One night last week, at about 8.49 p.m., during a heavy rainstorm, a rumbling noise could be heard approaching from the southern end of Moon Street and travelling in a Northerly direction. The sound was at ground level and gradually increased in volume as it came closer. The sound was like a Scotchman saying r.r.rugged or r.r.r.roar until it reached the intersection of Moon and Farquhar Streets, when the phenomena (you could not call it an apparition because it was too dark to see) suddenly turned in an Easterly direction, and then suddenly started making a bumpiny or, rather, banging sound. The sound seemed to abate near the Town Hall. We do not know whether the object disappeared into the ground or into thin air, or perhaps went out to sea.
