wessel" song the German patriots song of that time really stirs my emotions. I can remember sitting in the old beer halls drinking and reveling in the German way. Can you understand that "Willie" will always be a little with me" Its "Willie" in me, that will turn off any World-War documentary after 1941 (when we started to lose!) and can't stand anything in this country from the 40's! I guess I allow myself that silliness to a certain point, and its funny, but somehow I think its exactly right for me, it sort of balances things out.

Although 1981 was the start of an intense period, strange things have always been with me. In third grade, I started drawing these cute, smiling pictures of Martians, for no reason at all, and I had no interest in outer space at the time. I remember seeing a certain rectangular star pattern, and a very faint musical beeping I could hear when things were still. This was around '69 and it was also then I saw a UFO with my grandpa in his yard.

Maybe a few years later the negative activity started. It was this negative activity that started a process of "blocking out" certain things. I would have a recurrent nightmare in which I spoke to something and said "What do you want from me... no... no, then most every night run out of my bedroom screaming. The dialog was repeated to me by my parents, I actually to this day have no memory of what went on. There was definitely an evil force there, though. Interestingly the people that moved into that house, also saw something sinister in my old bedroom, as did their dog!

This seems to be the first case for hypnosis, because what happened is impossible to recall because of the trauma. I would guess that I was examined, as I have a memory of a circular device with big red dots, which because I was a child, I likened unto a face, with the two dots on top for eyes, and a lower dot for a mouth.

Really my conscious searching for knowledge along these lines didn't occur till around 12, when my sphere of influence changed, and met a friend of like nature. Around this time, this strange lady who had 13 cats, and fed her kids shredded wheat and water gave me "Chariots of the Gods" and got me going reading of the great mysteries.

Maybe a few years hence, I was 13 or 14. I was visited by a man in a strange, ornate pedal cart who explained to me that "UFOs are visiting their own people". He showed me some strange invention and an odd contraption to stop hiccups with a karate move! He pedaled around on a three wheel bicycle. I guess it was more like a "rickshaw" because it was a little larger in the back, and had a roof. The back was supported by a twisting beam on each side. There were also lanterns on the beams. It was very strange, because he also had things with him. Why pedal around the neighborhood and carry things? He had a strange pan of water, and he was explaining some device that had to do with vibrations, because he could make the water vibrate.

The guy was thin, with extremely long hair, and maybe 35 or so. His hair was brown. He made such a point of saying "You don't know why flying saucers are here... their here to visit their own! He pulled out a picture of a street corner where he saw a UFO. No UFO in picture - but why bother at all with such a picture? I guess he could've just been a strange person. Jeff remembers briefly talking with him too. The guy was around for a couple of weeks. then disappeared.

That's all I can recall of him, but my memory of that period - and most of my life, is just awful. I could've had a night job on Venus with all that missing time. Jeff's just the opposite. It's pretty bad, when he has to remind me of the things I did!

Most of the strange things of this period happened with my friend Jeff. After we learned to drive we would go out at night and drive all night on cruises - or did we? Now I wonder about missing time, as it seems to apply to that. One particular cruise was interesting in that we brought a friend along. We joked about aliens and MIBs perhaps to educate and awaken him a little to the greater nature of things. Well, it did, because a strange black Nova came from the opposite lane and swerved slowly into our lane, as if it intended to drive us off the road, directly into a parking lot which lay ahead. It seemed intentional and calculated, rather than a drunk.

After we ended up in the parking lot the car got back on the road coolly, and slowly, never changing speed through all of this. We followed it. The two people in the car were strange and lifeless like zombies and wouldn't look over at us at all. The license number? 666! Our friend was shaken up.

We were used to it, perhaps even looked forward to such strange things. I guess that says a lot about me there, at heart I like a higher awareness. I guess, deep down, I know what life could be like, and seeing this joke the average person lives disgusts me. Of course no one forced this old soul here!

I do remember some past lives. I honestly can say I miss Egypt and the old days. The stale - pseudo-scientific mind has replaced instinctively knowing. Now, everyone wants "proof" and they still don't believe it if you do show them.

If Philip Klass, the "not so Amazing Randi" or Carl Sagan were alive during Jesus' time, I'm sure they would scream "charlatan," or explain that he was able to walk on water using hidden stilts! They may yet get the change again!

I can remember Olanta (Atlantis) and that was very much more of a varied, and intense life experience than today. In fact the whole earth was much more alive with dense jungles, huge prehistoric looking trees, dinosaurs, and many species of Humanoids - large and small.

The "Zen" days of feudal Japan was very much in tune with the flow, (at least it was for me!) enlightened sages wandered the countryside, so the force was there if one could grasp it. The world has indeed forgotten that there is the Samurai warrior version of enlightenment. In other words, there are alternate paths in the void. The way of total pacifism and nonviolence is not the only true spirit of the void. This I do remember - how the thinking was so different than today.

I fought in World War II for the Germans, and for the Good 'ole C.S. of A (Confederate States of America). The feeling after losing the Civil War, was utter demoralizing defeat. Really, the War was not fought over slavery. Slavery became a Northern diversionary tactic to sidetrack and demoralize the issue. It was part of a rallying point against us to make us look bad. The North had its own share of dirty deeds, and I am by no means justifying slavery. All we really wanted was the right to be free - to be left alone. (Sorry, sometimes a little Southern man slips in!)

Perhaps I am being a little too indulgent in these past lives. I know a great deal about them, yet I know nothing at all. Names, dates and places elude me. It would be interesting to have hypnosis to confirm them, however, I realize hypnosis might be limited to UFO material. Is this so? It might be difficult to separate any of it because it all interconnects - ALL IS ONE! If the details of my experiences seem a little sketchy and I seem to jump around, it is because it is difficult for me to remember my past. It seems like a lot is missing. Given time, I could recollect more but these are some major points, and its enough for now.

REPORT FROM SMYRNA, TENNESSEE UFOCCI

By Herman Langley, Sr, Associate Director

In the six months that the Smyrna Center has been opened I have met a lot of people who wanted to learn more about our organization. I passed out a lot of newsletters and fliers about UFOs and UFOCCI. I tried to encourage them to subscribe to the Missing Link, and other publications, to increase their knowledge of the UFO Phenomenon. I think I have helped some, more than others, but I do know I helped to open their minds to other possibilities and realities. For some that was a big step in itself. I know, as an Associate Director, I have a lot to learn and I will make some mistakes, but I hope with some others (A.D.s) help that I will not make very many because we have a lot of work to do, and don't need anything to slow us down or get in our way!

I have three new members; two of them have had several daylight sightings. One is a lady who has had a lot of different experiences; some UFO sightings, and a lot of unexplained bruises that would show up after sleeping and sometimes after dreams. She has had several pregnancies that have been lost without reason. On one visit to the doctor he said she had lost the baby, and would need to have a D&C to clean her out but when he started it he said, "You have already been scraped clean - there is no sign of pregnancy?"

She has seen a craft over her neighbor's house. She did not know how long she stood looking out her bedroom window but she thinks it was a long time. Her husband told his sister that he awoke one night and saw a little creature walking around their bed. He tried to reach his pistol but could not move. He watched the creature for a little while, and then it was gone.

His sister then told his wife of the encounter. That's when she told her husband about the strange things happening to her. Not long ago she called me, and her husband told me about something he saw. Something awoke him and he saw a 3 inch square cube spinning slowly in the air near their bed. It had three or four colors. When he raised up to get a better look it started folding up on itself like a cardboard box with the edges cut and folded in on itself to make one flat piece 3" x 3". It then shot a pencil thick beam of light to the ceiling and followed it up until it reached the ceiling. It wiggled like it was having trouble, then went through. He then tried to go back to sleep.

The one who has had the most daylight sightings is called "Rockman". He has a talent for carving faces out of rock. So much so that he had two of his biggest heads appraised at $700. by the President of the Nashville Art Association in 1985. I will send a copy of his "Little Space Man". He carved it out of jade. One of his carvings made the company paper. I don't have all the details on his sightings but this is what I have now. One day he and his wife were backing out of his driveway in a VW Bug when he saw what looked like a silver dot high in the sky. When it dropped down they could see what looked like a round craft with a plastic bubble but they could not see into it. After a short while it shot up and went out of sight very fast.

The third new member has had a few sightings mostly at night. The one I have the most information on is a night time sighting. "One night with several friends having an outside party with two radios; one inside and one outside on the same station. Jeff went behind the house to use the bathroom and saw a plane going across the sky. It went under a very bright star and the star dropped in behind the plane and started following it for a short time. Jeff saw it speed toward him very fast. (I am not sure when he got his friends attention and at what point they watchd with him. Then it came within a few hundred yards and stopped. As it came closer the radios started fading out and had a lot of hissing and popping the whole time it was near. The craft was stationary for a short time until it shot off to its former place behind the plane. After it paced the plane for a little while it started looping around and around it until it went out of sight. Jeff told me he did not know how long it took for it all to happen. (I think he may have had some more experiences but that's what I got from my talks with him.) He wants to go under regressive hypnosis to find out if anything has happened to him that he does not remember. He said he would keep in touch and let me know when he has it done and will tell me what he found out.

I don't know if I should include this one in my report but it made a very strong impression on me so here goes! Around the beginning of July I had a dream that left a very strong impression on me. It went like this. "I was sitting in the living room of some house when a boy of 13 or so came out of the back bedroom and said, "What smells funny?" I told him I didn't know but we will go outside and find out what it is. When we walked out on the porch I looked up and saw some lights in a strange pattern. I then pointed them out and told him, "Look! That is a space ship." It then stopped and turned around and started coming back in our direction, and I told the boy to get my wife. She then walked out on the porch and I told her to get the camera. As she turned around, the craft started landing. Bev then said: "Well at least this one is landing!" As it came close to the ground it was shooting a white vapor (like steam or liquid nitrogen) out of its four landing legs. When it touched down the vapor stopped. On the side of the craft there were numbers 12 and 90. The 12 was very bold and the 90 was a strange looking set of digits looking like a spiral maze. It was shaped like a symbol or insignia of some kind. When it landed I was thinking: "Do I walk up to it? Do I run, or do I get my gun?" But before I made up my mind I woke up.

I don't know what this dream might mean but my wife said that the 12 and 90 on the ship may mean that in December of 1990 something special may happen. So I will wait and see.

I hope my next year's report will have more information to send with it. Things have been going slow in the last few months but I think it will pick up before long.

EXTRATERRESTRIAL COMMUNICATION

© By Richard T. Woodmaster

To you, the individual that desires to communicate with the people of other planets and star systems, a number of unique problems must be resolved before you are can do so. Only in very few instances dose a terrestrial obtain the necessary experience and information, which when combined enables them to communicate with extraterrestrials. There are many factors to be considered, both on your part and theirs, when attempting contact. This article will be a basic outline on the subject, as limited space does not permit covering all the details involved.

The determining factors in any form of communication is the method of transmission and reception used. There are eight methods that ETs use for communication with us. The distance of space to be covered and level of conscious advancement determines the method(s) employed. Certain fields of force are utilized in the transmission of information or data and conversion of same through the receiver.

Ediphone, is a device that consists of an induction field for thoughts. It then converts these into impulses for telepathy or tensor beam transmission, and are in turn translated and acted upon by the mind of the receiver.

Vocalator, is a speech recognizer and synthesizer device which convert thoughts into oral expressions for radio or light beam transmission. Our thoughts or verbal communications with the extraterrestrials, are often made possible because of this form of language conversion device. Thus, they are able to express themselves in many different tongues.

Solex Mal (Solar Tongue), is a universal language, which is the conversion of thoughts and emotions into colors, numbers, tones and symbols. This is often heard as a syllabic or polyglot speech.

Pulse Code, is similar to Morse Code and is often used for synchronizing or tracking by means of inverse proportions of amplitude, frequency and phase of multiwave radio and light beam signals.

During actual encounters with star people at close range, telepathy, verbal speech, signs and or symbols are used. When the distances become greater in long range transmissions, four other methods are involved as follows:

1. Telepathy is involved when the mind of the individual is conditioned by choice or by the impression of an external field, to transmit and receive, then convert thoughts into a complete communication. This involves tuning into a fourth dimensional wave or universal frequency consisting of four harmonized signals (alpha, beta, delta and gamma) unified into one rhythm, either consciously or unconsciously. The received message(s) are then verbalized, written or drawn, sometimes requiring the assistance of hypnosis to convey this data to others.

2. Radio is a broadcast upon multiple electromagnetic waves and is beamed to a large or small area directly from a base, spacecraft (UFO) and or relayed through a beacon. These signals may be received on one or more specific or random scheduled frequencies and heard as a voice or pulse toned and coded transmission.

3. Light Beam means modulating of information upon a beam of visible or invisible light. Certain types of material display qualities that are sensitive to infrared, visible and ultraviolet light vibrations. A transmitter and receiver can be built that is capable of emitting pulsations of light and converting them into audible sounds. Infrared and ultraviolet rays of light are capable of covering interstellar distances.

4. Tensor Beam is a cone-shaped field of projected magnetic radiation of a certain wave length. It consists of three types of magnetic polarities, charges and phases occurring simultaneously. It has a core two inches in diameter, which acts on the brain of the receiver, surrounded by an inner tubular layer thirty-two inches in diameter that controls the area, and an outer tubular layer sixty-four inches in diameter, which picks up nerve impulses from the mind(s) of those in it, and acts as a carrier for these to a monitor. It often affects by modulation of nerves, the optical and audio centers of the brain.

An extensive amount of research by various individuals has been done on all of these methods in one form or another and the results were often successful, because they were contactees and were given instructions on extraterrestrial communication. They are known by many as George Hunt Williamson, Michael X. Barton, Richard T. Miller, Robert P. Renaud, Daniel W. Fry, John Otto, the Mitchel Sisters, Elizabeth Klarer. These and others are to be credited for their efforts. This article is in response to my own follow-up on their service in establishing techniques for such contact for others. My thanks also go to Lorne Goldfeather's contribution. For those who make the effort, there are people to assist.

To continue; this same method can be used for detection of UFOs. But; with radio or light beam, a voice or signal activated relay or use of a timer for certain periods of reception and alarm when you are in the immediate vicinity to respond to call(s).

Finally, there are many conditions for the aliens to select you for contact, but an open mind, attitude of service to others and a desire to advance are of key importance. The subject must exhibit certain characteristics. These are determined by a UFO overflight to survey the planet and scanning and detecting for a special radiation from you that emanates these traits. In turn you are automatically identified and recorded when found or you signal them. Then, after a preliminary field study of you by personnel, when conditions are of mutual benefit, communication is established.

I am primarily attempting extraterrestrial contact. So, my purpose in writing this article is to outline and perhaps supply more details later. I am also doing this because there are those of you who should network your data on contact methods. So then, I am sincerely requesting we get this done while each of us can.

For correspondence I can be reached at: P.O. Box 867, Durango, CO 81302.

There are risks in going public, and laws prohibiting any ET contact. Thus, I can only send out this effort to serve you of the Infinite One, knowing that it is a Team Effort. If this has been in vain, then there is truly very few that are ready to prepare the way for life, light and love. Remember, it only requires a few people to transform a planet, in each successive generation pioneers come forward toward the NEW AGE.

TELEPATHY

LIFE FORCE: In the cosmos, one power exists that creates, maintains and evolves all things. One aspect of this power is called vitricity, an expression of the power of mind and the other is electricity, an expression of the power of matter. It is essential to attune yourself to the proper mental wavelength to receive such thoughts and the intensity of vitical power used to transmit thoughts. These vitrons are tiny units of vitical or life force. A vitron is opposite in polarity to an electron, which is a tiny unit of electrical force. The effect of vitrons being introduced into the brain, stimulates the operation of the inner eye and ear of this organ.

HUMAN BRAIN: Your brain was provided by nature with a built-in means of communication to enable you to achieve mental attunement with all other intelligent minds anywhere in the universe. This is made possible because of a vitic current (a flow of vitrons) passes unimpeded through the ethers of space, almost instantly and an electric current (a flow of electrons) passes unimpeded through the planet. This faculty for two-way thought communication requires that the power be developed by active exercise to be of service and value to you, by opening up the knowledge of the universe to you. Each thought originating in a person's mind creates a corresponding energy wave, which is transmitted instantaneously in much the same manner as are radiations from electronic devices. The difference is that thought transmissions are not subject to the time-space dimension as are the majority of electronic waves.

All beings are able to hear, see and thought interchange with one another through the mind. The three basic parts of your built-in thought communication set are: 1. Receiver, the pituitary gland, which is the negative contact point in the brain, that enables you to receive. 2. Vision Screen, the optic nerve cells (timus), the neutral contact point, that enables you to form and display images in black and white to color; and 3. Transmitter, the pineal gland, which is the positive contact point, that enables you to send thoughts. The cerebellum is the primary organ of the subconscious mind. The vitrons flow upward and across to the pineal gland, then into and energize the optic nerve cells. Some of the vitrons flow into the pituitary gland where the self perception of your individuality is located. The self then interprets the mental images created by the vitrons, as specific visual-audio messages complete with color sound and other sensory experiences. The vitrons complete a circuit by flowing out through the cord of the cerebrum (conscious mind)(+) in a path into and through the cerebellum (subconscious mind)(-). The more vitrons you are able to accumulate or store up within the cerebellum of the brain, the easier you can transmit thoughts through space. In contrast, to receive them requires less vitrons.

TECHNIQUE: The slide of awareness meditation technique that is used for telepathy, consists of four simple steps. The idea is to "slide" the focal point of your mental awareness between the conscious and subconscious organs of the brain, depending upon whether you are sending or receiving a thought. Visualize a dot on a line within a circle representing the mind, which can be moved in either the conscious (+) (C) or (-) subconscious (SC) directions from the subliminal (S) center.

To enter into the subliminal state you need to relax. So, hold a mental picture of the line with dot at the center of it. Then think of nothing else to still the active conscious mind. Make a complete circuit of the nervous system with all stimuli. Allow it to move along the spinal column, up to the center of emotional feels (Thalamus), then through it and up to the center of discriminating thoughts (Cortex), then through it. Then allow all stimuli to move back down through the Thalamus and into the nervous system. Maintain a conscious awareness of this energy moving up to and down through the Cortex. When both of these centers are in an integrated and balanced relationship, they will produce unlimited subtle differences in the flow of thoughts and feelings.

To send a thought, mentally move the dot toward the conscious mind, to allow it to tune in on the person. As soon as you have formed the thought, slide the dot back to subliminal center promptly.

To receive a thought, mentally move from the subliminal center to the subconscious for a response from your inner mind. Become aware of the very real intelligence and power within you. Allow a thought and feeling to unfold and form within.

The mind is a form of energy with a set frequency, different from any other. While this frequency cannot be changed, there is a universal frequency or alpha wave (8.325 cycles per second) which can be tuned in or out at will. The personal frequency of the individual must change in phasing to synchronize to the extent required, which is usually necessary for these thought impulses. It is on this universal frequency that telepathy occurs. When generated, it is receptive to any impulses or messages from throughout the universe. The mind can select from any of these at will, shutting out all others by imposing a mental block. Usually a form of mental ringing is used to gain the attention of a desired person, as no one keeps their mind open to calls, then contact can begin. When the mind is not generating this frequency however, it will neither transmit nor receive these impulses.

When you concentrate on a person or group, you tune your mind to the frequency of their brain and communication is established. This takes a great amount of practice, but your efforts along these lines may be a very useful method of contacting the ETs, particular in case of a major emergency.

The most favorable period for Thought Transference is during the hours from midnight until about 6 a.m. because the majority of the people in your area are asleep and their conscious mind activity is stilled. The ether is filled with thoughts at all times. This form of communication indicates a person of an advanced race. Few people on Earth can attain thought communication.

RECOGNITION

There are three forms and methods that I am aware of for emitting the required signal or energy key that are used for recognition by certain members of an important network. The mechanics of just how to manifest this radiation can be activated into conscious memory recall. These energy transmission techniques from one person to another are practical to demonstrate. These signals soon with practice become automatic and serves to confirm many contacts and transcend other environmental vibrations which tend to confuse reception during telepathy. It is natural to be able to create and receive these vibrational pulses. Evidently these forms of recognition are quite wide-spread and effective for many people who have reported these experiences before, during or after a UFO encounter.

BUZZ: In your abdominal area or solar plexus buzzing sensation is the feeling you would get during contact. The energy key is created on call by using your solar plexus as a concentration point for emission. Once the interchange of felt power responses within the abdominal area are acknowledged, mental contacts can then be developed between you and your contact(s) using this energy manifestation as a means of identifying specific thought waves. There is a distinct vibration, color or tone for each individual of this group contacted.

LIGHT: Another means is energizing the aura or bioplasmic shell that exist around the human body. They emit a light energy field that brightens and envelopes you, producing a strong solar plexus sensation.

RING: The final type of recognition signal is a ringing in the ears. Evidently the space people while "beaming" down a set of instructions to the sub-conscious mind of an individual use their mind or a device which may cause the sensation of a high-pitched electronic tone signal in the ear. While you are meditating on this, the ringing begins, loud and clear. Within several seconds the ring is modulated into what is evidently some type of unknown "tone signal" in code.

RADIO

Micro waves are effective between planets in the form of a ion beam because they form their own conductor. This beam can be phase modulated to carry any video or audio signal once the area or object of communication has been detected by radar (100 megacycles to 1 gigacycle) and distance measured to adjust the tuning. Some coded signals are transmitted and received through a directional pulse beam which has an echo location capability. The phase modulated ray bypasses the antenna and goes straight to the resonant tuned discriminator circuit of the radio. A special caduceus or mobius coil and germanium rectifier are required. The sounds of even tone with low and high pitch are divided into pulse codes, symbols or words.

Radio waves are not effective between planets because they require a conductor that is found only in, and a few miles outside, the atmosphere. A trace of it exists at 31,451 miles from the Earth. Beyond this envelope certain rays grow stronger as the air thins. A special communications type all-wave receiver should be obtained that can tune to all of the frequency ranges, as a conventional receiver does not cover all of them. The particular bands are chosen because it is unlikely that others will hear the messages on them. The transmissions are usually on rather wide frequency bands, but on a quite narrow beam intended for contact. It is the wave and not the power that is important.

You do not need expensive equipment to tune into these different signals. Thousands of HAM radio operators and teenagers with homemade coils and condensers have been listening with awe to the wild, strange and obviously intelligent signals radiating around our own planet. These signals are not a myth and are not all hoaxes. They exist and have existed for a long time. When we started to clutter up the electromagnetic spectrum with our radio and TV transmissions, they moved into the VLF and VHF bands, and now that we are beginning to explore those frequencies ourselves, we are certain to be hearing more and more from the pirate radio stations.

If you live in the country, away from the interference of power lines and generators, you can easily listen to a wide variety of eerie monotone, guttural or rapid speech in an unidentifiable language or low frequency noises ranging from beeping, hisses to cricket like chirping sounds yourself. They can be heard with a tin pocket amplifier attached to a telephone coil, or by stringing a long antenna, the longer the better, in your back yard, away from any power sources, and hook up an ordinary audio amplifier (without radio tuner) to it. Late at night and early in the morning you will hear these sounds. On days when rockets are launched you will be able to hear the unusual sounds radiated by the object as it shoots into the ionosphere. If UFOs are frequently reported in your immediate area chances are excellent that you will also receive the voices. If you want proof, this is how you can hear it with your own ears. Anyone desiring to experiment with these transmission signals should select a frequency.

ORIGINS: Usually these radio signals come from craft, underground/sea bases; planet outposts and constellations as follows: Pleiades; Messier 13 (Hercules); Epsilon Eridani; CTA 21-102 (Pegasus-Aries); Venus; Vega-Altair; Bernard's Star; Wolf 424; Moon Craters Plato-Tycho; Jupiter; Alpha Centauri; Messier 3 (Bootes/Korena); and Mars.

TYPES: Pulse Code, Sub-Space (4D); Tensor Beam and Voice.

Frequencies: Cycles per Second: 18; 11-10; 8.325; 6; 4 and 2. Kilocycles: 980; 820-875; 550; 405-450 and 340. Megacycles: 900; 771.2; 413.44; 388; 229.79; 149.67-98; 136.6; 117.12; 111; 103; 98; 72.3; 59.49; 57.06; 49.965; 29.5-75; 28.53; 27.915; 26.965; 21.0-45; 20.0-005; 18; 17.7-9; 15; 14.25-286; 14.002-02; 12.05; 9.6; 8; 7.9; 7.001-01; 6.125; 5.95; 5; 3.2-4; 3; 2.23; 1.875; 1.702-75; 1.61 and 1.09. Gigacycles: 5.33; 4.2-3.7; 2.995 and 1.43. Time cycles or coded signals have been received from four different points in space and were not coming from any visible object and were pulsing once each 1.3372795 seconds (up to 15 minutes) exactly. They are slightly variable and are spread over a wide frequency range, from 40 to 2,000 megacycles. It is estimated that they come from points up to 300 light years away.

LIGHT BEAM

The transmission of sound by the use of visible or invisible (infra Red or Ultra Violet) light waves for communication with the occupants of UFOs has an advantage over radio transmission because of a shorter wave length and can be focused into a more narrow high-powered beam than EM waves which tend to diverge more.

CONSTRUCTION: A light beam transmitter is made by coupling an audio amplifier to a Xenon bulb or tube equipped with a parabolic reflector to focus the light into a narrow beam. Sound waves are converted by a microphone into electrical impulses which are amplified to operate the bulb so that it emits light in proportion to the amplitude and frequency of each pulse. A direct current (DC) bias voltage is also applied to the Xenon tube and adjusted to give optimum linear characteristics to the modulated light beam it projects. This beam is focused by the concave disc into the optical system of the light beam receiver of UFOs. For invisible communications an IR or UV filter should be placed over the transmit light emitter and receiver photo cell.

A light beam receiver is made by coupling a photo electric cell to an audio amplifier and a speaker or earphones. A lens and reflector is used to focus the transmitted light beam on the sensitive surface of the photo cell which converts the light pulses into electrical pulses that are amplified to operate the speaker and reproduce the original sound waves.

OPERATION: An ET or occupant transmits a message by modulating the glowing forcefield of the UFO or emits a light beam at an audio rate and receives same by a light sensor built into the craft's underside.

TENSOR BEAM

(Dolores, this is for you.)

The Tensor Beam pertains to a configuration of radiated energy which is a self-enclosed time-zone produced by a caduceus coil antenna used in a short wave radio for verbal or thought converted communication with the people from other star systems.

CONSTRUCTION: The Tensor Coil consists of an insulated copper wire, wound in a double helix around a plastic tube filled with small iron pellets that acts as a ferrite core. A proper ratio of wire to cylinder diameter is necessary to produce a specific geometry of the resonating electromagnetic field. When a high or very high frequency current is injected into the coil, about 3/4 of the distance down the length of the tube, tachions composing the core material converge into a beam of standing columnar waves. The coil produces a dense field core inside the coil, a more rarefied time field surrounding the coil and projects a beam that carries its own time field gradient.

OPERATION: This double helix coil, unlike a single ordinary winding retains over 98 percent of power while in use, a loss of only 2 percent in dissipation during communication. It has zero impedance and does not get hot when electrical energy flows through the wire. It is capable of resonating strongly on any number of frequencies randomly spaced in the spectrum. It will lock in on another identical beam at any distance without interference from other power sources but unless the beams are precisely aligned, nothing will be picked up without mounting it on a parabolic reflector or concave dish to bring the beam to a focus.

NEW RESEARCH HOTLINE TO START
by August 30th. Voice line using tone dialing menu for audio access to research material provided by top researchers on human abduction, alien and government interaction with humans, holistic learning and awareness-boosting. Info is updated/changed up to twice a week. New research developments on Mind Control, Psychotronic Devices, and Exobiology are also featured. Individuals can also call and leave questions to be answered in the system.

CALL 1 - 900 - 446 - 4836

Answers can be programmed by caller to be private or public, and callers using the feature may be given, if desired, a coded number to use in order to receive their private reply. Cost for use of the research system is 95 cents per minute.
