EDITORIAL

UFO SIGHTINGS has returned! Welcome to our second issue. I trust you all found our first issue to be informative and eye opening on the subject of unidentified flying objects. We don't suppress the truth, unlike other magazines too scared to tell it like it is. UFO SIGHTINGS is a bold, brash magazine dedicated to letting you in on the inside information regarding flying saucers.

We've really uncovered some fascinating facts this time around. We'll delve into such shocking and diverse subjects as: "UFOs In Another Dimension: the Third Theory", "Are UFOs Infiltrating Our Military Bases?", "Flying Saucers And Things That Go Bump In The Night", "UFOs And Their Secret Weapon, Ultrasonics" and several others.

As you can easily see, we touch on subjects which really get people to thinking, and that's what we're here for. UFOs are a fact of life, and while people can deny their existence, they can't shove aside the plethora of detailed information and eyewitness accounts concerning UFOs!

If you, our readers, have any authentic stories concerning UFOs, feel free to send them in. In fact, if reader response is heavy enough, we may start a new feature, publishing readers' reports of their UFO encounters. So send in your stories, but please make sure they are neatly typed.

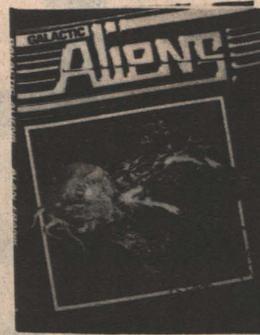

That's about it for now. We'll be seeing you next issue. And until that time, keep on watching those skies and reading UFO SIGHTINGS. It's time everyone knew the truth!

UFOs In Another Dimension— The Third Theory

Dating back to ancient times, enlightened individuals often painted strange pictures, which many of today's scientists feel were actually drawings of other dimensions.

■ "...the Thing swooped down on him.

"From afar it had appeared to him, quite small, gliding over the sand...as a pale, fleeting shadow like a wavering flight of quail over the blue sea before sunrise...or a whirlwind of dust at midday sweeping over the plain.

"And then the man perceived that the little pale cloud of vapor was but the center of an infinitely greater reality moving towards them without restriction, formless, boundless. The thing, as it approached them, spread outwards with prodigious rapidity as far as his eye could reach, filling the whole of space, while its feet brushed lightly over the thorny vegetation beside the torrent; its brow rose in the sky like a golden mist with the reddening sun behind it. And all about it the ether had become alive, vibrating palpably beneath the crude substance of rocks and plants as in summer the landscape quivers beneath the overheated soil in the foreground."

(On "The Spiritual Power of Matter" from Hymn of The Universe by Pierre Teilhard de Chardin.)

In contrast to two prevalent UFO theories, one the purely physical or extraterrestrial argument, the other the inner, psychological or "paraphysical" concept, I would like to present a third view which is different from, yet helps explain, the others. In the past it would have encompassed the "supernatural-

Most UFOlogists either believe that UFOs are extraterrestrial or parapsychical. But we have managed to unearth (pardon the expression) a third theory about UFOs. This revealing law has to do with UFOs being multi-dimensional!

Some even believe that in the days of the Pharaohs in Egypt, their tombs were actually alien entrances to another dimension!

ist" or religious philosopher's cosmology. Today we are much more sophisticated and prefer labels like "Cosmic" Transcendental, Occult or "Transpersonal." We seem to feel that we must relegate the perceptive wisdom of the ancients and spiritual giants to superstition or myth while we quickly bring their ideas through "the back door" of science, doctor them up with more complicated titles and feel that we are geniuses. Keep in mind that there are three (rather than two) sides to some arguments.

Although the scientific mind might prefer other dimensions, the occultist superphysical and the religionist supernatural. I feel they are all describing the same thing — seen from different points in perspective (or awareness if you prefer). For simplicity's sake, I shall call it the "Multi-Level Reality" (not just alternate reality) theorem. Although I have used it to explain UFOs, it helps explain a lot of "unknown" phenomena. Supporters of the belief claim that we have not yet, for the most part, reached the stage of evolution where we can completely intellectually understand such things as the fourth dimension. It expands far beyond the borders of the physical senses — and yet does not exclude them.

It would be utter frustration to mention supporters of the above, both past and present. But one should remember that they come not just from the reanks of religious theologians and mystics, but also from among our major philosophers, occultists and scientific visionaries. We could, of course, drop a few names that carry weight in both religious and scientific circles. Men who realize that pure religion and science are actually like brothers, who are approaching the same mountain peak (enlightenment) from opposite sides. A brief sampling might include names like Swedenborg, Ouspensky, Gurdjieff, Rudolph Steiner, Pierre Teilhard de Chardin and so forth, but the point is that the spiritual or fourth-dimensional view is just as valid as any other. To believe in other dimensions, both higher and lower, is not "naive" and "fully unsatisfactory" as Jerome Clark says.

As pointed out by the master-teachers in nearly all major religions, the inner, psychic realm described by Clark and Keel can indeed be tenuous and "tricky." Its borders also extend to that strange territory called the "astral" by occultists. But they have also told us that we must get above the illusive, reflective appearances to a more pure Cosmic Reality — one that can penetrate all things, yet stands above them, as in the idea of a "fourth dimension." This is what we might call ascending the evolutionary spiral or "raising the vibes" because it carries with it the belief that life in a broad sense is progressive (despite appearances on the physical plane.) A supersensible world exists, only a few steps beyond our own reality perhaps, but it seems to evade our normal third dimensional perspective most of the time.

Ouspensky, in Tertium Organum, explains that the fourth dimension is not simply "time" but goes much deeper than that. He illustrates with the example of a man picturing himself as a card table. When someone puts ten fingers on his surface, those ten circles are the limit of his (the table's) dimensional experience.

Similarly, we look at the world with our limited physical senses and intellect (brains) and boast that the few circles we see are total reality. In the meantime, it is just as easy to get hung up in that territory "somewhere between mind and matter," as Mr. Clark says, which projects back to us reflections from both the negative and positive side of our mind. Thus, many who have come this far in their search may run into "bad trips" and monstrous thoughtforms which may be a stark revelation of the dark side of their own unconscious. They become discouraged, or perhaps even cynical, because they often refuse to believe in a spiritual state beyond this illusive, confusing one they have encountered. At this point, basic metaphysics must not be shoved under the rug. I can vouch for this because of my own experience with the pattern of wierd psychic phenomena that have dogged many a UFO researcher or experimenting occultist (the poltergeist manifestations are one example).

However, like my teachers, I feel that the psychic sphere is not simply a mirror where our own thoughtforms are reflected, but also a sphere where elemental forms of life (fairies, etc.) do also exist. For this reason, I think that Keel is right in assuming that contactees often preach a "gospel" centering around their own fantasies or religious tendencies.

Nevertheless. I refuse to be dogmatic to the point of saying they are all liars, dupes or simpletons! Some of them may have actually contacted a form of life superior to man. what authority have we to make a blanket denial of all reports — especially those with a "universal" or "cosmic" ring that sound like ancient cosmologies clothed in modern terminology or some kind of super-religion?

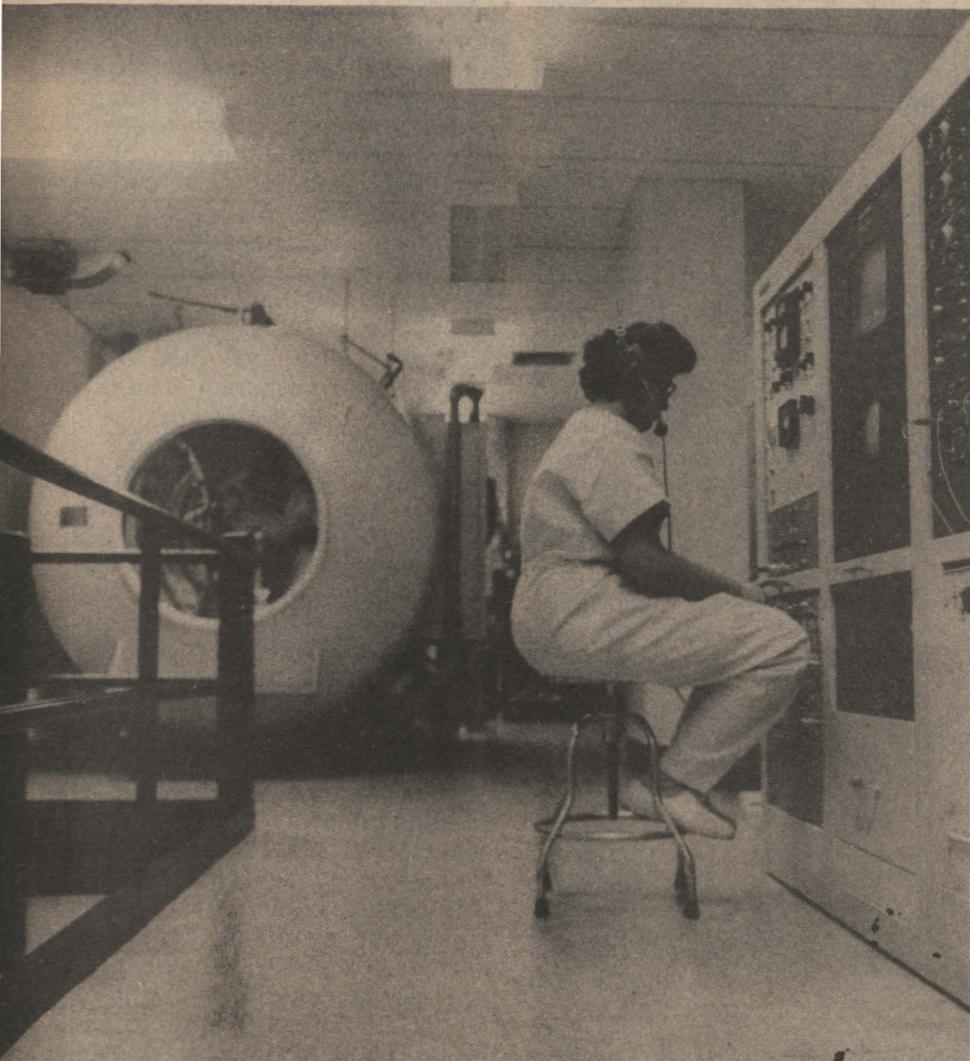

One modern spiritual authority, who I think of as a "scientific mystic," Paul Twitchell, touches upon the fallacy of numerous UFO messages in a work The Tiger's Fang, describing his quest for higher consciousness. His "master" and guide tells him that much of the "messages" propagated by UFOs are "psychic junk." However, is is quick to point out that there are superior beings well-versed in knowledge of occult and physical science who "need mechanical vehicles to move about the universe" although the most highly spiritual don't.

Scientists are establishing special experimental teams like this one to try and journey to other dimensions.

Could it be possible that UFOs like the one pictured here, are really machines from some other dimension of time and space?

This researcher is checking out UFOs and the third dimension theory computer results of an analysis of at a special UFO secret center.

There are authentic cases of flying saucers and space people," says the Tibetan master, "but now that it has become a fad among the homo sapiens, some of the astral entities have seized upon it to be a part of the pranks they play on man's mechanical brain....

"If the receiver is at all psychic, the entity can put on a real show by assuming the strange garb of some weird, exotic costume and appearing before a victim to jibber a wild message. The entity might also conjure up a space ship, and by illusion, put the victim inside for a "trip." He indicates that the victim might even think he is seeing sights from another planet, but that all such phenomena are...illusions created by a powerful entity for a joke on some poor human.

"This very same entity is likely to go back to his old astral haunts, gather up his friends, and put on a roaring party in which he describes his adventures with humans."

My conclusion, after combing over literally thousands of books on occultism, philosophy, mysticism and UFOlogy is that the great mystery of life extends both universally and inwardly in directions

we don't see under normal circumstances. But these dimensions constantly interact with our own, whether we realize it by obvious means or not. This, I arrived at the "Multi-level" or dimensional view. What we are encountering is either three different (alternate) dimensional/life fields or three aspects of a single, unified reality. For simplicity, let us divide the UFO enigma into three basic preferences:

1. The mental-psychic interpretation (which includes 'astral'). This is Clark and Keel's "Inter-(actually 'inner') dimensional" sphere. It should not be confused with the "Cosmic" or ultra-atomic proposition but deals with more elemental (sub-atomic) planes of life. One could certainly call it a world of non-ordinary reality.

2. The extraterrestrial/technical interpretation of Von Daniken supporters. this theory is supported by those who feel that UFOs are probably piloted by humanoids and/or beings similar to humans but with superior technology and brain power (and all that goes with it). They also provide good mathematical and chemical data to stress the probability that there are other inhabited planets. We cannot entirely dismiss this view either, since earth could have been visited by superior races at least once or twice in its long history.

3. The "Macrocosmic"/higher-dimension view presented here. Without this transpersonal view, it is difficult to fit the others into a sensible cosmological blueprint of total reality. As in the Microcosmos (man) this spiritual (soul or superconscious) nature stands above the conscious and subconscious, so in the larger "living Cosmos" we would logically find ascending habitations of life and consciousness. Understandably it might be called the "region of the gods" and always be symbolically associated with high places. Lower vibratory realms would naturally be inhabited by a type of elemental less-evolved, "sub-human" race (Monstrous denizens like Yeti?)

As stated earlier, the Cosmic Conception is certainly not new. It may have originally been inherited from some pre-diluvian culture; but its commonality among race beliefs, liked to the past, doesn't automatically disqualify it. We find traces of it in Hindu cosmology.

Esoteric Buddhism, Tibetan Yoga, Jewish Mysticism and Egyptian/Hermetic teachings, It also forms the basis of the occult "secret doctrines." When approached with an open mind, it is not at odds with theories of scientific geniuses such as Einstein. Nor is it at odds with the meta-physics of a few of the so-called "contactees." Why should it seem so abnormal for some people to see though the thin borderline between physics and metaphysics?

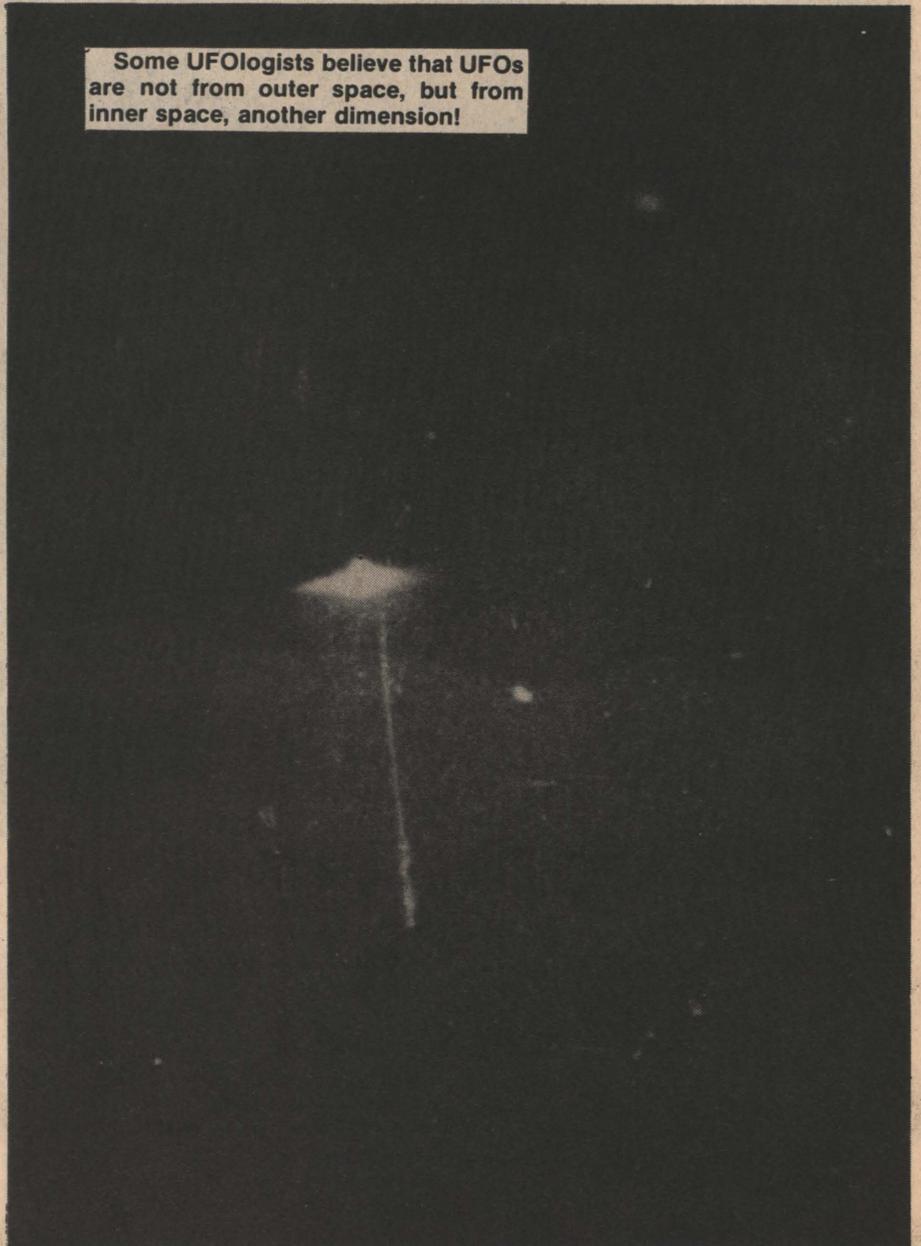

I believe that the "wheels within wheels" of Ezekiel, the awesome "pillar of the Lord" from Biblical tradition and other such "things" as mentioned in this article's beginning are not necessarily one and the same phenomenon as UFOs. These have, I feel, been reinterpreted to fit the popular UFO conception. Some writers seem almost apologetic when they encounter hints of the supra-normal in sacred books or related mythologies. If it is true that we can often only understand the inner world through dreams and symbolism, why wouldn't it be just as essential to fit the vast world beyond time, space and matter as we know it — and its interaction of titanic cosmic forces — into a more digestible, symbolic context? We call it mythology! True, some myth and legend may have become embroidered by the bias of varied civilizations as time passed — but amazingly enough most of the basic essentials have been retained.

If we accuse the ancients of exaggerating in one direction, we moderns must be careful not to exaggerate in another. The materialist refuses to accept accounts of god-life beings in sacred literature; therefore he tells us that the 'gods' of old were nothing more than "astronauts" This signifies that he is trying to squeeze Cosmic beings into the present technological and earth-centered human reference frame. This can also lead to extremes: gods who bounce around in rocket belts, drop atomic bombs, talk over radios something like souped-up CB units, and glide airplanes onto ancient airport landing strips! (Some author with a good sense of humor once pointed out that such theorists would have the biblical angels who carried "flaming swords" be re-interpreted as astronauts carrying glowing sophisticated soldering irons around!).

I definitely sense that there must be some Universal Mind or overall guiding intelligence that keeps order in the universe and motivates life. However, I won't go to extremes and call such a principle a "Cosmic computer" as some have. I disagree completely with Keel's more pessimistic view, that the same Intelligence (from what he calls the 'superspectrum') who sends apparitions of angels, sends visions of devils to taunt and manipulate us. Rather, the shining spheres, wheels within wheels and portable "thrones" of the gods — the eye of Horus/Odin and so forth — to me represent higher spiritual and creative forces as they project into our third dimensional awareness. Like the apex on the Kabbalists' Tree of Life, these brilliant regions are so far beyond our comprehension that we cannot even name them, much less understand them. It has been said that to stand in the presence of such spiritual power (unless prepared would "When the object reaches a certain rate of vibration, its molecules resolve themselves into the original elements or atoms."

Finally, after further changes, "the object may be said to be composed of the Ethereal substance." An even higher rate of vibration (where science leaves off and the Hermetists begin) would cause the "object" to cease being an "object" ... "if the vibrations be continually increased the object would mount up the successive states of manifestation (dimensions?) and would in turn manifest the various mental stages, and then on Spiritward until it would finally re-enter THE ALL...."

Or you may prefer Brad Steiger's less metaphysical description, associated with the strange disappearances of some people into this other reality frame:

"Since matter is made up of invisible particles, which science has named protons, electrons and so forth, and since the particles make up all matter which is visible depending upon the vibratory rate that is maintained, might it not be possible to raise the vibration rate of the human body so that it disappears?

"A man could be innocently walking home from work and find himself suddenly drawn into such an (electromagnetic energy) pocket. The electrons and protons and the other invisible particles which make up his clothing are vibrating at one rate, his flesh, another, his briefcase another, and so on. then, suddenly, the vibration rates of all of these substances become raised to the point where, from the standpoint of men and women vibrating at the conventional speed, at least, the victim simply disappears." (A man of the past might fear that such a person was taken by the devil or else caught up into heaven. We would probably think we were hallucinating, or perhaps blame it on a UFO kidnapping!).

Like it or not, we are collectively heading in the direction of the "Cosmic Conception" — a view point much wider in scope than the ones we have been conditioned to accept. If we are to preserve the human race and explore the stars, this is the direction we must take! When the full significance of the Multi-Level totality of life is realized.

We should still be able to stand in awe, just as many as our ancestors did when they looked up into the heavens and realized some super-intelligence was surely behind it all. We will then realize the futility of attaching labels to everything — and like the Chinese Taoist, Western Mystic, or Zen Buddhist, we may learn to work in harmony with the multi-dimensional Cosmos and blend with its dynamic flow. ●

An air traffic controller offers us this first person account of how he supposedly saved earth from an invader from space. He claims the alien wanted to colonize earth if he found it had a sandy surface. We tend to believe this account, since several witnesses reported seeing a UFO over the area at the time. But you can make up your own mind.

UFO SAND SCARE:

EARTH SAVED

By Bruce B. Howard

• It was a beautiful day—sunny and warm, but not hot. I decided to take a drive to the beach, figuring

I'd lay around in the sun. After all, I had earned the right. My job as an air traffic controller is one of the most mentally taxing of any occupation known to man. In order to relax, I dabble as a freelance writer. I've always considered writing a means of escape. I enjoy writing fiction, yet what was about to happen to me was wilder and more unbelievable than anything I could ever have dreamed up.

As I got in my yellow 1978 Datsun, I began thinking of what a peaceful day was ahead of me. Little could I know that it would be far from peaceful. The drive was short, about 20 minutes in length. When I finally arrived at the beach, I immediately found a spot where I could dig my feet into and unwind. Bare chested, I laid down in the sand, watching the waves bob and weave. I also happened to throw a quick glance or three at the bikini-clad girls as they walked by. But I must have been more tired than I imagined. I found myself drifting off into silent slumber. When I awoke, I knew how Rip Van Winkle must have felt. You see, I had slept all day and when my eyes next opened it was pitch dark outside.

I was the only one left on the beach. I couldn't believe how the day had wasted away. It was also getting chilly out. The cool ocean air had replaced the heat of the day. I hurriedly put on my shirt. I was just about to get up and make my way to my car when I heard the most eerie sound I had ever heard. It sounded like a giant balloon bursting repeatedly.

Naturally, I looked all around me to see what made that horrible noise. I could discern nothing. But then, as if a premonition tugged at my thought center, I looked skyward. I was about to behold the most astonishing sight of my 32-year-old life! I almost crumpled into a ragged mass of babbling ineptitude when I first saw the astounding sight.

Hovering about 5000 feet above the ground, was this immense flying object, giving off a purple haze, with buzzing orange-colored lights and black antennae jutting out in many directions. Coupled with that ear-rattling noise, it was the scariest sight I had ever seen.

I was literally frozen with fear. And when I finally regained my senses enough to make a run to safety—I couldn't. Something was holding me back, and this time it wasn't my own fright. The object was emitting a beam of light which was paralyzing me. I knew I was in for big trouble!

The flying object began its descent. It was coming in for a landing right on the now-desolate beach. The sand quivered from the thrust of the oncoming spacecraft

(at least, I assumed it was from outer space). With a thundering boom, and a burst of multi-colored light, the gigantic object landed—right in front of me!

I didn't know whether to scream or drop dead on the spot. There it was, this awesome object, a few feet in front of me. The next few moments might very well be my last on earth, or at least that was all I could think as I awaited the next move from my antagonists. I was still paralyzed. Then, suddenly, and without warning, a small hatch opened from underneath the craft. I wouldn't dare hazard a guess as to what would happen next.

Well, my worst fears were more than realized when I watched steps descend from the object. And sure enough, it wasn't long before I saw the emergence of two pencil-thin legs. I then knew what it felt like to be absolutely scared out of one's wits! Then, the entire body of the creature came into view.

As I began to get a closeup view of the creature, I began trembling uncontrollably. It was something out of a Hitchcock movie or one of those nightmares you have after seeing a bad horror movie. The creature walked down the stairs and onto the sandy surface of the beach. It was about five-feet tall, gray-orange in color, very skinny, with human-like arms and legs.

The alien gave the earthling this photo, saying it was the planet he comes from.

The weird looking part of the creature was its head. It was huge — like an oversized fishbowl! There were three antennae sticking out from the top of its head, and it didn't have any ears. What I made out to be a nose was in the shape of a little bump. Its mouth, if you could call it that, was a crooked zigzag which looked as if it was carved in. I couldn't see any teeth.

The creature looked me straight in my bulging eyes. And without uttering a word, somehow he managed to communicate with me. It must have been mental telepathy. I knew exactly what he was thinking. The creature invaded my mind and told me, "Earthling, I am from the planet Admoty in the seventh galaxy of the Zet star system. I have come here to determine what the surface of the earth is like. You see, my people need another planet to colonize. I was sent to see if earth's surface was sandy enough to house my people. We need land which has a high sand content because we are composed of material which requires us to walk on land with a sandy footing. I spotted this area and thought it was perfect. When I saw you, I knew I had found someone who would be able to tell me all the information I needed to know."

Whew! I realized I was in the greatest predicament of my life. Here was this being from another galaxy who was ready to colonize earth if I told him what he wanted to know. Somehow, I had to think of a way to make him change his mind about earth. The fate of the whole human race was in my hands!

I spoke up, hesitatingly but firmly, asserting, "Listen, you are making a big mistake if you decide to take over earth. This is only a beach. That's why it's sandy. In fact, this is the only mass of land of its kind on the entire planet. We have only one beach and this is it. Otherwise, our surface is comprised of hard concrete. It is awful. Even Earthlings find it horrible to live on. Also, our planet is on the verge of extinction. We are a people constantly at war with one another. Our planet is in a shambles and definitely not worth bothering with!"

I waited breathlessly for the creature to answer me. He stood stoically, as if he was computing all the facts at his disposal. Without warning, I heard his words in my brain again, beckoning, "Earthling, I don't know why but I believe you. You look far from happy. This planet seems to have a sadness about it which is in evidence from its very atmosphere down to its soil. I don't think my people would be able to live here!"

An inspector examines a torn-up portion of the beach where the UFO landed.

I couldn't believe it! I had done it. Little old me, a lousy $20,000 a year air traffic controller, had saved the human race! Sure, no one would believe it, but I didn't care. As long as I knew what I had done, that was enough for me! But little could I suspect that my ordeal wasn't over yet.

The creature once again relayed his thoughts to me. I heard, "Before I leave your planet, I will take some samples of the sand with me. That way, our scientists will be able to examine it more closely."

I really didn't want him to do that since they might like what they saw and decide to invade earth again. Once again, it was up to me to think up something. Quickly summoning all my courage and cunning, I responded, "That wouldn't be a smart thing to do. Our sand is specially formulated so that only humans can touch it. I know this because I am a scientist and I helped to design the sand on this special beach. If you don't believe me, then try picking up some of the sand. You will be very sorry that you did. In fact, you probably won't even make it back to Admoty alive! If you think I'm kidding, go ahead and pick up the sand. Otherwise, I suggest you go back home emptyhanded."

Well, at those words, the creature looked stunned. His hesitation was completely visible. It was as if he was debating with himself whether to believe me or not. Finally, after what seemed like an eternity, the creature spoke — if you could call it that. His words stated, "Earthling, once again, I am forced to believe you. It seems as if I have little choice. My people are counting on me to return. I cannot take the chance of failing. I will trust you. I shall now return to Admoty. We shall have to find another planet to colonize. I feel that all of what you told me isn't true, but I have made my decision. Farewell, Earthling.

With that, he got back into his spacecraft. Before I could blink an eye, there was an enormous cloud of orange smoke and the object lifted off, disappearing out of sight at incredible speed! It was gone — for good, I hoped.

My ordeal was over. The human race was saved! I had to pinch myself about a thousand times to see if it was all a dream. It wasn't. Driving home that night, I reflected over what had happened. The more I thought about it, the more ridiculous it seemed. Yet I know it happened. I decided it was best not to tell anyone, for I would be branded a lunatic. I have come forward now because it is my belief that everyone should know about the alien presence in our midst. My story is true, I know that, whether anyone else believes it or not. The next time I pick up some strange blip on my radar, I won't laugh it off as some atmospheric oddity. I'll know better! Mankind came close to being colonized by beings from another planet — next time someone less quick thinking might be confronted. Think about it!

ARE UFOs INFILTRATING

■ A special study of close-range UFO sightings suggests that the supposed extraterrestrial pilots may be interested in manufacturing areas, military installations and electric power stations in the United States. These conclusions are highly tentative since the mapping project that led to them is incomplete and continuing. However, they may indicate some important lines of investigation if the patterns hold up and are borne out by parallel studies in other countries.

Several years ago I began plotting sightings against various geological and geographical features on a large U.S. map and found some promising patterns, especially a seeming association with nuclear facilities. The scale of the map was such that I could not judge the significance of the map plots, however, and the project was temporarily abandoned due to the press of other affairs. When I resumed in 1975, my original data were lost or misplaced (except for the map). Having learned something from the first effort, this time I set up a more careful and possibly meaningful study. What test could I make to determine possible correlations between UFO sightings and strategic factors?

I defined "strategic" as consisting of three basic components: (1) military facilities, including rocket and missile bases; (2) electric power generating stations, especially atomic; and (3) important fuels and minerals such as petroleum, coal, uranium, metallic ores, etc. After a great deal of library research, these were plotted in two ways on a U.S. map: generally (regions rich in oil or uranium ore) and specifically (particular sites). When the strategic map was heavily dotted with sites that I could initially extract from reference books, I began plotting UFO sightings on an overlay map for easy comparison.

My definition of close-range

For some time now, the Air Force has been keeping under wraps the fact that UFOs are often seen over United States military installations. But the secret is now out. What can be done to protect our nation's security against aliens?

A general warns his men about the threat of UFOs visiting military bases.

OUR MILITARY BASES?

sightings included three basic types: (1) occupant cases, (2) physical and physiological effect cases, and (3) other "close encounters" (typically landings, near-landings and close approaches to cars and aircraft). The rationale was that if there is any geographic significance in the sighting locations (there may be none), it should become more apparent by screening out "fly-by" cases and having the map plots represent the closest interactions with human beings. These cases, if any, might demonstrate "interest" in selected human activities, resources or facilities.

For UFO data I drew on Ted

Bloecher's unpublished preliminary catalogue of occupant cases (scheduled for publication by the Center for UFO Studies), the catalogue of "Physical Traces Associated with UFO Sightings" (compiled by Ted Phillips and published by the Center), and NICAP publications for the period under study. The final sample consisted of 379 cases for the 21 years from 1947 through 1967. Thirty-four percent of these occurred in five states: California, Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania and Texas; 65% occurred in the 15 states listed in Figure 1.

I had done a study of the frequency of sightings by state.

This included 575 sightings of all types, selected primarily on the basis of witness credibility and after screening out the most common conventional explanations. The five states with most sightings, in order of frequency, were California, Ohio, New Mexico, Florida and Illinois, all five among the top 10 states in the present study.

My first attempt to plot close-range cases on the overlay map resulted in the noticeable concentrations. The dots were clustered in the northeast (particularly New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois); Baltimore to Newport News in Maryland, D.C. and Virginia; Florida; New Mexico and Texas; northern and southern California; Washington and Oregon. Very few plots, comparatively, were in the Great Plains and Rocky Mountain regions or in the Cotton Belt states of Arkansas, Tennessee, Mississippi and Alabama. The task now become one of trying to determine whether these concentrations correlated closely with any of the strategic features.

At first glance there were overlaps with the "principal petro-liferous provinces" (major oil and gas fields), but there were other major oil fields where few sightings were plotted. It remained to be seen how closely sightings would match with strategic features when plotted on state maps.

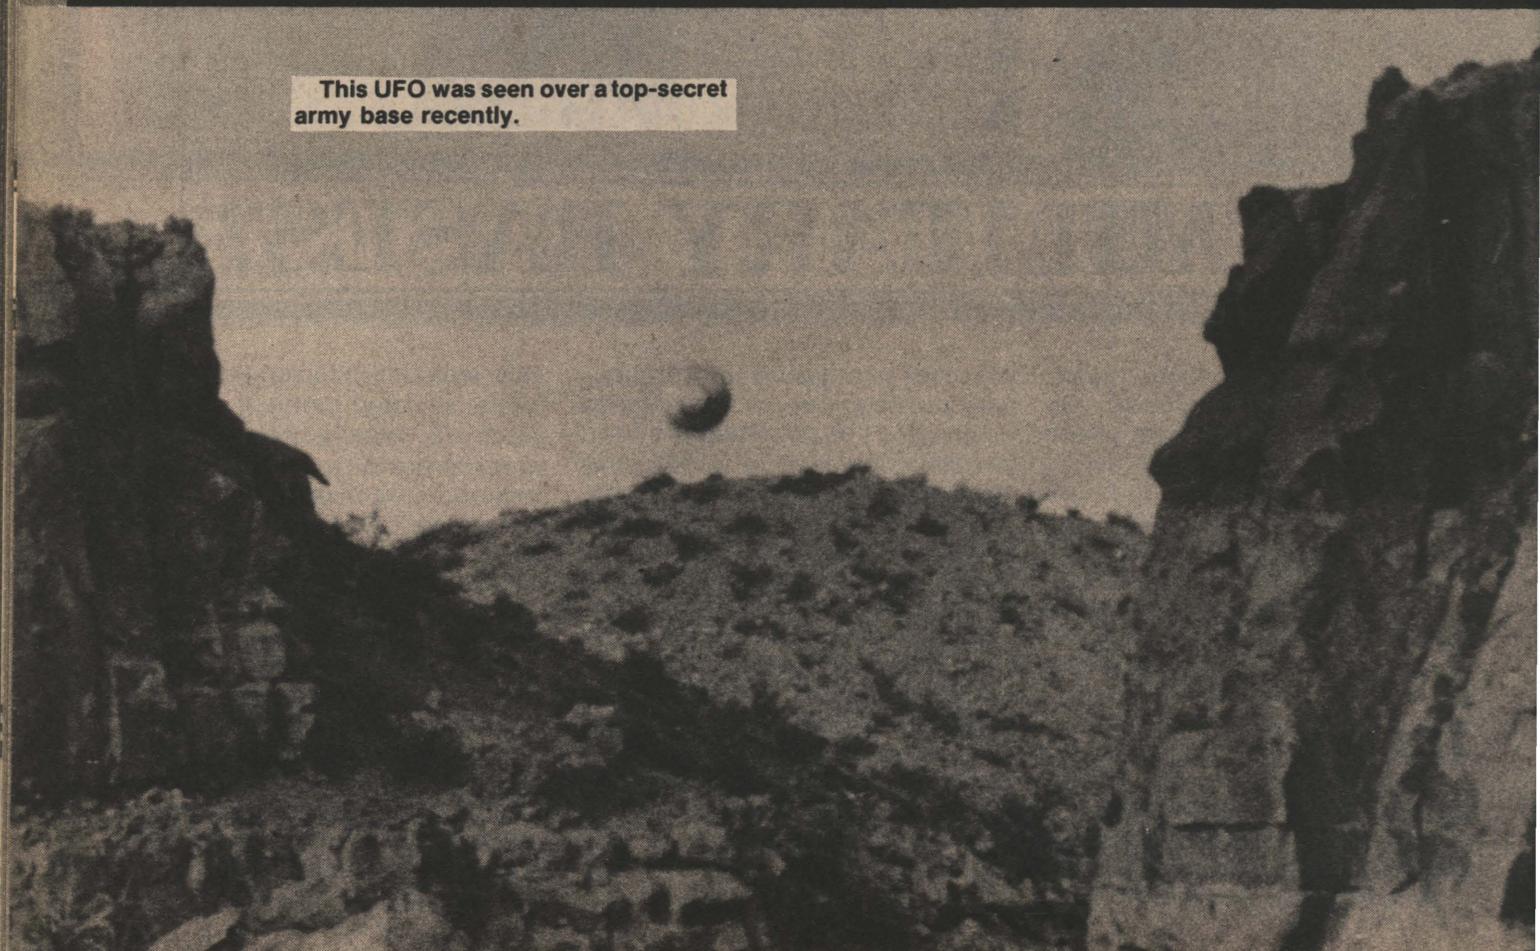

As I began a more intensive study of the top 10 states, an unexpected positive correlation stared me in the face from the pages of a geography book. There was a chapter and a map defining "The American Manufacturing Region," which encompassed five of the 10 states in question, and virtually all of the northeast concentrations showing on the overlay map. The region contains approximately 63% of all factory production in the U.S. It then occurred to me that Missouri, ranking ninth in sighting plots, was adjacent to the western edge of the manufacturing region, so I looked up the state in my encyclopedia. The following sentence caught my eye: "Of states west of the Mississippi, Missouri ranks third in manufacturing, after California and Texas." Since this brought eight of the 10 states into a common bond, I was very excited by the discovery. Only Florida and New Mexico were excluded.

This seemed too good to be true, so I began questioning my logic and looking for flaws in the pattern. What about other states east of the Mississippi? Referring to a reference book for manufacturing statistics, I found that North Carolina, Georgia and Tennessee all were comparable to Missouri in manufacturing prowess. Still, these closely grouped states collectively had about 14 sighting plots (especially Georgia), so this did not strongly contradict the pattern. I also noted that Missouri's leading manufactured products included aircraft, missiles and chemicals — all strategically significant by almost any definition.

State Strategic Survey

What else was important and possibly common to the 10 states? To find out, I thoroughly researched the status of each state in production of fuels, minerals and metals. The common bonds of the 10 states include high rank in manufacturing (eight of 10 states), electrical energy production (eight of 10 states) and military defense contracts (seven of 10 states), with gasoline refinery production next in importance (six of 10 states). On the other hand, there is a strong negative correlation with many important metals, since the states indicated showed few if any sighting plots, yet rank among the top five in such products as copper, lead and silver.

While these associations are interesting, in the final analysis the test of significant correlations with strategic factors depends on specific (rather than general) proximity. A state may be rich in minerals, for example, but the sighting plots may not correlate with the mineral sites. Therefore, I plotted state maps for the key states and looked for "hits" (plots at or near strategic sites) and local concentrations whose geography could be studied further. The 10 top states are discussed in turn.

California

Concentrations around the San Francisco Bay area interspersed with military installations, and Los Angeles, also close to military installations. Only a few scattered sightings not in this pattern.

Ohio

Large cluster immediately around Cincinnati (12 of these during a 1955 flurry, including many occupant cases); grouping in Dayton-Springfield-Columbus area; 11 of 34 plots in northeast Cleveland-Akron-Youngstown area. Cincinnati: over 1,800 industrial plants including chemicals, jet engines, electric motors, sheet metal and a major coal-shipping center. Dayton: industrial, communication and distributing center; leading center of aviation research including Wright-Patterson AFB. Springfield: over 200 manufacturing plants. Columbus: about 900 manufacturing plants, including aerospace equipment, auto parts, electronics; a large military depot and Lockbourne AFB. Cleveland: known for heavy industry, steel and aluminum products, electronics, airplane parts, industrial research; major chemical and plastics industries nearby. Akron: noted for rubber industry; also metal parts, military aircraft chemicals, sulfur refining. Youngstown: fourth-ranking steel producing district in the U.S.; also aluminum, plastic and coal-tar products; aircraft and auto parts.

New York

Small concentrations around Ithaca and Schenectady-Albany; remaining 13 of 20 plots scattered. Ithaca: not much industry; lumber, salt and gypsum; dairy and poultry farms. Schenectady: tanks locomotives, gas turbines, electronic equipment, AEC nuclear research. Albany: chemicals, steel, foundry products. Schenectady Army Depot, and Watervliet Arsenal, near Albany. A 1954 occupant sighting at Peekskill, site of rich uranium ore and an atomic power facility. A 1955 occupant sighting at Plattsburgh, home of Plattsburgh AFB. Three other plots near Buffalo and Rochester, both with atomic power facilities. About seven (out of 20) isolated plots do not fit any apparent pattern.

Pennsylvania

Concentration around Pittsburgh (Allegheny County) and two adjacent counties of Beaver and Butler. Heavy-industry area, plus at least two atomic power facilities. Four plots in four contiguous counties in southeast, two near military facilities. Four plots grouped in Philadelphia and adjacent Montgomery County. Five scattered plots with no apparent strategic associations.

Texas

Five of 17 plots concentrated in Houston-Galveston area, which includes Manned Spaceflight Center, military bases, oil and sulfur refineries. Other plots scattered, but in all except five instances closely associated with military bases. Two in Bexar County (San Antonio) are among five major military bases; two at Amarillo are in a major helium-producing area and near Amarillo AFB.

Illinois

Concentration of seven out of 15 plots around Chicago; five in southern part of state; two in east central; one in northwest. Chicago area contains at least three atomic facilities (including Argonne National Laboratory) and several military bases. No known strategic associations for remaining plots, except one in Saint Clair County adjacent to county containing Scott AFB and Granite City Army Depot.

New Mexico

Strong concentration of four sightings at, and three near, White

Sands Proving Grounds (seven out of 15); other plots scattered, one near Los Alamos, one at Albuquerque (Kirtland AFB and Sandia Base), and one at Hobbs (major oil fields). Remaining five plots not associated with any known strategic sites.

Indiana

Five plots associated with military facilities; eight others have no apparent strategic associations.

Missouri

Five plots (out of 12) in central and west part of state; Whiteman AFB (missile base in Johnson County, "missile base) in Johnson County, "missiles dispersed over wide area of west-central Missouri" (Catalogue of Air Force Bases, 1965). One plot each at Kansas City and St. Louis (major manufacturing areas). Remaining five plots widely scattered, with no known strategic associations.

Florida

No concentrations. One plot at Eglin AFB; two at Miami strip

WHAT IS THE RESULT... A NEW RACE OF HUMANOIDS?

DOCUMENTED CASES

● A Canadian woman is found wandering nude in a park and claims she was abducted by space beings and taken to the back of the moon where she was "implanted with outer-space semen."

● Mrs. V., from Somerset, England, finds herself on an examination table. Robots stand nearby as a humanoid entity drains blood from her arm into a plastic bottle. Colored cubes seem to monitor her vital functions. Before being returned to her stalled auto she has relations with one of the outer space beings.

● A New York woman awakens one night and finds an entity standing at her bedside. He is adorned in a navy blue uniform sashed with a gold belt. He wears short black boots with pants tucked inside. During the ceremony that takes place the woman feels a white fluid being passed into her

SECRET PLAN

First-hand investigation by the author of this book, noted UFOlogist Timothy Green Beckley, indicates that the UFO occupants have a secret plan of operation that they are carrying out — one that not only involves interbreeding between interplanetary species, but another, intimating that a much larger purpose is behind these cosmic implantations.

POWERS SO GREAT AS TO BE DENIED

Science refuses to accept the reality of UFOs because these objects do not fit in with the physical laws that they had adopted. This book will reveal many of the fantastic things that have happened to ordinary people from all walks of life, but are being hushed up not only by the academic community but by so-called serious UFO researchers who don't wish to acknowledge what really is going on. UFOs could either save or destroy the world — yet few will harken to that which is transpiring before our very eyes.

The ten chapters in STRANGE ENCOUNTERS will go a long way in explaining the mystery of the flying saucers.

PSYCHIC OR PHYSICAL?

Not all UFOs are physical, nuts-and-bolts craft. A San Diego woman tells in intimate detail of her unbelievable night of terror. It all began with a group of lights that formed themselves into earthly trucks and went on to include a dog-like creature with blazing red eyes; bizarre tinkerbell lights that touched them in the darkness; a "little boy" that materialized, and the weird beings who emerged from a landed space ship and walked across the highway carrying tube-like devices.

WE ARE NOT ALONE!

UFOS DIRECT MANY LIVES OFFER SUPERNATURAL GIFTS

In another documented case, Lorie Roberts tells what happened to her at the age of six, a bizarre experience that makes her believe she is "not one of us." More and more we cannot deny the evidence that Earthlings are being endowed with supernatural powers due to a special "link" with a race of unknown visitors from the stars.

FLYING DISCS & GLOWING HAIR

A Philadelphia man reports that on his daughter's birthday gleaming silver objects appear in the sky over their home traveling at great speed. As if to celebrate their appearance the little girl's hair will glow a peculiar color. Strange are their powers, indeed!

PHOTOGRAPHIC EVIDENCE

Amazing photos prove that at least one man is in direct contact with these beings. Sees objects so close up that it's impossible to deny they were made on another planet. Portholes and landing gear are clearly visible.

ALIENS ARE IN OUR MIDST

It's said they "walk among us" and a Pittsburgh musician has the frightening proof of this. Read of his incredible encounter with a "stranger" who always dressed in black, had peculiar features apparent in his anatomy and appears and vanishes at will much to the amazement and disbelief of those directly involved.

FACT NOT FICTION!

Every story in this volume is the absolute truth. You can't afford to miss out on this opportunity to take a spellbinding look at what's happening to an ever-increasing number of people.

The author sincerely feels that there will be increased activity in the number of contacts, encounters and physical abductions. He believes that YOU could be next. Only by reading about what has happened to others can you prepare yourself for the changes that will come about after you have been touched by this UNKNOWN FORCE.

Of the other top 15 states, Washington showed several associations.

Of the other top 15 states, Washington showed several associations with military bases and one plot at the Hanford AEC works. Virginia included many adjacent to Washington, D.C. and its many military facilities. North Dakota showed a tight cluster of five plots around Minot AFB, an important ICBM missile area.

Among the other "hits" involving occupants were four cases in California, one within a few miles of a Kaiser Steel plant, three near military bases; three in Florida, two near Cape Kennedy and one at Miami; several in major industrial areas of Illinois, Ohio and New York; and two at or near White Sands, New Mexico. From this small sample, UFO occupants would seem to have a military-industrial objective.

The government has built this secret weapon to repel UFOs over our military bases.

This is a secret army force trained to detect the presence of UFOs.

military factor was primary or secondary in six of the top 10 states; industry in five; power in three. The strongest correlations were in California, Ohio, Texas and New Mexico. The weakest were in Indiana and Florida. Correlations in the other four states were moderate in the direction of industry and power.

Summary and Interpretation

Plotting by states prompted in some striking "hits," but also many isolated cases which don't fit the hypothesis (unless I have missed some strategic sites, which is entirely possible). It would be foolish to try to draw any sweeping conclusions on the basis of this pilot study. The sample of UFO cases, I believe, is adequate and representative; but locating and plotting strategic sites is more difficult and undoubtedly far from complete.

Despite the positive correlation with "The American Manufacturing Region" in general and a number of highly industrialized cities in particular, the concept of "manufacturing" includes everything from bullets to butter. It would be far more meaningful if associations ultimately were found with specific strategic industries.

It may be that some mix of industry, military, power and minerals/metals holds the key. Of the top five states, all except Ohio are high in all four factors and Ohio is high in all but minerals/metals. It would be difficult to make a case that any other state is more "strategic," in general, than these five states which show the most close-range sightings. Only New Mexico, Florida and Colorado might compete in the military category alone, since they contain important military installations, but the first two of these already appear in the list of the top 10 sighting states.

One interesting result was a correlation with urban population centers. The question is commonly asked, Why are UFOs never seen around cities? In this study of exceptionally close-range sightings, map plots clustered around several major metropolitan areas: Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago, Houston, Cincinnati, Philadelphia and Baltimore-Washington. Not only do UFOs fly over cities, they also apparently land, debark occupants and cause physical effects in major urban areas.

The Rocky Mountain region, rich in oil, uranium ore and other metals and minerals, provided the most surprising (to me) negative correlation. Similarly, the oil and mineral-rich state of Oklahoma was barely represented. From this it would appear that drilling, mining and shipping of oil, metals and minerals per se do not particularly attract UFOs, whereas industrial applications of these materials apparently do, as do certain military facilities including rocket and missile bases. Could it be that the "interest" is not in the natural resources themselves, but instead in what man does with them? Sightings at White Sands, Cape Kennedy, Minot AFB, atomic research and power facilities also suggest this.

An intriguing case associating a UFO with an atomic power station was reported by the National Enquirer (July 8, 1975). On September 24, 1974, sheriffs patrolling near Brunswick, Maine, observed an elliptical UFO with body lights hovering over Wiscasset Nuclear Power Station. As they watched through binoculars, the UFO rose, ejected two smaller objects, then swept in an arc across the sky. The smaller objects then merged with the large UFO again, and it took off straight up at high speed.

A statistical study by computer probably would be more efficient and provide more definite conclusions one way or the other. The resources at my disposal are limited, and I would need hundreds of county maps of the key states and more local information on strategic sites than I can easily obtain to carry the mapping project much further. However, I intend to continue the study as far as I can. One obvious test would be to plot the close-range sightings from 1968 to date and see how they fit the patterns of earlier years.

As it now stands, I can only conclude that UFO occupants do seem to have some interest in strategic factors, at least a general interest. Whether it may be more specific than that and more intimately related to human military-political activities remains in the realm of speculation until further careful studies can be accomplished.

THE UFO-VIETNAM CONNECTION

Now, years after the actual event, it can be told! There's a great possibility that UFOs were connected with the Vietnam War. We've got all the startling facts for you!

The light of the moon reflects this UFO over Vietnam.

■ One clear night in 1967, I experienced my first, most vivid observation of a UFO. Locale was the West Pacific, on a U.S. Navy ship, heading for the coast of Vietnam. It was a favorable site and circumstances were excellent for the sighting.

Many days had passed since our crew left the states and the trip was nearing completion. Unfortunately, I didn't record the exact date nor discuss the incident much until my return to civilian status in June, 1970. However, I do remember that it was spring and I believe the month was May.

these soldiers claimed they were wounded by aliens, not Vietnamese.

It was past midnight and I was standing watch at a forward lookout deck on the ship's port side when the event transpired. Adjacent to me, personnel within the bridge overlooking the forward decks were busy with their usual almost mechanical routine. In the meantime I stunned the horizon for any faint sign of ships or aircraft.

Silence, broken only by an occasional refreshing breeze, the sound of waves or muted conversation from the superstructure enshrouded the ship. In front of me, cargo booms projected a dark silhouette against the cloudless night sky. Visibility was clear and the uninterrupted seascape made the stars stand out beautifully. Decks below appeared peaceful in spite of its ammunition which lay beneath them.

I can't really explain why I first glanced in the right direction, but it seemed almost automatic: A brilliant object appeared above the horizon, to my left, at an estimated 40-degree angle. It was moving rapidly from left to right across my field of vision. I double-checked my binoculars to make sure the image came in clear and checked carefully for details.

It gave off an intense white glow, was oval-shaped and much larger than any visible star. When I removed my binoculars, I discovered the UFO could also be easily seen with unaided eyes. At first I wondered if it could possibly be a new satellite, but abandoned that theory after discovering that: it was traveling too low; too fast; in a straight line; the shape was not that of conventional satellites or aircraft; the surface didn't seem reflective or metallic—the brilliant glow seemed self-generated.

Just as I turned toward the bridge to report my sighting, the officer in charge came out. Apparently he was already aware of the UFO because he immediately started looking in that direction. After a moment of silence — as we both observed the phenomenon — to my surprise, he made an off-the-cuff comment about another similar UFO incident he was involved in. He said he often wondered after that just “what in the world” the thing was.

Actually this was not the first UFO sighting made from our ship nor would it be the last (I was to discover later). Earlier in the cruise, after we had left the west coast and were nearing the Hawaiian Islands, a strange dome-shaped structure was discovered as we sailed past a small isolated island. Because it was sitting partially behind a hill with only the top half visible, I thought it was merely a building of some sort. However, the rest of the island looked desolate. There was nothing to indicate it was inhabited. I could not help but wonder why a domed building of such sophisticated design would be located in the middle of nowhere. A shipmate (watch break-in) who was with me at the time, thought he had the answer. He confided that he thought it was a “flying saucer.” I thought

Timothy Green Beckley, widely known as "Mr. UFO" has personally investigated hundreds of authentic UFO landings and contacts, and is keenly interested in the many beneficial aspects of communicating with the occupants of these technologically advanced craft that continue to come into our atmosphere on a daily basis.

DON'T BELIEVE THE LIES YOU ARE BEING TOLD

There has not been a decrease in the number of reports. Sightings continue to be made somewhere in the world every 24-hours. But there is an attempt being made to keep this vital information out of your hands!

His 15 years of researching the UFO phenomenon has convinced Tim Beckley that a lot can be learned by carefully studying the seemingly strange behavior patterns of these glowing objects that can out pace our fastest military jets and "disappear" in the twinkling of an eye.

Many of the best UFO related incidents have been kept from the public because the "powers that be" realize drastic changes will take place in society once we've "linked up" with the cosmos. Once open contact has been established, civilization as we know it will collapse and there will be a "New Age" on earth. All the contacts made by the "Space Brothers" with earthlings point to this startling conclusion.

Yes! The aliens have arrived, but before we can meet with them face-to-face certain changes will have to take place. Now, "Mr. UFO" invites you to help in the investigation of the greatest mystery of all time.

When you become a member of the UFO INVESTIGATORS LEAGUE for the next year you receive the following benefits:

These fighter missiles were buzzed by UFOs in Vietnam.

he was 'putting me on' naturally — even though I hadn't discussed the subject with him previously — so I laughed and went along with the joke.

But he was serious.

"You don't really believe that," I said, testing his reaction.

His answer was affirmative:

"My mom believes they're real too," he added. "She has seen them."

Later, shortly after the watch, what was described as an "explosion" occurred around the island. I heard the noise below, rushed to the top deck and noted most of the crew looking up at a faint yellowish mist in the air hovering over the island. This glowing mist lingered for a few minutes then dissipated. I also remember hearing a petty officer telling some of the men that it was probably just the coast guard practice-shelling the island or the navy testing explosives. If this were true, it created one of the strangest effects I have ever witnessed. Evidently the explosion wasn't a conventional one, otherwise the petty officer in charge wouldn't have admonished the men not to mention the incident.

My watch buddy now seemed more convinced of his "flying saucer" theory. But I wasn't too sure. I figured I had not been able to gather enough information on the matter to form any concrete conclusion. Nevertheless, in spite of my skepticism I had to admit the incident was rather wierd. If I could have returned to the bridge, obtained binoculars and seen if the dome-object had left the island, I might have evidence to back him up, but it was not possible at that time. I had other pressing duties.

Returning to the sighting mentioned in the beginning of this article, I shall continue my story and add some additional, vital facts:

I followed the glowing craft closely with the binoculars, my eyes literally glued to them. Then, shortly after reaching a point nearly in front of the ship's path of travel (but still above the horizon), it hovered awhile, changed to bright red, dull orange and slowly vanished — like a cloud of gas evaporating — until only a background of stars was left to see.

When I saw it would not reappear, my attention was captured by a commotion on the bridge. A group of officers had gathered around the ship's radar, all gazing rather intensely at the screen. After being relieved of my post for the night I tried to find out more about the radar sighting, (which was obviously the UFO). However, an air of mysterious silence suddenly dominated the place. Nobody seemed to want to talk. It was almost like the whole thing hadn't happened!

Before retiring that night I wondered if this was one more situation the military establishment would casually brush aside and the few people who observed it be reluctant to admit. In all probability, no one would even bother to record it, and if they did they would probably be muffled immediately.

To me, the most significant element in the incident was that prior to the UFO appearance I engaged in a kind of experiment. After witnessing the previous incident and my shipmate's sincere enthusiasm, I obtained a book on Flying Saucers by a prominent contactee, Harold Menger, and my off-duty time was spent reading it. At first I was neither a devoted believer or an inflexible disbeliever in UFOs. But the philosophical implications fascinated me, I must admit, more than cold speculations about technical makeup of extraterrestrial vehicles. If a superior race did exist it would certainly be interested in observing our world's major affairs (including wars, for example) and in contacting select humans occasionally. But still, I concluded it might be some natural phenomenon man did not yet know enough about to be sure. Nevertheless, I had become hooked on UFOs and have been researching them from all angles ever since. (Like many of my peers, I have also received by share of harassment in "outer circumstances" and in the psychic realm by the more sinister side of the UFO game.) Telepathy explanations cited by Mr. Menger seemed valid but also too simplistic. Nevertheless, being one who demands results from a method, I decided in a rather lighthearted way to put it to a test. Later, after further research, I learned that a significant percentage of UFO encounters and contacts included the use of mind to mind (telepathic) communication in one form or another.

My telepathic attempt was not overly-serious as indicated, but it was sincere. I tried to convey a strong feeling of the ideas expressed by my words as well as forming mental pictures when possible. I concentrated, but didn't strain. The telepathic message was also repeated several times. This attempted mental projection occurred about thirty or forty minutes before the actual sighting. (I don't deny the possibility of coincidence, but it seems to me more than a random chance thing.) In essence, I had asked the entities if they did exist and were observing our world, to verify it by making a visible appearance. I knew that if these highly-advanced beings were around, our ship's crew probably didn't meet their qualifications for the "jolt" that would ensue from direct encounter. So, considering the favorable weather conditions, I hoped for an overhead sighting.

I had nearly forgotten the whole thing until I spotted the UFO. In fact, it surprised me a great deal because I suppose I wasn't really expecting results from the experiment. When it appeared I only hoped it was a "friendly" rather than hostile influence. Even after the sighting my skeptical mind found the experience hard to accept. It did not fit into any of my orthodox notions about such subjects and made me uncomfortable. Naturally I had heard other people casually discussing sightings before from time to time, but didn't expect one myself. But I knew the UFO was definitely not an illusion.

From that time onward, our ship seemed "dogged" with odd phenomena. In a strange sort of way, I felt that we were being watched — if not watched over. At any rate, on our second cruise, another sighting occurred that I wasn't involved in, but which created quite a sensation among some of the crew. It happened just off the Vietnamese coast late one night. A deck seaman first spotted it while standing watch in the aft section of the ship. Crewmen in the radio shack had also been alerted to the incident and were observing it as I passed their area. The seaman excitedly described a craft "bobbing up and down"* (positioned higher than a ship's lights) and hovering above the water some few hundred yards behind us. He was most fascinated by the constant changing of brilliant colors by the object that appeared to be following the ship. The men were convinced it was not another ship.

Although I am aware that numerous UFO sightings and unusual incidents have happened at sea. I wondered if others had been made in the Vietnam area. I've now discovered that they had indeed! For instance, John A. Keel, veteran UFO researcher and authority wrote in his recent book, The Mothman Prophecies:

"Vietnam had a big UFO wave in 1968-69, which included an epidemic of phantom helicopters. On several occasions, the military forces on both sides fired at the objects without effect."

If I gained nothing else from the UFO experiences in Vietnam, I gained a measure of inspiration to help me over the rough spots. Even bad experiences such as Vietnam and other eternal conflicts of humankind, are temporarily forgotten on a quiet night, cruising smoothly along peaceful waters, when multitudes of stars are visible without distraction. When one looks up and weighs the intelligence of man against the probable intelligences elsewhere in the Cosmos, he may start to meditate more upon the vastness of life itself and his relation to it. Perhaps then, we are closer to "contact" with essential but subtle realities than we may think.

SECRET MISSION: UFO's ON RECONNAISSANCE

Are UFOs scouting earth for military purposes? Some experts think so. It's a subject which every human being should take an acute interest in. You might even say we're presenting this story to you as a public service!

This is the remains of a crashed fleet of UFOs as they zoomed over earth.

■ Many researchers, several national organizations and most of the Air Force originally ignored reports of UFO occupants. All were willing to seriously investigate high flying discs, but when discs were reported close to the ground, the investigators would close their notebooks. They were unwilling to listen to anyone who claimed to have seen a landed UFO, let alone anyone who said that he had seen the occupants.

Slowly this attitude has changed. Investigators realized that UFO's might be extraterrestrial and if that was true, then they would probably land sometime. If an UFO landed, then someone, at sometime would see the occupants. By claiming that UFO's were spacecraft, they were admitting that reports of occupants had to be accented. One followed logically from the other. Serious investigators began to study the reports and many turned out to be solid cases. As with all other aspects of the UFO phenomena, people from every walk of life, every educational level and from every background were making the reports.

At first, people reported seeing the occupants in the distance, inside the UFO or standing near it. They caught glimpses of humanoids through windows in the craft, moving in clear domes on discs or accidentally encountered creatures in remote forest areas or in deserted fields. A pattern, one that wasn't strictly followed but one that did provide a clue, began to develop. Of course, there are deviations in the pattern but it does suggest things about the reconnaissance of earth.

Most people are very reluctant to talk about their UFO experiences, especially if they saw occupants. Investigators have often reported that they have just uncovered a case that had remained hidden for a number of years. Recently another such case was revealed. It had been hidden since 1962 because the witnesses were afraid of ridicule. The changing attitude of some researchers and the general public convinced them that they should tell the story, but would only if their names were withheld.

A woman from Minnesota was on vacation with her daughter at a lake front resort area. They were relaxing one evening just after dark. The woman was combing the girl's hair when they noticed a strange light outside. They looked out the window and saw a glowing red UFO hovering about 50 feet from the cabin. The surrounding area was bathed in its eerie red light.

The disc shaped UFO had a dome on top with three windows that gave off a bright yellow light. Silhouetted behind the windows were three man-like beings. Both women felt that they were being watched. One reached for the light switch and as she turned off the cabin lights, the lights of the UFO went out.

When she switched off the lights, she felt an uncontrollable urge to run to the UFO. She dropped the combs, threw open the door and ran out. Her daughter screamed. The woman kept running toward the UFO. When she was half way to it, the UFO lifted silently. It stopped for a second, then shot straight up, disappearing in moments.

The woman stopped running as the UFO moved and after it disappeared, her daughter ran up. Both women stared, trying to see where the UFO had gone. They stood outside shaking. Finally they walked back to the cabin and spent several hours trying to calm down. When asked why she ran toward

Many theorize that UFOs come to earth because the solar system is dying out and they need a new home.

the UFO she said, "I don't know. I just felt that I had to."

For over 14 years they remained silent. The sighting was strange and they were afraid that people would laugh if they told about the UFO. "Part of it," said the daughter, "was that we were scared. We thought that talking about it would bring back the UFO."

There is no way to confirm the story. No other witnesses have been found and it is next to impossible to search for them.

Neither woman can remember the exact date of the sighting so it can't be cross-checked with other sources. It has to be accepted or rejected on the word of the women. By itself, most investigators would have to report it with caution. However, when it is coupled with other sightings, some of the facts as reported by the women are confirmed. The other sightings add weight to this report.

In January 1970, there was an UFO sighting in Canada that almost duplicated the Minnesota report. A nurse, Miss Kendall, was opening curtains at the Cowichan District Hospital. As she drew back one pair of curtains she saw a strange object hovering outside the window. For a few minutes she watched it and then called to the other nurses so that they could see the "flying saucer." All of them saw the disc shaped UFO and the lights that were flashing on it. They watched it circle five or six times and then take off, disappearing quickly.

None of the other nurses knew that Miss Kendall had seen the occupants of the craft. According to her, just after she first spotted the UFO, it tilted toward her. On top there was a transparent dome and inside there were two "very human looking creatures." They seemed to be facing some type of instrument panel and one of the occupants appeared to have a control stick. He moved it and the craft tilted more. Both creatures wore dark clothes and their faces were concealed by some type of helmet.

Just as the UFO levelled, Miss Kendall called the others. They arrived too late to see the creatures but they did see the disc. Miss Kendall said, "I had the impression that the disc was having mechanical trouble. The impression came from the UFO."

A nurse in Canada and a woman in Minnesota claim that they saw a domed disc and received mental impressions or thoughts from it. Even this is not a new phenomena but something that is reported in many cases. In fact, reports like this have become so numerous that APRO (Aerial Phenomena Research Organization, Tucson, Arizona) has included questions about it on their investigation forms. This is done in an attempt to find answers. For too long researchers would reject anything that they found hard to believe. Throwing out information on the basis of such an inobjective viewpoint only wastes effort. No one is going to find the answers if part of the information is rejected because it seems strange. Neither of these cases should be rejected because of claimed mental impressions from the UFO.

Each case tends to confirm the other. Both involved disc hovering near buildings. Both involved human like creatures and both women received mental impressions from the UFO's. Miss Kendall, in addition, had witnesses who confirmed her sighting. And there are other cases that seem to be related and therefore, tend to confirm the sighting. Miss Kendall reported that she had seen a disc with a clear dome on top. She is not the first to report something like that.

Nearly 11 years before the nurse saw the domed disc, several men in Sweden saw a similar object. On September 29, 1959, Gideon Johansson was on his way to a service job. As he went out the door, he bumped into his son. Suddenly they noticed that the entire city was black and that there was a bright light in the sky. At first they thought it was an airplane about to crash but immediately realized that it wasn't.

The object descended slowly, passed over a building and then buzzed along the tops of the trees. The boy turned to run but Johansson just stood in the doorway, watching the UFO. It drifted down the street, tilting from side to side. Through a clear dome, Johansson could see two human like occupants.

There was a bright, almost blinding light coming from the dome. The two occupants were lying back, in a "streamlined position. they seemed to be about five feet tall. "One of the guys was busy with something. The other looked at his companion, then at me. Due to the strong light, I could distinguish no other details," Johansson reported to the APRO Bulletin.

Johansson walked along a fence as the UFO drifted, following it, when suddenly its lights went out and the object vanished. As it took off, Johansson's pants flapped around his legs as if caught in a high wind. Inside the house, his wife said that the radio went dead. When the UFO was gone, all the lights in town came on. He believed that the whole incident lasted two minutes.

With the UFO gone, Johansson walked quickly to his factory but there was nothing wrong there. The power company said that they could find no reason for the power failure. After a while, a man arrived at the factory, found Johansson and asked him what had happened. "I saw the strangest thing on your street a little while ago." He talked about what he had seen, which checked with the facts observed by Johansson. He finished his story saying, "However, it must be me who got dizzy." He left with his hands on his head.

The next morning, another man, one of Johansson's neighbors, came to his door. He too wanted to know what had happened the night before. "I am asking," he said, "because I saw the strangest thing." They talked about the sighting and agreed that they would tell no one about it. They did not want to become the butts of jokes or to be ridiculed.

Johansson did mention the sighting to one other person a few days later. The electrical engineer for the area was trying to find the cause of the blackout and asked Johansson a few questions. He told about the UFO sighting but the engineer laughed it off. There was no more talk about the blackout, however.

Johansson, who saw the creatures, and his son and the neighbors, who saw only the UFO, were upset by the experience. They agreed they wouldn't mention it again to any outsiders and for 12 years they kept the agreement. Finally, Johansson wrote to a member of APRO to tell to the sighting. Like all good occupant cases, the men seem to be normal people who have had an unusual experience.

The clear domes on the Swedish object and the Cowichan UFO suggest something about the UFO's. These seem to be relatively short ranged craft and it seems that the domed discs are not used for interstellar travel. They are probably launched from the larger, cigar-shaped "mother ships." Many UFO sighters have reported that they saw a small, clear domed UFO come from a much larger craft. In 1973, APRO received information about "mining UFO's." It is important because the witnesses watched as a large, cigar-shaped UFO discharged several of the domed objects.

Buzz Montague wrote to APRO saying that he watched a series of landings in Idaho. He was about half a mile from the landing site and saw the UFO's through a 10power, riflemounted, scope. For 45 minutes he watched the UFO's coming from and going back to the larger "mother ship." Finally, after all the smaller craft had joined the larger one, it moved slowly out of sight.

The case is important because it ties the domed discs to a larger craft, one that could apparently stand the rigors of space travel. It, along with the other cases, suggests that the discs are used to study earth. the domes provide the maximum viewing area. The discs are seen quite close to the ground and usually close to some kind of inhabited area. It would seem that they are trying to discover just how the earth people live.

There is another indication that UFO's are stuning man. The first of these cases involved Barney and Betty Hill. they saw an UFO, they saw the occupants and they were taken on board. They weren't given a message from kind space brethern but were examined as we would examine a new species of plant or animal. when the examination was over, the Hills were left in their car. It is not an isolated case. Dozens of others have had similar experiences.

On September 2, 1971, Paolo Caetano Silveira was on his way home from Tombos, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, when he noticed a bright light. At first, it appeared in his rearview mirror like the lights of a car but it approached too fast. Silveira ducked as it shot by, climbed slowly and stopped. It hovered in front of the car for a moment and then began to pace it. For several minutes the UFO seemed to follow the car. In a small town, Silveira stopped at the police station to report the light. Although they weren't inclined to investigate and didn't care about strange lights, they did suggest that Silveira stay the night. He said that he was anxious to get home so he refused the offer. Not long after he left the police and the town, the light re-appeared. Silveira stopped his car to look. The UFO stopped in front of him and the deep bluish light turned brilliantly white. Two bright beams of light shot from the carft and the car doors sprung open.

The light beams played across the side of the car and focused on the driver's seat. They seemed to push at Silveira, forcing him from the car. He grabbed at the steering wheel in desperation but fell from the seat. Around him were three very small, humanoid objects that seemed to be mechanical. They floated around Silvdeira but didn't touch him. Suddenly his legs went numb and the beams of light dragged him to the larger, stationary light.

He tried to scream but there was no sound. He was surrounded by light, floating toward the UFO but he was trying to resist. There was no feeling in his legs and he couldn't tell if they moved when he tried to kick. He grabbed at the branches of bushes, rocks, clawed at the ground, tried everything he could think of to keep from moving toward the UFO. He could not control where he was going. He could not stop. As they neared the glowing UFO, Silveira tried to strike the tiny, mechanical men but his arms went suddenly numb. Panic began to spread through him. The more he tried to move, the less control he had and the greater the feeling of panic.

A door appeared in the side of the UFO and just under it, for some reason, Silveira began to relax. A feeling of calm replaced the panic. He was floated into brightly lit room. It was nearly empty except for three creatures of "ordinary height." All were dressed in blue "jump suits" with smooth, "Roman helmets" covering their heads. the hands and faces were grey, with no features visible.

The beings were communicating with each other and moved around Silveira. He could not understand what was being said. For a few moments he looked around the room but there was nothing to see. Light seemed to come from everywhere. The last thing he remembered was the whine of a turbine.

As Silveira awakened, he struck out and rolled to one side. He opened his eyes and saw his car a few feet away. Kneeling over him was Doctor Cirlas Coutinho Crespo. When fully conscious, he was taken to the hospital and his family doctor took over.

The doctors reported that Silveira was highly excited but there was no rise in his blood pressure. His face was red and his eyes were bloodshot. His arms and hands were covered with scratches and all his clothes were torn and dirty, apparently from being dragged across the ground. Since the incident, Silveira has complained about a loss of appetite and a stinging in his eyes.

The doctors reported that they examined Silveira within two hours of the experience. They could find no evidence that he had been drinking. Both were inclined to accept the story because of the way Silveira was found. the story told by Silveira is disjointed and "indicates that he was in a somnambulistic state." In other words, the creatures put him into a hypnotic trance. That is something that has been described in several cases, including that of Barney and Betty Hill and more recently, Dionisio Llanca.

Tests and investigations are continuing into the case of Silveira. Doctors have said that they are going to try to break through the post-hypnotic barrier in Silveira's mind. they hope that it will reveal information about the period that he was on the UFO.

The fact that Silveira was taken into the UFO supports the idea of a study of earth life. the UFO's were at first seen only as high flying discs, later they were reported over every major city and military bases like in the Swedish case. In the last several years they have been seen landing or hovering near buildings as in the Canadian and Minnesota cases. Lately, there are dozens of reports of people being dragged into the UFO's as Silveira claimed. It all suggests a pattern of ever increasing and closer contact it suggests that the UFO occupants want to know and learn all they can before they make an "official" contact with the earth. If the pattern continues, there should be landings in more populated areas. There should be more contact between members of UFO crews and people of earth and there should be more multiple witness contact cases. It is apparent that this is the way the UFO problem is going. In the next months there should be more UFO occupant cases. The trend has been set.

Separating Illusions

It's time to categorize the unknown. What could really be viewed as spacecraft from outer space and what as figments of one's imagination? Let's find out!

it very well yet. As a result, we allow assumptions about what extraterrestrials must be like and how they ought to behave to creep, unrecognized, into our reasoning. Yet, such questions cannot be answered without making unjustifiable assumptions about what their purpose is, whether they intend to

"Any sufficiently advanced technology would appear indistinguishable from magic."

—Arthur C. Clarke

■ Faced with a baffling array of UFO phenomena, a phantasmagoria of alien machines and lights and beings whose actions defy rational explanation, we have come to a turning point in UFO investigation. Apparently, we are dealing with either a science far superior to ours or with phantasms from unimaginable realms. Many UFOlogists, as well as skeptics, are challenging the view that UFOs are piloted by biological beings in technological craft from another planet. Surely, in all these years, spacemen would have no need to continue their repetitive actions of buzzing automobiles and picking up specimens, actions that never seem to have any denouement.

Are we conjuring them up or are they really there? If they are real, why do they behave in such bizarre and incomprehensible ways? Why don't they make their purpose known?

A deep and compelling human curiosity to know the "why" of it causes us to overlook the fact that we really don't know the "what" of

and Images

establish "cultural exchange" with us, or what their galactic timetable might be.

We insist on supposing that technological beings from another planet would be readily understandable to us, only slightly ahead of our science, and that they would be operating on a time scale that (when you think about it) is uniquely based on our life span of 70 or 80 years. Why either of these should be true eludes me. We also flatter ourselves by assuming that any self-respecting space visitor would be neighborly and drop in for a chat right away, eager to make our acquaintance and talk with us.

The size of our egos is somewhat out of proportion to the rest of the univers.

When the UFO beings fail to behave according to the standards we have set for them, we become impatient and begin doubting that they are "nuts and bolts" extra-terrestrials. We start imagining that something more bizarre must be involved. Perhaps we ought to begin questioning our own pre-conceptions instead.

We can't explain the apparent technology and performance within current scientific concepts, and we can't see any purpose to their behaviour if they are biological creatures from another world. Although it is frustrating not to have the answers, it is fallacious to conclude that no answers exist unless we invoke far-out explanations. To do so shows a naive belief that present scientific concepts and reason should be able to supply the answers at once, despite the fact that scientists have been reluctant to study the problem.

In the first place, science is yet to mount any concerted effort to gather or study UFO data systematically. Until the full resources of science are applied to the problem, we cannot tell how far our instruments and concepts can carry us toward understanding. No one can say that science has really tried and failed. In the second place, the question of purposes (commonly contained in questions beginning with "Why would they. . . ?" or "Why don't they. . . ?") has many conceivable solutions which need to be considered.

This UFO was seen over a large city, but many scientists can't agree whether it was real or an illusion created by a natural force.

These eyewitnesses claim it was no illusion or false image they saw when they spotted this UFO.

Back in the days of medieval England, the inhabitants of the country often talked about seeing strange things, and a myth of demons soon sprang up.

WHAT UFOS MIGHT BE

The events that are being described in UFO reports can be partially understood by imagining one or more of the following hypothetical explanations:

1. Deluded Observer Hypothesis: UFOs are mistaken observations demonstrating the fallibility of human perception and reasoning. They result from misperceptions triggered by a variety of natural, artificial and psychological stimuli, illusions, delusions and hallucinations. (This is the only hypothesis that denies the essential reality of UFO reports.)

2. Secret Device Hypothesis: UFO reports result from chance sightings of test vehicles, secret experiments and secret aircraft or missiles.

3. Little-Understood Atmospheric Phenomenon Hypothesis: UFO sightings are reports of something akin to ball lightning, a plasma phenomenon ("plasmoids") generated by electrical conditions in the atmosphere.

4. Space Animal Hypothesis: UFOs are some form of hitherto undiscovered life native to the upper of the atmosphere, perhaps partly electrical in nature and tending toward "pure energy" rather than biological form.

5. Secret Terrestrial Society Hypothesis: UFOs originate on earth as the product of a hidden society in some remote area. One version of this argues that Hitler escaped to Antarctica with a force of scientists and engineers, and continued developing a technology begun near the close of World War II.

6. Terrestrial Deceit Hypothesis: UFOs are something like holographic projections designed by some agency or government to deliberately deceive observers for some ulterior motive.

7. Psychic Projection Hypothesis: UFOs are quasi-real objects generated by human "collective unconscious" wishes or desires; a sort of psychokinetic wish-fulfillment.

8. Ancient Earth Astronauts Hypothesis: UFOs are piloted by the descendants of an ancient earth civilization that achieved space travel, returning periodically for visits to their "homeland."

9. Extraterrestrial Hypothesis

In ancient Greece, a whole mythology came into being concerning UFOs and things that go bump in the night.

[ETH]: UFOs are probes or vehicles from one or more extraterrestrial civilization.

10. Extraterrestrial Deceit Hypothesis: Some form of extraterrestrial intelligence is "staging" or "performing" UFO events for some ulterior motive. One variant of this suggests that "Cosmic Jokers" are behind the phenomena, deliberately confusing us for the fun of it.

11. Time Travel/Other Realms Hypothesis: UFOs are controlled by intelligences from a "parallel universe" or some undiscovered space-time dimension, perhaps even travellers (or apparitions) from the past or future.

12. Supernatural Hypothesis: UFOs are manifestations of spiritual beings, gods or messengers of gods, here on a mission of guidance or salvation.

Although these hypotheses range from the mundane to the exotic, some clearly are more plausible and more widely applicable than others. Any hypothesis worthy of the name should be able to take into account a wide range of well-established UFO phenomena.

When the full list is analyzed, it becomes apparent that there really are only four broad, general theories to account for UFO reports (see Figure 1). UFOs may be terrestrial or non-terrestrial in origin, with two possibilities in each of these categories. Witnesses may be basically mistaken and UFOs may not exist as a real, objective, separate phenomenon, or witnesses may be seeing and reporting terrestrial phenomena of natural or artificial nature. If UFOs are non-terrestrial in origin, they may represent physical, technological beings, or they may be the products of some other form of intelligence from some sphere of existence not explainable by our present science.

In my view, the first two theories have failed miserably to explain the hard-core reports, and several of the "unrecognized phenomena" would be far more incredible than space visitors. There is a Latin expression that describes the fourth theory, that UFOs emanate from other realms not encompassed by our present science: Ignotum per ignotius (explaining the unknown by means of the more unknown). Until the third (ETH) is thoroughly explored by science, I see no reason to make logical leap into unknown "other realms" of reality. We still have a long way to go in screening out false reports, agreeing on the body of reports that needs explaining, and applying scientific techniques and resources to a systematic study of these UFOs.

ALIEN CULTURE SHOCK

Part of the reason for doubting that UFOs could be spaceships is that it is not yet fully apparent just how confusing it probably would be to actually be confronted by a totally alien culture. An anthropologist on a NICAP panel suggested the analogy of the North American Indians when the first Europeans arrived:

"Had there been some kind of Indian CIA collecting and analyzing all reports of European contacts, it is likely that the Indians would have been just as confused about European intentions as they actually seem to have been. They lacked the scientific, technical and geographical knowledge necessary for interpretation of the contacts and could never have guessed at the motivation behind the exploration and colonization activity. . . . The types of vessels, clothing, equipment and behavior of the crews, their places of appearance and the routes they followed would not have been susceptible to analysis to a large extent. So it may be with UFOs and their occupants."

Dr. James E. McDonald used a similar, but somewhat more graphic, analogy while addressing a seminar of the United Aircraft Research Laboratories, Connecticut, in 1968:

"Imagine the consternation, the sheer disbelief, of a Solomon Islander who, with only the most shadowy prior contact with 20th-century industrial-scientific technology, suddenly found himself witness to a 1942 amphibious inva- sion. How could the mind of one still in the Stone Age encompass arrival of dozens of enormous ships of all shapes, from which fire, smoke and unpleasant crashing noises spewed, and from some of which still other smaller ships were discharged, only to have the latter run up on the beach and disgorge a bewildering variety of men and moving devices out of which more noise and fire came. Imagine his puzzlement to then see dozens of aircraft move over, drop bombs, strafe, and engage in intricate air combat with still other aircraft, the like of which we are here to imagine he has never before seen. . . . we may be like the Solomon Island Stoneager relative to the bewildering variety and number of UFOs that seem to be credibly reported as operating in our environment. We cannot understand how any society could produce such devices, accomplish such feats, display as many craft of such unprecedented performance characteristics, and do things that to us border on the miraculous."

Something we tend to overlook is that the puzzlement might work both ways, as suggested by Isabel Davis in a 1969 NICAP publication:

"... the extraterrestrials, despite their visits and their observation, may still be as baffled about our behavior and motives as we continue to be about theirs."

Similarly, the NICAP panel, cited above, observed:

"As some of our advisers now emphasize, the behaviour of beings from a different civilization would be likely to appear extremely strange to us, just as some of our behavior would seem weird, perhaps baffling, by their standards." [Emphasis added]

WHY NOT EXTRATERRESTRIALS?

There seems to be no reason to strain for an explanation beyond technological spacecraft to account for what has been seen. Puzzling behavior and unknown purposes are ultimate, not immediate, questions, and answers to them may have to await cultural contact initiated by the extraterrestrials. It is a human conceit to think that the resolution lies with us.

Even a means of tapping energy other than the food cycle and fossil fuels, or a different physiological evolution leading to other forms of communication mechanisms, could cause the behaviour of extraterrestrials to seem inexplicable to us. Such evolutionary and cultural fundamentals "we" (from

This Detroit sighting is very real and not

...ing seems to be an illusion.

our viewpoint or theirs) probably would take for granted, but "our" fundamentals could be confusing to "them."

By listing some possible characteristics (not motives) of extraterrestrials, it is easy to see why their actions might be hard to fathom on those grounds alone:

- They may have mental or psychic abilities still beyond our full understanding (mental/psychological differences).
- They may have energy sources and applications unknown to our science (scientific/technological differences).

- They may have evolved biologically so that their movements, locomotion, and interactions with things in their environment take forms unfamiliar to us (physiological/psychomotor differences).
- They may behave according to cultural values and beliefs totally unknown to us (cultural/philosophical differences).
- They may be coming from several different civilizations, thus multiplying each of the above factors (different origins).

These very likely possibilities would pose serious barriers to easy and immediate communication and mutual understanding.

As partial analogies to some UFO events, it is worth noting that agricultural scientists also gather plant and soil samples year after year; that hunters and photographers use helicopters to swoop down on wild game, and that the primitive Tasaday tribe in the Philippines had no evidence until recently that highly technological cultures existed (no doubt they still understand little of those outside cultures). Chance sightings of aircraft may well cause Tasaday UFO reports. If we were to pull out and leave them alone, future generations of Tasaday probably would have legends about strange humanoid beings who contacted their ancestors.

So far, our interactions with the Tasaday have been strongly influenced both by scientific curiosity and by a humane desire not to destroy their way of life. If we are being examined by extraterrestrial anthropologists scientifically far advanced over us, we are not likely to understand their comings and goings, the technological means of it, the culture they represent, or their ultimate intentions.

If the behavior we are observing is purposeless or mischievous, we might as well forget about UFOs. However, we have nothing to lose by first supposing that their presence does have a purpose and a meaning for us. If the visitations are meant only to benefit the visitors in some way and no contact or communication is intended, again, we would not be likely to figure it out. The one assumption that allows us some hope of understanding what is behind UFOs is that communication in some form is intended.

TRYING TO TELL US SOMETHING

If there is intended meaning in the physical displays and other manifestations of UFOs, then, short of direct cultural contact, the "medium" itself may be the message; what they are showing us may contain the message. The car buzzings, sample gatherings, UFO "repairs," and "just happening" to be there when the car rounds the bend that bother many serious-minded UFO analysts could be interpreted as nonverbal communication. Some of the possible messages are:

1. We can encounter or confront you at will, peacefully, and our technological superiority should be obvious to you.

2. Some harm can come to you as side effects of our energy sources; be careful. (Physiological effect cases)

3. We are technological, not supernatural. (UFO repair cases, physical evidence, etc.)

4. There is something different about (or a gap in?) your physical science. (Mass displacement cases, levitation, E-M effects, etc.)

5. There is something different (harmful? inefficient?) about your energy sources and uses of energy. (E-M effects, blackouts, sightings over power stations, sightings at rocket and missile installations, etc.)

6. We are studying your physiology and human energy sources, including food and agriculture. (Hill case, Wilcox case, Hickson case, soil and plant sample gathering, etc.)

This is a great shot of a UFO

7. We take many forms other than plainly humanoid to which you will have to become accustomed if you want to understand us. (Occupant encounters and confrontations).

Although the food cycle with its related physiology and agriculture, coal, gas, electricity, rudimentary use of atomic energy and piston and jet engines are commonplace to us, how might they appear to a race long conditioned to drawing energy from light, cosmic rays or gravity? Might not curiosity about our "strange" energy sources also explain their apparent interest in our applications of natural resources.

A cultural technological gap could easily account for all our puzzlement, and perhaps for theirs as well. One of our problems is that, for once, we are on the "low" side of the exchange and we must struggle to overcome our conceit of being the apex of universal evolution. In any event, it seems worthwhile to analyze UFO cases with the thought in mind that an attempt is being made to communicate something to us, both about ourselves and about the extraterrestrials.

The most troublesome question concerning the nature and extent of the gap can be expressed in a ratio. Is it Western Culture: Tasaday (or Spaniard:Indian), or is it more like humans: dolphins or even humans:ants? Do we have enough in common with biological creatures from elsewhere to allow meaningful communication, or are we as different from them as ants are from humans? Either way, the answer to this question will determine our entire future relationship to any visitors from the universe.

UFOs AND THEIR SECRET WEAPON ULTRASONICS!

As unnerving as it sounds, we have found evidence supporting the notion that UFOs may be using ultrasounds to injure innocent bystanders who come too close during landings. Read on for the facts!

A patient, a victim of painful muscle spasms of his lower back, has been referred by his physician to a physical therapy clinic. The patient is taken to a table and positioned for an ultrasound treatment. The therapist spreads a gel over the patient's back, places the ultrasound applicator in the contact gel, and turns the machine's controls to the required intensity. Sound energy flows from the applicator through the tissues of the back, causing the sound waves to be converted into deep heat.

However, the amount of ultrasound is slightly more than the patient can bear. He complains of a tingling sensation, along with a mild perception of burning. The therapist read-justs the controls to a level the patient can tolerate...

On June 29, 1964, a Georgia businessman was driving home late in the evening when he spotted a light in the sky. The glow was heading directly toward his car. As the thing approached, he saw that it resembled a top, about six feet tall and eight feet wide, with several configurations on its surface. The man raced away at speeds reaching 65 mph but the UFO stayed with his auto, alternately appearing and disappearing.

"When the object left," he later stated, "it suddenly went up over the top of my car, leaving a strong odor...like embalming fluid and a very gaseous vapor which left an oily substance all over my car...my arms were beginning to burn." The oily marks and burning sensation remained after repeated washings of the man's car and arms. The auto hood was warped and the paint looked "buppled up."

Anyone familiar with ultrasound might notice several parallels between ultrasound and the characteristics exhibited in this UFO sighting. And, as you will see, ultrasound may indeed be a part of the UFO's phenomenal identity.

Ultrasound (US) consists of sound waves of a high intensity. Sonar is one form of US, and was developed in World War II to detect enemy submarines. England was among the first to use US to disperse fog from its airports. Sound also proved beneficial in improving the quality of laundering.

Sound's greatest use, however, might be in the medical field, where it may eventually replace modern surgical procedures to destroy brain tumors.

A brief description is in order regarding the earlier mentioned therapeutic ultrasound machine, as well. The apparatus is used to treat patients with waves of high frequency, inaudible sound waves. The science of therapeutic ultrasonics pertains to frequencies above twenty kilocycles and all the way up to 500,000 kilocycles. In small, controlled dosages, US is beneficial to patients inflicted with muscle spasms and other muscular pains, arthritis, etc. This occurs because the sound energy is converted by friction and vibration into a soothing form of deep heat when it makes contact with body tissues. Among its strengths is the ability of ultrasound to break up calcium deposits which build under the skin.

We know, then, that the worth of ultrasound to medicine is unquestionable. But my concern here is that ultrasonics, conceived on a vast, much more powerful level, may be the key to certain injuries and damage often reported by witnesses who view UFOs at close range. US may be responsible for physiological as well as non-physiological evidence.

To avoid confusion, we must first keep in mind that ultrasound has no connection with the often discussed electromagnetic (E-M) field, which frequently emerges as a theory of UFO propulsion and structure. Whereas US is actually sound vibrations with a frequency far above that of audible sounds, electromagnetics is the production of magnetic force by means of electricity. Therefore, in E-M it is a case of electricity relating solely to magnetism. Neither electricity nor magnetism coincide with the workings of ultrasound in its final stages.

The case of the businessman who encountered a UFO is hardly unusual; UFO literature over the years abounds with similar accounts. In the businessman's sighting, the burning sensation, the gaseous vapor and accompanying oily residue, and the "bubbled up" auto hood might all be the results of a super-dosage of ultrasound.

First of all, therapeutically speaking, the benefit of US is of a thermal nature. When sound travels through body tissues and converts into heat, temperatures will consequently elevate in the skin and underneath; arterial blood flow increases as well. In overdoses, reddening (erythema) and inflammation of the visible skin area can occur, and swelling may result.

The burning felt on the businessman's arms could have resulted from an intense concentration of sound waves, and, obviously, repeated washings of the skin would be of no help because these are burns, far underneath the surface.

But how would sound waves have penetrated the auto windshield? This seems to present a problem at first, but consider the "gaseous vapor" seen in the air, and the "oily substance" left on the hood. The therapeutic sound machine requires a medium (a gel, or mineral oil, for example) through which to propel sound energy. Similarly, is it possible that the UFO dispelled an oily vapor (which appeared gaseous) which covered parts of the car for efficient sound transference? With vapor in the air and on the auto, sound waves would have a clear pathway for travel.

This UFO reportedly emitted a stream of ultrasonics.

Finally, we have as evidence a warped hood with "bubbled up" — or blistered paint. It is indeed possible that the heat created by a bombardment of sound waves on the hood caused this phenomenon.

Anybody familiar with ultrasound might wonder if the appearance of the hood has anything to do with the medical process known as gaseous cavitation (gas filled cavities). In physiological terms, we know that dissolved gases are always present in living matter. Because of this, cavitation may occur during a US overdosage (remember that in modern therapeutic use, a dose excessive enough to cause cavitation is not used — we are considering only magnificent amounts of US). This would create an actual series of cavities in the deeper tissues.

According to some sources, such mechanical destruction might also occur when the tissue cavities collapse or if gaseous bubbles grow large enough to vibrate in resonance with the sound waves. One might wonder, then, if the same principle can be altered to apply to non-living materials, like metal.

Some researchers believe that aliens are bounding ultrasonics off the moon.

If this is so, a strong but brief series of sound waves may have penetrated the hood, causing heat to form directly underneath. Subsequently, the air above and below the hood would have become heated gases, causing the paint to blister or "bubble up." Perhaps the only reason the hood was no worse and the mechanical parts underneath showed no signs of stress or overheating is because the witness did attempt to escape at speeds reaching 65 mph — thus making a sufficient wind-cooling system to counter the heat produced by ultrasound. As mentioned earlier, UFO research is full of cases that may involve ultrasound. A resident in Montville Ohio noticed, on the evening of November 6, 1975, that a TV picture was blurred; the next day, an automobile outside the house was found to be "pock-marked."<sup>2</sup>

Jacques Vallee mentions numerous cases from France that may bear on the ultrasound theory. In 1954, for example, a couple of people in Benet, France viewed a large object which hovered a few feet off the ground for several minutes. After the UFO left, oily marks were found at the spot.<sup>3</sup> And much the same happened at Briatexame year, after a sighting involving occupants, when brown oil spots were discovered by a road.<sup>4</sup>

UFOs have also left behind powdery substances, sticky materials, gelatin-like matter, foams and warm or burning conglomerations — all unidentifiable, but perhaps the key to the medium UFOs use IF they do transmit ultrasound.

At this point, we must not exclude all the sightings of a substance known as "angel hair" reported over the decades. Veteran UFO researcher Leonard H. Stringfield was cataloguing angel hair incidents back in the forties and fifties.

The "hair" appears like cobwebs or delicate threads of spun glass, there is an abundance of UFO cases which have angel hair involved. Stringfield mentions cases from 1949 and on which definitely involve a UFO in the area.<sup>5</sup>

The obvious question is — is angel hair and other UFO related substances used to transfer sound energy through the air? In fact, is it possible that the air itself could act as a suitable conductor of massive amounts of sound? (Ultrasound transmits extremely well in water — but what of UFOs observed in rain and fog? Could they be making use of a good medium?)

Has angel hair any connection with those oily substances and gaseous vapors we already discussed? On September 29, 1953 a television picture in Easton, Pennsylvania "began going up and down real fast" as a UFO emitting a white vapor passed overhead.

The primary property of angel hair — and the one which absolutely damns the UFO investigator — is its capacity to disappear rapidly (and all the more expeditiously when touched by the human hand). Looking back to France during the intense 1954 wave of sightings, there occurred an incident in Merel. A farmer saw an orange-colored disc land on his field. When it left he noticed a "luminescent steam" drifting to the ground. The farmer returned home, and upon taking off his jacket "I noticed that my clothes were covered with a layer of white, rather sticky stuff, like paraffin, which soon disappeared without leaving any marks." Again, here is a reference to a sticky substance like an oil (paraffin is composed of oil and wax), which soon disintegrated into nothing.

It is too tempting to forget that the medium used for therapeutic ultrasound treatments is usually oily, sometimes sticky and portions disappear if left for awhile.

And, as another sidelight, what of the odors that are noted after UFOs depart? Witnesses frequently smell ammonia-like or sulfur-like odors, and these may be associated with the medium after it dissipates or falls to the ground.

Up to now, little has been men- tioned about pain and injuries associated with UFOs which approach humans and animals. A further explanation of medical ultrasound may be relevant.

Low intensity US waves create therapeutically beneficial thermal reactions, waves of moderate force result in paralytic characteristics and waves of extremely high intensity can produce destructive consequences. The latter two intensities have no place in modern medicine, as I emphasized earlier, but all three intensities may be interlocking sections of the reason why UFO injuries happen and what causes them.

Science tells us that an overdosage of ultrasound can cause burns, hyperemia (an increased amount of blood in a body area, indicated by redness of the skin due to inflammation), aching and "tingling." If UFOs are casting forth sound, the force of such emissions would probably be powerful enough to cause the burns, aching and tingling ("prickling") frequently reported by sighting witnesses. ●
