

Flying Saucer Seen By Two Wagga Men

An object which they described as a guided missile, which threw a greenish glow over the snow-covered landscape, was seen in the sky recently by two Wagga men at Mount Kosciusko.

THE two men told an "Advertiser" representative last night that the object, when moving at a low speed, appeared to be circular in shape, and was surrounded by an aura of white light.

When it achieved a high speed—as it did on several occasions during the hour in which they observed it, it assumed the appearance of a crescent with a double-tongued wake of light.

Keith Campbell, 26, is an instructor in fitting at the RAAF Training College, Forest Hill. Ian Macdonald, 22, is an instructor in electrical fitting at the same college.

"Flash of Light"

The two men state that they went to Mount Kosciusko for the King's Birthday holiday weekend. They arrived at the chalet on Saturday night, and were told to take their car back to Hotel Kosciusko—a distance of eight miles from the chalet—as there was a good chance of the chalet being snowed-in during the night.

The men drove the car to the hotel and then walked the eight miles back to the chalet.

"While we were walking back the sky suddenly lit up, as it does with a flash of lightning. We both turned, and saw an object about 10 inches in diameter in the sky," Mr. Macdonald said.

Taking up the story, Mr. Campbell described how the object, which appeared circular when at a low speed, increased and decreased its speed as it moved through the sky.

"High Speed"

"When it moved at a high speed it had a wake of white light, or vapor," Mr. Campbell said.

Both men, whose story agreed on all points, said that the object gave them the impression that it was guided by some power or force. It increased and decreased its speed all through the hour in which they observed it, and moved through the sky in a more or less continuous upward and downward movement.

Both men agreed, also, that

Both men agreed, also, that the object was completely noiseless in its movements.

They said their attention had first been drawn to it by the greenish light which lit up the whole snow-covered landscape, directly after the sudden flash which announced its presence.

The object was still in the sky when they finally reached the chalet.

Asked if they had told anyone in the chalet of their story when they returned, they stated that, as it was going on 4 o'clock in the morning by that time, everyone was in bed.

The incident they described occurred between 2.30 and 3.30 on Sunday morning.

That night, they kept a lookout for the object, but it did not appear.
