

“Flying Saucers” Now In Canadian Skies

NEW YORK, July 7 (A.A.P.).—“Flying saucers” have been reported over Canada for the first time, after mystifying the people of the United States for 12 days.

Nobody knows yet what the flying saucers are, but statements were issued yesterday to say what they were not.

The chairman of the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, Mr. David Lilienthal, said they had nothing to do with atomic experiments.

The Navy and Army also disclaimed responsibility for them.

The Canadian report comes from scores of residents in Wallaceburg, in south-western Ontario, who said they saw two large formations of illuminated discs swing over a wide arc in the sky on Saturday night.

U.S. military aircraft yesterday ranged over Pacific coast areas without finding any of the objects.

Jet planes have now been added to the force of standard fighters standing by to take part in the chase.

In South Dakota, a national guard pilot already in the air was guard pilot already in the air was ordered by radio to "run down" a silvery disc with a short tail which a resident of Sioux Falls said he saw shoot across the sky a few minutes before. The pilot flew in the direction reported, but radioed back that he couldn't find the disc.
