Press Release! 37-Degree Latitude Theory!

Posted by Zukowski, on September 15th, 2011

For the past two and half years I've run field investigations on over a dozen animal mutilation cases here in Colorado. I now have enough data that I'm starting to see some similarities between them.

Example:

Complete center sections of the animal missing but only occurring in cases involving calves.

Oval incisions, which removed, hide at the ear and eye area.

Tongues cut completely out deep inside the mouth.

Oval incisions in the udder area.

Hide cut out at the rib cage area.

Lack of evidence showing animal struggle on topsoil.

Lack of evidence showing predator attacks on the topsoil and on the animal.

And now.... I might be on to something else. I'm working on a theory so interesting, that it could change the way others and I investigate not only mutilation cases, but UFO sightings as well.

Let me explain.

While prepping my lecture for the Midwest UFO Conference in August of this year, I was glancing over my cases looking at similarities and looking for similarities I might have missed. Then it hit me! Literally hit me. An earthquake! An earthquake in Colorado!

The New York Times:

DENVER — The largest natural earthquake in Colorado in more than a century struck Monday night in the state's southeast corner, but there were no reports of damage or injuries. The quake, with a preliminary magnitude of 5.3, was centered about nine miles from the city of Trinidad and hit at 11:46 p.m.

Then within 15 hours!

Richmond Times Dispatch:

5.8-magnitude quake shakes central Virginia, East Coast

One of the most powerful earthquakes in Virginia history rippled from its epicenter in Louisa County throughout the eastern United States but injured few people and caused little major structural damage.

The 15-second tremor measured 5.8 on the Richter scale Tuesday at 1:51 p.m., prompting buildings to empty, cell phone service to go silent and two nuclear reactors near the center of the quake to shut down without damage.

While at work Tuesday August 23rd I had heard about the Virginia earthquake. Grabbing my I Phone I pulled up my "Quake Feed" app. This app shows current earthquakes within a week's period, magnitude strength set by the user. I had my app set to show any earthquake occurring around the world with a magnitude of 5 or larger.

Reading the report on the Colorado earthquake on 08/22/2011, I saw that it occurred at the Sangre de Cristo Fault, which travels in a north south direction. The coordinates were 37.0412, -104.4726782.

Then I read the report on the Virginia earthquake on 08/23/2011, and it occurred at the Central Virginia Seismic Zone, which also travels a north south direction. Its coordinates were 37.557787, -77.554492.

Two separate faults perpendicular to each other causing two separate earthquakes 1600 miles away from each other. Interesting.

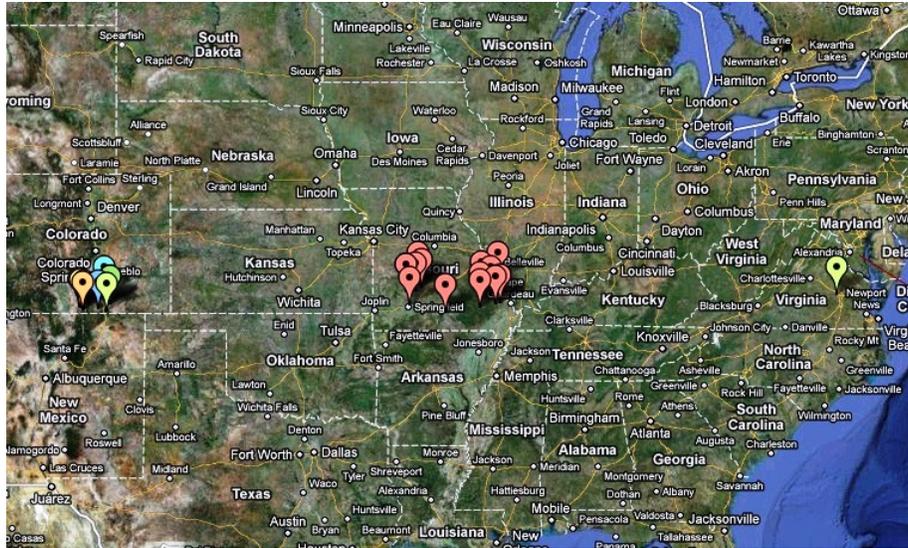

Then I realized all my cattle mutilations cases in the San Luis Valley also fell within a 37-degree latitude! Now a pattern seems to be appearing.

This picture shows San Luis Valley mutes, Colorado and Virginia earthquake.

After consulting my partner in crime, my sister Debbie Ziegelmeyer MUFON's State Director for Missouri, she told me about a cattle mutilation which was investigated by Ken Storch September 2008 in Norwood Missouri. Guess what? 37-degree latitude!

My sister then informed me about her 2011 sightings she's been investigating in Missouri. Her reports ranged from lights in the sky, to triangular craft being seen, to alien abductions. All within the 37 degree latitude!

My San Luis Valley cattle mutilation investigations, both Colorado and Virginia earthquakes, Ken Storch's 2008 Missouri cattle mutilation, Debbie's Missouri investigations this year.

I started researching UFO sightings within the 37 Degree Latitude across the United States. I only recorded those sightings that included lights in the sky and triangular craft. I was wondering if a pattern would appear. Well this is what I found.

37-Degree Latitude, The Paranormal Freeway!

Paranormal/UFO investigators are always looking for a pattern to the events reported to us. If we can nail down at least one pattern out of all these events, then we might have a chance to predict where a sighting will occur in the future. But finding a pattern is very difficult.

If you look at a map of the United States, then start plotting all the locations where sightings were reported, it would look like staring at the stars on moonless night. Reported sightings are everywhere, but even stars in the sky show patterns; so how about UFO sighting cases, animal mutilation cases, and even abduction cases. Can there be a pattern? I've always thought so and summarized, "there must be a method to all this madness".

My Theory:

My preliminary research based on my investigations and sightings reported to various web sites, seem to show a linear pattern in related sightings. When researching the 37-degree latitude, not only did another cattle mutilation case show up in Missouri, but I was seeing a related pattern of reports, which included lights in the sky and triangular craft sightings.

In my research I started to see a pattern also appearing within a 38-degree latitude. Then I went back to my notes and realized two of my other animal mutilation cases, one in Crested Butte and the other in Rush, both occurred within a 38 degree latitude. These two cases are 235 miles away from each other and occurred in a linear trajectory. Coincidence?

Now what about the earthquakes I included?

Why did I add the two earthquakes to the map? First having two significant earthquakes happening in the US within 15 hours of each other is pretty interesting by itself. But what about their location both falling on the 37 degree latitude? Investigators have said Dulce NM has an underground military base. Some say alien presence is there as well. The base is near the 37-degree latitude. Taos NM, known for the famous, "Taos Hum", (possibly due to underground drilling) isn't far from the 37 degree latitude, neither is Aztec NM well-known for its 1948 flying saucer crash retrieval.

Could underground tunneling cause earthquakes? Plenty of research has been done covering the stories of underground bases near the Colorado New Mexico border. We do know earthquakes can be induced as a result when fluids are pumped out of or into the ground. Also digging mines or tunnels can disrupt the natural stress state of underground rock thus causing a shallow mantle earthquake.

Colorado earthquake depth, 2.5 miles.

Virginia earthquake depth, 3.7 miles.

Earthquakes occurring at a depth of less than 70 kilometers are classified as "shallow-focus" earthquakes. Both Colorado and Virginia earthquakes were extremely shallow occurring less than 6 kilometers. Could these two earthquakes which occurred within 15 hours of each other at such a shallow depth be related to each other in a way we're not aware of?

What about the Virginia earthquake? More underground tunneling or drilling? If you listen to the web conspiracists, they're speculating an underground nuclear test caused that earthquake.

Could the same individuals who do the tunneling also be responsible for the animal mutilations and the UFO sightings? I'm not sure, but just to be safe, I added the earthquakes to the map.

My "Linear Theory" is at its infant stage and I have a lot of research to do which may endorse it, or disprove it. My research will be looking for sighting similarities across the US, which appear to be linear. Latitude is just a way I'm recording it, and at this time it seems to make the most sense to show commonalities.

By the way, looking back at the “Paranormal Freeway Map”, I added Area 51 in Nevada. Yep, 37 degree latitude...

Thank You Chuck. Now that’s thinking outside the box.
